THE HISTORY OF BRAZIL 46-59

DISCOVERING BRAZIL

Brazil can be divided into five major regions, each offering a unique culture, landscape, and experience. The Southeast features two of the country's largest cities, Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo. With a distinct European character, Southern Brazil offers some breathtaking natural sights. The Northeast, with a stunning beach-studded coastline and stark interior, beautifully preserves its historic cities and a vibrant Afro-Brazilian culture. In Northern Brazil, the dense and pristine Amazon forest and tropical grasslands make up Brazil's wild frontier. Once Brazil's neglected interior, the Central West prides itself on the Modernist national capital, Brasília, and the wildlife-rich Pantanal wetlands. Below is an overview of the highlights of each region in the book.

RIO DE JANEIRO CITY

- Iconic Cristo Redentor & Sugar Loaf
- Fabulous beaches
- Sensual samba & Carnaval

Rio's neighborhoods and beaches need at least five days to be explored. Overlooking Sugar Loaf (see pp76–7), Cristo Redentor (see pp82–3) stands on Corcovado, surrounded by lush Parque Nacional da Tijuca (see p88). The city center is lined with museums, historic buildings, and the vast Estádio do Maracanã (see p84). Just south of the center, Santa Teresa and Lapa are the night-life hubs. Beyond these are Copacabana, Ipanema, and Leblon beaches (see pp78–9) with exciting shopping areas (see pp90–91). Rio's Carnaval (see pp64–5) is world-famous for its revelry and its samba.

RIO DE JANEIRO & ESPÍRITO SANTO

- Enchanting Palácio Imperial
- Beautiful beaches & islands
- Rainforest hikes

Combining pretty colonial towns and imperial cities with gorgeous beaches and cool mountains draped in the Atlantic rainforest, these two coastal states can be seen in a week. The national parks of Itatiaia (see p111) and the Parque Nacional da Serra dos Órgãos (see p115) offer superb birding and hiking. Between them is the former imperial summer retreat, Palácio Imperial (see pp114–15) at the pretty town of Petrópolis (see pp112–13). The coast is fringed with stunning beaches, such as those at the lively resort towns of Búzios and Cabo Frio (see pp116–17). The colonial town of Paraty (see pp106–8) lies amid fine beaches. Offshore, lush islands, such as Ilha Grande (see p110), offer good snorkeling and diving.

Cristo Redentor rising through the mist at twilight, Rio de Janeiro

MINAS GERAIS

- Southern colonial towns
- Magnificent churches
- Spectacular national parks

Minas Gerais is dotted with colonial mining towns, whose cobbled streets are lined with some of the finest Baroque buildings in Brazil. Most of them can be seen in five days. The UNESCO World Heritage Sites of Ouro Preto (see pp126–8) and Congonhas (see pp130–31), in southern Minas, are famed for their haunting sculptures by Aleijadinho (see p131). São João del Rei (see pp132–3) has the most magnificent of all Minas churches. Diamantina (see p124) in the north is a well-preserved town. The national parks of Serra do Cipó (see p125) and Serra da Canastra (see p133) are good for trekking.

SÃO PAULO CITY

- Dining & shopping in Jardins
- Art at Pinacoteca & MASP
- Niemeyer in Ibirapuera Park

The city's chic restaurants, bars, and shops merit at least two days. Jardins, a fashionable dining and shopping district, lies close to the museums and historical buildings in the center, which include the state art gallery, Pinacoteca do Estado (see pp140–41). Close by, the upscale Avenida Paulista features the state gallery, MASP (see p143), which boasts the finest collection of European paintings in the Southern Hemisphere. The vast Parque do Ibirapuera (see pp146–7) has several museums, many of which have been designed by Oscar Niemeyer.

SÃO PAULO STATE

- Scenic beaches & rainforest
- Pretty offshore islands
- Fascinating soccer museum in Santos

Allow up to five days for São Paulo state, which retains surprisingly large areas of wilderness and has a beautiful coastline, watched over by forest-covered mountains. The northern coast has the finest beaches, particularly around Ilhabela (see p165). The southern coast protects the expansive coastal forest in Estação Ecológica Juréia-Itatins (see p170). The cities of Santos and São Vicente (see pp168–9) retain fine colonial buildings. Santos is also famous for its soccer club, Santos Futebol Clube (see p169), for which Pelé used to play.

BAHIA

- Afro-Brazilian Salvador
- Splendid beaches & resorts
- Scenic Chapada Diamantina

The cultural heart of African Brazil, Bahia requires at least a week to explore. Its capital Salvador (see pp184–95) has lavish Baroque churches and colonial buildings, alongside boutique diners serving the distinctive African-influenced cuisine. Capoeira (see p199) is performed everywhere in the state. Bahia's coast stretches through glorious beaches and little resorts, such as the bustling Porto Seguro (see p201) and the quieter Trancoso (see p201). Bahia's arid interior is broken by the beautiful Chapada Diamantina (see pp204–205).

SERGIPE, ALAGOAS & PERNAMBUCO

- Thrilling Rio São Francisco
- Olinda's colonial elegance
- World-class diving in Fernando de Noronha

Four days are enough for Sergipe and Alagoas, which have many pretty beaches lining the clear-blue Rio São Francisco (see p213). Famous for its rich music scene and strong cultural identity, Pernambuco needs five days. One of Brazil's prettiest colonial towns, Olinda (see pp220–22) is known for its architecture and Carnival. Fernando de Noronha (see pp224–5), an hour's flight offshore, is an island famous for superb diving.

PARAÍBA, RIO GRANDE DO NORTE & CEARÁ

- Unusual geological formations
- Festival in Campina Grande
- Beaches & dune buggies

The three states forming the heartland of the Northeast require a week. Paraíba is famous for its sertão desert interior, which is dotted with geological formations such as the striking boulder Lajedo do Pai Mateus (see p232) in Cariri. Fossilized dinosaur footprints can be seen at Vale dos Dinossauros (see p232) in Souza. Campina Grande's Festas Juninas (see p232) draws almost a million people every June. Rio Grande do Norte and Ceará are renowned for their beaches. At Genipabu (see p238) and Jericocoara (see pp240–41), towering sand dunes can be explored by buggy.

PIAUI & MARANHÃO

- Magical Delta do Parnaíba & Lençóis Maranhenses
- Hills of Serra da Capivara
- Colorful São Luís

These two coastal states can be visited over four to five days. The swamps and riverine islands of the Delta do Parnaíba and the dunes of Lençóis Maranhenses (see pp250–51) are best explored in the wet season. The interior features the Serra da

Lagoon and dunes, Parque Nacional dos Lençóis Maranhenses, Maranhão

Capivara (see p248) mountain range. The scenic colonial city of São Luís (see pp252–4) celebrates the Bumba-meu-boi festival with great fervor.

PARÁ & AMAPÁ

- Crafts in colonial Belém
- Wildlife-rich Ilha de Marajó
- Picturesque Santarém

The principal cities and environs of the vast Amazonian states can be seen in a few days, as most parts are largely inaccessible. Belém (see pp268–9) is an attractive city of colonial buildings, craft markets, and lively nightlife. To its north is the seasonally flooded Ilha de Marajó (see p270), once part of an indigenous empire that stretched all the way to Santarém (see p274), a three-day boat ride away. The city lies at the meeting of the blue waters of the Rio Tapajós and the Amazon river.

AMAZONAS, RORAIMA, ACRE & RONDÔNIA

- Intriguing, wild Amazon
- Trekking in the savannas
- Chico Mendes Museum

With Brazil's largest stretch of primary tropical forest, Amazonas needs five days to visit. Most trips into the rainforest begin in its capital city, Manaus (see pp280–87), which retains the lavish Teatro Amazonas (see pp282–3) from its rubber-boom days. Though not as accessible as Amazonas, the other three states offer attractions that can be seen in three to four days. Roraima's capital, Boa Vista (see p288), offers trekking in the savanna, while Rio Branco, the capital of Acre, pays tribute to Chico Mendes in Parque Ambiental Chico Mendes (see p289). River trips can be taken from Porto Velho in Rondônia (see p289).

BRASÍLIA, GOIÁS & TOCANTINS

- Modernist Brasília
- Colonial towns
- Jalapão & Ilha do Bananal

With monumental buildings, Brasília is one of the world's finest Modernist cities. It can be seen comfortably in a day. Preserving vast cerrado forests, Goiás and Tocantins need at least 10 days. The spectacular Chapada dos Veadeiros (see pp312–13) and Parque Nacional das Emas (see p311) are the main attractions in Goiás. The state is dotted with colonial mining towns that are among the best preserved in South America. Tocantins features the winding sand dunes of Jalapão (see pp310–11) and the expansive river island, Ilha do Bananal (see p311).

MATO GROSSO & MATO GROSSO DO SUL

- Wildlife in the Pantanal
- Festivity in Miranda
- Snorkeling in Bonito
- Birding in Alta Floresta

These enormous twin states preserve two extensive wildness areas. The Pantanal (see pp320–21) is the world's largest wetland and the best place in the Americas to see wild life. Three days in a fazenda (ranch house) or on a tour are enough to explore the area. Miranda (see p322), with pretty fazendas in the heart of the Pantanal, is known for its sertanejo music and Festa do Homem Pantaneiro. The Pantanal excursion can be combined with a trip to Bonito (see p323), which is famous for its clear rivers and dramatic caves, as well as for its snorkeling opportunities. The southern Amazon rainforest begins north of the Pantanal in Mato Grosso. The scenic Cristalino Jungle Lodge in Alta Floresta (see p319) lies on the Rio Cristalino, home to rare birds and mammals.

Jabiru storks in the northern Pantanal, Mato Grosso

SANTA CATARINA & PARANÁ

- Majestic Foz do Iguaçu
- Exciting beaches & surf around Florianópolis
- Oktoberfest in Blumenau

The world's most spectacular waterfalls, Foz do Iguaçu (see pp340–41) sit in their own rainforest preserve in Paraná state. They need two days to explore. The Paraná coast, which is reached via a delightful winding mountain railway, forms part of one of the largest stretches of coastal rainforest in the world. Little islands such as the low-key Ilha do Mel (see p338) offer sand and surfing. Santa

Surfing at Praia da Joaquina in Florianópolis, Santa Catarina

Catarina state has some of the best beaches in Brazil. Pounded by strong surf, these beaches lie around the attractive, well-kept city of Florianópolis (see pp346–7). Both states have a strong European influence, brought by the immigrants who began settling here in the late 19th century. The town of Blumenau still largely speaks German and has an Oktoberfest (see p40) to rival the one in Bavaria.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL

- Churrascarias in Porto Alegre
- Hiking & wine tour
- Inspiring Jesuit missions

Allow five days to visit Brazil's southernmost state, which is famous for its gaúcho culture (see pp330–31). Its capital, Porto Alegre (see pp352–3), is filled with churrascarias (steak houses) that serve fabulous steaks with chá-mate (herbal tea). There is excellent hiking in the hills, as well as the wine tour in Vale dos Vinhedos (see p355). Near the border with Argentina are a series of ruined Jesuit monasteries at São Miguel das Missões (see p359), former settlements of the Guaraní, whose story inspired the 1986 film The Mission.

Putting Brazil on the Map

The largest country in South America, Brazil borders most other South American countries and covers over 3.3 million sq miles (8.5 million sq km), from the vast tropical Amazon region in the north to the cooler, more European-style South. It is divided into 26 states and one federal district – its political and administrative capital, Brasília. Brazil's population, now reaching over 185 million, is mostly concentrated in the Southeast (see pp14–15).

Southeastern Brazil

The densely populated southeastern part of Brazil contains the country's two biggest cities. A dynamic, sprawling business center, São Paulo has nearly 9 million inhabitants in the city proper. Beautiful Rio de Janeiro, with its legendary beaches, is home to around 7 million people. With a well-developed infrastructure and economy, this region has a stunning Atlantic coastline and a wealth of historic towns.

A PORTRAIT OF BRAZIL

Brazil evokes iconic images of lively Carnival celebrations, brilliant soccer teams, bossa nova and samba performances, sensual Brazilians swaying across the sands of Ipanema and Copacabana, and the beautiful city of Rio de Janeiro. Beyond these popular images, however, there remains a lot to discover about Brazil, which is fast emerging as a global economic giant.

Covering over half of South America, Brazil is the world's fifth largest nation. The sheer size of the country helps to explain the extraordinary diversity of environments and cultures. The larger cities are known for cosmopolitan sophistication and extensive technological development, while in the Amazon region there are indigenous peoples who still use ancient agricultural techniques.

The Portuguese colonization that began in the 1500s, combined with the influx of immigrants from a wide geographical and ethnic spectrum, has lent an eclectic character to the social fabric of the country. Portuguese is spoken by the vast majority of the 188 million Brazilians, although there are many commonly used words derived from indigenous and African languages.

The country's striking diversity is reflected in the major cities, each of which has its own distinctive character. The impressive Modernist architecture of the nation's capital Brasília, the ravishing cityscape of Rio de Janeiro, embraced by the gigantic statue of Cristo Redentor (Christ the Redeemer), the colonial buildings and Baroque gems of

THE ECONOMY

The Brazilian economy is counted among the world's 10 largest, though it is riddled with contradictions – favelas (shantytowns) coexist with skyscrapers in the cities. The foundations for modern economic prosperity were laid, ironically, during the years of the military dictatorship from 1964 to 1984, when Brazil's rulers borrowed heavily from international banks to fund various large projects. However, it was only during the administration of Fernando Henrique Cardoso (1995–2002) that Brazil's economy became more market-orientated, a trend that has been carried forward by his successor, Luiz Inácio Lula da Silva – “Lula.”

Today, Brazil's major exports feature both manufactured goods, including machinery and automobiles, as well as agricultural products, such as soya beans and coffee. In recent years, Brazil has emerged as an economic powerhouse and a strong advocate of opening up global trade to developing nations. Its vision of exploring new energy production methods is manifested by Petrobras, Brazil's largest oil-producing company. Run by the state, Petrobras is Minas Gerais, the historic cities of the Northeast, and the picturesque European-influenced, wine-producing towns in Southern Brazil, are just a few examples of this remarkable heterogeneity.

The diverse character of Brazil is reflected in its five distinct ecosystems – the Amazon rainforest, the semi-arid sertão, the central cerrado (savanna), the wildlife-rich Pantanal wetlands, and the lush Mata Atlântica. The varied natural attractions of the country include the spectacular falls at Foz do Iguaçu, captivating Amazônia, the splendid beaches of Rio de Janeiro and the Northeast, the luxuriant grasslands of Rio Grande do Sul, the pristine-white sand dunes of Lençóis Maranhenses, and the abundant, breathtaking flora and fauna of the Pantanal.

Alongside Brazil's growing global significance, there still remain deep economic disparities and regional differences. It is common to see the super rich and the urban poor in Brazil's major cities, mainly Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, two of the largest metropolises in the world. Inequitous growth is also visible not only in the undeveloped interiors, but also in the agriculture-dominated southern region where there is a rising number of landless peasants.

POLITICAL LIFE

Politicians have tremendous power in Brazil, and many start and make their way up through municipal and state politics. Some political positions outside of the capital are extremely powerful in their own right, especially that of mayor of one of the big cities, or governor of a state.

Since 1985, when the military dictatorship came to an end, Brazil has been one of the world's largest democracies. However, the country's current political elite have immersed Brazil in a series of scandals, involving corruption, misuse of public funds, and abuse of power.

When the leftist, ex-trade union leader Lula was elected president in 2002, the Brazilians hoped for a democracy that favored the "majority of society," as promised in his Workers' Party (Partido dos Trabalhadores) manifesto. Re-elected in 2006 by more than 60 percent of the vote, Lula promises to rule on behalf of the poor, even as Brazil's underprivileged majority continues to be ruled by a wealthy minority.

Brazilians, for the most part, are united in their distrust and lack of respect for their politicians and political parties. The average educated Brazilian resents the perceived close alliance between the politicians and their ambitious business allies.

THE PEOPLE

Home to over half the population of South America, Brazil is the fifth most populous country in the world. The vast majority of people live in the coastal parts and major cities, and the population density grows progressively scantier toward the interior. Brazil has such a varied mix of races, nationalities, and ethnic groups that it is difficult to define a typical Brazilian. It is often argued that being Brazilian is more a state of mind than anything else.

The Portuguese, the first Europeans to explore Brazil, were followed by other colonial powers laying claim to areas along the Brazilian coast. However brief the influence of the French and the Dutch, and later the British, they all made their mark on Brazil, along with the dominant Portuguese. Their influence is still visible in its culture and its people. The millions of slaves brought to Brazil from West Africa, between the 16th and 19th centuries, have also played an important role in the development of Brazil as a country and as a vibrant culture. Between the 18th and 19th centuries, the influx of immigrants from Europe, especially Italy and Germany, and also from Japan and Korea, have played their part in forming the multicultural and ethnically diverse population of Brazil.

Although Brazil has reputedly the world's largest Catholic population, its unique mix of people has given rise to many different religions and sects. The animistic beliefs of the indigenous Brazilians, ritualistic Afro-Brazilian cults, and spiritualist Kardecism, coexist with other faiths including Judaism, Islam, and Buddhism. Candomblé, a syncretic cult practiced in Bahia, is a unique amalgamation of Catholicism and African beliefs.

Brazil upholds the ideal of racial harmony. However, though not blatant, racial discrimination does still exist. As well as having limited access to education and work opportunities, black people remain inadequately represented in the higher echelons of politics, academia, and business.

SPORT & CULTURE

Brazil's sporting and cultural influence has made the "Brasil" brand known throughout the world. Brazil is the world's greatest soccer (futebol) nation, having won the World Cup on five occasions and being the only nation to play at every World Cup. Pelé (see p168), hailed as a great national hero, is the most famous soccer player of all time.

Ayrton Senna, winner of the Monaco Grand Prix in 1992

Brazil's sporting prowess has not been restricted to soccer. In Ayrton Senna, Nelson Piquet, and Emerson Fittipaldi, it has had three Formula 1 World Champions, and in tennis it saw success in the 1950s and 60s with Maria Esther Bueno and, more recently, with Gustavo Kuerten.

Culture has also played its part in establishing how the world views Brazil. The first musicians to make a mark internationally were composer Heitor Villa-Lobos and legendary performer Carmen Miranda. In literature too, writers as different in their subject matter as Jorge Armado and Paulo Coelho, have helped spread the word about their homeland. The music of Brazil, be it samba, bossa nova, or one of the many other musical styles to be found across the country, has been a powerful calling card since the 1960s. In more recent times, talented filmmakers have gone on to produce critically acclaimed works, including Walter Salles with Central do Brasil (Central Station, 1998) and Fernando Meirelles with Cidade de Deus (City of God, 2002).

Brazilians celebrate life with their colorful festivals. Carnaval, the cultural event that helped put Brazil on the map, is perceived as the biggest and best in the world, and its revelry embraces the whole country.

The Landscapes of Brazil

Larger than the US (excluding Alaska) and bordering 10 of the 12 other South American countries, Brazil is home to a wide variety of breathtaking landscapes, from vast swamps to desert, and thick rainforest to metropolitan cityscapes. Covering over 2 million sq miles (3.5 million sq km) and embracing over 40 percent of Brazilian territory, the Amazon rainforest is the most dominant landscape in Brazil and the best known. Although massive and spectacular, the Amazon Basin is only one biome out of several in Brazil, each with its own distinct scenery, fascinating wildlife, and climate.

The Amazon rainforest (see pp260–61), one of the most complex ecosystems in the world, is characterized by vast expanses of dense forest, with a wide range of vegetation. Large areas, such as the buriti palm-dominated igapós, are annually flooded by the waters of the Rio Negro.

The Pantanal (see pp320–21), an immense wetland, is the largest seasonally flooded area on the planet, inundating as much as two-thirds of its total area for half the year; during the rainy season. Dotted with small, forested elevations, the southern Pantanal is used for cattle grazing during the dry season.

THE WET & THE DRY SEASON

During the wet season, which lasts from December to March, the rising rivers inundate the flat land. This process creates cordilheiras (isolated islands) amid vast lakes and flowering shrubs. However, it is during the dry season (May to September), that wildlife is at its most spectacular in the Pantanal. During this time, the ponds teem with fish, and thousands of birds flock around the water holes.

KEY

- The Amazon rainforest
- The Pantanal
- The sertão
- The cerrado
- Mata Atlântica
- International border
- Peak

The Northern Highlands in Amazônia are impressive mountains, strung along the frontier with Venezuela and Guyana.

The sertão (see p233) is a semi-arid region in the interior of Brazil's northeast and parts of northern Minas Gerais. The essentially barren landscape, dominated by caatinga, is a uniquely Brazilian habitat. The sertão receives very little rainfall during the dry months, and is largely strewn with cacti and thorny shrubs. There are periods of intense drought, which makes it a harsh environment for wildlife and people alike. As a result, much of the flora and fauna have specially adapted themselves to the lack of water.

The cerrado (see pp296-7) features wide expanses of open, tropical grassland scattered with small, closed canopy forests. Brazil's central plateau is the world's most biologically rich savanna with over 10,000 plant species.

Mata Atlântica (see p109), or the Atlantic rainforest, is a 4,600-mile (7,400-km) coastal band endowed with a stunning diversity of landscapes, from the granite peaks and sheer cliffs of the Great Escarpment to the beautiful white sands and surf of the Costa do Sol.

Brazil's Flora & Fauna

Home to over 55,000 plant species and three of the most diverse ecosystems on the planet, the wealth of flora and fauna in Brazil is unmatched. Some of the most valuable resources of the modern world, such as rubber, originate from the rainforests of the Amazon. As a result of the relative stability of the rainforest compared to temperate areas, the fauna here has had the freedom to evolve and to adapt to very specialized local conditions. With a few of the tributaries of the Amazon river still unexplored, there are numerous species yet to be discovered. Brazil has five principal ecosystems, each with its own distinct array of plant life. From forest and swamp to desert and savanna, these stark contrasts in climate and landscape have resulted in an immensely vibrant and diverse flora, much of which is unique to the country.

Aquatic plants, including the versatile water hyacinth, are commonly found in the Pantanal, which has the richest collection of these plants.

AMAZÔNIA

The Amazon rainforest (see p260–61) possesses a wealth of flora and fauna. It is characterized by vast expanses of dense forest, extensive savannas, and other ecosystems. Vegetation and wildlife vary because of the annual flooding of large areas.

Blue and gold macaws are brilliantly colored large birds that live on cliffs and high in trees in rainforests and swamps. They are considered an endangered species.

Aguapé is an invasive floating plant with medicinal properties. Found in the wetlands of the Pantanal and Amazônia, it acts as a natural water filter.

THE SERTÃO

The arid sertão (see p233), which comprises 75 percent of the land area in the northeast, has its own unique wildlife including lizards, snakes, and foxes. Birdlife manages to flourish in this minimalist, unfriendly landscape, and sheep and goats are also reared.

Juazeiro, a shrub-like tree indigenous to the sertão, is used in wine-making and medicine, as a hair tonic, and for timber.

Mandacaru cactus is a symbol of rebirth and resilience in the arid sertão. According to local legend, this tree-like cactus with fragrant blossoms originates on the site of a massacre.

THE CERRADO

The cerrado (see p296–7) is a vast open savanna dotted with clusters of scattered woodlands. This is the world's most biologically rich grassland. There are over 4,000 endemic plant species. The cerrado is also home to maned wolves and giant anteaters.

The mutum, or crested curassow, is a large bird which is often seen in the forested areas of the cerrado.

Pequi, also known as souari nut, provides sweet berries with small thorns inside. It is eaten fresh, used in food, and made into a liqueur.

Giant anteaters are commonly spotted in the cerrado. These solitary animals have a long tail and tongue, a bristly brown coat, and five short, sharp claws on both their paws. These animals are sometimes hunted for their meat.

THE MATA ATLÂNTICA

The Mata Atlântica (see p109), or Atlantic rainforest, is formed by remnants of Brazil's coastal rainforest. The development of cities and intensive agriculture has severely reduced this habitat, but it remains home to monkeys and exotic birds.

The piaçava is a fibrous palm tree. Its fibers are extensively used to make brooms, thatch, mats, and cord.

Woolly spider monkeys are the largest primates in the Americas. This endangered species eats mainly fruits, leaves, and seeds.

THE PANTANAL

The largest inland wetland (see pp320–21) on the planet is constantly abuzz with bird- and wildlife. Hundreds of birds can be heard screeching overhead or fishing in the waters while caimans bask along the river banks. The best time to visit is the dry season.

The anaconda is a large water boa, which can grow to 32 ft (10 m) in length. It kills its prey, sometimes many times its size, by constriction as well as drowning.

The gravatá is a member of the Bromeliaceae family. Gravatá (also known as karatas) is a kind of fruit, similar to a pineapple, that grows on the ground.

Peoples of Brazil

When the Portuguese arrived in 1500, the Brazilian population consisted of over 5 million indigenous people divided into at least 1,000 communities. When their numbers began depleting due to the severity of slavery, the Portuguese started shipping slaves from Africa in the mid-16th century. Many of these slaves assimilated with the white and local population. Over the centuries, Brazil's peoples were diversified further by several waves of immigration from the Middle East, Asia, and Europe. After over 500 years of immigration and integration, modern Brazil is a true ethnic mosaic, where diverse elements combine to create a vibrant nation renowned for its spirit.

Indigenous Brazilians also include the Ticuna community, who are a large group with their own language and written literature.

Some indigenous groups (see pp262–3) continue to live as they had done before the arrival of the Portuguese, particularly in the forested interior.

MULTIRACIAL BRAZIL

Brazil is unique in its assimilation of various races and ethnic groups. A white-and-indigenous Brazilian is called a mestiço, an Afro-Brazilian is called a cafuzo, while a mulatto is born of white and African parentage.

European immigrants (see pp328–9) started moving to Brazil after slavery ended in 1888. They tended to concentrate in various parts of Southern Brazil, where people of Azorean, German, Italian, Slav, Dutch, Austrian, and other descents still thrive.

The Portuguese, the dominant ethnic group in Brazil today, introduced Catholicism (see p34), and have given the country its official language.

Mulattoes, born of black and white parentage, make up at least half the population. Prominent in music, sports, and the arts, famous Brazilian mulattoes include pop music icon Gilberto Gil (see p32) and professional soccer player Ronaldo.

Baianas are recognizable in their lace dresses with colorful beads that represent the various orixás, or Afro-Brazilian deities (see p177). Baianas play an integral role in keeping alive the Afro-Brazilian traditions that came to Brazil, especially in the slave ships from Angola and Nigeria.

Japanese Brazilians (see p169) are mainly descended from immigrants who came to Brazil around 1908 as laborers. There are numerous Buddhist and Shinto shrines around Brazil, and the Japanese influence can be seen in the art scene and in the popularity of its cuisine. São Paulo City's Liberdade district is home to the largest Japanese community outside of Japan.

CARIOCAS & PAULISTANOS

Cariocas frolicking on Copacabana beach, Rio City

Residents of Brazil's two largest cities, Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, have successfully stereotyped themselves and each other. The fun-loving Cariocas of Rio are seen as too easy-going by the Paulistanos of São Paulo, whom the Cariocas regard as workaholics with no zest for life. Paulistanos see their city as the economic force driving Brazil, while Rio is considered to be a playground for Carnival (see pp64-5). The self-image of Cariocas is that they have better music and more beautiful people. The Paulistanos, on the other hand, take pride in their diligent nature and the distinct cadence of their spoken Portuguese. The key difference really revolves around beach life. Rio's long stretch of trendy beaches forms a vital part of the city's daily life (see pp38-9). The beaches around São Paulo, on the other hand, demand the weekend to enjoy, being at least 40 miles (65 km) away from the city.

Architecture

The first buildings in Brazil were made by the indigenous peoples. As these structures were made from perishable materials, little is known of them beyond early European descriptions. Colonial churches and other buildings were in spectacular form in the 18th century during the Baroque era. After independence, Brazil followed European trends until Lúcio Costa and Oscar Niemeyer developed Brazilian Modernism, most strikingly expressed in the new capital Brasília. Today, Brazil is dominated by high-rises punctuated by the occasional striking building by a contemporary architect such as Ruy Ohtake.

Avenida Atlântica at Copacabana beach, Rio de Janeiro

INDIGENOUS

Francisco de Orellana (1511–46), the first European to navigate the Amazon, described large cities created by Curucirari people extending for as much as 6 miles (10 km) and cut by large roads. These large cities no longer exist. Today, traditional indigenous villages are smaller and focus on a large communal maloca. Less traditional ones are made up of wattle-and-daub houses.

Kayapó malocas, or ocas, are communal longhouses, usually measuring 92 ft (28 m) in length and 59 ft (18 m) in width. Their shape and design influenced many of Oscar Niemeyer's buildings.

BAROQUE

Baroque architecture began in 17th-century Europe but reached its most exuberant in Latin America. Brazilian Baroque is characterized by elaborately carved, painted interiors and ornate, florid forms set in modest, whitewash-and-raw stone façades. The style found its zenith in Salvador and Recife, and in the sculptures of Aleijadinho (see p131) in Minas Gerais.

São Pedro dos Clérigos, in Recife, is rich in ornamental flourishes typical of the Baroque. Its second tower was left incomplete in order to avoid a tax on churches.

São Francisco de Assis, in Salvador, is a display of wealth and splendor. The interior of the church is covered with almost 900 lb (450 kg) of gold. Silver, gold leaf, and solid gold are coupled with stunning azulejos, or blue Portuguese tile work.

NEO-CLASSICAL

Neo-Classicism is associated with Imperial Brazil and came to Brazil with the Portuguese monarchy who fled Napoleon in 1807, bringing the most fashionable European architectural ideas with them. The first Neo-Classical buildings were civic edifices in Rio de Janeiro and palaces in Petrópolis. These quickly became the norm for buildings of state in the rest of the empire.

The Museu Imperial, in Petrópolis, marked the advent of the most popular form of Neo-Classicism. Its architect, Julius Köhler, was influenced by the English Palladian style.

ECLECTIC

Eclecticism is an architectural style associated with 19th-century Republican Brazil. Like the styles that preceded it, it was strongly influenced by European trends, particularly French and English. Eclecticism is characterized by a combination of forms, motifs, and styles from Neo-Classical and Baroque through to Manueline, a style that fuses together in one building Portuguese Late Gothic with ornamentation in portals, windows, and arcades, along with Oriental elements.

MODERNIST

Modernism was shaped by architects such as Le Corbusier and Max Bill. Brazilian architects at first adhered to the strict precepts these Europeans laid down, but from the 1940s, architects such as Oscar Niemeyer developed a unique form of Brazilian Modernism, influenced by indigenous design and employing curved forms.

Parliament buildings, in Brasília, are a harmony of simple lines and curves incorporating water and the landscape into the design.

Le Corbusier canopy style

The Ministry of Education, built in Rio in 1943 with a striking glass brise-soleil façade, was the first Modernist building to combine civic architecture with a contemporary medium in the Americas.

CONTEMPORARY BRAZIL

Beyond Brasília and Oscar Niemeyer's continued output in Rio and Curitiba, contemporary Brazilian architecture is largely functional and not particularly inspiring. Cities are seas of identical tower-block flats broken by snaking highways. The most daring designs tend to be private homes hidden away behind high walls or corporate buildings such as Ruy Ohtake's stunning Hotel Unique (see p374) and Hotel Unique Garden in São Paulo.

Concrete pillars supporting the hotel

Landscaped garden

Hotel Unique is a combination of bravado and functionalism. Built by Ruy Ohtake, a leading figure in contemporary Brazilian architecture, the inverted arc has 3-ft (1-m) wide windows overlooking a stunning garden. The open-air rooftop bar has a spectacular view over the city.

Brazilian Artists & Writers

Brazil's first artists and writers were religious, and a tradition of uniquely Brazilian ecclesiastical art continued into the 20th century. Secular art in Brazil ceased to derive from Europe only in the 1920s after the emergence of the antropofagismo movement, which appropriated western themes into specifically Brazilian contexts. Brazil's writers found a voice in the work of 19th-century writers such as Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis and Euclides da Cunha. The explosion of Modernism in the early 20th century has left Brazil with a diverse literary output which remains largely unexplored by English-language publishers.

CHURCH ART

Brazil's first great artists were European priests. Frei Domingos da Conceição (1643–1718) was responsible for the interiors of the São Bento monasteries in Rio and Olinda. Father Agostinho de Piedade (1580–1661) and 18th-century Francisco Xavier Brito, whose works can be found in Rio de Janeiro and Minas Gerais, introduced the Baroque style, developing it as uniquely Brazilian.

Brito almost certainly taught the great artist, Aleijadinho (see p131), whose statuary mocks the racist Portuguese colonists, most notably at the basilica in Congonhas and the Igreja São Francisco in Ouro Preto. The latter also preserves the finest paintings by another subtle satirist, Mestre (Manuel da Costa) Athayde (1762–1830). Illusionism in religious art was developed by José Joaquim da Rocha (1737–1807) in Salvador, Mestre Valentim (1750–1813) in Rio, and José Joaquim da Veiga Valle (1806–74) in Goiás. In the 19th and 20th centuries, illusionism was largely lost but for the work of Benedito Calixto (1853–1927) in Santos and São Paulo, and the Dutch artist Adelbert Gresnicht, who painted the Beuronese interior of São Paulo's Mosteiro São Bento.

SECULAR ART

Brazil's first secular art was European in theme and technique, best seen in the pastoral idylls of the Dutch artist Frans Post (1612–80) and the formal portraits of the Frenchman Jean-Baptiste Debret (1768–1848).

The first painting to make use of Brazil's rich tropical light was Caipira Picando Fumo by José Ferraz de Almeida Júnior (1850–99). However, a truly Brazilian style emerged only in the 1920s with antropofagismo, a movement propagating "cultural cannibalism," which adapts ideas from European art and literature and reworks them in Brazilian terms. Tarsila do Amaral (1886–1973) produced the movement's most representative paintings, and was followed by Lasar Segall (1891–1957) and Anita Malfatti (1896–1964).

Other artists pursued Modernism according to their own ideas. Emiliano Di Cavalcanti (1897–1976) turned to the masses for inspiration, producing impressionistic, erotic icons of black Brazilian women. Candido Portinari (1903–62), with a far more obvious social conscience, produced O Mestiço that showed the dignity of Brazilian workers, while his Os Retirantes portrayed their misery. The sculptor Victor Brecheret (1894–1955) offered a Brazilian take on Art Deco, while Alfredo Volpi (1896–1988) brought Brazilian colors to abstract impressionism. São Paulo's large ethnic Japanese community continues to produce artists, such as Tomie Ohtake (b.1913), who pay Brazilian homage to the styles and techniques of Japan.

Brazil's contemporary art scene is lively and diverse. Most prominently, the works of photographer Sebastião Salgado (b.1944) are rooted in the ideas of Liberation Theology (see p34). Artist Siron Franco (b.1947) uses naive, surreal forms to highlight social and environmental issues.

COLONIAL LITERATURE

European Jesuits are credited with the earliest writing to come out of Brazil. José Anchieta (1534–97) chronicled his work and described the evangelization of the indigenous people. The sermons of Antônio Vieira (1608–97) are fine examples of Portuguese prose.

Gregório de Matos (1623–96), who was born in Bahia, is sometimes cited as Brazil's first celebrated homegrown literary figure. During the 18th century, poetry academies in Minas Gerais were producing writers such as Cláudio Manuel da Costa (1729–89), José Basílio da Gama (1740–95), and Tomás Antônio Gonzaga (1744–1810). They introduced revolutionary French ideas to Brazil and wrote lyric and epic poems on Brazilian themes, but in a lofty European classical style.

Legendary mulatto writer, Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis

THE EMPIRE & THE REPUBLIC

Brazil began to find its own voice in the last days of the Empire with the great 19th-century mulatto novelist, Joaquim Maria Machado de Assis (1839–1908). Starting out with traditional sentimental romances, he later became celebrated for his darkly humorous novels with their subversive social criticism. Dom Casmurro is considered by some to be the greatest Latin American novel of the 19th century.

After independence in 1889, Machado de Assis's social criticisms were taken a step further by a generation of Republican novelists, influenced by scientific and nascent socialist ideas from Europe. In Triste fim de Policarpo Quaresma, the black novelist, Afonso Lima Barreto (1881–1922), was openly critical of the corruption that characterized the Republic. Euclides da Cunha's Os Sertões chronicled a gory and disastrous military campaign against a messianic rebel, Antônio Conselheiro (see p206), and his bandit followers in the harsh landscape of the Bahian sertão.

MODERNISM IN LITERATURE

Modernism proper began in Brazil with Mário and Oswald de Andrade, who sought to articulate contemporary and uniquely Brazilian styles and themes. Mário (1893–1945) traveled throughout the country, searching for a unifying traditional culture which he enunciated in his comic rhapsody Macunaima. Oswald (1890–1953), together with his wife Tarsila do Amaral, formulated the ideas behind the antropofagia cultural movement. The de Andrades cleared the way for the Modernist poets Carlos Drummond (1902–87) and Manuel Bandeira (1886–1968), and the greatest of all Brazilian writers, João Guimarães Rosa (1908–67), whose grand metaphysical novel, Grande Sertão:

Veredas, invented a new syntax based on the isolated idioms of the interior of Minas Gerais.

A string of writers, including Gilberto Freyre (1900–87), Sérgio Buarque de Holanda (1902–82), and Darcy Ribeiro (1922–97), emerged from the social sciences. The 20th century also produced major popular novelists, including Jorge Amado (1902–2001) and Clarice Lispector (1920–77).

Grande Sertão exhibition, Museum of Portuguese Language, São Paulo

Vinícius de Moraes (1913–80), a seminal figure in the contemporary Brazilian music scene, was the first to plough the furrow between music and literature by writing the lyrics of many famous songs. He has since been followed by songwriter Chico Buarque (b.1944), who wrote the novel Budapest.

Since 2000, writers from Brazil's manifold ethnic communities have risen to prominence. In Relato de um Certo Oriente, Milton Hatoum (b.1952) probes the psyche of an Arab immigrant, while Moacyr Scliar (b.1937) explores the Jewish-Brazilian experience in his writings.

Today, Brazilian fiction accounts for about half the literary output of Latin America. Writers include Paulo Coelho (b.1947), feminist novelist and short-story writer Lygia Fagundes Telles (b.1923), and Amazonian poet Aníbal Beça (b.1946).

The Music of Brazil

The vibrant music of Brazil reflects the diversity of the cultural and ethnic backgrounds that make up the country's resident population. The music mirrors the influences of both the native and immigrant population. The rhythms of Africa are as important to the overall sound as the harmonies and melodies that were introduced from Europe. Brazil is not about one musical style, but a varied selection. Internationally, samba and bossa nova are the best-known of the country's musical styles, but regional forms, such as frevo (see p217), axé, forró (see p236), and sertanejo (see p233), are just as popular within Brazil.

SAMBA

Derived from Angolan religious rhythms, samba has permeated virtually every other Brazilian musical form that followed it. Historically strong in Rio, São Paulo, and Bahia, samba made a remarkable impact throughout the country in the 1930s. Samba comes in many forms, and most of these have a link to dance.

Clara Nunes was one of the most prolific and popular samba singers of all time. Her career was tragically cut short when she died at the age of 39 in 1982.

Zeca Pagodinho, who emerged in the late 1980s, is one of the most popular and best-selling artists of a new wave of samba stars.

Gilberto Gil went from political exile to Brazilian superstar before becoming Minister of Culture in 2003. He remains an active musical force.

Antônio Carlos Jobim was responsible for many of the bossa nova classics including "The Girl From Ipanema," one of the most played and recorded songs in popular music history.

BOSSA NOVA

Bossa nova, a marriage of Brazilian rhythms and American jazz, has been the most exportable form of Brazilian music since international audiences first discovered it through an album, Getz/Gilberto, recorded by Stan Getz and João Gilberto in 1964. The album included a number of compositions from a young and unknown composer from Rio, Antônio Carlos ("Tom") Jobim. Gilberto, Jobim, and Jobim's lyricist, Vinícius de Moraes, were to become the "Holy Trinity" of bossa nova.

Sergio Mendes and his group, Brasil '66, helped launch bossa nova globally in the 1960s. They have recorded with acts such as Black Eyed Peas, Erykah Badu, and Justin Timberlake.

Caetano Veloso helped launch the tropicalismo movement in 1967, and is considered a Brazilian musical treasure.

Bebel Gilberto has been the most internationally successful Brazilian artist in recent years with her hit album Tanto Tempo, released in 2002.

Chico Buarque is a composer, lyricist, performer, and author. He is as popular today as when he first performed in 1964.

Carlinhos Brown, a prolific performer, composer, drummer, and dancer, is equally popular as a solo artist or when collaborating with others.

TROPICALISMO & MÚSICA POPULAR BRASILEIRA

Tropicalismo was a form of Brazilian music that arose in the late 1960s from a mix of bossa nova, rock and roll, Bahia folk, and African music. Many tropicalismo artists, led by Caetano Veloso and Gilberto Gil, were driven by political activism following the coup of 1964. Inspired in part by tropicalismo, música popular Brasileira (MPB), or popular Brazilian music, includes many Brazilian musical styles and is the most popular music played on the radio and in the clubs and bars of Brazil.

Daniela Mercury burst on to Bahia's axé and reggae music scene in the 1990s. Her explosive live performances have won her a growing international following.

REGIONAL MUSIC

Although MPB covers a multitude of Brazilian musical genres, there are a number of distinctive regional styles that include axé, choro, forró, frevo, and pagode. Bahia, one of the powerhouses of regional Brazilian music, has its own versions of jazz, reggae, hip-hop, soul, funk, rock and roll, heavy metal, electronica, and the popular homegrown country and western style known as sertanejo.

THE SÃO PAULO SCENE

The residents of São Paulo work hard, but they have also learnt to play hard so that the city's club scene is now considered one of the world's most exciting and innovative, with top international DJs flying in to exchange ideas and sounds with their Brazilian counterparts. Break beat, drum and bass, electronica, house, lounge, speed, garage, techno, trance, and trip hop all have a place in the Paulista scene. With a huge range of nightclubs and bars to choose from, Paulistanos can enjoy all genres of music through the week and all year round.

Religions of Brazil

Few countries in the world can match Brazil for religious diversity. A typical São Paulo or Rio neighborhood will be home to Catholic and Evangelical Protestant churches, Buddhist temples, synagogues, mosques, Spiritist churches, Afro-Brazilian ceremonial centers, as well as a range of smaller religious institutions. The practice of black magic is not uncommon, even in business and politics, and soothsayers and witches hand out leaflets on the streets. Only atheists are largely absent in Brazil; those who believe in nothing are looked upon with a mixture of incredulity and pity.

Igreja Nossa Senhora do Rosário dos Pretos in São Paulo

CATHOLICISM

Catholicism arrived with the Portuguese, and Catholics remain Brazil's dominant religious group. Brazil has the largest number of Catholics of any country in the world.

From its earliest days, the church in Brazil, as in most colonies, was divided into an establishment linked to the Crown (and later to the Emperor and the Republican State) and factions who campaigned on behalf of the oppressed. One of these factions was the Jesuits who, while treating the indigenous people as objects of proselytization, nonetheless fought doggedly against their enslavement and murder by the bandeirantes and the settlers on the Amazon. The Jesuits began to be seen as a threat to the Portuguese Crown and were expelled from the colonies in 1757.

LIBERATION THEOLOGY

Leonardo Boff presiding over a service

In the 1970s, groups of Latin American Catholic thinkers preached what they called "a preferential option for the poor." In Brazil they were led by Leonardo Boff, Hélder Câmara, and Pedro Casaldaliga. They campaigned against the rich establishment and the dictatorships. Many of the priests involved were murdered or tortured and the movement was suppressed by the established Church.

The church establishment in Brazil did little to criticize the treatment of the indigenous people, or the slaves from Africa who replaced them. Churches were divided along strict social and racial lines. The poorest churches were reserved for Afro-Brazilian slaves and were often dedicated to the black Madonna, Nossa Senhora do Rosário dos Pretos.

Latin American churches were instrumental in influencing Pope John XXIII and Pope Paul VI's groundbreaking church reforms of the mid-1960s, known as Vatican II and promoting a more egalitarian Catholic Church throughout the world. Vatican II led to the most important movement in the Catholic Church in the 20th century, Liberation Theology.

Churches in Brazil today are largely apolitical and gregarious, and are increasingly influenced by Evangelical preaching and musical styles.

Evangelical Protestants at Igreja Universal do Reino, São Paulo

EVANGELICAL PROTESTANTISM

The Evangelical movement emphasizes the Protestant beliefs in the authority of the Bible and of every person's right to interpret the Scriptures for themselves. Services are emotive, with pastors making use of fiery language, and often strongly encouraging their congregation to donate a dízima (usually 10 percent of any monthly salary) to the church. The movement has been widely criticized. Nonetheless, Evangelicalism is very popular in Brazil, so much so that populist politicians often campaign as Evangelicals in elections.

SPIRITISM

Developed by the Frenchman Allan Kardec, Spiritism is a systematization of divergent 19th-century occult practices dealing with communication with the spirits of the dead. Kardec called Spiritism "a science which deals with the nature, origin, and destiny of Spirits, as well as their relationship with the corporeal world." Brazil has the largest number of Kardecian Spiritists of any country in the world.

Chagdud Khadro Ling temple in Tres Coroás, Rio Grande do Sul

BUDDHISM & OTHER ASIAN RELIGIONS

The largest population of ethnic Japanese in Latin America and immigrants from many other East Asian countries live in Brazil. Consequently, there are large communities of Nichiren Daishonin Mahayana Buddhists in the country. Their beliefs are based on the teachings of a 13th-century Japanese monk who stressed the need to elevate one's state of life from being trapped within the limits of desires and instincts. The method for achieving this is through strong ethical practice and the chanting of the Nam-Myoho-Renge-Kyo mantra. The movement has proved especially successful at bridging Brazil's trenchant class divide. Yoga and Krishna Consciousness are also popular in Brazil, though often as alternative lifestyle options.

AFRO-BRAZILIAN RELIGIONS

West African religions came to Brazil with slaves and developed into cults, such as Candomblé (p177), Batuque, and Macumba. Worship involves the invocation of orixás – spirits who intervene between humans and Olorun, the supreme creator. The Brazilian government legalized their practice in the mid-19th century, but followers of these religions have been persecuted by the Church.

INDIGENOUS RELIGIONS

Brazil is home to hundreds of different indigenous belief systems. These can all be loosely banded together as shamanism, which is not so much a religion as a distinct way of understanding reality. Rather than believing that we are made of material, indigenous peoples believe that material, time, and space itself are mere manifestations of a far deeper reality. Spiritual life is organized in harmony with this inner state by a shaman. A number of popular religious movements have grown up in Brazil from indigenous roots. The most widely practiced is Santo Daime, which makes use of Amazonian psychotropic plants to achieve a state of super-consciousness.

ISLAM

Brazil has the largest Islamic community in Latin America, but Islamic fundamentalism is almost unknown. The community is private, conservative, and is generally more concerned with preserving links to Lebanese and Syrian culture and the Arabic language than it is with proselytizing. The community has produced numerous prolific writers and politicians.

JUDAISM

Brazil's Jewish community has about 150,000 members, most of whom are concentrated in São Paulo (which has the largest Ashkenazi synagogue on the continent), Recife, and Rio de Janeiro. Many are descended from the Jews who fled Europe in the 1930s. The community is active in political and cultural life. The writer Moacyr Scliar is one of the country's successful literary exports.

Soccer in Brazil

In the first half of the 20th century, soccer went from being the private sport of Brazil's white European elite to becoming the greatest symbol of nationhood. The game united all sections of the population and, after the national team's first World Cup victory in 1958, brought about unprecedented national pride. The Brazilian way of playing futebol – with more emphasis on attacking, dribbling, and acrobatic ball skills – has become a benchmark for excellence, and is also known as jogo bonito, or “the beautiful game.”

In a favela, the main leisure activity for children is always soccer. Rough terrain helps them develop trademark ball skills such as the dribble.

Charles Miller is the father of Brazilian soccer. In 1894, returning to the country after attending boarding school in Southampton, UK, he brought two footballs, a pump, and a rule book. The first reported game took place a few months later.

THE NATIONAL SIDE

With their iconic yellow shirts, the Brazilian national team, known as the Seleção, or Selection, is the most glamorous football team in the world. It is the only team to have taken part in every World Cup and have won it more times than anyone – in 1958, 1962, 1970, 1994, and 2002.

The 1938 national soccer team received a joyous welcome on their return home from France. Brazil, which came third after defeating Czechoslovakia, had also won the hearts of the Europeans.

The 1950 World Cup was hosted in Brazil. In the fateful final game, Brazil only needed a draw against Uruguay to win the tournament. Overwhelming favorites, Brazil lost 2–1 in front of a record 200,000 crowd, which caused the greatest moment of collective sporting tragedy in the country's history.

BRAZILIAN GREATS

Brazil has produced more soccer legends than any other country and also the greatest player of all time: Pelé (see p168). The first great player was Artur Friedenreich in the 1910s. Each generation reveals new stars and the soccer factory shows no signs of stopping. Since the inauguration of FIFA's (Fédération Internationale de Football Association) World Player of the Year award in 1991, only Brazil has won it with more than one player: Romário (1994), Ronaldo (1996, 1997, 2002), Rivaldo (1999), and Ronaldinho (2004, 2005).

Leônidas da Silva, also called “Rubber Man” for his elasticity, was the highest scorer in the 1938 World Cup.

Garrincha, the “Little Bird,” was born with bent legs and is considered to be the finest dribbler of all time.

The Dream Team of 1970 is considered the best soccer team of all time. Their 4-1 victory against Italy won them the World Cup for the third time.

The torcidas, or soccer fans, have adapted aspects of Carnival to futebol, playing lively music at stadia, dressing up in team colors, and bringing noisemakers, colorful banners, and flags.

MAJOR TEAMS & STADIA

There are several hundred professional clubs in Brazil. The number is impossible to calculate, since local leagues are constantly changing and teams shutting down and starting up. Brazil's best-known stadia are the Maracanã (see p84) in Rio, which was built for the 1950 World Cup, and the Morumbi in São Paulo.

Romário, the "Baixinho" (Shorty), was the star player in the 1994 World Cup, won by Brazil.

Ronaldo, with two World Cup winner's medals, broke the competition's goal-scoring record in 2006.

Brazilian Beach Culture

The beach represents a big playground for Brazilians. People living near Brazil's extensive coastline go to the beach daily to socialize and to eat and drink, while vacationers can spend all day near the sand and warm water. Brazilian music plays nonstop at the local beach stalls and, as dusk falls, beachgoers party long into the night. It is a Brazilian tradition to play soccer, beach volleyball, and footvolley, or go for a walk or bike ride along the beach or promenades. At some resorts, visitors can hire a horse or a beach buggy, or practice surfing, kayaking, paragliding, and skibunda (sandboarding).

Urban beaches are popular for their promenades and cycle lanes, where people go to exercise before or after work. Some beaches offer good facilities with bathtubs, showers, and gym equipment, and are illuminated at night for playing sports such as soccer and footvolley.

Colorful food stalls selling coalho cheese, corn-on-the-cob, peanuts, and shrimp sticks line the beaches. Popular local drinks include fresh coconut water, cold beer, and caipirinha.

Brazil's beaches can vary from calm bays to unspoiled, wild beaches accessed only by tracks through the forest. There are also exclusive resort beaches with aquatic parks and modern facilities.

Beach sports are very popular. Besides soccer and volleyball, people play frescobol (a kind of tennis). Some beaches also offer paragliding and delta-wings during holidays.

Watersports, such as surfing, windsurfing, kayaking, scuba diving, and snorkeling, are popular through the year due to the warm water. All equipment can be easily hired at the beach.

Umbrellas in bright colors are lent for free by the food stalls to their patrons.

The canga, a Brazilian sarong, is worn to and from the beach, and also used as a towel to lie on.

Beach safety is monitored by life-guards on buggies during holidays and at weekends. Flags offer advice on currents and deep water. Asking locals may be useful if there is no patrol.

LOCALS ON THE BEACH

Relaxed and spontaneous by nature, Brazilians carry only the bare essentials with them to be free to walk, swim, play, or just lie on a canga to tan and watch the world go by.

Beach fashion for women popularly features tiny bikinis that ensure the smallest tan line. The men, on the other hand, can be seen wearing swimming trunks under informal shorts.

Beach parties, or luaus (moon parties), are kept alive all night by typical Brazilian dance music such as forró (see p236) or axé. Electronic music and live concerts are also played at these parties.

BRAZIL THROUGH THE YEAR

Brazilians are a fun-loving people. In this unique land of diverse ethnic groups and races, there is a colorful and vibrant culture, which is celebrated in the numerous parties, carnivals, festivals, rallies, and parades held through the year, but particularly in summer. The most significant events include the spectacular Carnival and a series of popular religious festivals related to Catholicism and a combination of syncretic traditions. The climate varies, but on average it stays warm, making it favorable to outdoor celebrations. The seasons are not so perceptible, except in Southern and Southeastern Brazil where temperatures are moderate in autumn and spring and dip sharply in winter.

Festive silver boots with feathers

SPRING

As flowers begin to decorate the landscape, Brazil prepares to display its wealth of spring flowers and gears up for festivities that last through the season. The most remarkable spring celebrations are related to the Catholic religion, but the highly charged Brazilian Grand Prix also generates great excitement.

SEPTEMBER

Expoflora (Sep weekends), Holambra (São Paulo state). More than 1,000 species of flora are for sale. Dutch folk dances, music, and Dutch and Brazilian food are also featured, emphasizing the town's Dutch character.

International Fishing Festival (2nd fortnight), Cáceres (Mato Grosso). Listed by the Guinness World Records as the biggest fishing tournament in the world, the angling event attracts more than 1,500 competitors.

OCTOBER

São Paulo International Film Festival (2nd fortnight), São Paulo. Lasting two weeks, the festival screens around 350 reputed films from more than 50 countries.

São Paulo Art Biennial (Oct-Dec, even years), São Paulo. The Parque do Ibirapuera is the site of an amazing display of modern visual art.

Círio de Nazaré (2nd Sun), Belém. Our Lady of Nazareth procession follows the Romaria fluvial pilgrimage a day earlier.

Oktoberfest (mid-Oct), Blumenau (Santa Catarina). A lively street party, second only to Munich, celebrates German music, beer, and way of life.

Brazilian Formula 1 Grand Prix (late Oct), São Paulo.

Organized at Interlagos Circuit, the race is usually the final round of the Formula 1 season.

Recifolia (last week), Recife. A lively carnival with crowds dancing the whole week to Bahian bands.

SUMMER

Summer is the most important time of the year for Brazilians. It marks the beginning of the year and vacation time. It rains heavily in most parts, but the sun continues to shine through. Besides a number of outdoor events to mark the advent of summer, there are trade fairs and important religious festivals. The culmination of the summer is Carnival.

DECEMBER

Festa Santa Bárbara (Dec 4), Salvador. A popular three-day Candomblé ceremony at Fonte de Santa Bárbara. The image of Santa Bárbara, called Yansã in Candomblé, is carried through the streets of the historic center.

Carnatal (early Dec), Natal. Out-of-season Carnival, where famous bands test their repertoire for the next Carnival, with throngs of people singing and dancing through the streets.

São Silvestre Race (Dec 31), São Paulo. Amateur and recreational runners join professional athletes for a 9-mile (15-km) race through the streets of São Paulo.

Reveillon at Copacabana (Dec 31), Rio de Janeiro. A New Year's Eve party along Copacabana beach with performances by leading pop stars and a lavish midnight fireworks display at Forte de Copacabana and Le Meridien Hotel.

JANUARY

Processão dos Navegantes (Jan 1), Angra dos Reis. A samba school percussion group parade across the Baía de Ilha Grande in boats of different shapes and sizes.

Processão do Bom Jesus dos Navegantes (Jan 1), Salvador. Hundreds of fishing boats follow a galliot, a long ship, that carries the image of Our Lord of Navigators.

Pré Cajú (2nd week), Aracaju. One of the dozens of micaretas (out-of-season Carnival) before the real Carnival in February/March.

Lavagem do Bonfim (2nd Thu), Salvador. A colorful parade and ceremonial washing (lavagem) of the steps of the Igreja de Nossa Senhora do Bonfim.

Festas dos Ticumbi & Alardo (Jan 19 & 20), Itaúnas. People in colorful clothes pay homage to São Bento and São Sebastião to the strains of traditional music.

São Paulo Fashion Week (late Jan), São Paulo. Fashion shows featuring top Brazilian models and fashion designers are held.

Festa de São Lázaro (last Sun), Salvador. A festival in honor of Candomblé deity Omolu, the God of Plague.

FEBRUARY

Pescadores do Rio Vermelho (Feb 2), Salvador. A procession of boats carrying offerings to Yemanjá, the Goddess of the Sea, accompanied by Afro-Brazilian music.

Nossa Senhora dos Navegantes (Feb 2), Porto Alegre. A boat procession on the Rio Guaíba carrying the image of Yemanjá.

Carnaval (Feb/Mar; about 40 days before Easter). The most famous Carnival takes place in the city of Rio de Janeiro. Salvador and Olinda also have fantastic celebrations.

Festa Nacional da Uva (Feb/Mar; biennial, even years), Caxias do Sul. Wine production is the highlight of this festival that keeps alive the customs and traditions of the early Italian immigrants.

AUTUMN

In Southern Brazil and the Southeast, the autumn season is marked by steady breezes and comfortable temperatures. Religious festivals, such as the Semana Santa and Festa do Divino Espírito Santo, are celebrated with great involvement. The Hot-Air Balloon Festival is an additional attraction.

MARCH

International Book Biennial (Mar/Apr, even years), across Brazil. A 10-day fair marked by book launches, interactive author sessions, lectures, and cultural performances.

Semana Santa (Mar/Apr), across Pernambuco & Minas Gerais. In Nova Jerusalém, the play Paixão de Cristo (Passion of Christ) is staged with over 500 professional actors; the audience also participates. In the historic towns of Minas Gerais, crowds accompany the religious processions.

APRIL

Processão do Fogaréu (Wed before Good Friday), Cidade de Goiás. The city glows with lights and the streets blaze with torches during the solemn procession of the Semana Santa, when the burial of Christ and the Resurrection are re-enacted to the sound of tambours.

Festa Nacional da Maçã (Apr/May), São Joaquim (Santa Catarina). Exhibitions, musical shows, and German folk performances, as well as bestowing of the "best apple producer" title.

Micarande (late Apr), Campina Grande. The first micareta (off-season Carnaval) outside the state of Bahia. Axé, forró (see p236), and frevô (see p217) performances highlight the revelry.

Hot-Air Balloon Festival (Easter week), Torres. Annual hot-air balloon event held since 1989. Other attractions include a parachute display and rodeo competition.

MAY

Festa do Divino Espírito Santo (May/June, 45 days after Easter), Pirenópolis & Alcântara. Mock battles between Moors and Christians are enacted. Forró and sertanejo parties are held.

Festa do Bembé do Mercado (approx May 13), Santo Amaro. The festival marks the abolition of slavery in 1889. Traditional Bahian music and dance performances also take place.

WINTER

With cooler climatic conditions, the southern and southeastern regions are attractive to visitors. Across Brazil, the festivities begin in June, paving the way for international music and art festivals that are a huge draw. The GLBT (Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual, and Transgender) Parade is also significant.

JUNE

The Climate of Brazil

Brazil's climate, divided into four broad zones, varies greatly from region to region. Amazônia is hot and humid all year round, though parts experience a distinct dry season from July to October. The central band of the country is also humid, with a marked dry season, while the coastal areas enjoy pleasant tropical breezes and short seasonal downpours. High temperatures and infrequent rainfall characterize the semi-arid desert in the Northeast. In Southern Brazil, cool, wet winters contrast with humid summers. Most of Brazil can be visited at any time of the year, with the exception of the wetlands of the Pantanal during the rainy season, and the extreme south of the country during winter, when it can get very cold.

CLIMATE ZONES

- Humid: Heavy rainfall, high humidity.
- Tropical: Distinct hot humid and cold dry seasons.
- Semi-arid: Hot weather conditions, scanty rainfall.
- Humid subtropical: Cold winter, year-round rainfall.

Manaus and central Amazônia are constantly humid, but experience a distinct dry season from July to October.

Southwest Amazônia, lying near the Andes, sees even more rain than the northern parts.

The wetlands of the Pantanal are deluged by rain for most of the year, and seasonal flooding is common from October to April.

The central highlands of Santa Catarina occasionally receive snow in winter.

The lowest temperatures are in the far south of the country, where winters are cold, windy, and rainy.

0 kilometers 500
0 miles 500

Trade winds from the Atlantic bring moist air to Amazônia, where there is heavy precipitation all year round.

The semi-arid interior is so hot and dry that there is often no winter here.

The coastal region in the northeast of the country receives almost year-round sunshine and seasonal downpours.

The high-altitude plateau on which Brasília sits can become quite cool, with temperatures as low as 50° F (10° C) in winter.

THE HISTORY OF BRAZIL

Very little is known about the history of Brazil before 1500, when Europeans first traveled there. Archaeological remains, which consist mainly of pottery, suggest a complex society that was in existence long before the colonialists arrived. After more than 300 years of Portuguese colonization, Brazil became a republic in 1889. Long periods of totalitarian rule finally led to the return of democracy in 1989.

For over a millennium, before the Europeans arrived in Brazil, Amazônia had a vast network of sophisticated societies with populations of up to 100,000. The abundance of fish in the Amazon river and its tributaries was almost certainly one of the main reasons for the wealth and rapid growth of cultures in Amazônia.

Up until the beginning of the 16th century, the middle Amazon region around Santarém was an important center for ceramic art and trading. It was home to thousands of semi-settled indigenous people who grew maize and had access to plentiful fish. Living on higher land, up above the flood plain, as well as in long houses along river banks, they left important ceramic remains. Archaeological evidence from the earth mounds near Santarém and also on the Ilha de Marajó (see p270) suggests that some of the shell midden mounds were part of these complex fishing societies. The most widespread of the 1,000 semi-nomadic indigenous peoples that inhabited the territory at the time of the European conquest, were the Tupi-Guaraní Indians. While they lived off slash-and-burn farming, the Tupinambá, another large group, cultivated crops, primarily maize.

EUROPEAN DISCOVERY

The coastline was widely inhabited when Spanish explorer Vicente Yáñez Pinzón disembarked on the northeastern shore in Pernambuco, on January 26, 1500. He could not claim the newfound land for Spain, as he was officially limited by the Tordesillas meridian. The Treaty of Tordesillas, signed in 1494 between Spain and Portugal, determined that all lands discovered west of a meridian located 3 miles (5 km) west of the Cape Verde Islands would belong to Spain, and those to the east of this line could be claimed by Portugal. On April 23, 1500, Pedro Álvares Cabral landed in southern Bahia, marking the Portuguese arrival in Brazil. Portugal, which already controlled the Indian Ocean and the spice trade, bolstered its position as a mercantile power rivaled only by Spain.

The Portuguese Conquest

When the Portuguese reached Brazil in 1500, their period of maritime expansion was at its peak. In 1501, Emperor Manuel I ordered Amerigo Vespucci to explore the new territory further, leading to the settlement of Guanabara Bay (Rio de Janeiro). In 1530, an expedition led by Martim Alfonso de Sousa resulted in the first colonial towns – São Vicente and São Paulo. Preoccupied with Africa and the Far East, Portugal neglected Brazil until 1532, when João III divided the land into 15 captaincies. The early settlers mainly comprised impoverished Portuguese peasants and nobles, who were expected to explore and govern these captaincies.

An illuminated Portuguese manuscript features the royal coat of arms, as well as armillary spheres symbolizing Emperor Manuel's reign as a golden age of exploration.

Priests also joined the expedition, hoping to spread Christianity in the New World.

Cabral erected a cross and held a Catholic service to signify the ownership of Brazil.

PEDRO ÁLVARES CABRAL

The commander of the fleet sent to India by Emperor Manuel I, Cabral accidentally landed at Porto Seguro in southern Bahia on April 23, 1500. The Portuguese navigator baptized the bay, where they anchored for 10 days, Terra de Vera Cruz, or “Land of the True Cross.” His onward voyage to India was beset with calamities, and Cabral finally drowned in a shipwreck a few months later.

Indigenous People meeting the Portuguese

Initial Portuguese fleets were received by friendly indigenous people. Gradually, these confrontations and meetings became more hostile in nature.

THE NAMING OF BRAZIL

Officially, the land was named for pau-brasil, or brazil wood, a tree yielding a valuable red dye. However, the name "Brazil" appeared in the Irish legend of St. Brendan as Hy Brazilik (Blessed Land in Gaelic). It became part of European maritime folklore, designating a hypothetical land located somewhere in the Atlantic. When Cabral found a new land in that general area, he may have identified it with Brendan's Brazil. The tree might have been named after the land, rather than the other way around.

Botocudos Man

Still surviving in some parts of Brazil, the Botocudos were hunter-gatherers.

Woodcut Showing Tupinambá People

Ritually practicing cannibalism, the Tupinambá were some of the first Brazilians to make contact with the Portuguese. They soon died from diseases carried by the Europeans, and from the conditions of their capture and enslavement.

Skilled captains accompanied Cabral in his explorations to discover new territories.

João III (1502–57)

King João III ascended to the throne while the Portuguese Empire was at the height of its mercantile and colonial power. Unable to directly govern Brazil, King João III divided the land into 15 captaincies, or captaincies.

Settlement was focused mainly on the long coastline.

Only São Vicente and Pernambuco immediately prospered. In 1548, the king repossessed the captaincies and brought Brazil under his direct control.

A Jesuit Admonishing Indigenous People

The influence of the Jesuits accompanied this early period of colonization. The first missionaries had arrived in 1549 and acquired great power in Brazil through their influence on the Portuguese court. A zealous missionary movement began, aimed at converting the local people.

COLONIZATION & EXPANSION

King João III conferred special colonial privileges to the donatários, the aristocrats and minor gentry, who were expected to develop and govern the capitanias on behalf of the Crown. The donatários, however, met with adverse climatic conditions and hostile indigenous people. Some of the capitanias were attacked by the indigenous Brazilians. In 1549, the Crown was forced to send Tomé de Sousa as the first governor, who was assigned the task of protecting the few remaining captaincies.

SUGAR & THE SLAVE TRADE

Introduced to Brazil in 1532, sugar replaced the country's first major export, brazil wood, which was nearly wiped out as a result of over-exploitation. Setting up his capital in Salvador, Tomé de Sousa enlisted the support of the Jesuits. The indigenous people who did not convert to Christianity were enslaved and sent to work in sugar plantations. As a result of the high demand for sugar in Europe, sugar cane grown in engenhos (plantations) along the northeastern coast soon became the base of the Brazilian economy. Salvador and Olinda emerged as key centers for the sugar trade.

The hunting-gathering indigenous people, however, were found to be unsuitable slaves for the plantations. They were better suited for the brazil wood trade, and were made to log and transport timber instead. From the 1550s, the landowners turned to Africa, importing millions of slaves.

COLONIAL WARS

While the Portuguese Crown was still struggling to consolidate its hold on Brazil, the Dutch and French forces continued to encroach on its territories. In 1555, the French had made inroads into the bay of Guanabara, establishing their own colony, French Antarctic. Portuguese forces seized the colony in 1565, and founded a new city, Rio de Janeiro.

Throughout the first half of the 17th century, French and Dutch privateers continued to plunder the coastal cities. With a powerful fleet, the Dutch offered a greater challenge. In 1624, the Dutch captured Salvador and laid siege to the city, until the combined

During 1648 and 1649, two battles were fought at Guararapes, in Pernambuco, where the Dutch were routed and their territory reduced to an enclave around Recife. Following several years of open warfare, the Dutch formally withdrew in 1661.

THE DISCOVERY OF GOLD

The decline of the sugar industry coincided with the discovery of gold. In 1695, gold was first discovered in Sabara, Minas Gerais, by the bandeirantes (paramilitary adventurers), who faced grueling conditions as they pressed inland toward the Andean foothills. Gold was also found in Cuiabá, Mato Grosso, in 1719. Both events led to further development and expansion of the country's interior. Traffic to São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro rapidly increased and new communities drew people away from the Northeast coast. The focus of power in Brazil moved from the Northeast to the Southeast, and Rio de Janeiro was made the new capital in 1763.

STRUGGLE FOR INDEPENDENCE

The gold rush lasted not more than 70 years. The decline of gold in the 18th century led to high taxes, as Brazil was forced to meet the quota set by the Crown for the minimum annual gold production. This, coupled with the Brazilian resentment at their exclusion from administration and the Portuguese dominance of foreign trade, culminated in the 1789 Inconfidência Mineira rebellion. Led by Tiradentes (see pp126–7), who was eventually executed, the uprising was aimed at Brazilian independence from Portuguese rule.

Dom Pedro proclaiming "Independência ou Morte!" at the Rio Ipiranga, on September 7, 1822

THE FIRST EMPEROR OF BRAZIL

The advance of French Emperor Napoleon, in 1808, forced King Dom João VI, who was ruling from Lisbon, to relocate his government to Brazil. In 1821, the royal family were forced to return to deal with rebels back home. Dom João's son, the Prince Regent, who had stayed back in Brazil, proclaimed independence from Portugal on September 7, 1822. In a famous scene at the Rio Ipiranga, he tore the Portuguese insignia from his uniform, drew his sword, and declared, "Independência ou Morte!" (Independence or Death). Three months later, he crowned himself Emperor Dom Pedro I.

Although the assumption of independence had been easy, Dom Pedro soon realized that organizing the new government was riddled with challenges. His own autocratic nature proved to be the biggest hurdle in winning the confidence of his subjects. The new constitution he proposed, based on his own unlimited power, was strongly opposed by the assembly. When Dom Pedro dismissed his assembly in 1831, demonstrators demanded its reinstatement.

PROVINCIAL UNREST

Dom Pedro I was forced to abdicate in favor of his five-year-old son, Dom Pedro II. From 1831 to 1840, three appointed regents ruled the country in the young emperor's name during a period of turmoil, in which local factions struggled to gain control of their provinces and to keep the masses in line. The regency in Rio de Janeiro gave considerable power to the provinces in 1834, when Brazil became a federation of locally autonomous regional powers, with loose allegiance to the center. The rebellions, riots, and popular movements that marked these years did not spring from economic misery, but from attempts to share in the prosperity stemming from the North Atlantic demand for Brazil's exports.

THE COFFEE INDUSTRY

Coffee, which was introduced to Brazil in the early 1800s, filled the void left by the collapse of the sugar industry and the waning gold rush. An army officer, Francisco de Mello, was believed to have brought the first coffee beans into Brazil, from his journey to French Guiana. The coffee industry began to flourish, mainly in Minas Gerais and São Paulo. Expanding coffee production in the 1850s and 1860s attracted British investment in railroads to speed transport of the beans to the coast. The coastal Santos–São Paulo Railroad (1868) was followed by a series of railroads that linked the north-eastern coast to the interior.

SLAVERY ABOLISHED

As coffee exports rose steadily, so did the numbers of imported slaves. In Rio de Janeiro alone, they soared from around 26,000 in 1825 to 44,000 in 1828. While slave owners argued that slavery was not demoralizing, others were in favor of replacing slavery with free European immigrant labor. Eventually, a contract system that was little better than slavery was established by the Parliament. New laws and decrees, unacceptable to slave owners, were simply not enforced, such as the 1829 order forbidding slave ships to sail for Africa. The failure to enforce these orders caused regional slave rebellions throughout the 19th century. In 1850, British and domestic pressure finally forced the Brazilian government to outlaw the

THE WAR OF THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE

From 1864 to 1870, Paraguay and the allied countries of Argentina, Brazil, and Uruguay fought one of the bloodiest conflicts on the American continent. Also known as the Paraguayan War, it has been widely attributed to the expansionist ambitions of Paraguayan dictator Francisco Solano Lopez, and the Brazilian and Argentinian meddling in internal Uruguayan politics. The outcome of the war was the devastating defeat of Paraguay by the Triple Alliance, but at the cost of over 100,000 casualties.

In 1875, the cabinet in Rio Branco approved a law freeing newborn slaves and requiring masters to care for them until they were eight years old. Between 1875 and 1887, 156,000 immigrants arrived in São Paulo to work as free laborers and fill the void created by the gradual decline in the slave population. By the 1880s, the slave population was reduced to half its size. In 1888, the Golden Law was passed, finally abolishing slavery.

THE FIRST REPUBLIC

In 1889, the monarchy was overthrown by a military coup, which was led by Marechal Deodoro da Fonseca and supported by Brazil's coffee barons. Dom Pedro II was exiled in Paris, where he died two years later. A republic was born, with Deodoro as the first president. The Constituent Assembly that drew up the 1891 constitution was a confrontation between the São Paulo coffee oligarchy that sought to limit executive power and the radical authoritarians who wanted to expand presidential authority. The growing opposition culminated in a navy revolt, forcing Deodoro to step down only a few months later. It was recognized that the central government could exercise control only through the local oligarchies, or patrias. The constitutional system was offset by the coronelismo, or the real system of unwritten agreements among these local bosses, by which local oligarchies chose the state governors, who in turn selected the president.

The informal distribution of power emerged as the result of armed struggles and bargaining. In order to check the nationalizing tendencies of the army, the oligarchic republic strengthened the navy and police, turning them into small armies in the larger states.

"CAFÉ COM LEITE" REPUBLIC

The early years of the republic were called café com leite (coffee and milk) by its opponents. Brazilian politics was dominated by an oligarchy that comprised São Paulo coffee barons and Minas Gerais cattle ranchers. These groups controlled electoral politics, and the presidency alternated between the two wealthy states of coffee and milk.

THE STRUGGLE FOR MODERNIZATION

At the turn of the 19th century, Brazil lacked an integrated economy. Domestic consumption was largely neglected, and the middle class was not yet active in political life. The economy was organized around large agricultural estates, or latifundia. Brazil had lost its sugar market to Caribbean producers, while the rubber boom in Amazônia was beginning to lose its primacy to more efficient Southeast Asian plantations. The outbreak of World War I was the turning point for the dynamic urban sectors. Industrial production doubled, and agricultural diversity received an impetus, as the growing demand by the Allies for staple products sparked a new boom for goods other than sugar and coffee. The old order gave way to the political aspirations of the turned against him when they realized that creating a strictly fascist state was not on his agenda. They were bidding to seize power in the 1938 election, which the Constitution barred Vargas from contesting. Months before the election, Vargas declared a state of emergency to avert an alleged communist plot. He dissolved the Constitution and established the Estado Nôvo (New State), which used repressive political tactics and rejected free-market liberal capitalism. Vargas's promise of a "post-war era of liberty" could not save the fall of the Estado Nôvo in 1945, when he was ousted by General Eurico Dutra. His return to presidency in 1951 was marred by inflation, corruption, and a political scandal involving an attack on a journalist by the President's body-guard. Faced with the ultimatum to resign, Vargas ended his life in 1954 by shooting himself.

THE NEW STATE

A bloodless coup by the military installed Getúlio Vargas as provisional president in 1930. Between the World Wars, he built a corporatist, centralized state along fascist lines, although he did advocate some liberal reforms. The collapse of the old order had created a vacuum, which was filled by the fascist Integralistas and communists. The former had once enjoyed Vargas's support, but later

The Vargas Era (1930-54)

Spanning the creation of Brazil as a modern nation-state, the long political career of Getúlio Vargas exemplifies the various contradictions at the heart of the Brazilian national character. His rise to power in 1930 marked the resurgence of a generation of young, dynamic administrators, but also marked the beginning of an authoritarian rule. During his first term, he assumed absolute power to overthrow the old order, and established the Estado Nôvo. Forced to step down after World War II, he remained popular and was re-elected in 1950.

Getúlio Dornelles Vargas

A pro-industry nationalist and virulent anti-communist, Vargas possessed an authoritarian streak. The hero of the newly-emerged urban working class, he favored capitalism and liberal reforms to some extent.

Crowd Cheering Vargas's Victory

A bloodless coup in 1930 ended the reign of President Washington Luis, and brought Vargas into power.

NATIONALIZED FASCISM

Exploiting communist paranoia, Vargas assumed dictatorship in 1937, abolishing opposition parties and imposing censorship. He tolerated anti-Semitism, initially encouraging the fascist Integralistas (see p55) until they decided to contest the elections against him in 1938.

Vargas, diminutive in stature, emulated Hitler and Mussolini in some ways.

Brazil was confident of winning the World Cup in the first tournament to be held after World War II. The final was played on home ground at Rio's Estádio Maracanã. However, in a surprise victory, Uruguay defeated Brazil 2–1. With slighted pride, the humiliated nation plunged into mourning.

New Ministry of Education

Vargas was responsible for the erection of a sky-scraping new Ministry of Education, whose cutting-edge design was emphasized by its incongruous location behind a colonial church in Rio de Janeiro.

Toward the Future

Vargas recognized that Brazil's strength lay in its vast natural resources. He created Petrobras, the state oil company, and invested in road and air transport.

Daily Life

Under Vargas's rule, modern tramways were constructed to carry white-collar employees to their various offices in the capital city of Rio de Janeiro.

INTO MODERNITY

The reign of Juscelino Kubitschek, Vargas’s successor, lasted from 1956 to 1961, ushering Brazil into modernity. Campaigning on a platform of “Fifty years of progress in five,” Kubitschek tried to achieve this progress with generous incentives for foreign investors, such as low taxes, privileges for the importation of machinery, and donations of land. All this gave impetus to the economic growth rate, which paved the way for the economic boom in the next decade. The most notable manifestation of Kubitschek’s nationalistic aspirations was the creation of Brasilia (see pp294–5) as the new capital of Brazil.

Despite instilling national confidence, Kubitschek’s era was also beset with massive inflation. Also, the influx of foreign capital rapidly captured domestic industry, and the urban bourgeoisie found state control threatening rather than protective. Mild structural reforms took place under President João Goulart (1961–64), but the increasing political infighting between left and right culminated in the 1964 military junta.

THE ERA OF MILITARY RULE

A period of right-wing military dictatorship followed. In a bid to appease the hard-liners, the new president, Marshal Humberto Castelo Branco, recessed and purged Congress, and decreed the expansion of the president’s powers at the expense of the legislature and the judiciary. His gamble curbed the populist left, but gave his successor, Artur da Costa e Silva (1967–69), a basis for authoritarian rule. Despite their victory, the hard-liners were still unable to institutionalize their agenda politically. They did not give up their liberal constitutionalism as they feared damage to their alliance with the US, the citadel of anti-communism. In 1969, the democratic mask fell off when General Médici came to power and continued to rule an authoritarian regime without popular support. An extremely oppressive government apparatus hounded political opponents. Yet the Médiçi administration cloaked itself in the green and gold flag when Brazil won the Jules Rimet trophy for its third consecutive victory in the soccer World Cup in 1970. From 1968 to 1974, during the darkest days of dictatorship, the military-civil alliance took shape as the economy boomed, reaching annual GDP growth rates of 12 percent. During this period, the Trans-Amazon Highway was built, and the Rio Paraná was dammed.

Geisel's accession in 1974 signaled a move toward democratic rule. He attempted to restrain the growing strength of the opposition parties by creating an electoral college that would approve his selected replacement. He allowed the return of exiles, restored habeas corpus, and installed General João Figueiredo as his successor in 1979. A 1981 bombing incident at Rio City's RioCentro, confirmed direct military involvement in terrorism. The Figueiredo regime's inaction in punishing the guilty strengthened the public's resolve to end military rule, as Brazil faced inflation and mounting foreign debt.

THE RETURN TO DEMOCRACY

In 1985, civilian Tancredo Neves was voted into office as president. However, he died before taking office. Brazil completed its transition to a popularly elected government in 1989, when Fernando Collor de Mello won 53 percent of the vote. The democratization of the government was visible in the impeachment of the corrupt de Mello regime, forcing him to resign in 1993. The 1994 elections brought to power Fernando Cardoso, who served two terms but failed to match the growth of the country's wealth and power with better living conditions. Socio-economic contradictions helped usher Lula da Silva in 2003 as Brazil's first elected left-wing president. His Workers' Party (Partido dos Trabalhadores) government declined to nationalize private companies or collectivize land. This restored investor confidence in the country that underwrote strong economic growth and employment expansion. Despite an unfulfilled promise of economic and social revolution, Lula was re-elected to power in October 2006 and has returned with a strong mandate to reduce poverty in Brazil. Brazil's two-term limit for presidents means Lula cannot stand in 2010.

Introducing Southeast Brazil

The four states of Rio de Janeiro, Espírito Santo, Minas Gerais, and São Paulo constitute Brazil's economic heartland. The giant metropolises – Rio de Janeiro, Belo Horizonte, and São Paulo – burst with energetic cultural life. Rio de Janeiro holds the greatest attractions with its Carnaval and breathtaking mountains and beaches. Beyond the urban hubs, nature and rural life exist undisturbed. Wild islands lie a short boat ride away. Inland, in the folds of the rugged Minas hills, are colonial towns whose cobbled streets, colorful Portuguese town houses, and ornate Baroque churches remain little changed since imperial times.

Parque Nacional Serra da Canastra (see p133), one of the protected areas dotting the region, preserves pristine rainforest and cerrado, as well as rich fauna.

São Paulo City (see pp134–59), the capital of São Paulo state, is relentlessly urban and frenetic, but has Brazil's best restaurants, shops, and nightlife.

São Paulo's coast (see pp164–71), stretching across 250 miles (400 km), features beaches and islands that serve as the weekend playground for the city.

Carnaval in Rio

One of the world's most spectacular festivals, Carnaval is celebrated all over Brazil, but the celebrations in Rio are justly famous. They remain unmatched for their sheer scale and splendor. Falling in the first days of February or March, Carnaval derives its origin from religion, and it is linked to the calendar of the Catholic Church. Traditionally, Carnaval is the last celebration of excess and joy before the austerity and fasting of the Lenten period. Its key elements include street celebrations, carnival balls, and the world-famous parade of top samba schools, which traditionally takes place at the Sambódromo in downtown Rio.

Samba schools are large social clubs found in Rio's poorer communities and neighborhoods, often linked to the local favelas. Mangueira, one of the most prominent schools, was founded in 1928, and Portela, which began in 1923, has won the most Carnaval titles. Many top schools date from the 1940s and 50s, while Grande Rio formed as late as 1988.

Giant puppets are put together to decorate the floats and fascinating costumes are created for the participants.

Craftspeople work throughout the year, as Carnaval is a year-round industry. Much of the work can now be seen at close quarters in the Cidade de Samba in downtown Rio.

Porta bandeira is the school's standard bearer, dressed in lavish 18th-century formal wear, regardless of the school's theme.

Street carnivals take place wherever there is a band that can strike up a samba and move around the streets. Bands attract a large following who dance and sing through the neighborhoods.

Party-loving Cariocas consider Carnival more important than any other event in the calendar, and that includes both Christmas and New Year. It is a week-long holiday for partying around the clock and a sign that summer is finally coming to a close.

TIPS FOR VISITORS

Transport: Take the metro. Use Central Station if your ticket is for an uneven numbered sector and Praça Onze for an even one.

Winner's Parade: Those who missed the event can see part of the parade by winning schools on the Saturday after Carnival.

Tickets: Book your tickets in advance (Maracanã stadium box office, (021) 2568 9962).

A different theme is chosen by every school, and conceptualized by the carnavalesco (director). The history of Espírito Santo, represented by the state colors, pink, blue, and white, was the theme of the Caprichosos de Pilares school in 2006. This float shows antropofagismo, the concept of "cultural cannibalism," putting foreign art, music, and literature in a Brazilian context.

The central display is the focal point of the float, and is often the most elaborately designed aspect, with the most creative costumes on display.

Passistas, or participants, numbering a minimum of 2,500, join each float with at least 200 in the bateria (percussion section).

THE PARADE

Each of the 12 main samba schools will have around 4,000 participants who must cover the Passarela do Samba in not less than 65 minutes and not more than 80 minutes. In that time, they will put on a performance every bit as complex and visually exciting as any musical showing on Broadway or in London's West End. Six schools parade each night.

Mestre sala is the school's dance master who, along with the porta bandeira, performs a complex series of dance steps as they move along the route.

Sambódromo, or Passarela do Samba, was inaugurated in 1984. Designed by Oscar Niemeyer, it can accommodate over 60,000 spectators at any one time. The end square is used for Carnival, outdoor concerts, and festivals.

RIO DE JANEIRO CITY

Rio de Janeiro is quite simply one of the world's most beautiful and vibrant cities, and is the number one destination for visitors coming to Brazil. Its unique setting, with dramatic mountains and beaches at its very center, sets it apart from the other great cities of the world. In addition, Rio's flamboyant Carnaval, samba, and bossa nova make for a heady mix that is impossible to ignore.

Rio de Janeiro was first discovered by European explorers on January 1, 1502. They mistook the huge Guanabara Bay for the mouth of a river (rio) and called the site "River of January," thus giving the city its name. Evidence of the city's colonial past can still be seen in downtown Rio, with buildings and artifacts dating from the 16th to the 19th centuries, including the imposing Paço Imperial and Palácio Tiradentes. In 1763, the city became the capital of Brazil's Vice-Royalty and in 1808, the Portuguese royal family and court abandoned Lisbon for Rio, making it the capital of both Brazil and the Portuguese Empire. It remained home to the Brazilian monarchy until 1889 and the capital of the Brazilian Republic until 1960, when the title was awarded to the newly-built Bauhaus-style Brasília.

Today, Rio is an international metropolis and a spectacular tropical resort. It has several iconic sights, including the enormous statue of Christ that looms protectively over the city from Corcovado mountain, the easily recognizable Sugar Loaf mountain at one end of Urca Bay, and the famous stadium, Estádio Maracanã, which opened for the 1950 World Cup and has hosted crowds of up to 200,000 people.

Rio's residents, affectionately called "Cariocas," are a laid-back, friendly people who love to go out. Visitors will be spoiled for choice in this hedonistic city, and can visit Lapa for its extravagant clubs, Gávea for its bars, and Ipanema and Leblon for their boutiques and restaurants. Rio's beaches provide ample opportunity for all manner of watersports and are a great meeting place for the city's residents, both rich and poor.

Exploring Rio de Janeiro City

Rio de Janeiro covers a vast area of 473 sq miles (1,225 sq km) and is home to 6 million people, making it Brazil's second largest and second most populous city. It has two main zones – Zona Norte (North Zone), encompassing miles of poor housing, known as favelas; and Zona Sul (South Zone), with plush neighborhoods and famous beaches such as Ipanema and Copacabana. Centro is Rio's main business district, and has a concentration of historic buildings, museums, and churches.

GETTING TO & AROUND RIO

Rio is well connected and its international airport has daily flights to most major South and North American and European cities, as well as to several cities in Brazil. The city is also linked by Brazil's long-distance bus network, while a growing number of people also arrive here by cruise ship. Getting around Rio is fairly simple. Taxis are plentiful and cheap, and are the best option for visitors. The city's extensive bus network can sometimes be daunting, as it isn't always easy to decide which bus to take. Although limited, the metro is efficient and is the most convenient mode of traveling from Copacabana to the city center. It is also possible to rent a car, but first-time visitors may find driving here a little difficult.

Street-by-Street: Praça XV de Novembro & Centro ①

Originally called the Largo do Paço, Praça XV de Novembro is the historic heart of Rio, even if it was only so named after the declaration of the republic on November 15, 1889. The Praça witnessed the arrival of Dom João VI of Portugal in 1808 as he fled with his court from Napoleon. The House of the Viceroy became the Paço Imperial, and for a time the square was the center of Brazil's political and commercial power. Today, Praça XV and the surrounding area is packed with historic buildings and streets. The square was given a new lease of life in the late 1980s with the restoration of the palace, which has acted as a catalyst in bringing culture and life back to the city center.

Benedictine monks from Bahia founded the São Bento Monastery in 1590 and much of the historic building, located on the hills of São Bento, has remained structurally untouched since it was built between 1617 and 1641. The exterior of the main building reflects the simplicity of the time of its construction and gives no hint of the opulence of the gilded Baroque interior.

A number of the works on display were carved by one of the monks, Frei Domingos da Conceição (1643–1718). They include the main altar of the monastery's church. The painting displayed on it, which was created around 1676, is dedicated to Nossa Senhora de Montserrat (Black Virgin).

São Bento is still very much a working monastery. The Benedictine monks are protective of the monastery and their work and have tried hard to keep the church from becoming simply a tourist attraction. Many areas, such as the beautiful cloisters, remain out-of-bounds except on special occasions. Mass for the public is said daily, with a full Gregorian chant at 10am on Sundays.

Visitors should remember to dress appropriately if they wish to view the interior of the monastery.

Restored to its former glory, the church of São Francisco da Penitência is considered one of the richest and most beautiful examples of Baroque art in Brazil. Built between 1657 and 1772, the church exhibits various works of the Portuguese artist Francisco Xavier de Brito. His art heavily influenced the Brazilian artist Aleijadinho (see p131), whose own work spectacularly adorns many of the Baroque churches of Minas Gerais. One of the church's highlights is the 1738 painting of the glorification of St. Francis by Caetano da Costa Coelho, the first Brazilian painting to be done in perspective.

The Colombo Tearoom dates from 1894 and remains a wonderful mix of Art Nouveau and Belle Époque. Located in what was then the very heart of Rio, it was a meeting point for intellectuals, artists, and politicians. Regulars included politician Ruy Barbosa, President Getúlio Vargas, and composer Heitor Villa-Lobos.

The mirrors were shipped in from Belgium and the marble from Italy, while Rio's Municipal Theater, built between 1905 and 1909, is the main venue for the city's ballet, opera, and orchestra (including the Brazilian Symphony Orchestra), and continues to attract the very best talent from both Brazil and abroad. Illustrious names include Nijinsky, Sarah Bernhard, Anna Pavlova, and Luciano Pavarotti, to name just a few.

Farther south along Avenida Rio Branco is the heart of Cinelândia or "cinema land," the area around which the city's movie houses sprang up in the 1920s. Many are still in operation, most notably the Cine Odeon BR which opened in 1926 and closed in 1999 to be renovated. It reopened a year later as the headquarters of the Rio Film Festival. Other buildings in the area include the Museu Nacional de Belas Artes (see p74), Biblioteca Nacional, and Palácio Pedro Ernesto.

Rio's striking Metropolitan Cathedral, with its truncated conical shape, was conceptualized by Ivo Calliari (1918–2005), a Catholic priest.

The cathedral's first stone was laid on January 20, 1964, and the inauguration of the still unfinished building was held 12 years later, in 1976, marking the 300th anniversary of the Diocese of Rio.

Standing 248 ft (75 m) high with no interior columns, this huge cathedral has a seating capacity of 5,000 and can accommodate up to 20,000 people standing. The interior is dominated by four magnificent stained-glass windows that stretch 197 ft (60 m) to the ceiling. They represent the apostolic (yellow), Catholic (blue), ecclesiastical (green), and saintly (red) traditions.

The Museu Arqueiodocesano de Arte Sacra (Sacred Art Museum) in the basement includes historical items in its collection, such as the baptismal fonts used for christening the Brazilian royal family, the golden rose gifted to Princess Isabel by Pope Leo XIII to celebrate her signing the abolition of slavery, and the throne of Dom Pedro II.

The most famous image of the area known as Lapa is the Arcos da Lapa, an aqueduct built in 1724 to bring water down from the Santa Teresa forest to the public fountain in Largo da Carioca. In 1896, it became the base for the viaduct that carries streetcars to and from the city center.

Lapa has always had a slightly bohemian feel and during the first half of the 1900s was the center of Rio's alternative nightlife. The area still boasts a vibrant nightlife, attracting people from all over the city who come looking for the best of Brazilian music. Key hot spots include Rio Scenarium, Carioca de Gema, and Dama da Noite. In 2004, the area saw the return of the Circo Voador (Flying Circus), now held in a purpose-built music venue that replaced the earlier tent of the 1980s and early 1990s. Many of the leading names in contemporary Brazilian music – including Seu Jorge – got their first break at the Circo Voador.

The National Museum of Fine Arts is one of the most important permanent art collections in Latin America. The building in which it is housed dates from 1908.

The collection, which has over 16,000 pieces in its archive, features Brazilian artists from the colonial period as well as from the 19th and 20th centuries. Artists include Frans Post, who painted Brazilian landscapes in classical Dutch style, the Frenchman Jean Baptiste Debret, who painted the immortal Battle of Guararapes (1879), Vitor Meireles, and Pedro Américo, whose A Batalha do Avaí (1877) is one of the largest paintings in the world painted on an easel. There is also a gallery for contemporary exhibits.

The gallery has an extensive collection of non-Brazilian works and a particularly fine selection of Baroque Italian art dating from the 17th and 18th centuries. The museum was created on the basis of a prized art collection, brought to Brazil from Europe by Portugal's King Dom João VI and his court when they fled Napoleon in 1808 (see p52).

Its collection of 287,000 pieces includes everything from paintings and coins to carriages and rarities such as the pen used by Princess Isabel to sign the decree abolishing slavery. Apart from displaying period furniture, 19th-century firearms, and locomotives, the museum also traces Brazil's colonial past in its charts and written declarations. Rio's Modern Art Museum (MAM) has one of the best collections of 20th-century art in Brazil, surpassed only by MASP in São Paulo (see p143). The museum also houses one of the largest archives of Brazilian films.

The strikingly modern building that houses the MAM was far ahead of its time in its design and architecture when it was built in 1958. In 1978, a major fire destroyed many of its irreplaceable exhibits, including the works of Miró, Picasso, Salvador Dalí, Max Ernst, and René Magritte. It has taken time and the generosity of collectors in Brazil and abroad to rebuild the collection. Today, the MAM is once more a highly regarded institution, not only for its own archive but also for the visiting exhibitions from around the world that it stages through the year.

Located close to its gardens is a monument to the victims of World War II. Inaugurated in 1960, it represents two arms raised with hands outstretched in prayer. In 1980, Pope John Paul II said mass from the steps of the monument to a crowd of more than 2 million people. Below the monument is a museum describing Brazil's participation in the Allied operations, known as the Italian Campaign, in and around Italy between 1944 and 1945.

Most visitors to downtown Rio cannot help but notice the beautiful octagonal church of Our Lady of Glória, as it sits majestically on top of a hill beside the freeways cutting through Flamengo Park.

The spot where the church was built, in 1714, was first used as a place of worship in 1608, when the image of Our Lady of Glória was placed in a grotto. The land was donated to the church in 1699 by the nobleman Cláudio Gurgel do Amaral.

The church, which was completed in 1739, came to national attention when it became the favorite place of worship for Dom Pedro VI and his family after their arrival from Portugal in 1808. Known for its hand-painted tiles dating from the 1730s, it was declared a national monument by President Vargas in 1937.

The church can be reached either by car, or by foot up the steps known as Ladeira de Nossa Senhora. It is also possible to take a small cable car that starts from Rua do Russel 312. There are views across the bay and there is also a small sacred art museum.

The story of Brazil's history, as told by the Museum of the Republic, picks up where the Museu Histórico Nacional left off. It begins with the Proclamation of the Republic in 1889, and covers events until 1960, when the capital and the then President Kubitschek moved from Rio de Janeiro to Brasília. What makes the museum particularly special is that its building, constructed between 1858 and 1866, was the presidential residence from 1897 until 1954.

In that year, President Getúlio Vargas (see pp56–7), Brazil's most influential statesman who was president for 24 years, committed suicide in his bedroom. The third floor is dedicated to an exhibition about the life and work of Vargas. His bedroom has been preserved exactly as it used to be when he lived here. In total, the palace was home to 18 Brazilian presidents, all of whom feature in the museum's various exhibits.

Apart from the historical museum and palace, there is also an attractive garden on the grounds.

star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame. After her death on August 5, 1955, her body was returned to Rio where a crowd of almost 500,000 watched her burial.

The museum exhibits iconographic costumes, including her tall fruit hats and platform-heeled shoes, and artifacts belonging to Carmen, as well as many of her records and films.

The Museum of Rio is a new undertaking that aims at giving the city its very own museum. Located on Urca beach in the looming shadow of the spectacular Sugar Loaf mountain, the museum is housed in the historic Cassino da Urca – the city's main showhouse between 1933 and 1946.

Between 1950 and 1980, the Cassino served as a television studio. Work began in 2005 to restore and adapt it into a museum covering the history of Rio and the advent of television in the city.

Sugar Loaf Mountain 16

Guarding the entrance to Guanabara Bay, the monolithic granite and quartz Sugar Loaf rises 1,300 ft (396 m) above the waters of the southern Atlantic Ocean. From the summit, it is easy to understand why the early explorers believed that they had sailed into the mouth of a great river they christened Rio de Janeiro. The Sugar Loaf experience takes in two mountains, Morro do Urca and Pão de Açúcar (Sugar Loaf). It is possible to scale both these mountains via organized climbs on most weekends. Demanding less effort, the cable car, originally opened in 1912, stops at the 705-ft (224-m) high Morro da Urca before ascending to the summit.

The original 1912 cable car, a remarkable feat of its times

The summit provides unforgettable views out over Copacabana, Ipanema, and the scenic Corcovado and Tijuca.

Pão de Açúcar

The name of Sugar Loaf, adopted in the 19th century, is assumed to have been derived from the mountain's shape, which resembles conical clay molds used earlier to refine sugar. The Tupi Indians, however, called it "Pau-nb-Açuquã" (big, pointed, or isolated hill).

A scene from the film Moonraker

JAMES BOND'S MOONRAKER

In 1979, Sugar Loaf and the cable car formed the backdrop for a main action sequence in Moonraker, with Roger Moore playing James Bond. In real life, the Great Train Robber, Ronald Biggs, was kidnapped in 1981 by a group of British mercenaries from a restaurant, which was then located next to the cable car station. Ironically, during a first kidnap bid in 1979, the kidnapers had claimed to be part of the Moonraker crew.

Rock Climbing

Since British nanny Henrietta Carstairs made the first recorded solo ascent in 1817, climbing the smooth Sugar Loaf has become a popular sport, with over 60 known routes to the towering summit.

One of the world's most celebrated beaches, Copacabana is the center of Rio's tourist trade. On New Year's eve, the neighborhood becomes Rio's spiritual and festive heart, as millions of Cariocas and visitors take to the beach to party, and honor Yemanjá, Goddess of the Sea.

The name Copacabana, or "Copa Caguana" (Luminous Place) in Quechua, an ancient language still spoken in Peru, was given by the Incas to a lovely site by the Lagoa Titicaca, where they built a temple. In the 17th century, the captain of a Spanish galleon erected a chapel in honor of Our Lady of Copacabana, who came to his aid during a shipwreck.

Built in 1914, on the promontory of the chapel as Rio's defense against attack, the Forte de Copacabana offers scenic views of the entire sweep of Copacabana.

The main attraction of Copacabana is the beach which, along with Leme, constitutes a magnificent 3-mile (5-km) stretch from Le Meridien hotel in the north on the corner of Avenida Princesa Isabel, to the Forte de Copacabana and Sofitel Rio in the south. Until 1892, it had been a leading trek for those from the city to reach Copacabana. In that year, a tunnel was cut through from Botafogo to Copacabana, followed by a second tunnel in 1904 that allowed the trams to reach the beach. The real turning point, however, was the creation of the Neo-Classical Copacabana Palace hotel (see p368), a part of the fabric of Rio life since its opening in 1923. It has hosted both authentic royalty and the royalty of the entertainment world, including Queen Elizabeth II and Marlene Dietrich. The hotel continues to draw celebrities, as well as gays and transvestites.

The beachfront kiosks lining Avenue Atlântica – the road that runs the length of the beach – are popular. The entire length of Copacabana is divided into stations (postos). Postos 5 and 6 attract older residents and favela youngsters. The fresh catch of the day can be bought at Posto 7 – at the southern end – known as the posto de pescadores (fisherman's post).

Almost as famous as Copacabana, Ipanema shot into the limelight in the 1960s with the globally-famous song written by Antônio Jobim and Vinícius de Moraes, “The Girl from Ipanema” (see p32).

The actual name of this fashionable area is credited to the native Tupi-Guaraní who called the area Y-panema, or “rough water.” The first non-native residents moved into the area around 1884, and today Ipanema and neighboring

THE GIRL FROM IPANEMA

One of the most played and recorded songs in popular music history, “The Girl from Ipanema,” or “A Garota de Ipanema” was written in 1962, by Antônio Carlos Jobim and Vinícius de Moraes. The duo are said to have been inspired by a sensual girl from Ipanema, Helô Pinheiro. A year later, the recording of the song’s most famous version took place in New York’s A&R Studio, featuring João and Astrud Gilberto, in the Portuguese and English versions, respectively. In 1964, Stan Getz, Jobim, and the Gilbertos took bossa nova to a global audience with the release of Getz/Gilberto. With “The Girl from Ipanema” as the opening track, the album stayed on the US charts for 96 weeks and won four Grammys.

Leblon are considered the most desirable places to live in Rio. More residential than Copacabana, Ipanema is also more stylish, with its back streets dotted with chic boutiques, bars, restaurants, and nightclubs.

The most prestigious address in Rio is Avenida Vieira Souto, while running parallel, two streets back, is Rua Visconde de Pirajá, the backbone to the Ipanema shopping experience. At the Copacabana end is Praça General Osório, the public square that plays host to Rio’s popular Feira Hippie de Ipanema (Hippie Fair), every Sunday. The fair has been a part of life in Ipanema and Rio since opening in 1968.

The mile-long stretch of Ipanema beach runs from Leblon in the west, up to Arpoador in the east. Arpoador extends the beach by another half mile, and is popular with the surf set.

Rua Dias Ferreira, at the most westerly point, boasts a particularly eclectic mix. Like Ipanema, there are only a few hotels along the beachfront Avenida Delfim Moreira.

While the beaches of Copacabana and Leme flow seamlessly into each other, Leblon and Ipanema are separated by Jardim de Alá and the canal that links the Lagoa Rodrigo de Freitas with the sea. The 1-mile (2-km) long Leblon is said to have been given its name in honor of a blond foreigner, one of its first residents in the area. The nationality of “Le Blond” is debatable. Some scholars say that he was French, while others surmise he was Dutch.

Leblon is the headquarters of Clube de Regatas Flamengo, of which the most famous is the Flamengo Football Club, the World Club Champions in 1981.

The picturesque Lagoa Rodrigo de Freitas, or Lagoa (lagoon) as it is often called, sits at the foot of Corcovado peak and separates the Serra da Carioca from Ipanema and Leblon. A full circuit of the lagoon is about 5 miles (8 km), and is popular with joggers, cyclists, and parents with children in prams. There are plenty of halts en route, with kiosks selling everything from coconut water to full meals. Some kiosks even offer live music in the evenings.

The Lagoa is also bordered by more conventional restaurants and bars, especially along the Ipanema stretch. One of Rio's most traditional places, Bar Lagoa (see p396) opened here in 1934. Along the northern shore, highlights include Claude Troisgros' Olympe (see p396), which, despite a change in name since it opened in 1983, is still one of Rio's best restaurants.

Several sports clubs are also located here. Among the most famous are the Jockey Club Brasileiro, the Sociedade Hípica Brasileira, the city's main equestrian center, and the headquarters of the Clube Regatas do Flamengo. Flamengo, along with Vasco da Gama, Fluminense, and Botafogo, is one of Brazil's top soccer teams and has won the National and South American titles on many occasions. All clubs have rowing divisions as the Lagoa is Brazil's main rowing center. Several international regattas have been held here.

Visitors can go boating, as pedallos and other craft are available for rent. It is also possible to hire bicycles.

One of the most fascinating gardens in the world, Rio's Jardim Botânico was founded in 1808 by the Prince Regent, Dom João VI. Originally meant to acclimatize plants and spices coming in from the Orient and the East Indies, it later became the Royal Garden, and opened to the public in 1822. Among its many illustrious visitors were Charles Darwin in 1832, and Albert Einstein in 1925.

Today, Jardim Botânico includes 205 acres (83 ha) of natural rainforest, and is

With over 1,000 compositions to his credit, Heitor Villa-Lobos (1897–1959) is considered one of the greatest composers in Latin America (see p32). It is believed that it was through his work that Brazilian music first became popular abroad, eventually gaining universal appeal with the advent of bossa nova.

The Villa-Lobos Museum, which moved to a stately 19th-century mansion in Botafogo in 1986, helps organize the Villa-Lobos Festival that begins on the anniversary of his death, November 17, each year. His second wife, Arminda Neves d'Almeida, set up the museum in 1960, one year after his death. Its aim is to preserve the composer's personal collection of artifacts and keep his work alive. Exhibits include his books, music scores, photographs, and instruments.

Villa-Lobos's best-known work is his cycle of the nine Bachianas Brasileiras, which pays homage to both Bach and Brazilian folk music. Such was his versatility that he wrote a variety of music from choros (an upbeat waltz or polka), concertos, symphonies, and orchestral works, to chamber music, operas, and ballets, as well as guitar and solo piano pieces.

A renowned politician, diplomat, and jurist, Rui Barbosa de Oliveira (1849–1923) helped shape several important Brazilian policies, including those pertaining to direct elections and the abolition of slavery. He made his mark internationally during the 1907 Peace Conference at the Hague, where he argued that all countries should be treated equally. Barbosa contested twice for the Brazilian presidency – in 1910 and 1919 – but lost on both occasions.

Barbosa was also a great essayist and was one of the founders of the Brazilian Academy of Letters. He later became its second president. He was eventually elected as a judge to the International Court of Justice at the Hague.

The 1850 building that houses the Rui Barbosa Museum was the statesman's home from 1895 until his death in 1923. When it opened to the public in 1930, it was the first private residence in Brazil to be turned into a museum. The museum showcases a collection of Barbosa's personal possessions, such as furniture and art, and a library, containing 200 of his own works.

The 2,316-ft (706-m) Corcovado mountain derives its name from corcova (hunchback), which describes the physical appearance of the mountain itself. On the summit, the iconic Cristo Redentor statue towers over Rio, and is Brazil's most recognizable landmark. It was officially inaugurated in 1931 to mark the centenary of Brazil's independence. The enormous statue sits in the center of the gorgeous tropical jungle of Parque Nacional da Tijuca.

Making the Head

Work on the statue began in Paris in 1926, with French sculptor Paul Landowski working on the head and hands. The head alone weighs 30 tons.

Wide Open Arms

The entire Rio City is embraced by Christ, and the statue's open arms are seen as a testament to the warmth of the Brazilians.

Famous Visitors

Pope John Paul II, Pope Pius XII, and Albert Einstein are some of the famous people to have visited Corcovado.

The pedestal, on which the statue stands, is 26 ft (8 m) high.

THE STATUE

Having been shipped from France to Brazil, the 98-ft (30-m) statue was faced in limestone and hauled up the mountain by rail to be assembled and attached to supporting pillars.

The chapel at the base of the statue can accommodate 150 people.

Escalators link the base to the train station and car park.

Rio's Maracanã Stadium is one of the most famous soccer grounds in the world. It is also the largest, having hosted crowds of up to 200,000 people.

The stadium, which was refurbished for the 2007 Pan-American Games, was built for the 1950 World Cup and inaugurated on June 16, the same year, with a game between Rio and São Paulo.

The first game played by the Brazilian team took place on June 24, 1950, with Brazil beating Mexico 4–0. A month later, a crowd of almost 200,000 tested the stadium's capacity to see Brazil play Uruguay in the final game. Brazil lost 2–1, and thus began its eternal rivalry with Uruguay.

It is not only soccer that has set stadium records. Big artists have attracted massive crowds to the Maracanã, including Frank Sinatra, Paul McCartney, Kiss, Madonna, the Rolling Stones, Sting, Tina Turner, and the second "Rock in Rio" Festival. Pope John Paul II's public appearances in 1980 and 1997 were also attended by thousands.

The Maracanã Stadium can be visited on the days of soccer matches and concerts (see p94), or as part of a daily guided tour that takes visitors behind the scenes and onto the pitch. In 2014, it will host the World Cup final.

The Quinta da Boa Vista, the landscaped grounds of a former royal estate, includes the Museu Nacional and the Jardim Zoológico (Rio Zoo). Founded by Dom João VI in 1818, the Museu Nacional is the country's oldest scientific institution, which started out as the House of Birds before becoming the Royal Museum, the Imperial Museum, and, finally, the National Museum.

Its permanent exhibits cover a variety of fields from archaeology, biodiversity, and botany to ethnology, geology, and palaeontology. A part of the collection belonged to Emperor Pedro II, a botanist, and his wife, the Empress Teresa Cristina, who was an archaeologist. The museum's gardens and the former royal palace are an attraction in their own right, and their lakes and grottos are a big draw on the weekends. They were landscaped by the French architect Auguste Glazou in 1869 and cover an area of 38 acres (15 ha).

The Jardim Zoológico is considered one of the best in the world and is Brazil's oldest zoo, having been founded in 1888. Covering 30 acres (12 ha), it is home to approximately 350 species and more than 2,100 animals, including one of the most complete collections of Brazilian mammals and butterflies. The zoo also boasts an excellent aviary and an aquarium that houses a variety of fascinating Brazilian river species.

The zoo's beautiful main entrance was a wedding gift, presented to Dom Pedro I and the Empress Leopoldina by an English aristocrat in the early 19th century.

The Sambódromo, or Passarela do Samba, is where Rio's famous samba schools parade each February during Carnival (see pp64–5).

Before Carnival was as popular as it is today, the schools simply paraded on the streets and people stood on the sidewalk, and later, on specially built stands. As the crowds got bigger, the disruption caused by the building of the stands each year meant another solution had to be found.

The renowned Brazilian architect, Oscar Niemeyer (see p295), came up with a permanent solution. He built what is today the Sambódromo, which was inaugurated in time for the 1984 Carnival. In order to complement the Sambódromo, a large complex, known as the Cidade do Samba (City of Samba), was established in 2005. This space is used by the main samba schools to build their floats and make their vibrant costumes.

Throughout the year, visitors are allowed in to watch the preparations and see how a samba school puts on its parade.

The Itamaraty Palace, a rare example of Neo-Classical architecture in Rio, was built between 1852 and 1853. It acted as the headquarters of the Brazilian Foreign Service from 1899 until 1970, when the department finally moved to Brasília. The palace was named for the man who built it, the Baron of Itamaraty. Its close links with the Foreign Service over a period of six decades has made the name “Itamaraty” synonymous with the Brazilian Foreign Office.

The palace's most notable resident was a foreign minister, José Maria da Silva Paranhos (1845–1912), the Baron of Rio Branco, an outstanding statesman who helped shape South America as we know it today.

Presently, the Itamaraty Palace houses the Museu Histórico e Diplomático (Diplomatic and Historical Museum), established in 1955. Tours of the palace and the museum reveal some of the Foreign Service's most important treasures, many of which, including furniture and paintings, date from the 19th century. There is also an archive of historic documents, as well as the Foreign Office's prized collection of maps.

RIO'S FAVELAS

As much a part of the city's landscape as Corcovado and Sugar Loaf, Rio's favelas are famous, lately due to their prominence in Fernando Meirelles' 2002 film, Cidade de Deus (City of God). They are often erroneously referred to as slums, and while some are, the majority are simply Rio's main areas of poor housing. What started as one or two shacks on a hillside has slowly grown into cities in their own right. Estimates suggest that there are now as many as 800 favelas in Rio, and up to 20 percent of the city's population may now live in these areas. Some favelas have grown to giant communities, such as Rocinha in São Conrado, with over 150,000 residents. Others, such as Pavão, Cantagalo, Vidigal, and Chapéu Mangueira, are strategically located in hilly Zona Sul areas offering breathtaking views.

Favelas are complex and vibrant communities, deriving their name from the hardy favela plant. Many still have drug lords who run boca de fumos, where narcotics are openly sold and violence is not uncommon. However, people's conceptions that these ghettos are dangerous warrens full of criminals simply is not true, as the majority of people who live here are law-abiding citizens working in low-paying jobs. That said, it is still advisable only to visit these areas as part of a guided tour. There are now several good tours on offer. The most traditional tour is organized by Marcelo Armstrong, who was brought up in an apartment block adjoining the Vila Canoas favela. He and his team have been escorting visitors around Vila Canoas and Rocinha since 1992. The tours offer valuable insights into the lives of thousands of Rio's less privileged citizens.

Praia da Barra da Tijuca ①

Av Sernambetiba. Stretching for over 11 miles (18 km), Praia da Barra da Tijuca is Rio's longest beach. The first 4 miles (6 km) are the most built-up, a modern-day Copacabana, with large condominiums.

There are different hot spots along the length of the beach, the most famous of which is Barraca do Pepê, a tremendously busy food outlet that has been a favorite with the surfing and hang-gliding crowd, with a kiosk that served organic food long before people had heard of it.

Crowds from all over Rio are drawn to this beach at weekends, but farther along the beach it becomes less crowded and unspoilt. During the week, when schools are in session, it is even possible to find large isolated stretches of the beach.

This private garden belonged to Roberto Burle Marx (see p295), one of the most important landscape architects of the 20th century. In 1949, Burle Marx bought a 90-acre (36-ha) plantation and started to organize his private collection of amazing plants. He moved here in 1973 and stayed there until his death. In 1985, he donated the entire estate to the National Institute for Cultural Heritage (IPHAN).

With around 3,500 plant species, the garden is considered one of the most important collections of tropical and semitropical plants in the world. This horticultural paradise also displays the works of Burle Marx, from the designs for his landscape projects to his paintings and sculptures. The garden also has a small Benedictine chapel dating from the 17th century, dedicated to St. Anthony.

Covering 15 sq miles (39 sq km), the Tijuca National Park encompasses the last remaining tracts of Atlantic rainforest that once surrounded Rio de Janeiro. It includes the Floresta da Tijuca (Tijuca Forest), Serra da Carioca (Carioca Mountains), and the monoliths of Pedra da Gávea and Pedra Bonita. The park's most famous landmark is the towering statue of Cristo Redentor atop Corcovado peak (see pp82–3). Other well-known viewpoints are the Dona Marta, the Vista Chinesa (with a Chinese-style pavilion), and the Mesa do Imperador (Emperor's Table), all of which offer spectacular city views.

Sights within the Floresta da Tijuca include Cascatinha do Taunay, a waterfall near the main gate named after the French painter Nicolau Taunay (1755–1830); the 19th-century Mayrink Chapel, featuring the work of Candido Portinari (1903–62), one of the most important Brazilian painters; the lovely Os Esquilos restaurant (see p395); and the hundreds of species of plants, birds, and mammals that live here.

Many of the park's 150-odd trails, originally made by Brazil's indigenous people, exist even today. One of them, dating from the 19th century, takes walkers up from Largo do Bom Retiro, a picnic spot in the Floresta da Tijuca, to the 3,940-ft (1,201-m) high Tijuca Peak. It is easy to get lost in the dense foliage, so stick to the main trails and do not go without a guide if planning on trekking. Book in advance if a guide is required.

Another attraction near the Floresta da Tijuca is the Museu do Açude, a museum housed in the Neo-Colonial building that once served as the residence of the successful businessman, Raymundo Ottoni de Castro Maya (1894–1968). The museum is known for its French, Dutch, Spanish, and Portuguese tiles from the 17th and 18th centuries, and for Castro Maya's personal collection of Oriental art.

Baía de Guanabara 33

Without Baía de Guanabara, Rio de Janeiro would probably have been known by a different name. On January 1, 1502, the navigators Andre Gonçalves and Amerigo Vespucci became the first Europeans ever to sail into the bay. Assuming it was the mouth of a great river, they called it Rio de Janeiro or “River of January.” Guanabara, meaning “Lagoon of the Sea,” was the name given to the dominant bay by indigenous Brazilians and is rather more accurate.

The bay is flanked by Rio to its west and Niterói to its east, and encompasses countless islands. As well as the ferry services that begin at Praça XV, boats can be hired from the Marina da Glória in Flamengo Park, the center of all nautical activities in Rio. One of the more pleasant ways to enjoy the bay is by taking the special cruise that starts from the Espaço Cultural da Marina (Navy Cultural Center) in

Tiled map of park routes in Alto da Boa Vista

Centro. Centro has a number of fine nautical exhibits, including an Imperial Barge built in Salvador in 1808, and also offers a cruise on the historic tugboat, Laurindo Pitta, which was built in England in 1910 and took part in World War I. The cruise lasts an hour and a half and passes several interesting sights along the way.

The Tom Jobim International Airport is located on the largest of the islands in the bay, Ilha do Governador, while the tiny Ilha Fiscal houses a palace built in 1889 at the request of Emperor Dom Pedro II in the style of a 14th-century French castle. The castle's highlights include its exceptional carved stone work and cast-iron work, and the turret's mosaic floor, which is made from different species of hardwood. Also noteworthy are the wall paintings by 19th-century Dutch artist Frederico Steckel, and the tower clock and stained-glass windows, which were imported from England.

Ilha Paquetá, north of the bay, is an oasis of calm where no cars are allowed. Ferries and hydrofoils cruise up the bay to the island from the Estação das Barcas in front of the historic Praça XV. Crossing the bay is the Rio-Niterói Bridge (officially the Presidente Costa e Silva Bridge), which is one of the longest in the world at 9 miles (13 km). The project was financed by Britain, and construction began in 1968 in the presence of Queen Elizabeth II.

Cariocas like to joke that the best thing about Niterói is its view across the bay to Rio de Janeiro, and it is true that the city's popularity has shown a decline due to its proximity to Brazil's first city. Both cities, however, developed simultaneously, and as the ferries got faster and more reliable, Niterói became a popular residential option for people working in downtown Rio.

The British preferred Niterói to Rio, and in 1872, founded the Rio Cricket and Athletic Club that is still active there today. Praia de São Francisco in Guanabara Bay is the city's answer to Copacabana beach, but for the most part, is not ideal for swimming. Niterói's better beaches – Camboinhas, Itaipu, and Itacoatiara – lie on the Atlantic coast, and are very popular on weekends.

The two most popular sights in the city are the imposing Fortaleza de

Santa Cruz and the Museu de Art Contemporânea (MAC-Niterói).

The Fortaleza de Santa Cruz (Santa Cruz Fort) sits on a rocky outcrop just outside the city, and guards the entrance to Guanabara Bay. Parts of the fort date from the 16th century, when the French built an improvised fortification to protect the city. The structure grew until it became the most important fortress in Brazil. It helped protect Niterói from two invasions, the first of which came from the Dutch in 1599, and the second from the French in 1710.

The stunning Museu de Art Contemporânea (Contemporary Art Museum) appears to hover above the neighborhood of Boa Viagem. The illusion comes from its slender base pillar, which is only 30 ft (9 m) in diameter. Inaugurated in 1996, it was the brainchild of the acclaimed Brazilian architect, Oscar Niemeyer (see p295). Its exhibits are based on the 1,000 pieces of Brazilian art donated by the eminent art collector, João Sattamini. The most enchanting spectacle, however, is the view from inside the museum at dusk, when Rio's lights twinkle from across the bay.

SHOPPING IN RIO

Resident Cariocas have turned shopping into something of an art form and use it as an alternative form of entertainment when they are bored with the beach. Visitors will be pleased to find out just how far their money goes in Rio's stores, especially when it comes to buying items that have been manufactured in Brazil. This includes top fashion clothing, beach and sportswear, leather goods, jewelry and numerous other items. Until the 1980s, the best place to shop was along Visconde de Pirajá in Ipanema. Although the area is still considered to have the hippest boutiques, Rio's residents have fallen in love with the experience of shopping in the larger malls, such as Rio Sul and Barra Shopping Center, the largest shopping and entertainment complex in Latin America. The historic districts of Centro and Copacabana (mainly the area along Avenida Nossa Senhora de Copacabana) cannot be overlooked, as it is here that most of Rio's quirky, special interest shops are found. The Hippie Fair is the best place to buy arts and crafts items, trinkets, curios, and souvenirs to take home as gifts.

Handy bag and matching flip-flops

Rio Sul, one of the two giant malls dominating Rio's shopping scene

OPENING HOURS

Most stores in Rio open from 9 or 10am in the morning until 6 or 7pm in the evening Monday to Friday, and between 9 or 10am until 1pm on Saturday. The big shopping malls, such as Barra Shopping and Rio Sul, stay open from 10am to 10pm Monday through Saturday and from 3 to 9pm on Sunday.

Most supermarkets are open from 8am to 10pm Monday to Saturday, with a limited selection remaining open on Sunday. There are also several 24-hour supermarkets scattered throughout the city.

SHOPPING MALLS

Two giant malls have dominated Rio's shopping scene since the 1980s and offer just about anything people could want under one roof. The closest and most convenient for visitors staying in Copacabana and Ipanema is the Rio Sul mall, which is located on the main artery linking the Sugar Loaf end of Copacabana to Botafogo and the city. Rio Sul has more than 400 stores, plus restaurants and cinemas. It also runs a free bus service that picks up shoppers from all the main hotels along the beachfront and drops them back with their purchases. Of course, there are always plenty of taxis at Rio Sul.

Barra Shopping Center (see p86), the largest shopping and entertainment complex in Latin America, can almost be treated as a tourist attraction in its own right. At last count, the mall had close to 700 stores. It also has a good selection of bars and restaurants, and entertainment that includes a modern bowling alley, an 18-screen multiplex cinema, and a gaming area known as Hot Zone. Both Rio Sul and Barra Shopping Center have branches of virtually all the top Brazilian retailers as well as some familiar international names. The two giants malls are not the only shows in town, and malls in every shape and size can be found all over Rio, including the popular Fashion Mall in São Conrado.

JEWELRY

Brazil has huge deposits of precious and semi-precious gemstones, and in some cases, holds more than 90 percent of the world's total supply. This has turned Brazil into one of the most important manufacturers of jewelry, both traditional and modern, and has made Rio de Janeiro into one of the jewel capitals of the world.

The two market leaders, H. Stern and Amsterdam Sauer, have stores in most of the city's major hotels, and at the airport. They also organize special jewelry tours at the Ipanema headquarters.

The famous Blue Man line of beachwear

BIKINIS & BEACHWEAR

The girls from Ipanema, Copacabana, and Barra have helped make the bikini a symbol of the city's lifestyle. Shops specializing in bikinis, swim, surf, and beachwear can be found all over Rio, especially in Copacabana, Ipanema, and all the big malls. Famous names in bikiniwear include Blue Man, Bum-Bum, and Kitanga.

What you wear to the beach is a fashion statement in Rio, so designs, shapes, and colors change with every season. Many stores offer a special line for visitors who find Brazilian fashions a bit daring.

FASHION WEAR

Brazil features prominently in the international fashion scene, and Brazilians like to keep up with the latest trends. Walk around Ipanema or any of the large malls to get an idea of what is available. Items on display are usually of high quality and are also well priced.

SHOES

Brazil is one of the largest manufacturers of shoes and footwear in the world. Even the local supermarket is likely to stock fashionable flip-flops, and the two most famous brands are Havaianas and Grendha. The most popular stores that manufacture well-made and reasonably priced leather shoes, are part of the Mr. Cat chain. Other stores worth checking include Andarella and Datelli.

Flip-flops

MUSIC

While no one music chain dominates in Rio, some music stores are better than others. FNAC mega store in Barra Shopping Center has a very good selection. Modern Sound in Copacabana is Rio's most traditional and famous store, and has a wide selection. Another top name is Saraiva, which has a large store in Rio Sul. Leading supermarkets, especially Lojas Americanas, sell cheap CDs.

ARTS & CRAFTS MARKETS

The best and most famous arts and crafts market in Rio is the Hippie Fair, taking place every Sunday in and around Praça General Osório in Ipanema. The fair, which first began in 1968, runs from 8am to 6pm and is the perfect place to pick up souvenir paintings or Brazilian arts and craft works.

There are a number of specialized arts and crafts stores throughout the city, including those found in the Rio Sul and Barra Shopping Center malls. There is also a good selection in Copacabana, mostly along the historic Avenida Nossa Senhora de Copacabana, situated behind Copacabana Palace Hotel. In Ipanema, the H. Stern store has a good selection, as does Brasil & Cia.

ENTERTAINMENT IN RIO

As a major world city, Rio offers a wide variety of high-quality entertainment. However, these are targeted more toward the local residents than the casual tourists. The big local and international acts perform mainly for the Brazilians, and the same is true of what is presented at the theater, in the movie houses, clubs, and bars. Though some clubs give a watered-down take on Brazilian culture, on the whole, visitors can enjoy a scintillating nightlife. The trendiest and most fashionable choices are found in Ipanema and Leblon, and around the Lagoa. Downtown Rio is also back in fashion, with Lapa being particularly popular when it comes to clubs and bars that play upbeat Brazilian music.

Elaborately dressed samba dancer

INFORMATION

For details of entertainment in Rio, check with the daily newspapers or their web sites, most notably O Globo and Jornal do Brasil. For an update on on-going events, check Veja Rio, the special Rio supplement in Brazil's leading weekly news-magazine, Veja. It normally offers an accurate guide to the current scene. The concierge at any big hotel would also be of help.

BOOKING TICKETS

Brazilians traditionally only buy their tickets at the very last moment. Even for the biggest events, tickets may go on sale only a few days ahead. In many cases, the tickets will be sold at the venue itself, or through an agency. Large ticket agencies, such as Ticketmaster, Ticketronics, and Ingresso, operate countrywide, and offer tickets to both events and particular venues.

MAJOR VENUES

Rio is an important venue and tour stop for not only the top names in Brazilian music, but also for all the leading international acts. The major Brazilian acts tend to prefer to play in one of two big show houses in Rio, Canecão in Botafogo and the Citibank Hall in Barra da Tijuca. Opened in 1967, Canecão has hosted many major concerts and a number of classic live Brazilian albums have been recorded here. Claro Hall, a purpose-built state-of-the-art facility, opened for business in 1994, with a show by Diana Ross.

Vivo Rio located in the Modern Art Museum in Flamengo puts on various shows. The Cidade da Música in Barra has a spacious main concert hall, although the opening of this venue has been delayed.

Smaller bands, or big names looking for a more intimate setting, also use the Circo Voador in Lapa and other smaller venues such as the Teatro João Caetano in Centro, Ballroom in Humaitá, and even Morro da Urca on the half-way stage of Sugar Loaf (see pp 76-7).

The open-air venues of Praça de Apoteose and Cidade do Rock stage large acts. Even the Copacabana and Flamengo beaches sometimes hold free concerts.

Rio also hosts a number of festivals during the year that cover all genres. The largest and most famous festival is Rock in Rio, though this is not an annual event.

Colorfully costumed samba performers in the floor show at Plataforma 1

Over the years, Rio has offered a number of shows that primarily target the visitor who might want a quick, though somewhat oversimplified, version of the vast range of Brazilian culture.

The glitziest show to outlast them all takes place daily at Leblon's Plataforma 1. The kitschy variety show features samba, bossa nova, and other Brazilian sounds.

SAMBA, BOSSA NOVA & GAFIEIRA

Most visitors to Rio will hope to catch a little live music and dance action when they are in town. While the big Brazilian acts will be found at Canecão and Claro Hall, there will also be a lot of artistes performing in smaller, more intimate venues, many of which are also bars and clubs.

On Ipanema Beach, Rio's most popular and successful music bar Mistura Fina has offered an eclectic mix of jazz, instrumental, and MPB (see pp32-3) for over 25 years. Many top names started their careers here and still return to perform.

Fans of bossa nova flock to Vinicius in Ipanema and Bar do Tom in Leblon. Celebrated for its outstanding music and a lively bar, the tiny Bip Bip in Copacabana is a well-frequented haven for MPB.

Since the end of the 1990s, the reinvented nightlife in the city center has given a special boost to samba and choro (an upbeat waltz or polka). Lapa remains the main hub, with places such as Carioca da Gema, Dama da Noite, and Rio Scenarium. Close by, in Praça Tiradentes, the Centro Cultural Carioca is known to host Brazilian music.

Even when the center of Rio was not in fashion, two clubs prospered there and still hold sway as the city's authentic ballrooms, or gafieiras. Estudantina, in Praça Tiradentes, dates from 1928, while the 1918 Cordão da Bola Preta in Lapa is the oldest carnival bloco.

The Pe de Moleque group playing at the Carioca da Gema bar in Lapa

For those who wish to learn the basics of dance, there are a number of schools in Rio. The Centro Cultural Carioca offers beginner classes for samba, jorô, and gafieira.

SAMBA SCHOOLS

The number of shows and opportunities increase the closer it gets to Carnival (see pp64-5), with the "high season" for samba from December through February. However, those who are not visiting the city during this time can watch the samba schools in action. Any good hotel will be able to organize a visit to the League of Samba Schools (LIESA) as part of the schools' own official tours, or to the technical rehearsals that take place at the Sambódromo.

The samba schools are also known to host programs featuring performances and other events at the Cidade do Samba, which opened in Centro in early 2006.

BARS & CLUBS

Rio enchants visitors with its unique range of bars and clubs. Bars go through every degree of sophistication, from periodically-changing hot spots, to those specializing in cachaça and caipirinhas, such as the popular Academia da Cachaça in Leblon and Barra. Enhancing the variety are several pub-like venues, the most famous of which is Lord Jim in Ipanema, while sophisticated bars in the top hotels offer a more formal elegance. Then there are the traditional botequins, or the corner bars, with plenty to eat and drink, well into the early hours. Bar Luiz in Centro, Lamas in Flamengo, Cervantes in Copacabana, Hipódromo in Gavea, and Bar Lagoa on the Lagoa, have been drawing a steady clientele. Favored by visitors, Garota de Ipanema was where Tom Jobim and Vinicius de Moraes are said to have seen the girl who inspired them to write the song "A Garota de Ipanema." Trendy Barril 1800, an Ipanema landmark, attracts local celebs and tourists alike with its great atmosphere.

The line between bars, DJ bars, and clubs can get blurred in Rio, with a surfeit of bars offering dancing and music as the night goes on. The "in" venues change extremely quickly in terms of popularity and name. Therefore, it is always a good idea to ask a resident or the concierge at the hotel about the places that may be currently in vogue.

GAY & LESBIAN

Rio has a very active gay and lesbian scene, much of which simply blends into the everyday life of the city. Among the most traditional gay and lesbian clubs are the upbeat Le Boy and La Girl, at the Ipanema end of Copacabana. Dama de Ferro is as popular.

A good starting point is Ipanema beach. The block running back from the beach also has a number of gay and lesbian friendly bars.

EATING OUT

For many Cariocas, eating out (see p390–91) is an entertainment in its own right. Foreign visitors get the best value from dining at the churrascaria rodízios, the large barbecue houses with a fixed-price menu.

In Rio, trying traditional Brazilian cuisine normally means a feijoada (see p392), a sumptuous feast usually served for lunch on Wednesday or Saturday.

THEATER

Theater in Rio de Janeiro is of a high quality, but a majority of the productions will be in Portuguese. The main theaters, generally small and intimate, are found in Copacabana, Ipanema, and Leblon. In Centro, the Centro Cultural Banco do Brasil is a major venue. For listings, check O Globo and Jornal do Brasil.

CINEMA

Brazil is one of the world's biggest cinema-going markets. However, the latest multiplex operations all tend to be in

A football match in progress at the Estádio do Maracanã

Barra, such as the 18-screen Cinemark. Smaller and older theatres can be found in Copacabana and Ipanema.

International films quickly make their way into Brazil, and unless they are aimed at children, will be left in their original language with subtitles added. At least one new Brazilian film is released each week, a few of which will go on to international acclaim. Independent world cinema takes over the city each September and October, when the city's main film festival, Festival do Rio, holds public screenings.

CLASSICAL MUSIC, OPERA & DANCE

Rio de Janeiro has a healthy and vibrant music, opera, and dance scene that is currently focused in the Theatro Municipal in Centro. From 2010, however, it is likely to share the spotlight with the new Cidade da Música in Barra. Small concerts and recitals also use the Sala Cecília Meireles in Lapa.

Rio has its own music, opera, and dance companies, but also attracts the very best from the rest of Brazil and the world.

HELICOPTER TOURS

One of the most popular tours with visitors to Rio, a helicopter ride takes people over the city and beaches, or around Sugar Loaf and Corcovado mountains.

Since 1991, Helisight has been offering eight different tours that vary from eight minutes to an hour. The most popular tours are those that circle Corcovado and the statue of Christ the Redeemer.

Helisight has modern heliports at Dona Marta, Morro da Urca, and the Lagoa. It also operates from Pier Maua when the cruise ships are in. Prices are much less than most people imagine.

SOCCER

The mecca of soccer-lovers, Rio is world-renowned for its abiding passion for the game. Matches take place all through the year, and are usually held on Wednesday evenings or Sunday afternoons. The city's four big clubs are Flamengo, Fluminense, Vasco da Gama, and Botafogo.

Almost synonymous with Brazil's legendary sport, the Estádio do Maracanã is widely acclaimed for hosting some of the best soccer matches.

HORSE RACING

Unusual as it may seem to list it among the entertainment options, horse racing at the Jóquei Club Brasileiro on the Lagoa takes place four times a week. On Monday and Friday evenings, one can enjoy drinks or dinner in the members' stand, and watch the racing go on under the floodlights.

RIO DE JANEIRO CITY STREET FINDER

Map references given in this guide for entertainment venues and other attractions in Rio City refer to the Street Finder maps on the following pages. Map references are also provided for Rio City restaurants (see pp394–6) and hotels (see pp366–9). The first figure in the map reference indicates which Street Finder map to turn to, and the letter and number which follow refer to the grid reference on that map. The map below shows the different areas of Rio City – Leblon, Copacabana, Ipanema, and Centro – covered by the five Street Finder maps. Symbols used for sights and useful information are displayed in the key below. An index of street names and important places of interest marked on the maps can be found on page 68.

STREETWISE IN RIO

Though street crime is prevalent in Rio, a few precautions could help to prevent it from happening.

Contrary to general belief, it is probably best to avoid taking a stroll on the deserted streets of Centro on Sundays. Praça Mauá, just to the north of Centro, is best avoided after nightfall. Lapa, a popular nightspot in Rio, must be explored with great caution. It is advisable not to wander unaccompanied around the darker corners of the Parque do Flamengo, or to walk between Cosmo Velho and Corcovado late at night. Robbery and assault in these areas are common.

Passengers taking a bus are easy targets for thieves, and need to be vigilant. Taxis are plentiful and inexpensive, so avoid walking along empty and unfamiliar streets. Make sure the driver turns on the meter and ask for an estimate of the average fare to your destination.

Various instances of bag-snatching are common on the crowded beaches of Copacabana and Ipanema, especially during the weekends, so visitors must keep a keen eye on their belongings. Again, do not go down to the water after dark. Stay on the well-lit, busy sidewalks.

RIO DE JANEIRO & ESPÍRITO SANTO

Beyond the capital cities of Rio and Vitória, the magnificent scenery dominating the cities continues unchecked by rapid modernization. Along the coast are giant boulder-strewn mountains, while farther inland are the steep, lushly-forested ridges of the Mata Atlântica. Spectacular beaches, picturesque islands, and several resort towns are among the area's other attractions.

Stretching north and south of Rio City are long strands of beaches and half-moon coves lapped or pounded by a bottle-green Atlantic and visited by troops of sea turtles. Some surround the popular resort towns of Búzios, "discovered" by Brigitte Bardot in the 1960s, and Cabo Frio, while others lie close to the colonial port of Paraty, which once lay at the end of the mule route from the gold mines of Minas Gerais. Its cobbled streets are better preserved than others on the southeastern coast.

Inland, the steep ridges of the Mata Atlântica begin to rise vertiginously towards Minas Gerais and São Paulo, protecting a string of national and state parks, including Itatiaia and the Serra dos Órgãos, in their folds. Considered one of the world's biodiversity hot spots, an astounding 950 species of birds are found here and 40 percent of the plants are unique, including the cattleya orchid, referred to as the "Queen of Flowers." The largest among the islands, Ilha Grande has no roads. Steep walking trails leave its only town Abraão, to cut through the forest to still more beaches deserted but for surfboards and fishing shacks.

The Espírito Santo coast is equally beautiful with its mountains, beaches, and small towns. One of them, Itaúnas, is backed by sand dunes large enough to swallow it. A stunning sight here is Pedra Azul, a granite monolith which changes from slate gray to fiery orange with the passage of the sun.

Exploring Rio de Janeiro & Espírito Santo

Several towns pepper the coast of Rio de Janeiro state. Among these, Búzios draws the most visitors and has the best hotels and restaurants, while the colonial town of Paraty, nestled between the coastal mountains and an island-strewn sea, is emerging as a center for the arts. North of Rio is the imperial city of Petrópolis. Brazil's oldest national park, Itatiaia, lies just off the interstate between Rio and São Paulo. Ilha Grande, off the coast of Rio, and the resorts of northern Espírito Santo are relatively untouched. Vitória, the state's capital, dates to the 1550s. To its south is the beach town of Guarapari, while inland is the dramatic peak of Pedra Azul.

GETTING AROUND

The Rio and Espírito Santo coasts are served by the well signposted BR-101 interstate highway. Rio de Janeiro state has a good interstate bus service to all the beach towns. The Mata Atlântica, however, is best visited on a tour or with a hired car, as are the national parks of Itatiaia and Serra dos Órgãos. To visit northern and central Espírito Santo, visitors will need their own transport. Ilha Grande can be reached by passenger ferry twice a day.

One of the most photographed colonial towns on the Brazilian coast, Paraty has been a UNESCO World Heritage Site since 1958. Though settled by the Portuguese in the 16th century, it was developed a century later as an important port from where gold was shipped to Europe. Extremely charming, the whitewashed churches and terra-cotta roofs offset the lush green of the rainforest-clad mountains, and the placid bay whose emerald waters lap at the town's quay. Paraty has an impressive literary tradition; the annual Festa Literária Internacional de Paraty (FLIP) is a big draw. It is also an ideal base for exploring the dazzling Brazilian coastline, and boasts lovely pousadas (exclusive hotels).

The façade of Paraty's oldest church now graces travel brochures of the city. It was built in 1722 by, and for, all those considered not white enough to attend the church of the ruling elite. These would have included the illegitimate offspring of the aristocracy, their children in turn, indigenous people, and freed slaves. In design the church is typically Jesuit, with three windows in the upper chancel and a curvilinear door. Except for the beautifully worked altarpiece in the sanctuary and fine woodwork on the doorways, its interior is plain. Deconsecrated in the 20th century, the church now serves as the sparse Museu de Arte Sacra. Displayed religious artifacts include gold and silver remonstrances.

Slaves worshipped at Nossa Senhora do Rosário e São Benedito, which was built in 1725. The interior of this humble church is almost entirely free of embellishment, except for heavy gilt on the altarpiece. However, it retains a simple dignity and a sacred atmosphere. Its design resembles the Minas Gerais chapels of the same period. Every November, locals celebrate A Festa dos Santos (Feast of All Saints) here, where they remember some of the building's historical past. Mass is followed by a procession where churchgoers carry figures of a king and queen, recalling the Maracatú monarchs of Pernambuco, and icons of the various saints.

Originally meant for the white elite, this stately church took 100 years to build, owing to financial constraints. When it was near completion in 1873, the architects discovered that Paraty's soil was too muddy to support the planned twin towers. It was left in its current squat state, slowly subsiding to the left. Today, it serves as a parish church.

The colonial aristocracy also attended the graceful chapel of Nossa Senhora das Dores. Built in 1800, it was renovated in 1901, and administered by the nuns of the convent of Our Lady of Sorrows. Just as the rest of Paraty's churches, it has an unembellished interior, although there is some fine carving on the balustrades in the upper chancel. A catacomb-like cemetery adjoins the chapel.

Beaches Around Paraty

A surfer with board

Paraty, with its forest-swathed spurs of the coastal mountains, lies at the heart of a beautiful stretch of coastline. A short way offshore are a string of islands. Until only a few decades ago, this area was little-known even to Brazilian holiday makers. Much of the area, surrounded by a wealth of exotic flora and fauna, is protected by national and state parks. The islands can be reached by boat from Paraty town, or the nearby Paraty-Mirim.

Exploring Around Paraty

The bays and islands off Paraty are a favorite playground for Brazil's rich elite, who moor their expensive yachts in the Paraty Marina and fly in to the adjacent airport in their private jets for a weekend cruise.

Paraty's city beach, close to the historic center, Praia do Pontal lies across the Rio Perequê-Açu. The water is not very clean, but the barracas (restaurants) are pleasant. A shallow and spacious beach, Praia do Jabaquara is within walking distance of Paraty town. A glorious long beach, Paraty-Mirim lies 17 miles (27 km) east of town, and can be reached by a bumpy dirt road. Just south, Saco de Mamanguá is lined with old fishing villages and plush holiday homes. A deep sleeve of water, it is good for snorkeling. Ilha dos Meros, 9 miles (14 km) northeast of Paraty, is another snorkeling spot, though marine life is

The small town of Trindade, 13 miles (21 km) south of Paraty, is popular with surfers from São Paulo. It offers a choice of simply-appointed pousadas and some pretty beaches connected by footpaths. The scenic beach running south of Trindade, Praia de Fora, is backed by forest-covered hills. Praia do Meio is a long stretch of fine sand, washed by waves perfect for body surfing. Laranjeiras, a small distance downhill, is the hideaway for Rio's super-rich who flock to its private condominium. Trails lead from here through the forest to a string of pristine beaches to the south. Praia do Cepilho is one of the best surfing spots along this stretch of coast.

Located 21 miles (34 km) from Paraty, Ilha do Breu is a tiny private island dominated by a single pousada. The owner breeds rare golden lion tamarins, which he lets run free on his island. He also maintains a small aviary, and has planted trees to attract Atlantic rainforest birds. Poço das Andorinhas, one of the many waterfalls in the region, is a popular spot for bathing.

Mata Atlântica

The Atlantic coastal forest, or Mata Atlântica, is one of the best bird-watching sites in the world, with 950 resident species, almost 200 of which are endemic. It once covered the lowlands and coastal mountains from Rio Grande do Norte to Rio Grande do Sul. Today, less than 5 percent remains, concentrated mainly in Rio de Janeiro, Minas Gerais, São Paulo, and Paraná. Its proximity to the Atlantic blesses it with heavy rainfall. The vegetation is thick with epiphytic plants, and the forest is particularly rich in breathtaking orchid species. There are many rare mammals too, including the most endangered primate in the world, the woolly spider monkey, as well as several striking species of uniquely colored marmosets and tamarins.

Black jacobin

Epiphytes are plants encrusting every available nook and cranny of the larger trees, drawing moisture directly from air.

Clearwater streams cut across the thick forest, which receives heavy rainfall, especially in the Southeast.

Vegetation at the water's edge tends to consist of fast-growing species that quickly replenish their numbers after floods.

LOCATOR MAP

BIODIVERSITY

Mata Atlântica is one of the world's most biodiverse regions, with some 20,000 plant species, 40 percent of which are endemic, and one of the highest numbers of threatened or endangered vertebrates in the world.

The seven-colored tanager is one of the local species listed as endangered or threatened by CITES.

The cattleya orchid, the world's most famous orchid genus, was discovered by Englishman William Cattley in 1818.

The woolly monkey, among South America's largest primates, can weigh more than 13 lb (6 kg).

The golden lion tamarin, one of the three lion tamarin species, lives on a few islands and in the Atlantic forest.

Ocelots, the third largest of Brazil's eight indigenous big cats, are most abundant in southern São Paulo.

The Costa Verde

The Costa Verde (Green Coast) stretching south of Rio, past Paraty and Trindade (see pp106–107), deserves its name. Rainforests swathe the coastal mountains, which reach almost 9,143 ft (2,787 m) in the alpine meadows and the forests of Parque Nacional do Itatiaia. From here, they plunge down into steep ridges to meet an emerald ocean, tinged with turquoise at numerous long sandy beaches. Beyond are a scattering of breathtaking islands set in aquamarine and sitting in the deep, bottle-green Atlantic. The largest, Ilha Grande, is particularly lush, with trees covering its rocky mountains and sheltering its spectacular strands of fine white sand. The island is also the playground for the rich, who host extravagant parties in the Antipodean summer.

This unprepossessing port is today mainly a jumping-off point for the islands of Ilha Grande and Ilha da Gipóia. It was once a charming colonial town and vestiges of its once dignified past are hidden among the ever-expanding favelas. Angra dos Reis was once as pretty a town as Paraty. The main church, Nossa Senhora do Conceição, was built in 1626 in front of the docks, while the nearby Nossa Senhora do Carmo dates from 1593. The colonial naval complex lies some 2 miles (3 km) north of the town center towards the Praia do Bonfim.

Environs

Ilha da Gipóia, an hour's boat ride off the port of Angra dos Reis, is the second largest island in the bay after Ilha Grande, and is known for its stunning white sand beaches such as Jurubaíba, Praia do Dentista, and Norte. Most of the beaches here are bustling with bars floating offshore, which can be reached by the yachts and boats that ply the waters of the bay.

The forested Serra do Mar lies 25 miles (40 km) inland from Angra. On weekends and holidays, visitors can take a picturesque train journey there. Train tickets should be booked a day in advance from the tourist office.

The most romantic and pretty of southeastern Brazil's many islands, Ilha Grande remains unspoiled by development and heavy tourism. The only settlement of any size is the two-street Vila do Abraão, the port town and main village on the island. Tour operators and hotels in Abraão offer a range of trips around the island, many of them on pretty, painted wooden fishing boats. The most popular trip is to the sheltered cove at Palmas, to the east of the village, from where a trail leads to Lopes Mendes to the east, one of Ilha Grande's longest beaches, washed by powerful surf. Other trips include snorkeling in the clear waters of the Saco do Céu or visits to the 18th-century Igreja de Santana at Freguesia de Santana.

Self-guided trails from Abraão lead throughout the island. Many of them are steep and rocky, but offer wonderful views out over the Atlantic. The most challenging is to the 3,248-ft (990-m) high peak of Pico do Papagaio.

Although most of the 75-sq mile (193-sq km) island now forms part of the Parque Estadual da Ilha Grande, Ilha Grande's pristine state owes more to its long isolation than to efforts at conservation. From the earliest colonial days the island was a notorious pirate lair. It then became a landing port for slaves destined for Rio and in the late 20th century an infamous prison for political prisoners. Ruins of the prison buildings remain, covered in thick vegetation.

Brazil's oldest national park, Parque Nacional do Itatiaia, was founded in 1937. It was established to protect the high alpine meadows and the gradations of thick Atlantic rainforests that cover its steep mountain ridges. It is the only part of Rio de Janeiro state ever to see snow, albeit rarely.

The scenery here is magnificent. The highest regions of the park are capped with giant boulders, eroded into strange organic shapes by millions of years of rain and wind. They sit on expansive grassland coursed by babbling brooks, which become fast-flowing, clear-water rivers once they reach the warmer forested areas below. Here they tumble, roar, and fall over waterfalls and rapids.

The trees around them are busy with primates. Curious brown capuchin monkeys are a common sight on the numerous trails. Scarcer are the beautiful and shy black-faced titi monkeys, a threatened species. Birdlife, too, is prolific in the park, which is home to 350 species, many of which are endangered. The park plays a crucial role in their conservation. Dusky-legged guans wander along the park's few paved roads, brilliant seven-colored and black and gold cotingas flit about with toucans, and the early morning air buzzes with the sound of dozens of different hummingbirds.

The park can be crowded on weekends when Brazilian families romp in the numerous waterfalls and wildlife makes itself scarce. But during the week the various trails are deserted and quiet. The ranger station provides rather poor walking maps but the trails are fairly clear. Hotel Donati, which is the best hotel in the park, can organize walking tours, and with advance notice, wildlife guides.

Medal on display at Casa de Santos Dumont

Located in the mountains near Rio, Petrópolis owes its creation to the Brazilian royal family. Dom Pedro I's dream of building a summer residence here was fulfilled by his son, Dom Pedro II, who was equally taken by the charms of the region. In 1843, before construction of the palace began, he decreed the creation of Petrópolis as the summer seat of his government. The city soon rose in importance, as trappings of royalty made their mark. Today, Petrópolis is popular for its royal attractions, as well as for its mountain scenery and the national park of Serra dos Órgãos (see p115).

The metal structure and glass enclosure of the Palácio de Cristal (Crystal Palace) were made in France in 1879 and shipped to Brazil. Inaugurated on February 2, 1884, the palace is a fine example of the architectural style that emerged during the French industrial revolution.

Although it was originally planned as a greenhouse for growing orchids, the Palácio de Cristal was later meant to be an exhibition hall for hosting regular displays of local products. However, it ended up as the imperial ballroom, and has been the sight of many spectacular parties. Most momentous were the extravagant balls hosted by Princess Isabel and Count d'Eu, who is believed to have conceived the palace's basic design. It was during one such event in 1888 that Isabel signed an order liberating 103 slaves. On May 13 of the same year, Isabel went on to sign the Lei Aurea (Golden Law), the decree that, in theory, abolished slavery in Brazil.

Built by Dom Pedro II between 1845 and 1864, the Neo-Classical Imperial Palace was used by the Emperor as his summer residence every year from 1848 until the end of the monarchy and declaration of independence in 1889. In that year, the palace was leased out as a college, and continued to function as such until President Vargas passed a decree in 1943 creating the Imperial Museum.

Among the highlights of the museum, which faithfully reflect the daily life of the Brazilian royal family, are the Imperial Crown Jewels, as well as other artifacts, paintings, and furniture that belonged to the Emperor and his family.

Since Brigitte Bardot's visit to Búzios in 1964 with her then boyfriend, Brazilian actor Bob Zagury, this peninsula has developed from a quiet string of isolated fishing villages lost in semi-tropical maquis, into one of the country's most stylish low-key resorts. Private homes, designer boutiques, and little pousadas cling to its hills or watch over the numerous beaches. Beach buggies driven by holiday-makers buzz along the scruffy roads. Yachts bob in the bay in front of Búzios town, which is little more than a cluster of cobblestoned streets lined with smart boutiques and restaurants. During high season, the resort buzzes with cruise-ship passengers and middle-class Brazilian tourists who shop by day on Rua das Pedras, the town's main thoroughfare, sip cocktails in the evening at one of the oceanfront pousadas, and then dance the night away in the Ibiza-style clubs and beachside bars. Búzios's raison d'être is its beaches, which range from half-moon bays to long stretches of fine white sand. The best way to see them is to hire a beach buggy and explore, armed with one of the ubiquitous free maps

Beaches of Costa do Sul

The southern coast, extending between Niterói and Búzios, is best known for its landscape, outstanding beaches, and upmarket resorts. Attractive beaches and sparkling waters make it ideal for a lazy stretch on the sand, or a dip in the clean waters. With its crashing waves and a steady breeze, this stretch is popular for wind-surfing. It is easy to find accommodation here, both in busy resorts and isolated fishing villages.

of the peninsula available from every other hotel reception. The peninsula is extremely well-signposted, and since it is only 4 miles (6 km) long and 2 miles (4 km) wide, it is difficult to get lost here.

Many of the beaches, including the two sets of twin sheltered coves – at Praia João Fernandes, Praia João Fernandinho, Praia Azeda, and Praia Azedinha – are within half an hour's walk of town. Others are a beach buggy ride away. Praia da Ferradura, on the opposite side from Búzios, is one of the most beautiful beaches near town, and one of the least spoilt by hotel development. Fishermen still work from here at dawn and dusk.

Praia Brava, at the peninsula's eastern extreme, is washed by the fiercest waves and is a popular surf beach. Olho de Boi, which can be reached only via a rocky trail that runs from Brava's southern end, is surrounded by rocky hills on all sides, and is an unofficial nudist beach. Ferradurinha, at the peninsula's southern extreme, has clear, calm waters and natural swimming pools, good for a dip.

The capital city of Espírito Santo is dominated by an expansive bay with sheltered crescent coves, and surrounded by a bottle-green open ocean. Vitória was originally made up of 36 distinct islands, but landfills have now reduced these to just a handful, connected by five grand bridges. Praia do Camburi, the main beach south of the city is a busy 4-mile (6-km) stretch, dotted with restaurants and hotels.

Across the river, Vila Velha (Old Town), the most interesting part of the city, is reached by the majestic bridge, Terceira Ponte.

Although few colonial buildings remain, it is home to the architectural symbol of the city, Convento da Nossa Senhora da Penha. Sitting high on a lush palm-covered hill overlooking Vitória Bay, its thick fortified walls beautifully reflect both the sunrise and sunset. The monastery was founded in 1558 and preserves fine 16th-century wood carvings and one of Brazil's first paintings, Nossa Senhora das Alegrias, by an unknown early 16th-century Iberian artist. At the base of the hill is the simple Igreja Nossa Senhora do Rosário, the oldest church in the state, dating from 1551.

South of Vilha Velha, Praia de Costa is not as busy a beach as Camburi, but is a good place to go bodysurfing. Manguezal de Vitória, situated northeast of Vitória, is the largest stretch of urban mangroves in South America. The mangroves are an important nursery for marine life and can be visited by boat alongside a number of the bay's wilder islands.

Sitting in a tiny island of remnant Mata Atlântica forest, the 500-m (1,640-ft) high Pedra Azul (Blue Stone) rises in the middle of the Parque Estadual da Pedra Azul, forming a stunning center piece. Its natural color is an almost polished blue-grey, but shifts in hue and shade depending on the light, coal-black and brooding under a dark cloud, burning orange with the setting sun, or silvery white under a full moon.

There is a small visitors' center at the foot of the stone which is a good place to collect a detailed map of the park. A park ranger will also point out the trail leading up to the stone – a fairly easy but long walk punctuated by nine natural pools where visitors can take a refreshing dip. The trail is closed during and after heavy rains. Serious climbers are permitted to camp in the park for free.

The forest surrounding Pedra Azul is small but it is the nesting ground for a diverse variety of wildlife. Hummingbirds, tanagers, and tiny tufted-eared marmosets are a common sight.

This sleepy little fishing town lies tucked away in the far north of Espírito Santo on the border with Bahia. Long strands of beaches stretch to the north and south of the town. These have drifted into dunes so large that the first Itaúnas lies submerged, the remains of the original church tower occasionally appearing from the sand after a strong wind. The town lies next to the Rio Itaúnas which spreads into broad marshy meadows behind the sea. Ocelots, caimans, and capybaras live here, along with an impressive variety of rare waterbirds and small mammals.

The smattering of hotels in town offer dune buggy tours, crossing dozens of towering dunes and empty turtle-nesting beaches, eventually reaching the sandy cliffs on the state border with Bahia.

Itaúnas itself is surprisingly lively for a town so small. It is famous, particularly among students, for its exuberant samba and axé parties, which continue from December to March, and exciting forró dance festival in July.

MINAS GERAIS

The state of Minas Gerais is dotted with pretty colonial towns, set in a stunning landscape of rugged hills. Of these, Ouro Preto, Congonhas, and Diamantina are UNESCO World Heritage Sites.

Beyond the towns is pastoral country broken by wilderness, much of which has been protected by a series of national and state parks, where several rare species of animals, birds, and plants can be seen.

Minas's old mining towns are laid out along the Estrada Real, once Brazil's first great wagon trail and now one of its major tourist routes. The most famous is Ouro Preto, named after the black gold that was discovered here in the late 17th century by an itinerant adventurer (bandeirante), who came through the vast interior in search of slaves. Gold brought a rush of speculators and new discoveries and by the mid-18th-century ramshackle mining camps had grown into prosperous towns. Today, Ouro Preto, Tiradentes, Mariana, São João del Rei, Congonhas, and Diamantina preserve some of the finest ecclesiastical buildings and Baroque carvings in the Americas.

The state's spectacular parks are home to the maned wolf, as well as a plethora of endemic birds and plants. The Serra do Cipó and the Serra da Canastra lie on the tablelands of the Brazilian shield. Their cerrado forests are cut by several rivers that plunge dramatically over the edges of the mesetas (tabletop mountains), forming some of the world's highest waterfalls. The mountains of the Serra do Caparaó protect a swathe of the Mata Atlântica, dripping with orchids and the habitat of one of the few remaining populations of woolly spider monkey – the Americas' largest and rarest primate.

The state capital, Belo Horizonte, is a modern industrial city with a lively café life. President Juscelino Kubitschek's favorite architect, Oscar Niemeyer, adorned the city's Pampulha neighborhood with several structures before building the nation's capital, Brasília. Minas is also well known for its distinct cuisine and its rich literary and musical heritage.

Exploring Minas Gerais

Belo Horizonte, the capital of Minas Gerais, is the focus of life here. Most colonial mining towns, including Ouro Preto and Congonhas, lie immediately to its south. Mariana, another colonial city south of Belo Horizonte, is still a working mining center. Farther south, and a day's drive from the capital is the hilly Serra da Canastra National Park. Northern Minas is much wilder, with large tracts of cerrado forest in the Serra do Cipó and around Diamantina. The extreme north is arid, dominated by the sertão, a region of scrub and grassland, whose distinct culture and language was mythologized in the most famous of all Brazilian novels, Grande Sertão: Veredas, by João Guimarães Rosa (see p31).

GETTING AROUND

Belo Horizonte has two airports and is connected several times a day with all the Brazilian state capitals. There are few other airports in the state and transport beyond the capital is limited to buses, which are generally comfortable and frequent. Another option is to hire a car. Driving is possible during the day, even though many of the smaller roads are blighted with enormous potholes.

Nestled in rugged hills and shrouded with cerrado forest, Diamantina is the prettiest and best preserved of all the colonial cities in the state, and also a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Diamonds were discovered here in 1728, when the city was a small settlement called Arraial do Tijucu. Within a few decades the mud huts and encampments transformed into one of the wealthiest towns in Brazil.

The city is tiny and most of its historic buildings and churches lie within easy walking distance of the main square, Praça Guerra. This is an obvious point of orientation as it is dominated by the twin towers of the largest building in the city – the Cathedral Metropolitana de Santo Antônio, built in the 1930s. Just south of this in the adjacent Praça Juscelino Kubitschek is a small Museu Casa do Diamante, which houses a handful of the stones, together with iron collars once fitted onto slaves.

South again is the Museu de Juscelino Kubitschek, the modest former home of the Brazilian president, Juscelino Kubitschek (1902–76), who built Brasília (see pp302–303). Two blocks west is the city's most beautiful landmark, the Casa da Gloria, consisting of two houses on opposite sides connected by an enclosed, brilliant blue, second-storey passageway. The building is not open to the public.

There are several churches in Diamantina. The oldest is the Nossa Senhora do Rosário, in the square of the same name, a short distance to the northeast of the Praça Guerra. It was built and used by the enslaved black community and the city's poor. Next to it is an original 18th-century fountain whose waterspouts are bas-reliefs of African heads.

A block south is the spectacular Nossa Senhora do Carmo. Built between 1760 and 1784, it was the town's richest church and attended by the elite white community. It is remarkable chiefly for the interior paintings by José Soares de Araujo, from Braga, Portugal. Araujo's works lie in many of the town's churches but those here are his finest. The ceiling paintings are very striking. Near the back of the church is a portrait of the Prophet Elijah ascending to heaven in a chariot of fire.

The Casa de Chica da Silva, a smart town house one block south of the Nossa Senhora do Carmo, is famous far more for its former owner than it is for its small collection of period furniture. During the 18th century, Francisca (Chica) da Silva was a mulatta slave who became one of the few black people to become accepted by high colonial society through sheer force of personality.

A string of stunning natural locations lie within easy reach of Diamantina, the most impressive of which is Biribiri, located 7 miles (12 km) north of town. A historical village, Biribiri is home to many fazendas and is surrounded by waterfalls and mountains. Next to Biribiri is a winding black water river and the Parque Rio Preto, a good location for bird-watching.

Just northeast of Belo Horizonte, the state capital, this 131 sq-mile (338 sq-km) national park lies in high rugged country in the Serra do Espinhaço mountains, which run through the middle of northern Minas Gerais. Cipó protects some pristine areas of cerrado as well as the watersheds of many of the tributaries of the São Francisco and the Doce rivers. Waterfalls, plants, rare animals, and birds are abundant, making this one of the most beautiful national parks in Minas Gerais.

It is particularly lovely in May and June when the skies are invariably blue, the rivers full, and many of the numerous wildflowers in bloom. This is also a good time to go on a guided tour, at dawn or dusk, to spot pumas, giant anteaters, ocelots, maned wolves, and howling monkeys on the quieter trails.

The park is a popular location for ecotourism – particularly rock climbing, with excellent facilities and accommodation options.

The capital city of Minas Gerais was laid out in the 1890s and resembles a mini-São Paulo. Clusters of seemingly endless skyscraper apartment blocks sit in a broad valley under lush hills. Belo Horizonte is known worldwide for its visionary architecture. Its architectural highlights lie in the suburb of Pampulha, often regarded as the blueprint for Brasília. The buildings are set in expansive gardens designed by Roberto Burle Marx (1909–94), gathered around a large, beautiful artificial lake. All were commissioned by the then mayor of Belo Horizonte, Juscelino Kubitschek, and designed by the renowned architect Oscar Niemeyer in the 1940s.

The most impressive of all the buildings is the Igreja de São Francisco de Assis, which was built in 1943 as a series of parabolic arches in concrete, and has a wonderful sense of light and space. On the outside walls are a series of azulejos, or Portuguese blue tiles, depicting scenes from the life of St. Francis and painted by Brazil's foremost Modernist artist, Candido Portinari (1903–62). Other important buildings in the Pampulha complex include the dance hall Casa do Baile, with its sweeping curved walkway that functioned as a ballroom till 1946 and the twin sports stadia, which are a clear precursor to the gymnasium Niemeyer designed for Brasília.

In the inner city, the Museu Mineiro preserves some fine colonial era religious art, including a number of paintings attributed to Mestre Athayde (1762–1830). Beyond this, Belo Horizonte's main attractions are the lively restaurant and nightlife scene around the inner city neighborhoods of Lourdes and Savassi.

These areas have many chic restaurants, which often have live music playing during the weekends (see p398). The Lourdes and Savassi neighborhoods are easily explored on foot, and make a pleasant walk.

Environs

Christ, Nossa Senhora do Pilar

Ouro Preto, or “Black Gold,” earned its name shortly after its founding in 1698, from tarnished gold nuggets mined in the surrounding areas. It still resembled a boom town when it was given city status in 1711. By the mid-18th century, however, the gold rush had turned Ouro Preto into a wealthy town with fine buildings. It nurtured a generation of some of Latin America’s finest artists and craftsmen, including the ecclesiastical painter Mestre Athayde and the great sculptor Aleijadinho among others. Ouro Preto became the base of the Inconfidência rebellion led by Tiradentes against Portuguese colonists.

Xavier de Brito

One of the first gold towns in Minas Gerais and a former state capital, Ouro Preto is built on a series of hills. Steep, curving streets lined with 18th-century residences, many of which have now been converted into restaurants, bars, and shops, link the hills. Within the town, the streets lead to pretty little squares dominated by Baroque churches and stately town houses. These include the churches of São Francisco de Assis and the Nossa Senhora do Pilar, whose interiors bear the stamp of some of Latin America's finest artists and craftsmen.

This understated, elegant little church was constructed between 1766 and 1802 and seems modest next to many of Latin America's grand Baroque churches. It is characterized by gentle curves, from the elegant S-shaped balustrades of its façade to the exquisitely unified, undulating lines of its interior. The quality of the church's beauty lies in the mastery of its art, created by two of Brazil's greatest artists, Aleijadinho (see p131) and his long-term partner Manuel da Costa Athayde (1762–1830). The tablet on the church's façade showing St. Francis receiving the stigmata is believed to have been Aleijadinho's first great carving. It was followed by others, including the ornately carved door-case and the front of the sacristy at the rear of the church.

Commissioned by two of the wealthiest ecclesiastical orders in Ouro Preto, this church was intended as a showpiece of their influence. Pomp and circumstance surrounded its inauguration in 1731, which witnessed grand processions of clergy in opulent vestments and horses in velvet mantles mounted by knights in diamond-studded robes.

Nearly half a ton each of gold and silver were used to gild its interior, which is largely the work of 18th-century sculptor Francisco Xavier de Brito, an expatriate Portuguese. The gilt carving of Christ on the Cross on the door-case to the capela-mor (apsidal chapel) and the Resurrection scene on the tabernacle are regarded as de Brito's finest work.

Built by Manuel Francisco Lisboa, this church was constructed between 1727 and 1770. It is most celebrated for its harmonious proportions – the unity of curves and straight lines on the façade and the sense of space generated by what is in reality a modest nave and chancel. Manuel Francisco only added the finishing touches to the heavily gilt interior, and the sculptors of the elaborate interior remain largely unknown. Both Lisboa and his son Aleijadinho are buried in the church.

There is a small museum devoted to the life and times of Aleijadinho in the basement of the church, containing only very few of his pieces.

The main focus of the old town is the Praça Gomes Freire, a lovely garden square surrounded by 18th-century town houses. A short distance west of Praça Gomes Freire are the twin churches of São Francisco de Assis and Nossa Senhora do Carmo. Both date from the late 18th century and sit next to each other in front of the colonial building, the Casa de Camara.

The church of São Francisco de Assis is decorated with ceiling paintings by Manuel da Costa Athayde, who was buried in the church.

Especially worth seeing are the evocative scenes of the death of St. Francis, showing the saint in serene contemplation in an Italian pastoral landscape, combined with the Brazilian landscape.

The Nossa Senhora do Carmo also has striking paintings by Athayde. Although damaged by fire in 1999, the church is still remarkable for its delicately balanced and very Portuguese exterior. Known for its gentle curves and round towers, it also has exquisite lozenge-shaped key windows.

The city's other famous church is the Basilica de Nossa Senhora da Assunção, which dates from 1760 and is also referred to as the Basilica da Sé. Its exterior is modest, but the interior has some of the finest ceiling paintings by the 16th-century Portuguese artist, Manuel Rabello de Sousa. It also contains an exquisite 18th-century German organ and altarpieces by Francisco Xavier de Brito, and a portal and lavebo attributed to Aleijadinho. The organ was a gift to the diocese when Mariana was the foremost city in inland Brazil. Restored in 1984, it can be heard during regular weekend organ recitals.

Just around the corner to the south of the basilica is the most interesting of the civic buildings, the Museu Arquidiocesano de Arte Sacra. This preserves paintings by Athayde, objets d'art by Aleijadinho, and antique liturgical objects. Its façade is crowned with a medal by Aleijadinho.

Basílica do Senhor Bom Jesus de Matosinhos, Congonhas 6

Completed in 1771, the Baroque church of Bom Jesus de Matosinhos was built by the diamond miner Feliciano Mendes, who, after recovering from the brink of death, vowed to build a church in homage to “Bom Jesus.” At the entrance of the church, 12 soapstone statues of prophets from the Old Testament overlook a gently sloping garden, where six chapels containing life-size figures commemorate episodes from the Passion of Christ. The church is famous for preserving the most impressive ensemble of statues in Latin America, carved by Aleijadinho between 1780 and 1814.

Painted Ceiling
Painted by Bernardo Pires da Silva in 1776, the artwork on the ceiling is regarded as the finest Rococo church painting in Brazil.

Carved Altar

Designed by sculptor Aleijadinho, the altar was beautifully carved by his disciple, João Antunes de Carvalho.

Isaiah

The sculpture of Isaiah has narrow shoulders and disproportionately short arms, and is thought to have been carved by Aleijadinho's students.

★ The Prophet Habakukk

Aleijadinho's sculptures are celebrated for having an air of theatricality and accentuated characteristics, both striking in his statue of Habakukk.

The Crucifixion is particularly grisly, depicting smiling soldiers hammering nails into a spread-eagled Christ, his face contorted in agony.

ALEIJADINHO

Aleijadinho (1738–1815) meaning “Little Cripple,” was nicknamed due to the disfigurement he suffered from leprosy. When he carved the statues at Bom Jesus de Matosinhos, he could no longer walk and had completely lost the use of his hands. His students carried him up the hill each day and strapped hammers and chisels to his arms. The figure watching the Crucifixion and hiding his hands is reputed to be a self-portrait by Aleijadinho. The statues are, without doubt, his masterpieces, and his final works of art.

Colonial Portuguese houses lining the cobble streets of Tiradentes

🏠 6,000. 📍 Largo dos Forros, Rua Resende Costa 71, (032) 3355 1212. 🎪 Festival de Cinema (Jan), Carnaval Mardi Gras (Feb/Mar).

Like Ouro Preto and Mariana, Tiradentes became rich on gold, producing some of the most lavish Baroque church interiors and façades in all of Brazil. The town takes its name from the nickname “Tiradentes” (Tooth-puller) of José da Silva Xavier (1746–92), an erstwhile resident who became a martyr of the Inconfidência Mineira, the first movement in Brazil towards independence from Portugal.

Tiradentes is a delightful colonial town. Its multi-colored Portuguese cottages and miniature Baroque churches flank the cobble roads on the steep, low São José hills around the Rio Santo Antônio. There is a craft shop, an arty little café or gourmet restaurant on every other corner. Pretty horse-drawn carriages gather in Largo das Forras, the town’s main plaza, and a narrow gauge steam train, Maria Fumaça (see p440), with wooden Pullman coaches, puffs and heaves its way to and from neighboring São João del Rei on weekends and public holidays.

The center of Tiradentes is tiny and best seen on foot. Rua da Praia runs west from Largo das Forras following the course of the Rio das Mortes. Rua Direita runs parallel to it and a series of smaller streets cross the two. The most important of these is Rua da Câmara, whose steep cobbles rise to the town’s most imposing church, the Matriz de Santo Antônio, built between 1710 and 1752. This is one of the finest Baroque churches in Brazil, with wonderful woodcarvings and gilt interiors. Parts of the façade are attributed to the architect and sculptor Aleijadinho (see p131).

The Museu Padre Toledo, just east of the Matriz on the street by the same name, is the former house of another martyr from the Inconfidência, Padre Toledo. It is now a museum preserving art, documents, and furniture from the 18th century.

There are various other small churches scattered throughout the town and these are all worth a visit. The best of these churches is Igreja Nossa Senhora do Rosário dos Prestos, on Rua Direita, which features some elegant statues and painted panels.

Gilt altar and interior of Matriz de Santo Antônio, Tiradentes

Tiradentes has a magnificent 18th-century public fountain, the Chafariz de São José, just across from Rua da Câmara. It features an oratory with an image of São José de Botas and three faces representing love, good fortune, and health. The water comes from a spring in the São José hills overlooking the town, which offer excellent hiking.

The largest of the historic towns of Minas Gerais, São João del Rei did not suffer from the decline of the gold boom in the 1800s. Today, it remains a bustling town, less than 19 miles (30 km) from Tiradentes, and boasts some beautiful churches, old mansions, and an attractive colonial center.

Façade, Igreja de São Francisco de Assis, São João del Rei

The principal reason for visiting São João is to see the magnificent Igreja de São Francisco de Assis, whose unusual curved façade, turtle-back roof and intricately carved medal overlook a beautiful square lined with towering palms. The square is in the shape of a lyre and at sundown the shadows of the palms form the instrument's strings. Together with the Santuário do Bom Jesus do Monte Sítio in Braga, Portugal, and the church of São Francisco in Ouro Preto (see p126-8), this church is one of the jewels in the crown of Baroque architecture.

The town has a handful of other interesting sights. The Museu Regional do Sphan, a colonial mansion built in 1859, is full of antique furniture and sacred art, and is one of the best in Minas Gerais. The Museu Ferroviário, at the Maria Fumaça railway station, is a tiny locomotive museum housing an old, Philadelphia-built, narrow gauge steam train. It sits alongside the Pullman carriages used by Emperor Dom Pedro II when he traveled to Minas Gerais from Rio by train in the 19th century.

The extensive Parque Nacional Serra da Canastra, tucked away in the far southwest of Minas Gerais, protects the head-waters of one of South America's largest rivers – the Rio São Francisco. This great waterway flows 1,963 miles (3,160 km) through the rippling hills of Minas, and the bone-dry deserts of the north-eastern interior. But in the Serra da Canastra, it is little more than a large mountain stream cutting through rugged terrain. Bare granite peaks rise to almost 4,920 ft (1,500 m). Sparse cerrado forest sprinkled with boulders gathers at their feet. Around the numerous waterfalls and along the wild rivers are stretches of lush, gallery forest. The most famed of the falls is the Cachoeira d'Anta. Here the river's ice-cold waters form a series of pools before plunging 186 m (610 ft) off an escarpment.

The park's most famous trail, the Trilha Casca d'Anta, begins in front of the waterfall and offers a spectacular view out over the park to the denuded pasture land beyond.

There is plenty of wildlife in the Serra da Canastra, though it can be hard to see. Maned wolves and giant anteaters are relatively common here, as are the pig-sized giant armadillos. The park is especially rich in birdlife, and is one of the few places in the world where it is possible to see the endangered Brazilian Merganser duck.

SÃO PAULO CITY

Bristling concrete towers extend interminably over São Paulo, an expansive, vibrant city located on a high plateau. The impressive number of immigrants settled in its many districts makes it the world's second largest metropolis. Its immense cultural diversity has blessed it with the liveliest and most creative artistic, musical, and gastronomic scene in the country.

São Paulo was founded in 1554 by Manuel da Nóbrega and José de Anchieta, and established as a Jesuit missionary outpost. The 17th century saw the town become the headquarters for bandeirantes, or slave-trading pioneers. São Paulo became a major stopover point for explorers and pioneers, lured by the prospect of gold mines and slave trading in the interiors. The expansion of the sugar and coffee industries in the late 18th and 19th centuries attracted immigrants from the Middle East, Spanish America, the Russian republics, Central Asia, Europe – including Spain and Portugal – and Japan.

Internal migrants from every corner of the nation came to São Paulo in the mid-20th century. Among them was an impoverished metal-worker from Pernambuco, Luíz Inácio da Silva, who by a wave of public support went on to become Brazil's President in 2002, and again in 2006. Regional festivals from all over the country are celebrated with great enthusiasm in the city's enormous favelas (shanty towns).

São Paulo's vastness and complex character can be intimidating to an outsider. The greatest pleasures of this magnificent city are to be found behind closed doors – in museums, galleries, concert halls, and in a wealth of restaurants and shops. A true haven for gourmets, São Paulo is known to serve the best food in South America. The city center offers a host of attractions, such as the 17th-century Igreja de São Francisco and the 20th-century Mosteiro São Bento. The city's finest museum, Museu de Arte de São Paulo (MASP), is one of the highlights of the famed Avenida Paulista.

Exploring São Paulo City

Brazil's largest city covers an area of 6,332 sq miles (10,190 sq km). The conurbation of São Paulo, which includes the cities of São Bernardo de Campo, Guarulhos, and Sorocaba, is home to about 29 million people, making it the largest urban area in the world. There are three city centers – the old center preserves the few remaining historical buildings, including the Cathedral Metropolitana. A short distance to the southwest is Avenida Paulista, home to the famous Museu de Arte Contemporânea (MAC). The commercial districts of Itaim and Brooklin lie south, on the banks of the Rio Tietê. The city's posh neighborhood, Jardins, is lined with South America's finest shops and restaurants. Another upscale area, Vila Mariana is home to Parque do Ibirapuera, a green oasis among the relentless high-rises.

GETTING AROUND

São Paulo is well connected, with daily international flights to most major European and North, and South American cities. Most of these depart from Cumbica airport in Guarulhos, 19 miles (30 km) northeast of the city. Domestic flights leave from Congonhas Airport, just south of Ibirapuera Park in the main urban center. There are buses to every corner of Brazil and beyond to Bolivia, Argentina, Paraguay, and Uruguay. There is an extensive network of taxis and buses within the city. The metro and urban railway are clean, fast, and efficient. Cars can be rented at both the airports, although the city's numerous one-way systems and choking traffic make driving a little daunting.

At the heart of old downtown São Paulo, the towering Catedral Metropolitana (also known as Catedral da Sé) watches over the large pebbled Praça da Sé, shaded by tropical fig and palm trees. Built between 1912 and 1954, the cathedral finally gained its full complement of 14 turrets in 2002.

Built by Maximiliano Hell, the exterior is a fusion of Neo-Gothic and Renaissance, with an overly narrow nave squeezed between two enormous 318-ft (97-m) high spires and a bulbous copper cupola. The cavernous interior, said to seat up to 8,000 people, looks starkly European. The only obvious local influences are visible in the capitals, delicately carved with distinctly Brazilian flora and fauna. The stained-glass windows were designed in Germany and Brazil.

The cathedral's façade has watched over the country's largest public protests, when crowds gathered in the square outside the cathedral in the late 1980s to demand the end of military rule.

Within easy walking distance from the Praça da Sé, the Pátio do Colégio has an interesting history behind it. On January 25, 1554, the Jesuits inaugurated the Colégio de São Paulo de Piratinga on a small bluff overlooking an extensive forest. The original wattle-and-daub shack, built for them by their Guarani cohorts, eventually became a school. That school became a church, and around the church arose the buildings that formed the core of the original city of São Paulo.

In 1760, the Jesuits were expelled from the city, but the college and chapel they founded remained and came to be known as the Pátio do Colégio. In 1886, the tower of the original church collapsed and the whole building was demolished.

Upon their return in 1954, the Jesuits immediately set about building an exact replica of their original church and college, which is what stands today as Pátio do Colégio.

Most of the buildings are occupied by the Museu Padre Anchieta, named after the Jesuit captain who led the first mission. The collection features a Modernist portrait of the priest, by the Italian artist Menghini, some of the priest's remains, a 17th-century font used to baptize indigenous people, as well as a collection of Guarani artifacts from the colonial era. A model reproduction of São Paulo in the 16th century is also on display.

Brazil is the only South American country where the Benedictine order gained a foothold, arriving in São Paulo on this site in 1598. The current building, however, dates from the 1920s and was designed by Munich-based architect Richard Bernal.

The monastery has a beautifully painted Beuronese interior. This style is named after techniques developed in the late 19th and early 20th centuries by Benedictines in the monastery of Beuron in southwest Germany. It is characterized by a compressed perspective and vivid colors. The finest representation of Beuronese art in Latin America is visible inside this beautiful Blessed Sacrament chapel. Scenes from the life of St. Benedict are depicted on the stained-glass windows and the ceiling.

The church has a large organ, which is the centerpiece of a festival held in November and December every year. There is also a shop selling delicious sweets and cakes made by the monks.

Pinacoteca do Estado 10

The Pinacoteca is a significant repository of Brazilian art, with an archive of over 5,000 paintings and sculptures representing all major Brazilian artists and artistic movements. The galleries trace the evolution of Brazilian styles, which began as mock-European naturalism and gradually diversified into social realist, naive, and abstract forms. In the mid-1990s, the Pinacoteca was magnificently renovated by the noted architect Paulo Mendes de Rocha, who filled the original Neo-Classical building with carefully positioned partitions and capped it with a translucent roof. The magical sense of space and light perfectly complements the intensity of color and tone which characterizes Brazilian art.

Often overlooked by visitors, this small museum boasts one of the finest collections of religious artifacts in the Americas. The exhibits are housed in a large wing of a distinguished colonial building, the early 19th-century Mosteiro da Luz. Restful and serene, the entire complex is a peaceful haven from the frenetic chaos of São Paulo.

The museum's priceless objects and artifacts include lavish monstrances (ceremonial vessels), ecclesiastical jewelry, and church altarpieces. Of particular note is the statuery, with pieces by many of the most important Brazilian Baroque masters such as Aleijadinho, Mestre Valentim, and Frei Agostinho da Piedade. One of the gems is the 18th-century Mary Magdalene by Francisco Xavier de Brito, which displays an effortless unity of motion and melancholy contemplation. Among the sculptures, mostly by anonymous Brazilian indigenous artists, two pieces stand out – a majestic African-Brazilian São Bento (with blue eyes) and an exquisitely detailed 18th-century Neapolitan nativity crib comprising around 2,000 pieces, which is the most important of its kind outside Naples.

The collection also features works by

One of modern Brazil's prominent symbols of industrial progress, São Paulo's railway station was built in 1901. The design of the Estação da Luz is a homage to the English railroad, and imitates the Victorian eclectic style.

Just like all of São Paulo's railways, Estação da Luz was the creation of Brazil's first industrialist, the Visconde de Mauá. After a visit to London in the 1840s, Mauá was convinced that Brazil's future lay in rapid industrialization. He founded an ironworks, employing some 300 workers from England and Scotland.

In 1854, Mauá opened his first railway, which was designed and run by the British. It linked Jundiaí, in the heart of São Paulo's coffee region, with Santos on the coast. Today, the Estação da Luz serves only the São Paulo city area.

Romanesque red-brick arches and stately cast-iron pillars support a single vault that covers four tracks and platforms.

Located in an attractive early 20th-century Neo-Classical building, the annex of the Pinacoteca do Estado (see pp140–41) is one of the city's best contemporary exhibition spaces. Some of Brazil's finest Modernist paintings, taken from the archive of the Fundação José e Paulina Nemirovsky, are displayed here.

An important milestone in Brazilian Modernism is Antropofagia by Tarsila do Amaral (1886–1973), the founder of the vital antropofagismo movement (see pp30–31). There are also key pieces by Candido Portinari, Anita Malfatti, and Lasar Segall. International art is represented by Marc Chagall, Pablo Picasso, and Georges Braque, among others.

Known for the finest acoustics in Latin America, this concert hall was inaugurated in 1997. It is the city's premier classical music venue and the home of Brazil's top orchestra, the Orquestra Sinfônica do Estado de São Paulo (OSESP).

The orchestra's artistic director John Neschling, who studied conducting under Hans Swarowsky and Leonard Bernstein, is also a composer of film music. He most famously composed the sound track for Kiss of the Spider Woman (Brazil/USA, 1985).

The grand railway building, the Estação Júlio Prestes, in which the hall is housed, was designed in 1938 by Brazilian architect Cristiano Stockler. Largely inspired by New York, it contrasts strongly with the English Estação da Luz.

Museu de Arte de São Paulo (MASP) 15

One of Brazil's finest museums, MASP preserves a vast collection of European old masters and early Modernist paintings. Pietro Maria Bardi, a Brazilian of Italian origin, scouted around Europe between 1947 and 1953. He bought the now priceless works of Degas, Van Gogh, Velázquez, Rembrandt, Turner, Titian, Bellini, and Raphael at absurdly low prices. By the 1960s, the works had become so important that Bardi persuaded the São Paulo authorities to build a gallery to house them.

The extensive collection is constantly rotating, as paintings are taken in and out of the archive. The works are loosely grouped by country.

Resurrection of Christ (1501/1502)
by Raphael, Italian collection

ITALIAN ART

Of the museum's three dozen pre-19th-century Italian paintings, 17 date from the early Renaissance, prior to 1510. These include a series of iconographic religious works from Florence and Modena, a particularly haunting painting of a penitent St. Jerome in the desert by Andrea Mantegna, and Resurrection of Christ by Raphael. There are also 10 paintings of impeccable quality, covering the 150 years of Venetian Renaissance and Baroque painting between Bellini and Saraceni. A Titian and a Tintoretto are prominently featured, besides Bellini's beautiful Madonna and Child.

FRENCH ART & PARISIAN SCHOOL

With more than 300 paintings, from the 18th to early 20th century, France dominates the museum. The collection has a wonderful chronological consistency. A few notable exceptions apart, including David, Millet, Seurat, and Braque, all the major artists are represented. Also showcased here are those who drew influence from late 19th- to early 20th-century Paris, such as Van Gogh, Chagall, and Picasso. Many of the works are among the artists' greatest masterpieces, especially those by Manet and Cézanne. Another gem is Toulouse-Lautrec's Paul Viaud Dressed as an 18th-century Admiral (1901).

ART FROM THE IBERIAN PENINSULA & NORTHERN EUROPE

The rest of Europe is represented as a chronological mishmash of glorious paintings. Of particular note are very fine Spanish pieces by Velázquez, El Greco, and a magnificent series of etchings and portraits by Goya, the best of which is that of Cardinal Luís María de Borbón y Vallabriga (1800). Central Europe has some fine works by Bosch, Holbein, Memling, Rembrandt, Rubens, and Franz Hals. There are also a few paintings by Frans Post, depicting Dutch colonial Pernambuco. England is represented by a group of respectable works by Constable, Gainsborough, Joshua Reynolds, and Turner.

BRAZILIAN ART

Though not as vast as Rio de Janeiro's Museu Nacional de Belas Artes (see p74), or the Pinacoteca do Estado (see pp140–41), MASP contains works by Almeida Junior, Brecheret, Di Cavalcanti, Tomie Ohtake, and Candido Portinari, among others.

Avenida Paulista 16

Map 4 E2, 4 F2, 4 F3.

Brigadeiro/Trianon-Masp/Rebourças. Gay Pride (Jun).

Modern São Paulo's first symbol of prosperity, Avenida Paulista and its crowded skyscrapers continue to attest to Brazil's status as South America's major economic power. Though often compared to New York's Fifth Avenue, it is actually a corporate valley, business-like and functional.

In the 19th century, when a Uruguayan named Joaquin Eugenio de Lima first set up house here, Paulista was a hill on the outskirts of a small colonial town surrounded by pastoral land and forest. Around this time, São Paulo was growing rich on trains and coffee. Others followed de Lima and began to build large houses here.

By the turn of the 19th century, the avenue had become São Paulo's most desirable address, and was lined with large, opulent mansions owned by extremely wealthy Brazilian moguls, or the coffee barons. Each mansion reflected the architectural predilections of the owner, be it Neo-Classical, Rhineland, or even mock-Tudor. Having suffered large-scale demolition after World War II, the avenue had lost its splendid character by the 1960s. Today, only one mansion remains, the French-style Casa das Rosas, which is now a cultural center managed and run by São Paulo state. Interesting art shows are occasionally held here, but the 1935 mansion itself is well worth visiting for its pretty rose garden and Art Nouveau stained-glass window.

There are a few other sights of interest along the street. The Instituto Itaú Cultural, near Brigadeiro metro station, hosts a range of concerts and exhibitions, all of which are free of charge. It also houses the largest currency museum in the country, the Itaú Numismática. The Centro Cultural FIESP, at Trianon-Masp, is a business headquarters with a small Centro Cultural that presents free live theater and hosts occasional art shows.

Immediately to its north and opposite MASP is the Parque Trianon, the only green respite from the concrete. It was named in homage to the gardens of the Palace of Versailles, to which it bears no resemblance. However, in the quiet of the early morning, small mammals, including agouti and marmosets, can be seen foraging here, and in the heat of the day, the trees provide welcome shade. There are plenty of cinemas in and around Paulista, along the avenue itself, in the Shopping Paulista Mall, near Brigadeiro metro, and dotted along Rua da Consolação, near Paulista's northern end.

Together with the Praça da Sé (see p138), Paulista is one of the city's most important venues for protests and celebrations. Brazil's World Cup soccer victories see the avenue packed with millions of cheering, shirtless fans.

In June, the world's largest Gay Pride (see p43) march takes place here. During this prominent public event, as many as 2 million Brazilians and foreigners dance samba behind enormous decorated floats that are topped with outlandishly dressed transvestite dancers.

For a taste of Avenida Paulista as it once was, head a few blocks south, across the chic shopping streets of the Jardins and into Jardim Europa. Here, along Avenida Brasil and Avenida Groenlandia, the stately homes of the city's current rich can be seen.

São Paulo has more ethnic Japanese than any other city outside Japan. Liberdade, located just south of the city center, is the hub of the Japanese community. The neighborhood, small and easily manageable on foot, is best explored during the afternoon. Streets are lined with shops and restaurants selling everything, from woks and manga comics, to sushi and sashimi. On Sundays, there is a lively market in the Praça de Liberdade, where stalls serve up steaming lacquer bowls of miso soup and yakisoba noodles.

Liberdade's main thoroughfare, Rua Galvão Bueno, runs south from this square, lined with the bulk of the shops and decorated with red Japanese arches, or torii. Many of Liberdade's most traditional Japanese restaurants are located on, and around, Rua Tomaz Gonzaga, which cuts across Galvão Bueno, south of the square.

At the corner of Galvão Bueno and Rua São Joaquim, an undistinguished block houses the Museu da Imigração Japonesa (Japanese Immigration Museum). The museum was opened in 1978 by the erstwhile prince, now Emperor Akihito of Japan. It has two floors of artifacts and displays devoted to telling the story of the Japanese immigrant community, their origins, and their lives in early 20th-century Brazil. These include a replica of the Kasato-Maru – the ship which brought the first immigrants in 1908 (see p169), a complete early Japanese-Brazilian agricultural cottage, and a memorial to the Dekasseguis – the Japanese Brazilians who returned to Japan to fight in World War II. The building also features a lovely rooftop garden.

One of São Paulo's many Buddhist temples, built in 1995, the Templo Busshinji lies west of the Museu da

Visitors are welcome to attend the various ceremonies, the most impressive of which is the Cerimônia de Kannon, which takes place each month. The rituals, paying homage to the Buddha's compassionate nature, are accompanied by traditional Japanese instruments.

SÃO PAULO FASHION WEEK

With Rosa Chá and Havaianas among its brands, and supermodels Gisele Bündchen and Ana Beatriz Barros, Brazil has rapidly risen to the upper echelons of the fashion world in recent years. Established only in 1996, São Paulo's fashion week is now Latin America's most important fashion event. All of the top Brazilian names and faces are showcased here, together with supermodels from around the world. While the show is on, the city erupts into a fashion frenzy. During this time, the fashion fraternity can be spotted in fashionable bars and boutiques throughout the wealthy corners of the city. Over 100,000 people visit the show itself, which takes place twice a year – usually in January and June – in Oscar Niemeyer's Bial building in Parque do Ibirapuera (see pp146–7). More column inches are devoted to the event than to any other activity in Brazil, except for soccer and political scandals. The event generates an estimated $45 million through the media alone, with more than 2,500 newspaper and magazine pages and almost 200 hours of television coverage.

Parque do Ibirapuera is the largest green space in central São Paulo, and its native Brazilian woodlands and lakes are a welcome respite from the city's urban sprawl. Opened in 1954, it houses several museums and exhibition spaces, as well as a complex of buildings by the country's celebrated architect, Oscar Niemeyer (b.1907). These stage major exhibitions such as the Terracotta Warrior exhibition from China and the Rodin retrospective.

Monumento às Bandeiras

Completed in 1950, this tribute to explorers or bandeirantes, who opened up Brazil's interior, is one of the more severe works by Brazil's foremost sculptor, Victor Brecheret.

Hotel Unique (see p374), the intriguing, half-melon structure on stilts is the most famous work of Brazil's leading contemporary architect, Ruy Ohtake, son of the artist, Tomie Ohtake.

A son et lumière fountain show is held here on weekends.

The restored, state-of-the-art planetarium is one of the most impressive in Latin America and is very popular with children. All shows are in Portuguese.

Pavilhão Japonês

This pavilion and its gardens were built in strict accordance with traditional Japanese design, using only Japanese materials. There is also an exhibition space and a Japanese tearoom.

In 1822, Dom Pedro I declared the famous “Grito de Ipiranga,” or call for independence from Portugal (Independência ou Morte, or Independence or Death), on the banks of the Rio Ipiranga (see p52). This large palace, built in 1890, was one of the earliest monuments of independent Brazil.

The Museu Paulista is housed in the palace at the top of extensive formal gardens in the Parque da Independência. The museum is devoted to the nation’s history, containing a collection of exhibits which includes old maps, traditional colonial furniture, carriages, rare documents, old coins, clothing, and paintings. The artist Pedro Américo’s monumental canvas Independência ou Morte (1888), depicting the young prince shouting his grito (cry), sits in the building’s most handsome room, the Salão Nobre.

The mock French Renaissance gardens are dotted with sculptures and monuments. These include an enormous bronze sculpture to the nation’s independence, Monumento a Independência, made by the Italian sculptor Ettore Ximenes in 1921. In the chapel at the base of the monument, a tomb contains the remains of Dom Pedro I and Empress Leopoldina. Also in the grounds is the Casa do Grito, a replica of the simple adobe house depicted by Pedro Américo in his painting.

A treasure trove of modern and post-modern European and Brazilian art lies tucked away in the campus of São Paulo’s most distinguished university. The collection at the Museu de Arte Contemporânea (MAC) is an amalgamation of donations given by wealthy individuals since the early 20th century and prizes from São Paulo’s Art Biennials.

Estrada de Ferro Central do Brasil by Tarsila de Amaral at MAC

The collection comprises some 8,000 works of art. Prominent among these are important, little-seen European works by Amadeo Modigliani, Pablo Picasso, Max Ernst, and Henri Matisse, which sit alongside the cream of Brazil’s artists. Brazilian Modernists, such as Anita Malfatti, Vitor Brecheret, and Candido Portinari, are well represented. MAC also holds three of the most celebrated works by Tarsila do Amaral – A Negra, Estrada de Ferro Central do Brasil, and A Floresta. Tarsila was the founder of antropofagismo (see pp30–31) – a movement which paved the way for many important artistic trends within post-War Brazil.

The Instituto Butantã is a biomedical research center affiliated to the Cidade Universitária, the University of São Paulo. Founded in 1901 by Vital Brazil to conduct research into venomous animals, the institute is now one of the leading producers of anti-venoms and sera in the world. It is also one of the city’s principal tourist attractions, as it is located in a pretty forested garden full of hummingbirds.

Pits alongside the center and an adjacent museum house many of South America's more exotic snakes and arachnids. Smaller but even deadlier creatures can be seen through microscopes in the institute's Museu de Microbiologia. This bright, modern space also includes excellent interactive displays which are particularly popular with children.

Jardim Botânico 22

Av Miguel Stéfano 3031. Tel (011) 5073 6300.   9am–5pm Wed–Sun.

Other than the Serra da Cantareira mountains on the city's western fringe, the Jardim Botânico is the largest area of green in São Paulo's metropolitan area. It combines formal gardens, laid out around a series of lakes with areas of forest large enough to support several resident troops of red howler monkeys. Their guttural calls can be heard here at dawn and dusk and sometimes the monkeys themselves can be seen in the trees. There is plenty of other wildlife too, including agoutis, pacas and tufted-eared marmosets. The latter often loiter about in the trees around the lawns of the sculpture garden hoping to grab a fruity morsel.

The entrance to the park is through an avenue of magnificent royal palms, surrounded by tropical and subtropical trees. Most are labeled with their common and scientific names (the former in Portuguese only). The avenue leads to the Jardim Lineu, inspired by the gardens in Uppsala, Sweden, and, like them, are laid out in homage to 18th-century biologist Carl Linnaeus. Glass houses here contain a number of Atlantic rainforest plants and a botanical museum preserves a bank of Brazilian seeds from flowering plants and important fruit species.

Beyond the Jardim Lineu are areas of ponds and lawns popular with picnickers on the weekends. These are

Parque Burle Marx 23

Av Dona Helena Pereira de Moraes 200. Tel (011) 3746 7631.   9am–7pm daily.

Roberto Burle Marx (1909–94) was South America's greatest landscape architect and one of the three core designers of Brasília (see pp294–5). His designs were strongly influenced by Modernist ideas inspired by his studies in Germany, and his early work with the architect Lucio Costa who had worked with Le Corbusier. Burle Marx was one of the first architects to combine sculptural and painting techniques with landscape design.

His gardens in the Parque Burle Marx have been compared to abstract paintings, utilizing simple shapes, some curvilinear and rectilinear patterns to create blocks of color and texture, broken by paths and areas of woodland. Marx was a keen ecologist and promoted the use of Brazilian native species, the park is surrounded by a small area of forest, comprising various Mata Atlântica species.

Although Marx contributed to Parque Ibirapuera (see pp146–7), the park is the only exclusive example of his work in his home city. The gardens were originally private, commissioned for the millionaire industrialist “Baby” Pignatari in the 1940s.

As well as landscaping, Burle Marx was allowed to experiment and place abstract structures in the gardens. These include mirrors of water and rectangular blocks reminiscent of the low Mixtec buildings in Mitla, Mexico. The constructions near the avenue of palms at the park's entrance are by Oscar Niemeyer.

SHOPPING IN SÃO PAULO

Shopping in São Paulo is like shopping in a large North American city. It is largely mall- and boutique-based and the best items to buy are high-end luxury goods. However, more interesting are markets and fairs that take place around town on weekends, selling traditional goods. Unlike many big cities in South America, São Paulo has no exclusive craft markets or traditional artisanware of note, but there are a few arts and craft specialist shops. São Paulo is Latin America's fashion capital and the districts of Jardins, Pacaembu, and Vila Madalena are bursting with smart little fancy boutiques. Many others can be found in the city's numerous opulent malls, which are large, air-conditioned, and filled with restaurants, entertainment areas, and shops housing international brands and leading Brazilian designers. The city's other good buys, including CDs, books, coffee, and cachaça can be bought from malls. High-quality household items can be found on Rua Gabriel Monteiro Silva in Jardins.

Designer shops lining Rua Oscar Freire

SHOPPING HOURS

Shops in São Paulo are open from 8am to 6pm. Street shops tend to open from 8 or 10am to 6pm. They are closed on Brazilian public holidays. Most shopping centers and malls are open from 10am to 10pm and on weekends (including Sunday) from 10am to 8pm. They often do not close on public holidays.

FASHION

The domestic fashion market in Brazil is flourishing, with almost all Brazilian labels coming from São Paulo. The market is strongest for women's clothing and the best place to begin a browse is in Jardins. Here hundreds of tasteful little shops sell colorful, beautifully cut clothes. Many of the latest generation of young Paulistana designers, such as Adriana Barra and Cris Barros, have their showrooms in Jardins. These labels are particularly strong on dresses and evening wear. More established names can be found here too. Rosa Chá stocks the world's sexiest and most fashionable bikinis (by Amir Slama).

Other designers, such as rising star Santa Paciência, celebrated for her elegant and original use of light, flowing fabrics, are based in Pacaembu, a short taxi drive away from central São Paulo.

MUSIC & FILM

Bossa nova, samba, frevo, forró, axé, choro – it is difficult to think of a country with as many homegrown musical genres as Brazil. São Paulo is the best place in the country either to begin an acquaintance with this diversity or to explore its variety.

Many of the larger stores give customers the chance to listen to CDs before buying.

Such shops are to be found in many of the larger malls but the best in the city is probably FNAC, which also stocks an excellent selection of Brazilian DVDs. Its selections of Latin American arthouse films are particularly strong.

Grandes Galerias or the Galeria do Rock has a large choice of rock CDs and DVDs. This arcade has around 100 different small shops selling every manner of CD and DVD. However, only a few stores offer the desirable option of listening before buying.

BEVERAGES

The raw ingredient for the caipirinha cocktail, Brazilian cachaça or sugar cane rum is sometimes difficult to find outside of Brazil. But in São Paulo, bottles are on sale in any corner shop at a reasonable price. The Cachaçaria Paulista, however, is a bar and shop for connoisseurs, selling more than 300 different cachaças, the best of which are said to be from Minas Gerais.

Very fine coffee beans and grounds can be bought here. Santo Grão in Jardins and boutiques in the various malls have shops selling gourmet and quality blends. Some of the very best are to be found in the shop of the Museu do Café in Santos (see p168).

Brazilian music CDs

BOOKS & MAGAZINES

Large bookshops can be found in the malls and are usually well-stocked with English language novels. The greatest variety is to be found in FNAC, Saraiva, and Livraria Cultura. The bookshops attached to the MASP and MAM galleries are well worth a browse. Brazilian art books are of a very high international standard and much of the material, including reproductions of European art kept in Brazil, can only be found here. Particularly interesting are the gorgeous photographic books. Brazilian art and social photography is excellent and well-represented in the gallery souvenir shops.

Overpriced international papers and magazines can also be bought at the larger bookshops. There are no English language publications in Brazil. Portuguese readers will find newsstands or bancas dotted throughout the city with a bewildering variety of glossy reading material to choose from.

Household knick-knacks on display at Jacaré do Brasil

ARTS, CRAFTS & DESIGN

Although arts and crafts are best bought regionally, particularly in centers such as Manaus, Palmas, or Caruaru, there are a few specialist shops in São Paulo. The Casa das Culturas Indígenas sells indigenous jewelry and household goods. Jacaré do Brasil stocks indigenous and regional items from household decoration to textiles.

Paulistanos adore decor. Etel Interiores has exquisite top-end home furnishings from furniture to small decorative items. The most interesting pieces are made from sustainable materials in Acre in the Brazilian Amazon. Firma Casa stocks the best of Brazil's furniture makers.

SHOPPING MALLS

There are shopping malls throughout the city, many of which stock similar items and brands, making it difficult to choose between them. The best design names are to be found in South America's oldest mall, Iguatemi, which still looks as if it was built yesterday. Shopping Ibirapuera has the most shops and perhaps the greatest middle-brow choice.

São Paulo has only one department store, Daslu, but it is internationally famous and attracts elite and wealthy clients from around the continent. Many international and Brazilian big design names are sold here, together with Daslu's own brand.

ENTERTAINMENT IN SÃO PAULO

São Paulo has an incredible nightlife with a bewildering choice of activities on offer. Live music, in diverse styles, is performed every night by the most distinguished artists from the country. Brazil's finest orchestra, theater, and concert halls are also located in São Paulo. The city boasts myriad dance clubs offering samba, forró, and a dozen other traditional styles, alongside ubiquitous international club music, often with a Brazilian twist. A wide range of films can be viewed as well, with arthouse theaters showing the latest blockbusters from Europe, Latin America, or Asia and state-of-the-art multiplexes offering popular national cinema. A progressive city, São Paulo has the largest Gay Pride parade in the world, which takes place in June. Children are welcome everywhere – even in bars and restaurants, and the largest theme park in South America, Playcenter, lies on the city's doorstep.

GUIDES & LISTINGS

The Tourist Information Desk at Guarulhos International Airport offers information in English about what's on in the city. The Friday edition of the Folha de São Paulo and Estado do São Paulo newspapers and Veja magazine's cultural insert, Veijinha, have comprehensive listings in Portuguese.

The central ticket-selling office in São Paulo is Ticketmaster, which sells tickets through the Saraiva and FNAC bookshops (see p151).

LIVE MUSIC

A plethora of small venues in the bairros of Vila Madalena, Pinheiros, and Vila Olímpia play host to all manner of live acts. Almost all have a small restaurant area, a dance floor, and a sitting area. All have bars and serve beer and excellent cocktails. Musical performances may vary from week to week – from samba to Brazilian funk, bossa nova, or the latest post-mangue beat sounds from the state of Pernambuco. The best venues include A Marcenaria and the Bourbon Street Music Club, featuring jazz and Dixieland.

More popular performers, such as João Bosco or Otto, play in the SESCs – cultural centers with excellent concert halls. The best are in Vila Mariana and Pompéia. Legendary singers such as Milton Nascimento and Caetano Veloso play in numerous concert halls such as the Via Funchal. The most popular national and international groups, such as Ivete Sangalo and U2, play in the Pacaembu stadium.

CLASSICAL MUSIC & DANCE

Brazil's most reputable orchestra, the São Paulo State Symphony Orchestra, has its home in Latin America's best 1,500-seat concert hall, the Sala São Paulo. The acoustics here are almost perfect. The Sala São Paulo regularly advertises its upcoming programs on its website. The city's other key music venue for opera and classical concerts is the distinguished Theatro Municipal. The Theatro Alfa specializes in ballet.

DANCE BARS & CLUBS

Dance bars and clubs are concentrated in two areas of the city – Vila Madalena and Pinheiros, southwest of the center, and the contiguous bairros of Vila Olímpia, Itaim, and Moema in the south. The former is more lively, with live forró and samba bands playing to bars filled with university students. The Bambú and the Canto da Ema are always packed at weekends. Vila Olímpia, Itaim, and Moema are generally livelier neighborhoods and are home to the bulk of clubs which host big name DJs, such as Marky and Patiffe, and play techno and trance music. The Consolação area is very popular for nightlife and has numerous trendy venues, including Sonique, Volt, and Z. Carniceria.

CINEMA & THEATER

The city has some 250 cinema houses and hosts several important film festivals. Almost all the shopping malls have large multiplexes showing not only the latest films from Hollywood but also national releases. There are more than 20 arthouse cinemas, including the Cine SESC and the Cine Bombril off Avenida Paulista. Non-Portuguese films are subtitled rather than dubbed.

São Paulo has more than 100 theaters with shows almost exclusively in Portuguese. Most of the theaters are found in Bela Vista and Bixiga. The Cultura Inglesa features English language films and shows.

CHILDREN

São Paulo's urban environment makes outdoor attractions for children few and far between, although there are some popular amusement and theme parks scattered across the city. However, the biggest attraction, the largest theme park in Latin America, the Playcenter, is 50 miles (80 km) from the city. The city also boasts the Fundação Parque Zoológico de São Paulo (São Paulo Zoo), set in a state preserve of coastal rainforest.

SOCCER

Soccer is an obsession in São Paulo, as it is throughout the country, and the city has the most prestigious soccer teams in Brazil. There are three First Division teams based in São Paulo who play in the impressive Morumbi and Pacaembu stadiums. Estádio Morumbi is the home ground of São Paulo Futebol Clube. Matches are generally held on Wednesday and at the weekend. To watch a game check the schedules in ticket offices.

SÃO PAULO STREET FINDER

Map references given in this guide for entertainment venues, shopping areas, and other attractions in São Paulo City refer to the Street Finder maps on the following pages. Map references are also provided for São Paulo City restaurants (see pp399–401) and hotels (see p374). The first figure in the map reference indicates which Street Finder map to turn to, and the letter and number that follow refer to the grid reference on that map. The map below shows the different areas of São Paulo City – Centro, Bela Vista, Jardins, and Jardim Paulista – covered by the five Street Finder maps. Symbols used for sights and useful information are displayed in the key below. An index of street names and important places of interest marked on the maps can be found on page 136.

STREETWISE IN SÃO PAULO

São Paulo has one of the highest crime rates of any city in the world. However, most of the violence is restricted to the isolated areas dominated by the favelas (shanty-towns), which lie on the periphery of the city far from the upmarket areas more frequented by visitors. Though you are unlikely to meet with serious trouble in São Paulo, it is important nonetheless to take all adequate precautions. Visitors are required to carry their identification documents at all times.

Visitors must exercise greater caution while traveling in certain parts of the city, including the district of Luz, areas around the city's main train station, Praça da Sé, Praça da República, and Praça Roosevelt. Be careful in the city center late at night, as well as in the cheap accommodation area around Rua Santa Efigênia.

Cameras, credit cards, and cash should be kept out of sight, preferably in a money belt, with a few notes left in a pocket or handbag. It is wise to withdraw cash only during the day and use ATMs that are within the bank premises rather than in a crowded street.

The metro is safe for commuting during the day, but it is recommended to use taxis after dark. These can be booked through a hotel or rented at one of the many taxi stands.

Driving and navigation in São Paulo is difficult. Carjacking and red-light robberies are common after dark. The new traffic law allows drivers to slow down at red lights and continue driving without stopping if there is little or no traffic on the roads.

If held up or driven at gunpoint to an ATM machine, avoid any provocation that could prove fatal.

There have been many incidents in recent years of organized violence by the PCC (Primeiro Comando da Capital) against public servants and police. In the unlikely event of PCC activity, it is advisable to stay in your hotel.

SÃO PAULO STATE

São Paulo is famous for its beaches, pristine island resorts, spectacular surf, and majestic rainforests. Divided into Litoral Norte and Litoral Sul, the state's coastline is one of the most incredible in the southern half of Brazil. São Paulo's agricultural hinterland is the reason it is Brazil's economic powerhouse. It is also home to a diverse range of immigrant communities.

The colony of Brazil was officially established in São Vicente (present-day Santos) in 1532 by Martim Afonso de Souza. The handful of sailors that remained formally named the beach São Vicente, and as pioneers, had to fend for themselves in a new land, coping with assaults launched by the local Tamoio Indians. Settlements followed shortly after in nearby Santos and in São Sebastião, opposite the island of Ilhabela, now a beautiful resort. All towns in the region preserve interesting sights and legacies dating from their early colonial days.

Most visitors, however, come to the São Paulo coast not for history but for sand, surf, and rainforest. Ilhabela, Brazil's largest tropical island, Ubatuba, whose 70 beaches stretch to the state's far north, and Guarujá, similar to Copacabana in Rio City, with similar amounts of high-rise buildings facing the ocean, are the most popular destinations. All three have beaches that have consistently been rated among the nation's top ten by the country's tourist magazines. Puma and ocelot still hunt in the wild Atlantic mountain forests which lie only a short distance behind them.

The full majesty of the Atlantic coastal forest, the Mata Atlântica, unfolds around Estação Ecológica Juréia-Itatins, and Cananéia in the Litoral Sul. Lush ridges, waterfalls, and abundant plant life are its main attractions. The forest is also home to a wide array of animals, birds, and brilliantly colored butterflies. One of the loveliest spots is Ilha do Cardoso, a boat-ride from Cananéia, where caimans can be seen basking in the sun on the beaches.

Exploring São Paulo State

The São Paulo coast is divided into the Litoral Norte, which stretches towards Rio in the northeast from the port city of Santos, and the Litoral Sul, which stretches from Santos towards Paraná state. The Litoral Norte is one of the most heavily visited coastlines in southeastern Brazil. Beaches on the Ilhabela, Brazil's largest tropical island, and the resort of Ubatuba, are magnificently backed by towering spurs swathed in tropical rainforest. The sands of the Litoral Sul are darker and siltier than those of the Litoral Norte. Around Cananéia and Juréia, and stretching into Paraná, are the largest tracts of lowland coastal forest outside the Amazon. The beautiful beaches of the Ilha do Cardoso are just a boat ride away from Cananéia.

GETTING AROUND

There are two large airports – international and domestic – in São Paulo City. Regular bus services ply between São Paulo City and the major towns on the coast, but reaching the best of the beaches requires a car. The main routes to the coast are the Anchieta and Imigrantes highways between São Paulo City and Santos. From Santos, the route north follows the Rio-Santos (SP-055), which passes through all the major beach towns and heads into Rio de Janeiro state. The Litoral Sul can be reached by SP-055, which reaches only as far as the northern part of Juréia State Park. Towns farther to the south can be reached off highway BR-116.

Lying at the northern extreme of São Paulo state and sitting at the feet of the Serra do Mar mountain range, Ubatuba is a little beach resort with a small colonial center lined with terraced houses. Glorious beaches surround the resort.

The most popular beaches, especially those south of the town center such as Praia Grande, have an excellent infrastructure, including play areas for children. Buses running along the coastal road pass other nearby beaches, such as Enseada, Piçinguaba, and Flamengo. Even in high season it is easy to find a quiet stretch of sand or lonely cove tucked away along the coast to the south of Ubatuba.

The Aquário de Ubatuba in the center of the town contains some of the largest tanks and most diverse range of tropical marine life in all of Brazil. The office of the Projeto Tamar, a Brazil-wide organization that monitors and preserves turtle nesting beaches, is also located in town. Visitors are permitted to witness turtle hatchings under supervision.

The Serra do Mar rises in a vertiginous green wall only a short distance north of Ubatuba and an easy drive away from the town. Carpeted in thick primary forest, the Serra is home to many endangered endemic species. Birdlife, too, is prolific in this picturesque mountainous area.

Environs

The twin beaches of Domingas Dias and Lazaro, whose crystal-white sands curve gently on either side of a forest-clad promontory, are located 11 miles (18 km) south of Ubatuba. The Península da Ponta da Fortaleza lies just south of Domingas Dias and is fringed with dozens of quiet beaches, including Praia Vermelha do Sul. Surfers head to Praia Vermelha do Norte, just north of Ubatuba, which has the best waves on the Litoral Norte.

São Sebastião was founded in the early 17th century, when Brazil's coastline was cloaked in a forest larger than the Amazon. North of Guanabara Bay was Tamoio indigenous country, and São Sebastião became the northernmost Portuguese outpost for the indigenous slave trade. As it grew, the city became one of the country's first sugar growing centers and the thirst for slave labor became unquenchable. The city was also among the first to receive Africans in the slave trade.

Although most people who come to São Sebastião do so merely to pass through on their way to Ilhabela, the town has a colonial center of historical importance which merits at least a couple of hours' leisurely stroll before departing.

São Sebastião's colonial streets lie in the few blocks between the shoreline and the Praça Major João Fernandes at the heart of the city, easily recognizable by the imposing 17th-century church, the Igreja Matriz, which watches over it. This is largely a 19th-century reconstruction devoid of much of its original church art. However, the refurbished Museu de Arte Sacra housed in the 17th-century chapel of São Gonçalo, a block to the south of the church, preserves a number of beautiful, delicate images of Christ. Dating from the 16th century, these images were found within cavities in the wall of the Igreja Matriz during its restoration in 2003.

There are also a few streets lined with Portuguese houses and a number of civic buildings, the most impressive of which is the Casa Esperança on the waterfront. Built from stone and wattle and daub congealed with whale oil, the exterior is whitewashed with lime made from thousands of crushed shells. The Casa contains some faded but original 17th-century ceiling paintings and statuary.

One of Brazil's largest islands, Ilhabela rises steeply out of the Atlantic, a short distance offshore from São Sebastião. With a coastline sculpted by dozens of bays and beaches, it is covered in rainforest, much of it cut by fast-flowing mountain streams. Visitors from São Paulo throng here during weekends, but during the week (outside of holiday season), the island is all but deserted. Much of the forest is protected as part of the Parque Estadual de Ilhabela and there is plenty of wildlife, including ocelots and several species of primates. Biting flies, or borrachudos, on the island make insect repellent essential.

Ilhabela has just two roads. One is paved and runs the entire length of the western, leeward coast. Most of the numerous pousadas and guesthouses lie here, as do the villages of Perequê (where the ferry arrives), Borrifos, São Pedro, and Vila Ilhabela. The latter has a few colonial remains. Rusting 18th-century cannons adorn its waterfront and there is a little avenue of Portuguese buildings, including a 16th-century church, the Matriz de Nossa Senhora d'Ajuda.

The island's other road is a dirt track, usable only by four-wheel drives, which cuts across the interior from Perequê into the park and to the windward beaches. The most spectacular of these is the Baía de Castelhanos, a perfect half-moon of sand backed by rainforest covered slopes. The island's longest beach, and the best for surfing, is Bonete which is 9 miles (15 km) south from Borrifos village, along a rough forest trail.

Ilhabela's forests are dripping with waterfalls, but many are either completely inaccessible or reachable only by trail. A short distance inland from Perequê beach, Cachoeira da Toca waterfalls plunge in a series of little cascades into swimming pools, replete with water slides.

Cachoeira da Água Branca is larger with more swimming pools. It is an hour's walk along a trail which begins at the entrance to the state park, a short distance beyond the turn-off to Cachoeira da Toca.

Numerous shipwrecks off Ilhabela also make it a popular scuba diving destination, despite the murky water.

South of São Sebastião lie a number of beautiful beach resorts. Maresias, the liveliest of the lot, is busy with young, hip Paulistanos at weekends and holidays. Praia de Maresias is famous for its powerful surf, which has been the site for many international surfing competitions. Toque Toque Grande and Toque Toque Pequeno, 6 miles (9 km) southeast, are smaller, quieter beaches, sheltered by rainforest-covered spurs. There are plenty of pousadas and restaurants on, or just off, the São Sebastião road, which runs along the coast.

When Santos was founded in 1535, it was one of Portugal's first New World settlements. Since the mid-16th century, when neighboring São Vicente was established, Santos had been a port. First it dealt with sugar, and then with African slaves. However, it grew rich on coffee, which was brought out of the mountains on Brazil's first trains, built by the British in the late 19th century.

Unlike São Vicente, Santos has preserved vestiges of its historical legacy, and under recent enlightened municipal governance, is reinventing and refurbishing itself. Once decrepit, the city center is undergoing a spruce-up and is now very attractive. Scottish trams in British racing green run through its streets, taking visitors on a whistle-stop tour of the various attractions. The city center is also small enough to stroll around and have a closer look at these sights on foot.

The jewel in the city's crown is the Art Nouveau Bolsa e

Museu do Café. Its modest Victorian exterior hides an opulent marble-floored turn-of-the-19th-century stock exchange and museum, together with a café shop serving excellent coffee and desserts.

The Bolsa was once open only to wealthy (and exclusively male) coffee barons who traded here. When it was built, coffee was the most important and coveted commodity in Brazil.

Scottish tram

The auction room is crowned by a magnificent stained-glass skylight, with an arresting representation of Brazil, the Mãe Douro; crowned with a star and rising from flames in a landscape thick with tropical animals and startled-looking indigenous people. The skylight and the beautiful Neo-Renaissance painting of Santos that adorns the walls of the stock exchange are by Brazil's most celebrated mid-19th-century artist, Benedito Calixto (see p30).

A number of Calixto's paintings are displayed in the Fundação Pinacoteca Benedito Calixto, which is housed in one of the few remaining coffee baron mansions. The landscapes shown here give an idea of the city's once breathtaking natural beauty.

Santos has a handful of interesting churches, but the only one open to the public is the Santuário Santo Antônio do Valongo. The church's mock-Baroque interior dates from the 1930s. The fine original 17th-century altarpiece remains preserved in the Franciscan chapel to the left of the main entrance. The statue of Christ is particularly striking. Next door to the church is the British-built terminus of the now defunct Santos-São Paulo railway. Built between 1860 and 1867, the station is vaguely reminiscent of London's Victoria.

The once-filthy city beaches are now much cleaner and are lively with bustling bazaars, and people playing volleyball and football, every evening and weekend.

FOOTBALL LEGEND PELÉ

Pelé during Champions World Series 2003, New York

Regarded as the world's most famous sportsman, Pelé was born in Três Corações, Minas Gerais. He started his career in Santos when, in 1956, the Santos Futebol Clube signed him. Soon, he was offered a place in the Brazilian national team, and went on to play in three of Brazil's five World Cup winning teams. Since his retirement in 1977, Pelé has worked as a charity patron Goodwill Ambassador for UNICEF. In 1992, he became the UN Ambassador for Ecology and Environment. In 1995, he was appointed Minister of Sports, a post he resigned after becoming caught up in one of the rumored, or real, corruption scandals that blight Brazilian politics.

A monument to the thousands of Japanese-Brazilians who arrived in São Paulo state in the early 20th century sits here, together with the small but popular Aquário de Santos. In addition to a stunning range of tropical marine life, it displays three of the five species of sea turtles found in Brazil. The beaches lying farther out in the Baía de Santos (Bay of All Saints) bustle with activity at the weekends.

For all its history, it is for football that Santos is most famous outside Brazil. Pelé played here for almost all his professional life. The Santos Football Club has an excellent museum, the Memorial das Conquistas, devoted to the club's illustrious history.

JAPANESE IMMIGRATION

Brazil has the largest number of ethnic Japanese outside Japan, and almost all their ancestors arrived at Santos. Immigration began in earnest after the Russo-Japanese War (1904–5). Although Japan emerged victorious, the penalty was high, leaving the poorer Japanese population with a bleak future. São Paulo seemed to offer hope, as the state was rich in coffee and workers were in short supply.

The first Japanese ship to land was the Kasato Maru, which brought 165 families to Santos on June 18, 1908. They left for the coffee plantations in the Mogiana region. By the beginning of World War II, almost 150,000 Japanese had arrived. After freeing themselves from their labor contracts, communities began to grow in metropolitan São Paulo (see p145) and other parts of Brazil.

The pleasant, laid-back port town of São Vicente is known more for its historical significance than the usual tourist attractions.

In 1532, Martim Afonso de Sousa established a small settlement on the eastern shores of South America. Thus Brazil was born, in the words of Afonso's brother, with "each man as lord of his own property, and private injuries redressed, and all the other benefits of a secure and sociable life." São Vicente is the scene of that noble beginning, though only a handful of relics belonging to that distinguished past can be found today.

First capital of the Captaincy of São Vicente, as São Paulo state was formerly known, São Vicente won the epithet of "Cellula Mater" (Mother Cell) for being Brazil's first organized town. The 18th-century Baroque parish church, the Igreja Matriz de São Vicente Mártir, is one of the very few historical buildings in the city to have survived the ravages of time. A tidal wave destroyed the first church, built close to this site by Martim Afonso shortly after his arrival. The second parish church was built inland on this present site. However, it fared no better, and was ransacked by pirates. The current building, standing on its ruins, is named in honor of the Spanish saint who is patron of the city.

Also in the city center are the remains of Martim Afonso's former home, and the first brick building in Brazil. These are housed inside the impressive late 19th-century Casa Martim Afonso, along with a few other interesting pieces of colonial bric-a-brac.

Brazil's coastal rainforest stretches in a series of rippling mountains and lowland forests cut by broad rivers, mangrove wetlands, and pristine beaches all the way through from Peruíbe in southern São Paulo state to Paranaguá in Paraná. The Estação Ecológica Juréia-Itatins sits at the northern end of this rainforest, protecting 316 sq miles (820 sq km) of Mata Atlântica.

Access to the ecological station is restricted to daytime visits only, and must be arranged through the park authorities in Iguape, just south of Juréia-Itatins. Only certain areas are open to the public, and most of these areas require prior permission before entering. Iguape is a good base for information on organized tours.

This is one of the most important breeding grounds for marine species in the southern Atlantic and the myriad forest types growing here protect one of the world's greatest diversities of vascular plant, vertebrate and invertebrate species. There is a unique range of birds, butterflies, and mammals. Many larger animals, such as jaguars and tapirs, which have all but disappeared from coastal Brazil, live in healthy numbers here.

Juréia itself protects a wide variety of habitats, as a result, the scenery is magnificent. Lush green forest swathes the high slopes of the Serra do Itatins in the eastern extremity of the park and continues all the way through to the lowland coastal areas, mixing with mangrove wetlands and perfuming the park's extensive beaches. These beautiful stretches of fine sand, many of which are cut by clear rivers or washed by waterfalls, are so deserted that caimans can occasionally be seen basking in the sun at dawn.

This pretty little colonial town sits in a pocket of the Brazilian coastal rainforest, the Complexo Estuarino Lagunar de Iguape-Cananéia-Paranaguá, in the midst of breathtaking scenery. The verdant Serra do Mar mountains rise up behind the town which is surrounded by pristine mangrove wetlands and lowland subtropical forest on all sides including the wilds of the Estação Ecológica Juréia-Itatins to the north. The Mirante do Morro do Espio is a lookout point with a fabulous view of the port and surrounding area.

Iguape was founded in 1538 by the Portuguese. No buildings remain from that time but the city center preserves the largest collection of post-17th-century colonial architecture in the state. Most are civic buildings and town houses painted in thick primary colors and clustered around Praça São Benedito, a sleepy central square watched over by a towering 18th-century basilica.

There are also two small museums in the city center. The Museu Histórico e Arqueológico is housed in a 17th-century building which was once the first gold foundry in Brazil. It showcases a mixed bag of historical material, from pre-Columbian remains found in nearby middens to artifacts from the slaving era, and early photographs. The Museu de Arte Sacra in the 18th-century Igreja do Rosário houses some 100 ecclesiastical objects, most of which date from the 18th and 19th centuries.

Environs

Just across the Rio Ribeira do Iguape estuary, east of the town center, are extensive stretches of fine white sand beaches which make up the island of Ilha Comprida. They are accessible by road, or a 5-mile (8-km) walk across the estuary and sand flats via the pedestrian bridge.

Boqueirão Norte, located immediately across the town, and Praia do Viareggio, 6 miles (10 km) south, are popular in high season and lined with holiday homes. Farther south still and reachable by dune buggy or by car is the far quieter Praia das Pedrinhas.

Cananéia is the farthest south of São Paulo's small colonial seaside towns, and like the others, it lies nestled at the feet of the Serra do Mar mountains overlooking stretches of mangrove and an open ocean dotted with forest-covered islands. Outside of the high season few visitors ever make it here and the town's crumbling colonial streets and fig tree-filled central square often have a sleepy feel to it.

The most compelling reason to come to Cananéia is to take a boat trip out to the beaches and islands; preferably with plenty of time to spare. Fishing boats and launches can be chartered from the docks in Cananéia to Ilha do Cardoso that lies in the Lagomar bay. Car and passenger rafts take 10 minutes to ferry across the estuary in front of the town to the southern reaches of the Ilha Comprida, east of Iguape, and do so several times per day. The beaches here lie a short distance beyond the island's ferry port along a sandy road, which is lined with a handful of tumble-down pousadas.

While in Cananéia, it is worth visiting the tiny town museum, Museu Municipal, which preserves bits of nautical miscellany. Pride of place among the exhibits goes to what is reputed to be the largest great white shark ever, weighing a hefty 7,716 lb (3,500 kg), now stuffed, painted, and hanging safely from the museum ceiling.

Just a two-hour boat ride south of Cananéia, Ilha do Cardoso, a rugged 37,000-acre (15,000-ha) island, rises dramatically out of the Atlantic Ocean. The island is primarily an ecological preserve which also has beautiful deserted beaches and walking trails. Together with Juréia-Itatins and Superagüi (see p339) across the border in Paraná, it forms the core protected area of the Brazilian coastal rainforest. Wetlands, mangroves, extensive beaches, coastal dunes and all of the numerous forest types associated with the Mata Atlântica are found here. Several species of turtle nest on the island, caimans live in the rivers and estuaries and jaguars and pumas still hunt in the forests that cover the upper reaches. The island is also rich in birdlife.

Pre-Columbian shell middens, or sambaquis, dot the park's beaches and six traditional caiçara fishing communities live within the park, preserving a semi-indigenous way of life which has so far largely resisted the pressures of urbanization. Caiçara tidal fish traps can be seen in the shallows of the various little rivers and bays, attesting to the strong indigenous heritage the communities preserve to this day. Many of the caiçaras act as guides and boatmen.

Northeast Brazil at a Glance

Comprising the nine states of Bahia, Sergipe, Alagoas, Pernambuco, Paraíba, Rio Grande do Norte, Ceará, Piauí, and Maranhão, the Northeast is truly a tropical paradise. Most of the states have three distinct areas – the fertile coastal strips with idyllic sand beaches giving way to the intermediate hilly areas with lush Atlantic rainforests, also home to a variety of fauna, and finally the vast semi-arid interiors. The beaches here range from the fascinating Canoa Quebrada beach in Ceará, to Genipabu and its sand dunes in Rio Grande do Norte, Porto de Galinhas in Pernambuco, and the Fernando de Noronha archipelago, among many others. The legacy of the Northeast's colonial history can still be seen in numerous, impressive historic monuments in Salvador, Olinda, and São Luís.

São Luís (see pp252–5), capital of Maranhão, was founded by the French. It is a town with a beautiful historic core, Centro Histórico, with cobble streets and 3,500 pastel-colored colonial buildings, which have been renovated. A UNESCO World Heritage Site, it is one of Brazil's finest examples of Portuguese architecture.

Lençóis (see p204), in Bahia, is the perfect starting point to explore the Chapada's caves and waterfalls, or to bike up the 3,937-ft (1,200-m) surrounding peaks. Miners flocked to this area during the gold and diamond rush.

FERNANDO DE NORONHA

Fernando de Noronha (see pp224–5), part of Pernambuco, comprises 21 islands. The warm, clear waters here offer Brazil's best scuba diving and snorkeling experience.

Natal (see p236), capital of Rio Grande do Norte, is a popular sunshine destination. The beaches around Natal, with huge moving dunes, shaped by the shifting wind, create fascinating landscapes of snowy white sand.

Salvador (see pp184–95), capital of Bahia, has beautifully restored complexes of Baroque churches and palaces, built during the 18th-century sugar boom. Its historic center is a UNESCO World Heritage Site, offers a unique glimpse into Brazil's history and is the crown jewel of Portuguese architecture.

Afro-Brazilian Culture

A direct legacy of three centuries of slavery, the presence of African culture in the Northeast makes the region distinctly different from the rest of Brazil. Throughout the slavery period in colonial Brazil, there was little or no sanction on miscegenation. Over the years, masters, slaves, former slaves, and their descendants integrated into the new society of Brazil, creating an interesting blend of cultures and bloodlines with Portuguese, Dutch, West African, and Indian elements. This has uniquely resulted in what is now called Afro-Brazilian culture, visible in the people, clothing, food (see pp178-9), religion, and music of the Northeast.

Colorful ribbons, bringing luck if tied around the wrist

MUSIC

Africans brought along their fine command of percussion. Bahia's characteristic brand of Afro-Brazilian music grew in many forms, with axé becoming the signature sound of Salvador's Carnival. In Pernambuco, as many as 13 distinct rhythms developed, including Recife's signature beat, frevó (see p217). During the 20th century, African music became part of the mainstream.

Samba won acceptance in the 1930s.

Pop star Carlinhos Brown is one of the traditional singers who have become world-famous with their percussion-heavy rhythms. This noted advocate of Afro-Brazilian culture hails from Bahia.

CAPOEIRA

A rhythmic, dance-like form of martial arts, capoeira was once practised only by slaves and former slaves. Over the years, it came to put less emphasis on fighting and more on the cooperative elements of dance and display, with rhythmic, graceful moves (see p199).

Traditional instruments used in capoeira mainly constitute berimbau, a single-stringed percussion instrument featuring a steel string and a hollowed-out gourd; atabaque, a large drum, and the pandeiro, which resembles a tambourine.

Capoeira was a way for the slaves to continue practising martial arts, with kicks disguised as fluid body movements. Increasingly popular, today it is taught and performed all over the region, and indeed the world.

RELIGION

Of West African origin, most of Brazil's original slave population believed in a pantheon of deities, or orixás (see p194). Each orixá was endowed with its own personality and unique powers, and was associated with a particular set of natural elements. The Portuguese, however, insisted that all new arrivals be forcibly converted to Catholicism. The struggle gave rise to Candomblé, a blending of Catholicism and the African beliefs (see p35).

Festive celebrations, such as the Lavagem do Bonfim (see p195), can be experienced in and around Salvador. The day is meant to honor Yemanjá, the Goddess of the Sea. The ceremonies blend Catholic-style processions with African beats and music.

ARTS & CRAFTS

Many of the Bahian arts and crafts are strongly influenced by Afro-Brazilian traditions. The Mercado Modelo (see p192) in Salvador is a good place for souvenirs. Look for berimbaus and percussion instruments, sometimes painted in bright colors, as well as masks and pottery.

Wooden masks are intricately carved and decorated with stones, shells, and beads. The northeastern masks are allegoric representations of the orixás.

Colorful figurines are produced by local artisans as part of the rich pottery tradition in the Northeast. Drawn from popular folklore, these figurines are sold throughout the region.

DRESS

The most striking sartorial examples of African influence are the Baianas, the women in turbans and long white dresses, often seen on the streets of Salvador selling acarajé (see p179). The ensemble is believed to be derived from the traditional dress of women in Nigeria. While their dresses are often similar, each Baiana wears a different set of jewelry to pay homage to her particular orixá (deity).

Colorful beads and trinkets can be bought from the Baianas. Every color is known to denote a specific orixá; the blue is for Oshun, while red represents Yansã.

A young Baiana can be seen in layers of starched lace skirts, a shoulder cloth, high turban, and yellow and white beads and accessories.

The Flavors of Northeast Brazil

Northeast Brazil has two distinct regional cuisines, a reflection of both culture and climate. The narrow, densely populated coast, rich in fresh fruit and sugar cane and bordered by a generous sea, is home to an African-descended population who flavor their food with coconut milk and red dendê (palm) oil. The interior, or sertão, is arid semi-desert, given over to cattle tended by the cowboy descendants of Portuguese immigrants. The interior cuisine consists of sober, simple dishes, whose staples include sun-dried meat, manioc (cassava) root, rice, and black beans.

Distinctive caju fruit of the cashew tree, showing the nut

COZINHA NORDESTINA

When Brazilians refer to cozinha nordestina (north-eastern food) they usually mean the dishes of the hot, dry hinterland. Fresh ingredients are few here, and refrigeration virtually non-existent. Ingredients include the more resilient vegetables such as beans, corn and, especially, manioc. Meat – beef or, just as often, goat – in the Northeast is usually either sun-dried (carne de sol) or air-dried and heavily salted (carne seca). Both are served in small portions, often shredded, and mixed in with either beans, rice, or manioc. Manioc, indeed, is a centerpiece of northeastern cooking. Sliced into strips and fried, the sweeter version of this versatile root is known as macaxeira. Plain ground manioc flour (farinha) is often served as a side dish; locals put it in their morning coffee. Pan-fried with a little oil, the manioc flour becomes another common side dish, farofa. Finally, the lighter parts of the manioc root are made into tapioca, the base ingredient of desserts and breakfast pancakes. Desserts in the Northeast are usually simple mixtures of sugar and tapioca or cornflour, often covered in condensed milk. Also popular are small and

REGIONAL DISHES & SPECIALTIES

Dendê oil

Bahian cuisine is the most popular and sophisticated in all of the Northeast. The cooking is characterized by the use of coconut milk, hot peppers, and, importantly, dendê oil, which gives the dishes their deep orange color. This oil is extracted from a palm tree that was brought to Brazil by African slaves.

Signature Bahian dishes include moqueca, vatapá, and bobô de camarão. All are variations on a tasty seafood stew. Traditionally, a moqueca is cooked in a large clay pot and served with white rice and a serving of pirão, a manioc paste. Both bobô de camarão and camarão na moranga (see p393) feature large, juicy prawns cooked in coconut milk. The camarão na moranga comes served in a hollowed-out pumpkin shell, its broth thickened with the addition of fresh, sweet pumpkin, locally called jerimum.

Bolinho de bacalhau is a Portuguese snack made from mashed potatoes and shredded salt cod.

Baiana woman in traditional all-white costume, selling acarajé intensely sweet portions of dried and concentrated fruits, such as caju (cashew), jaca (jackfruit), goiaba (guava), and banana, usually consumed together with a small, very sweet cup of coffee.

FISH & SEAFOOD

The long Atlantic coastline from Bahia to Maranhão yields a wealth of fish, shellfish, and crustaceans. Everywhere on the coast, the guaíamu, a small, blue-shelled crab with tasty meat, is usually steamed and served up as an appetizer. Larger, soft-shelled crabs are also popular, served steamed and eaten whole, including the shell. Another crustacean is the cavaquinho, a small lobster known for its sweet and tender meat, but the full-size south Atlantic lobster is also found to the north, around Ceará. Large and succulent shrimp are another regular menu item. However, the tastiest north-eastern shrimp, the pitú, is a freshwater variety. Spicy pitú moqueca is among the best featured on any menu.

Grated manioc root ready to be processed into tapioca

ACARAJÉ

Acarajé is one of the most popular snacks, especially in Bahia. Cooked only by Baianas, it was originally served as an offering to Yansã, the Goddess of Tempests. Balls of mashed black-eyed beans are fried in dendê oil, then cut open and served with dried shrimp, vatapá (shrimp paste), caruru (okra stew), and hot sauce. Abará is another kind of acarajé, steamed and served on a banana leaf with the same toppings.

ON THE MENU

Baião de dois Made with rice, beans, cheese, and garlic, this dish is often served with sun- or air-dried meat.

Caldo de sururu A rich broth made from tiny clams with coconut milk, dendê oil, coriander, and spices.

Carne de sol Goat meat or beef is sun-dried to seal in moisture. It may be served grilled or sautéed.

Casquinha de siri A savory appetizer of shredded crabmeat flavored with coriander, coconut milk, and spices.

Tapioca Small pancakes made with tapioca, served stuffed with sweet or savory fillings.

Xinxim de galinha Chicken sautéed in dendê oil with ginger, dried shrimp, and cashew nuts. Served with white rice and manioc flour.

Moqueca is a rich fish dish made with coconut milk, dendê oil, cayenne pepper, and coriander (cilantro).

Ensapado is a seafood and coconut milk stew made without dendê oil, making it lighter in flavor.

Cocada is a sweet made with sugar and coconut. The darker variety is sweetened with dried sugarcane juice.

BAHIA

The largest state in the Northeast, Bahia is known for its endless stretches of stunning beach along the Atlantic coast. The idyllic white-sand coast is dotted with laid-back resorts along its length. Beyond the gorgeous beaches and plains, where most of Bahia's population lives today, lies the sertão, an arid semi-desert covered in caatinga, small trees used for cattle grazing.

When the Portuguese first arrived in Bahia in 1500, the entire 621-mile (1,000-km) coastline was covered in a swathe of lush green Atlantic rainforest. Today, only a few pockets of the rainforest remain along the coast in isolated patches. Inland from the coast, the Portuguese successfully established the cultivation of sugar cane, and later cotton and cocoa in the Recôncavo, a narrow, flat, well-watered plain, which they called the agreste.

Bahia played a key role in the history of Brazil. Salvador, its capital, was founded in 1549, and served for over two centuries as the administrative and political center of colonial Brazil. The legacy of that period is on display in Salvador's colonial core, Pelourinho, a jewel of colonial Baroque churches, cathedrals, and palaces.

Bahia was also the key point of entry for the thousands of slaves brought to Brazil from ports in Africa. The legacy of that trans-Atlantic trade can be seen in Bahia's cultural diversity. The state has Brazil's highest percentage of Afro-Brazilian residents. Bahia's percussion-driven music, the fast fight-dance known as capoeira, and the spiritualist Yoruban Candomblé religion all have their roots in Africa.

In addition to these legacies, visitors to Bahia can experience one of Brazil's longest and most beautiful coastlines. Fine beach resorts such as Praia do Forte and Costa do Sauípe lie to the north of Salvador. To the capital's south, there are small villages such as Morro de São Paulo and Itacaré. Inland, Bahia provides unique hiking amid the mesas and valleys of the Chapada Diamantina.

Exploring Bahia

Living up to its official motto, Sorria, você está na Bahia (Smile, you're in Bahia), Bahia offers a diverse range of sights. The extensive coastline varies from fine Linha Verde resorts to sleepy villages with stunning unspoilt beaches such as Trancoso. Salvador and the historic towns of the Recôncavo provide fascinating glimpses into Brazil's history. The Chapada Diamantina is a highland region that resembles the mesas of Arizona and New Mexico in Southwest USA. Lençóis, founded during the area's 19th-century gold and diamond rush, boasts caverns, waterfalls, and some of Brazil's best hiking.

GETTING AROUND

Bahia is large, and the roads are mostly precarious. However, the Linha Verde (BA-099), which runs north along the coast from Salvador to the border with Sergipe, provides easy, quick access to the beach towns. Traveling south from Salvador, the BR-101 runs parallel to the coast, about 37 miles (60 km) inland. Access to beach towns on the southern coast is via secondary roads. The best way to get around is to fly to one of the major destinations, such as Salvador, Ilhéus, or Porto Seguro, and proceed by bus to explore the surrounding regions. The main destination inland, the Chapada Diamantina, is a drive from Salvador on the BR-324, BR-126, and BR-242 highways. Lençóis in the Chapada Diamantina can be reached by road and plane.

GETTING AROUND

Most of the attractions in Salvador are concentrated in Cidade Alta (Upper City), linked to the Cidade Baixa (Lower City) by a funicular railway and the Carlos Lacerda elevator. The historic neighborhood of Pelourinho is located downtown, on top of a bluff overlooking the harbor. The main sights outside Pelourinho are within walking distance of the bustling waterfront. Bus services easily connect to every part of the city. Travelers coming from the south can take BR-101 around the Baía de Todos os Santos and connect to the BR-324. Those arriving from the north can follow the BR-009, called the Linha Verde.

Detail on church façade

The crown jewel of Salvador is the restored historic center, Pelourinho, which means whipping post. This originally described only the small triangular plaza in the heart of the city where slaves were publicly flogged. Located on a high bluff overlooking the commercial city below, Pelourinho was built by the Portuguese in the boom years of the 18th and 19th centuries as a residential and administrative center. Abandoned for a greater part of the 20th century, Pelourinho was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1985. Today, visitors can explore its magnificent colonial houses, Baroque churches, and museums.

Although Brazilian author Jorge Amado (1912–2001) never lived in Pelourinho, many of his beloved novels were set in this neighborhood (see p200). Opened in 1987, the Casa de Jorge Amado is a small museum housed in a pretty blue colonial building located at the top end of Largo do Pelourinho. It is one of the main monuments dedicated to Bahia's most famous author. Its four floors comprise the entire archive of his work and include a research center.

The collection on display consists mostly of covers of his books and personal belongings that tell the story of his life. A mural on the ground floor shows the languages into which his works have been translated; over 60 in total.

Salvador's main cathedral, built between 1657 and 1672, is considered to be one of the richest examples of Portuguese Baroque architecture. The cathedral's façade is made of Portuguese litoz, a type of limestone. The interior walls and tall pillars are also covered with the pale-colored stone, giving the church a bright and spacious feel.

The vaulted ceiling of the main nave is made from wood. The decorations are carved in relief and stand out from the ceiling with an almost three-dimensional effect. The main altar and two smaller side altars are also carved out of wood and covered in gold leaf.

Dedicated to St. Francis, the altar contains a silver-plated statue of Nossa Senhora das Maravilhas (Our Lady of Miracles), which is said to have inspired Father Antônio Vieira, a 17th-century Jesuit priest who fought against the enslavement of indigenous people. His fiery, anti-slavery sermons did not sit well with the Inquisition, who subsequently ordered his arrest. The former Memorial das Baianas Praça da Cruz Caída. Tel (071) 3222 9674. ☐ 9am–7pm daily.

Pelourinho's Praça da Sé blends the modern with the historic. The square is a transition point between the Terreiro de Jesus and the Praça Tomé de Sousa. Renovations have added fountains and benches, so people can linger and enjoy the capoeira presentations or other cultural events often held in the square. There is a lookout point, the Belvedere, on the north side of the square which provides a beautiful view of the Lower City and the Baía de Todos os Santos (Bay of All Saints).

Just to the left and down a few steps from the Belvedere is the Memorial das Baianas, which pays homage to the women who have become such a symbol of Salvador. The memorial shows and explains the ceremonial clothing and accessories worn by Baianas (see p177), and often show-cases the works of modern Bahian artists. There are also photographs of famous Baianas from the past.

Palácio Rio Branco ⑧

Praça Tomé de Sousa s/n. Tel (071) 3116 6520. ☐ 9am–6pm Mon–Fri.

The original Palácio Rio Branco has nothing in common with the building that currently goes by that name. The first palace was built on this site in 1549 to house Bahia's first governor, Tomé de Sousa. The Portuguese queen and later the prince regent resided in this palace temporarily in 1808, when the entire Portuguese court relocated to Rio de Janeiro in order to escape Napoleon's invasion of Portugal (see p52). The building survived until 1900, when the whole structure was leveled and then rebuilt from scratch in Renaissance style.

A fire in 1912 forced another major overhaul, giving the building the eclectic look it still has today. Used as an official government building until 1979, the Palácio Rio Branco was rededicated in 1986 as a cultural foundation, the Centro Memoria da Bahia. The former reception hall on the ground floor now tells the history of Bahia's 40 governors through paintings, historic documents, and their personal belongings.

Built by merchant Antônio Francisco de Lacerda in 1873 from the original Jesuit-installed manual pulley, the famous Elevador Lacerda connects Salvador's Upper and Lower cities.

The Elevador Lacerda is a popular site in Salvador, used by more than 30,000 people daily. The elevator's current Art Deco look dates from a 1930s restoration. Four elevators make the 236-ft (72-m) trip up vertical shafts in just 30 seconds, where the view across the bay on a clear day is simply stunning.

Igreja e Convento de São Francisco ⑥

Statue of St. Francis

The complex of the Church and Convent of St. Francis is one of Brazil's most impressive Baroque monuments. The complex was constructed between 1708 and 1750. The convent's church stands out for its rich and opulent interior. The inner walls and the ceiling are largely covered in gold leaf. The main altar and the large side altars are magnificently carved out of wood and in typical Baroque style, ornately decorated with angels, birds, mermaids, fruits, and leaves. An enormous silver chandelier hangs above intricate wooden carvings, and hand-painted blue-and-white Portuguese tiles.

★ Franciscan Shield
Featuring the crossed forearms of Jesus and St. Francis, the shield represents the bond between the two.

São Pedro de Alcântara
The altar of São Pedro de Alcântara, carved by Brazilian artist Manuel Inácio da Costa, is a particularly fine example of Brazilian Baroque.

Façade
The church façade dominates the Largo de São Francisco with imposing twin bell towers.

Doors and windows in bright tones adorn the outer walls of the church.

Oil Painting of St. Francis
The oil painting depicting an event in the life of St. Francis in the church entryway is one of the classic examples of Brazilian Baroque Illusionism.

STAR SIGHTS

- ★ Azulejos

★ Main Altar

A statue of Jesus on the cross with St. Francis by his side graces the main altar. The blue-and-white tiles behind the main altar tell the life story of the saint. The gold-and-white motif is offset by dark jacaranda wood handrailings.

Detailing of pure gold leaf decorates the church interior.

Cloisters

These secluded interior arcades are where the monks of St. Francis would gather for prayer or quiet contemplation.

Black Saint, Saint Benedict

Two of the side altars are dedicated to black saints such as Santa Efigênia, an Ethiopian princess, and São Bento, the son of African slaves.

★ Azulejos

Brought over from Portugal in 1743, the decorative tiles are based on the etchings by Flemish painter Otto van Veen in his book of moral emblems.

IGREJA TERCEIRA ORDEM DE SÃO FRANCISCO

The ornately carved and detailed sandstone façade of the church of the Third Order of St. Francis next door is the only one of its kind in Brazil. The façade remained hidden for many years behind a layer of plaster, only to be uncovered accidentally when wiring was being installed in the 1930s. The church also has a museum and a room of Franciscan tombs.

The Mercado Modelo was built in 1861 as a customs building. The square behind the market, now used by capoeiristas (see p199), was where boats would dock to unload their merchandise for inspection. The building was transformed into an indoor craft market in 1971, and renovated after a major fire in 1984. Nowadays, the Mercado's two floors house 259 stalls that offer a variety of northeastern arts and crafts. Popular items include naive art paintings of Pelourinho, berimbaus (a stringed instrument), embroidered lace tablecloths, hammocks, colorful hats, spices, and sweets.

A renovated colonial sugar mill, the Solar do Unhão beautifully blends the old and the new. The original design is typical of the 17th century – a chapel, a big house with slave quarters on the lower floor, and a large mill where cane was transformed into sugar.

During the sugar boom of the 18th century, the owners added a courtyard fountain and a full-size church, Nossa Senhora da Coneição. After the sugar trade collapsed in the 19th century, the Solar was used variously as a factory, a warehouse, and naval barracks. Finally, in the 1940s it was designated a National Historic Monument and chosen as the site for the Museu de Arte Moderna. A series of renovations restored the buildings to their former glory, while upgrading the facilities to include eight exhibit rooms, a theater, and a library.

The complex also houses an excellent restaurant, besides displaying paintings, etchings, and sculptures by some of Brazil's best-known modern artists. In the evenings, it hosts a presentation of traditional Bahian dance and folklore, held in the former slave quarters.

One of Salvador's best-known landmarks, the Forte Santo Antônio was erected in 1535. The fort was strengthened in the early 17th century, in response to Dutch attacks on the coast, and upgraded to its present star shape at the beginning of the 18th century.

A lighthouse atop the fort was originally built in 1698, and is still used by boats navigating the entrance to the bay.

Inside the fort, the Museu Hidrográfico (Museum of Hydrography) shows historic navigation instruments and a variety of charts. There is also a notable collection of coins and China from a Portuguese galleon that founded in 1668, off Rio Vermelho beach.

The fort also boasts a café with an outdoor terrace offering sweeping views of Salvador's skyline.

CARNAVAL IN SALVADOR

Salvador's signature event, the Carnival is celebrated during February or March. The center-piece is the trio elétrico, a giant flatbed truck carrying a massive array of speakers, topped by a rectangular stage. The tradition was started in the 1950s with Dodó and Osmar, two local musicians who took their music to the street on top of a 1929 Ford. Running out from behind the trio elétrico truck, a large roped-off area serves as a movable dance floor. Access to this area is restricted to those in an abadá, or uniform-style tank top. Revelers outside the roped-off area are called pipoca, or popcorn, as they pop up everywhere.

Blocos parade along one of three routes – Pelourinho, mostly for smaller and more traditional groups, while Campo Grande runs through the narrow streets of downtown Salvador, and Ondina goes through the beachside neighborhoods of Barra and Ondina. Performers at the Carnival include major Brazilian artists such as Daniela Mercury, Caetano Veloso, Gilberto Gil, Carlinhos Brown, and popular groups such as Olodum, Ara Ketu, and Chiclete com Banana. In addition to these name-brand performers, there are Afro-Brazilian blocos such as Ilê Aye, which only allows people of black heritage in their parade. The queen of the Carnival is Ivete Sangalo, a noted exponent of axé, Bahia's unique rhythm that combines pop with samba and Afro-Brazilian beats.

The grand finale occurs in the wee hours of Ash Wednesday. All the various blocos make their way to Praça Castro Alves for the Encontro dos Trios, a last late-night jam that marks the closure of the Carnival.

Nosso Senhor do Bonfim (Our Lord of Good Success) stands atop a small hill on the Bonfim Peninsula, a strip of land jutting out into the Baía de Todos os Santos about 6 miles (10 km) north of Pelourinho. The church was built between 1746 and 1754 by Captain Rodrigues de Faria in fulfilment of a pledge he made in the midst of a fierce Atlantic storm. While the hilltop setting is picturesque, what sets the church apart is not its architecture but the role it plays in Bahia's Afro-Brazilian religion. The church is dedicated to God the Father, but it also honors

Oxalá, the supreme deity in the Candomblé religion (see p177).

On Fridays, worshippers dress in white and dedicate their prayers to Oxalá. On other days, in a small chapel just to the right of the main altar, one can visit the Sala dos Milagres (Chamber of Miracles). Believers come here to offer items made of wax, wood, or even gold. The item represents a miracle that has been bestowed upon them. The room is packed with replicas of hearts, lungs, livers, and breasts, as well as babies, houses, and even cars.

Outside, visitors are besieged with offers of fitas, little colored ribbons purchased as a good luck charm. The ribbon is meant to be tied around the wrist with three knots, and a wish is made for each knot. The ribbon is then worn until it falls off in order for the wishes to be granted.

Salvador's Atlantic Coast

The tip of Porto da Barra is the beginning of a string of ocean beaches. The best beaches for swimming and sunbathing are close to the southern edge of the city. The best beach close to the city center is Porto da Barra. Farther out, Amaralina's food stalls and acarajé (see p179) kiosks are popular on weekends. Itapoã is known for its calm waters and reefs that form natural pools at low tide.

Ondina's beautiful beach is lined with many of Salvador's biggest and best hotels that look out over the foamy waves.

Porto da Barra is the closest swimming beach to Salvador's historic center. The lighthouse here is a great place from which to watch a spectacular sunset over calm waters.

Rio Vermelho is the starting point of a procession honoring Yemanjá (see p41).

The impressive 16th-century Forte de São Felipe is located close to the church, in the neighborhood of Boa Viagem. Just below the fort is the popular beach, Praia de Boa Viagem, which is usually bustling with locals and lined with busy stalls selling a variety of trinkets and snacks on weekends.

LAVAGEM DO BONFIM

Salvador is home to some of the largest celebrations of the Candomblé religion. One event that occurs each year at the Nosso Senhor do Bonfim is the Lavagem do Bonfim (Washing Ceremony), which takes place on the third Thursday of January. A procession of thousands of devotees makes its way from Salvador city center to the church. Once the procession has reached the church, women in traditional white lace dresses wash the church steps with perfumed water in honor of Oxalá. The tradition is said to stem from the days when the slaves were not allowed inside the church and had to worship outside. The Catholic church does not entirely approve of the ceremony, and keeps its doors shut throughout the festival.

Amaralina, subject to large waves and strong winds, is an excellent beach for surfing and boardsailing. Baianas dressed in traditional garb sell acarajé at the numerous kiosks lining the shore.

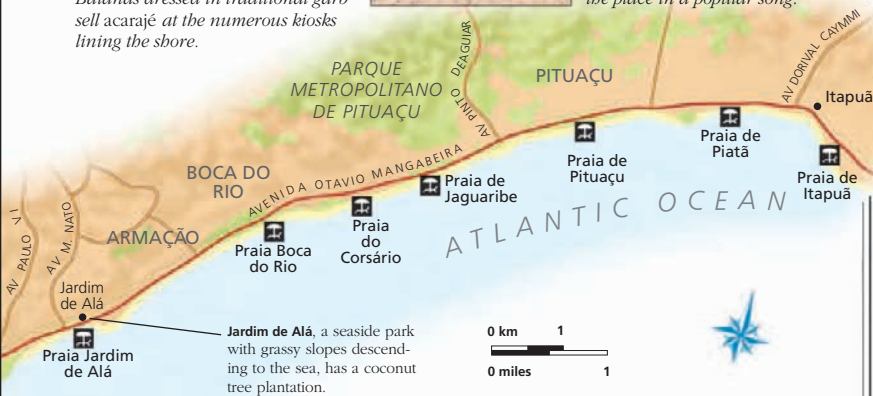

Itapuã features turquoise waters and reefs teeming with marine life. Poet and lyricist Vinícius de Moraes (see p31) immortalized the place in a popular song.

Zimbo Tropical, (071) 638 1148.

The largest island in the Baía de Todos os Santos (Bay of All Saints), with summer-houses lining its shore, Itaparica is a popular weekend refuge for the residents of Salvador.

Located on the northern tip of the island, the main city is guarded by the Forte de São Lourenço, which was built by the Dutch in 1711. Among the island's main attractions are some historic buildings, including the 1622 Nossa Senhora da Piedade (Chapel of Our Lady of Piety) and the 1610 Igreja de São Lourenço.

The island is connected to the mainland by a bridge at its narrow southern tip. The Praia da Penha, 10 miles (6 km) south, is a lovely beach with views of Salvador. The region's biggest resort, Club Med, lies on the Praia da Conceição, 12 miles (19 km) south of town.

Santo Amaro 3

60,000. from Salvador.
Bembé do Mercado (May 13–18).

The laid-back town of Santo Amaro lies in the Recôncavo, the fertile zone at the top end of the Baía de Todos os Santos, which has formed the backbone of Salvador's colonial economy for almost 300 years. The region's high humidity, abundant rainfall, and rich soils were conducive to growing tobacco, and more significantly, sugar cane. Until the crash of the sugar economy in the 19th century, Santo Amaro remained the focus of Recôncavo's sugar industry. Dilapidated mansions of the erstwhile sugar barons can still be seen along the old streets. Nowadays, this unpretentious town is known for its paper industry. It is also famous as the home town of Caetano Veloso and Maria Bethânia, two of Brazil's most popular singers.

Many of the slaves, who were brought from Africa to work on plantations, remained in the Recôncavo after slavery was abolished in 1888. The region still has a very high percentage of Afro-Brazilian residents, and Santo Amaro plays a key role in preserving their distinct traditions. Every year, the city commemorates the abolition of slavery with a five-day festival of the Bembé do Mercado. During this time, offerings are made to Yemanjá, Goddess of the Sea, to celebrate freedom of religion. In the main square in front of the town market, local groups put on capoeira performances. Theater performances of pieces, such as Nego Fugido (Runaway Slave), recount the story of slaves fleeing their masters to join quilombos, independent communities set up by runaway slaves.

In an effort to keep folkloric traditions alive, the Afro-Brazilian community also organizes presentations of the lesser-known maculelê sword dance, an African fight-dance, and samba de roda dances performed by women.

30,000. Praça da Aclamação 4. Festa da Boa Morte (Aug 13–15).

Historically more powerful than the other two main towns in the Recôncavo – Santo Amaro and São Félix – Cachoeira was also the most prominent. Its strategic location, between the Baía de Todos os Santos and the roads leading inland, made it an important crossroads between Salvador and the rest of the state.

The city once had a busy river port on the Paraguaçu. Boats sailed upstream from Salvador to load up with sugar and tobacco produced in the Recôncavo region. The town's privileged position as a commercial center is reflected in its imposing colonial architecture. However, with the creation of road access to Salvador, Cachoeira lost its key position and its port gradually faded away.

In the old city center, many of the city's churches and wealthy merchants' houses are still standing, although in a dilapidated condition. The city has, however, begun to renovate and preserve its historic center. As a cultural hub of the Recôncavo region, Cachoeira celebrates the Festa da Boa Morte, one of the most important features of the Candomblé religion. Today, the city is as much celebrated for its robust wood-sculpting tradition, as its production of the best tobacco in Brazil.

São Félix 5

 from Cachoeira.

Regarded as the twin of Cachoeira, São Félix lies just across the Rio Paraguaçu, on a hillside overlooking the river. The railway bridge connecting the two towns was commissioned by Dom Pedro II, and built by British engineers in 1895. Cars, trains, and foot traffic all share the rickety railway bridge. Several times a day, São Félix comes to a standstill as freight trains roll right through the town center.

Coronas cigar box, São Félix

Larger in size, though not as impressive as Cachoeira, São Félix used to earn a living in its own right as a producer of fine charutos (cigars).

The heart of this industry was the Dannemann cigar factory, founded in 1873 by German cigar-maker, Gerhard Dannemann. Blessed by optimum conditions for growing and processing tobacco, the Dannemann factory quickly became one of the region's finest cigar producers. The region still produces Dannemann cigars, but the original factory has now been converted into a cultural center, known as the Centro Cultural Dannemann.

A small exhibit of old machinery tells the story of the early factory days. On weekdays, it is possible to watch the factory workers rolling cigars.

Members of the Sisterhood of the Good Death in festive regalia

FESTA DA BOA MORTE

Celebrated from August 13 to 15, the Festa da Boa Morte (Festival of the Good Death) is one of the most important events of Candomblé (see p35), a blend of African spirituality and Catholicism. The ceremonies are held by members of the Sisterhood of the Good Death, a religious and self-help organization composed entirely of women of African descent. The festival honors both the iyás (female spirits of the dead), and the Assumption of the Virgin Mary. A Catholic mass is followed by a large procession through the historic streets of Cachoeira. The women come dressed in multilayered lace skirts and blouses, white turbans, and traditional accessories in honor of various orixás (deities). At the head of the procession, they carry a statue of the Virgin Mary. At the end, the women prepare an all-white meal of rice, fish, potatoes, onions, and other white-colored foods. Samba de Roda, a dance based on the African circle dances, marks the end of the ceremonies. Women take turns dancing in the circle to the pounding rhythm of the drums. Onlookers may also be called on to dance.

Although within easy reach of Salvador, the coast immediately south of the state capital does not have many large, developed tourist destinations, apart from Morro de São Paulo. Now a picturesque beach destination, Morro de São Paulo, on the northern tip of Ilha da Tinharé, once played a key role in the coastal defences of Bahia. In 1630, Governor General Diego Luiz de Oliveira ordered Fortaleza do Tapirando to be strategically built here where it could control the Itaparica channel, one of the main approaches to Salvador. The ruins of the fort have been designated a National Heritage Site. The view of the sunset from the fort's crumbling walls is spectacular, and dolphin sightings are quite common.

Still accessible only by boat or plane, Morro maintains much of its original charm. No cars are allowed in the village. Lined with pousadas, boutiques, and restaurants, the "streets" are made of sand, and wheelbarrows and bicycles are the primary means of transportation. In the evenings, the village square transforms into a craft market, the small stands often lit only by candlelight, making for a very cozy atmosphere.

Morro's beaches are famous in Brazil for their parties. During high season, there are parties every night and the beaches are packed. Most nights start around midnight, when Primeira beach fills with locals and visitors, who dance axé and drink fruity cocktails. As you move away from the village, the beaches get wider and less developed. Segunda and Terceira beaches feature progressively more scattered pousadas. From Quarta beach onwards, the coast remains blissfully undeveloped, offering long stretches of white sand backed by waving groves of coconut palms.

Environs

Just south of Morro, Ilha de Boipeba offers a quiet, idyllic island getaway, with pristine, deserted beaches. Ponta de Castelhanos is especially known for diving. Travelers can get here via boat from Morro de São Paulo. Visitors coming from Salvador can access Boipeba by road, heading down the BA-001.

www.barragrande.net

The main destination at the northern tip of the Peninsula de Maraú is Barra Grande, a delightful, remote fishing village. Beautiful beaches are scattered along the entire length of the peninsula, but it is difficult to get around without a car. Four wheel drives ferry passengers from pousadas to various beaches around the peninsula. Alternatively, the 31-mile (50-km) walk across various palm-fringed beaches along the coastline is spectacular.

Most of the peninsula is covered in native Mata Atlântica rainforest, which has been relatively well preserved. The Baía de Camamu, one of Brazil's largest bays, separates the peninsula from the mainland. The long dirt road heading down the peninsula (often impassable after rains) leads to some of the best beaches facing the open ocean. Praia Taipús de Fora, 4 miles (7 km) south of Barra Grande, is considered one of Brazil's most beautiful beaches. At low tide, the coral reefs form a clear, natural pool, perfect for snorkeling and swimming.

There are also a handful of small fishing villages scattered along the coast. Local fishermen offer excursions to Lagoa Azul (Blue Lagoon), scenic view points, bay islands, and down the Rio Maraú.

Capoeira

Bahia, the birthplace of capoeira, offers visitors plenty of opportunities to see this dazzling and mesmerizing mixture of dance, gymnastics, and martial arts. Capoeira was developed by African slaves within Brazil as a form of self-defense against their brutal slave masters. The music was added as a disguise. Many slaves successfully escaped and formed communities in the interior called Quilombos (see p215). Outlawed in 1890 and forced underground, the sport made a slow comeback over the next few decades as white Brazilians began to accept and celebrate the African aspects of Brazil's culture. Capoeira was fully rehabilitated in the 1930s, when President Vargas, calling it "the only true Brazilian sport," invited one of the most renowned capoeiristas of the day, Mestre Bimba, to perform in the presidential palace. Today, Mestre Bimba's school in Pelourinho is run by his son, Mestre Nenel.

A berimbau

Berimbau, a single-string instrument that produces a metallic droning sound, sets the capoeira beat.

African drums are the additional instruments used in capoeira.

The roda, or the circle in which capoeira is always performed, is created by participants who sit or stand and clap to the beat of a single-stringed berimbau. The people who form the roda will take turns, usually with no predefined order, to go inside the circle and participate.

CAPOEIRA MOVES

Capoeiristas exhibit incredible muscle control, strength, and flexibility as they carry out acrobatic moves, while keeping their opponent at bay. The capoeira moves are carried out at lightning speed, but with a dance-like fluidity, where each move is a combination of skill, balance, and beauty.

Escorpião, or the scorpion move, is a combination of back flips and cartwheels. Both opponents try to create a beautiful performance.

Au malandro starts like a cartwheel, but only one hand goes down while the opposite leg kicks up in the air in a swift, fluid move.

The esquiva (escape), a low ducking move, is a very common one since capoeiristas primarily attack with kicks and sweeps.

The small fishing town of Itacaré is part of Brazil's famous Discovery Coast. Portuguese explorer Pedro Álvares Cabral (see p48), who was the first European to officially "discover" Brazil, landed in Porto Seguro, close to Itacaré, in 1500.

Large areas of protected Atlantic rainforest, which were given World Heritage status by UNESCO in 1999, meet the sea along the coast of Itacaré. Relatively isolated, the town is favored by nature lovers. Itacaré is also known for its relaxed lifestyle and typical Afro-Brazilian culture.

The beaches have enormous waves, making it a popular surfing destination. Most are surrounded by lush forest and can only be accessed on foot.

Prainha, Itacaré's main attraction, is considered to be one of Brazil's most beautiful beaches, and is accessible only by a trail through the rainforest from Ribeira beach, just south of town.

Environs

Known as the Estrada Parque (the Park Drive), the road that connects Itacaré to Ilhéus traverses a well-preserved strand of Atlantic rainforest. Care has been taken not to disrupt the ecosystem and to protect animals crossing the highway. In places, nets have been strung from tree to tree to provide safe passage for monkeys crossing the road. The scenic 49-mile (80-km) drive follows the coastline and allows access to a string of beautiful, secluded beaches, many of which have little or no facilities.

When farmers began growing cocoa trees imported from the upper Amazon basin in the early 20th century, Ilhéus, the largest city on Bahia's southern coast, established itself as a major cocoa growing region. A disaster of epic proportions struck in 1989, when a parasite infected most of the plantations and destroyed the entire crop. The industry has yet to recover, but several of the old plantations have been converted into museums.

Ilhéus is best known as the setting for several novels by Bahia's most beloved author, Jorge Amado. One of his best books, Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon, takes place in the city's historic core at the height of the 1920s cocoa boom. Today, visitors can stroll along the promenades and see the famous Bar Vesúvio and Bataclã Cabaret that feature in his novel. The author's childhood home has been opened to visitors as the Casa de Cultura Jorge Amado.

Among the city's other sights is the 16th-century Igreja de São Jorge. There are several fine beaches to the north and south of town and Currupe, near the village of Olivença, is a favorite.

JORGE AMADO (1912–2001)

Life-like statue of Jorge Amado, Ilhéus

The son of a cocoa plantation owner, Jorge Amado was born near Ilhéus in 1912. In 1931, Amado moved to Rio to study law, but his heart was already given to literature. That very year, he published his first novel, O País do Carnaval. He based his 1958 novel, Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon, on the warring cocoa barons of his native Ilhéus, but infused it with a sense of humor that won him acclaim in Brazil and around the world. Dona Flor and her Two Husbands (1966), Tieta do Agreste (1977), and Gabriela, Clove and Cinnamon were later turned into popular and successful films. Amado published 21 novels, which were translated into 49 languages. He died in 2001.

Porto Seguro (Safe Port) is officially recognized as the site of the first Portuguese landing in 1500, where Pedro Cabral and his fleet arrived and said mass on Brazilian soil. The city's small historic center (Cidade Histórica) has several stately old buildings, including the Matriz Nossa Senhora da Pena, built in 1535. Its altar has an image of Saint Francis of Assisi, which was the first religious statue to be brought to Brazil in 1503. On the same square, the former jail built in 1772 is now home to the Museu de Porto Seguro, which holds a small collection describing the early colonization of the region.

Today, Porto Seguro is best known for its buzzing nightlife, beach parties, music festivals, and the notorious "Passarela do Alcool" (alcohol boardwalk), the nickname for the city's main street where vendors set up kiosks selling fresh fruit cocktails with a heavy alcoholic kick. Visitors looking for a more tranquil holiday experience usually head farther south to the lovely neighboring villages of Arraial d'Ajuda and Trancoso.

South of town are a few beaches that mainly attract backpackers. Less developed, but serene, these beaches can be accessed from Porto Seguro airport, which receives daily flights from all over Brazil. Road access can often be challenging, as distances are long and the coastal highways are in a state of disrepair.

Though just a short drive from Porto Seguro, Trancoso has a sense of tranquility that sets it apart from the nearby party town. Set on a high bluff overlooking the ocean, the town center or quadrado is a long, grassy space, anchored by a small church and framed by houses, many of which have turned their gardens into tasteful little cafés. Trancoso offers sophisticated services focusing on high-end travelers – upscale B&Bs, fine dining, and music. The beaches are backed by red sandstone cliffs, and remain largely secluded and unspoiled.

Remote and uninhabited, the archipelago of Abrolhos, discovered by Amerigo Vespucci in 1503, offers excellent opportunities for viewing wildlife. The five islands are located off the coast of southern Bahia. In 1983, the islands, together with 351 sq miles (909 sq km) of surrounding ocean, were declared a National Marine Park, the first such park in Brazil. Known for its rare formations of south Atlantic coral, the park teems with sea turtles, squid, and a rich assortment of fish. A variety of bird species come to feed and lay eggs on the islands, which are otherwise dry and covered in grasslands. The best time for spotting humpback whales is between July and November, when the archipelago becomes a calving ground for them.

Only one of the five islands, Siriba, can actually be visited. Guided tours to the marine park should only be made with an operator accredited by Brazil's environmental agency, IBAMA. Visitors can also book a day or overnight excursion to the islands and surrounding coral reefs from the town of Caravelas on the mainland. For snorkeling and diving enthusiasts, underwater visibility is best between January and March.

The town of Lençóis sprang up almost overnight, as diamond fever struck in these interior highlands in the late 19th century. Unlike many other mining boomtowns, however, Lençóis has a colonial air, with small Baroque churches, and tiny houses and shops painted in pastel colors. The town's distinguished main square, Praça Horácio de Matos, consists of 19th-century houses, characterized by high, arched windows. Another town landmark, Praça Otaviano Alves, lined with gracious colonial homes, is farther south of the main square.

In recent years, Lençóis has reinvented itself as the base camp for ecotourists venturing out to explore the caves, waterfalls, and isolated mountain tops of the surrounding highlands. The town's pretty colonial homes now house trekking equipment stores, Internet cafés, and tasteful photo galleries. The Calil Neto Fotografia gallery displays stunning photographs of the panoramic Chapada Diamantina.

Established in 1985, towering red rock formations, interspersed with lush vegetation, characterize this 587-sq mile (1,520-sq km) park in the hinterland of Salvador.

Numerous small rivers crisscross the highlands, cascading over waterfalls, carving through canyons, and tumbling down waterfalls. Countless trails lead to caves and caverns. These undefined paths are best navigated with a guide.

★ Morro do Pai Inácio

The striking mesa is the park's signature mountain formation. The 3,675-ft (1,120-m) plateau offers breathtaking views of the northern half of the park.

Cachoeira da Fumaça, or the Waterfall of Smoke, wears a veil of mist as the water plunges down the 1,150-ft (340-m) precipice.

★ Vale do Paty

The multiday bike up this scenic valley offers extraordinary views of the highlands from Morro do Castelo. Other attractions include abandoned miners' settlements and waterfalls with natural swimming pools at Cachoeira dos Funis, as well as the sound of Barbado monkeys that inhabit this vast wilderness.

Rappeling in the Chapada Diamantina

Church and colorful houses in the small town of Canudos

Traveling through the sleepy town of Canudos, it is hard to imagine that this was once the staging ground for a year-long rebellion in 1897. Led by Antônio Conselheiro, the war wound up costing the lives of more than 20,000 people and almost destroyed the future of the Brazilian Republic.

An eyewitness account at the end of the Canudos War was written by journalist Euclides da Cunha, who was on the scene to cover the events for a São Paulo newspaper. He went on to write a book based on his coverage of the war. Published in 1902, Os Sertões (Rebellion in the Backlands) is one of the most important works of Brazilian literature. In 1997, the University of Bahia turned the site of the 19th-century Canudos War into a state park, Parque Estadual de Canudos. To access the park, visitors should get permission from the Memorial de Canudos.

The original settlement of Canudos now lies at the bottom of the Lagoa Cocorobó, which flooded the area in 1970. However, many of the original battlefields escaped the deluge and have been made into an open-air museum which is part of the park, just on the outskirts of the town. The principal museum sites include Morro do Conselheiro (Counsellor Hill), Vale da Morte (Valley of Death), the Estrada Sagrada (Holy Road), and the Vale da Degola (Valley of Beheadings). The dry sertão landscape is quite striking – vegetation consists of caatinga bushes, cacti, bromeliads, umbu trees and favelas, a small thorn-covered shrub. After the April rains, the landscape briefly turns lush and animals such as deer, hyacinth macaws, and armadillos can be spotted frequently.

In the Canudos region during the war, Republican soldiers were camped in the hills that were covered by favela trees, a very common shrub in the dry interior of Bahia. Upon their return to Rio, the soldiers never received the land which they had been promised. They ended up squatting on the hills, naming their new-found community favela after the trees in the sertão. Hence, the name favela (see p85) that is now used to refer to the urban ghettos traces its origins to the Canudos War.

Statue of Antônio Conselheiro

ANTÔNIO CONSELHEIRO

Part Robin Hood, part religious fanatic, Antônio Conselheiro, the leader of Brazil's 1897 Canudos War, was born Antônio Vicente Mendes Maciel in 1830 in Ceará. Conselheiro traveled the dry sertão for decades, first as a salesman and legal conselheiro (counselor), then as a preacher and reformer, raging against the plight of the peasants. In 1893, Conselheiro, outraged at the newly imposed taxes on an already starving population, settled in the tiny upland town of Canudos and began creating what was, in effect, an independent state. Conselheiro began implementing an early form of socialism, heavily tinged with religious values. The poor of the region flocked to Conselheiro and Canudos quickly grew to a community of more than 8,000 people. With the prestige of the new Republican government at stake, the army sent three large forces against Canudos. All were destroyed. Finally, in November of 1897, the army mounted a full-scale invasion. Conselheiro died during the battle and all the residents of Canudos were slaughtered.

The Linha Verde (Green Line) is the 152-mile (252-km) stretch of coast that runs north from Salvador all the way to Mangue Seco on the Sergipe border. It is often referred to as the Estrada do Côco, or Coconut Highway, because of the thick stands of palm trees that line the beaches. This part of the coast offers several popular holiday destinations and well-developed resorts. The most favored destinations are Praia do Forte and Costa do Sauípe. Farther north, the beaches are pristine and beautiful.

SERGIPE, ALAGOAS & PERNAMBUCO

Long stretches of white beach bathed by a warm, blue-green ocean comprise the magnificent coastline of Sergipe, Alagoas, and Pernambuco. In contrast, much of the interior of this region is dry sertão, where the landscape is barren and harsh. Despite, or perhaps because of their material poverty, these northeastern states are culturally rich in music and folklore.

The states of Sergipe, Alagoas, and Pernambuco in the Northeast were among the first parts of Brazil to be colonized by Portugal, and for centuries afterward they were the richest region of colonial Brazil. The wealth of the region came from sugar. With slave labor, sugar cane could be cultivated in abundance, and sugar sold in the burgeoning markets of Europe. In 1654, the Portuguese reclaimed Pernambuco after a brief Dutch takeover, but opted to keep the new city, Recife, as the capital instead of Olinda.

Sugar still dominates the economy, but the beaches make this region one of Brazil's hottest tourist destinations. These states have also developed a rich culture and penchant for lively festivals. Popular musical styles such as forró and frevô began or culminated in the Northeast.

All three states have pretty, historic towns, stunning coastlines, and picture-perfect beaches.

Reefs of stone and coral provide natural habitats for fish, sea turtles, sharks, and other tropical marine life. The island archipelago of Fernando de Noronha, a municipality of Pernambuco, is one of Brazil's prime marine habitats and a preferred destination of scuba divers. The Rio São Francisco, the longest river in Brazil, passes through the beautiful scenery of Sergipe and Alagoas in the last leg of its journey before finally meeting the Atlantic Ocean.

Recife and Olinda provide a captivating impression of 17th- and 18th-century Brazil, a legacy of Dutch and Portuguese colonization. São Cristóvão and Penedo, located on the border between the two states, are both charming Baroque colonial towns. Penedo has the added advantage of offering a spectacular view of the Rio São Francisco.

GETTING AROUND

Recife, Aracaju, Maceió, and Fernando de Noronha have good flight connections to the rest of Brazil. However, only Recife has an international airport. Cities on the coast are easily accessible by bus or car. Bus connections are fast and convenient through the region. Highway BR-101 connects Aracaju, Maceió, and Recife, while smaller coastal destinations are only a short drive east on secondary roads off the main highway. However, roads in the interior require a bit more patience as they are often in poor condition, making night driving hazardous. Gas stations and services become scarce in the sparsely populated interior; drivers should be prepared with a full tank of gas, snacks, and plenty of water.

Sergipe's original capital was São Cristóvão, located inland from the Atlantic Ocean. A burgeoning trade in sugar, however, made a sizable port necessary, and in 1855, the capital transferred to Aracaju, situated at the mouth of the Rio Sergipe. By 1901, the sleepy fishing village soon transformed into a stately capital, with a horse-drawn street-car and a movie theater.

Today, Aracaju is a small city with a commercial downtown area along the south riverbank. Sea-life enthusiasts visit Oceanário with its models of various marine habitats.

A designated National Historic Heritage Site, São Cristóvão was founded in 1590, and is considered one of the oldest cities in Brazil. It served as the capital of Sergipe in the 17th and 18th centuries, but when the capital shifted to Aracaju, it soon dwindled to the sleepy interior town it is today. Its change in status, however, was the reason why many of São Cristóvão's churches and colonial buildings were spared the pressures of modern development, and still survive intact.

The town's charming historic center is a panoply of colonial squares and buildings, and is also a hub of commerce. The most beautifully preserved square, Praça de São Francisco, is easily identified by the large Franciscan cross at its center.

Flanking the square are the Santa Casa Hospital, the former Governor's Palace, and the Convento de São Francisco, which now houses the Museu de Arte Sacra (Museum of Sacred Art). The museum has a fine collection of silver chalices and crosses, and a few beautifully sculpted statues of saints. The ceiling of the convent chapel was painted by the Bahian artist, José Teófilo de Jesus (1758–1847). The annual Festival de Arte de São Cristóvão hosts popular art and music.

The oldest settlement in Alagoas, Penedo was founded in 1565 by Duarte Coelho Pereira on a strategic bluff overlooking the Rio São Francisco, about 19 miles (30 km) upstream of the delta. Invading Dutch forces conquered the town in 1637, and after eight years, the Portuguese managed to regain control. Today, Penedo's historic center has been designated a National Historic Monument. Particularly noteworthy is the complex housing the Convento de São Francisco and Igreja de Santa Maria dos Anjos, built over a period of 100 years.

The Igreja Nossa Senhora da Corrente (Church of Our Lady of Chains), built in 1765 by the Lemos de Gonzaga family, was used as a refuge for runaway slaves, who the family often provided with forged certificates of freedom. It has a fine Rococo-style main altar.

Rio São Francisco ④

Sergipe, Alagoas, Pernambuco & Minas Gerais.

The largest and most important river in the region, the Rio São Francisco has long served as the main transport and irrigation lifeline, for the people in the small towns of the arid northeastern interior to the bigger cities along the coast. Considered a symbol of national unity, Brazilians revere the São Francisco, and it is the subject of many myths and fables. Nicknamed Velho Chico (Old Chico), the 1,963-mile (3,160-km) river meanders through five states. Originating in the Serra da Canastra mountains in Minas Gerais, it flows north through Bahia, crosses briefly into Pernambuco before continuing east, toward the Atlantic, marking the border between Sergipe and Alagoas in its final run to the sea.

LAMPIÃO & MARIA BONITA

In the 1920s and 30s, bandit leader Lampião and his wife Maria Bonita led a band of 40 outlaws, nicknamed cangaceiros (cangaço means badlands), on a 15-year spree of robberies, hold-ups, rapes, and shoot-outs across the Northeast. As their raids continued, Lampião and Maria Bonita became notorious figures throughout Brazil. The duo even introduced their own style of clothing, with the round leather cangaceiro hat, the front brim turned upward and decorated with stars or coins. The police and militia searched for them endlessly, but were unable to capture them. Finally, in 1938, Lampião, Maria Bonita, and nine cangaceiros were ambushed and killed by the police in Sergipe. Their story has inspired numerous songs, plays, and different versions on film and TV.

Standing on the Rio São Francisco, the Xingó Dam in Sergipe is one of the largest in Brazil. When it was completed in 1994, the dam blocked off the São Francisco canyon at a point about 155 miles (250 km) from the ocean, causing the river to rise and create the Xingó Reservoir. This artificial lake is now a popular destination.

Catamarans and schooners depart from the dam and travel upstream, crossing the reservoir and re-entering the main part of the river. Several rock passageways that previously lay at the top of the canyon are now open to exploration by boat.

Situated 2 miles (3 km) from the dam, the Museu de Arqueologia de Xingó displays numerous archaeological objects from nearby sites that were flooded when the dam was created. Artifacts from the earliest sites, dating from around 5000 BC, include arrows, rock paintings, primitive stone mortars, and fish cleaning tools. Later sites reveal a variety of items including bone jewelry, decorative ceramics, and clay containers and dishes.

The capital of Alagoas, Maceió is known for its many beautiful urban beaches. The best known ones, from north to south, are Jatiúca, Ponta Verde, Sete Coqueiros, and Pajuçara. Protected by reefs, the beaches have little or no surf, warm water, and a Caribbean turquoise-green color. The shores are lined with thick groves of coconut palms, especially dense at Ponta Verde.

About 1 mile (2 km) offshore from Pajuçara, a series of large coral reefs are partially exposed at low tide, forming sizable natural pools that can be explored with a mask and snorkel. Small single-sail rafts known as jangadas depart daily at low tide from Ponta Verde and take about 20 minutes to reach the pools.

In addition to the beaches, Maceió has a small historic core. The neighborhoods of Jaraguá and Centro, just inland from the port, have a large number of well-preserved historic buildings which convey some of the atmosphere of the city's 19th-century sugar boom. One of the loveliest mansions on the waterfront has been beautifully restored and now houses the Museu Théo Brandão. The Pontal da Barra neighborhood on the lagoon's shore is a small fishing village. There are several rustic restaurants overlooking the water, which serve the catch of the day. Dishes with sururu (a small type of clam) and crab are especially popular. In Pontal da Barra, visitors will find highly skilled rendeiras, or lace-makers, working on a variety of laces.

Praia do Gunga is a pretty, palm-fringed beach located 9 miles (15 km) south of Maceió. Access to the beach is gained via a private road cutting across one of the region's largest coconut plantations. One side of the beach faces the lagoon, while the other side looks toward the ocean, offering the option of fresh or salt water swimming, as well as kayaking.

QUILOMBOS

Portrait of Zumbi

In the African Yorubá language, quilombo means dwelling place. In Brazil, the term was used to describe a community of runaway slaves. Brazil's most famous quilombo, Quilombo dos Palmares in Alagoas, grew to the size of a small city, with 30,000 residents. In the late 1600s, Zumbi, the quilombo's second leader, successfully defended it from repeated Portuguese attacks. However, the Portuguese were relentless, and finally, in 1694, Palmares fell. Zumbi was beheaded and the community destroyed. A number of such places escaped Palmares' fate and survive even today. There are now 1,000 quilombos registered in Brazil. Zumbi's legacy is remembered every year on November 20, when Zumbi dos Palmares Day, or Black Awareness Day, is celebrated.

Porto de Galinhas is one of the most popular tourist destinations in Northeast Brazil, and deservedly so. There are no high-rises dwarfing the beach here, just low-scale pousadas and bungalows. The star attraction of the area, in addition to the beach, are the natural tide pools that form in the reefs just a short distance offshore. Colorful jangada rafts take swimmers and snorkelers out to swim in the clear shallow waters teeming with tropical fish.

Porto de Galinhas also offers a lively atmosphere with excellent restaurants and shopping, and better still, it does not take much effort to get away from the bustle. The main mode of transportation is the dune buggy, allowing for easy transit along the dirt and sand roads that lead to local beaches. A short distance south along the beach leads to Ponta de Maracaípe, a beautiful spot with a large white sand bar, where the Rio Maracaípe runs into the ocean. Recife 9

The Portuguese, who had built Olinda on a hillside, ignored the swampy islands below. The site of present-day Recife was only a fishing village when the Dutch took over Pernambuco in 1630. Count Maurice of Nassau commanded the draining and dyking of the flat islands at the mouth of the Rio Capibaribe. The islands of Santo Antônio, Boa Vista, and Recife Antigo (Old Recife) were connected to each other and the mainland with an ingenious system of bridges. Boa Viagem, south of Recife, has a popular beach, many hotels and excellent nightlife.

Exploring Recife Antigo

In the heart of downtown Old Recife is the Marco Zero and the surrounding square, which marks the official point where the city was founded. The site of the original pier, it controlled all arrivals and departures taking place in the bay. Largely deserted until a few years ago, the now bustling district of the city makes for a pleasant walk during the day. It is possible to take a boat from the square across to the Parque das Esculturas, which features an imposing collection of tall, exotic sculptures made by the ceramic artist Francisco Brennand (see p219).

The most interesting street in the historic quarter is Rua do Bom Jesus. During the brief period of Dutch rule, the street was known as Rua dos Judeus (Street of the Jews). The Jewish community thrived under Dutch rule, but once the Catholic Portuguese re-established their control, most fled, converted, or went underground. A large number of the buildings on this street have been restored to their original 17th-century condition. Every Sunday, the street comes alive, as an art and crafts fair, live music, and outdoor festivities take place.

The renovated building houses restaurants, an art gallery, and a shopping and entertainment center.

Archaeologists have confirmed the exact location of the original synagogue after digging up part of a mikveh (ritual bath). The current synagogue has been rebuilt from the ground up, based on these findings, historical data, and other sources. One of the few constructions to pre-date the Dutch, Forte Brum is located at the far end of Avenida Militar. Built by the Portuguese in 1629, it was taken over by the Dutch in 1630, and strengthened and expanded. A military museum today, the new design was kept by the Portuguese when they reclaimed it in 1654.

Somewhat deceptively, the Forte das Cinco Pontas (Five-Pointed Fort) actually only has four points. The original Dutch fort, built in 1630 to protect the new Dutch-Brazilian capital of Mauritsstad, had five. When the Dutch withdrew in 1654, the Portuguese leveled the unique shape, and put up a more traditional four-pointer. Wonderfully restored, the fort now houses the city museum and contains an impressive collection of maps, paintings, and artifacts that tell the history of Dutch rule.

the Dutch surrendered to the Portuguese in 1654, the Jews were given three months to liquidate their assets and leave. Many members of the Recife community set sail to New Amsterdam and helped found New York.

The synagogue was dismantled, and its role as a temple and meeting place of the Jewish community was completely forgotten. The building was eventually torn down at the beginning of the 20th century.

Recife's signature beat is frevo. Fast, upbeat, almost polka-like, the rhythm is particularly popular during Carnival (see p41). This distinct musical genre is reputed to have derived its name from the verb ferver (to boil), which refers to the frenetic beat of the brass bands. One of the accessories of a frevo dancer is the brightly colored hand-held parasol that is used in the choreography. First recorded in the 1930s, the rhythm made its way into the repertoire of mainstream Brazilian musicians by the 1950s and 60s.

Exploring Modern Recife

Though modern Recife stretches onto the mainland, its center comprises the islands of Santo Antônio, Boa Vista, and Recife Antigua. Skyscrapers exist alongside a handful of old colonial buildings and crowded markets, lending the city a striking character. The area north of the center is as appealing, with leafy suburbs and a few museums and parks. The squares, dotted with impressive churches, retain much of their old-world charm.

Modern Recife's main civic square, Praça da República, is located at the tip of Santo Antônio island. Some of the city's finest public buildings can be found here.

The Palácio do Campo das Princesas (Governors' Palace) building was built in the 1840s. Over the years, renovations and additions have somewhat altered the original Neo-Classical design and made the building more eclectic. The lovely interior garden was designed by Brazil's premier landscape artist Roberto Burle Marx. Unfortunately, the only view available to the public is the one through the wrought-iron fence posts.

The Teatro Princesa Isabel, a renovated pink theater, hosts many of Recife's prime cultural productions. The building is an elegant example of classic imperial architecture, marked by its symmetric forms and French and Italian decorative styles.

With a dome-shaped cupola, the Palácio da Justiça was constructed in 1930 to mark the presidency of Getúlio Vargas (see pp56–7).

Rua do Imperador, Santo Antônio. Tel (081) 3224 0530. ☐ 8–11am & 2–5pm Mon–Fri & Sun. 📺

One of the major attractions in Recife, Igreja São Francisco served as the convent of the Third Franciscan Order. It was built in 1606, when the island of Santo Antônio only had 200 inhabitants. The initial convent was small and rather plain. During the Dutch occupation of Recife (1630–54), it was used as army barracks. Renovations began after the return of the Franciscans. The courtyard was added with a surrounding arcade of delicate and ornate Tuscan columns. Blue-and-white Portuguese tiles (azulejos) were used to decorate the main altar and the walls of the small, charming cloister.

However, the pièce de résistance is the Capela Dourada (Golden Chapel), added in 1695, in an annex of the main church. All of the wood in the chapel is jacaranda and cedar and is covered in gold leaf or paint. The intricately carved altars, arches, and beams showcase some outstanding Portuguese Baroque art. Each altar consists of various arches, adding a depth of field to the statues on display. One of the walls in the church is adorned with a painting that depicts the Crucifixion of a group of Franciscan saints.

Dating back to 1728, Catedral de São Pedro dos Clérigos is one of the most impressive churches in Pernambuco. Its striking façade is dominated by a statue of St. Peter, which was added in 1980. While from the outside the walls of the church look perfectly square and straight, on the inside the church nave is octagonal. The best features of the church are its stunning wood carving and the illusionistic ceiling. The main altar, balconies, and most of the remaining interior elements were renovated in the 19th century in the Rococo style. The only original pieces that remain are the two gold-painted wooden pulpits.

The square in front of the church, Pátio de São Pedro, is one of Recife's most popular public squares. The beautifully restored area hosts a number of cultural events. The most important, Terça Negra (Black Tuesday), takes place every Tuesday night. It is widely known for showcasing typical regional Afro-Brazilian musical styles, such as afoxé, maculelê, and coco. The area also has many fine restaurants.

Also worth seeing is the Pinacoteca gallery that features a large collection of 17th-century paintings and drawings by landscape artists Frans Post and Albert Eckhout, both of whom were hired by Dutch count Maurice of Nassau to portray Brazil's fauna and flora, as well as scenes from everyday life. Over the years, Brennand has amassed the world's largest collection of Post's work. The exhibit also includes many antique maps and documents that recount the brief, but eventful, history of the Dutch in Brazil.

Mon–Thu, 8am–6pm Fri.

Acclaimed as the most unusual cultural attraction in Recife, the Oficina de Cerâmica Francisco Brennand is the famed artist's personal gallery. Brennand (b.1927) is best known for his large collection of phallic-shaped ceramic sculptures, nearly all of which are striking, potent, and larger than life. His collection is creatively displayed inside a ceramic-covered brick factory and its surrounding gardens, beautifully landscaped by Burle Marx, a renowned landscape architect of the 20th century.

In addition to Brennand's superb ceramic art, the collection also showcases thousands of playfully designed ceramic tiles, as well as some of his paintings and drawings. The bold mix of stylized imagery, embellishment, and erotic motifs, visible in all his works, led one critic to define Brennand's art as "tropical sensual Baroque."

Olinda 10

One of the best-preserved colonial cities in Brazil, Olinda was founded in 1535 by the Portuguese. Much of it was burned down during the Dutch occupation in 1631, and later beautifully restored to its former glory. Magnificent colonial buildings, gardens, Baroque churches, and numerous small chapels mark Olinda, which was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1982. Although much of this historic city lies on a steep hillside, it is only a short walk up, and the views of the Atlantic Ocean are splendid. Its narrow cobblestone streets are perfect for exploring on foot. The highlight of the walk suggested here is the Praça da Sé, which features historic churches and sweeping views of Recife (see pp216–19), only 6 miles (10 km) to the south.

② Convento de São Francisco

Brazil's oldest Franciscan convent was built in 1585. When the Dutch invaded Olinda in 1630, the convent was abandoned, and rebuilt in the 18th century. The cloister walls, decorated with Portuguese tiles, depict the life of St. Francis.

③ Igreja da Sé, which was built in 1535, is the oldest parish church in Northeast Brazil. The church has undergone many renovations over the centuries. The last, in 1984, restored the building almost to its original 16th-century state.

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Starting point: Secretaria de Turismo, Praça do Carmo.

Walking time: 2–3 hours. Flat, non-slippery footwear is best.

Best days: Tue–Sat. Museums are only open in the morning.

Places to eat: Oficina do Sabor, Rua do Amparo 335; Olinda Sorvetes e Sucos, Rua São Bento 358.

④ Alto da Sé

The Alto da Sé is one of the highest points in Olinda and offers a magnificent view of Recife in the distance. In the evenings, locals gather here to browse the crafts market, and eat tapioca and pancakes made from manioc.

⑤ Mercado Ribeira
Originally the building where slaves were bought and sold, this 18th-century structure is now one of Olinda's busiest craft markets. Especially popular are naive art ceramics, carnival masks, and frevo umbrellas (see p217).

⑥ Igreja e Mosteiro São Bento
Founded in 1582, this church holds a magnificent gold altar. It took more than a year and 30 professionals to fully restore the altar in 2001. Gregorian chanters add a special touch to the Sunday morning mass.

⑦ Museu de Arte Contemporânea is a fine 18th-century building and a former jail. This building now houses an interesting collection of artwork by contemporary Pernambucan artists.

⑨ Rua do Amparo
More than a dozen artists have set up their studios in the historic buildings along Rua do Amparo. The street also boasts several excellent restaurants, cafés, and B&Bs.

A calm, colonial city, Olinda grew to be the capital of the rich sugar-growing region of Pernambuco. Reconstruction started in earnest only after Dutch forces were expelled in 1654. The city has maintained its 17th-century architectural fabric intact. Olinda is also home to a vibrant community of artists, musicians, and liberal professionals. Built in 1582, this monastery was destroyed by the Dutch along with most of the city, and rebuilt in the late 18th century. It is acclaimed for its Baroque altar in the chapel and intricate wood carving, which features the image of São Bento (St. Benedict) himself. In 2001, the original wood altar was repainted with gold leaf. The sacristy's three large paintings, by 18th-century artist José Eloy da Conceição, portray scenes from the life of the saint.

One of the region's unique gifts to the cultural scene in Brazil, mamulengo, or puppetry, is showcased in this fascinating museum. Nearly 1,000 puppets are featured here, with a portion of the collection dating from the 1800s. Having performed before political figures, royalty, and luminaries through the ages, these puppets are today used as popular entertainment. During folk festivals, the puppets can be seen enacting comedies, skits, and Pernambucan folk legends. For those interested in the puppets' historical background, there is a curator who can explain it by asking the puppets themselves.

THE OLINDA CARNAVAL

Every year during Carnival, the cobblestoned streets of Olinda become the stage for a week-long street party. The meeting place is the square, known as quarto cantos (four corners), on the corner of Rua do Amparo and Rua Prudente de Moraes. Here, blocos (neighborhood groups) begin their parades through the streets, playing music, singing, and dancing as they go. The blocos often have themes or names such as "Virgins," "Elephant," or "Midnight Man." Dominating the festivities are enormous papier-mâché puppets that bloco members proudly carry along the parade route. The music varies from frevo, an upbeat, almost frenetic beat unique to Pernambuco, to maracatu, a much more African beat.

Ilha de Itamaracá 11

Pernambuco. 🏠 16,000. 🚗 from Recife.

The island of Itamaracá played an important strategic role during the Dutch interregnum in Brazil. In 1631, the Dutch built the Forte Orange here, to protect their new domain from invading forces. The Portuguese destroyed the Dutch-built adobe when they took over in 1654. However, the location was so unique that the Portuguese created a new fort in stone on the site. During past renovations, artifacts dating back to the Dutch period were found. Just across from the fort is a small island, Coroa do Avião, which has natural reef pools. Boat tours to the island leave from the beach in front of the fort.

Itamaracá is also home to the Projeto Peixe Boi, a manatee research and rehabilitation center. Manatees live along the Brazilian coast from Alagoas to Amapá, but are threatened by loss of habitat, as well as by speedboats and their often-lethal outboard propellers. Scientists estimate that there are only around 400 animals in the wild along this coast. The center works to rehabilitate injured manatees, and to study those that cannot be released. A natural history exhibit on the manatee is offered along with a host of interactive learning activities for children. Visitors are only allowed to observe those animals that cannot be Discovered in 1503 by Amerigo Vespucci, the 21-island archipelago of Fernando de Noronha was fought over for the next two centuries by the French, Dutch, and Portuguese, who built forts on strategic lookout points. The island was used in a variety of ways, including as a political prison during World War II. In 1988, the Parque Nacional Marinho de Fernando de Noronha was created in order to protect the fragile marine and island ecology of the archipelago. Today, a combination of crystal-clear water, fascinating wildlife, diverse marine life which includes multicolored fish, turtles, sharks and whales, and stunning beaches make Fernando de Noronha one of the most beautiful destinations in Brazil.

DIVING & MARINE-LIFE

Protected as a marine national park, Fernando de Noronha offers the best scuba diving in Brazil. Greatly suited for diving, its water temperature is a constant 28° C (82° F) and the depth of underwater, visibility is almost 98 ft (30 m). Underwater there is an astounding variety of marine-life – rays of all types, green sea turtles, and the even rarer hawksbill turtle, monk fish, lemon sharks and reef sharks, clownfish hiding in anemones, surgeon fish, and parrotfish are just some varieties. As a result of the island's volcanic heritage, there are also numerous swim-throughs.

PARAÍBA, RIO GRANDE DO NORTE & CEARÁ

A combination of pristine beaches, lively beach towns, and massive shifting sand dunes are the main attractions of these three states. Natal, the capital of Rio Grande do Norte, and João Pessoa are pleasant, historic cities with good urban beaches. However, this part of Northeast Brazil is best experienced along its coast, and in its quiet, relaxed fishing villages and beautiful, isolated beaches.

In 1532, Paraíba, Rio Grande do Norte, and Ceará were among the first states in the Northeast to be colonized by the Portuguese. However, these states never grew as rich or settled as their more southerly neighbors because sugar cane did not thrive here.

In recent years, the three states have taken advantage of the constant sunshine and beautiful beaches and have developed tourism as the mainstay of the economy.

Ceará is famous for its beaches, with their warm, turquoise waters, set against a backdrop of red sandstone cliffs. The most popular include Morro Branco and the lively beach town of Canoa Quebrada, both located to the southeast of Fortaleza, and the isolated beach of Jericoacoara, north and west of Fortaleza.

Parque Nacional de Ubajara lies in western Ceará and comprises caves, eco trails, and magnificent waterfalls.

Rio Grande do Norte lies in the extreme northeast corner of Brazil. The real growth industry here is tourism. Natal, the capital city, has become one of the Northeast's main points of entry for tourists from Western Europe. Nearly all come here for the sunshine and beaches.

Wedged in between Pernambuco and Rio Grande do Norte, Paraíba boasts some of Brazil's least spoiled beaches. Agriculture plays an important role in the state economy. The capital, João Pessoa, is a pleasant city with a small historic center. The city of Campina Grande is famous for its June festival, the Festas Juninas.

Exploring Paraíba, Rio Grande do Norte & Ceará

Most visitors to the states of Paraíba, Rio Grande do Norte and Ceará focus on the natural beauty of the beaches and the coastline. The most popular gateway destinations are Natal in Rio Grande do Norte and Fortaleza in Ceará, with easy access to most of the region's attractions. Paraíba's capital, João Pessoa, with its colonial buildings, parks, and beaches, is a pleasant place to visit. In the interior of Paraíba, the monster rock formations in Cariri offer an almost other-worldly experience. Dinosaur fossils, discovered in Souza, have made the place archaeologically important. The harsh, arid interior landscape of these states has a unique, stark beauty.

Colorful old buildings in the historic center of Fortaleza

GETTING AROUND

All major cities and some smaller destinations, such as Campina Grande in Paraíba, can be reached by domestic flights. There are regular buses between all towns and cities. However, roads in this part of Brazil are in poor condition and are very badly maintained. The BR-101 connects João Pessoa to Natal. From Natal, travelers continuing north to Fortaleza take the BR-304, which veers west and cuts inland across Rio Grande do Norte to Ceará. The stretch of the BR-230 towards Souza is in rough shape. Ensure that the vehicle, preferably a 4WD, is in good condition. Be sure to carry extra gas, water, and supplies.

João Pessoa 1

Founded in 1585 as Nossa Senhora das Neves, the city derives its present name from a former governor of Paraíba. Brazil's third oldest city, João Pessoa maintains an air of old-world charm, with a host of well-restored colonial churches, convents, and monasteries. Local visitors, however, flock here mainly for the easy atmosphere of its great white sandy beaches along the coastline. The dense tropical forest that once covered the coastal strip of Paraíba now thrives only in patches, one of which lies within João Pessoa, forming one of the largest areas of natural wilderness in any city in the world.

Exploring João Pessoa

One of the oldest and less developed cities in Brazil, João Pessoa has a small historic core, which remains little changed despite the modernization drive. It is located a bit inland, on a small hill overlooking the Rio Sanhauá and Rio Paraíba. Modern João Pessoa, with fast emerging skyscrapers, gravitates towards the beaches. Due to a state law restricting the height of buildings within 490 ft (150 m) of the shoreline to four stories or less, the waterfront is free of the curtain wall of concrete high-rises that afflict some other Brazilian beachfronts.

One of the most spectacular churches in the city sits majestically atop a hill that bears the same name. The most striking feature of this impressive 18th-century church is the tower topped with an oriental dome. The altar contains an 18th-century statue of St. Benedict, one of the few black saints. The beautiful Rococo-style

The church is part of the larger Centro Cultural de São Francisco complex, which also includes the Convento de Santo Antônio, chapels, and a museum of popular and sacred art, the result of grand-scale reforms carried out in 1718 and 1788.

João Pessoa's most popular urban beach is Praia de Tambaú, a 4-mile (7-km) long stretch of sand lined with restaurants, cafés, and interesting food and craft stalls. In the evenings, locals stroll the seawall, enjoying the cool breeze.

🏖️ Praia do Cabo Branco

Better suited for swimming than Tambaú, Cabo Branco is a residential beach area looking out over the eastern-most point in the Americas, Ponta do Seixas (Seixas Point). The point juts out into the ocean, and is topped by a small lighthouse, with a monument marking the spot.

Ilha de Picãozinho

N of Praia de Tambaú.  Actually a large coral reef, Ilha de Picãozinho is a popular spot. At low tide, boats depart from Praia do Tambaú, and take visitors over to swim and snorkel in the natural tide pools. Fish and starfish can be easily observed in the crystal-clear water. Check the tide table for specific times daily before taking a dip. For a few days every month, the tide is too high for the reef to be visited.

Ilha de Areia Vermelha

12 miles (20 km) N of town.  Another low-tide attraction is Ilha de Areia Vermelha (Island of Red Sand). For approximately 25 days every month, low tide exposes a beautiful beach of striking red-orange sand, a short distance off the coast of João Pessoa. With a choice of floating bars, it makes a perfect spot for swimming, snorkeling, or sunbathing. The temporary island is accessible from Praia da Camboinhas, 8 miles (13 km) north of Tambaú. Trips to this island can be arranged by travel agencies.

Ideal for experiencing the unique sertão culture, Campina Grande is a large market town with some degree of industrial growth.

The autumn harvest festival, Festas Juninas, although celebrated everywhere in the Northeast, is biggest in Campina Grande. The vast, purpose-built fairground, Parque do Povo, includes several smaller theme parks such as the Sítio São João, a reproduction of a traditional ranch where visitors can observe the rural nordeste lifestyle, and the Arraial Hilton Motta, a replica of a small interior town.

The Museu de Arte Assis Chateaubriand has a striking collection of modern works, with a focus on the work of artists from the Northeast.

Situated in the Cariri Paraibano, a large plateau in the Serra da Borborema, Cariri is the point at which the sertão proper begins. Tours in this area of aboriginal rock carvings and huge rock formations can be organized by Cariri Ecotours, based in Ponta Negra, Natal.

One of the formations, the Lajedo do Pai Mateus, sits on the private grounds of a fazenda. A vast slab of bare granite, it is littered with boulders bigger than houses, as if a giant had scattered his collection of pebbles. Hence the local epithet, “Devil’s Marbles.” The most remarkable of these granite monsters is the Pedra do Capacete (Helmet Stone), a 20-ft (6-m) high boulder that is open in the front and hollow underneath, resembling a huge war helmet.

From the plateau, there are breathtaking views of the Borborema valley. The diverse landscape consists of small trees, bushes, cacti, and bromeliads. Sightings of emu birds, an ostrich-like avian, are common in this area.

Brazil’s most important prehistoric site, Souza is located deep in the Paraíba interior, almost on the border with Ceará. It was a large shallow lake where hundreds of dinosaur species roamed, 130 million years ago. Today, the dry riverbed of the Rio de Peixe, also known as the Vale dos Dinossauros, contains one of the world’s best collections of dinosaur tracks. The largest and best track forms a perfect 164-ft (50-m) long trail across the meandering riverbed.

Scattered throughout the valley are numerous other tracks, most of which have not yet been catalogued or protected. Some, indeed, have yet to be discovered. Manary Ecotours can combine trips in this area with visits to Cariri.

A night scene of Campina Grande, lit up during the Festas Juninas

FESTAS JUNINAS

One of the most popular folklore traditions of the Northeast, the Festas Juninas began as a peasant celebration of the corn harvest and the June solstice, the longest night of the year in the Southern Hemisphere. June also coincided with the feasts of St. Anthony, St. John, and St. Peter. Over the years, the pagan rituals and Catholic events were melded together. The atmosphere is burlesque, as partiers dress up in peasant outfits and perform square dances to the sounds of forró (see p236). Bonfires are lit and fireworks sent aloft to safeguard the harvest and ward off evil spirits, as well as to bring light to the long night.

The Sertão

The sertão is a geographic region that encompasses almost half the territory of the Northeast. Aridity is its single most important characteristic. Rainfall is sparse, and the vegetation is primarily caatinga, which consists of small trees and bushes. Agriculture is difficult in the sertão, which makes it one of Brazil's poorest regions.

Traditionally, sertanejos have made a living herding goats or cattle. One of the country's original cowboy regions,

Clay figurine of a nordestino the sertão has also seen the largest outflow of people in Brazil. Hard climatic conditions forced en masse immigrations either to the coast, or to the big cities such as São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro. Not just the dislocated northeasterners, or nordestinos, but all Brazilians have an affinity for the sertão way of life. While forró music is loved throughout the country, Brazil's popular culture abounds with sertanejo stories and images.

Caatinga, the vegetation growing in this arid landscape, consists of cacti, bromeliads, and scrubby trees and bushes. These plant species are suitable to the challenging conditions of the sertão.

After a sudden rain, the dry land will turn green and lush for a short period.

Palma cactus is often the only food available to livestock. The tough, chewy leaves are ground into a paste and used as cattle feed.

The goat is the most important livestock in the sertão. More adaptable than other animals, it thrives in the dry and hot conditions. It is an important source of meat, milk, and leather.

Rio São Francisco is one of the main water sources in the sertão. Large irrigation projects are using the water to make agriculture possible. Many areas in Pernambuco grow fruits and vegetables.

Nordestino markets are where homesick communities of migrants from the Northeast meet, listen to forró, and eat some of their favorite foods. São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro have the largest sertanejo immigrant communities.

Luiz Gonzaga (1912–89), Brazil's most famous "Son of the Sertão," was a forró musician. Most of his songs celebrated or lamented the life of those living in the sertão.

Natal 5

Rio Grande do Norte. 710,000.
Centro de Turismo, (084) 3211 6149. Carnatal (Dec).

Natal is a pleasant, modern, and safe city, increasingly sought out as a sunshine destination for winter-weary Europeans. Natal has several attractions, including beautiful beaches, dune buggy rides, unusual sand art, and an incredible nightlife. The city and its most famous landmark, Forte dos Reis Magos, date back to December 25, 1598, when the Portuguese established a fort and settlement at the mouth of the Rio Potengi. In honor of the season, the city was named Natal, the Portuguese word for Christmas. The fort was named after the three wise kings of the east who had traveled to Bethlehem bearing gifts. The Dutch occupied the fort in 1633, upgrading it into its current five-pointed formation before turning it back over to the Portuguese in 1654. Access to the fort is via a narrow pedestrian walkway. At high tide, the fort is cut off from land by the waves. Visitors have the full run of the fort, from garrisons and mess hall to the high ramparts, which offer terrific views of the city skyline.

Natal was never a large trading center, and there are few historic buildings. The city's 19th century penitentiary has been converted into the Centro de Turismo, a showcase for regional arts and crafts. Each of the dozens of prison cells along four corridors has been transformed into a shop selling leatherwork, hammocks, lace, and figurines from northeastern folk festivals. A restaurant and a cafeteria offer some regional dishes. On Thursday evenings,

Sand art in bottle

the courtyard of the old prison becomes an outdoor dance hall, as the center plays host to forró com o turista, an evening of forró dancing, with live music and instructors on hand to help shy and left-footed foreigners with the dance steps. Most visitors to Natal stay in Ponta Negra, a waterfront neighborhood in a modern part of the city featuring a lovely long beach with good waves for surfing. At the far end of the beach the Morro do Careca, a towering 390-ft (120-m) sand dune, is now off-limits to climbers because of the danger of erosion.

On the coast between the old downtown and the modern parts of Natal stands the Parque das Dunas, a 12-sq mile (6-sq km) reserve of coastal dunes. The park has several trails, but can only be visited with a guide.

FORRÓ

According to local legend, the musical style known as forró is said to have been inspired by visiting foreigners. In the early days of World War II, the Americans created a massive air base near the city. Locals invited the American airmen to their parties, and to make sure they felt welcome they put up signs proclaiming that simplified dances with a two-step rhythm, were “for all.” The label stuck to the musical style, though in common speech “for all” became forró.

Rota do Sol Beaches 6

Heading south from Natal on the Rota do Sol (Route of the Sun), there are beaches and more beaches, stretching from the edge of the city to the far southern border of the state. Variety is the key feature of this golden stretch of coast. There are beaches with small reefs and little surf, and others with strong and steady waves, much loved by avid surfers. There are deserted beaches surrounded by tall dunes, accessible only by dune buggy or 4WD, far from the hustle and bustle of even the smallest fishing village. Other beaches, particularly Pipa, are full to bursting with energetic young Brazilians.

Genipabu 7

Rio Grande do Norte. 5,000.
 Natal Airport. Associação dos Bugueiros do Rio Grande do Norte, (084) 3225 2077.

The main reason to visit Genipabu is to experience the magnificent dunes. This small town is located north of Natal, close to the edge of an impressive landscape of shifting sands that pile up into high dunes and plunge down to the edge of the Atlantic Ocean. Though it is possible to ride a camel through the dunes or sand-board down them, the best way to enjoy these enormous ridges of sand is behind the roll bar of a dune buggy with an experienced driver at the wheel. The Parque Dunas de Genipabu is the perfect place to start. This area of 164-ft (50-m) tall shifting dunes is off-limits to all but licensed buggy drivers who know their way around every hump and dip. Passengers have the option of requesting a ride “com ou sem emoção” (with or without the thrills and heart palpitations). Well worth requesting, the thrill-ride is an amazing roller-coaster of maneuvers up and down along the slippery front faces of the dunes, descending at almost 90-degree angles before zooming straight up another dune on the far side.

The best time of day to visit the Parque das Dunas is in the afternoon, to enjoy the lovely golden sunset over the dunes after the ride.

Maracajaú 8

Rio Grande do Norte. at low tide only.

Maracajaú's coral reefs offer one of the best spots for snorkeling along the whole of Brazil's north coast. The reefs lie approximately 4 miles (7 km) offshore. At low tide, the receding ocean leaves the reefs from just 3 to 9 ft (1 to 3 m) underwater, and forms natural pools, called parrachos, which combine the beauty of the tranquil water with a spectacular array of marine-life. They are shallow enough for snorkelers and swimmers to observe dozens of species of colorful, tropical fish trapped inside the reefs. The water is crystal clear and warm round the year, making it a popular destination for scuba divers and swimmers alike. Tour operators offer scuba diving trips, but the water is so shallow, it is hardly worth the effort or expense.

The best way to reach Maracajaú is by a dune buggy, departing from Natal (or Genipabu) and traveling north along the white, sandy beaches. Check the tide tables to time the journey in order to arrive in Maracajaú at, or a few hours before, low tide. The large Manoia Water Park, replete with slides and swimming pools, en route to the coral reefs in Maracajaú, is an enjoyable stop for children.

The Costa Branca lies in the extreme northwest of Rio Grande do Norte. Starting at Porto do Mangue, it stretches across the villages of Areia Branca and Grossos and ends at Tibau. The name “Costa Branca” refers to both the white dunes and the salt works found along this coast. The region has not yet been discovered by mass tourism, and its beaches, mangroves, dunes, and lagoons are blissfully devoid of crowds. Praia do Rosado, just west of Porto do Mangue, is famous for its pinkish sand dunes. The red soil underneath the shifting dunes mixes with the white sand of the beach giving the dunes an unusual and distinctly soft, pink hue.

The largest village on this coast, Areia Branca has around 20,000 residents and offers the best tourist facilities for those wanting to spend a few days exploring the region. Tibau is the last village in Rio Grande do Norte, right on the border with Ceará. Its beach is mostly used by residents of the inland city of Mossoró. Local artisans use sand from the colored dunes to make artistic and pretty designs inside small glass bottles.

Located 34 miles (55 km) inland from the coast, Mossoró is, in many ways, the archetypal sertão town of the northeastern interior. The main places of interest in Mossoró are connected to a glorious moment in history in 1924, when the townspeople fought off an attack by the legendary bandit leader Lampião and his gang of outlaws. The event is still commemorated every June 13 with great ceremony.

Mossoró is an ideal jumping-off point for visiting the Lajedo de Soledade, an archaeological site. Its limestone rocks were formed more than 90 million years ago. Tours begin at the visitors' center, at the Museu de Soledade. From here, visitors can depart on a guided walk featuring 10,000-year-old rock paintings, and impressive fossils containing the remains of extinct animals, including saber-tooth tigers.

REPENTISTAS

Repentista is a popular form of entertainment in the interior of the Northeast. Its singers engage in a two-man musical duel, making their rhymes up on the spot, trying to score points off their opponent. Singers sometimes accompany themselves with a tambourine or the melodious viola nordestina, developed from the Portuguese seven-string guitar. The singing duelists take turns singing out a stanza, trying to win the favor of the audience by making fun of their opponent, preferably with a clever bit of rhyme. The adversary's manhood, sexual prowess, and ancestry are common topics, but politics and day-to-day events also play into the mix. In big cities with significant nordestino populations, such as São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro, repentistas make money on the downtown streets by creating impromptu songs to entertain homesick migrants.

In just over three decades, Canoa Quebrada has transformed from a sleepy fishing village to a popular hippy hangout in the 1970s, and now a mainstream beach resort. According to a legend, the name Canoa Quebrada, meaning “Broken Canoe,” originated with a Portuguese skipper who wrecked his ship close to shore and donated the useless craft to local fishermen. Never having seen such a craft before, locals named it a broken canoe.

The beaches of Canoa Quebrada, featuring red cliffs, fine sand, and offshore reefs, attract many visitors today. The village itself is a bustling place, known for its cafés and restaurants, and for the bars and clubs lining the main cobblestone street. It is also famous for its lacework. Even at the busiest times, however, it is not difficult to get away from the crowds and find a spot on one of the more deserted beaches or high sand dunes surrounding Canoa Quebrada. Buggy tours are a popular way to get out of town. The tour to Ponta Grossa, 18 miles (30 km) southeast, travels along miles of empty beaches framed by high red sandstone cliffs. Other activities include kite-surfing, riding, and sailing on a jangada (sailboat).

About 6 miles (10 km) northwest is the small town of Aracati. It is one of the few historic towns in this part of Northeast Brazil. An important center for the 18th-century cattle industry, Aracati has several buildings dating back to this time. Most noteworthy is the Mercado Central (Central Market), dating back to the 1700s, still used as the town’s daily open-air market on Rua Pompeu.

The spectacular Ubajara Cave in Parque Nacional de Ubajara

Surrounded by dunes and lagoons, Jeri (as locals call it) is a place for those who like water, waves, and wind. From June to January, the winds pick up and kite-surfers, windsurfers, and sailors from around the world flock to Jeri.

Dune buggies are used to explore the surrounding beaches and dunes and visit the various lagoons. The most beautiful are Lagoa Azul and Lagoa Paraíso, located about 12 miles (20 km) east of the village. Jeri's postcard view is that of Pedra Furada, a basalt outcrop, on the edge of the sea with a 13-ft (4-m) hole in the middle. It sits on the beach at Praia Malhada, about 2 miles (3 km) east, a 15-minute walk from the village. Located almost exactly halfway between Fortaleza and Teresina, the Parque Nacional de Ubajara is the smallest national park in Brazil.

Located close to the small town of Ubajara, the park features the Ubajara Cave. The entrance to the cave can be reached either by cable car or via a steep, marked trail through the forest. The 3,937-ft (1,200-m) long cave is filled with stalactites and stalagmites, the work of several patient centuries of erosion and calcium deposition.

Fifteen chambers totaling 3,674 ft (1,120 m) have been mapped, of which 1,182 ft (360 m) are open to visitors. Eight galleries are lit up to display some of the amazing formations that have taken shape inside the cave. The main formations seen inside are Pedra do Sino (Bell Stone), Salas da Rosa (Rose Rooms), Sala do Cavallo (Horse Room), and Sala dos Retratos (Portrait Room). The cave is also home to 14 different types of bat.

The elevation gain is just over 1,640 ft (500 m), and the trail leading up to the cave, though rather strenuous, offers some spectacular views of the Serra da Ipiapaba and several waterfalls and beautiful natural pools. The hike takes about two hours, one way. There are also many local guides available here to show visitors around the park's eco trails, caves, and waterfalls.

BUGGIES

Dune buggies are found everywhere on Brazil's northeastern coast. Essentially a Volkswagen Beetle chassis with a fiberglass body and soft, fat tires, the Brazilian dune buggy is the perfect vehicle for exploring the endless beaches and towering sand dunes that characterize Northeast Brazil.

Popular places to buggy here are Genipabu (see p238), just north of Natal, and Cumbuco and Canoa Quebrada, respectively north and south of Fortaleza. They all feature towering mountains of sand, and dune buggy drivers are trained to make the most of them.

High speed runs up, down, and along the sheer, steep face of sand dunes are among the most hair-raising maneuvers one can expect from such a tour.

Multiday buggy expeditions include tours from Natal to Fortaleza, nearly 311 miles (500 km) of untouched sand.

Statue of Iracema waiting for her lover

THE STORY OF IRACEMA

Written by José de Alencar in 1865, the story of Iracema tells of the love that a Tabajara princess bore for Martim, a white Portuguese settler. Iracema uses magic to make Martim fall in love with her, and is ostracized by her community. Away from her people, she loses her magical powers and her lover. A statue of Iracema on Meireles beach is located where, according to legend, she stood awaiting the return of her beloved.

Praia de Iracema

Just east of the city center lies the Praia de Iracema. Though called a beach, it is actually the very urban former port, now renovated and transformed into the city's most popular nightlife and restaurant area. The centerpiece of the area is a long ocean pier called Ponte dos Ingleses (Englishman's Pier), first built in 1920, and modeled on the piers of Brighton. Many restaurants occupy other original turn-of-the-19th-century buildings in the area. Locally famous nightlife spots include Piratas (open Mondays), and Lupus Bier, known for its Wednesday-evening folklore and variety show.

Praia de Meireles

The city's prettiest urban beach is lined with thick groves of coconut palms and waterside cafés, although the water is not considered good for swimming. Meireles is a great place for strolling,

Praia de Cumbuco

21 miles (33 km) W of town. Cumbuco is the city's favorite beach playground. The Lagoa da Banana offers a wide variety of watersports, including jet-skiing, boating, banana boating, and kayaking. Lagoa do Parnamirim, just south of Cumbuco, is surrounded by tall dunes, making it the perfect spot for "ski-bunda" (bum-skiing), where skiers sit on a wooden board and slide down the side of the dune into the lagoon. Other sport activities on offer here include horseback riding and sailing on jangadas, or single-sail rafts.

PIAUI & MARANHÃO

Although part of the Northeast, Piauí and Maranhão are different from the rest of the region culturally and geographically. Both states have violent histories. Piauí was the site of many skirmishes between the indigenous population and cattle herders, and Maranhão was forcibly settled in 1612 by the French. Today, the area is abundant in natural and cultural riches.

Unlike its southern neighbors, Piauí was settled by ranchers on horseback pushing northwards from the sugar plantations of Bahia in the late 1700s.

Largely visited in transit, Piauí is sparsely populated and possibly the poorest state in Brazil. The economy here is greatly dependent on agriculture and livestock. The only significant industry revolves around the carnaúba palm, which yields a wax that is an important ingredient of shellac. However, Piauí boasts a few fascinating natural attractions. The state capital, Teresina, located more than 186 miles (300 km) inland, is the only capital in Northeast Brazil which is not on the ocean, and has some interesting sights.

For many years after they first came to Brazil, the Portuguese showed little interest in the area that now forms Maranhão. Taking advantage of the Portuguese neglect of the Maranhão coast, the French, in 1612, landed a sizable force and founded São Luís, named in honor of King Louis XIII. Portuguese forces laid siege for four years to drive the new French colony out.

Maranhão's golden age came in the 19th century, with a rich agricultural export economy based on cotton and sugar. Ports such as São Luís and Alcântara grew wealthy. When slavery was abolished in 1888, Maranhão sugar and cotton industries collapsed, causing an economic slump that lasted for most of the 20th century.

Maranhão is today an exciting destination, both in terms of natural and cultural treasures. The state's main festival, Bumba-meu-boi, celebrates the indigenous, Portuguese, and African cultures.

Exploring Piauí & Maranhão

Most of Piauí's attractions are a long way from the coast. The Serra da Capivara is one of the largest archaeological sites in the world, containing more than 30,000 prehistoric rock paintings. The only important destination on Piauí's tiny 41-mile (66-km) coastline is the town of Parnaíba. It sits at the edge of the Delta do Parnaíba, one of the largest deep-water river deltas in the world, and a new ecotourism destination. Most of the delta itself lies in Maranhão.

Its capital, São Luís, rivals Salvador for its collection of restored colonial homes and heritage buildings. Outside of São Luís, the biggest draw is a spectacular region of stark beauty in the form of coastal sand dunes known as Lençóis Maranhenses.

GETTING AROUND

The São Luís airport in Maranhão has international flights, and Piauí's capital city Teresina can be reached by flights en route to São Luís. There are buses linking almost every town in this region, but roads are in very poor condition. It is also possible to rent a car. The inland attractions of Piauí are far from Teresina, and from each other, so travel well equipped with plenty of gas, water, and supplies.

Most of Maranhão's highlights are on the coast. The Lençóis Maranhenses are best accessed from Barreirinhas, located just on the edge of the Lençóis Maranhenses National Park. From São Luís, it is a 45-minute flight in a single-engine plane, or a four-hour drive. Once there, most excursions are by boat or in a 4WD, as there are no paved roads in the region.

The name Sete Cidades (Seven Cities) refers to seven distinct and unusual rock formations, spread out in the park along 7 miles (12 km) of trails. Only the first six are accessible to the public. Sculpted by rain, wind, heat, and erosion, the rocks resemble animals, people, mythological beings, and even man-made structures. Among the shapes are Mapa do Brasil, a backward facing map of Brazil and Biblioteca (Library) in Quarta Cidade (Fourth City). Segundo Cidade, the second of the seven “cities” has a 147-ft (45-m) tall lookout with views out over five of the cities of stone. There are also more than 2,000 prehistoric rock paintings, some 6,000 years old. The most impressive painting, Pedra de Inscrição (Inscribed Rock), said to be marked with cryptic Indian runes, can be seen at Quinta Cidade (Fifth City). Other formations include Pedra do Elefante (Elephant Rock) at Sexta Cidade (Sixth City), and lookout points such as the Arco de Triunfo (Triumphal Arch), a 59-ft (18-m) tall arch-shaped rock, which lies between Quarta Cidade and Quinta Cidade.

CRISPIM, THE BOWL HEAD

A popular Piauí legend tells the story of Crispim, a fisherman who lived by the banks of the Rio Parnaíba. He came home one day frustrated after not having caught any fish. Outraged with the meager lunch of beef bone soup, Crispim took up a large bone and beat his mother. As she lay dying, she cursed him, condemning him to live in the river as a bowl-headed monster. The curse would be lifted when he devoured seven virgins named Maria. Locals still tell of spotting Crispim in the river, looking for virgins to eat.

Delta do Parnaíba & Parque Nacional dos Lençóis Maranhenses 4

The Delta do Parnaíba stretches roughly from the Piauí border some 56 miles (90 km) farther up the coast in Maranhão, where the Rio Parnaíba runs into the sea. Shaped like a hand, the river breaks into five fingers, meandering through some 83 islands. Small villages thrive on sea salt, cashews, and crabs. Tourism is still in its infancy. Straddling Piauí and Maranhão, the Parque Nacional Lençóis Maranhenses offers over 600 sq miles (1,555 sq km) of spectacular white sand dunes created by strong coastal winds. From May to August, rain collects in the basins between dunes, forming countless crystal-clear freshwater lagoons. In June, when the water levels are at their highest, the Lençóis dunes look like an array of white stripes, interspersed with sparkling ribbons of blue, turquoise, and green.

THE VERSATILE BURITI PALM TREE

The delta area's dense vegetation is dominated by the multipurpose buriti palm tree. The fruit can be eaten or used for wine. The trunk is used for house poles, while the fronds make thatch roofs and baskets. Buriti fiber is crucial for the strong but limber pouch used to squeeze the poison from manioc root. The twigs make good placemats. The seeds can be fashioned into jewelry, and the bark can be spun into twine.

São Luís

One of Brazil's finest examples of Portuguese colonial architecture, São Luís was ironically founded by the French in 1612, and later taken over by Dutch invaders. In 1644, the city was finally settled under Portuguese rule, serving as the export point for sugar and cotton. Expensive houses and buildings covered with brightly colored Portuguese tiles were built in the city's urban center. By the late 1800s, with slavery at an end, São Luís went into a decline. At the end of the 1970s, the state government began to invest in preserving the city's historic center. In 1997, the historical core of São Luís was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

José Sarney Bridge connecting the historic district to São Francisco, São Luís

Exploring São Luís

The rich and diverse historical center of São Luís makes it ideal for touring on foot. This is the oldest part of the city, known interchangeably as the Praia Grande, the Reviver, and the Centro Histórico. All the city's museums and beautifully preserved historic sites are located here.

The Casa do Maranhão is one of the city's most interesting museums, offering two floors of colorful exhibits that elaborately explain the Festa do Bumba-meu-boi.

The Centro de Cultura Popular (also known as the Casa da Festa) is dedicated to showcasing the traditions and customs of the Festa do Divino Espírito Santo. The highlights of the museum are the poster-size photographs of the actual celebrations, including some compelling black-and-white images of the elderly women who have served as festival queens.

The building that once housed the city slave market is now home to the Cafua das Mercês, also known as the Museu do Negro. This small museum contains numerous artifacts from the slave era, including musical instruments and tribal artwork, and sinister tools of the slave trade, such as shackles and instruments of torture. One of the more poignant monuments is the Pelourinho, or the whipping post, on display in the museum's central courtyard.

The José Sarney Bridge leads from the Centro Histórico into the newer parts of the city. Across the bridge lies São Francisco, the city's small central business district. Just beyond São Francisco, there is a large freshwater lake, the Lagoa de Jansen, circled by a boardwalk with a number of bars and restaurants. Much calmer than the Centro Histórico, it is a very popular place to stroll in the evenings. São Luís is blessed with a string of excellent beaches, all of which can be easily accessed by bus from the Terminal de Integração in the city center.

Farther south, beyond the Lagoa de Jansen, the popular beaches are Ponta d'Areia, São Marcos, Praia do Calhau, Calhau, and Olho d'Água. Calhau, located 6 miles (10 km) from São Luís, is considered by many to be one of the nicest beaches around the city. Many busy kiosks and restaurants line the beachside boulevard. The quiet far end of the beach, where the water is calm and restaurants fewer, is known as Caolho.

Just across from São Luís, Alcântara lies on the other side of the Baía de São Marcos. The city was founded by the Portuguese in the 1640s, and used as a temporary capital and base during the campaign to drive the Dutch away from São Luís. Alcântara reached its zenith in the 19th century as

BUMBA-MEU-BOI

A unique folklore event endemic to Northeast Brazil, the Festa do Bumba-meu-boi revolves around a legendary folktale about the life, death, and resurrection of a magical Brazilian bull. Over the centuries, the celebration has grown into a huge carnival-esque festival, with different neighborhood groups competing to put on the best re-enactment of the story. In São Luís alone, more than 100 groups take to the streets. A papier-mâché bull is created each year and displayed in raucous parades, where participants take on the roles of medicine men, Indians, peasants, and cowboys. The largest celebrations take place in the second half of June. The music is upbeat and lively, with different groups using different rhythms and instruments.

Pillory, restored mansions, and ruin of a church in Alcântara the regional center for the surrounding sugar and cotton plantations. It was the place where wealthy slave-owning aristocrats built their splendid city mansions. When slavery was abolished in 1888, the local economy crashed, the white upper class departed, and many of the fine mansions stood abandoned.

Appreciation of Alcântara's heritage value began as early as the 1950s, but restoration has been slow and quite a few of its churches and mansions remain as ruins, giving the city its own charm. These ruins are now the town's main tourist attractions. Day-trippers from São Luís come here to stroll the quiet cobblestoned streets, peer among the ruins, and admire the often brightly-tiled mansions of this former colonial capital.

The Brazilian Heritage Institute, Iphan, has restored several of the old mansions as museums. The best is the Casa Histórica do Iphan, featuring period furniture and glassware. Informative wall plaques and well-trained guides make getting around easy in the museum.

Another attraction to Alcântara is the Festa do Divino Espírito Santo, a vibrant religious festival held in May every year.

One of the world's largest wetlands, the Reentrâncias Maranhenses is also one of Maranhão's more off-the-beaten-track natural attractions. The small town of Cururupu to the north of São Luís offers the best access to the Reentrâncias Maranhenses, with boats departing regularly.

Spread over an area of 10,350 sq miles (26,800 sq km), the Reentrâncias Maranhenses forms an important habitat for shore-birds such as scarlet ibis, spoonbills, whimbrels, egrets, willets, ruddy turnstones, and black-bellied plovers, as well as an array of marine-life, including sea turtles and manatees. Many species of fish and crustaceans are also found in the Reentrâncias.

The region is geographically diverse and consists of a complex riverine system of extensive bays, coves, and rugged coastline covered mainly by mangrove forest. Many low-lying islands are also found here.

In order to protect the flora and fauna of this region, the Reentrâncias Maranhenses was designated an Area de Proteção Ambiental (Area of Environmental Protection) and was also made a Ramsar site (a wetland site listed under the Convention on Wetlands of International Importance) in 1993.

One of the more popular destinations here is the Ilha dos Lençóis, to the northeast of Cururupu. The island's geography somewhat resembles the Lençóis Maranhenses (see pp250–51), with its endless landscapes of dunes and lagoons.

A small community of 300 people live here and still practice subsistence fishing. Some of them are descendants of the Filhos da Lua (Sons of the Moon), an albino community that settled here in the beginning of the 20th century. The isolation and flooding was harsh on the residents, and not many survived. Some of the fishermen work as local tour guides for a small fee.

AMAZONAS, RORAIMA, ACRE &
RONDÔNIA 276-289

Introducing Northern Brazil

The six states of Pará, Amapá, Amazonas, Roraima, Acre, and Rondônia cover almost half of Brazil. Northern Brazil was relatively quiet until the rubber boom in the late 19th century. With expansive savannas to the north, and a rich diversity of flora and fauna in the east, today the region's economy is sustained by traditional forest products. Belém, Manaus, Santarém, Rio Branco, and Porto Velho, cities created by the rubber industry, are growing fast, connecting Amazônia to the outside world.

Boa Vista's Monte Roraima (see p288), with its massive uplifted plateau, inspired Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's book The Lost World.

Rio Branco (see p288) was founded during the rubber boom. Today, it is better known for its sustainable rubber-tapping forest reserves.

Madeira-Mamoré Museu Ferroviário (see p289), in Porto Velho, houses several impressive locomotive steam engines, antique carriages, and other railway paraphernalia.

The river scenery of Santarém (see p274), known for its serene beauty, is the primary reason for visiting this popular Amazon port town.

The old port of Belém (see pp268–9) possesses more character than any other sector of the city. Attractive fishing boats bob up and down in the harbor, with the large old white fort on one side and the colorful Ver o Peso market on the other.

Ilha de Marajó (see p270) is the world's largest inland river island. Its eastern half is savanna dotted with small woodland copses.

PARÁ & AMAPÁ
(see pp264–75)

The Amazon river (see pp284–7), known as Rio Solimões in its upper reaches, was first identified by Vicente Yáñez Pinzón. Its lower reaches are called Rio Negro.

Teatro Amazonas (see pp282–3), in Manaus, exudes the opulence of its rubber-boom architects. It took the finest of materials and the most skilled of craftsmen to re-create an Italian Renaissance-style edifice, with a steel structure from Scotland and marble imported from Italy.

The Amazon Ecosystem

Tree frog

Brazil has over 1.3 million sq miles (3.5 million sq km) of rainforest, the largest in the world. This massive river system contains a fifth of the world's fresh running water at any moment. The Amazon is home to a variety of plant, bird, fish and insect species. From the air, its magnificent canopy hides a variety of ecosystems, many with dramatic seasonal changes. Between December and April, visitors explore the flooded forest swamps and creeks that offer access to the fascinating flora and fauna.

ECOLOGICAL CONCERN

An estimated 208,495 sq miles (540,000 sq km) of the rainforest is reported to have been destroyed by indiscriminate felling. Stringent measures being taken to save this ecological treasure include expansion of protected areas and sustainable use of forest resources.

Rubber trees (Hevea brasiliensis) growing on river banks are the source of valuable latex, which is later transformed into rubber.

The ceiba tree (Ceiba pentandra), with elegant buttress roots that surround the trunk's base, is the biggest tree in the Amazon, with an average height of 120 ft (37 m).

Walking palms appear to migrate across the forest floor due to their characteristic stilt roots loosely attached to the ground.

Flowering bromeliads are epiphytes that gather water and nutrients from raindrops on leaves as well as from dew.

Pau-d'arco-amarelo bears bright yellow flowers from August to November, while shedding all its leaves.

The black water owes its color to its source in low-lying forests where rotting vegetation is absorbed into the river system.

FAUNA

One of the world's most diverse ecosystems, the Amazon harbors an infinite variety of animal life. There are plenty of remote areas that provide habitats for jaguars, tapirs, and wild pigs. However, spotting these elusive creatures is difficult. Monkeys, sloths, and alligators are more commonly sighted.

The emerald tree boa is not venomous, but feeds on rodents and small animals of the forest.

Hoatzins, one of the most primitive of birds, live in flocks and build their nests in low canopy trees.

The three-toed sloth inhabits the forest canopy, moving incredibly slowly in search of its vegetarian diet of fruits, leaves, and sprouting plants.

Tapirs, the largest of all Amazon mammals, can weigh up to 661 lb (300 kg). These vegetarians take refuge in water to escape danger.

Freshwater river dolphins, both gray and pink, live in the main rivers and lakes of the Amazon basin.

Piranhas are known for their razor-sharp teeth. Only a few species pose a threat to larger animals.

The People of Amazônia

Approximately 345,000 indigenous people, distributed among 215 groups, live in Brazil. Each group has its own unique dialect, mythology, arts, and culture. A majority of them are semi-nomadic, and live by hunting, gathering, fishing, and migratory farming. These indigenous people live in close harmony with the rhythms of the rainforest, and conservation and sustainability are an integral part of their life. The degree of exposure to western society varies greatly. Some people, such as the nomadic Maku, are incredibly isolated, while others, such as the literate Ticuna (see p26), are heavily reliant on modern Brazilian society.

YANOMAMI PEOPLE

The Yanomami live in the rainforests of southern Venezuela and Northern Brazil. One of the most recently contacted tribes in Amazônia, they number around 20,000 today. Considered fierce warriors, the tribe consists of four subdivisions, each with its distinct language.

During Rehao, a yearly ceremony of paying obeisance to the dead, the Yanomami decorate their arms and shoulders with colorful feathers.

The patterns painted on a Yanomami adult have an aesthetic, as well as magical and religious significance.

Hammocks, slung under palm leaf roofs along the inside perimeter of the circular hut, are commonly used by old and young alike.

TUKANO PEOPLE

The name Tukano is used for a number of ethnolinguistic subgroups living in northwestern Brazil along the Rio Uapés. The individual groups live in communal houses. These are spaced out along the river at a distance of several hours by canoe. The Tukano grow bitter manioc and cultivate sweet potato, peanut, and plantain.

The traditional flute, played by male initiates, is characterized by a piercing echo. The flute is believed to be the earthly manifestation of spirits which dominate the magical and religious world of the Tukano.

Tukano handicrafts are sold in local markets, or used as trade items favored by non-indigenous people in the area.

The maloca, a hut made from wood and palm leaves, provides shelter to the whole village.

IMPACT OF GLOBALIZATION

The need for national development, fueled by globalization, is prompting the government of Brazil to enforce economic policies that are inimical to the tribal way of life. Pipelines to expand fuel production, and highway projects for transporting goods for global enterprises, are opening up indigenous lands to loggers, miners, ranchers, and colonists. The positive impact of globalization may be easier access to the modern world, including medicines, education, and tools.

KAYAPÓ PEOPLE

Around 7,000 Kayapós live in the Amazon River Basin in an area the size of Austria, with villages along the Rio Xingú. Circles are one of the tribe's main symbols, representing the course of the sun and moon. Body paint, which is worn at all times, is equally symbolic. The Kayapó also wear ear plugs and lip discs, according to which their social status can be determined, particularly their right to speak and be heard.

Ritual communal dancing constitutes a crucial part of the Kayapó celebration of important events in the year. This is the time when Kayapó men and women show off their interesting beaddresses – usually made from macaw and parrot feathers – and other ritual adornments.

A large lip disc is worn by older Kayapó men. Its size increases with the age and importance of the person within the community. Children and women usually wear ear discs.

Beautiful bead

bracelets, created by Kayapó women, bear geometric designs with symbolic meanings. These are similar to the brightly colored patterns painted on their bodies with vegetable dyes.

ASHANINKA PEOPLE

Originally from Peru, the Ashaninka fled to parts of Brazil to escape the rubber boom from 1839 to 1913. Still possessing a fairly traditional material culture, the Ashaninka wear long cushmas that the women weave from cotton grown in small forest gardens. They make a living from hunting, fishing, and small-scale gardening. Rice, coffee, and chocolate supplement their way of life with bought-in goods including metal tools and soaps.

Red face paint is traditionally applied by most of the Ashaninka people. The strong color comes from seeds of the garden-grown annatto bush.

Small dugout canoes or balsawood rafts are regularly used by the riverine Ashaninka for traveling on the rivers along with their families.

Ashaninka women weave cotton cloth on primitive back-strap looms, almost every day, to make the men's pretty robes.

PARÁ & AMAPÁ

The states of Pará and Amapá in the eastern Amazon are the gateway to the world's largest river basin. In many ways, they are different from one another. Pará covers an enormous surface area, and has benefited from the natural wealth of the Amazon rainforest. Much smaller than Pará, Amapá is relatively poor. Both states rely on the mineral extraction industry.

It is the Amazon river itself that brings most visitors to this part of Brazil. Pará stretches west as far as the straits of Óbidos, where the river suddenly becomes narrow. This happens due to a geological meeting of the Guyana Shield from the north and the Brazilian Shield from the south. North of the Amazon, Amapá occupies an isolated region, stretching from the Amazon delta all the way to the borders of French Guyana and Suriname.

Pará has many places of cultural and ecological interest. The capital city, Belém, has been a vital Atlantic port since the colonial era, and still boasts many extravagant period buildings. Santarém, another sizeable city, is a busy and attractive river port replete with fascinating beaches. The massive island, Ilha de Marajó, which has vast areas of mangrove swamps, some splendid beaches, and a scattering of resorts, is located in the heart of the Amazon river delta.

Pará is also known for large modern iron ore mines, such as Grande Carajás and the older gold mine of Serra Pelada, once infamous for the vast scale of human labor used for extraction. In southern Pará, the rainforest transforms into caatinga, a scrubby savanna landscape.

Once exploited for its natural resources, Amapá is now making concerted efforts towards sustainable development. More than half of the state is under environmental protection. Macapá, the state capital of Amapá, lies on the equator. The English, Dutch, and French clamored for a base in this part of Amazon, before the Portuguese settled at Macapá in 1738.

Exploring Pará & Amapá

Even with their widespread rainforest canopy, which can only be seen clearly from the air, it is ocean and river travel that have long been the hallmark of Pará and Amapá states. The sights include the tasteful, restored historic buildings of Belém in Pará, along with the verdant forest-edged Amazon river, as well as splendid riverine beaches such as Alter do Chão, close to Santarém, and those found on the Ilha de Marajó. Macapá, the capital of Amapá, with its refreshing sea breeze, was founded around the Forte de São José. It lies on the equator in a strategic position on the north side of the Amazon river estuary. More than half of the state is under environmental protection.

GETTING AROUND

Rivers are the transport arteries of Pará, where virtually every village has some form of riverboat service. There are regular riverboat services connecting Belém, Macapá, and Santarém. While there are very few bus routes in Pará, most access is by road in Amapá. However, the roads are mainly unsurfaced, and bus travel during the rainy season can be treacherous in both states. Air services are widespread. Belém and Macapá can be reached from most cities in Brazil by air. There are daily flights from Belém to most places in the Amazon.

Belém 1

The attractive city of Belém was founded by the Portuguese in 1616 to guard the mouth of the Amazon river against other European powers. As the Amazon region's resources, mainly spices, were exploited, the city soon became a major trading port. It was ravaged during the 1835 Cabanagem Rebellion, when the poor settlers attacked the wealthy local elite. By the end of the 19th century, Belém had more than recovered its economic position, largely due to the rubber boom. It is still the most important port in Northern Brazil, and a fascinating place from which to explore the wealth of colonial and republican architecture.

Incredibly hectic early in the morning, Ver o Peso, or "See the Weight," was originally a colonial customs point (Posto Fiscal), where goods were assessed for taxation purposes. These days, its most obvious feature is the iron-built fish market, the Mercado de Ferro, which was designed and made in England and assembled here in the late 19th century. The variety of seafood inside is staggering. Outside, the main market expands into stalls that sell everything from jungle fruits and farinha (manioc, or cassava-root, flour) to medicinal herbs and aromatic oils. The market extends along the promenade where there are further stalls and kiosks selling craft goods and local food specialties.

TRANSAMAZÔNICA

Until the middle of the 20th century, river boat or mule trail were the only viable forms of travel across Amazônia and Northern Brazil. With the ambitious construction of Highway BR-230, during the late 1960s, the Atlantic port of Belém was effectively connected all the way to the Peruvian border. Known as the Transamazônica, this road is in a poor state of repair along much of its length. In 2005, a river bridge to Peru was opened in the remote jungle state of Acre, completing the Brazilian end of the Transamazônica.

The town of Salinópolis, locally known as Salinas, is just about as far east as the Amazon river delta reaches. Very much the traditional summer resort for city folk, Salinas has plenty of beaches fringed with beach huts and second homes. The busiest beach is the central Praia do Macarico, with several bars and restaurants. More pleasant still, there is the Praia do Atalaia, not far from the center of town, backed by sand dunes and well provided with barracas (tents) for food and drink. A continuation of this beach, the Praia do Farol Velho, is thickly lined with beach houses, and is most popular during July, when it can often get rather crowded.

Environs

About 19 miles (30 km) west of Salinópolis is the relatively sleepy fishing settlement and beach resort of Algoóal. The resort lies on the western edge of Ilha de Maiandeuá, just a 40-minute boat ride away. There are no motorized vehicles in the village or on Maiandeuá island, adding to the remote and idyllic feel. Electricity only reached the island in 2004, so facilities are improving.

The main beach for the village is the Praia da Vila do Algoóal. More popular, however, is the palm-fringed Praia da Princesa do Farol, a superb stretch of sand secluded from the main beach by a short walk at low tide or a canoe ride. There are trails on the island, offering the opportunity to spot wildlife and explore the area around an inland freshwater lake. It is advisable to carry adequate cash to visit the island, since there are no banks or ATMs.

The world's largest river island, Ilha de Marajó covers over 18,533 sq miles (48,000 sq km), mostly dedicated to cattle ranches, or fazendas. The island is famous for having the biggest and finest buffaloes in Brazil. Their meat, leather, and dairy products are widely available to purchase. Ilha de Marajó was also the ancient home to the indigenous culture of the Marajoaras, notable for their exquisite ceramic burial and ceremonial urns.

The unofficial capital of the island is Souré, which has the most shops, restaurants, and other facilities, but the ferry port is Porto Camará, some 16 miles (27 km) south of Souré. Located between Porto Camará and Souré, the best and most secluded beach is at the small town of Joanes, some 3 miles (5 km) off the main road. There are good beaches at the other town on the island, Salvaterra, where there are also several hotels and pousadas. The Praia Grande beach in Salvaterra is well served with beach chairs, snack barracas, and refreshment stands.

During the peak rainy season (February–May) many of the roads are inaccessible for long periods; this includes the road to Joanes and Salvaterra at times. Boats for moving around the island can be found easily at Souré, Salvaterra, and Porto Camará.

POTTERY ON ILHA DE MARAJÓ

Marajó pottery displayed in Museu Goeldi, Belém

In 1948, anthropologists Betty Meggers and Clifford Evans discovered a large, painted anthropomorphic vessel on Ilha de Marajó. The ancient inhabitants, the Marajoaras, left behind not only burial mounds, some almost 3,000 years old, but also some very fine ceramics, leading archaeologists to believe that between the 5th and 13th centuries, there were sophisticated societies living along the banks of the Amazon river.

Excavations reveal that the dead were buried in line according to their social ranking, with larger urns indicating higher status. Most of these ceramics, representing abstract feminine figures, demonstrate the matrilineal nature of this early Amazonian society. As well as funerary ceramics, there were also bowls, vases, spindle whorls, and stools. The larger urns generally took three main forms: humanoid, cylindrical, and round; and around 15 different finishing techniques are known to have been utilized. Some excellent examples of the urns can be found in the Museu Goeldi in Belém.

Split in two by the equator, Macapá is hot and humid all year round. The city occupies its position as Amapá's capital sitting on the northern bank of the Amazon river, very close to the giant river's mouth. It is rather isolated, with mostly air and boat transportation, rather than road connections.

The history of the city is rich and varied. Several European countries, including England and France, attempted to take it over from the Portuguese, but the Portuguese established their hold here by completing the grand Fortaleza de São José de Macapá in 1782, after almost 20 years of construction by black and Indian slave labor. The bricks used were brought over from Portugal as ballast on the ships.

Just to the north of the fort, there is an attractive pier, the Trapiche Eliezer Levy, dating back to the 1930s. The pier stretches far out into the water and it is an enjoyable stroll to the end of it, especially on a breezy evening. The charming Trapiche Restaurante (see p407), also located at the end of the pier, has a breathtaking view overlooking the river.

These days, Macapá is the capital of a progressive state. Following the election of the environmentalist João Capiberibe as state governor in 1995, successive governors have kept the spirit of environmentalism alive.

One present project is to connect all the state's protected areas with wildlife or biodiversity corridors. The Museu SACACA, or the Museum of Sustainable Development, just a short distance south of the town center, offers fascinating guided tours of replica ribeirinho (river-dweller) houses.

The Mercado dos Produtos da Floresta offers a wide range of local art and craft goods, ranging from balata (ceramics) dusted with manganese ore to indigenous crafts, leather goods, carved wooden statues and all-natural medicines.

The Marco Zero monument, a large obelisk-cum-sundial, 4 miles (6 km) southwest of the city center, marks the equatorial line on Avenida Equatorial.

Amazônia's fourth largest city, Santarém sits at the mouth of the Rio Tapajós, surrounded by brilliant white sandy beaches. Modern Santarém began in 1661 as a Jesuit mission, following 30 years of military action in the area to subdue the fierce, indigenous Tapuçu Indians.

In 1867, there was an influx of ex-Confederates from the USA, a handful of whose descendants still survive. However, it was the rubber boom and Santarém's strategic position as a pit stop en route along the Amazon river that turned the town into a buzzing commercial center.

In the late 19th century, Henry Wickam, an English settler in Santarém, smuggled rubber tree seeds out to establish rubber plantations in Asia. Within 40 years, and just in time for World War I, Asian rubber plantations majorly outproduced the Brazilian Amazon.

The local economy is today based on rubber, logging, soy, brazil nuts, and tourism.

An ancient center for the production of fine ceramics, the town showcases its distinct Santarém Phase Pottery in a striking museum, the Museu de Santarém. The exhibits prominently feature burial urns, reputed to be among the oldest in South America. Also known as Centro Cultural João Foua, the museum has a striking interior, painted by João Foua, an artist from Pará.

Another attraction is the Museu de Arte Sacra de Santarém, which has a decent collection of religious art.

THE RUBBER STORY IN BRAZIL

In the mid-1700s, Charles-Marie de la Condamine was presented with latex syringes from the Hevea brasiliensis tree by the Omagua people living in Amazônia. He returned to France with samples, and rubber became known to the world. Soon it was being used for everything from insulation to tyres, and Hevea brasiliensis had become the oil of its day. In Amazônia, where the rubber tree grew in abundance, foreign banks and companies began to set up plantations. The rubber boom ushered Manaus and Belém into the Belle Époque era, with electric lights, lavish opera houses, and mansions for the rubber barons. Brazil emerged as the world's largest producer of natural rubber. The euphoria lasted until 1910, when the British colonies in Asia – Malaya, Ceylon, and Singapore – outproduced the Brazilian rubber. Unprepared for competition, Brazil was elbowed out of the rubber market by 1914. The indigenous Brazilians, who had been rounded up and forcibly settled to work on the plantations, returned to relative freedom. Today, much of Brazil's rubber is imported from Asia.

plantation founded in the 1920s to produce rubber for the Ford Motor Company. In the 1930s, he also established Belterra, 12 miles (20 km) south. Both ventures failed, and Ford had to sell them to the Brazilian government in 1945. These towns are accessible by boat from Alter do Chão.

POROROCA WAVE

A rage with surfers, the Pororoca is a legendary wave, over 16 ft (5 m) tall, that regularly rolls up the Amazon river. The name Pororoca comes from a local Tupi Indian phrase which means “great destructive noise.” Predicted to happen twice daily during full moons between January and April every year, the wave comes in from the Atlantic causing some devastation along the river banks. Following a low tide in the rainy season, the force of the mighty river against the turning tide creates the large and powerful wave that rolls, literally unstoppable, up the Amazon. The surfing record so far is 27 minutes in time and 7 miles (12 km) in distance, while the tidal waves are known to travel over 12 miles (20 km) per hour at times.

A band of English and Irish sailors were the earliest to settle here in the 1570s, soon to be expelled by the Portuguese. Over the last 200 years, Monte Alegre has benefitted from ranching and the rubber industry. It is best known for the rock paintings of Serra Paytuna and Serra Ererê, located 19 miles (30 km) out of town. Estimated to be 10,000 years old, they feature abstract patterns, mostly geometric in form, and some stylized representations of human and animal figures. It is obligatory to hire a guide and a vehicle to visit them. Monte Alegre is also renowned for scenic waterfalls and its wealth of birdlife, for which a local guide and a canoe will be required.

AMAZONAS, RORAIMA, ACRE & RONDÔNIA

The states of Amazonas, Roraima, Acre, and Rondônia form the heartland of the vast Amazon rainforest region, which is drained by the world's largest network of freshwater lakes and rivers. Despite hundreds of years of European presence and the deforestation ravages of the 20th century, the region continues to be home to some of the world's last indigenous peoples.

Amazonas is larger than the other three states put together. Manaus, its capital, is the most popular place for exploring the jungle. The city sits at the confluence of two of the world's largest rivers – the Solimões (as the Amazon river is called in this section) and the Rio Negro. The vast Rio Madeira lies downstream of Manaus.

Roraima, which literally juts up into Venezuela and Guyana, is best known for its superb plateau-topped mountains, lakes, and substantial rainforest. A host of indigenous groups live here, tenaciously holding on to their land and culture. Roraima also boasts open savannas that have been transformed into cattle ranches. The state capital, Boa Vista, is a well-planned city on the banks of the Rio Branco.

Acre and Rondônia, in the very southwest corner of the Brazilian Amazon, possess some fantastic protected areas of biodiversity, home to many indigenous communities. Acre, the rubber-tapping center of the Amazon, is known for its lush beauty. Environmental destruction has been met with equally forceful conservation movements here. Its capital, Rio Branco, was where activist Chico Mendes fought to defend the forest in the late 1980s.

Rondônia, an area which has developed beyond recognition, still retains some of Brazil's best flora and fauna. It also offers fascinating gems in terms of heritage, such as the Madeira-Mamoré railway museum in the state capital, Porto Velho.

Exploring Amazonas, Roraima, Acre & Rondônia

This region offers the ultimate rainforest experience. Most people travel here to explore the dense forests, picturesque river islands, and tranquil waterways. The sights include Manaus, the legendary capital city of Amazonas, which offers much architectural and cultural interest. Also located in Amazonas is the Mamirauá Reserve, Brazil's first sustainable development reserve. The secluded and beautiful mountains of Roraima are worth a visit, as is Acre, with its natural beauty, history, and seringueiro (rubber-tapping) culture. Porto Velho, the capital of Rondônia, overlooking the Amazon's longest tributary, the mighty Rio Madeira, is a lively place to visit. Riverboat excursions on the Rio Madeira are a good way to idle away a few hours and spot a few pink dolphins.

GETTING AROUND

Joining an organized tour with one of the companies in Manaus, Boa Vista, Porto Velho, or Rio Branco is the best way to see the Amazon jungle. Most companies offer accommodation in tourist lodges and travel by a combination of road and riverboat or canoe. For those who want to travel independently, it is possible to move around the jungle on local riverboats. Road travel is also possible from all cities. Manaus, for instance, is only 6 hours by bus from Novo Airão, on the Rio Negro, where it is possible to bathe in jungle rivers and swim with pink dolphins.

Manaus is a legendary city, located at the heart of the Amazon forest on the banks of the Rio Negro, close to where this massive river blends with the even larger Amazon river, or Rio Solimões as it is known along this section of its course. The fancy European buildings of the port and the even more splendid

Manaus: Teatro Amazonas

Built at the end of the 19th century during the Belle Époque, when fortunes were made from the extraction of rubber in Manaus, the Teatro Amazonas remains one of the jewels of the Amazon region. This grand state-of-the-art, Renaissance-style opera house was designed by Gabinete Português de Engenharia de Lisboa (Portuguese Engineering Academy of Lisbon). Inaugurated on December 31, 1896, it was two more years before construction was completed and the prominent landmark with a glistening dome appeared above the port.

The Teatro façade, restored to pink at the close of the 20th century

★ The Painted Curtain

The main stage curtain was created by Manaus-based artist Crispim do Amaral (1845–1911) to depict the Meeting of the Waters (see p285), and also a local river goddess, Iara. The curtain is pulled up into the specially designed cupola at the start of each performance.

The Wooden Floor

The opera house floor, laid with thousands of pieces of Amazon timber, is a masterpiece of craftsmanship. The light and dark patterns represent the meeting of the Negro and Amazon rivers (see p285).

The theater's roof, made of red tiles, keeps out the tropical rain.

Events

Regular musical events and operas include those of the relatively new Companhia de Dança and the resident Orquestra Filarmônica do Amazonas.

250 uninhabited islands stretching for more than 187 miles (300 km). Depending on the season and time of day, it is possible to see caimans, sloths, snakes, frogs, and a wide range of bird species. Sprawled across an area of 1,350 sq miles (3,500 sq km) of protected rainforest on the left bank of the Rio Negro, the Estação Ecológica de Anavilhanas (Ecological Station of Anavilhanas) is part of the Anavilhanas islands. Created in 1998 and named after the Archipelago dos Anavilhanas, it boasts several species in great danger of extinction, including jaguars and night monkeys.

A day-and-a-half's journey from Ilhas de Anavilhanas, Barcelos, the only town of any size along the river, is an interesting place to start a jungle expedition for intrepid adventurers. Another two days upriver, the town of São Gabriel Da Cachoeira is a beautiful place deep in the Amazon with stunning jungle scenery and wildlife.

The small town of Novo Airão is located on the western side of the Rio Negro, opposite the Archipelago dos Anavilhanas. Pleasant, yet laid-back, with only a handful of attractions, the town draws tourists mainly for the pink dolphins that come to a platform behind the El Delfin restaurant at Novo Airão's small port. The restaurant owner has been feeding dolphins from the restaurant for several years. They now appear to be friendly and swim with visitors who feed them. Along with its standard fare, the restaurant also sells raw fish to offer the dolphins from the wooden platform.

The area neighboring Novo Airão is home to a number of interesting sights, such as Airão Velho, the overgrown ruins of the old town center, with prehistoric spiral and figure-like petroglyphs. The beautiful and peaceful Igarapé do Mato Grosso, a forested section of a tributary river nearby, makes a great place for a walk or a swim in fresh water. The Parque Nacional Jaú is a two-day trip from Novo Airão, and is a wonderful opportunity to visit virgin Amazon rainforest. A permit is required from the Ibama office in Manaus.

Encontro das Aguas

from Manaus.

One of the main tours offered from Manaus, the Encontro das Aguas (Meeting of the Waters) is where the Rio Solimões joins the Rio Negro. The relatively creamy and alkaline light brown or "white" water of the Solimões (Amazon) river takes several miles to absorb the dark, acid water coming in from the Rio Negro. The Solimões is light because it starts mainly in the Andes and brings plenty of silt with it. The Rio Negro wells up primarily in the swamplands and smaller hills of the northeastern Amazon and contains much more decomposed plant life than it does soil or silt.

Small boats go out from Manaus allowing tourists to take photographs and see the clear line between light brown and black running down the middle of the river. It is a two-hour return trip from Manaus, and the best time to visit is between 7 and 10am.

Lago Manaquiri

A five-hour boat ride from Manaus, the backwater lake of Manaquiri is best entered first via the Rio Solimões, then upstream to a tributary that leads to the lake. Its waters rise and fall with the seasons. Relatively isolated, the Lago Manaquiri is usually a good spot for seeing water birds, including the great egret (Casmerodius albus) and fish eagles. It is not unusual to see caimans and large Amazonian alligators basking on the sandy shore.

The lake provides sustenance to the small fishing town of Manaquiri. Local economy depends more on fishing than on tourism. In 1995, however, both were hit by the worst drought in over 40 years, when the lagoons evaporated, and thousands of dead fish lay on the bed of the dried-up lake. The changed climatic conditions continue to deplete fish in the area. Nonetheless, fishing remains the main activity, and there are many tour operators based in Manaus, offering budget fishing packages.

It is always best to go through a travel company registered with the Brazilian Tourism Bureau (Embratur) (see p425). Some of the tour agencies provide typical Amazon riverboats, which may come fully equipped with kitchen, dining area, canopied sundeck, bathroom, and shower. Fishing is best in the dry season, which usually lasts from August to December or January.

Easily accessible by road and boat from Manaus, the elongated and breathtaking Lago Mamori is located in a lush rainforest setting. Much of it is surrounded by narrow creeks, hidden among forests full of sloths, monkeys, and colorful, noisy tropical birds. The river and lake offer the opportunity to see both pink and gray river dolphins, as well as go piranha fishing. Nearby, the Lago Arara is great for fishing, and home to a pink dolphin-feeding ground. The local people, known as caboclos, have been here for generations and live in scattered riverside communities, occasionally coming together for celebrations. They earn their living by making farinha (manioc flour), rearing cattle, and fishing. Visits to the caboclo homes can be organized by Gero's Tours. Run independently by English-speaking Gero Mesquita, it can book hotels, arrange transport, and meticulously plan tours.

Farther upstream and deeper into the forest from here, the Rio Juma region offers better access to wild life, but requires expedition-type preparation and several days.

Nature Safaris, a tour company based in Manaus, can arrange expeditions in Amazônia, offering short package tours, as well as longer safaris. It is possible to stay either in a floating lodge, or one of the many jungle lodges along the Rio Juma. Most of them offer jungle hikes, piranha fishing, and caiman spotting at night.

Located at the confluence of two rivers, the Rio Solimões and Rio Japurá, the Mamirauá Sustainable Development Reserve covers an area of 3.65 million acres (1.25 million ha). Since 1990, when it was declared an ecological station, the Mamirauá Reserve has been one of Brazil's most prized ecotourism spots.

Splendid and luxuriant, its várzea (seasonally flooded) vegetation offers plenty of opportunity for spotting abundant wildlife, including endemic species such as the white uakari monkey and black-headed squirrel monkey. The annual flood transforms the life of the whole region. During the high water season, fish invade the flooded forest and disperse seeds as they move about. More than 300 species of fish have already been catalogued in the reserve. Mamirauá is also home to pink river dolphin, great egret, and the rare scarlet macaw. The Neotropic cormorant, whose diet consists mainly of fish, can be spotted swimming and feeding in large, noisy flocks.

In the dry season, which lasts from September to December, one can walk on trails, or paddle almost silently through them on canoes. The preserve's ecotourism program features a range of activities, which also including guided nature expeditions in the lakes and trails in the forest.

The preserve also offers comfortable and ecologically sound accommodation at the Uakari Floating Lodge (see p383) close to forest trails, pretty jungle lakes, and caboclo communities. A large jungle town, Parintins was originally the refuge of a community of indigenous riverine people, known as caboclos, who were escaping Portuguese slave traders. Today, Parintins is best known for its popular Festa do Boi Bumbá. The festival is celebrated in June, when the town gets so packed that visitors often stay on boats.

Though there is little else to see, besides the well-preserved colonial architecture, Parintins is known for its rich indigenous culture. The local handicrafts make unique souvenirs. The flea markets sell everything from masks, trinkets, lace, bead-work, and mahogany carvings. During the dry season, boat trips can be taken to nearby lakes and river beaches.

FESTA DO BOI BUMBÁ

The vibrant festival, Festa do Boi Bumbá, is centered around a ritualistic dance recounting the death and rebirth of a legendary boi (ox). Originating on the 18th-century Northeast plantations, the festival arrived in Parintins almost 100 years ago with the Cid brothers from Maranhão. They brought with them the Bumba-meu-boi (see p43) musical influence, steeped in the vibrant rhythms of the Northeast. The last few decades saw the festival gaining in prominence. Every June, at least 35,000 people crowd into Bumbódromo, a purpose-built stadium in the town center, to join in the revelries. The fantastic procession incorporates dazzlingly dressed participants, including mythological beasts. The rivalry between the two competing camps, the red Garantido and the blue Caprichoso groups, is expressed in traditional songs. Over the years, this competitive spirit, which goes right down to who wears the most outlandish costume, has brought forth some radical and electrifying spectacles.

Created in 1991, Roraima is one of Brazil's newest states, and Boa Vista is its capital city. While the savannas surrounding it are an important cattle ranching territory, the gold rush of the 1980s still drives development in the region.

The Praça Civica forms the heart of the town's arch-shaped street layout. The modern Palácio Municipal is here beside the Monumento ao Garimpeiro, a local monument honoring the gold miners who have brought significant wealth to this state.

There are good swimming beaches on the Rio Branco, only 15 minutes by bus from Boa Vista. The sandy beaches right in the town center, opposite the Orla Taumanam, offer excellent swimming when the river is low.

Environs

Boa Vista is blessed with lush tropical rainforest, endless stretches of savanna plains, and pretty river beaches, which make the surrounding region well worth exploring. Though ecotourism is still in its initial stages, organized tours are fairly developed.

A significant staging port en route south to Manaus or north to Guyana and Venezuela, Boa Vista is easily connected by bus to the Venezuelan town of Santa Elena de Uairén, located 147 miles (237 km) north. The route from Boa Vista to Santa Elena is dotted with some interesting sights. The ecological island preserve of Ilha do Maracá, 62 miles (100 km) north of Boa Vista, is known for its species preservation and biodiversity. Fringed with groves of cashew trees, the enchanting Lago Caracaranã is located 112 miles (180 km) north.

Santa Elena de Uairén offers the best access to the Parque Nacional de Monte Roraima. The park is ideal for trekking through a variety of eco-niches with changing vegetation to climb Monte Roraima, a point where Brazil, Guyana, and Venezuela meet. At 8,970 ft (2,734 m) above sea level, good camping equipment and preparation is essential.

Several Boa Vista-based companies offer excellent week-long packages. International visitors require a Venezuelan tourist card, which can be obtained at the Venezuelan consulate in Boa Vista.

The Parque de Maternidade has magically transformed a small town water canal into a long, green city walk. In the town center, just a couple of blocks north from the Rio Acre, which cuts the town in half, stands the Palácio Rio Branco. Though restored, the building maintains its original Neo-Classical façade with four columns at the entrance. It was built in the 1930s as headquarters for the state government, and retains a good collection of period furniture from the 1940s and

The palace also contains several large rooms dedicated to the prehistory and history of the region. The main focus is on the 20th-century history of Acre, and there is a superb room dedicated to indigenous culture, displaying some stupendous feather headdresses. Artifacts relating to local history and tribes are also displayed in the palace.

A few blocks north, the Museu da Borrachá (Rubber Museum) focuses on the fascinating local ethnic culture, rubber-tappers, and ayahuasca churches, known for their ceremonial use of hallucinogenic herbs.

Rio Branco is transforming the city's south bank of the Rio Acre, which was the focal point during the rubber boom, and until the new north-based commercial center emerged in mid-20th century. The municipality is restoring many of the buildings, which once served the river port as hotels, bars, and a splendid movie theater, as well as merchants' stores, making for a lively atmosphere. The promenade, La Gameleira, makes a perfect location for a river walk.

The Parque Ambiental Chico Mendes (Chico Mendes Environmental Park) is located in the former rubber plantation at Itucumã near Vila Acre, 6 miles (10 km) south of Rio Branco. It contains virgin forest areas, some replica malocas (indigenous longhouses) and rubber-tapper dwellings, as well as a zoo and the Chico Mendes memorial.

A rubber-tapper union leader and environmental activist, Chico Mendes helped establish the National Council of Rubber Tappers. His design for extractive rainforest preserves won him recognition by the UN in 1987, with a Global 500 award. He received another award from the Better World Society, before his assassination by hired men employed by the ranchers on December 22, 1988. His untimely death brought international attention, for the first time, both to the plight of the rainforest and the positive solution offered simply by harvesting the rainforest's fruits and sustainable products. Many leading Brazilian human rights activists, environmental campaigners and church organizations came together to establish the Chico Mendes Committee, which successfully dedicated itself to seeing his murderers brought to justice.

CENTRAL WEST BRAZIL

INTRODUCING
BRASÍLIA, GOIÁS & TOCANTINS 298-313
MATO GROSSO &

Introducing Central West Brazil

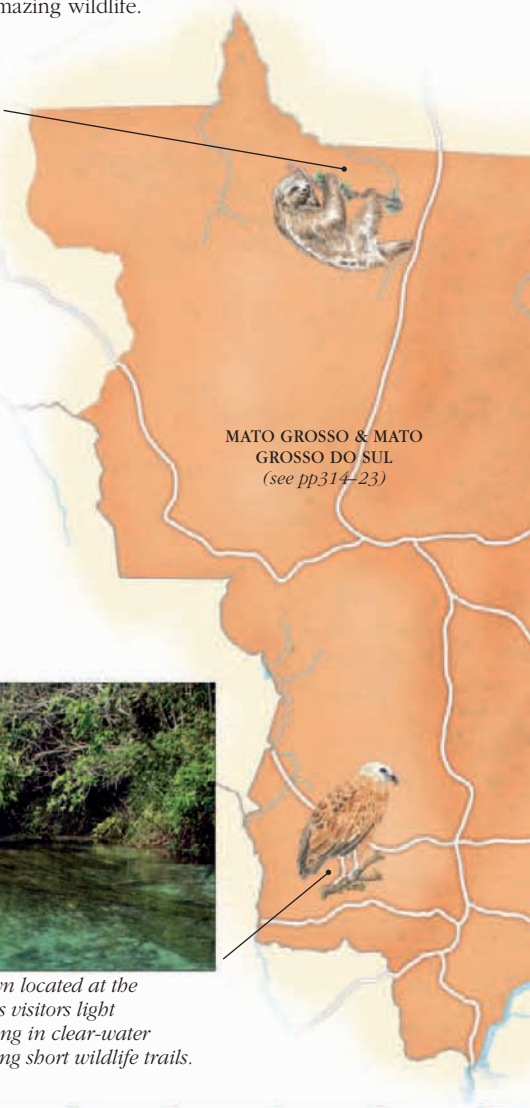

The Federal District of Brasília and four other states make up Brazil's Central West. Goiás and Tocantins in the east of the region and Mato Grosso and Mato Grosso do Sul in the west, are areas where the expansive wilderness of craggy cerrado-covered plateaus, vast wetlands, rainforests, and deserts are beginning to give way to industrialization. The slow pace of life in colonial mining towns such as Cidade de Goiás and Pirenópolis is being eclipsed by the urban attractions of cities such as Campo Grande and Brasília. However, the Central West remains one of the best regions in which to savor Brazil's traditional rural way of life as well as spot amazing wildlife.

Cristalino Jungle Lodge (see p319) is situated on the banks of the Rio Cristalino, in Alta Floresta. This region is rich in the Amazon flora and fauna, and has a number of splendid birding trails. Guided biking tours are also on offer.

Bonito (see p323), a small, quiet town located at the southern edge of the Pantanal, offers visitors light adventure activities such as snorkeling in clear-water rivers, visiting caves, and biking along short wildlife trails.

MATO GROSSO & MATO GROSSO DO SUL
(see pp314-23)

Ilha do Bananal (see p311), one of the world's largest river islands, contains rivers that extend up to 155 miles (250 km), and is home to several indigenous peoples. A bird-watcher's paradise, the island's wild interior is not easily accessible.

BRASÍLIA, GOIÁS & TOCANTINS
(see pp298–313)

Brasília (see pp302–305), the country's capital, is renowned for its Modernist buildings, many of which were designed by the noted architect Oscar Niemeyer.

Pirenópolis (see pp308–309), a picturesque former mining town with colonial buildings and impressive restaurants, is a popular weekend retreat. It is also a base for exploring the cerrado and the region's numerous waterfalls.

Creation of a Capital

President Juscelino Kubitschek and his team of designers, planners, and architects, led by Oscar Niemeyer, envisaged Brasília not only as a city, but also as a monument to the national motto – Order and Progress. In creating this, they turned to European Modernism, following the doctrine of Charles-Edouard Jeanneret (1887–1965), or “Le Corbusier,” for their inspiration. The concept stated that modern cities should be zoned functionally with separate areas for housing (in high-rise blocks), recreation, and administration, broken by green belts and roads.

Juscelino Kubitschek was the president of Brazil between 1956 and 1961. He was responsible for the creation of Brasília as the new, modern capital of the country.

The Missão Cruls was commissioned by President Floriano Peixoto in 1892 and led by the Belgian scientist Luiz Cruls. It sought to find a possible site for a new capital in the Brazilian interior to make a more regionally neutral federal capital where resources could be equally divided.

Superquadra 309, a residential neighborhood, was built in one of the “wings” of Brasília.

The candangos were workers from the Northeast brought to Brasília in vast numbers to build the city. Homes for their descendants were not included in the grand plan and today Brasília is ringed with the slum cities of their children.

BRASÍLIA

Located at the heart of the country, Brazil's capital city is today on UNESCO's list of World Heritage Sites, and is famous for its innovative urban planning and daring architecture.

Lúcio Costa and Roberto Burle Marx, the urban planner and landscape designer behind Brasília, intended that every element, from the layout of the residential and administrative districts to the symmetry of the buildings, should be in harmony with the city's overall design.

Ministerial buildings were built to flank Praça dos Três Poderes and Eixo Monumental (see pp302-303).

Eixo Rodoviária Sul is one of the main roads in the "wings" connecting Brasília from one end to the other.

American President Dwight D. Eisenhower, on an official visit to Brazil, inaugurated the new capital city of Brasília with great fanfare on February 23, 1960. He also visited Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo.

OSCAR NIEMEYER

Born in Rio de Janeiro in 1907, Niemeyer went on to become one of the most important names in modern architecture. His first job was with Le Corbusier and Lúcio Costa on Rio's Ministry of Education in 1936. After this he went on to design a series of landmark buildings such as the Contemporary Museum of Art in Niterói (see p89). Niemeyer's socialist beliefs led to his exile under the coup of 1964. He returned to Rio in the 1980s, where he continues to work.

Oscar Niemeyer at his office in Rio de Janeiro

Original pen and ink drawings submitted by Lúcio Costa in 1956 in the competition for a new capital city show Brasília's distinctive shape, which has been variously interpreted as an airplane, a bird in flight, and a bow and arrow.

The inauguration of Brasília by President Juscelino Kubitschek and President Eisenhower was attended by thousands of people. The new capital saw the installation of the three powers of the republic – parliament, judiciary, and presidency.

Flora & Fauna in the Cerrado

The Brazilian cerrado (meaning inaccessible in Portuguese) is a biome unique to South America and is the tropical world's largest woodland savanna. The cerrado landscape is made up of scattered woods and vast swathes of grassland along riverbanks and in small valleys. One of the richest ecosystems in the world, the cerrado is home to almost every species of large mammal found in South America, together with an enormously prolific birdlife. The cerrado landscape is home to some 10,000 plant species, of which 4,400 are endemic to the region.

KEY

The cerrado

The Pantanal

Hyacinth macaws are an endangered species due to overcollection for the caged-bird trade. They are also hunted by the Kayapó people (see p262), who use their bright blue feathers in their headdresses.

The cerrado, a sprawling 1.2-million sq mile (3-million sq km) mix of forest and savanna, covers 75 percent of Brazil.

Capybaras, abundant in the cerrado, are semi-aquatic, herbivorous rodents. They live in herds and spend most of their time feeding on riverbanks, where they are easily spotted during mornings and evenings.

The rhea is a large, flightless bird native to South America. Because rheas will eat almost any crop plant, farmers sometimes kill the birds. This, along with egg gathering and habitat loss, has led to a significant drop in their numbers.

The species is listed among the wildlife of "special concern."

The marsh deer is generally a solitary animal, or lives in herds of less than six. It has webbed feet which help it walk on flooded land.

The maned wolf is the only large canid in the world that does not form packs. The animal, now endangered, was hunted by poachers for its body parts, notably the eyes, which were believed to be good-luck charms.

Buriti palms often grow over subterranean water. They are an important source of food for many large parrots and primates.

Savanna formations in the cerrado are not homogenous. Hilly areas have denser, more varied flora than the grasslands.

CONSERVATION OF THE CERRADO

Tractors paving the way for a new farm in the cerrado

Central Brazil's ancient cerrado forests are rapidly being cleared for soya plantations and cattle ranches. Since the late 1990s, steps have been taken to identify conservation-priority areas and better manage protected areas. Recently, private reserves, established under the Private Natural Heritage Reserve system, have become an important component of biodiversity protection in the cerrado. There have also been more intensive faunal and floral surveys of the region.

Ipê tree is a large canopy tree. Its vibrant trumpet-shaped flowers bloom in spectacular yellow, pink, and mauve throughout the cerrado.

FLORA IN THE CERRADO

The cerrado is characterized by its vast expanses of grassland, scattered forests, and palm groves. The landscape varies between the "open cerrado," predominantly grassland, without trees and shrubs, and "closed cerrado," the more forested areas.

FLORA & FAUNA OF PANTANAL

Although the world's largest wetland forms part of the southern extreme of the cerrado, the Pantanal (see pp.320-21) comprises habitats most associated with the Amazon. Many cerrado species live here, as well as marsh deer, capybara, caimans, waterbirds, and monkeys.

Caiman numbers in the Pantanal have increased after a ban on hunting them for their skin and teeth (considered charms against witchcraft) took effect.

The white-necked heron is a common sight in the Pantanal, especially along riverbanks, where it feeds. This graceful bird builds its nest on a platform on trees close to the river.

Guira cuckoos are slightly scruffy-looking birds that nest, roost, and feed in groups, eating insects, frogs, and eggs off the ground.

BRASÍLIA, GOIÁS & TOCANTINS

The capital of Brazil since 1960, Brasília is the region's only metropolis. Its striking city plan and futuristic architecture makes it vastly different from any other city in the country. Goiás and Tocantins make up Brazil's heartland. Northern Goiás and Tocantins are mostly wilderness areas of mountains and dry savanna, while in the south are the colonial towns of Pirenópolis and Goiás Velho.

Until the mid-20th century, only bandeirante slavers and gold hunters had ventured into the wilderness of central Brazil, a land of cerrado (savanna) woodland, mesetas (tabletop mountains), and giant winding rivers, peopled by bands of valiant indigenous groups such as the Xavante. Some gold prospectors stayed on, building a handful of colonial towns near their mines. Cidade Goiás and Pirenópolis in central Goiás are very well preserved, so much so that the former is now a UNESCO World Heritage Site. Pirenópolis is famous for its festivals, the liveliest of which, the Festa do Divino Espírito Santo, re-enacts the battles between the Christians and the Moors. The city is also a center for ecotourism, and a favorite watering hole for nearby Brasília's middle class. The Utopian, but impersonal, capital city sits on an exposed plain under an expansive sky. Its brave new domes, churches, and steel-reinforced monoliths, now ringed with favelas, should not be missed.

Northern Goiás and Tocantins remain frontier lands, where fields of soya are fast encroaching upon the foothills of the mesetas in Chapada dos Veadeiros National Park, the dune-filled expanses of the Jalapão cerrado, and indigenous lands on the world's largest river island, Ilha do Bananal. The scenery here is spectacular, and adventure activities, such as canyoning and rappelling, are developing rapidly.

The Palácio de Itamaraty (Palace of Arches), one of the most impressive modern buildings in Brasília

Exploring Brasília, Goiás & Tocantins

Cidade de Goiás and Pirenópolis in Goiás remain pleasant colonial towns, while the spectacular Chapada dos Veadeiros National Park in northern Goiás showcases the unique flora and fauna of high-altitude cerrado. Brasília, the capital city of Brazil from 1960 onward, was built from the dust and scrub of the central western cerrado, and is a Modernist marvel. In Tocantins state, the Ilha do Bananal, one of the largest islands in Brazil, is also the point at which three ecosystems converge – rainforest, cerrado, and wetland. The dune deserts of Jalapão in Tocantins are fringed by dry sertão, vast horizons of soya farms, waterfalls, crystalline rivers, and forests inhabited by the Xavante and Xingú indigenous groups.

GETTING AROUND

Travel inevitably begins in Brasília. There is an international airport, and flights connecting with most larger Brazilian cities, including frequent flights to Goiânia in Goiás and Palmas in Tocantins. Roads radiate out from these cities to other towns and states cutting through the harvest land and the stunning scenery. Pirenópolis, a weekend getaway from Goiânia, is reached from Brasília via a filigree of small roads and regular buses. There are daily buses to Cidade de Goiás from Goiânia via the BR-070. The Chapada dos Veadeiros, which, together with Pirenópolis, boasts the best ecotourism infrastructure, is reached from the little towns of São Jorge or Alto Paraíso in northern Goiás. These are connected to Brasília via the GO-118. Apart from the main north-south artery, the BR-153, transportation in Tocantins is difficult. Ilha do Bananal in the west and Jalapão in the east are remote and best visited on tours.

Brasília is the embodiment in concrete of erstwhile President Juscelino Kubitschek's promise of "fifty years of economic and social development in five," and of the national motto – Order and Progress. The city was built by vast teams of candangos, workers from the Northeast, who carved it from the cerrado at breakneck speed. They were led by urban planner Lúcio Costa, architect Oscar Niemeyer, and landscape engineer Roberto Burle Marx (see p295). The capital of Brazil shifted from Rio de Janeiro to Brasília on April 21, 1960. Brasília was added to UNESCO's list of World Heritage Sites in 1987 as an example of daring urban planning and modern architecture. Today, Brasília is a stately, organized city, albeit a little quiet.

The Eixo Monumental, Brasília's main thoroughfare, forms the centerpiece of the city. Kubitschek stands at one end of the Eixo, waving from his towering Modernist column to the seat of government, the Congresso Nacional and Palácio do Planalto, which sit around the Praça dos Três Poderes. Many of Brazil's most famous architects and sculptors were involved in its construction.

Exploring Brasília

The capital of Brazil, Brasília, is shaped like an airplane in homage to what was then the incipient jet age. While to its north and south lie the residential wings, the Eixo Monumental (see pp302–303) forms the body of the jet, with the city's major attractions.

It was built during the military dictatorship and was intended to show the presence of military power in the government, which was notably absent from the Praça dos Três Poderes. The intimidating stature of the buildings conveys Niemeyer's objective of constructing something grand for the generals. He was determined that the monumentalism of these generals should not be eclipsed by that of President Juscelino Kubitschek (see p58).

The stunning interior features an almost seamless panoply of glass, which ranges from light to dark blue and indigo, as it ascends. In the late afternoon, shafts of light penetrate the building, illuminating the marble statue of the Virgin and the vast cross whose vertical was carved from a single piece of tropical cedar. The building's geometry is based on multiples of seven in accordance with sacred numerology. The sides rise to 69 ft (21 m), the cavernous nave spans 92 ft (28 m), and spiral steps wind around the interior. The central portion of the temple is illuminated by light, filtering through an enormous and priceless rock crystal found at Cristalino in Goiás.

Catedral Metropolitana Nossa Senhora Aparecida

Designed by Oscar Niemeyer to resemble a crown of thorns, this cathedral features 16 soaring curved pillars spread like an open hand. Between them, a filigree of glass windows is united by a fluid series of color. The statues of the evangelists outside the cathedral are by the Mineiro sculptor Alfredo Ceschiatti, who also sculpted the archangels suspended from the ceiling inside.

Pirenópolis 2

The picturesque town of Pirenópolis is gathered around the Rio das Almas, surrounded by verdant cerrado woodlands, and tucked away at the feet of low ragged hills. Pirenópolis skilfully balances the old and the new, the traditional and the contemporary. Crowned by Portuguese Baroque churches, the cobbled streets clatter to the sound of cowboys on horseback. They are lined with chic little restaurants, housed in rustic 18th-century bungalows, or designed in low-key 20th-century Art Deco style. The entire historical center can be walked around in less than two hours. There are only a few streets – the principal ones being Rua Direita, Rua da Aurora, Rua do Bonfim, and Rua do Rosário, which has the bulk of the restaurants. At weekends, a bustling crowd from Brasília fills up the streets.

FESTA DO DIVINO ESPÍRITO SANTO

Also known as Cavalhadas, the festival is based on Iberian lore dating from the Crusades and Catholic Whitsuntide celebrations. The festival begins 15 days before Pentecost Sunday, with a gathering of riders, known as the Folia do Divino, at the Matriz. They then proceed out of Pirenópolis into the surrounding countryside. Masked dancers, parades of horsemen dressed as Crusaders, Moors, or Cavalhadas, and many cultural and musical events follow. The festival culminates on Pentecost Sunday in the stadium, the Cavalhadodrómo.

Like most colonial towns in Brazil's interior, Cidade de Goiás grew rich on gold. Until the middle of the 20th century, it was the capital of what was once the largest Brazilian state apart from Amazonas. Also known as Goiás Velho, or just Goiás, Cidade de Goiás is a magical little city nestled at the foot of the rugged Serra Dourado hills. Winding cobble streets lined with 18th-century town houses lead to hills capped with churches, leafy squares and little markets. Life here seems to trot along as it has done for centuries.

While historic, Goiás is far from being lost in a bygone age. The city's busy social calendar is a testament to its successful fusion of the old with the new. There is something happening almost every weekend through the year in Goiás, from thoroughly traditional hooded parades in Semana Santa (Holy Week) to some of the best world-cinema festivals and classical music concerts in Brazil.

Many buildings and museums testify to the city's illustrious past, and Goiás is small enough to see them all leisurely on foot. The best place to begin a tour is at Praça Brasil Caiado, the large square which graces the town's southern end. There are a number of museums and monuments here. These include the Museu das Bandeiras, the former seat of government, which preserves a forbidding dungeon and a set of rooms with period furniture, a magnificent Baroque public fountain, Chafariz de Cauda, and the Quartel do Vinte, an 18th-century barracks, which now houses the tourist office.

Immediately north of Praça Brasil Caiado and capped with an attractive, though modest, Baroque church is another square, Praça do Correto. The most interesting of all the city's museums, Museu de Arte Sacra in the Igreja de Boa Morte, is located here, preserving a series of hauntingly lifelike religious effigies by José Joaquim da Veiga Valle (1806–74), a self-taught sculptor. Opposite this museum is the Palácio Conde dos Arcos, complete with 18th-century furniture and still used by the governor on city visits.

Built in 1989, Brazil's newest state capital sits at the base of a range of forested low hills. It is a pleasant, but sprawling, modern city. Most visitors come to Palmas as it is a good jumping-off point for the numerous attractions that lie within the interior of Tocantins state, most notably Jalapão and the Ilha do Bananal.

Aside from the vast Palmas lake formed by the dam on the Rio Tocantins, Palmas' most interesting area is its vast, grassy main square, Praça Giróssóis, which is lined by grandiose public buildings and various monuments to its founder, José Wilson Siqueira Campos, and his legacy.

A journey through Brazil's interior would be incomplete without a visit to Jalapão. Located deep within eastern Tocantins, this breathtaking area is one of South America's great wilderness destinations. Jalapão, stretching across 13,130 sq miles (34,000 sq km), is made up of a state park, three private protected areas, and an ecological station, Estação Ecológica. The best time to visit is the dry season between June and September.

Beyond the inaccessible reaches of southern Piauí, the arid cerrado forests and incipient caatinga thornlands are more pristine here than anywhere else. Many fast-flowing rivers cut through spectacular canyons and thunder over myriad waterfalls throughout Jalapão. A number of rivers are born in limpid glassy springs that bubble forth from the sands of Jalapão. Others wind their way through groves of buriti palms called veredas. These are visited by Spix's macaws and Brazilian Merganser ducks, two of the extremely rare birds lost to the rest of the continent but still found in Jalapão.

Towering over Jalapão's seemingly interminable plains and striding out to the endless horizons are stands of monolithic tabletop mountains, winding yellow sand dunes, and craggy rock pinnacles. The air is so clear that even when these are far in the distance, they appear close enough to touch. Trails running across the mountain summits range from moderate to difficult, depending on the experience of the hiker.

The views from the top of the mountains and dunes are mesmerizing. But for the whistling breeze, it is so silent that the infrequent pick-ups running across the very few dirt roads can be heard clearly even when they are quite a long distance away.

The Rio Araguaia runs from southern Goiás across Tocantins state to join the Rio Tocantins before draining into the Amazon. In the middle of this river sits the Ilha do Bananal, an island so vast that it has its own rivers running through it and contends with Ilha de Marajó (see p270) for the title of the world's largest river island. Access to the island's wild interior is not easy. Visits here are only possible with a licensed tour operator.

Three ecosystems converge on the island – rainforest, wetland, and cerrado. Bananal's southern extremes are mostly Terras Indígenas (indigenous territories), where tourists are not welcome. Its center and north are impenetrable without a guide. Indigenous communities, including the Javaés and the Karajás, inhabit the island, some of whom produce carved wooden animals and pottery figurines. The southern part of the island also comprises seasonally flooded forests, lakes, and swamps filled with wildlife. This is a wonderful area for bird-watching, particularly waterbirds. There are also black caimans, which grow to an immense size in the dark, fish-filled waters.

Tucked far away in the southwest corner of Goiás and surrounded by a sea of soya, Emas National Park is a 500-sq mile (1,300-sq km) island of grassland and sparse cerrado, dotted with millions of termite hills and cut by blackwater rivers. The park is considered the best preserved cerrado in the country. In 2001, it was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

Populations of larger mammals, particularly the armadillo, maned wolf, and puma, are so healthy here that the park is a favorite location for film crews from the BBC Natural History Unit. It is also an important destination for bird-watchers, with the greatest concentration of blue-and-yellow macaws outside Amazônia.

Although there is no compulsion to go on a guided tour, it is a good idea to organize a trip through a tour operator in Pirenópolis, or through the tourist office in the nearby town of Chapadão do Céu, east of the park. Facilities at the park are minimal. Accommodation is limited to very rustic, simply-appointed Fazenda Santa Amélia in Chapadão do Céu.

MATO GROSSO & MATO GROSSO DO SUL

Once a destination for explorers and gold hunters, today Mato Grosso and Mato Grosso do Sul attract avid nature-lovers. The world's largest wetland and a vital ecosystem, the Pantanal straddles both states. Blessed with crystalline rivers and spectacular national parks, and dotted with ranches and farms, this vast region is still home to a large population of indigenous groups.

Explorations of Mato Grosso were limited to nature expeditions and Jesuit missionaries until the discovery of gold in the 18th century. The gold rush led to clashes between Europeans and indigenous groups. Many of these groups, such as the Bororo and Kayapó, still live in this state.

The building of Brasília as the new capital of Brazil brought waves of migrant workers to the Central West in the mid-20th century. In 1979, the state was split into Mato Grosso and Mato Grosso do Sul, divided by the star attraction of the region, the wetlands of the Pantanal.

Very few places in the world can boast such enormous numbers of large birds as the Pantanal. While wildlife can be difficult to see in the closed forests of the Amazon, it is visible in abundance here. In July and August, storks, ibis, herons, and huge, colorful parrots swarm the Pantanal, and can even be seen while driving along dirt roads. The wetlands are home to a diverse range of wildlife, including the anaconda, the elusive jaguar, and giant otter.

Outside the Pantanal, large tracts of farmland are broken by low mountains and giant, sluggish rivers. Amazon forests cling on in places such as Alta Floresta, Chapada dos Guimarães, and Bonito despite the expansion of the soya industry. The entire region offers prime opportunities for bird-watching, angling, and snorkeling.

Exploring Mato Grosso & Mato Grosso do Sul

Both Mato Grosso and Mato Grosso do Sul are regions of enormous plains with a handful of mountain ranges. The main attraction of this region is the Pantanal, the world's largest wetland. This harbors an important ecosystem with varied fauna such as caimans, jaguars, and a profuse variety of birds. Cuiabá, Corumbá, and Campo Grande are good springboards for ecotourists who wish to travel into or through the Pantanal. Alta Floresta, in the extreme north of Mato Grosso, is considered one of the best places for spotting rare birds and mammals. Bonito, in Mato Grosso do Sul, is an area of plunging waterfalls, caves, and crystal-clear rivers – ideal for walks through mountains and forests, and rafting and snorkeling. Flowing from central Mato Grosso, the Rio Xingú has indigenous peoples from nine distinct ethnic groups living along its banks.

GETTING AROUND

Distances are huge in these states and there are few paved roads. However, the capital cities – Campo Grande in Mato Grosso do Sul and Cuiabá in Mato Grosso have airports with good connections to the rest of Brazil. Alta Floresta also has an airport. Corumbá, Bonito, and Miranda in Mato Grosso do Sul are connected to Campo Grande by fast, comfortable buses. Tour operators are based in the capital cities and in Corumbá and Bonito. Most can organize bookings through their websites. Tours to the Pantanal are also organized, and usually enter the Pantanal by road and spend a couple of days exploring in canoes, motorboats, or on horseback from a land base. Rented cars are also a possibility, though visitors would be limited to only a few tracks along the fringes.

 🗓️ Festa de São Benedito (Jul).

Mato Grosso's capital and the warmest city in Brazil sits on a low, languid plain at the foot of the Chapada dos Guimarães hills. Situated on the banks of the Rio Cuiabá, a tributary of the Rio Paraguai, the city has some leafy squares and is known as the Cidade Verde or the Green City. Cuiabá is also a good starting point for excursions into the Pantanal, a vast wetland area (see pp320–21).

Like Cidade de Goiás (see p310) and Ouro Preto (see pp126–7), Cuiabá was originally a flourishing gold-mining town, full of handsome buildings and fine churches. Almost all were demolished in a spate of hasty modernization in the late 1960s. The town has lost most of the splendid works of José Joaquim da Veiga Valle (1806–74), one of the country's great geniuses of the Baroque. Fortunately, some of his exquisite craftsmanship can still be seen in the well-preserved, vast, rectangular interiors of the new concrete Catedral do Bom Jesus, which has an unusual square, Moorish façade.

The most interesting of the city's sights is the small university-run Museu do Índio Marechal Rondon. The museum holds some exquisite and priceless pieces of indigenous art. These include exhibits of the Xavante, Bororo, and Karajá peoples.

The town of Chapada dos Guimarães is set on a plateau of the same name. Said to be about 500 million years old, the majestic honey-colored tablelands and escarpments of the plateau are among the oldest rock formations in the world. As the continent's geodesic center, the tablelands of the Chapada dos Guimarães are reputedly imbued with energizing powers strong enough to reduce the speed of a car and said to be attractive to UFOs. While the residents of the Chapada claim this effect has been documented, cynics believe otherwise.

The little town has numerous shops, cafés, and a daily fair selling local arts and crafts. There are also several spiritual centers devoted to the New Age movement, which is growing in Brazil. Nature-lovers come here to admire the scenery. The edge of the Chapada offers sweeping vistas out over the patchy, remnant cerrado forests of the Mato Grosso plains. There are several waterfalls in the area, the most famous and tallest of which is the Véu de Noiva, or the Bridal Veil Falls.

Although the Chapada has seen far more aggressive agricultural development than its counterparts in Goiás and Tocantins, many upland bird species which are not found either in the Pantanal or the Amazonian forests can be seen here. The high cerrado forests, savannas, and pasturelands of the Chapada hold a special attraction for bird-watchers, who come here in droves to catalogue the variety of birds, and perhaps to catch a lucky glimpse of mammals, such as maned wolves, ocelots, and black-tailed marmosets.

Situated in the extreme north of Mato Grosso, Alta Floresta sits on the edge of the pristine southern Amazon rainforest, and is a rapidly growing frontier town. This remote town is also a thriving agricultural settlement. Its surrounding areas are considered some of the best in the Brazilian Amazon for spotting rare birds and mammals. One of the highlights of Alta Floresta is the four-star hotel, Floresta Amazônica, which serves as a base for the Cristalino Jungle Lodge (see p385).

The Cristalino Jungle Lodge sits in the Cristalino Forest Reserve deep in the forest, north of Alta Floresta. The lodge is situated on the banks of the Rio Cristalino, which is the black water tributary of the Rio Tapajós, whose blue waters flow into the Amazon at Santarém (see p274). The lodge is most famous for the profuse birdlife surrounding it, as well as an enormous variety of butterflies and other insects, reptiles, and mammals.

All the large Neotropical rainforest mammals, including the endangered white-nosed bearded saki monkey, brown titi monkey, giant river otter, and three-toed sloth, as well as jaguar, puma, and tapir are present and can often be spotted here. Facilities for jungle walks and viewing wildlife are excellent and include English-speaking, specialist guides, a 164-ft (50-m) high canopy tower, and a very good library of decent field guides.

Other more challenging outdoor adventure activities, such as camping in the forest, trekking, survival techniques, rappelling, canyoning, and canoeing, can also be arranged through the Cristalino Jungle Lodge.

By the end of the 19th century, all of the great Amazon tributaries had been explored and colonized, and their indigenous peoples enslaved or completely wiped out. The remote region of Xingú, in the extreme north-east of Mato Grosso, was the only indigenous settlement to survive the onslaught and be established as a preserve.

Home to one of the largest areas of tribal lands in the country, it sits as a huge island of forest in a vast ocean of soya plantations. These tracts of land are concentrated around the beautiful clear-water Rio Xingú. Known to be sophisticated, the indigenous peoples flourishing in the Xingú specialize in furniture-making and basket-weaving, among other things.

Tourism is extremely limited here and visits to indigenous villages can only be undertaken with prior permission from Fundação Nacional do Índio (Funai).

Pantanal 5

The world's largest wetland, the Pantanal provides a habitat for the greatest concentration of animals in the Western Hemisphere. Innumerable waterbirds gather toward the end of the dry season. There are plenty of reptiles and large mammals, including caimans, tapirs, giant anteaters, and all of Brazil's eight feline species. The secret to the vast numbers of animals lies in the diversity of habitats and the geography of the Pantanal, a gently sloping bowl which floods when nutrient-rich tributaries drain from the ancient sedimentary rocks of the Brazilian Shield and get trapped. Aquatic plants breed profusely and these provide ample food for fish and birds, who, in turn, feed the rest of the food chain.

Anhinga

The anhinga is a relative of the cormorant and is a common sight in the Pantanal. As it has no wax in its feathers, it must dry its wings in the sun after diving for fish.

Brahmin Cattle

The most common animals in the Pantanal are Brahmin cattle who are herded by local cowboys, or pantaneiros.

The Estrada Parque dirt road cuts through the southern Pantanal and leads to the wildlife-rich region of Nhecolândia. Like the Transpantaneira, it is lined with fazendas (farms).

On the banks of the Rio Paraguai, Corumbá is a small town surrounded by the Pantanal region's unspoilt beauty. Boat rides along the river, as well as wetland excursions form Corumbá's major attractions. Sportfishing, one of the main highlights, is provided at the nature lodges, floating hotels, and charming fazendas in this area.

Corumbá was first explored by Portuguese and Spanish adventurers in search of gold. By the 18th century, the growing strategic importance of the Rio Paraguai led to the construction of forts. The Forte Junqueira, built during the Paraguayan War (see p53), is the only fort still standing intact.

Another place worth a visit is the Casa do Artesão, a former prison housing an interesting museum of indigenous and local objects d'art. The Museu do Pantanal also has a small collection of indigenous art.

Festa do Homem Pantaneiro (Oct).

The tiny town of Miranda, in the heart of the Pantanal, hosts the region's liveliest festival, the Festa do Homem Pantaneiro. This grand celebration of the ranching and cowboy way of life features lasso contests (in the mornings for women, at night for men), and rodeos. Live sertanejo bands and dancing carry on all night.

Miranda is an ideal base for visiting the southern Pantanal's various fazenda ranches (see pp385–6), many of which lie on the outskirts of town. The Fazenda San Francisco is one of the best locations in inland Brazil for big cats, especially ocelot and jaguar. The Fazenda Baía Grande preserves a diverse range of Pantanal habitats, including a large caiman-filled lake and extensive forest. The Fazenda Meia Lua lies just on the edge of town and is an ideal soft adventure option.

Environs

Known for their distinctive painted terra-cotta ceramics, the Terena indigenous villages surround Miranda. Tour operators in Miranda can arrange trips to a Terena village, as well as to the Rio Salobrinho, a beautiful clear-water river lined with gallery forest. Expect to find rare bird species, including kingfishers and black-crowned night herons.

Mato Grosso do Sul's capital, Campo Grande is also known as Cidade Morena because of its red earth. It is a prosperous, modern city devoted far more to agro-business than tourism. Yet most visitors to the southern Pantanal arrive here because the tourist infrastructure is excellent. Commerce, education, and tourism are fast growing industries here. The city itself has few major attractions, though there are many good restaurants, hotels, and bars, particularly along and around Rua Barão do Rio Branco. For those who do not want to rough it out with a Pantanal camping tour, travel agencies sell packages to pleasant farm hotels.

SOUTHERN BRAZIL

INTRODUCING SOUTHERN BRAZIL 326-331

SANTA CATARINA & PARANÁ 332-347

RIO GRANDE DO SUL 348-359

Introducing Southern Brazil

The states of Paraná, Santa Catarina, and Rio Grande do Sul form Southern Brazil – the only Brazilian region that lies entirely outside the tropics. Often dismissed as somehow not being truly Brazilian, this region is distinctive due to more than its temperate climate. Although there are vital indigenous, African, and Portuguese elements to the population, the region is largely associated with descendants of European immigrants. The landscape features tremendous contrasts – the pampas grasslands, mountains, and the highland plateau. The distinctive cultures that have emerged there, as along the equally varied coast, serve as reminders of Brazil's diversity.

Foz do Iguaçu (see pp340–43) is one of South America's most impressive natural features. These spectacular waterfalls are shared by Brazil and Argentina, with each side offering unique perspectives. From Brazil, visitors enjoy a complete panorama, while the trails in Argentina allow visitors to see the falls close-up.

São Miguel das Missões (see p359) is Rio Grande do Sul's best-preserved Jesuit ruin. This haunting place offers ample evidence of the sophistication of native Guaraní Baroque architecture that emerged in this remote region in the mid-17th century.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL
(see pp348–59)

Curitiba (see p336), the capital of Paraná, is a pretty, well-planned town. Built during the city's cattle and coffee boom, today Curitiba has well-preserved historic buildings, less pollution and traffic than other Brazilian cities, plenty of green spaces, a great music scene, and several interesting sights.

SANTA CATARINA & PARANÁ
(see pp332-47)

Florianópolis (see pp346-7), the vibrant capital city of Santa Catarina on Ilha de Santa Catarina, is surrounded by quiet fishing communities and excellent beaches. The sheltered north shore has the most developed beaches, while the east coast lures surfers attracted by giant Atlantic rollers.

Porto Alegre (see pp352-3), the capital of Rio Grande do Sul, has a host of Neo-Classical buildings dating from the 19th and early 20th centuries. The Palácio Municipal is one such expression of civic pride, built in 1898, when Porto Alegre was developing into a significant city.

Multicultural Southern Brazil

Pysanky, Russian

More than anywhere else in the country, Southern Brazil has been shaped culturally and economically by immigrants. Unlike tropical Brazil to the north, this part was considered unsuitable for plantation agriculture, and instead immigrants were recruited for land colonization schemes. The legacy of its physical isolation from “mainstream” Brazilian society is reflected in the languages and cultures of the immigrants. The architectural heritage has become increasingly valued, festivals showcase traditional music and dance, while handicrafts and local products are sold in villages and on farms.

An illustration of European immigrants aboard a ship bound for Brazil

AZOREANS

In the 18th century, Azoreans settled along the coast of Southern Brazil, bringing with them fishing, farming, and lace-making skills. Villages were created, in particular on the island of Santa Catarina, whose white-and-blue buildings resemble those of the Portuguese mid-Atlantic islands.

Azorean lace-making is one of the important traditions that have been maintained by women in villages on the island of Santa Catarina.

Fishing, the main economic activity of the Azorean community in Santa Catarina

GERMANS

Germans were the first non-Portuguese immigrants to settle in Southern Brazil, in the 1850s. They were drawn to the highlands of Rio Grande do Sul and the river valleys of north-eastern Santa Catarina. Their dialects and traditions continue in many rural areas, while German architectural styles are apparent in cities such as Blumenau and Nova Hamburgo.

Old-world architecture still dominates in the areas of Southern Brazil settled by German immigrants. Many buildings are exact replicas of ones found in towns in southern Germany. In the countryside, distinctive half-timbered farmhouses, built by pioneer immigrants, remain a common sight.

German-Brazilian celebration of Oktoberfest

ITALIANS

The first Italian immigrants settled in Rio Grande do Sul in 1875, with tens of thousands arriving there, and in Santa Catarina and Paraná, over the next 50 years. The vast majority came from the northern Italian provinces of Veneto and Trento, introducing rich culinary traditions and the ability to cultivate lucrative grape vines on the steepest of hillsides.

Vineyards in the Serra Gaúcha (see p355) have become as much a part of the landscape as they are in Italy. These endless stretches of lush greenery form the center-stage for the region's wine production, known both in and outside Brazil.

SLAVS

Paraná is the state most closely associated with Slavic immigrants from Central and Eastern Europe, with Poles settling in and around Curitiba from 1869, Ukrainians in the south-center of the state from 1895, and Russians around Ponta Grossa in the early 1960s. The Ukrainians have been especially successful in maintaining their ethnic identity.

São Josafat, a typical Byzantine-style church in Prudentópolis, is easily recognizable by its onion dome features. The Ukrainian Catholic church is pivotal in maintaining Ukrainian identity in Brazil.

A log cabin, housed in the Museu da Imigração Polonesa in Curitiba, is one of the structures that were built by Polish immigrants in the 19th and 20th centuries.

OTHER COMMUNITIES

At the beginning of the 20th century, Jews from Eastern Europe founded agricultural communities in Rio Grande do Sul. They later moved to Porto Alegre, establishing Brazil's third largest Jewish community. In the 1920s and 1930s, many Japanese immigrants relocated to Paraná from São Paulo, setting up coffee and soya farms. Immigrants from other ethnic backgrounds were too few to leave legacies. Some exceptions are the Austrians who settled in central Santa Catarina in the 1930s, and the Dutch who came to Paraná after World War II.

Castrolanda, a Dutch settlement thriving on dairy and agricultural products, mainly soya, continues to celebrate its past in the traditional folk dances of the Netherlands.

Praça Ministro Andreas Thaler, in Treze Tílias, is named for the then Austrian Minister of Agriculture, who founded the city in 1933 for Austrian immigrants.

The Gaúcho Life

The gaúcho culture developed in colonial times in what is now northeastern Argentina, Uruguay, and Southern Brazil. In Rio Grande do Sul, the natives of the state – whether urban or rural, and regardless of their ethnic origin – are called gaúchos. Traditionally, gaúchos were semi-nomadic people who lived by hunting wild cattle. With the introduction of fencing and border agreements, they were reduced to being ranch hands. Nonetheless, their legacy continues to be strongly visible in the distinct gaúcho culture of today. In the interior of the state, in the grasslands of both the pampas and serra, the heirs of the traditional gaúcho employ their skills as tough horsemen on cattle estancias (ranches).

Old estancia Sobrado, a traditional ranch, Rio Grande do Sul

CLOTHING

Traditional gaúcho attire remains commonplace among the rural population of the pampas and highlands of Southern Brazil. On special occasions, city dwellers also don gaúcho clothing, an outward sign of the distinctiveness of Rio Grande do Sul society.

Gaúcho dress is worn with immense pride. “Gaúcho pants” (bombachas), a linen shirt, kerchief, poncho, rimmed felt-hat, and pleated boots with fancy spurs are essential components of traditional gaúcho clothing.

A silver knife, delicately carved, is an important gaúcho tool, handy weapon, and eating implement.

Parade celebrating gaúcho culture in Argentina

CENTRO DE TRADIÇÕES GAÚCHAS

The worldwide Brazilian-gaúcho organization, Centro de Tradições Gaúchas, (Center for Gaúcho Traditions) was founded by eight Porto Alegre students in 1948, to preserve and promote gaúcho traditions. Today, it has more than 4,500 affiliate clubs that stage rodeos, gaúcho dances, parades, barbecues, and other social events. A centro can now be found wherever gaúchos live, both within Rio Grande do Sul and as far afield as Bolivia, Japan, and Portugal. The centros are perhaps the most convenient way for an outsider to observe gaúcho traditions, which are emerging as a part of popular culture even in non-gaúcho areas. Local tourist offices and hotels will be able to provide information on upcoming events.

WAY OF LIFE

The gaúcho way of life was originally a nomadic one, with the horsemen wandering the pampas, hunting wild cattle for their hides. Working as cattle hands today, gaúchos still cling to many of the traditions.

Cattle drives by gaúchos on horseback are common sights en route to Rio Grande do Sul's extensive grassland regions.

Rodeos, often lasting several days, test the skills of cattlemen, serve as social events for local townfolk, and help break the isolation of rural inhabitants.

DANCE & MUSIC

Dance performances are integral to social gatherings. The music originates from a mixing of Portuguese, Spanish, Basque, African, German, and Italian cultures, with lyrics typically about local tales. Polkas and marches form the basis of traditional gaúcho dance.

A colorful kerchief is part of a gaúcho's typical dress.

Bombachas, or loose-fitting trousers belted with a tirador (sash), are traditionally worn by the gaúchos.

Accordion music first came to Southern Brazil with Portuguese colonists, but was transformed by exposure to other influences. The accordion and acoustic guitar are the most common folk instruments.

FOOD & DRINK

Meat, especially beef, is central to the traditional gaúcho diet. While the gaúcho grill is legendary, rice, usually cooked with charque (jerked beef), is also a staple. Pumpkin and other varieties of squash are often incorporated into stews.

Churrasco, barbecued beef popular throughout Brazil, is cooked on metal or wood skewers rested on a support or stuck into the ground, and roasted over a charcoal or firewood flame.

Chimarrão, a sugarless chá mate tea, is the characteristic and most popular drink of Rio Grande do Sul. The caffeinated herbal tea is sipped through a bomba (a silver straw) from a cuia (gourd). The same cuia is generally used by a group of chimarrão drinkers.

SANTA CATARINA & PARANÁ

Brasil's southern states are a delight for nature-lovers, with Paraná's spectacular Iguaçu Falls surrounded by lush rainforest and lovely beaches fringing the coast of tiny Santa Catarina. The region's long history of immigration from Europe has created a unique cultural identity that is visible even today.

During the 17th and 18th centuries, military garrisons were established all along the coast of Southern Brazil to guard against possible Spanish encroachment, and immigrants from the Portuguese mid-Atlantic islands of the Azores were brought in to establish farming and fishing settlements. Over time, these settlements grew into important towns, and Curitiba – on the trade route between Rio Grande do Sul and Minas Gerais – transformed into one of Brazil's most dynamic cities.

From 1840 to the mid-1900s, the interiors of Paraná and Santa Catarina were opened to immigration, with waves of European and other settlers staking out small farms. The newcomers settled along ethnic lines, with the Polish concentrated around Curitiba, Ukrainians in southern Paraná, Germans in Santa Catarina's Itajaí Valley, and Italians in the southern part of the state.

The physical and cultural isolation of ethnic groups has resulted in distinct identities being maintained in rural areas to this day. The towns of Paranaguá, Antonina, and Morretes in Paraná, and Laguna, Florianópolis, and São Francisco do Sul in Santa Catarina also retain visible characteristics of their European origins.

The main destination for visitors to Paraná are the Iguaçu Falls and the surrounding rainforest. The state's coast has escaped the excesses of development despite the natural beauty of Ilha do Mel, Guaraqueçaba, and Superaguí Island. Visitors to Santa Catarina make straight for the beaches of Florianópolis. The mountainous interior around São Joaquim and Lages is worth visiting for its spectacular scenery.

Turquoise waves hitting Florianópolis beach, Santa Catarina

Exploring Santa Catarina & Paraná

Although the uncontested highlights of this region are Paraná's magnificent Iguazu Falls and Santa Catarina's island resort of Florianópolis, these two states have much more to offer. Santa Catarina's 310-mile (500-km) coast features sheltered coves and long expanses of beach, while in Paraná, the Atlantic forest preserves of the Parque Nacional Ilha de Superagüi encompass dense virgin forest. Ilha do Mel, at the mouth of Paranaguá Bay, is a popular beach resort, and just across the bay on the mainland is the scenic port of Paranaguá. Inland, both states have a robust agricultural industry. Vast soya farms dominate large parts of Paraná, while small family holdings are characteristic of Santa Catarina. Descendants of European immigrants continue their traditions in these states, such as the Austrians in Treze Tilias.

Founded in 1693 as a gold mining encampment, Curitiba developed to become the largest city in Southern Brazil. It emerged from being a minor administrative, commercial and agro-processing center to grow into one of Brazil's most dynamic cities. Since the early 1990s, Curitiba has rivalled São Paulo as a location for corporate investment, in large measure attracted by the city's quality of life and public services, which are an example to the rest of the country.

The Largo da Ordem marks the heart of Curitiba's oldest quarter and features many well-preserved historic buildings. Dating from 1737, the Igreja da Ordem is the city's oldest church and the finest example of Portuguese ecclesiastical architecture in the state. The plain, white-washed, structure is decorated inside with typically Portuguese blue-and-white tiles and Baroque altars. Alongside the church is the Museu de Arte Sacra with a small but well-presented collection of relics gathered from churches in Curitiba. On the same side of the square is the Igreja do Rosário, originally serving Curitiba's slave population. First built in 1737, the church was completely reconstructed in the 1930s but retains its original Portuguese colonial style. Across the square is the early 18th-century Casa Romário Martins, Curitiba's oldest surviving house and now a cultural center featuring exhibitions on the history of the city.

Up the hill from here, virtually adjoining the Largo da Ordem are Garibaldi and João Cândido squares. The squares are surrounded by brightly painted late 19th- and early 20th-century houses, now used as art galleries, antique shops, and restaurants. The grandest building, however, is the Palácio São Francisco, built in 1929 and later serving as the state governor's official residence. Renovated and extended, the building now houses the Museu Paranaense, its displays concentrating on Paraná's archaeology, anthropology, and history.

The city's commercial center extends along Rua XV de Novembro. Rua das Flores is the pedestrianized section lined with early 20th-century pastel-colored shops. This area's one truly distinctive building is the magnificent former city hall at Praça José Borges, just across from the flower market. Built in 1916, the French-style Art Nouveau structure was later used as the Museu Paranaense until the opening of the new site.

To celebrate the contributions of European immigrants to the city's development, parks have been built in their honor.

The best example of these is the Bosque Papa João Paulo II Memorial Polonês, where log cabins built in the 1880s by Polish immigrants have been re-erected. The buildings – including a farmhouse, chapel, and barns, are set amid a small araucaria preserve, pine trees that originally dominated the landscape. Bordering the Bosque Papa João Paulo II and representing modern Curitiba is the Museu Oscar Niemeyer. Popularly referred to as “The Eye” after the construction's central feature, the building is considered one of Oscar Niemeyer's greatest architectural achievements.

Serra da Graciosa ②

The mountain range that separates Paraná state's coast from its interior is known as the Serra do Mar. Its southern extension, Serra da Graciosa, is one of the largest remaining areas of Mata Atlântica (Atlantic forest) in Southern Brazil. The Serra is rich in flora and fauna, ranging from lowland sub-tropical to cloud forest varieties. The road and railroad linking Morretes and Curitiba are amazing feats of 19th-century engineering, zigzagging through some of the most spectacular terrain in the country. The area is often shrouded with mist or fog, the result of cool air from the highlands colliding with the warm air of the subtropical coast. The forest thrives on such precipitation.

Founded in 1585, Paranaguá is the oldest city in Paraná and is one of Brazil's most important ports today.

Paranaguá's historic center is small enough to explore on foot. The city's oldest buildings are located in the compact historic core on the shore of Paranaguá Bay. Most of these dilapidated, but distinguished-looking, 19th-century merchants' houses now serve as shops or inexpensive hotels. Also along the shore is the former Colégio dos Jesuítas, an imposing building that now houses the Museu de Arqueologia e Etnologia, with a rich collection relating to the region's indigenous inhabitants and popular culture.

Two churches in the historic center are worth seeking out. The Igreja de Nossa Senhora do Rosário, built between 1575 and 1578, has suffered considerable changes over the centuries, but the main structure retains a Portuguese colonial appearance. Built in 1784 for slaves, the Igreja de São Benedito is an excellent example of popular colonial architecture. The simple, whitewashed building has undergone renovation in recent years and contains a small collection of sacred art.

Ilha do Mel 4

Paraná. 1,200. from Paranaguá. www.ilhadomelonline.com.br

The most beautiful of Paraná's islands, Ilha do Mel offers a combination of almost entirely undeveloped beaches, isolated coves, and sandy trails. The island guards the entrance to Paranaguá Bay and there are well-preserved ruins of the mid-18th century fort, Fortaleza de Nossa Senhora dos Prazeres, that was constructed to ward off English, French, and Spanish attacks. The Farol das Conchas (Conchas Lighthouse), imported from Glasgow and placed on the island's most easterly point in 1872, is the best place for a stunning panoramic view of the island, bay, and mountains.

Tourist development is low-key. Visitor numbers are controlled, and there are no roads or motor vehicles on the island. Building work is also strictly regulated. Pousadas are all small and very simple, but most are all the more charming for this. The Ilha do Mel attracts predominantly young visitors and in the summer it transforms into a party island, with beachside bars open through the night. In spite of this, there can be few more peaceful spots on the southern Brazilian coast than on this island. The beaches, some with waves suitable for skilled surfers, others with warm, calm water ideal for swimming, are never overcrowded. Some of the best beaches, such as Praia Grande and Praia de Fora, are located on the eastern part of the island.

Just a few dozen people who make a living from fishing and tourism inhabit the island of Superagüi. The island is part of the Parque Nacional de Superagüi, the largest stretch of intact Atlantic rainforest, or Mata Atlântica (see p109). The park is home to jaguars and parrots, and is known for its mangroves and salt marshes, where an amazing variety of orchids grow. The park is also part of the Atlantic forest reserves that were given UNESCO World Heritage listing in 1999. The island is reached by boat, most easily from Paranaguá, although arrangements can also be made from Ilha do Mel. Most of the low-lying island is covered with shrub forest and mangrove. Very basic accommodation is available at Barra de Superagüi, a village located on the southeast of the island. The only other part of the island that is accessible to visitors is Praia Deserta, a glorious 24-mile (38-km) long expanse of white sand. The island attracts various migrating birds, but the flocks of rare, red-faced parrot (Amazona brasiliensis) are endemic. Visitors can observe them during the early hours of the evening.

BARREADO

In Paraná's coastal towns, barreado is listed on the menu of most restaurants. Now available throughout the year, barreado, considered a poor man's meal, used to be eaten during Carnival. Barreado is a dish that can provide food for several days and requires little attention while cooking. The dish is made of beef, bacon, tomatoes, onion, cumin, and other spices. Traditionally these ingredients are placed in layers in a large clay urn, covered, and then sealed with a paste of ash and farinha (manioc flour), before being cooked in a wood-fired oven for up to 15 hours. Today, pressure cookers are sometimes used, and gas or electric ovens are substituted for wood-fired ones. Barreado is served with farinha, which is spread on a plate; the meat and gravy is placed on top, and eaten with banana and orange slices.

Iguaçu Falls rate as one of South America's great natural sights. The falls are formed by a succession of 275 interlinking cataracts up to 246 ft (75 m) in height cascading over a 1.8-mile (3-km) wide precipice. The falls owe their origins to several successive volcanic layers of rock built up over 110 million years.

Shared between Brazil and Argentina, the falls are completely surrounded by nature preserves. The two preserves of Brazil's Parque Nacional do Iguaçu and Argentina's Parque Nacional Iguazú contain one of the largest surviving tracts of Atlantic forest in South America.

Whereas the Brazilian park's great attractions are the spectacular panoramic views of the falls, the Argentinian park has an extensive network of forest and waterside trails with close-up views of the smaller falls. As well as the Paseo Garganta do Diablo, there are trails to the Paseo Inferiores and the Paseo Superiores.

From the park's excellent visitors' center, a miniature railroad takes visitors to the Estación Central where the Paseo Inferiores and Paseo Superiores circuits begin. From the Paseo Superiores, visitors can look down onto and across dozens of cataracts. This circuit has concrete catwalks going behind the falls, which used to lead to the Garganta do Diablo until the floods swept them away.

The Paseo Inferiores is a short circuit offering even more spectacular views of the falls from below. This circuit takes a little over an hour and involves climbing up and down stairs. Especially remarkable are the parts of the trail across catwalks allowing amazing views over cascading water. At the lowest point, boats make the short crossing to the Isla San Martín, an island located in the heart of the falls. Walking on the island also requires a high level of fitness, as it involves clambering up steep slopes and across some jagged rock formations. The Paseo Garganta do Diablo catwalk begins at a quiet point upstream, passing several small islands before reaching its final, majestic destination.

WILDLIFE IN THE IGUAÇU REGION

The extent of native flora and fauna that the parks offer is varied. Over 2,000 species of flora have been identified, including ferns, bromeliads, orchids, and many large species of trees that serve as support for an equally large variety of climbing plants. In turn, this serves as a habitat for a similarly varied range of wildlife, lured by fruit, nesting spots, and dens. Although there are 450 varieties of bird amid this forested area, by far the most likely place to spot many of these is the Parque das Aves. With a practiced eye, birds can also be spotted within the forests and clearings of the national parks; the best time for bird-watching is early in the morning and at dusk when toucans, parrots, and hummingbirds abound. Some 80 kinds of mammals, with five varieties of feline, including jaguars and pumas, also rove the forest. Early morning and evening are the best time to see animals, with monkeys sometimes seen drinking from pools in the Argentinian park, or swinging overhead through the forest's canopy. The most commonly sighted mammal is the coati. One of the great joys of Iguazú during the warm summer months is the immense quantity and variety of colorful butterflies that flutter about.

RIO GRANDE DO SUL

The vast rolling pampas, rugged landscape, and fertile valleys of the Serra Gaúcha range are the dominant physical features of Rio Grande do Sul. A distinctive regional identity emerged with the semi-nomadic gaúcho, whose culture is still most apparent here. Although arable farming is important, the area is dominated by large, sprawling cattle estancias or ranches.

In 1494, even before Brazil was officially “discovered,” the Treaty of Tordesillas divided South America between Portugal and Spain. An imaginary line was drawn through the continent with land to its west awarded to Spain and that to its east to Portugal. Although Brazil was Portuguese, the area that is now Rio Grande do Sul was Spanish. Neither power, however, controlled this frontier region.

Even after Brazil’s independence in 1822, only a few military garrisons and small coastal settlements existed here until the mid-1800s. Apart from its obvious strategic significance, the economic potential of this sparsely populated province was gradually being recognized. Until the mid-19th century, indigenous Guaraní people and gaúchos inhabited the pampas, largely the preserve of wild cattle.

The forested highlands had an even smaller population. European immigrants settled here on small farms in the mid-18th century. These agricultural, wine-producing colonies grew rapidly and soon transformed the Serra’s landscape and economy. By the early 19th century, Rio Grande do Sul had become synonymous with beef. The charque (dried beef) industry developed around the southern town of Pelotas. The introduction of railroads and refrigeration gave a further boost to the industry.

Beautiful mountain resorts and extraordinary hiking can be found around the canyons of Parque Nacional dos Aparados da Serra. Both gaúcho and European influences have instilled a distinct cultural identity in this state, offering a unique Brazilian experience.

Exploring Rio Grande Do Sul

The pampas that characterize the interior of southern and western Rio Grande do Sul are the state's economic heartlands. Porto Alegre, the state's capital, is a bustling city which is culturally rich and ethnically diverse. The windswept coast is for the most part unrelentingly bleak, and is fringed by lagoons and sand bars, making it one of the world's longest beaches. The araucaria pine forests, immense canyons, and terraced vineyards of Bento Gonçalves and Flores da Cunha in the northeast make perfect backdrops for charming country hotels, wineries, and mountain resorts. In the far west, the ruins of São Miguel das Missões are a haunting reminder of the Jesuit legacy in Brazil.

GETTING AROUND

Porto Alegre, the state's capital, has an airport which serves the capital cities of neighboring countries and major Brazilian cities. Excellent roads and good bus services connect all parts of Rio Grande do Sul with Porto Alegre. Well-surfaced highways even connect most of the smallest towns and villages. It is essential to have a rented car, or to make advance arrangements to be met by a guide in the nearest town, if an estancia (ranch) stay has been organized. The Serra range is about two hours from Porto Alegre, and the most direct route is the congested BR-116 highway.

German immigrants arriving in the 1820s were the first to settle in the rolling hills north of Porto Alegre. The town of Nova Petrópolis, founded in 1858, remained relatively isolated until the mid-20th century and retains a strong German character even today.

Stretching along Avenida 15 de Novembro, the town's commercial center features a number of German-style buildings. Midway along the avenue is the interesting Parque Aldeia do Imigrante, which pays tribute to the region's early settlers. Set within an araucaria forest, the park houses a collection of beautifully reconstructed, half-timbered buildings dating between 1870 and 1910. The Lutheran church, houses, school, smithy, and cemetery help re-create the atmosphere of a 19th-century German hamlet. The park also hosts festivals and concerts and features a large bandstand and beer hall.

The hamlets and farmsteads surrounding Nova Petrópolis also have a distinctly German flavor. Here, German is still the dominant language and old-world traditions, such as music and dance, thrive.

Brazil's best-known mountain resort, Gramado does all it can to mimic a central European village. Although there are no Alpine peaks, the hilly landscape, reaching just 2,706 ft (825 m) around Gramado, is quite dramatic and the views are fantastic. The flower-filled Parque Knorr and the Lago Negro, an artificial lake bordered by pine trees imported from Germany's Black Forest, allow for pleasant strolls.

"Swiss chalet" is the dominant architectural style and, with the profusion of geranium-filled window boxes, chocolate shops, and restaurants specializing in cheese fondues, one is encouraged to believe that Gramado has connections with Switzerland. This is entirely an affectation as only a very tiny minority of the population is of Swiss origin and beneath its veneer, Gramado has more in common with an American shopping mall.

Gramado survives almost entirely on tourism. During the first two weeks in August, the city hosts the Festival de Gramado, one of Brazil's most prestigious film festivals, which also attracts an international crowd.

Just 4 miles (6 km) north from Gramado's main avenue is the Vale do Quilombo. Approached by a steep dirt road, much of the valley's original dense Mata Atlântica (Atlantic rainforest) remains and the climate is warmer and more humid. The Refúgio Família Sperry supports an abundance of fauna including coati, toucans, and howler and capuchin monkeys. Forest trails pass magnificent waterfalls that enhance the valley's scenic splendor.

The valley floor is cultivated and picturesque. Half-timbered farm buildings, which were built by German immigrants in the 19th-century, are to be seen alongside the road.

Chilly winters, refreshing summers, and unspoiled nature attract visitors to Canela, once a stop-off point for cattle being herded across Rio Grande do Sul's grasslands. The town is dominated by the Igreja Matriz Nossa Senhora de Lourdes, an imposing stone church built in 1953 in English Neo-Gothic style, with other buildings in an eclectic mix of local and European styles. Thanks to the presence of students attracted to highly regarded tourism colleges, the town has a vibrant feel to it.

Environ

Most of the forests of the Serra were devastated in the 19th century in the quest for araucaria pine. Today, some of this forested area is being preserved. Approximately 5 miles (8 km) north of Canela is the Parque do Caracol, a forest reserve with a 429-ft (131-m) waterfall. A highlight here is the 927-step stairway leading to the base of the cascade from where visitors can best appreciate its force and the surrounding forests. A farther 3 miles (5 km) north along the road from Caracol is the Parque da Ferradura, a forest reserve notable for the dramatic views of the horseshoe-shaped Rio Caí and of the Arroio Caçador canyon and waterfall.

The area is a popular destination for adventure tourism, with rafting along the fast-flowing Rio Paranhana. Rappelling down its gorge allows for close-up views of the terrain.

A bunch of black grapes

Some of the best wine in Brazil is produced in Vale dos Vinhedos. The majority of inhabitants here originate from Veneto, Italy, and life in the Vale dos Vinhedos follows a pattern very similar to that in the corner of Northeast Italy. In an area of virtual monoculture, grape is central to the year's activity, while the Catholic chapels are cornerstones for the maintenance of Italian traditions.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Starting point: Bento Gonçalves (see p356).

Length: Allow a full day to visit several wineries and a stop for lunch.

Driving conditions: The main road is paved while the side roads have good-quality gravel surfaces.

Examine a bottle of Brazilian wine and, in all likelihood, the label will indicate Bento Gonçalves as its place of origin. Bento, as the city is usually called, is one of the largest producers of wine in Brazil, with virtually every patch of land outside the city growing vines. The city's economy relies solely on grapes and wine production, as a result of which Bento's vintners dominate the Brazilian market.

Bento was one of the earliest Italian communities established in the Serra Gaúcha in 1875. However, the rapid growth of the city's urban center in recent decades has left few traces of Italian influence during the early years of immigration. The Museu do Imigrante has a rich collection of artifacts relating to Bento's pioneer settlers with rooms focusing on the arrival of the immigrants and the central role of the Catholic church in the community and farming, in particular viticulture.

Wine is still produced in town by large commercial operations. The Cooperativa Vinícola Aurora is the best known, and Aurora is the most prominent wine producer in Brazil, with a membership of some 1,300 families, most of whom farm in the valley. Visitors to the cooperative are shown the entire production process from the crushing of grapes to bottling. Tours culminate with tastings. There are also numerous cantinas (wine cellars) dotting the town center which also offer free tours and tastings.

Smaller producers also produce fine wines.

These are located just a short distance from downtown Bento, indeed vines extend right up to the city limits and through the beautiful Vale dos Vinhedos, the Valley of Vineyards (see p355).

Garibaldi, a small town just 12 miles (20 km) south of Bento Gonçalves, is known for its surprisingly good champagne-style sparkling wines. Part of the attraction of getting to this little town is the ride on the steam engine known as Maria Fumaça, or “Smoking Mary,” a name commonly given to tourist steam trains (see p440).

Passing through the landscape's patchwork of vineyards, the 15-mile (23-km) route is covered in an hour and a half. The high point of the journey is the stop at an observatory overlooking the Rio das Antas at the point where the route curves in a horseshoe shape.

Founded in 1875 Caxias do Sul – or simply Caxias, as it is usually called – along with Bento Gonçalves, was one of the earliest Italian colonias to be established in the Serra. Like its neighboring settlements, commercial activity at first revolved entirely around wine production, but over the next century other agro-processing industries, as well as textiles and metalworking, developed. Today, Caxias is Rio Grande do Sul's second largest city after Porto Alegre.

Although tower blocks and other concrete buildings have overtaken much of Caxias, some visible traces of the city's heritage survive.

The fact that Flores da Cunha boasts one of the highest concentrations of wineries in Rio Grande do Sul will come as little surprise to visitors. Just about every available patch of land in the municipality is given to grape vines and cantinas, ranging from small artisan wine producers to huge cooperatives.

The town of Flores da Cunha itself is unremarkable, but the surrounding villages and hamlets could easily be mistaken for simple northern Italian farming communities, even maintaining the Venetian dialect of their immigrant forbears, making it the most Italian of Brazilian towns.

Environs

Located in a fertile and picturesque valley, Otávio Rocha, 8 miles (13 km) southwest of Flores da Cunha, is especially striking, with vines extending down to the main streets. The village has become a popular place to eat and there is good choice of restaurants specializing in simple, but tasty, northern Italian country fare.

Another 4 miles (7 km) west of Otávio Rocha is Nova Pádua, another wine-producing município, whose inhabitants are descended from Venetian immigrants. The village's focal point is the church, characteristically Italian in style with a bell tower set slightly to the side of the main structure. A short distance farther west, there are breathtaking views below onto the fast flowing Rio das Antas and a landscape of the Antas Valley, a mix of vineyards and primary forest.

The last of the major settlements, Antônio Prado was established in the Italian colonial zone in 1886. Located in the zone's northern extreme end, until fairly recently, with poor links to other centers, Antônio Prado failed to make the transition from farming community to industrial town.

The lack of development is one of the reasons why the town was declared a National Heritage Site in 1989. Its particular attraction is its concentration of wooden, stone-base buildings erected by Italian immigrants.

Clustered around the town's central square, Praça Garibaldi, and the roads that extend immediately off it, some 48 historic buildings are protected and perfectly maintained. Most of the brightly painted clapboard structures with their unchanged interiors have been turned into shops or small government offices. One of these buildings is now the town hall on Praça Garibaldi. Also located on Praça Garibaldi, the Museu de Antônio Prado offers a useful historical overview of the development of the town.

The highland plateau of southern Brazil emerged from the accumulation of layer upon layer of ocean sediment, with the resulting rock formations lifted up to form the Brazilian Shield. Some 150 million years ago, lava poured onto the shield to create a thick layer of basalt rock. Cracks emerged at the edge of the plateau, taking the form of narrow, but deep, canyons. It is around one of the largest of these canyons – Canion do Itaimbezinho – that the Parque Nacional dos Aparados da Serra, one of Brazil's first national parks, was created in 1959.

Canion do Itaimbezinho is a 2,360-ft (720-m) deep, 4-mile (6-km) long canyon featuring several ecosystems merging into one another with transition zones between them. The plateau around Itaimbezinho is mainly given over to cattle pasture, while dense Mata Atlântica (see p109) covers Itaimbezinho's lower reaches. The abundant flora ranges from lichens and mosses to orchids and other flowering plants and giant araucaria pines. Trails around the edge of the canyon are well marked, varying in length between 1 mile (2 km) and 4 miles (6 km), with observatories offering views of the canyon. The longest trail, Trilha do Rio do Boi, can be challenging for unseasoned hikers. It is closed in the rainy season due to the danger of flooding.

The best season to visit the park is in winter (May to August), when visibility stretches to the base of the canyon and toward the coast. September is the worst time to come here, with low cloud and heavy rainfall. During the rest of the year, fog often obscures views, though it can lift very quickly.

The main highlight of the long coastline of Rio Grande do Sul is Torres, located near the border with the neighboring state of Santa Catarina. Torres is named for a series of huge basalt rocks, or "towers," that jut into the ocean and break the otherwise seemingly unending beach. The towers are located in the Parque da Guarita, on the southern perimeter of town. Between the sea cliff towers are sandy coves offering protection from fierce Atlantic rollers. Stairs lead to caves on the cliffs facing the open sea, which were formed over the course of millions of years by the force of the ocean. From a hill at the southern edge of the park, visitors can enjoy tremendous views of the beautifully rugged coastline or trek through the dunes of 2-mile (4-km) long Praia de Itapeva. The water at Itapeva is tranquil and favorable for swimming.

THE RISE AND COLLAPSE OF JESUIT MISSIONS

Santa Cecilia, wood sculpture

For much of the 17th and 18th centuries, the Guaraní Indians of what is now northwestern Rio Grande do Sul, as well as parts of Argentina and Paraguay, were controlled by the Jesuits. The first redução (community) was established in 1610; 30 others followed, including Brazil's São Miguel, which was founded in 1632. Over time, Guaraní-influenced Baroque music, architecture, painting, and sculpture began to flourish. The Spanish and Portuguese authorities became increasingly concerned about the power of the Jesuits, while Rome was worried that the order was too independent of papal authority. In 1756, Spanish and Portuguese forces expelled the Jesuits. The missions were razed to the ground or abandoned to nature.

São Miguel das Missões 12

Wooden sculpture

Surviving through centuries of neglect, the São Miguel Mission presents a fine example of the Guaraní-Baroque style, a blend of Iberian and indigenous architectural elements. These influences are visible in architectural details, particularly in the carved stonework and in the wooden sculptures housed in the museum. The mission was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 1984. Although the area around São Miguel has been given over to farmland, the mission retains an air of isolation.

WHERE TO STAY

Given the size and diversity of Brazil, it is no surprise that the country offers an excellent selection of accommodations to suit every taste and pocket. Large cities have a wide range of business hotels that comprise everything from budget brands, deluxe international properties such as Grand Hyatt and Orient-Express, to privately owned, cutting-edge boutique hotels such as the Fasano and Unique in São Paulo. In tourist areas, the options include large, fancy, all-inclusive, internationally known resort properties, as well as Brazilian owned chain and individual hotels.

There are also small, privately owned establishments, or pousadas, that may only have two or three rooms and are either very simple and basic or very sophisticated.

BOOKING

As Brazil is one of the most active Internet countries in the world, the majority of hotels, pousadas, and lodges have their own websites through which it is possible to make reservations. Many larger properties also appear on international booking engines and travel sites such as Expedia and Last Minute. In places where there is an English-speaking staff, it is also possible to make telephone and fax reservations.

In the age of the Internet, it is important for the traveler to check how financially protected they are if they do book directly and the property they choose goes out of business. Under European regulations, any company based in the EU that sells a "package" (a combination of flight, hotels, car hire, among others) must be bonded through an approved body that will protect the client's financial security; this will probably not be the case if the traveler books direct.

During the high season, and especially during Carnival and the Christmas to New Year period, many hotels and pousadas in Brazil will expect guests to stay for a minimum number of nights. This will need to be taken into consideration as one- or two-night stays may be difficult to find if you want to move around. Book in advance during high season, as good rooms are not easy to come by last minute. Weekends can also get quite crowded.

PRICES & PAYMENTS

Just as travelers want financial security, so do hotel and pousada owners. A deposit will certainly be required, whereas many smaller properties may require payment in advance to cover the entire duration of the stay, especially in high season or for weekend specials.

It is also normal for hotels in Brazil to ask the client to send a fax or photocopy of the credit card used to make the reservation. The reason for this is due to the increasing number of travelers who change their travel plans and then try to deny they ever made the reservation. A copy of the credit card – if not reported stolen – does tend to prove that the person did make the reservation. Credit cards are accepted as payment at most properties, especially in bigger cities.

Only the larger hotels in bigger cities will handle traveler's checks. Checks drawn on Brazilian banks are generally acceptable, as is cash. Many places accept payment in US dollars, but they will set the exchange rate, which will often be high.

When booking, it is important to check what taxes are included in the price. These may include a 10 percent service tax, a 5 percent sales tax and, in some areas of Brazil, a nightly tourist tax.

Prices throughout Brazil vary greatly and it is rare that any traveler should ever need to pay the rack rate as advertised by the hotels. Like airlines, hotels often make special offers available even through their own websites. Some hotels, normally smaller, privately owned properties, still think they can charge different prices for Brazilian travelers and foreign visitors, so it is worth checking the rates on the Portuguese language version of the website.

In Brazil, the price often reflects not only the quality of accommodation, but also the location. A traveler on a budget needs to decide if the priority is a beachfront location or a better quality hotel a couple of blocks back from the beach. There will also be notably different rates for rooms at the front of a beachfront property and those at the side or behind.

TIPPING

It is customary and much appreciated if guests leave a tip for the staff that have served them well during their stay. This could be the chambermaid, the bellboy, or the barman. Many of the people who serve visitors will be earning the minimum wage of around US$150 per month, so any tips can make a real difference.

CHILDREN

Many Brazilian families travel with their nanny in tow, and are quite happy taking their children with them wherever they go. Children are always welcome at most hotels with only a very few smaller, normally romantic pousadas having any restrictions, which will be clearly stated on their websites, or at the time of booking. The vast majority of hotels and pousadas in Brazil are child-friendly. Larger properties will have high chairs and possibly cots, and many resorts also have special child-friendly areas, playrooms, and even separate kitchens for mothers needing to prepare food for babies and smaller children. Many large hotels can also organize babysitters.

Warn the hotel of the age of your children and any special requirements you may need for them in advance. If the hotel does not have it already, it may be willing to get it by the time you arrive.

DISABLED TRAVELERS

The situation for disabled travelers in Brazil has greatly improved over the years but not all accommodation options, especially the smaller properties with narrow lifts or those in the remoter areas of the country, can offer wheelchair access or the facilities that disabled travelers may require. Brazilians by nature, however, will do everything they can to assist, so do not hesitate to ask.

CHAIN HOTELS

Until the 1990s, there were few foreign hotel chains operating in Brazil. The largest chains were Brazilian, and included Othon, Tropical, and Luxor, all of which are still in operation today. However, several hundreds of modern hotels throughout Brazil operate under different brands, such as the Accor and Bristol groups.

Brazilian hoteliers have not been left behind with the introduction of Blue Tree, the Atlântica Hotels group, and Transamérica that operates as Radisson, Clarion, Quality, Comfort Suites, Four Points, and Sleepy Inn.

The majority of chain hotels, which vary greatly in terms of price, infrastructure and quality, tend to be targeted at Brazilian and South American business travelers unless they are in obvious tourist destinations.

Only the properties in the tourist areas are likely to consider adding a Brazilian or tropical flavor to the surroundings or decorations.

APART-HOTELS

Though not strictly for budget travelers, apart-hotels, in most of the main Brazilian cities, offer good value for money. These come with one, two, or more bedrooms, a living area, and a kitchen. Some will have restaurants and cafés, as well as swimming pools and gyms.

One of the main chains with properties throughout Brazil is Accor's Parthenon group, while in São Paulo, Transamérica Flats is a very prominent brand.

Apart-hotels are the most convenient self-catering option in Brazil. Most houses and apartments are rented individually, and it may be easier to organize the rental through a local agency.

POUSADAS

Outside of the main city and town centers, the majority of accommodations on offer are smaller, privately owned properties. Pousadas vary dramatically in terms of cost, quality, and facilities offered. Some will be very basic, but certainly clean, while others can be considered world-class boutique hotels set in lovely locations. Pousadas are usually charming, offer good value, and give a real flavor of Brazil.

It is a good idea to visit the website of an individual pousada to see the pictures of the property and what it has to offer. Most good tour operators know the best pousadas in each category and area. Roteiros de Charme, a network of outstanding pousadas, is also very useful, as is the website www.hiddenpousadasbrazil.com.

Sign of Pousada dos Artistas, Praia do Forte

RESORTS

World-class resorts are a relatively new concept in Brazil, but are rapidly growing in popularity and in terms of what is on offer.

Aerial view of the Marriott Resort in Costa do Sauípe, Bahia

Brazil's largest resort is the Costa do Sauípe, just north of Salvador, which has a mixture of resort properties such as SuperClubs, Sofitel, and Marriott, as well as pousadas. With the success of Sauípe, SuperClubs is building a number of properties along the Brazilian coast, as are Club Med. Blue Tree is the main Brazilian resort brand, while the Praia do Forte Eco Resort, in Bahia, is the country's most famous resort, which introduced the concept of eco-resorts to Brazil.

BUDGET OPTIONS

In the main areas visited by tourists, there are many pousadas that can be considered budget accommodation. In the cities, however, good budget accommodation is, by and large, offered by simpler hotels. There is also a good network of hostels in Brazil for those on a really tight budget. Reputable hostels will be members of the Federação Brasileira de Albergues da Juventude (Brazilian Hostel Federation). The federation's website has a full list of hostels in Brazil that are approved by the organization.

MOTELS

Motels in Brazil have nothing in common with the ones to be found in North America or in Europe. In Brazil, these tend to be "love hotels" and rent rooms out to couples by the hour. Guests are not normally encouraged to spend more than one night at these establishments.

CAMPING

Brazil offers a massive number of places where it is possible to camp. However, campers should make sure they have not wandered on to private property or into a restricted area. Security, too, is an issue, and not just from miscreants, but also from Brazilian wildlife.

If not an experienced camper, the visitor should stick to official campsites, the majority of which are run and organized by the Camping Clube do Brasil. If using one of the national parks, check first with the park authorities where camping is permitted. Having your own tent, or hiring one, is useful in ecotourist regions, such as the Amazon and the Pantanal.

LODGES

The majority of wildlife lodges that will help visitors to see and enjoy some of the remoter parts of Brazil are located in the Amazon (see pp383) and the Pantanal (see pp385-6). While there may be some exceptions, the infrastructure and home comforts of many of these lodges may be quite basic, as visitors are more keen on exploring the surrounding countryside, flora, and fauna.

It is recommended for travelers to consider traveling light, leaving the bulk of their belongings back in the main hotel, an airport locker, or at the city office of the lodge prior to transfer.

WHERE TO EAT

As a melting pot of races and influences, Brazil boasts a rich diversity of regional culinary styles (see pp178-9 and pp392-3).

Although the term "haute cuisine" does not strictly apply to Brazilian fare, the art of eating well, or arte do comer bem, is known to all Brazilians. A light breakfast, a hearty lunch that can last from noon to 3pm, and a late afternoon snack are followed by a frugal dinner of soup. Sunday lunches are an elaborate, extended family affair. Everywhere in Brazil it is easy to get well-cooked, filling meals. For light snacks, there are umpteen lanchonetes, or corner snack bars. For lunch, a botequin, or working man's pub, can be fun, while dining at a formal rodizio is enjoyable. Famous for offering the widest varieties of cuisine, São Paulo is seen as the best place for a true Brazilian culinary experience.

RESTAURANTS & BARS

In Brazil, restaurants and bars come in every shape and size. From the corner botacos (pubs) and beach bars to elegant world-class restaurants, Brazil has it all. There is a good range to suit every budget. Even dining in top-notch restaurants offers excellent value for money in comparison to anywhere in Europe or North America.

LOCAL EATING HABITS

Visitors will recognize that many Brazilian eating habits have been influenced by European countries. People eat leisurely and throughout the day, although those who want to snatch a quick bite will not be disappointed. As several restaurants are open all through the day, the lunch hour is spread over many hours.

Brazilians generally eat dinner late, most of them preferring to start at 10pm or later. However, unlike the Spanish big late-night meal, the Brazilian dinner is generally a very light affair. At the weekend, numerous restaurants in the bigger cities, such as Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, take orders well after midnight. It is not unusual to see Brazilians retreating to the bar if they have to wait for a table. Most restaurants take reservations, and this is often necessary at the bigger restaurants, especially those in the larger cities.

Inside the restaurant in Renaissance
Costa do Sauípe Resort

Due to the many different culinary styles, it is virtually impossible to say what a typical Brazilian meal will be, although rice and beans will probably make an appearance at some point. Breakfast can be a meal in itself, and in most cases it will be a hearty spread of fruits, cold meats, cheeses, and breads.

DRESS CODE

The easygoing Brazilian nature is also reflected in the dress code. In corner bars, one can walk in wearing casuals. In Rio and other coastal areas, it is not unusual to see women in bikinis at beach bars. Dress codes, usually more relaxed and tropical in the north, tend to become formal in the south.

A collar and tie for men may be the norm only in restaurants in the business quarter of cities, or in Brasília, where the politicians and civil servants prefer formal dressing.

PAYING & TIPPING

The majority of restaurants take credit cards. By far the most widely accepted credit cards are MasterCard and Visa. Amex and Diners Club cards are also useful. However, it is recommended to check first, especially at the more expensive restaurants where you might not have the cash to cover the bill. If you do get stuck in a “no credit card” situation, do remember that you can probably get cash out of the local ATM machine on your credit card.

Inside the Box 32 bar (see p411) in Florianópolis

Technically, restaurants are not meant to add a 10 percent service charge to the bill. However, in many places, it will be expected as a tip for the staff. If the service charge has not been added, the waiter will normally let you know. It is ideal to leave 10 to 12 percent or, if the service charge has been included, simply round up the bill to the next suitable number. Given the average wage of the staff, tips, however small, are always welcome.

FOOD HYGIENE

As most of Brazil is hot and tropical, every Brazilian knows the importance of keeping food fresh and well refrigerated. Food poisoning, even among visitors, is rare.

The majority of restaurants use ice cubes made from filtered water. However, in small backstreet bars, it is best to avoid ice.

ALCOHOL & DRINKS

On the whole, Brazilians are not great alcohol drinkers. Beer, however, is extremely popular. It is the most preferred alcoholic beverage, and the majority of Brazilian beer is a refreshingly cold light lager that comes in bottles (cerveja) or on tap (chopp). Also common, and much stronger, are a wide variety of drinks containing cachaça, a sugar-based spirit. The most notable and well known of these is the caipirinha with fresh lime.

Though Scotch is regarded as a status symbol, wine is rapidly growing in popularity. Brazil already produces some excellent table wines. Brazilians also like soft drinks, especially Guaraná, which is as omnipresent as Coca-Cola. Most bars and restaurants will have bottled water com (with) and sem (without) gas.

SMOKING

There are regulations about smoking in Brazil, but don't expect anyone to obey or follow them in a restaurant. If you have a real problem with people smoking around you, let the restaurant know before you sit down, so they can seat you away from the smokers.

CHILDREN

Brazil is a child-friendly country. Most restaurants, however sophisticated or simple, will welcome children. Staff will normally go out of their way to entertain them. If they don't have a suitable chair, they will almost certainly try and improvise something. Do not be shocked by young children eating out late with their parents. That is considered quite normal in Brazil.

VEGETARIANS

Vegetarian options are extremely limited in Brazil. However, there are a few specialized restaurants offering dishes suitable for vegetarians, ranging from basic to highly innovative.

CHURRASCARIA RODIZÍO/POR KILO

There are two styles of eating out in Brazil that can take visitors by surprise. The first is the churrascaria rodízio, or large barbecue houses found throughout the country. Here, one fixed price covers the starter and main course. The only extras will be for the drinks and dessert. Go to a churrascaria rodízio when you are really hungry, as they will keep bringing you succulent pieces of grilled meat. Many offer a “traffic light system” where each diner will have a small card.

A bottle of cachaça

Leave the green side up if you want more food. Turn over to red and they will stop. The por kilo type are self-service restaurants with a buffet of varying degrees of sophistication and a variety of dishes. You can choose from salads to an assortment of hot and cold courses. What you pay for at the check-out, as far as the food is concerned, will be based on exactly what the food on your plate weighs. Hence the name, por kilo, or “by-the-kilo.”

Por kilo self-service buffet at the Mangai restaurant (see p406)

The Flavors of Brazil

Brazil offers a vast range of regional cuisines. Climate and geography influence ingredients, from the exotic tropical fruits and spices in Northern Brazil to Bahian seafood (see p179) and the heavy meat dishes of the southern states. Cultural heritage plays a part as well. In Amazônia, the diet is based on fruits and fish native to the forest and the rivers, with many dishes adapted from indigenous recipes. Farther south, settlement by Portuguese and, later, Italian and German immigrants put a distinctly European stamp on the cooking.

MEAT

Brazil is a nation that truly enjoys its meat and the wide variety of ways in which beef, chicken, and pork are prepared. The ability to devour large quantities of succulent Brazilian beef is considered a mark of manliness. The family barbecue (churrasco) is a Sunday tradition, but for visitors the best way to enjoy Brazil's superb beef is at a churrascaria rodízio (barbecue house). Waiters bring large skewers of freshly barbecued beef and other meats, and slice off cuts directly onto the plate. You can state your preference for mal passado (rare), ao ponto (medium), or bem passado (well done), or you can just point to the part that looks good. Cuts include filet mignon (tenderloin), fraldinha (bottom sirloin), picanha (sirloin), alcatra (top sirloin), and maminha (sirloin tip). Cupim is the soft floppy hump on a cow's shoulders. This tender beef, mixed heavily with fat, is an acquired taste and may not necessarily be liked by all.

FISH & SEAFOOD

Brazilians inherited a love of fish from their Portuguese forbears. Cod, a Portuguese staple, is sold dried and

BRAZILIAN DISHES & SPECIALTIES

Now considered Brazil's national dish, feijoada was not always the chic cuisine it is today. The rich black bean stew traces its humble origins in the kitchens of the country's slave quarters. To make a meal with the leftovers from their masters' tables, the slaves improvised by combining the cast-off bits of meat into a hearty stew with black beans, flavored with garlic, onion, and bay leaves.

Nowadays, a full feijoada completa spread is typically eaten for lunch on Wednesdays and Saturdays. In addition to the black beans, the stew contains several kinds of meat, including sausage, bacon, and sun-dried beef. Side dishes include rice, roasted cassava flour (farofa), sautéed kale, and slices of orange. A batida de limão (cachaça with ice shavings and lime) is served before the feijoada.

Black beans

Salgados, such as deep-fried pastries stuffed with cheese or meat, are popular Brazilian snacks.

Table laid out with all the elements that make up a feijoada completa heavily salted in grocery stores, while cod balls (bolinhos de bacalbau) or cod fillets are found on many menus. For fresher fare, Brazil's long coastline offers a bounty of excellent fish and seafood. The colder waters off Santa Catarina offer the country's best oysters. Ilhabela, off São Paulo's green coast, is known for its cold-water jumbo shrimp (camarão). Farther north are mollusks, squid, octopus, crab, lobster, shrimp, and, of course, fish. Some of Brazil's best fish come not from the ocean but from the fresh waters of the Pantanal and the Amazon rainforest. The Pantanal's prize fish is the dourado, a fish with firm flesh that is delicious when grilled. Other popular and tasty fish include the pacú and pintado. In the Amazon, the astounding variety of freshwater fish includes the tambaqui, aruanã, and tucunaré. They are often served grilled, or in soups with local herbs. Another Amazon freshwater favorite is caldo de piranha (piranha broth).

BRAZILIAN FRUITS

Along with tropical staples, there are regional fruits, most of which have no English name. In Rio and parts of Southern Brazil, one finds small, tart jaboticaba, and red acerola berries, often mixed in juices with other fruits. Farther north are vast orchards of cashew (caju) – not the nut, but the large fruit that grows above. In the Amazon, there are taperaba, cupuaçu, and the queen of Amazon berries, açaí. These are often puréed with guaraná berry powder or syrup and can be mixed with banana for a high-nutrition smoothie.

WHAT TO DRINK

Brazil's best-known drink is almost certainly the caipirinha, made with lime, sugar, ice, and cachaça (sugarcane liquor). A better choice for quenching thirst, however, are the wide variety of tropical fruit juices. Brazil's most popular soft drink is the domestically produced guaraná. This fizzy drink is prepared with wild guaraná berries from Amazônia. Also enormously popular is chope, or draft beer, served ice-cold after a hot day on the beach. Chá mate, herbal tea, is usually consumed hot in Southern Brazil, but in the rest of Brazil, it is served cold as iced tea. It is advisable to bring your own tea bags from home. Although Brazil is very much a cold beverage country, the exception is the ubiquitous cafézinho, strong filter coffee. Most Brazilians drink it very sweet and at almost any time of the day.

The celebrated Brazilian caipirinha

Camarão na Moranga is a stew of large, juicy prawns cooked in coconut milk and served in a pumpkin.

Picanha steak is a sirloin steak and usually comes served with only a dusting of coarse salt.

Pudim de Leite, a traditional Portuguese dessert, is made from eggs, condensed milk, and caramelized sugar.

Choosing a Restaurant

The restaurants in this guide have been selected, as far as possible, for the quality of the food and atmosphere. However, in some parts of Brazil where few restaurants can be recommended, places have been suggested that offer good value. Map references are given on pages 96–101 for Rio de Janeiro City and 154–9 for São Paulo City.

A must on most visitors' lists, the Rio branch of Hard Rock Café boasts three bars, a restaurant, terrace, and dance floor. The highlight of the café, however, is the rock memorabilia on display, associated with such music legends as Elvis and Madonna. The menu features delightful starters, salads, burgers, sandwiches, and pizzas.

BARRA DA TIJUCA Fratelli

☎ ☑ ☒ ☓ ☔ ⑤⑤⑤⑤

Av Pepe 2916 Tel (021) 2494 6644

This spacious and stylish Italian restaurant has established itself as one of the best places to dine in Barra. When it comes to the cost, Fratelli is a bit steep on the pocket, but makes up with the sumptuous fare on offer. The pizza with great mozzarella cheese topping and ravioli stuffed with duck are favorites.

CENTRO Albamar

☑ ☒ ☓ ☔ ⑤⑤⑤

Praça Marechal Âncora 184 Tel (021) 2240 8378

Map 5 E3

The last remaining tower of the old municipal market in the historic quarter of downtown Rio, this simple and unpretentious restaurant first opened for business in 1933 and offers wonderful atmosphere with great views across Guanabara Bay. Signature seafood options range from fish fillet to Spanish-style octopus.

CENTRO Atrium Del Rey

☎ ☑ ☒ ☓ ☔ ⑤⑤⑤

Paço Imperial, Praça XV de Novembro 48 Tel (021) 2220 0193

Map 5 E3

What sets this place apart is its location in the old Palácio Imperial (see pp114–15) allowing the visitor to enjoy a meal in a setting that has witnessed many key events in Brazilian history. Popular with business executives, the Atrium offers a small but eclectically modern menu of international and Brazilian dishes.

CENTRO Cais do Oriente

☎ ☑ ☒ ☓ ☔ ⑤⑤⑤

Rua Visconde de Itaboraí 8 Tel (021) 2233 2531

Map 5 E3

Set in an old warehouse that dates from 1878, Cais do Oriente is an eclectic mix of restaurant, bar, and a lounge, which is the venue for jazz and bossa nova performances at night. The restaurant has an extensive menu, offering European and Asian platters, as well as traditional Brazilian cuisine.

COPACABANA & LEME Amir

Rua Ronald de Carvalho 55, Copacabana Tel (021) 2275 5596

Map 3 F1

Lebanese cuisine is the specialty at this small, casual restaurant close to the beach. The lunch buffet of grilled meats, salads, and generous servings of sweet puddings offers great value. In the evening, there is an à la carte menu, which includes tasty mixed platters of such delights as stuffed eggplant, falafel (spicy chickpea patties), and hummus.

COPACABANA & LEME Shirley

☑ ☒ ☓ ⑤⑤

Rua Gustavo Sampaio 610, Caju Tel (021) 2275 1398

This small 38-cover outlet, one of Rio's first Spanish eateries, upholds its culinary status even after many decades. The Spanish dishes, including a fine paella, are complemented with an excellent selection of seafood at very accessible prices. Shirley doesn't take reservations, so expect to queue for a table.

COPACABANA & LEME Don Camillo

☎ ☑ ☒ ☓ ☔ ⑤⑤⑤

Av Atlântica 3056, Copacabana Tel (021) 2549 9958

Map 3 D3

One of the many beachfront restaurants along Copacabana (see p78), with tables laid out on the terrace as well as a more formal indoor dining area, Don Camillo has consistently stood out for the quality of its Italian and seafood dishes. Try the baked mix of lobster, shrimp, squid, mussels, tomato, potato, and the fresh fish of the day.

COPACABANA & LEME Marius Carnes

Av Atlântica 290, Leme Tel (021) 2104 9000

A typical Brazilian churrascaria rodízio, or revolving barbecue, this sizable restaurant is among the best and most innovative. A little expensive, Marius Carnes serves as many as 30 kinds of grilled meats. A superb salad bar with tasty vegetable combinations offers interesting options for vegetarians.

COPACABANA & LEME Da Brambini

Av Atlântica 514, Leme Tel (021) 2275 4346

A pleasant change from the boisterous restaurants in Copacabana, this cozy little bistro with the feel of an Italian trattoria features cuisine from Northern Italy. Dishes include polenta with fresh mushrooms or gorgonzola cheese as an appetizer and osso buco (veal shanks braised in wine) as the main course. A good selection of Italian red wines.

COPACABANA & LEME Marius Crustáceos

Av Atlântica 290, Leme Tel (021) 2104 9002

Located next door to its popular steakhouse Marius, this outlet, decorated with maritime memorabilia, is renowned for its seafood preparations of prawns, oysters, and crabs. Popular Brazilian treats from the region of Bahia include moqueca (seafood stew) and vatapá (fish stew).

COPACABANA & LEME Cipriani

$$$$$

Av Atlântica 1702, Copacabana Palace, Copacabana Tel (021) 2545 8747

Map 3 E2

Offering the best of Northern Italian cuisine, Cipriani has been lauded since its opening in 1994 as one of Brazil's best and most elegant restaurants. Housed in the legendary Copacabana Palace (see p78), diners can look out over the hotel's pretty pool. Noted for freshly prepared pasta entrées and authentic Italian risotto.

FLAMENGO & BOTAFOGO Lamas

Rua Marquês de Abrantes 18, Flamengo Tel (021) 2556 0799

A gastronomic institution frequented by well-known politicians, writers, and artists, this traditional restaurant offers good unpretentious food for all palates. Recommended for its steaks, the restaurant is also famous for its cod fishcakes, best savored with cold draught beer.

FLAMENGO & BOTAFOGO Miam Miam

Rua General Góes Monteiro 34, Botafogo Tel (021) 2244 0125

Offering creative and innovative "comfort" food in attractive surroundings, Miam Miam draws an eclectic, cosmopolitan crowd. The 1890s house belonged to the chef's grandmother and is decorated with furniture and artifacts from the 1950s, 60s, and 70s, all for sale.

FLAMENGO & BOTAFOGO Yorubá

Rua Arnaldo Quintella 94, Botafogo Tel (021) 2541 9387

While the location is informal, critics tend to agree that Yorubá is Rio's best Brazilian restaurant, especially when it comes to cuisine from the state of Bahia. Diners willing to be adventurous will find that an evening spent at Yorubá is a great introduction to one of the world's greatest cuisines, relatively unknown outside its native Brazil.

FLAMENGO & BOTAFOGO Porcão

Av Infante Dom Henrique, Atterro do Flamengo Tel (021) 3461 9020

This flagship branch in Flamengo Park, with striking views of Sugar Loaf, not only serves outstanding barbecued meats, but the buffet alone offers nearly 50 varieties of regional dishes and salads. If you can't get to this restaurant, Porcão maintains the same high standards in other outlets at Ipanema, Barra, and other locations around Rio.

FLORESTA DA TIJUCA Os Esquilos

Estrada D' Escragnoles s/n Tel (021) 2492 2197

Off the beaten track, located in the heart of the Tijuca Forest (see p88) in an old colonial house that has operated as a restaurant since 1945, this dining place offers a small menu of Brazilian and international favorites including feijoada (a bean and meat stew) at the weekend.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Alessandro e Frederico Pizzaria

Rua Garcia D'Ávila 151, Ipanema Tel (021) 2522 5415

Map 1 C5

Rio has a number of pizza parlors that vary from the traditional Pizza Guanabara in Leblon and Gattopardo on the Lagoa to this two-story house in Ipanema, which specializes in pizzas that even a Paulista would approve of. The pizzeria also boasts an impressive wine list.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Lã Mole

$$$

Rua Dias Ferreira 147, Leblon Tel (021) 2294 0668

Map 1 A4

This, the first branch of the Lã Mole chain, opened its doors back in 1958 as an ice cream and pizza parlor. Over the years, salads, risotto, and desserts have been added to the menu, building its reputation for excellent, value-based Italian dining. Today, there are more than 15 Lã Mole restaurants across Rio and Niterói.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Carlota

Map 1 A4

Listed by Conde Nast Traveller as one of the 50 most exciting restaurants in the world, this small, attractive, laid-back bistro dishes out innovative and classical risotto, ravioli, Peking duck and the like from its small and ever-changing menu to provide a relaxing and enjoyable dining experience.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Plataforma

$$$
Rua Adalberto Ferreira 32, Leblon Tel (021) 2274 4022
Map 1 B2

This large barbecue house offers a watered-down version of Brazilian culture, with high quality meats served in the main restaurant. The late musician and composer, Tom Jobim, was a regular here. Additional attractions include live Brazilian musical acts, and the comedy club, Caso do Riso.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Esplanada Grill

Rua Barão da Torre 600, Ipanema Tel (021) 2512 2970
Map 1 C4

For decades, this formal dining place has been Rio's most stylish grill, offering quality meats at bargain prices. Esplanada Grill has little in common with the more frantic churrascaria rodízios, and its restful atmosphere makes it popular with business clientele, although there is nothing stiff about the atmosphere.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Madame Butterfly

$$$$
Map 2 A5

A Japanese restaurant that has firmly established itself on the evolving Brazilian gastronomic scene, Madame Butterfly provides a good selection of both classical and innovative Japanese dishes in cozy surroundings. Highlights include traditional umewan soup (sweet red bean soup with cherry blossom) and other Japanese dishes with a Brazilian twist.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Margutta

$$$$
Rua Henrique Dumont 62, Ipanema Tel (021) 2259 3887
Map 1 C4

Hailing from a family of traditional chefs, Paolo Neroni arrived in Rio from Italy in 1982 and married a Brazilian, Conceição, in 1985. Together they opened this stylish and chic 70-cover restaurant in 1994. Traditional Italian cuisine and seafood are the strengths of this elegant dining option.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Satyricon

$$$$
Map 2 B4

An elegant, stylish choice that has seen celebrities such as Madonna and her entourage stroll through its door for dinner, used to be split between serving sophisticated Italian fare and seafood. Today, the focus is firmly on creative and outstanding seafood, including sushi.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Antiquarius

Rua Aristides Espinola 19, Leblon Tel (021) 2294 1049
Map 1 A5

Often billed as Rio's best Portuguese restaurant, Anitquarius has been very consistent in its offerings since it first opened in 1975. Perna de cordeiro (leg of lamb) is the most popular dish on the menu. A remarkable wine list, including Portuguese gourmards, complements the menu. Service is attentive and discreet.

IPANEMA & LEBLON Gero

Rua Anibal de Mendonça 157, Ipanema Tel (021) 2239 8158
Map 1 C4

One of the most fashionable restaurants in Rio, with the impeccable pedigree of being part of the Fasano family that has been exciting Paulista palates for decades with its sophisticated Italian cuisine, Gero is the place to be seen along with the rich and the beautiful.

LAGOA & JARDIM BOTÂNICO Bar Lagoa

Av Epiácio Pessoa 1674, Lagoa Tel (021) 2523 1135
Map 2 A4

This Art Deco bistro has been around since 1934. German dishes figure heavily on the extensive menu, which offers meals and snacks for every taste. Excellent steaks and a signature sausage with potato salad accompanied by ice cold beer are on offer. Waiters are legendary for their bad humor and enjoy playing up to this reputation.

LAGOA & JARDIM BOTÂNICO Guimas

$$$
Rua José Roberto Macedo Soares 5, Gavea Tel (021) 2259 7996
Map 1 A2

An adventurous bistro with a relaxed atmosphere, Guimas has been a popular haunt of artists and the bohemian community since opening in 1981. The menu mixes old favourites with exciting innovative combinations. An informal restaurant, it offers good quality food at reasonable prices.

LAGOA & JARDIM BOTÂNICO Olympe

Rua Custódio Serrão 62, Jardim Botânico Tel (021) 2539 4542
Map 2 A1

Owner Claude Troisgros, one of the most recognized chefs in Brazil, continues to create culinary delights using the best in Brazilian ingredients combined with his grounding in traditional French cuisine. The passionfruit crêpe soufflé is a favorite dessert. Reservations are required.

RIO DE JANEIRO STATE & ESPÍRITO SANTO

ILHA GRANDE (Rio de Janeiro) Sushi Leblon

Ilha de Itanhangá, Baía da Ilha Grande Tel (024) 3369 3558

Rio de Janeiro's most famous Japanese restaurant caters to an island-hopping crowd during the high season. Located on an island, you need a boat to get here. Lunch here can be combined with an island cruise or a stop-off at one of the Ilha do Itanhangá's many beautiful beaches.

BÚZIOS (Rio de Janeiro) Satyricon

Av José Bento Ribeiro Dantas 500, Centro Tel (024) 2623 2691

Miro Leopardo's Satyricon has been serving the best seafood in Rio de Janeiro for over 20 years. The restaurant is especially known for its oven-baked fish, served with rock salt and accompanied by lightly fried vegetables. A good selection of wine is available.

BÚZIOS (Rio de Janeiro) Sawasdee

Av José Bento Ribeiro Dantas 422, Centro Tel (022) 2623 4644

This seafont restaurant serves Brazilian versions of simple Thai dishes. The restaurant's pad thai is made from egg noodles fried with myashi sauce, baby squid, mussels, and prawns and garnished with coriander, lemon, and grated peanuts. The grilled salmon comes with a sliced mango, sweet and sour sauce, mint, and black pepper.

BÚZIOS (Rio de Janeiro) Casas Brancas

Pousada Casas Brancas, Morro do Humaitá 10 Tel (022) 2623 1458

This open-air restaurant and bar on the Morro do Humaitá offers sweeping views out over the bay. Popular with couples, the atmosphere is rendered romantic when the bar and the handful of tables are lit with candles in the evening. The highlight is light Mediterranean seafood and simple, elegant Italian dishes.

CABO FRIO (Rio de Janeiro) Restaurante La Gondole

Rua Almirante Barrosa 247, Passagem Tel (022) 2643 5264

The best seafood restaurant in Cabo Frio, Restaurante La Gondole is run by Swiss chef André Cabrini, who trained in France. House specialties include feuilleton de la mer, filo pastry filled with seafood and accompanied by stuffed mussels and saffron risotto.

GUARAPARI (Espírito Santo) Guaramare

Av Meaipe 716, Rodovia do Sol 65, Rodovia para Anchieta Tel (027) 3272 1300

Located between a busy main road and the beach resort of Guarapari, this restaurant, with its mock-farmhouse dining room and rustic ambience, is a haven of peace and at its most magical in the evenings. Highly recommended for its sumptuous seafood. Chef Vitor Bojovski has received numerous stars from Guia Quatro Rodas magazine.

PARATY (Rio de Janeiro) Catimbau

Baía de Paraty Tel (024) 9222 8954

Strikingly built between two giant boulders on a tiny island in the bay by local fisherman, Caca, and his Dutch wife, this restaurant and bar serves simple but superb fresh seafood amid great views. The caipirinhas, cocktails made with lime, sugar, and cachêca, are chilled and strong.

PARATY (Rio de Janeiro) Punto Divino

Rua da Matriz 129, Praça da Matriz, Centro Histórico Tel (024) 3371 1348

Paraty's best seafood restaurant is run by an Italian scuba diver who fell in love with the bay of Ilha Grande on a visit here some decades ago. Their Italian pizza, lighter on cheese than customary in Brazil, is a good choice. Classy live acoustic music plays during high season. There is an excellent wine list.

PARATY (Rio de Janeiro) Vila Verde

Estrada para Cunha km 7 Tel (024) 3371 7808

This little rustic restaurant, tucked away in a forest just behind Paraty town, is a big draw not only for the delicious light Italian fare on offer, but for its tropical garden that attracts giant electric blue morpho butterflies, emerald hummingbirds, and flame red tanagers, who flutter through the restaurant's open sides to the delight of diners.

PARATY (Rio de Janeiro) Merlin O Mago

Rua do Comércio 376, Centro Histórico Tel (024) 3371 2154

Next to Hotel Coxixo (see p371), a few blocks from the main square, is this delightful restaurant, which is owned and run by a German journalist turned Cordon Bleu chef. Dishes combine Brazilian, Asian, and European flavors and are made with the freshest local ingredients. Try the fish of the day or the charcoal-grilled picanha (beef).

PARATY (Rio de Janeiro) Le Gite d'Indaiatiba

Rodovia Rio-Santos km 562, Graúna Tel (024) 9999 9923

In the heart of the Atlantic rainforest, next to the Bromelias spa (see p371), is one of Brazil's finest restaurants. Classic French cuisine is combined with Brazilian tropical ingredients to create culinary delights. The fantastic meals are accompanied by excellent wines and jazz performances set amid the sweeping rainforest.

PETRÓPOLIS & TERESÓPOLIS (Rio de Janeiro) Locanda della Mimosa

Alameda das Mimosas 30, Vale Florido Tel (024) 2233 5405

One of the most distinguished restaurants and hotels, set in a colonial mansion in the forested hills near Petrópolis and Teresópolis, Locanda della Mimosa has won many accolades. Inspired by French nouvelle cuisine, the hearty meals are served in Brazilian-sized portions. There are plenty of Italian choices too. The wine list is superb.

VITÓRIA (Espírito Santo) Lareira Portuguesa

Av Saturnino de Brito 260 Tel (027) 3345 0331

This is the best of a handful of Portuguese restaurants in Vitória. The cooking and the service are directed by an owner and chef from Guarda in central Portugal and dishes like bacalhau (codfish) are served by black-tie and aproned waiters in a bustling dining room.

MINAS GERAIS

BELO HORIZONTE Splendido

Flat Volpi Residence, Rua Levindo Lopes 251, Savassi Tel (031) 3227 6446

One of the best restaurants in the city lies in the heart of the fashionable Savassi nightlife district. The menu and the bright atmosphere are light Mediterranean. Excellent pasta entrées are on offer and the wine list is respectable, with some imported wines from Tuscany.

BELO HORIZONTE Aurora

Rua Expedicionário Mário Alves de Oliveira 421, São Luis, Pampulha Tel (031) 3498 7567

The large, airy dining room overlooks a little private garden close to Oscar Niemeyer's Pampulha (see p125). The cuisine is Brazilian-Oriental fusion, with delectable items like steak with jabuticaba sauce and tiger prawns in wasabi sauce with wild rice and grated mango.

BELO HORIZONTE Vecchio Sogno

Rua Martin de Carvalho 75, Santo Agostinho Tel (031) 3292 5251

This bustling Italian restaurant has been named Belo Horizonte's best restaurant of the year in Veja magazine seven times over. Chef Ivo Faria da Costa learnt his trade from Frenchman Lucien Ittis at the Copacabana Palace in Rio, and is celebrated for his pastas and steaks. The wine list and sommeliers are excellent.

DIAMANTINA Cantina do Marinho

Rua Direita 113 Tel (038) 3531 1686

One of the handful of restaurants in the area, Cantina do Marinho has a formal atmosphere, with a dining room decorated with assorted bottles of wine. The filling prato feito (buffet lunch) includes a drink. Try the delicious traditional lombo com feijão tropeiro (pork with beans).

MARIANA Lua Cheia

Rua Dom Viçoso 23, Centro Tel (031) 3557 3232

This busy restaurant serves typical Minas Gerais food por kilo (by weight), or all-you-can-eat the buffets, with plenty of choices of salads, vegetable dishes for the vegetarians, various cuts of meat from the churrascaria, and generous amounts of desserts.

OURO PRETO O Passo

Rua São José 56, Centro Tel (031) 3552 5089

Housed in a Portuguese colonial town house, this upmarket pizzeria offers pizzas made in a traditional Italian wood-fired oven, served either in the dining area, or the adjacent veranda which has sweeping views out over the town. At weekends there is live music and dancing.

OURO PRETO Triumpho

Rua Donato da Fonseca 02, Largo do Rosário Tel (031) 3552 6774

This local favorite is housed in a cozy cellar bar right next to the Igreja do Rosário. The menu comprises Minas Gerais cuisine, which is heavy on meat and vegetables like manioc and squash. Food comes accompanied by live acoustic music from guitarists and singer-songwriters, and there is a reasonable wine list.

OURO PRETO Le Coq D'Or

Rua Getúlio Vargas 270, Largo do Rosário Tel (031) 3551 5200

The restaurant occupies a formal dining area inside the colonial Solar Nossa Senhora do Rosário hotel (see p373) and in a separate covered annex lit by natural light. The menu is largely Portuguese, focusing on fish, meat, and pasta. There is a modest wine list. The service is prompt and attentive.

SÃO JOÃO DEL REI Quinto do Ouro

Praça Severiano de Rezende 4 Tel (032) 3371 7577

Although it has plenty of cafés and por kilo options, São João, unlike neighboring Tiradentes, does not have many upmarket restaurants. The Quinto do Ouro offers the best Minas Gerais cooking in town, well-prepared regional food at reasonable prices.

PARQUE NACIONAL DA SERRA DA CANASTRA Zagaia

Av Tancredo Neves 10 Tel (037) 3433 1323

This is the best of limited food choices available in Serra da Canastra, serving traditional local cuisine such as galinha caipira (stewed wild rooster), excellent pão de queijo (cheese rolls), and on select days, the Brazilian specialty, feijoada (black beans and pork stew).

PARQUE NACIONAL DA SERRA DO CIPÓ Parador Nacional

Alameda das Orquídeas, Parque Nacional Serra do Cipó Tel (031) 9984 3278

This stylish, romantic restaurant set in a rustic 18th-century colonial house is surrounded by picturesque tropical gardens, which are beautifully lit at night, setting the tone for a delightful meal. Chef Laurents blends Mediterranean cuisine with the regional Minas style of cooking to create an interesting menu. The wine list is respectable.

TIRADENTES Quartier Latin

Rua São Francisco de Paula 46, Praça de Rodoviária Tel (032) 3355 1552

This restaurant, just across the river from the center of town, hosts the annual gastronomic festival (see p43). The French-trained chef offers a menu of Franco-Brazilian cuisine, as well as Italian fare and good seafood. Their own cultivated organic vegetables are used to make great salads, and there is a decent wine list.

TIRADENTES Tragaluz

Rua Direita 52 Tel (032) 3355 1424

Housed in an 18th-century colonial town house in the city center, Tragaluz has a menu offering a modern interpretation of traditional Mineira cuisine. Sumptuous dishes include smoked freshwater catfish in garlic crumbs and sweet potato. The restaurant is known for its desserts, especially the goiabada (guava paste).

TIRADENTES Teatro da Vila

Rua Padre Toledo 157 Tel (032) 3355 1275

In the heart of the town, this intimate restaurant occupies a converted colonial house. The dining room is rustic chic, decorated with local art and crafts, and offers a sweeping view out over a little garden and the mountains beyond. The meals are Franco-Brazilian. The little garden theater hosts performances in summer.

SÃO PAULO CITYJARDINS & AVENIDA PAULISTA A Figueira Rubaiyat

Rua Haddock Lobo 1738, Jardins Tel (011) 3170 5100

Map 4 D3

The flagship outlet of the Rubaiyat group, this serves some of the best Brazilian beef in the city. The Figueira has an extensive menu with remarkable seafood, including fresh cananéia oysters from the oyster bar. Steaks remain the best choice on the menu. Tables sit under an enormous tropical fig tree and the ambience is informal-chic.

JARDINS & AVENIDA PAULISTA Dalva e Dito

Rua Padre João Manuel 1115, Jardins Tel (011) 3064 6183

Map 4 D3

Alex Atala, São Paulo's most celebrated chef, opened this restaurant to showcase traditional home-cooked Brazilian dishes, such as codfish croquettes, rice and beans, and farofa (a manioc-based dish). The interior decoration is the work of Athos Bulcão, who worked with Lucio Costa and Oscar Niemeyer (see p302) on the design of the city Brasília.

JARDINS & AVENIDA PAULISTA D.O.M

Rua Barão de Capanema 549, Jardins Tel (011) 3088 0761

Map 4 D3

Among the most celebrated chefs in Brazil, Alex Atala has been voted chef of the year numerous times by Veja magazine. His innovative cooking fuses Brazilian ingredients with French and Italian styles, creating fantastic meals such as the Brazilian fish filhote with tapioca or heart of palm fettuccine carbonara.

JARDINS & AVENIDA PAULISTA Gero

Rua Haddock Lobo 1629, Jardins Tel (011) 3064 0005

Map 4 D3

Rogério Fasano's other Italian restaurant in Jardins is the polar opposite of the eponymous Fasano, a highly regarded gourmet restaurant. Gero is a restaurant to be seen in, a favorite with celebrities, the fashionable set, and the young crowd. Diners wait at the long bar before dining on light Italian fare such as black polenta with baby squid.

JARDINS & AVENIDA PAULISTA Fasano

Rua Vitória Fasano 88, Jardins Tel (011) 3896 4000

Map 4 D3

The flagship of the Fasano chain is the finest, most formal dining place in the city, with discreet dimly-lit booths. Sardinian chef Salvatore Loi dishes out excellent Italian and French creations with special emphasis on seafood. The wine list is among the best in the country. Live music plays in the adjacent cigar bar, Baretto.

CENTRO Ponto Chic

Largo do Paiçandu 27 Tel (011) 3222 6528

Map 1 C2

This small corner restaurant is a lunchtime institution. The Brazilian equivalent of the hamburger – the bauru – was invented here in the 1930s. The sandwich comprises a thick slab of yellow cheese, salad, and finely cut, rare roast beef held together in a crusty French roll. A photograph of Casemiro Pinto Neto, creator of the bauru, adorns the wall.

CENTRO La Casserole

Largo do Arouche 346, Vila Buarque Tel (011) 3331 6283

Map 1 B2

An intimate French restaurant and local institution founded in 1954, the dining room bustles at lunchtime and has a fixed menu. It is quieter and more romantic in the evenings, with a French-influenced menu that has changed little over the decades. Bouillabaisse and lamb shanks are popular choices.

CENTRO Terraço Itália

Av Ipiranga 344, Edifício Itália Tel (011) 2189 2929

Map 1 B2, 1 B3

While some diners come here for the mock-Mediterranean food, most people are drawn by the spectacular view from the observation deck out over Oscar Niemeyer's Edifício Copan and the vast sprawl of São Paulo. Come for a light soup, or try the grilled dourado fish with oyster if you want to dine.

FARTHER AFIELD Grazie a Dio

Rua Girassol 67, Vila Madalena Tel (011) 3031 6568

One of the best small venues for emerging Brazilian bands, the restaurant has hosted acts such as Clube do Balanco, Seu Jorge, and Tutti Bae, who played here on their journey to fame. The food is mock-Mediterranean, but the after-dinner performances and the cocktails are always great.

FARTHER AFIELD Capim Santo

Rua Min Rocha Azeredo 471, Vila Madalena Tel (011) 3068 8486

Capim Santo began as an informal fish restaurant in Trancoso. Once the town was discovered by international celebrities, the restaurant became one of the most fashionable places to dine. It recreates Bahian informality with tables set in a tropical garden and Bahian music in the background. The menu is predominantly seafood.

HIGIENÓPOLIS Carlota

Rua Sergipe 753 Tel (011) 3661 8670

This New York-inspired deli is now a favorite with food-loving intellectuals from São Paulo's Zona Sul. The atmosphere is chic rustic, the dining room buzzes with conversation, and the menu offers delicious Asian-Mediterranean cuisine utilizing Brazilian ingredients. The puddings are legendary.

PARQUE DO IBIRAPUERA & AROUND Prêt no MAM

Portão 3 Tel (011) 5549 9688

This upmarket café in the Museu de Arte Moderna (see p147) serves an excellent lunchtime buffet consisting of light, healthy Mediterranean-inspired dishes and salads. The dining area is a bright, elongated room with its outer wall made almost entirely of glass. Excellent coffee is served.

IBIRAPUERA PARK & AROUND JAM Warehouse

Rua Lopes Neto 308, Itaim Tel (011) 3079 4259

JAM is an acronym for Japanese food, art, and music, all of which are presented in a tastefully designed, modern space. The food is classical Japanese, the art contemporary Brazilian, and the music ranges from samba rock to bossa nova and jazz. The bar is a great spot for pre-dinner cocktails, and the crowd usually young and fashionable.

CURITIBA (Paraná) Schwarzwald (Bar do Alemão)Rua Claudino dos Santos 63, Largo da Ordem Tel (041) 3223 2585

Located in the historic center, this perpetually crowded bar and restaurant is equally popular for the range and quality of its beers as for its German food. Sausages and other pork dishes are the mainstays, but the roast duck is also excellent.

CURITIBA (Paraná) Carolla PizzaAlameda Dom Pedro II 24, Batel Tel (041) 3225 4346

Baked in wood-fired ovens in front of diners, the pizzas here are excellent, made with top-quality ingredients such as buffalo mozzarella. Along with pizza, there's a varied choice of salads, pasta, and risotto dishes. A very pleasant and informal atmosphere.

CURITIBA (Paraná) DurskiRua Jaime Reis 254, Largo do São Francisco Tel (041) 3225 7893

Located in a tastefully renovated late 19th-century building in the historic center, the Durski is the best place in Curitiba to sample Polish and Ukrainian dishes. All the standard dishes are served, such as borscht, pierogi, or dumplings, and smoked meats and fish. The food is good and attractively presented, and the service is pleasant.

CURITIBA (Paraná) Barolo TrattoriaAv Silva Jardim 2487 Água Verde Tel (041) 3243 3430

An excellent Italian restaurant, Barolo Trattoria is not afraid to occasionally introduce a few Brazilian ingredients such as heart of palm into its recipes. Meat dishes dominate the menu but vegetarians will find plenty of salads and fine pasta dishes to choose from.

CURITIBA (Paraná) BoulevardRua Voluntários da Pátria 539 Tel (041) 3023 8244

One of Curitiba's best restaurants, Boulevard serves French dishes with Italian accents aimed at Brazilian tastes. The beef dishes in particular are superb. It boasts an outstanding wine list. Formal yet light, airy and with a comfortable environment, Boulevard has consistently been rated as one of the city's top ten places to eat.

CURITIBA (Paraná) Família Caliceti (Bologna)

Alameda Dr. Carlos de Carvalho 1367, Batel Tel (041) 3223 7102

Fresh pasta, made on the premises, is a specialty of this sophisticated Italian restaurant. The carpaccio de carne uses beef of the highest quality, and there's an outstanding choice of tortellini and other filled pasta. The Monday to Friday lunch menu is especially good value.

CURITIBA (Paraná) Zea Mais

Rua Barão do Rio Branco 354 Tel (041) 3232 3988

Creative Brazilian and Mediterranean cooking is served in a contemporary yet comfortable setting. Herbs and fresh-tasting sauces feature prominently in the beautifully-presented dishes. Although some dishes include meat, there are more salads and other vegetarian options on the menu than is typical for a Brazilian restaurant.

FLORIANÓPOLIS (Santa Catarina) Bar do Arante

Rua Abelardo Otacílio Gomes 254, Praia do Pântano do Sul Tel (048) 3237 7022

This bar and restaurant is an important beachside fixture, always crowded at weekends and on summer evenings. It offers reliable fish dishes, including some very tasty Azorean-style steaks. A very reasonably priced shellfish buffet is served daily in January and February and on weekends from March to December.

FLORIANÓPOLIS (Santa Catarina) Box 32

Mercado Público Municipal, Centro Tel (048) 3224 5588

A traditional after-work meeting point for journalists and politicians, this market stall offers drinks and light meals throughout the day from Monday to Saturday. Especially good are the oysters, mussels, and prawns. Savory pastries and salami are also served, accompanied by excellent draught beer and juices.

FLORIANÓPOLIS (Santa Catarina) Restinga Recanto

Rodovia Rafael da Rocha Pires 2759, Praia de Sambaqui Tel (048) 3235 2093

With a terrace right on the seashore, the Recanto is one of the most inviting Portuguese and Azorean restaurants in the area. The shellfish are sourced from the house's own oyster and mussel beds. Apart from the shellfish, traditional Azorean fish stews and fresh grilled fish are the house specialties. The dining area exhibits works by local artists.

FLORIANÓPOLIS (Santa Catarina) Chez Altamiro

Rodovia João Gualberto Soares 7742, Rio Vermelho Tel (048) 3269 7727

A little piece of France in a quiet rural corner of the north of the island of Santa Catarina, Chez Altamiro serves good, traditional French food. Options include foie gras, quail, and pheasant, but the seafood dishes are the best choice and the guava soufflé is mouth watering. Reservations are advisable.

FLORIANÓPOLIS (Santa Catarina) Villa Maggione

Rua Canto da Amizade 273, Lagoa da Conceição Tel (048) 3232 6859

Florianópolis's best restaurant, attractively located in a pretty house by the lagoon. The menu is based on Italian dishes but includes influences of Mediterranean cuisines. The Moroccan salad includes a delicious mix of fruity and savory flavors, while the pasta dishes are all fairly good. Reservations are required.

FOZ DO IGUAÇU (Paraná) Bier Kastell

Av Jorge Schimmelpfeng 362 Tel (045) 3574 5493

Bier Kastell is a downtown tree-shaded beer garden serving ice cold draught beer (chope) and simple German food along the lines of bratwurst, sauerkraut, and potato salad. The restaurant is always lively, and especially popular late into the evenings.

FOZ DO IGUAÇU (Paraná) Clube Maringá

Rua Dourado 111, Porto Meira Tel (045) 3527 9683

Located on the grounds of the local yacht club but open to the public, this restaurant specializes in giant freshwater fish from the Iguaçu and Paraná rivers. The fixed-price buffet of hot and cold Brazilian dishes is excellent value and for a little extra you can request a plate of sashimi. Views of the Iguaçu and Paraná rivers are stunning.

FOZ DO IGUAÇU (Paraná) Empório da Gula

Av Brasil 1441 Tel (045) 3574 6191

One of the well frequented restaurants located on a beautiful avenue, Empório da Gula offers a variety of cuisine from traditional Brazilian fare to Italian signature dishes. Visit this place for excellent meat, straight from the grill, and regional fish preparations. Reservations are recommended.

FOZ DO IGUAÇU (Paraná) Búfalo Branco

Rua Rebouças 530 Tel (045) 3523 9744

Located in the heart of downtown Foz, one of the city's best churrascarias attracts local residents and visitors alike. The restaurant somehow succeeds in being elegant yet relaxed. There is an all-you-can-eat rodizio – the beef is superb – and chicken and local fish are also served. There is also an excellent salad bar.

NOVA PETRÓPOLIS Opa's Kaffeehaus

☰ V ☹☹

Rua João Leão 96 Tel (054) 3281 1273

Located in a quiet old house, Opa serves what in Southern Brazil is called Café Colonial – a high tea based on ingredients and traditional recipes of the immigrant-descended local farmers. For a fixed price, a huge meal is presented, consisting of over 45 items, such as smoked sausage and ham, breads, jams, and German-style cakes.

PORTO ALEGRE Via Vêneto

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Rua José de Alencar 501, Menino Deus Tel (051) 3233 1400

Via Vêneto is a large, inexpensive galetteria with a lively, informal atmosphere. The restaurant serves the typical Italian food of Rio Grande do Sul. For a fixed price a huge meal is on offer, including roast chicken, fried polenta, soup, salads, and pasta.

PORTO ALEGRE Baumbach

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Av Pará 1324, São Geraldo Tel (051) 3346 4322

Baumbach is one of Porto Alegre's best German restaurants. Recipes from German communities in the interior of the state have been adapted for more sophisticated big-city tastes. The range of duck dishes is especially good, but eisbein (pork knuckle), bockwurst, and other pork dishes are also delicious.

PORTO ALEGRE Galpão Crioulo

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Parque Maurício Sirotsky Sobrinho s/n Tel (051) 3226 8194

Waiters wearing typical gaúcho garb serve the all-you-can-eat (rodizio) round of meat, mainly cuts of beef but also chicken, lamb, and pork. A particular attraction of this downtown churrascaria, located in a huge barn-like structure, are the lunch and dinner performances by a traditional gaúcho dance ensemble.

PORTO ALEGRE Na Brasa

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Rua Ramiro Barcelos 389, Floresta Tel (051) 3225 2205

Although ordinary-looking, Na Brasa is widely considered one of the best churrascarias in Porto Alegre. All-you-can-eat (rodizio) meat of all kinds, with 20 different cuts of grilled meat and a superb por kilo salad bar (pay by weight), and dozens of other hot and cold dishes.

PORTO ALEGRE Polska Restauracja

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Rua João Guimarães 377, Santa Cecília Tel (051) 3333 2589

This cozy Polish restaurant is attractively decorated with old photographs, antiques, and handicrafts from Poland. The roast duck is cooked to perfection and other standard Polish dishes such as bigos (a stew of cabbage and meat) are on the menu. Hearty food that is perfect for a cold Porto Alegre winter's evening.

PORTO ALEGRE Sálvia Pizza

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Rua Comendador Caminha 338, Moinhos de Vento Tel (051) 3268 0000

The thin-crust pizzas baked in wood-fired ovens at Sálvia Pizza are among some of the best in Porto Alegre. The toppings are prepared with the finest of ingredients. Live local bands perform every evening, and the place is especially popular with young people.

PORTO ALEGRE Sanduiche Voador

☎ ☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹

Praça Maurício Cardoso 23, Moinhos de Vento Tel (051) 3395 4717

A contemporary bistro with an attractive terrace, this has a central location in the fashionable Moinhos de Vento suburb. Beautifully presented sandwiches and salads are its mainstays, but the seasonal menu also includes light hot dishes. Excellent also for quality ice creams and cakes.

PORTO ALEGRE Ai Dente

☎ ☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹☹

Rua Mata Bacelar 210, Auxiliadora Tel (051) 3343 1841

A wonderful, intimate, and very friendly restaurant serving Northern Italian fare. Freshly made pasta is the staple, but gnocchi and risotti are also served, and there is a strong emphasis on dairy produce, with a delectable array of cheese.

PORTO ALEGRE Koh Pee Pee

☰ V ☹ ☹☹☹

Rua Schiller 83, Moinhos de Vento Tel (051) 3333 5150

A stylish and remarkably authentic Thai restaurant. The food here is cooked in an open, central position, with the colours and activity creating quite an exciting spectacle. Koh Pee Pee offers very good vegetarian options and all the dishes are delicious and beautifully presented. Reservations are advisable.

PORTO ALEGRE Puppi Baggio

☎ ☰ V ☹ ☹☹☹

Rua Dinarte Ribeiro 36, Moinhos de Vento Tel (051) 3346 3630

A charming Italian restaurant with a rustic-looking interior designed to be reminiscent of an immigrant's home. The baked polenta with bacon is fresh, and the pasta and gnocchi are served with a choice of equally fresh sauces, such as red pepper and prawn, and garlic and white wine.

PORTO ALEGRE Chez Philippe

☰ V ☹ ☹☹☹☹

Av Independência 1005, Independência Tel (051) 3312 5333

Situated in an imposing early 20th-century mansion with an elegant interior, Chez Philippe offers contemporary French cuisine, opting, where possible, for distinctly local ingredients, giving many of the dishes an unapologetically Brazilian accent. The fish in tomato, coconut, and heart of palm sauce is delicious and the beef dishes are all good.

FOZ DO IGUAÇU (Paraná) Itaípu

Rodovia das Cataratas Km 24.5, Parque Nacional do Iguaçu Tel (045) 2102 7000

Based in the Hotel das Cataratas in Iguaçu (see p388), this is the only restaurant worth going out of the way for. There are two distinct rooms, a very varied buffet of hot and cold Brazilian and international dishes, and a grill specializing in à la carte barbecue offerings, usually accompanied by traditional gaúcho music.

MORRETES (Paraná) Armazém Romanus

Rua Visconde do Rio Branco 141 Tel (041) 3462 1500

The best restaurant in Morretes to sample barreado, a tasty and rather heavy beef-based dish cooked for many hours in a sealed clay urn, the typical regional dish. A low-fat version is also served, as is fresh, grilled fish served with vegetables.

PARANAGUÁ (Paraná) Danúbio Azul

Rua 15 de Novembro 95 Tel (041) 3423 3255

Right on the water's edge, this restaurant specializes in fish – and it could hardly be more fresh. There are many choices, ranging from simply grilled to Bahian-style mocquecas. The restaurant is quite simple and a pleasant place to watch the activity out in the bay beyond the huge glass window.

RIO GRANDE DO SULANTÔNIO PRADO Nostra Cantina

RS-122 para Flores da Cunha Km 122 Tel (054) 3293 4057

Authentic food of Italian immigrant descendants can be found in this restaurant on the outskirts of Antônio Prado. Simple and hearty fare like roast chicken, salad, polenta, and pasta are made very well. Wine produced by the restaurant's owner is also quite delicious.

BENTO GONÇALVES Casa Valduga

Linha Leopoldina, Caixa Postal 579 Tel (054) 2105 3122

One of the foremost producers of quality wine in the Vale dos Vinhedos, Casa Valduga serves typical local-style Italian food such as roast pork and chicken, pasta, polenta, and salads. A bottle of Valduga wine is an essential accompaniment. Reservations are required.

BENTO GONÇALVES Giuseppe

RS-470 para Porto Alegre Km 221 Tel (054) 3463 8505

Located in a lovely old stone farmhouse on the road leading to Garibaldi, Giuseppe serves typical regional food, an all-you-can-eat galeria, specializing in galetto (the regional dish of roast chicken), polenta, and pasta. The delightful dining room is decorated with pictures and mementos of the Italian immigrants that settled in the area.

CAXIAS DO SUL La Vindima

Rua Borges de Madeiros 446 Tel (054) 3221 1696

La Vindima is the oldest and best galeria in town. Here, the sage-flavored chicken is roasted in charcoal ovens, which gives them an additional delicate flavor, and are served with radicchio salad, accompanied by bacon, polenta, and other Italian country dishes.

GRAMADO Coelho Café Colonial

Av das Hortênsias 5433 Tel (051) 3286 2538

A stay in Gramado is incomplete without enjoying this café, which offers colonial high tea featuring salami, cheese, cakes, bread, and fruity jams produced by local German and Italian farmers and bakers. This café is one of the largest in Gramado and offers a particularly large choice of items – all you can eat at a single price.

GRAMADO Mamma Mia

Av das Hortênsias 3400 Tel (054) 3286 1991

A well-established galeria, Mamma Mia is a restaurant serving typical food of the nearby Italian farmers. Grilled chicken forms the heart of the meal, but the all-you-can-eat menu includes a range of salads, soups, pastas, and polenta.

GRAMADO Chez Pierre

Av Borges de Medeiros 3022 Tel (054) 3286 2057

This romantic little restaurant has a cozy mock-Swiss atmosphere and does offer cheese fondues, but a far more delicious dish is the fondue bourguignone (meat fondue) served with a selection of tasty dips. This is a popular item in Rio Grande do Sul where beef is especially appreciated. Raclettes and fresh trout are also served.

GRAMADO La Caceria

Av Borges de Medeiros 3166 Tel (054) 3286 2057

An elegant restaurant in the style of a German hunting lodge, La Caceria is located in Hotel Casa da Montanha. The specialty here is game such as boar, wild duck, partridge, pheasant, and rabbit. Fruit-based sauces are typically served with the flavorsome meat. The wine list – including Brazilian and foreign wines – is one of the best in town.

SHOPPING IN BRAZIL

The most exciting aspect of shopping in Brazil is that it never fails to surprise visitors with its amazing variety. Major cities, such as Rio (see pp90–91) and São Paulo (pp150–51), boast expansive, world-class shopping centers that have everything from sophisticated boutiques to high-tech items. Craft centers, artisans' houses, and ateliers (workshops) showcase the unique, attractive products manufactured by the local people. Colorful street markets and camelódromos offer a truly exhilarating Brazilian shopping experience. The prices are, by and large, reasonable, and large items can be shipped home. In most state capitals and tourist areas the opening hours are extended for convenience.

OPENING HOURS

Business hours are normally from 8am until 6pm on weekdays and from 8am to 1pm on Saturdays. In large cities, tourist areas, and resorts, opening hours are more flexible.

Stores in central areas extend their opening hours until 7 or 8pm on weekdays and 4pm on Saturdays. Shopping centers are open from 10am to 10pm from Monday to Saturday. In resorts and tourist areas, even small stores are open daily until midnight during the high season.

HOW TO PAY

Major credit cards are accepted in most stores in large cities and resorts, though there may be a minimum spend value (about R$50). US dollars are sometimes accepted in tourist areas, but in small towns it is best to pay in cash using the real (see p431).

SHOPPING CENTERS & HYPERMARKETS

More convenient than street stores and offering much more than shopping alone, shopping centers have multiplied in the last few years. Fast-food chains and restaurants, department stores and boutiques, clothes repair, cobblers, and other services can all now be found within one complex. A combination of supermarket and department store, hypermarkets are often located on main roads and the outskirts of towns. Apart from the ubiquitous local chain, Extra, foreign names such as Wal-Mart and Carrefour also have a formidable presence in Brazil.

In resorts, smaller shopping centers sell souvenirs and fashionable items. Department stores such as C&A and Casas Pernambucanas have found their way into shopping centers, although they exist more prominently as street shops in the large city centers.

MARKETS & CAMELÓDROMOS

Almost every medium-size city in Brazil has its own special market, some located in beautiful historical buildings. Lively and picturesque, these markets sell an array of fresh products from meat and fish to fruit and cheese. Authentic regional food, typical sweets, and crafts can also be found here. Ver o Peso market in Belém (see p268) and public markets in Olinda (Pernambuco), as well as Porto Alegre (Rio Grande do Sul) are good examples.

Ver o Peso, Belém's picturesque waterfront mercado (market)

Everywhere in Brazil, street traders or camelôs sell goods on improvised stands, or at places called camelódromos. A wide range of items, from clothes to electronics of fairly decent quality, are sold at reasonably reduced prices.

It is possible for shoppers to bargain at open-air markets. Vendors will often start at double the price of products, but with a little skill and some charm on the part of the buyer, this can be reduced. Be on guard in crowded street markets, as pickpockets are not uncommon. Be discreet when taking out money to pay.

ART & CRAFTS

Every region in Brazil has its own distinctive handicrafts. The use of specific raw materials makes every piece of work unique. The best way to buy these pieces is to go directly to the ateliers. Tourist information offices can provide the addresses. Craft centers, where artists can be seen at work, offer lower prices than the upmarket souvenir shops.

Typical Amazonian crafts include indigenous masks, jewelry, plume helmets, basketwork, and bows and arrows in Manaus, Belém, and Santarém. Attractive replicas of Marajoara pottery are sold in Belém and the Ilha de Marajó. Delicate lacework is found in all northeastern states, while Pernambuco and Bahia are famed for their fine ceramics.

Woven items, hand-crafted furniture, and Arraiolo tapestry are popular in Minas Gerais. In the south, Santa Catarina's crystalware is exceptional. In the state of Rio Grande do Sul, it is worth looking for good-quality woolen items in Gramado and Caxias do Sul.

GEMS

Brazil has 60 percent of the world's gem reserves. It is the world's largest exporter of rough-cut gems and the sixth largest exporter of worked gems. The variety and quantity of precious stones are spectacular. Amethyst, citrine, diamond, emerald, opal, and royal topaz are just a few of the gems that Brazil is famous for. Rough and worked pieces can be bought in the cities of Ouro Preto (Minas Gerais), Cuiabá (Mato Grosso), Salvador and Chapada Diamantina (Bahia), and Porto Alegre. Designed jewelry can also be found in these places, as well as in São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro.

Although gems are largely sold in open-air markets, it is best to buy them at stores offering origin warranty certificates, which gives the weight (in carats), quality, origin, and – in the case of readymade jewelry – the characteristics of any precious metal used.

Salesman displaying gems, Howard Stern Jewellers, Ipanema

FOOD & DRINK

Brazil is known for its rich variety of preserves, dried fruits, and cakes (see pp392–3). Another favorite is fruit – figs, citron ciders, pineapples, and oranges – crystallized in compôte. These delicacies can be bought at public markets, craft centers, and confectioners' shops, found everywhere in Brazil.

An immensely popular beverage, cachaça (sugarcane liquor) is produced all over the country and locally distilled (see p393). The best cachaça comes from Minas Gerais, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, Pernambuco, and Ceará. It can also be bought at craft centers, local bars, and in hypermarkets in the larger cities.

Excellent coffee and gourmet blends are easily available in all big cities in Brazil. Look out for the ABIC seal on the packets, as this certifies the coffee quality.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRAZIL

Entertainment in Brazil varies according to the region and the city, but one thing is certain – Brazilians love going to bars, cafés, or botecos (a kind of bar with snacks and an old-fashioned atmosphere) to meet with friends and drink cold beer. This usually happens before and after other activities such as watching movies, plays, and shows. Dancing is another popular activity with Brazilians. In a country known for the richness of its rhythms, there are venues catering to all kinds of music and dancing, from forró, samba, and axé to techno and electronic music. Outdoor activities, such as soccer and volleyball, are national pastimes. Water parks, beaches, and public gardens are also good places to enjoy the warm weather and outdoor activities.

DJ Zod playing in a nightclub

INFORMATION & BOOKING

Most Brazilian shows, such as plays and operas, do not run for very long and tickets must be booked quickly. Rio and São Paulo have specific magazines with a good listing of events and entertainment (see p95 & p153). In most other Brazilian cities, local newspapers are the best way to find out what's on. They usually come with special sections or supplements on Fridays or on weekends showing cinema, theater, and other entertainment listings.

Only the most active theaters and concert houses provide listings on a website on the Internet. In some big cities, shows can also be booked via Ticketmaster using Visa, MasterCard, and American Express, for a small additional service fee. Hotel concierges can often be helpful and informative when it comes to finding out what shows are on and booking them as well.

DISCOUNT TICKETS & FREE EVENTS

In general, students and seniors (over 60) get a 50 percent discount for most events. The conditions for students vary from state to state. In Rio de Janeiro, any person under the age of 21 gets a discount. In other cities, students must show their university identity card. There are many free events at museums and cultural centers, but as they always become crowded quickly, arriving early is wise.

Almost every city has one or more cultural centers. Supported by the government or by private companies, they often offer cheap tickets or free access to a variety of events, such as plays, dance, and art exhibitions, performed by professional or amateur companies.

PERFORMING ARTS

Theater and dance shows are popular in bigger cities in Brazil, where the theaters feature regular shows. At some resorts, dance or musical performances take place during the high season, or during specific summer or winter festivals. Most plays run only for a season. There is a fair amount of traditional and experimental theater, many dance performances, and chamber and classical music recitals to attend. Some performances have become annual traditions, such as The Passion of Christ play staged during the Passion Week at an open-air theater in Nova Jerusalém (see p223) in the state of Pernambuco. Another big performance takes place every January in São Vicente (see p169), retelling the story of the foundation the town.

Musical shows are as prolific in Brazil. They take place at venues ranging from bars and theaters to sophisticated cultural centers. During music festivals, concerts are held in open-air areas, such as squares, public parks, or beaches. The really big and famous acts, which can be costly, usually perform in the stadia and require advance booking of tickets.

Inside Rio City's world-famous soccer stadium, Estádio Maracanã (see p84)

CINEMA

In larger cities, modern multiplex cinemas, most of which are located in shopping centers, mainly feature recent Hollywood and European, as well as good Brazilian films. There are also a few good cineclubs, especially in Rio and São Paulo, that screen feature- and short-film festivals, often screening films with English subtitles. There are three main cinema chains operating in Brazil – United Cinemas International (UCI), Cinemark, and the Brazilian Playarte. They offer facilities for disabled people and sell tickets in advance via the Internet or at the box office.

BARS, CAFÉS & BOTECOS

Nightlife is always exciting in large cities, resorts, and tourist areas. Bars are open through the week, usually after 6pm until 1 or 2am (some continue until sunrise, especially those on the beaches); some are open 24 hours. Most cities offer a wide variety of bars to visit – dance bars, bars with live music, and in the bigger cities, gay and lesbian bars. Botecos – traditionally carioca bars known for their simplicity and good snacks – have now been adopted by many cities and have increased in popularity and sophistication.

Happy hour is an institution in many of the larger cities. It begins at 6pm and extends until 9 or 10pm, after which many people carry on at all-night bars.

Bars and kiosks on and near the beaches are often crowded and buzzing with activity, through the week, and especially on weekends. Cities without beaches generally make do with tables and chairs spread over the sidewalks with impromptu cafés sprouting up outside restaurants.

SOCCER MATCHES

Soccer is a national passion – across Brazil there are 800 soccer clubs, 13,000 amateur teams, and 300 stadia, including Rio City's Estádio Maracanã (see p84), one of the largest in the world. There are many championships through the year, with matches taking place on Wednesdays, Thursdays, and weekends.

It is not always easy to get a ticket for these games, and very often there are immense queues to purchase tickets. Clubs and stadia do not sell tickets on the Internet. There are some websites that sell tickets online, provided this is done well in advance. Most travel agencies would be able to provide information on this.

GARDENS & THEME PARKS

Public gardens and parks are always crowded on weekends. Many of them offer jogging tracks, roller-skating rinks, sports courts for playing soccer, volleyball, basketball, tennis, and other games.

Theme parks are becoming increasingly popular everywhere in Brazil. Nowadays, most of these parks include some form of outdoor activity, such as swimming pools, water slides, water tobogganing, horse-riding, and roller-coasters.

SPECIALIZED HOLIDAYS & OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES

The climate and great variety of landscapes – mountains, flatlands, waterfalls, and forests – make Brazil an outstanding outdoor destination. This ecological paradise offers great opportunities to observe its fascinating flora and fauna, or to indulge in adventure sports that allow close contact with the environment. Visitors can choose from a range of thrilling activities such as rappelling down cliffs, canyoning, or climbing peaks in spectacular settings. However, the infrastructure varies from region to region. It is best to get in touch with reputed tour operators licensed by Embratur, a government tourism agency. Other interesting activities may involve learning to dance to the beautiful rhythms of forró and samba, performing the legendary capoeira, or even joining a game of soccer.

ECOTOURISM

Brazil's rich and varied ecosystem has much to offer, and ecotourism is becoming a popular form of tourism. Visitors can capture on film the splendor of the Amazon rainforest near Manaus, or enjoy excursions into the forest organized by jungle lodges. Similar eco-tours can also be undertaken from Belém or Santarém (Pará).

Amazon Explorers and Selvatur are the two agencies based in Manaus; in Belém contact Paratur. Pantanal Nature offers tours and expeditions into the vast wilderness of Pantanal, Nobres, and Chapada dos Guimarães from Cuiabá.

Serra da Capivara (see pp248–9) and Sete Cidades parks (Piauí) (see p249) offer amazing rock formations, while Chapada Diamantina in Bahia (see pp204–205) and Chapada dos Veadeiros (see pp312–13) in Goiás have good trekking trails, forested areas, and scenic waterfalls. National parks such as Serra dos Órgãos (see p115), Parque Nacional do Itatiaia (see p111) and Aparados da Serra (see p358), and natural reserves such as Ilha do Cardoso (see p171) offer a broad range of biodiversity. Look for Fazenda Palomas or contact Fellini Turismo for special rural tours in Rio Grande do Sul.

BIRD-WATCHING & SAFARIS

Home to almost a fifth of the world's bird population, Brazil offers a surfeit of bird-watching excursions. Birding Brasil Turismo, based in Manaus, provides good deals. Iara Turismo conducts special programs. Estação Ecológica Santa Lúcia, run by renowned naturalist Augusto Ruschi, organizes regular bird-watching. Ornithologist Edson Endrigo organizes tours to Parque Nacional Itatiaia (see p111) and Ubatuba. A typical safari can be experienced at Jalapão State Park (see p310–11). The travel agency Korubo Expedições uses a truck with hatches for professional photo equipment.

OFF-ROAD DRIVING

Many beautiful sites in Brazil are accessible only by off-road vehicles. The Transpantaneira road (Pantanal) and the Estrada Park road are attractions in themselves, allowing passengers to leisurely observe the flora and fauna. The Transpantaneira extends 93 miles (149 km) from Poconé to Porto Jofre in Mato Grosso and has 126 wooden bridges to cross. Many inns and farms receive visitors along this road. Stretching 73 miles (117 km), the Estrada Park road links Corumbá to Buraco

The rare and striking scarlet ibis that inhabit the Ilha de Marajó (see p270) das Piranhas (Piranha's Hole) in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul. Another enjoyable road experience is to cross Jalapão State Park, a wonderful contrast of golden dunes and gushing waterfalls. Korobo Expedições offers week-long packages leaving from Palmas. The Northeast region's off-road adventure Rota das Dunas (Dunes Route) runs from Fortaleza (Ceará) to São Luís (Maranhão), passing through Jericoacoara Beach and Delta do Parnaíba (a group of 80 islands) and Parque Nacional dos Lençóis Maranhenses (see pp250-51). For bookings contact Dunnas Expedições and Jeri Off-Road.

CYCLING & BIKING

Cycling and mountain biking have been attracting increasing numbers of enthusiasts to Brazil. Many tour operators rent bikes, and provide necessary equipment, food, and accommodation. Trancoso (Bahia) is the starting point of the Discovery Route – a crossing that passes through wonderful beaches. Contact Sampa Bikers and Natural Cicloturismo for details.

Mountain biking is an interesting way to discover the attractions of Florianópolis (Santa Catarina). There are 30 trails that traverse its 42 beaches, lakes, and stunning landscape. These and other options in the state can be found at Caminhos do Sertão and Ecos da Serra. Cycling tours near the Parque Nacional Aparados da Serra covering the cities of Gramado, Canela, and the Vale dos Vinhedos (see p355) are organized by Casa da Montanha Adventures. Accommodation can be found at the Parador Casa da Montanha, a kind of luxurious camping site.

Ecotourism by bicycle, Parque Nacional dos Lençóis Maranhenses

WATER SPORTS

Vast stretches of beach, and an abundance of rivers, lakes, and waterfalls make water sports widely available and accessible in Brazil. Fernando de Noronha (Pernambuco) and Itacaré (Bahia) are hot destinations for water sports such as snorkeling, surfing, and wind surfing. Búzios and Rio (Rio de Janeiro), and Ubatuba and Guarujá (São Paulo) are easier, while Praia Joaquinas and other beaches in Florianópolis pose more challenging water sports options (see pp346-7).

The country has many scuba diving options. PDIC Brasil (Professional Diving Instructor's Corporation) is a good place to contact. Rio de Janeiro state, Cabo Frio, Angra dos Reis, Paraty, and Ilhabela in São Paulo are outstanding places for diving and exploring shipwrecks. Beaches in the Northeast are a snorkeler's paradise.

Among the sail sports, kitesurf reigns in Ceará's beaches and lakes near Jericoacoara. Kite Club Preá provides facilities, tours, and safaris for intermediate to advanced kites in Preá, a small fishing village east of Jericoacoara.

Rafting and canoeing enthusiasts should head to Brotas and Socorro, in São Paulo; Três Rios, in Rio de Janeiro; Domingos Martins, in Espírito Santo; Jaguaraiáiva and Tibagi, in Paraná; Apiúna, in Santa Catarina; and Rio Cristlino, in the Amazon rainforest of Mato Grosso.

Cascading and canyoning can be challenging, but highly enjoyable, in the waterfalls of Chapada dos Veadeiros in Goiás and Cipó mountains, in Minas Gerais where visitors can get in touch with ABETA (Brazilian Adventure Travel Association).

For those who enjoy fishing, Clube de Pesca Cananéia helps organize expeditions. This club can also make arrangements for the obligatory fishing license.

Canoeing on the Rio Cristalino near Cristalino Jungle Lodge (see p319)

LANGUAGE & CULTURE

Almost 70 universities in the country offer Portuguese classes to foreign students. Many of these courses are now open to visitors. Some language schools also offer flexible Portuguese courses, which can stretch from one week to many months. These lessons may include lectures on Brazilian culture and guided tours of museums and galleries. Some of them prepare for the Portuguese Proficiency Certificate (CELPE-Bras), the Portuguese language qualification granted by the Ministério da Educação. Excellence Idiomas, Idiomas to Go, and Diálogo Language School are some of the better private school options.

MUSIC & DANCE

The sensuous dance forms of Brazil have evoked a lot of interest worldwide. With their natural hospitality Brazilians are easily motivated to teach dance steps at bars, dance houses, parties, and local performances. But you can also arrange to take professional dancing classes in the cities. In Rio de Janeiro, it is possible to learn with the famous dancer Carlinhos de Jesus at Casa de Dança. In

Couples dancing the forró on a festive occasion

São Paulo, one can visit Avenida Club and take samba lessons from professional dancers. Diálogo Language School conducts workshops on dancing and singing to Brazilian rhythms, which may be tied in with Portuguese language classes. These lessons are a good way to familiarize oneself with the most representative artists of Brazilian popular music.

SOCCER

It is possible to arrange day and residential soccer camps, as well as team and individual training sessions or family packages. The coaching programs vary from a week to several months and may include friendly games and tournaments for players between 6 and 18 years of age. Some good options are Centro de Intercambio in São Paulo City, Cruzeiro Esporte Clube in Belo Horizonte (Minas Gerais), and Athletic Center Football Club, a soccer academy located in Poços de Caldas (Minas Gerais). The Athletic Center also organizes special tours involving visits to famous clubs and stadia.

CAPOEIRA CLASSES

The amalgam of acrobatic movements, rhythm, music, and song make capoeira (see p199) a big draw. Almost every city has an academy. Zebra & Pepi take lessons on the Itacaré beaches. In Salvador, Filhos de Bimba is one of the best and most famous capoeira schools. With several branches outside Brazil, it strives to keep alive the regional spirit of capoeira.

VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

Volunteers can work in non-profit organizations contributing in the field of education, child welfare, health, ecology, and the environment. This is a good way of getting to know local people, and at the same time making a social contribution. These programs are open to adults of any age, and may include homestay with a Brazilian family. The program duration commonly varies from two to ten months. To enroll contact Diálogo Language School, World Study, AFS Intercultura Brasil, or BIL Intercâmbios. For all such programs, a basic knowledge of Portuguese is required.

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 424-433
TRAVEL INFORMATION 434-443

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Tourism is one of the fastest growing industries in Brazil, and for the past decade, the country has been investing heavily in new airports, hotels, and other facilities designed to make the country more attractive to visitors. Brazil offers a variety of travel experiences for all ages and tastes. The sheer size of Brazil makes air travel almost a necessity for those interested in exploring beyond just one region. All major tourist destinations are very well set up to receive international visitors. English and Spanish are generally spoken by those who work in the tourism industry. However, very few other Brazilians speak English. Fortunately, the friendliness and outgoing nature of the people more than makes up for these challenges and Brazilians overall are very helpful in assisting foreigners.

WHEN TO GO

High season in Brazil runs from Christmas to Carnival (held in February or early March). Many musical and cultural events take place in these months. Although not as busy, a second peak season is during July and August when schools and universities have their winter break and many Europeans and North Americans visit on their summer holidays. The best times of year for lower prices and fewer travelers are the low seasons from March to May and September to November.

WHAT TO TAKE

Dress standards in Brazil seem largely a matter of personal taste. A sarong or sheet sleeping bag is invaluable for use as a towel, a bedsheet, or beach towel. Bring a first-aid kit, raincoat, sun hat, penknife, flashlight, wax earplugs, insect repellent, eye mask for sleeping on buses, and a chain for securing luggage to bus or train seats. For a jungle trip, a hammock is a good idea.

VISAS & PASSPORTS

All travelers to Brazil must have a valid passport. Holders of European Union or New Zealand passports do not require a visa. Those with US, Canadian or Australian passports need to apply for a visa at the Brazilian embassy or consulate in their country of residence. Passport holders of other nationalities should check with the nearest Brazilian embassy.

Upon arrival, visitors receive a 90-day entry stamp, which can be extended for another 90 days by the Policia Federal, up to a maximum of 180 days per year. Visitors are also required to fill out an entry card that they must keep with their passport at all times. It must be surrendered when leaving Brazil. Failure to produce this slip of paper may lead to a fine, and will certainly result in a hassle.

The 90 days are added on the day of renewal. There may not be a requirement to get an extension much before the expiry date. An expired visa cannot be extended.

The Policia Federal may request to see an outbound ticket and proof of sufficient funds for the remainder of your stay. Those who outstay their visa term will be fined upon departure.

Map of Canoa Quebrada in one of its streets to assist tourists

TOURIST INFORMATION

All international and domestic airports in Brazil have tourist information booths that offer maps, brochures, and general information. These are usually run by either the state or city's tourist office.

Embratur Overseas

Offices, the national tourist office, with its headquarters in Brasília, is run by the Ministry of Tourism.

It has several overseas offices, including those in the United Kingdom, the United States, France, Germany, Spain, Portugal, and Japan.

LANGUAGE

The language of Brazil is Portuguese, but it is quite different in style and pronunciation from the Portuguese spoken in Portugal. The language has quite a few similarities with Spanish. In major tourist areas, the staff will speak some English and/or Spanish. However, in general, English is not widely spoken and often Brazilians will only have a basic intermediate knowledge of the language.

RELIGION

Brazil is often called "the largest Catholic country on earth," although, to be accurate, one should probably call it the "largest and least devout" of Catholic nations. Many Brazilians consider themselves culturally Catholic, without being regular churchgoers. In recent years, the influence of the Church has greatly diminished. Traditional Afro-Brazilian religions are still followed, especially in the North and Northeast, with the religious ceremonies and practices gaining more acceptance over the years.

TIME

Brazil has four time zones. Most of the country is three hours behind GMT (known as the Brasília Time Zone). Both Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, as well as all of Southern and Northeast Brazil and Pará and Amapá states are three hours behind GMT. The island group of Fernando de Noronha is two hours behind GMT. The states of Mato Grosso, Mato Grosso do Sul, Amazônia, Rondônia, and Roraima are four hours behind GMT. The state of Acre, in the far western corner, is five hours behind GMT. During daylight saving hours it gets a little bit more complicated. The southern states set their clocks back an hour, but the states in the north and northeast do not.

ELECTRICITY

There is no uniform voltage across Brazil. Some states are 110 volts, others 220 volts. Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo are both 110 volts. Brasília is 220 volts. Hotels will often have plugs for both voltages and are good at labeling the outlets. Adapters for laptops and cellphone chargers can normally handle the full range of voltage, but it is always better to check the specifications of your equipment to be sure.

ETIQUETTE

Brazilians are very friendly and outgoing, even when meeting someone for the first time. When introduced, men will greet each other with a handshake and a friendly slap on the shoulder. Good friends usually embrace. When introduced to a woman, it is customary to greet her with a handshake and a kiss on the cheek (one kiss in São Paulo and the South, two kisses in Rio, the North, and Northeast). When introduced to a group of people, everybody has to kiss or shake hands with everybody else.

WOMEN TRAVELERS

A woman alone, especially at night, will attract some form of attention. It usually depends on where you are. Steer clear of areas around train stations, since it is likely to be a red-light area at night. The transport terminals themselves, though, are usually policed and fairly safe at all hours.

SPECIAL NEEDS

Travelers with mobility problems will find Brazil a very challenging country. Although it is relatively easy to find wheelchair-accessible hotels and restaurants, very few public places are accessible or wheelchair-friendly. Older buildings may still lack elevators or ramps, and streets and sidewalks are often uneven or broken.

Wheelchair parking sign

The metro system in Rio has electronic wheelchair elevators, but these are not always operational. For short distances, buses are not the best option for disabled travelers to get around. Taxis are better, and plentiful in most cities. For long distances, however, buses are generally comfortable, with special services offering fully reclining seats. Wheelchairs are available at all main airports.

TRAVELING WITH CHILDREN

Those traveling with small children will find Brazilians very child-friendly and accommodating. There are virtually no places that do not welcome children. Brazilians themselves think nothing of bringing their children to restaurants, theaters, cafés, concerts, or other events.

PUBLIC TOILETS

Public toilets are not that hard to find in Brazil, but vary greatly in cleanliness. Clean toilets can usually be found in hotel lobbies, shopping centers, and in public locations such as bus stations, parks, or beaches. A fee is sometimes charged. Note that toilet paper is sometimes dispensed from a central dispenser outside the stalls. It is a good idea to carry a roll of toilet paper.

Health & Medical Matters

Brazil has a free national public healthcare system. Even foreign tourists will receive medical attention in any of the public hospitals, should they require it. Unfortunately, the public health system is overloaded and inadequately funded, especially in the rural areas of Brazil. Queues can be long and tedious, and facilities are not always up to European or North American standards. However, Brazil's private hospitals and clinics, though not free, offer world-class medical facilities. A good travel insurance policy will give access to these private facilities in an emergency, but remember to read the fine print carefully. Overall, hygiene standards in Brazil are high. Normal care is required with food and drink, and with preventive vaccinations, particularly when visiting the most remote parts of the country.

A fire brigade ambulance parked outside a fire control office

VACCINATIONS

It is a good idea to consult a travel clinic or family doctor for an International Certificate of Vaccinations, an up-to-date list of the required vaccinations. The ones most commonly recommended are a DTP (diphtheria, tetanus, and polio) booster, as well as for typhoid and hepatitis A.

A yellow fever vaccination is also required. This disease is endemic to many parts of South America, including Brazil. Officially, all visitors to Brazil are required to show proof of yellow fever vaccination. Although the requirement is not regularly enforced for visitors coming from North America or Europe, it is compulsory for those from other countries in South America. Entry can be denied upon failure to show proof of vaccination. Anti-malarial tablets may be advisable for those visiting some of the more remote parts of the Amazon.

TROPICAL DISEASES

Visitors to Brazil's major tourist destinations rarely have to worry about tropical diseases. The one tropical disease that can occur anywhere in the country, even in urban areas, is dengue fever. It is a viral infection that prevails throughout South America. The disease is transmitted by mosquitoes, and there is no vaccine to prevent it. It is much more common in the summer months, from December to March. Symptoms include high fever, joint pain, and headaches (especially behind the eyes). The illness usually runs its course in a week or 10 days, but a check-up is recommended to avoid any complications.

Cholera occasionally occurs in remote areas, but is mostly preventable by taking proper hygiene precautions such as drinking filtered water and washing and peeling fruit and vegetables. The most important precaution is to wash hands frequently.

PHARMACIES

For minor ailments, travelers can turn to Brazil's farmácias, or pharmacies. These can be found everywhere, are always well supplied, and are often open late. Every city will have at least one that is open 24 hours. Many medications that in other countries are available only by prescription can be bought over the counter in Brazil. Take care to remember the generic name of a medication taken regularly. A trained pharmacist is normally on hand to recommend the appropriate medication for common ailments such as diarrhoea, allergies, rashes, or infections. It is possible to get injections and free medical advice in pharmacies all over Brazil.

PRIVATE HOSPITALS

Brazil does not offer the best medical facilities in its public hospitals. Foreign visitors, in particular, may find it difficult getting a bed, unless it is an infectious disease. In most public hospitals, the level of health care will not match European or US standards.

Private hospitals, however, offer world-class facilities. Though good medical care may be rare to find in rural areas, in the larger cities you will never be far from a decent private hospital. In many big cities, local tourist offices and some good hotels can provide a list of doctors who can speak English, French, and German.

For medical emergencies in a remote area, an air ambulance service offers a pick-up within 24 hours of calling. However, it is advisable to contact the travel insurance company before requesting for this service.

Though fairly affordable by international standards, private treatment in Brazil may turn out to be expensive. Many doctors and hospitals do not accept travel-health insurance, and insist on payment in cash.

HEALTH PRECAUTIONS

A visit to Brazil, by and large, does not require special health precautions. Impure water and contaminated food are usually the reasons for most diseases. However, hygiene standards of food and drink are high, especially in major tourist areas. Water is usually filtered or bottled and ice cubes are made from filtered water. Even in the most remote parts, mineral water is easily available. As long as fruit, vegetables, and meat are handled properly, they can be eaten safely.

A local drink seller on a Rio de Janeiro beach

SUN PROTECTION

Visitors from the northern hemisphere should take extra care with Brazil's intense tropical sun, especially for the first few days in the country. Brazil basks in almost year-round sunshine, making adequate sun protection absolutely crucial. Avoid exposure between 11am and 3pm and apply sunscreen to all exposed parts of the body. Wear sunblock (minimum SPF 30) and limit tanning to a only few hours. Pharmacies and grocery stores sell a variety of national and international sunscreen brands. Those sold on the beach itself, or in street markets, are best avoided. The contents may either be fake, or have been kept in storage for a long time, which causes the active ingredients to deteriorate.

Safety for Travelers

Brazil is known to have a higher crime rate than anywhere in North America and Europe. However, in reality, the kind of violence that affects travelers is mostly limited to the bigger cities, and is usually restricted to crimes that target valuables such as cameras, credit cards, cell phones, or cash. Such assaults are rare in the countryside and smaller towns. While some parts of Brazil can truly be regarded as violent and dangerous, travelers can be assured of personal security by using common sense and observing some very basic precautions.

Local showing the way to visitors, Salvador

PERSONAL SAFETY

The large cities, especially Rio de Janeiro, São Paulo, and Salvador, are generally considered more prone to violence than the rest of Brazil. Statistically, crime rates in these cities are significantly higher than in cities in Europe or the US. However, much of the violent crime is confined to poorer neighborhoods in parts of the city where travelers rarely venture. The crime that visitors are most likely to be susceptible to is theft or robbery. The most basic precaution is not to carry anything worth stealing and to avoid empty beaches and nearly-empty streets after dark. Avoid ostentatious behavior such as walking around with expensive equipment; instead keep it in a plain bag.

When sightseeing, keep all belongings in a bag that can be placed in a money-belt. Never carry large amounts of cash. Credit cards are widely accepted and can be used for purchases in most hotels and stores. Keep a few small bills handy in a pocket so that when making small purchases, the wallet doesn't have to be pulled out in a busy area. Public transport is safe in the daytime, but in the evenings taxis are a better option. If you get robbed, just hand over your valuables, as robbers are often armed with a gun or a knife. Streets and public places can be unsafe at times. A very common technique is to distract the victim by spraying something on their shoulder. An accomplice may then offer to clean the mess, while the thief will make off with your belongings. The best and safest way is to politely turn down any such offer.

It is always best to exercise caution when someone unknown offers a drink, or even cigarettes. Instances of drugging, or spiked drinks are not uncommon in Brazil.

A Guarda Municipal policewoman patrolling on a bicycle, Rio City

POLICE

Brazil has several different types of police that travelers are likely to encounter. Known to be the most efficient by far, the Polícia Federal (see p424) is responsible for passport control at airports and border crossings. Dressed in plain clothes, they deal with visas and their extensions.

Dressed in gray uniforms and caps, the Polícia Militar are responsible for public safety and can be seen patrolling the streets, beaches, and highways. These policemen often carry out "blitzes" (traffic checks) along major streets or roads. These can appear a little intimidating as the Polícia Militar come out in full gear, carrying automatic weapons. If you are driving a car, slow down, turn on the interior light, and roll down the windows.

A few cities with a strong tourist presence, such as Rio and Salvador, also have Polícia de Turismo, or tourist police, who offer assistance in case of any difficulty. Unfortunately, many of them do not speak English. A special Delegacia do Turista (tourist department) is available for those who require further help or wish to report a crime.

A brightly painted tourist police station in Olinda

The state-controlled Polícia Civil handle local laws and investigate more serious crimes. When there is no tourist police post in the vicinity, thefts are reported to these policemen. Rio City has an unarmed guard force, Guarda Municipal (Municipal Civil Guards), to complement state police patrolling of parks and beaches.

REPORTING A CRIME

If you have been the victim of a crime, it can be reported at the nearest police station or tourist police office. This should be done within 24 hours of the crime. To obtain a report of the incident or theft for insurance purposes, insist that you receive a copy of the boletim de ocorrência. There may be nobody at the police station who speaks English, so it may be useful to request a hotel employee or tour guide to accompany you if you need to file a report. Missing credit cards should be reported to the relevant company (see p430). In case you have lost or damaged your passport, it is recommended that you contact your nearest consulate or embassy.

Polícia Militar booth in São Paulo, responsible for traffic checks

IDENTIFICATION

It is mandatory in Brazil to carry some form of photo identification. Often you will be asked to show some form of ID when entering an office building or government agency, or sometimes even a museum or library. To avoid carrying around a passport, keep a photocopy, and carry some other form of less valuable ID such as a student card, or a health card that has your picture, name, and date of birth.

Banking & Local Currency

Brazil provides a range of accessible banking facilities and money exchange services. Except for the US dollar, foreign currencies are rarely accepted outside of major tourist regions. Exchange rates for cash transactions are usually not very good, and the best rates can be obtained on credit card or caixa automática (automated teller machine) transactions. Credit cards, widely accepted in most establishments, can be used to withdraw local currency (real), giving a more favorable exchange rate, and are by far the most convenient. Traveler's checks can be changed in banks and casas de câmbio (exchange offices).

BANKING HOURS

HSBC has a number of banks that are open from 9am to 5pm on all weekdays. Most other banks, including Banco do Brasil, are also open on weekdays, but only from 10am to 4pm. Hours for changing money or traveler's checks are even more limited, usually falling between 11am and 2pm. Automated teller machines (ATMs) have more flexible hours but are not always open 24 hours.

ATMS

The easiest way of getting cash in big cities is by using ATMs (caixa automática), which are widely found and accept foreign cards. Check with your bank prior to traveling to Brazil whether your ATM card can be used internationally for cash withdrawals and that you have the appropriate PIN (numero de identificao). In addition to ATM cards, most bank machines will also give a cash advance on a credit card. Banco do Brasil, HSBC, Citibank, Bradesco, and Banco 24 Horas have reliable networks that work with international cards.

Bank machines are often updated and adjusted so other banks may join the network. For safety reasons, bank machines are not always open 24 hours. ATMs may close at 8 or 10pm, or be programmed to dispense only a small amount of money.

It is also good to plan ahead on weekends or statutory holidays when machines sometimes run out of cash. Keep in mind that some small towns and islands do not have ATMs, so plan ahead.

CREDIT CARDS

Credit cards are widely accepted in Brazil. The most commonly used cards are AmEx, MasterCard, and Visa. Diners Club is less widely used. Credit cards can be used in almost all establishments. Street markets and kiosks, of course, only take cash. When you pay by credit card the cashier will usually ask "débito ou crédito" (debit or credit). It is important to state "crédito" as most international credit cards do not work as debit cards. Credit cards with a PIN can also be used to make cash withdrawals from ATMs at banks. The service fee is higher for using a credit card instead of a regular ATM card.

It is a good idea to instruct your bank that you will be using your card in Brazil, so as to avoid any transaction problems at a later stage.

TRAVELER'S CHECKS

Very few banks will cash traveler's checks, and at those that do, there is a high fee and a long wait. The Banco do Brasil, for example, charges a flat fee of US$20 per transaction. Some hotels and some tour operators will accept traveler's checks, but the exchange is always bad. American Express will cash AmEx traveler's checks for free, but they only have offices in a few major cities in Brazil. It is more convenient to use a credit card for major expenses incurred at hotels and on excursions.

CURRENCY

The currency of Brazil is the real (R$, plural reais). All bank notes come with a print of a Brazilian animal. The smallest R$1 and R$2 notes are green and blue, respectively, featuring a hummingbird and sea turtle. The purple R$5 and the red R$10 have pictures of a heron and a macaw respectively. The yellow R$20 notes feature the endangered mico-leão dourado (golden lion tamarin) monkey. The brown R$50 notes come with a picture of a jaguar. R$100 bills, featuring the endangered dusky grouper fish, are often impossible to break at small shops, so stock up on change at drugstores and grocery stores.

Brazilian reais bills come in denominations of 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50, and 100. Brazilian bank notes are bright, with each denomination coming in a different color.

Communications

Internet café sign

Brazil has an efficient communication system. Telecommunication systems are reasonably advanced and mobile phones are widely used. Postal networks, with a variety of services, including registered post and express mail, are quite reliable. Most hotels subscribe to a digital or satellite television service with international channels. Although there are no foreign language Brazilian newspapers, foreign newspapers are available in all major cities, mostly in the main airports, business districts, and tourist centers.

PUBLIC PHONES

Public telephones (orelhões, or “big ears”) are plentiful all over Brazil. Pay phones do not take coins. You must purchase a phone card (cartão telefonico), available at newsstands, drugstores, and post offices. To make overseas collect calls from a pay phone you have to contact the operator (dial 21) to complete the call for you. Local or long-distance collect calls within Brazil can be made by dialing 9090 before the number.

USING THE PHONE

Almost all telephone numbers in Brazil are now eight digits. Unfortunately, phone listings are not always updated right away. If you do come across a seven-digit number, it is best to confirm if it is still correct. Local calls do not require an area code, whereas long-distance calls do. This consists of two digits. All long-distance calls (within Brazil and international) also require the use of a long-distance service provider (prestadora). The two-digit code of the prestadora needs to be dialed before the area code. In listings, long-distance numbers often look like this – 0-XX-11-3455-3288. The two-digit prestadora number is inserted in place of the “XX.” Customers have several options, depending on the region and prices. Embratel (Brazil’s largest telecommunications company) phonecards work everywhere in Brazil. If using Embratel, the number would look like this – 0-21-11-3455-3288. This can sometimes be confusing because some prestadora codes are the same as some area codes.

Public telephones, easily available all over Brazil

MOBILE PHONES

Mobile phones are common all over Brazil, and are generally used in most public places, including in restaurants. Most tri-band GSM phones will work in Brazil. You can purchase a local SIM chip upon arrival and obtain a local number. Some phones need to be unlocked before they can be used in a foreign country. Check with your phone company before leaving home. If your service provider has a roaming agreement with Brazil, you can use your regular number.

DIALING CODES

- A local call requires only the seven or eight digit number without the area code.
- To phone Brazil from overseas, dial the international access code, followed by Brazil’s country code (55), followed by the two-digit area code and local number.
- To call abroad from Brazil, dial 00, then the prestadora code, followed by the country code, area code, and phone number.
- Contact Embratel at 0800 703 2100 to ask for collect calls or international calls.

The distinct blue and yellow colors of a post office in Rio de Janeiro

POST OFFICES

The Brazilian postal service is quite efficient. Post offices (correios) are open from 9am to 5pm Monday to Friday.

Large shopping centers and airports will have branches with longer opening hours, including Saturdays. Regular delivery service within Brazil takes two to four days and overseas 6 to 12 days. For guaranteed or registered delivery, the correios offers the excellent sedex (domestic Brazilian express mail) service, which functions like a courier service. In larger cities, there are also several international couriers for express overseas delivery.

COURIER

For international courier services, it is best to use an international courier company such as DHL or FedEx. Drop-off points are mostly in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, and a few in other cities, but wherever available, both companies will schedule convenient pick-ups and provide all the documentation required for an international delivery. Do remember, delivery from Brazil to the main cities and towns in the US or Europe normally takes 48 hours.

INTERNET

Internet service is widely available in Brazil and usually quite cheap. If traveling with a laptop, ask about the hotel's in-room Internet access rates. Cyber cafés are the cheapest options for accessing the Internet, and are usually found in shopping centers, and large bookstores. Some of the bigger Internet cafés include FNAC Centro Cultural and Icone Espaço Cultural, in São Paulo, and Livraria Letras e Expressões and Cyber Copa Café, in Rio.

ADDRESSES

Most addresses are fairly straightforward, giving the street name first, followed by the number. Landmark buildings or houses in small towns may be listed as s/n (sem número or without number). Other common abbreviations in addresses include lj or loja (shop), sl or sobreloja (first floor or mezzanine), and apt or apartamento (apartment).

NEWSPAPERS & MAGAZINES

Brazil does not have any English language daily newspapers or magazines. The main Brazilian dailies are O Globo and the Folha de São Paulo. The Friday editions include a cultural and entertainment section with detailed information on shows, concerts, plays, movies and exhibitions. The bestselling weekly news magazines are Êpoca, Veja, and IstoÉ. On weekends, in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo, the Veja (see p152) edition includes a separate magazine and listings related to cultural events.

Foreign newspapers and magazines can be purchased in large cities, in the tourist areas or business districts. These are also available at all major airports.

Newspapers and magazines are most commonly sold at a newsstand (banca de jornal). Newsstands in Ipanema in Rio and Praca de Republica in São Paulo have a good range of international newspapers. Supermarkets and bookstores also sell them, but often carry a smaller selection.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Most travelers arrive in Brazil by plane. There are regular scheduled flights from Europe and North and South America. Travelers from Asia or Africa will most likely have to connect elsewhere before continuing to Brazil. Several airlines offer stopovers to or from Brazil at no extra cost. Almost all direct flights land at São Paulo's international airport or in Rio de Janeiro. There are a few regular flights to Salvador and Recife. However, most direct flights to these and other destinations in the Northeast, such as Fortaleza or Natal, are European charter flights. Air travel within Brazil is quite efficient, and even the most remote locations are accessible by plane.

Directional sign at airport

ARRIVING BY AIR

Most direct international flights land either in Rio de Janeiro or São Paulo. Convenient connections are available for those continuing to other domestic destinations. Travelers will clear customs at the airport where they first enter Brazil.

INTERNATIONAL AIRLINES

Most major European and North and South American airlines operate regularly scheduled flights to Brazil. Delta, American Airlines, Continental Airlines, KLM, Lufthansa, Air France, British Airways, Alitalia, Iberia, Tap, and others offer non-stop flights to Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo. The largest Brazilian airline, TAM, has regular flights to Europe and the USA. There are also non-stop flights to Salvador de

Modern, well-equipped Belém International Airport

Bahia from Madrid with Air Europa, and from Miami with American Airlines. Gol, Brazil's second largest airline, flies internationally to Latin American destinations only.

ON ARRIVAL

All tourists are expected to fill out a cartao de entrada/saida (entry/exit card). Immigration officials will keep half and return the other to you. This card is important. It serves as proof of stay in Brazil and will be checked upon departure. Loss of the card may result in a major hassle and possibly a fine (see p424). Officials will also stamp your passport, and in case they are not granting you the usual 90-day stay in Brazil, the number of days will be written beneath the word Prazo on the stamp in your passport. For an extension of the 90-day entry stamp, contact the Polícia Federal (see p424-5).

CUSTOMS REQUIREMENTS & DUTY FREE

All international travelers are allowed to purchase up to US$500 at the Brazilian duty-free shop in the arrival hall. Purchases must be made prior to exiting the customs area. Visitors may bring items for their personal use, including electronics. Expensive gadgets, such as cameras or laptops, may need to be registered upon arrival to ensure that they will be taken out of the country again. Gifts up to a value of US$500 can be brought in without additional duties; Brazilian duty-free purchases are not included in this amount.

GETTING FROM AIRPORTS

In Rio City, taxis can be a rip-off. Instead, go for the Real Auto Bus, which runs an efficient half-hourly bus service. São Paulo City offers excellent air-conditioned shuttles known as the "Airport Service." These run every 30 minutes, and depart from the arrivals terminal. Taxis, too, are easily available at a fixed price. Salvador's international airport is linked to the city center by an hourly shuttle express bus service.

TRAVEL AGENCIES & PACKAGES

European residents have access to some attractive package deals to Northeast Brazil. Packages typically include hotel and airfare to a popular destination such as Fortaleza, Natal, or Recife. Though affordable, these package tours do not offer a lot of flexibility. Independent travelers, who wish to visit several destinations, must book their own airfare and hotels. Confirm hotel prices with travel operators, as Brazilian hotels often reserve their best prices for agencies.

A number of travel agencies, such as Brazil Nuts, offer customized tours or programs, including activities for seniors, youths, gay travelers, or for those interested in cultural activities. Journey Latin

Domestic Air Travel

The sheer size of Brazil makes air travel the preferred mode of transportation. The country has an excellent network of airlines and most airports have been modernized.

Air travel is an important means of transportation to reach remote areas in Amazônia and the interior of Brazil. All towns in the country have at least an airstrip, and all cities have an airport, usually some distance from the city, or located fairly centrally, as in the case with São Paulo City and Rio City.

Gol Linhas Aereas Inteligentes aircraft taxi at Congonhas airport, São Paulo

DOMESTIC AIRLINES

Domestic air travel within Brazil is a well organized and efficient form of transportation. There are currently two major airlines that fly both international and domestic routes – TAM and Gol (see p437). Domestic bargain airlines include OceanAir, Webjet, Gol, and Trip. Smaller airlines, such as Pantanal, operating flights between São Paulo and Mato Grosso do Sul, have recently built up a wide and inexpensive network throughout the Amazon region.

CHECKING IN

Check-in for domestic flights is normally 60 minutes prior to departure. A valid ID is required, and foreigners are required to show their passport upon check-in. Make sure to keep the luggage claim tags handy upon arrival, as airport staff will check for those when exiting the baggage claim area.

AIRPASS

Non-residents of Brazil who arrive on an international flight are entitled to buy an airpass with TAM, making long-distance flights within Brazil quite affordable. The airline sells the pass for US$479, for which you are allowed four domestic flights within a 21-day period. Additional segments can be purchased. No direct return flights are allowed. For example, Rio–Manaus–Rio–Salvador is not allowed but Rio–Manaus–Salvador–Rio is.

Teco-teco (air taxi) in the Amazon region

A travel agent can explain the detailed terms and conditions, or else, check the airline's website for more information.

HIGH SEASON

High season for domestic air travel corresponds with the major holidays and vacation periods in Brazil. The peak season is in the Brazilian summer, from the week of Christmas until Carnival in mid-February or early March. The month of July is also peak season when schools and universities are off on their winter break. Other popular periods are Easter, Corpus Christi, and Independence Day (September 7).

TAM offers significant discounts for those who take night flights. As unpleasant as departures and arrivals in the wee hours may be, the savings can be significant. It is also advisable to book well ahead of time when planning to take flights Friday evening or Monday morning between major cities.

AIR TAXI

Many parts of Brazil, and particularly Amazônia, feature air taxi companies. Air taxis, known locally as teco-tecos, are not the most reliable form of transportation. Before taking one, be aware that the airstrips are often dangerous. These small planes routinely fly overloaded, and are very often in questionable condition. There are no checks made on the qualifications of pilots, so taking an air taxi is at the traveler's own risk.

A Varig flight landing at Fortaleza airport

RESERVATIONS & CANCELLATIONS

Flights tend to be booked in advance so book your tickets as far ahead as possible. The only exception to this is the Rio-São Paulo shuttle, where you can purchase tickets on the spot. Flights at the beginning and end of working days and on weekends are usually quite crowded.

Confirm onward flights a day or two in advance. This can be done over the phone, as most airlines have English-speaking staff.

If you have an airpass and you happen to change your flight, remember to cancel the original flight.

If you don't do so, the computer will flag you as a no-show, and all your other airpass reservations will also be canceled. Similarly, if you miss a flight, reconfirm all onward flights on your airpass. If you don't, all your other flights will be canceled.

DOMESTIC AIRPORTS

Along with domestic airports, such as Aeroporto de Congonhas in São Paulo, and Aeroporto Santos Dumont in Rio de Janeiro, there are small domestic airports all over Brazil, including Recife, Belo Horizonte, Cuiabá, Campo Grande, Curitiba, Fernando de Noronha, Florianópolis, and Fortaleza.

GETTING AROUND

Due to the size and distances across Brazil, the fastest and easiest way to travel around the country is by air. All big cities, smaller towns, and even more remote areas across the country have airports, or at least an air strip of some sort. Domestic flights are available to and from just about any major city across Brazil.

Bus & Car Travel

Bus and car travel is a challenge in Brazil, both because of the distances, and because of the often poor quality of the roads. Brazil possesses a total of 932,000 miles (1.5 million km) of federal, state, and local roads but only 49,000 miles (79,000 km) are paved and in decent condition. Intercity bus travel is well organized and most routes offer efficient and comfortable express services. Though car rentals are widely available, given the distances and the high cost of gasoline, a car is not really advisable for longer trips, but it is a convenient way to explore attractions closer to the city.

Busy rodoviária (central bus terminal) in São Paulo

BUSES

Brazil has an excellent network of long-distance buses which makes traveling around the country easy and economical. Intercity buses leave from a central station, called a rodoviária, usually built on the outskirts of the city. Buses are operated by numerous private companies, but prices are standardized, and very reasonable. Several categories of buses operate on longer routes. Regular buses (ônibus comum) sometimes do not have air conditioning, so ask. Comum com ar are regular buses with air conditioning. The executivo bus is more comfortable, its chairs wider and equipped with footrests. The best buses for overnight trips are known as semi-leito or leito. Semi-leito have seats that recline almost horizontally and have large footrests. Leito buses offer a fully horizontal bed-like seat. Both normally offer onboard refreshments, blankets, and pillows. Nearly all buses have onboard bathrooms. Buy your tickets from the rodoviária ahead of time, especially on holidays.

CAR RENTALS

All major cities and most smaller cities and towns offer car rental services, such as Avis and Localiza. Car rental offices, known as locadoras, can be found at every airport and in most towns. Foreigners need to show a valid driver's license from their home country, state, or province, their passport, and a major credit card. It is also a good idea to carry an International Driver's Permit (IDP). A wide variety of cars are available in Brazil, from small economy models with no air conditioning, to large air-conditioned 4WDs. Rental agreements can be with full or partial insurance, with unlimited driving or with a per kilometer charge. In terms of price, a 4-door mid-size sedan with air conditioning, unlimited driving, and full insurance will cost about R$150 (US$75) per day in a larger city. In smaller towns and remote areas, prices go up by 50 to 100 percent. It is a good idea to check with locals about the condition of the roads you plan on taking.

GAS STATIONS

Cars in Brazil run on either gasoline or alcohol, but car rental agencies normally rent only gasoline models. Service stations selling gasoline are more common, especially in remote areas. On long-distance road trips, service stations may be few and far between, so ensure that the car is in good condition. Always be well prepared with some cash, water, enough car fluids, a good spare tyre with tools, and a flashlight.

DRIVING IN TOWNS

Driving in Brazilian towns and cities can sometimes be a frustrating experience. Anytime after about 9pm, especially in Rio and São Paulo, drivers begin to treat red lights as strictly optional. Be especially alert at intersections at night (even as a pedestrian). Often the driver running the red light won't even slow down, because of the risk of robberies at isolated intersections.

Posto de Gasolina (gas station) in Rio de Janeiro

On highways and secondary roads, drivers tend to be fearless overtaking other vehicles, even when they can't see what's around the bend.

Parking in cities can be a bit tricky. It is worth paying extra for a hotel with a lock-up garage facility. Do not leave valuables in the car. It is also worth paying a few reais to self-appointed "guards" who may approach you to watch over your car.

Parking sign switch lanes constantly, for no apparent reason, normally without signaling.

Things have improved significantly over the past few years as a result of the use of photo radar. Seatbelt laws are also rigorously enforced. But in larger cities such as São Paulo, Rio, and Salvador, traffic is still very chaotic. In case of an emergency, it is best to call the Polícia Militar (see pp428–9). Road accidents should be reported to the department of transport, Detran, in the respective state.

RULES OF THE ROAD

Officially, the rules of the road are much the same as in Continental Europe or the United States. Drive on the right side of the road; unlike the USA, right turns on red lights are not allowed. Roundabouts are common only in Brasília. The right of way is always with the car already in the roundabout, or to the left.

However, it is the application of these rules – or lack thereof – that sets Brazil apart. Most Brazilians are aggressive and impatient drivers. They tend to drive fast, overtake often, either on the right or left, and when they cannot, they hang impatiently on your back bumper. Do not expect the large bus driving next to you to stay in its lane. Drivers

ROAD NETWORK

Brazil's intercity road network is made up of state and federal highways. Federal highways are denoted by the initials BR followed by the number of the highway (BR-163). State roads are indicated by the state initials (RJ for Rio de Janeiro, PA for Pará, and so on) followed by the highway number (PA-150). Toll roads have become more common recently. Most are run by private companies. They are usually well maintained and offer roadside assistance.

Most other state and federal highways are undivided 2-lane blacktops, with occasional passing lanes. Care is required when driving on these roads. Generally speaking, the roads in southern states such as Rio and São Paulo are much better than in northeastern or Amazonian states such as Bahia or Rondônia. Even in the south, roads in bad condition are not uncommon.

Traveling by night is best avoided. With very few exceptions, highways in Brazil are poorly lit, and completely lacking in reflective paint, reflective signage, and the road-side reflectors that show the edge of the road.

The best compilation of national road maps come bundled with the Guia Quatro Rodas, a publication brought out by a Brazilian motoring organization of the same name, available at newsstands, bookstores, and magazine stalls.

Train & Boat Travel in Brazil

Train travel is not a common mode of transportation in Brazil. While large parts of the country have never seen train tracks, in other areas, many routes have been deactivated in favor of roads. Today, the few remaining routes are of more interest to train aficionados, and are often of great scenic beauty. In some parts of Brazil, boat travel is still the only mode of transportation. With few roads connecting the major cities, particularly in the Amazon and along the northern coast, locals depend entirely on boats to get around. On the Rio Paraguay, on the western edge of the Pantanal, boats are used for multi-day fishing charters.

TRAIN TRAVEL

Although Brazil does not have a large train network, there are a few specific routes that can be useful for travelers and are good for a scenic ride. The Minas-Vitória train journey is an excellent day trip, and perfect for those traveling between the cities of Belo Horizonte, in the heartland of Minas Gerais, and Vitória on the Espírito Santo coast.

The quickest and most comfortable way to travel between São Luís and the interior of Pará, in Northern Brazil, is the São Luís Carajás railroad. In the state of Amapá, also in Northern Brazil, a passenger and cargo train runs from the port of Santana, 124 miles (200 km) inland, to the former mining town of Serra de Navio. Its passenger cars, though old and in need of maintenance, are still functional.

Brazil offers a few charming, short historic routes. Steam locomotive trains, lovingly called Maria Fumaça, or "Smoking Mary," run on these routes. One of the journeys this unique steam engine makes is a regular 7-mile (12-km) run on weekends between São João del Rei and Tiradentes (see p132), historic towns in Minas Gerais. An appealing short trip is offered along the route between the beautiful, historic mining town of Ouro Preto, one of Brazil's best preserved colonial towns, and Mariana, also in Minas. Even though the towns are only 7 miles (12 km) apart, the route buzzes with history, as gold miners and gem hunters in the days of the gold rush used to travel through these hills. Contact the Estação Ferroviária for further details.

Another spectacular route is the Curitiba-Paraguá train ride through the Atlantic rainforest of the Serra do Mar. The most unforgettable stretch is between Curitiba and Morretes (see p337). For information, contact the Curitiba Ticket Office.

BOAT TRAVEL

In many parts of Brazil, boats are a vital form of transport. The network is extensive, and services are regular, although the facilities largely depend on the type of boat chosen for traveling.

In the Amazon, rivers are still the major highways, and old-style wooden river boats are an important part of the transportation system. The most common and popular route runs between Manaus and Belém. The journey takes four days downstream and five days upstream. On this route, there are also several larger and more modern boats, which feature air-conditioned cabins and even enclosed air-conditioned hammock spaces. Continuing right up to Tefé, AJATO runs a speedboat service every Wednesday and Saturday, with airplane-style seating.

On most other routes, the boats are the older, smaller traditional type, with small wooden cabins, and two open decks – upper and lower – where passengers sling their hammocks. Meals and water are provided.

Boats of the old style ply dozens of routes throughout the Amazon basin. The most common routes run between Manaus and Porto Velho, Manaus, Tabatinga, and São Gabriel de Cachoeira, near the borders of Peru and Columbia, respectively, and Manaus and Santarem, half-way to Belém. The Manaus-Santarem route also has a high-speed catamaran which makes the journey in a single day. Those more keen on tours than transportation can go for one of the comfortable boats for charter in Manaus, such as Viverde, that take passengers on a personal exploration of the Amazon River. For information on buying tickets in advance, contact Amazonastur, the state tourism agency.

The Rio Paraguay on the western edge of the Pantanal has a large fleet of boats, most of which are outfitted for multi-day sport fishing cruises. These boats depart from both Corumbá in Mato Grosso do Sul and Cáceres in Mato Grosso.

On the Northeast coast, an absence of roads connecting the Maranhão and Piauí coast makes boat travel the only alternative to long detours inland. The most scenic option is to travel from Parnaíba in Piauí through the islands and inlets of the Delta da Parnaíba to Tutóia, one of the gateways to the Lençóis Maranhenses.

CRUISE TRAVEL

A very leisurely way to travel the Brazilian coast is on board a cruise ship. Several companies offer three- to five-day cruises, most typically between Santos, Rio de Janeiro as far as Salvador, or other Northeastern cities. Another route starts in Recife and travels to Fernando de Noronha. There is now also a regular cruise ship, the Iberostar Grand Amazon, that departs from Manaus on three- and four-day cruises on the Amazon. Tropical Cruises, which leaves from Rio de Janeiro City, offers very good trips along the Atlantic Coast. The old-style Amazon Clipper Cruises can be excellent for a tour of the Rio Negro.

Getting around Brazilian Towns

Public transportation in Brazil varies greatly from city to city and region to region. Large cities such as São Paulo and Rio de Janeiro have modern metro systems that offer quick access to many parts of the city and decent bus systems. However, in most cities and towns, the main mode of transportation is the bus and its variations, such as minivans and minibuses. Taxis are plentiful and quite affordable. In very small communities where there is little in the way of regular public transportation, people often use motorcycle taxis (moto-taxis). It is a cheap and fast one-person ride.

Visitors exploring the town of Búzios on foot

ON FOOT

Visitors to Brazil often seem preoccupied with street crime. What they should really worry about is traffic. Pedestrians get little or no respect. It is safest to assume that cars have the absolute right of way everywhere at all times. Even when the pedestrian has the right of way, such as when crossing with a green light, extreme care should be exercised at all times.

After dark, or when traffic is light, or when police are absent, cars tend to run red lights. Also, when making a right turn, cars rarely give preference to pedestrians trying to cross. Pedestrians should also be aware of bikes or motorcycles that may go down the wrong way on a one-way street. Always look both left and right.

Motorcyclists often weave in and out between the cars at high speeds. Be very careful when walking in between stopped or slow moving traffic.

TAXIS & MOTO-TAXIS

Taxis are affordable and a quick mode of transportation. Prices generally run 50 to 70 percent lower than in Europe or North America. Most taxis work on the meter. When starting the ride, make sure that the meter is cleared and shows "tariff 1" except from 11pm to 6am, Sundays, and in December when "2" is permitted. Drivers sometimes "forget" to start the meter and end up charging a flat rate.

The only taxis allowed to charge a flat rate are radio taxis or cooperatives at airports, bus stations, or other specific locations. The price will be set before the passenger gets in. Rates are typically 30 to 40 percent higher than regular metered taxis, but you know what the final price will be. Although these pre-paid taxis are not a bargain, they may be good value when taking a taxi from the international airports in Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo (see p435), where taxi drivers have developed the unfortunate habit of taking advantage of tourists who don't speak Portuguese and aren't familiar with Brazil.

In most cities, taxis can be hailed on the street or at numerous taxi stands. Renting a taxi for the day is an inexpensive alternative to renting a car. The price is negotiated with the driver. Taxis in small towns do not have meters, so it is best to agree upon a price in advance.

Another option in smaller towns is the moto-taxi, or motorcycle-taxi. The driver carries an extra helmet and the passenger just hops on the back and rides pillion after fixing a price.

METRO

The metro is the safest form of public transport in Rio and São Paulo. Both cities have metro systems that are very convenient for visitors, as they offer quick and reliable transportation to a number of interesting sites. It is much easier and faster to take the metro to the stop closest to your destination and then take a taxi, rather than figure out a complicated and often slow bus system.

Yellow Rio taxis, plentiful and relatively inexpensive

In Rio de Janeiro, the metro runs from 5am to midnight Monday through Saturday, and from 7am to 11pm on Sundays and holidays. During Carnival, the metro runs non-stop for the five days of the festival. The metro has two main lines, both of which are clean and safe, even in the evenings. The main line from Siqueira Campos in Copacabana to Sãens Peña has 17 stops. The line splits at Estácio, with one line continuing west, while the secondary line goes north to São Cristóvão and beyond. The stops of most interest to visitors are downtown and along the southern beach neighborhoods, as well as the first few stops along the northern line to the Maracanã Stadium and Boá Vista Palace. Rio's metro now also offers a series of integrated metro-bus routes, which offer connections on air-conditioned buses to many of the city's attractions that are off the metro system, such as Santa Teresa, Sugar Loaf, and Ipanema. Passengers must request a special integrated ticket (integração) at the time of purchase.

São Paulo's metro system covers quite a large part of the city. It runs from 4:40am to midnight on all days of the week and is also clean, efficient, and safer than the buses.

For both systems, one-way (unitário), round-trip (duplo), or 10-ride (múltiplo) tickets are available. However, no discounts are offered for multiple-ride tickets. Transfers between lines are allowed. Free metro maps are available at most ticket booths of both metro systems.

BUSES

Buses are plentiful in the big cities. Most buses list their destination in large letters on their front window, while another sign with smaller lettering lists key landmarks along the route. Buses in Rio and São Paulo run 24 hours a day, but with fewer circulating in the middle of the night.

In Rio, most buses going from the south to the center will go to Copacabana. Keep in mind that buses are often crowded, and get stuck in terrible time-consuming traffic snarls. They are also often the sites of many of the city's robberies. To avoid pickpockets, try to sit at the front of the bus.

In São Paulo, a couple of the main bus transfer points are at Praça da República and the busy Terminal Bandeira, where it is also possible to catch different buses to far-off destinations within the city.

Tickets are sold on the bus by a ticket-seller who sits at a turnstile. Keep small change handy. Brazilian bus drivers can drive fast, so hold on at all times and be alert for sudden stops when standing. It is safer to take buses in the daytime. In the evenings, it is advisable to take taxis.

Phrase Book

The Portuguese spoken in Brazil differs in various ways from the Portuguese spoken in Portugal. In general, Brazilian pronunciation tends to omit far fewer sounds, especially the sounds at the end of words, and rarely runs two words together, both of which are common practice in Portugal. One feature of Brazilian Portuguese, particularly in the Rio de Janeiro area, is that an "r" sound can be spoken like an "h." So carro (car) may sound like "ka-hoo." Another difference lies in the ways of saying "you." The Portuguese form of placing the definite article in front of a person's name (o João, a Cristina), as a way of saying "you," does not exist in Brazil, where você and vocês are the most common words for "you." The Portuguese tu is not used much in Brazil. A huge number of other vocabulary differences exist, many at the level of everyday speech: train is trem in Brazil, comboio in Portugal; breakfast is café da manhã in Brazil, pequeno almoço in Portugal; bathroom is banheiro in Brazil, casa de banho in Portugal; goalkeeper is goleiro in Brazil, guarda-redes in Portugal; to drive is dirigir in Brazil, conduzir in Portugal. The sound indicated by "i" in the phrase book is like the "i" in English word "hi." "j" sounds like the "s" in the word "pleasure."
