Pip and Posy

The Snowy Day

Axel Scheffler

It was a very snowy day.
Pip and Posy wanted
to go out and play.

So they put on their woolly jumpers . . .

their stripy socks . . .

their puffy coats . . .

. . . and their waterproof boots,
their cosy scarves
and their woollen mittens.

Then they went out
into the snow.

Wherever they walked,

They caught snowflakes on their tongues.

They even made snow angels
with big wings. It was such good fun.

Then Posy had an idea.
“Let’s build a snowmouse!” she said.

“But I want a snowrabbit!” said Pip.

“Snowmouse,”
said Posy.

“SnowRABBIT,” said Pip.

Posy was so cross with Pip that she threw
the snowmouse's head at him.

Oh dear!

Then Pip was so cross with Posy that he pushed her very hard and she fell into the snow.

Oh dear!

Now Pip and Posy
were very cold
and very sad indeed.

Poor Pip! Poor Posy!

Then Posy did a very kind thing.

“I am sorry for making you all snowy, Pip,” she said.

“And I am sorry for pushing you,”
said Pip.

They decided to go inside again,
where it was nice and warm.

They took off all their wet things.

And then they got out their playdough
and made mice AND rabbits.

And frogs and pigs and birds, and elephants and cows and giraffes, as well!

Hooray!
