HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide helps you get the most from your stay in Florence and Tuscany. It provides both expert recommendations and detailed practical information. Introducing Florence and Tuscany maps the region and sets it in its historical and cultural context. Florence Area by Area and Tuscany

Area by Area describe the important sights, with maps, pictures and detailed illustrations. Suggestions for food, drink, accommodation and shopping are in Travellers' Needs, and the Survival Guide has tips on everything from the Italian telephone system to getting to Tuscany and travelling around the region.

FLORENCE AREA BY AREA

The historic centre of the city has been divided into four sightseeing areas. Each has its own chapter, which opens with a list of the sights described. All the sights are numbered and plotted on an Area Map. The detailed information for each sight is presented in numerical order, making it easy to locate within the chapter.

Sights at a Glance lists the chapter's sights by category: Churches; Museums and Galleries; Historic Buildings, Streets and Piazzas.

Street-by-Street Map This gives a bird's eye view of the heart of each sightseeing area.

A suggested route for a walk covers the more interesting streets in the area.

All pages relating to Florence have red thumb tabs.

1 Area Map For easy reference, the sights are numbered and located on a map. The sights are also shown on the Florence Street Finder on pages 140-47.

Stars indicate the sights that no visitor should miss.

3 Detailed information on each sight All the sights in Florence are described individually. Addresses, telephone numbers, opening hours and information on admission charges and wheelchair access are also provided.

FOUR GREAT DAYS IN FLORENCE AND TUSCANY

There is something for just about everyone in Florence and Tuscany: from viewing some of the world's greatest Renaissance art to wandering around designer boutiques; and from exploring the surrounding countryside with its historic hilltowns, wine and charming restaurants to visiting one of the many spa towns. Each of these itineraries has a theme, but they can be tailored to suit your needs. Apart from the day of art in Florence, which can be done on foot, parts of the family day may be easier by bus or taxi while the other days do require a car. The price guides include the cost of travel, food and admission fees.

Shoes with style at the Ferragamo Shoe Museum, Florence

RENAISSANCE ART AND SHOPPING

- The magnificent Duomo and Brunelleschi's dome
- Michelangelo's David
- Renaissance art in the Uffizi
- Stylish shoes and chic shops

TWO ADULTS allow at least €130

Morning

Start the day at Brunelleschi's glorious church of San Lorenzo (see pp90–91), with its unfinished, rough-hewn façade. The adjacent Medici Tombs (see p91), designed by Michelangelo as a mausoleum for the Medici family, are gloomy yet impressive. Just a five-minute walk from here is the breathtaking Duomo (see pp64–5) with its vast dome also by Brunelleschi. Opposite it is the Baptistry with its ornate East Doors (see p66), and the Campanile with fine views of the dome and the city below. Pause for a lively, cheap lunch at Da Mario (see p270).

Afternoon

Stroll across to Piazza della Signoria (see pp76–7), where a copy of Michelangelo's celebrated David stands outside the Palazzo Vecchio (see pp78–9). The real one is in the Galleria dell'Accademia (see pp94–5). Just round the corner is the Uffizi (see pp80–3), with its unrivalled collection of Renaissance art. At least half a day is needed to appreciate its wonderful treasures so you may wish to return another day to spend more time here. Head to the Ponte Vecchio (see pp106–7), taking in the jeweller's shops and old workshops that line the bridge.

Afterwards walk to Via de' Tornabuoni (see p105) with its chic boutiques for a spot of shopping. For anyone interested in footwear, Ferragamo's Shoe Museum is also here. Finish with a chilled glass of prosecco at Proccaci (see p283).

A FAMILY DAY OUT IN FLORENCE

- Gory waxworks
- View the Boboli Gardens
- Explore the Palazzo Vecchio
- Ride around town in a horse-drawn carriage

FAMILY OF 4 allow at least €230

Morning

Go to the Mercato Centrale (see p88) and enjoy the colourful arrays of fruit and vegetables. Then, head over to the Oltrarno and the Museo "La Specola" (see p119), an unusual zoological museum with a rather gory display of 18th-century anatomical waxworks (parental discretion may be required for young children).

The Boboli Gardens (see pp124–5) makes a great spot for a relaxing break or a run around. Unfortunately, picnics are not allowed here, so head for one of the many eateries near Piazza di Santo Spirito (see p118). Lunch should be followed by a gelato (ice cream) from Café Ricchi (see p272) in the same square.

Afternoon

On a warm day, take the kids for a swim at the outdoor pool at Bellariva (see p293), open Jun–mid-Sep. If cool, a visit to Palazzo Vecchio (see p78) is a good bet; tours of secret passages and other activities (also in English) geared to all ages are organized within the palazzo museum. End the day with a leisurely ride around the centro storico in one of the horse-drawn carriages that stand in Piazza Signoria, before going for a pizza.

MEDIEVAL HISTORY, ART AND CULTURE

- A dramatic hilltown
- Siena's striped Duomo
- Sienese art in the Pinacoteca Nazionale
- An aperitivo in the Piazza del Campo

Morning

Arrive by car early in San Gimignano (see pp212–15), arguably Tuscany's most famous hilltown. Must-see sights here are the 13th-century towers, the frescoes in the Collegiata church, and the art in the Museo Civico. You might like to buy a bottle of the local Vernaccia wine and have a coffee in Piazza della Cisterna before setting off to Siena (see pp216–19).

Head straight for theatrical Piazza del Campo where the energetic can climb the Torre del Mangia, while others can visit the medieval state rooms in the Palazzo Pubblico. Don't miss Lorenzetti's frescoes of the Allegory of Good and Bad Government. Take a break for lunch at the Osteria Le Logge (see p280).

Afternoon

Visit the striped Gothic Duomo (see pp220–21), then pop into the Pinacoteca

Archway view of Siena's Piazza del Campo at dusk

Nazionale (see p219) to see its 12th–15th century Sienese masters. Or you could wander the streets on the lookout for signs, which represent the 17 contrade (or districts), such as ceramic animal plaques and fountains. End the day with an aperitivo at one of the bars on Piazza del Campo.

TUSCAN HILL TOWN TOUR

- Montepulciano and its Vino Nobile wines
- A leisurely lunch in Pienza
- Frescoes in Sant'Anna
- A soak in the thermal pools at Bagno Vignoni

TWO ADULTS allow at least €250

Morning

Drive to Montepulciano (see p277), one of Tuscany's highest hilltop towns and famous for its Vino Nobile wines. Visit the Duomo and Sangallo's Temple of San Biagio just outside the town. About 5 km (3 miles) to the southeast, the tiny medieval village of Monticchiello (see p209), set in an idyllic landscape, is a wonderful place to stop for a coffee break. Its 13th-century church is worth a visit too. Move on to Pienza (see p226), Pope Pius II's ideal Renaissance town, where you will find charming cobbled streets and panoramic ramparts to explore. Buy some local pecorino (sheep's cheese) before lunching at La Pergola (see p279).

Afternoon

From Pienza, the road winds through glorious countryside. Take a detour to the remote monastery of Sant'Anna in Camprena (where part of The English Patient was filmed) with its refectory frescoes by Sodoma (see p226). Once you get to San Quirico d'Orcia (see p225), visit the beautiful 12th-century Collegiata, with three Romanesque doorways carved in local travertine. There is also a pretty 16th-century Italianate garden, the Horti Leonini. Finish the day with a soak in the outdoor 37 °C (98.6 °F) pools at the Hotel Posta Marcucci in the medieval spa village of Bagno Vignoni (see p226). You will find several good restaurants for dinner.

Putting Florence and Tuscany on the Map

Tuscany lies in Central Italy, bordered by the regions of Emilia-Romagna, Marche, Umbria and Lazio. Along with Elba, several islands in the Ligurian Sea also form part of Tuscany. A region of rolling hills, mountains and rugged coastlines, Tuscany covers an area of 22,992 sq km (8,875 sq miles), and has a population of more than 3.5 million. There are international airports at Pisa and Florence. Florence is about 2½ hours by train from Rome (1½ hours on Eurostar) and about 3 hours from Milan.

Florence City Centre

Florence's best sights are encompassed within such a compact area that the city seems to reveal its treasures at every step. The sights described in this book are grouped within four areas, each of which can be easily explored on foot. In the centre is the massive Duomo, providing a historical as well as geographical focus to the city. Santa Croce to the east and San Marco to the north, with Santa Maria Novella to the west and the Palazzo Pitti in Oltrarno, mark the outlying areas.

A PORTRAIT OF TUSCANY

Tuscany is renowned throughout the world for its art, history and beautiful landscape. Here the past merges with the present to a remarkable degree, for its people pride themselves on their heritage. Independent and combative, for centuries they have preserved their surroundings and traditions, in which must lie much of Tuscany's eternal fascination for the outsider.

The people of Tuscany are fiercely proud of their ancestry, which they trace back to the Etruscans. Geneticists have even discovered gene segments that are uniquely Tuscan: there are strong similarities between the faces carved on Etruscan cremation urns (see pp42-3) and those of the people on the streets of modern Tuscany.

Florence and its surroundings were occupied by the Germans during World War II, and memories of the disgrace suffered under Fascism are still strong. As a result, people in this area have a fierce love of democracy and a strong sense of obligation to vote and participate in politics, even at grass-roots levels, through referendums on such issues as whether to ban traffic from the centre of Florence, for example. Florentines will, however, take the law into their own hands, as they did when they fought the police in 1990 to prevent the closure of San Lorenzo market.

The Tuscan love of home has resulted in a strong campanilismo: parochialism defined by the sound of the local church bell (in the campanile or belltower). Social anthropologists see in it a survival of medieval inter-city conflicts. It can be observed at many a Tuscan festival when, beneath the pageantry, there is a serious rivalry between a city's different quarters.

A rare sight today – farming with oxen near Pienza

Even the working day of many Tuscans echoes that of their ancestors centuries ago. For people who work out in the fields, the day begins at sunrise, as early as 4:30am in summer. Farm and vineyard labourers will have completed a day's work by noon, when they retire indoors to eat and rest.

Until the 1950s, most Tuscans were familiar with this pattern of life: the region still relied on a feudal system, mezzadria, whereby peasants working on the land without payment took a share of the crops as their reward. Today, agricultural produce remains an important ingredient in the Tuscan economy, but only 20 per cent of Tuscans now work in agriculture. Many farming families left the land in favour of a stable income and a shorter working day as factory hands. Town dwellers have a much easier way of life, but the old rhythms prevail: the siesta period is still observed, so that almost everything closes for a few hours in the afternoon. Wise travellers soon learn that it pays to follow the same pattern, rising early to join the café throng, before heading out to study ancient frescoes in peace. In the middle of Florence there are several lively early morning markets where you can buy fresh, local produce (see p287). Bargain hunters and food-loving Tuscans frequent them, but by 2pm the stallholders will have packed up.

Churches open at 8am, and, except on Sunday when mass is held, there will be few other people to disturb your thoughts if you stray into one. Today, very few Tuscans go regularly to church and Sunday is spent visiting friends, watching sport or enjoying family lunch. After the burst of activity that marks the beginning of the day, Tuscan towns adopt a more sedate pace. New building is prohibited inside their walls, so that very many people of school or working age travel out, by bus or car, to schools, offices or factories in the suburbs, leaving the old centres to visitors.

The grape harvest in Chianti

Some of the larger towns, particularly Pisa, Lucca, Florence and Siena, have resisted this tide, determined not to become museum cities given over entirely to tourism. They have thriving

The hour for relaxing in Cortona service sectors, testimony to the same Tuscan flair for banking, insurance and accountancy that made the Medici family and the "Merchant of Prato" (see p188) some of the richest people in their time. It is, however, the lucky few who work in such beautiful towns. They practise as lawyers, architects, conservationists or designers and are often graduates of the renowned local universities: Pisa, Siena and Florence. For the great majority of Tuscans, however, the working day is spent in purpose-built suburbs, such as the one linking Prato to the Firenze Nuova (New Florence) suburbs west of the city. The Tuscan economy, however, still remains firmly rooted in craft traditions. Top designers from Milan use the textile factories of Prato and Florence for the execution of their designs. Gold-working is not confined to the Ponte Vecchio workshops in Florence – Arezzo produces jewellery which is sold throughout Europe.

THRIVING EXPORTS

Glass, marble and motorcycles are among Tuscany's most important industrial products, while its olive oil and wine are exported worldwide. This explains why Livorno, Tuscany's port, is the second busiest in Italy, while Pisa's Galileo Galilei airport is rapidly becoming a major air-freight distribution centre.

Individual Tuscan artistry can best be admired in the heart of any Tuscan town during the evening promenade – the passaggiata. One moment the streets are empty, the next they are filled with elegant people strolling and chatting. The skill of fare bella figura ("looking good") is so prized that visitors will be judged by the same standard. It is an opportunity for you to join in the inherently Tuscan aspiration to create a civilized world.

Italian chic, or bella figura

A Tuscan Town Square

Town bell
campanile

The main square or piazza of nearly every Tuscan town is the focus for much of the town's activities. It is here that the townsfolk gather around 6–7pm for the daily passeggiata, the traditional evening stroll, or to participate in local festivals and rallies. In most towns there are certain religious and civic buildings that are usually grouped around the piazza. Many of these buildings, you will notice, have standard features, such as the campanile, the cortile or the loggia, each of which fulfils a specific function. And often you will find that many of these buildings are still in use today, performing the same function for which they were originally built during the 13th–16th centuries.

Wellhead

Water was a valuable resource that was protected by strict laws to prevent pollution.

Cortile

The arcaded courtyard, or cortile, of a palazzo served as an entrance hall shielded from the outside; it also provided a cool retreat.

Marble or hard sandstone paving

A palazzo is any town house of stature. It is usually named after its owner.

There are three floors in most palazzi. Public reception rooms were on the middle floor, the piano nobile.

The ground floor was used for storage and workshops. Today many ground floors are let to businesses, while the owners live above.

Stemmae

Stone-carved coats-of-arms, belonging to citizens who served as councillors and magistrates, are often seen on public buildings.

Baptismal font

The Baptistry, usually octagonal, was a separate building to the west of the church. After baptism, the infant was carried ceremoniously into the church for the first time.

Festival in the Piazza

The prestigious buildings of the main piazza often form an appropriate backdrop to costumed tournaments involving jousting, archery and horsemanship, recalling the medieval arts of war.

Loggia

Many loggias, built to provide shelter from the sun or rain, now harbour colourful street markets.

The Palazzo del Comune

(town hall) often houses the Museo Civico (town museum) and the Pinacoteca (art gallery).

Wide central nave, with narrower side aisles

Loggia or colonnade

The Duomo (from Latin Domus Dei or House of God) is the cathedral, the focal point of the piazza. A smaller parish church is called a pieve.

The campanile rose high so that the town bells could be heard far and wide. The bells were rung to announce public meetings or mass, to sound the curfew, or, when rung furiously (a stormo), to warn of impending danger.

Side Chapel

Wealthy patrons paid for ornate tombs, paintings and frescoes in their own private chapels to commemorate their dead.

Understanding Architecture in Tuscany

Romanesque capital

The survival of so many fine Gothic and Renaissance buildings is part of Tuscany's immense appeal. Whole streets and squares, such as the Piazza dei Priori in Volterra (see p167) and the streets around the Mercato Nuovo in Florence, and even towns such as San Gimignano, have scarcely changed since the 16th century. Simple clues, such as the shape of arches, windows and doorways, reveal the style of the building and when it was built.

Gothic palazzi in Cortona

ROMANESQUE (5TH TO MID-13TH CENTURIES)

The Tuscan Romanesque style developed from late Roman architecture. Early Tuscan churches, such as Sant'Antimo (see pp44–5), have round arches, Roman-style columns and arcades. Profuse surface decoration was introduced in the 12th century, resulting in the jewel-like church façades of Pisa and Lucca.

Marble pattering on stonework

A twisted knot

Interlace and knots are typical motifs.

Capitals are carved with animal and human heads.

Gables often have three tiers of arcading.

The central portal is flanked by smaller side doors.

Pisa's San Paolo a Ripa d'Arno (see p161), begun in 1210, has restrained geometric patterns on the lower façade and exuberant arcades above.

GOTHIC (13TH TO MID-15TH CENTURIES)

Pointed arches are the key feature of Gothic architecture. The style was introduced to Tuscany by French Cistercian monks who built the abbey of San Galgano in 1218 (see p224). Siena then made this style her own, using it for the city's Duomo, palazzi and civic buildings such as Palazzo Pubblico (see pp218–23).

The crockets are shaped like leaves and flowers.

Santa Maria della Spina (1230–1323), with its pointed gables and spiky pinnacles (see p161), is a typical example of Pisan Gothic architecture.

Pinnacles, like miniature spires, bristle from the roofline.

Pointed gables

St Luke, from Orsanmichele

RENAISSANCE (15TH AND 16TH CENTURIES)

Brunelleschi, the father of Renaissance architecture, was inspired by the purity and simplicity of Classical Roman buildings. This style is reflected in his first true Renaissance work, the loggia of the Spedale degli Innocenti in Florence (1419–24) (see p95), with its elegant lines and simple arched bays. The style he created was adopted with enthusiasm by his fellow Florentines, who saw their city as the “new” Rome.

Classical cornices are moulded in Roman style.

String courses define each floor.

BAROQUE (LATE-16TH AND 17TH CENTURIES)

The theatrical Baroque style, much favoured by the popes in Rome, largely passed Tuscany by. Although a few churches in Florence were given new façades in the 17th century, the Florentine version of the Baroque style is very Classical in spirit and not as bold or as exuberant as elsewhere in Italy.

Santo Stefano dei Cavalieri (see p156) has columns and pilasters on its Baroque façade, which give the illusion of depth.

Curved pediments are typical of the Baroque style.

Baroque architects liked to use intricate mouldings.

Understanding Art in Tuscany

Tuscany was the scene of one of the most influential and sustained artistic revolutions in history. Its masterpieces record the transition from the stylized charm of medieval art to the Classical beauty and richness of the High Renaissance.

MEDIEVAL ART

Medieval art served as an aid to prayer and contemplation. The Virgin, patron saint of many Tuscan cities, including Siena, was often depicted as the Queen of Heaven, surrounded by adoring angels and saints.

Gold, symbolizing purity, was used lavishly.

Lack of spatial depth

Unifying flow of drapery

No detailed setting or background

The stylized figures in this detail from Duccio's huge altarpiece for Siena cathedral are painted with great delicacy.

The figures form a triangle, symbolizing the Holy Trinity. The viewer's eye is drawn upwards to the figures of Christ and God the Father at the apex.

The Virgin and St John are depicted as real people, rather than idealized figures.

RENAISSANCE ART

The artistic revolution known as the Renaissance, which spread throughout Europe from the 15th century onwards, had its roots in Tuscany. Inspired by ancient Roman art, sculptors and painters brought about a "rebirth" of Classical ideals.

They were supported by wealthy and cultured patrons, themselves fascinated by the works of such Classical authors as Plato and Cicero. Nudes, landscapes, portraits, and scenes from mythology

The Trinity (c.1427)

Masaccio pioneered perspective in painting, using architectural illusion to create a three-dimensional effect (see p110).

Medieval Artists

MANNERIST ART

Mannerist artists used “hot” colours, elongated forms and deliberately contorted poses, often within complicated, large-scale compositions.

The twisted pose and vivid colours of Michelangelo’s Holy Family (see p81) established the key features of the style. Few artists could match the monumental scale of his work, but Bronzino, Pontormo and Rosso Fiorentino brought new life to traditional biblical subjects by their skillful and dramatic composition.

The Martyrdom of St Lawrence (1569)

Statues of Roman gods reflect a direct debt to Classical art.

Writhing figures create a sense of dramatic tension.

and everyday life became legitimate subjects for art.

Rejecting the stylized art of the medieval era, Renaissance artists studied anatomy in order to portray the human body more realistically, and strove to develop innovations to please their patrons. They learned how to apply the mathematics of linear perspective to their art, to create the illusion of spatial depth. Painters set figures against recognizable landscapes or city backgrounds, and flattered their patrons by including them as onlookers or protagonists of the scene.

La Maddalena (1438), by Donatello

The greatest Renaissance artists also added another dimension, that of psychological realism. It is evident in Donatello’s sculpture La Maddalena, which vividly conveys the former prostitute’s grief and penitence. Even when painting traditional subjects, they often tried to express the complexities of human character and emotion. The religious elements of the Virgin and Child theme gave way, for example, to an exploration of the mother-child relationship, as in the Madonna and Child (c.1455) by Fra Filippo Lippi (see p82).

Pallas, symbolizing wisdom, tames the centaur, representing brute animal impulse.

Pallas and the Centaur Botticelli’s allegory (1485) typifies the Renaissance interest in pagan myth.

■ Renaissance Artists

■ Mannerist Artists

Renaissance Frescoes

Frescoes decorate the walls of churches, public buildings and private palaces throughout Tuscany. Renaissance artists, in particular, favoured the medium of fresco painting for decorating new buildings. The word fresco, meaning “fresh”, refers to the technique of painting on to a thin layer of damp, freshly laid plaster. Pigments are drawn into the plaster by surface tension and the colour becomes fixed as the plaster dries. The pigments react with the lime in the plaster to produce very strong, vivid colours. As the colours do not lie on the surface, restorers are able to remove the superficial soot and grime that have accumulated over the years to reveal the original, embedded colours (see pp56–7).

Chiaroscuro

This is a subtle method of contrasting light and dark for dramatic effect.

Jewel-like Colours

Artists used rare, costly minerals to create bright, striking pigments. The blue of Mary's robe in Piero della Francesca's Madonna del Parto (c.1460) (see p197) is made from lapis lazuli.

Earth colours such as reds and browns came from clay-based paints containing iron.

Use of Sinopia

The outlines of the fresco were drawn on to the plaster undercoat using a red pigment called sinopia. This layer was visible through the final plaster coat, guiding the artist as he painted in the details (see p156).

The Giornata

Once the final plaster coat was applied, artists had to work quickly before it dried. This meant painting a small area of plaster each day (the giornata, or daily portion). Joins between the sections were often concealed in borders, columns and frames.

The bare wall was covered with coarse plaster, called arriccio, made of clay, hair, sand and lime.

The artist either sketched his design on to the arriccio using the pigment sinopia, and then painted directly on to the plaster, or he prepared a charcoal drawing on paper which was copied onto the wall.

The final fresco was painted on to a top coat of fine, lime-based plaster called intonaco.

Workshops

The master artist worked in tandem with apprentices employed in his workshop.

The master concentrated on important features, such as faces and expressive gestures.

Apprentices

While learning their trade, apprentices painted drapery, backgrounds and architectural details in the style of their master.

What to Buy in Tuscany

As a centre for high fashion and quality antiques, Florence is expensive but hard to beat. Bargains also abound, especially in leather goods and shoes. For food lovers there is a wide variety of wines, olive oils and preserves. Away from Florence, small farm estates in Tuscany sell their produce, such as honeys, liqueurs and wines, direct to the public, while many Tuscan towns have their own craft and food specialities. (see also pp284-9).

The Landscape of Tuscany

Tuscany is rich in wildlife, especially flowers and the insects that feed on them, including bees, crickets, cicadas and grasshoppers, whose song is heard during the summer months. For years Tuscan farmers were too poor to afford modern intensive agricultural methods, so the region was, until recently, still farmed by traditional methods. As a result, rural areas have remained relatively unspoiled, a safe haven for many species of flora and fauna – with the exception of the songbird, which has fallen victim to the Tuscan passion for hunting.

The Crete

The clay landscape south of Siena is one of bare hillocks and ravines, denuded of topsoil by heavy rain.

Terracing

The steep hillsides are farmed by cutting terraces and holding the soil in place with stone walls.

Garfagnana Landscape

Much of this region is an unspoiled national park where deer, boar, martens and eagles are protected.

Cypress Trees

The flame-shaped cypress is often planted as a windbreak in fields and along roadsides.

TUSCAN FARMLAND

A typical Tuscan farm will combine olive groves and vineyards with fields of maize and barley to feed the cattle and chickens.

Viticulture

Olives

The olive tree with its silver-backed leaves is widely cultivated. Many farms sell home-produced olive oil.

TUSCAN WILDLIFE

The best time to see the Tuscan countryside is in May and June when all the flowers are in bloom. Autumn rains bring a second burst of flowering later in the year, and then cyclamen carpet the woodland floors. Even winter has its flowers, such as hellebores and snowdrops.

Animals, Birds and Insects

Hummingbird hawk moths hover in front of brightly coloured flowers, feeding with their long tongues.

Swifts perform aerial acrobatics at dusk, flying high above the city rooftops and towers.

The green lizard feeds on grasshoppers and basks on walls in the sunlight.

Wayside Flowers

The blue chicory plant flowers all summer and is used as animal fodder.

Pink, white and red flowering mallows are a valuable food plant for bees.

FLORENCE AND TUSCANY THROUGH THE YEAR

Tuscany is most beautiful in May when meadows and waysides are carpeted with the same bright flowers that Botticelli's Flora blithely scatters in Primavera, his celebration of spring (see p82). Autumn is equally colourful, when the beech and chestnut woods turn a glorious blaze of seasonal red and gold.

The best months for escaping the heat and the crowds are May, September and October. Easter should be avoided, as also July and August, because of the long queues outside major museums. During August, when Tuscans head for the sea, you will find shops, bars and restaurants closed. To see traditional festivities like the Palio in Siena or Arezzo's Joust of the Saracen, you will need to book accommodation a year ahead, but there are many other local festivals to enjoy. For information, enquire at main tourist offices (see p299).

SPRING

Tuscany begins to wake from winter as Easter approaches. The hillsides are vibrant with the soft green of new leaves and the scent of fresh growth. Even in the cities there is a sense of renewal as hanging baskets and window boxes are displayed outside from April onwards, and wisteria and iris bloom in the public gardens.

Instead of winter's heavy game dishes, asparagus, a speciality of the Lucca area, begins to feature on restaurant menus, along with tender young beans, usually served in lemon juice and oil.

Except at Easter time, the streets and main sights are rarely overcrowded, but the weather can be unpredictable and unseasonably wet.

MARCH

Carnevale (four Sundays leading to Lent and Shrove Tuesday), Viareggio (see p38).

Scoppio del Carro, or the Explosion of the Carriage (Easter Sunday), Piazza del Duomo, Florence. An 18th-century gilded cart is pulled to the cathedral doors by white oxen, and a dove-shaped rocket swoops down a wire from above the High Altar inside to ignite fireworks in the cart. Ostensibly a celebration of the Resurrection, the ceremony has roots in pagan fertility rites. Many Tuscans still believe that a successful firework display means a good harvest.

Festa degli Aquiloni, or Kite Festival (first Sunday after Easter), San Miniato (see p163). Kite lovers perform aerial acrobatics on the Prato della Rocca, the grassy common above San Miniato.

APRIL

Sagra Musicale Lucchese, (April-early July) Lucca (see pp178-9). This extensive festival of sacred music is held in the city's numerous Romanesque churches.

Mostra Mercato Internazionale dell'Artigianato, or Exhibition of Crafts (last week), Fortezza da Basso, Florence. An important European exhibition of the work of artists and artisans.

MAY

Maggio Musicale, Florence. This is the city's major arts festival and it now lasts until late June, with concerts by the Orchestra Regionale Toscana, directed by Zubin Mehta, and other international performers. The festival has been extended to include dance (from classical ballet to experimental work) and fringe events.

Festa del Grillo, or the Cricket Festival (first Sunday after Ascension Thursday), Le Cascine, Florence. The huge park to the west of Florence, where Shelley wrote Ode to the West Wind, is the setting for this event, a celebration of the joys of spring. Stallholders used to sell live crickets, which were then released to bring good luck. These days the festival is celebrated with handmade crickets.

Balestro del Girifalco, or Falcon Contest (first Sunday after 20 May), Massa Marittima (see p39).

AVERAGE DAILY HOURS OF SUNSHINE

Sunshine Chart

Tuscany has been praised for its light, which has a clear golden quality most noticeable when the intensely sunny days of high summer begin to shorten. Spring and autumn days are still warm, with plenty of hours of sunshine to enjoy.

SUMMER

From June onwards, Tuscany's festive calendar becomes increasingly crowded. There are with scores of small town festivals, many of them taking place around Midsummer Day, the feast of John the Baptist, on 24 June. These provide an opportunity to sample local food and wine and join in the atmosphere, or to seek out some of the bigger set-piece festivals.

JUNE

Calcio in Costume, or Football in Costume (24 June and two other days in June), Florence (see p38).

Estate Fiesolana, or Fiesole Summer (mid-June to end August), Fiesole (see p132). Festival of music, arts, drama, dance and film. Many events are staged in the amphitheatre.

Regata di San Ranieri (17 June), Pisa (see p156). Boat races in costume and processions of colourfully decorated boats on the river Arno. After dark, its bankside buildings are illuminated by tens of thousands of flaming torches.

Gioco del Ponte or Game of the Bridge (last Sunday in June), Pisa. A ritual battle played out on a bridge (see p38).

JULY

Corsa del Palio (2 July and 16 August), Siena. Tuscany's most famous event (see p222).

Pistoia Blues (early July), Piazza del Duomo, Pistoia (see pp186-7). Famous international festival of blues music, lasting for a week.

Settimana Musicale Senese (dates vary), Siena (see pp218-19). Throughout this "Musical Week", chamber music and classical concerts are performed in splendid settings, such as the Palazzo Chigi-Saraceni.

AUGUST

Festival Pucciniano (late July–all August), Torre del Lago Puccini (see p175). Performances of the composer's operas in an open-air theatre by the lake where he lived.

Rodeo della Rosa (15 August), Alberese. Cowboys of the Maremma (see pp236-7) demonstrate cattle herding.

Cantiere Internazionale d'Arte (late July–early August), Montepulciano (see p227).

Directed by the composer Hans Werner Henze, this is an important festival of new work by leading composers, dramatists and choreographers.

Festa della Bistecca (15 August), Cortona (see pp204-5). The Festival of the Beefsteak – a local speciality.

Il Baccanale (penultimate Saturday), Montepulciano (see p227). Feast of wine, food and song to celebrate the local Vino Nobile (see p268).

Rainfall Chart

Autumn is the wettest time in Tuscany, with heavy downpours which can last for days, especially late in the season. Late summer storms often bring relief from the intense heat. Winter and spring usually have fairly low rainfall.

AUTUMN

Autumn is the season of the vendemmia, the grape harvest. Visitors should watch for public notices of the many sagre, or festivals, that take place throughout the region. These are family-oriented events which typically feature a single local speciality which is in season, such as funghi porcini (porcini mushrooms). The first frosts will occur any time from the end of October, and at this point the great tracts of woodland all over Tuscany begin to turn brilliant shades of red and gold.

Florence. Children from all over the city carry candle-lit paper lanterns to honour the eve of the birth of the Virgin.

Palio della Balestra or Crossbow Festival (second Sunday), Sansepolcro (see pp196-7). Costume parades and flag throwing accompany a crossbow competition between Sansepolcro and the Umbrian town of Gubbio.

Luminara di Santa Croce (13 September), Lucca (see pp178-9). The city's famous relic, the Volto Santo, a wooden statue of Christ, is paraded around by torchlight.

Rassegna del Chianti Classico (second week), Greve in Chianti. The biggest Tuscan celebration of local wines.

Mostra Mercato Internazionale dell'Antiquariato (Sep-Oct, in odd-numbered years), Florence. A major biennial antiques fair.

OCTOBER

Amici della Musica (Oct-Apr), Florence. The "Friends of Music" concert season begins.

AVERAGE MONTHLY TEMPERATURE

Temperature Chart

July is the hottest, driest month, with June and August only marginally less so. These are the least comfortable months for sightseeing. Choose late spring or early autumn for this, when you can also sit outside until late.

NOVEMBER

Festival dei Popoli (Nov–Dec), venues throughout Florence show films in their original language with Italian subtitles. Florence Queer Festival (end Nov–early Dec). Film/arts festival celebrating gay lifestyles.

WINTER

This can be a good time to visit Florence and enjoy the city's museums and churches in tranquillity. It can be bitterly cold, but the skies are blue and the city is often bathed in golden sunlight, making this many photographers' favourite season. All over Tuscany, town squares are filled with the aroma of roasting chestnuts, and in December, the last of the olive crop is being harvested in the southernmost parts.

DECEMBER

Fiaccole di Natale, or Festival of Christmas Torches (Christmas Eve), Abbadia di San Salvatore, near Montalcino (see p224). Carols and torchlight processions in memory of the shepherds from the first Christmas Eve.

JANUARY

Capodanno. New Year's Day is celebrated with gusto all over Tuscany. There are firework displays, and volleys from hunters firing into the air, and from exploding firecrackers: all are part of a ritual to frighten away the ghosts and spirits of the old year and welcome in the new.

Roasting chestnuts, Montalcino

Pitti Immagine Uomo (throughout January), Fortezza da Basso, Florence. At this prestigious fashion show, Italian designers and international couturiers gather to present their spring and summer collections for men. Children's collections (Pitti Bimbo) are sometimes presented in January too.

FEBRUARY

Carnevale (Sundays before Lent, Shrove Tuesday), Viareggio (see p175). A festive event renowned for its parades, competitions and amusing floats, often inspired by topical themes (see p38).

There are many other opportunities to enjoy pre-Lent celebrations, such as the equally splendid carnival festivities that take place in San Gimignano and Arezzo.

Festivals in Tuscany

Many Tuscan festivals celebrate battles and historical events that took place centuries ago; others have their origins in medieval tournaments. Yet they are not merely a pastiche of history, put on for the benefit of tourists. They are living festivals, mounted with an amazing degree of skill and commitment to authenticity and perfection. This can be seen in such details as the embroidery on the costumes worn by the participants and in the exhilarating displays of horsemanship, jousting or archery. Here is a selection of Tuscany's best.

Football in Costume at fever pitch

FLORENCE

Calcio in Costume, or Football in Costume (a festival held over three days in June), is a combination of football and rugby. Each of the four medieval quarters of the city (Santo Spirito, Santa Croce, San Giovanni and Santa Maria Novella) fields a team of 27 men. The games are usually held in Piazza Santa Croce, and always attract a lively crowd. There is fierce rivalry among the teams, and play can be quite violent. The final prize is a live cow. Before the game, the players and other characters in sumptuous 14th-century dress parade through the city.

The final often takes place on 24 June, the feast of John the Baptist, the patron saint of the city. These events are celebrated by a fireworks display, best seen from the north bank of the Arno, between Ponte Vecchio and Ponte alle Grazie, or from Fiesole.

WESTERN TUSCANY

The last Sunday in June is the occasion for the Gioco del Ponte, or Game of the Bridge, in Pisa (see pp156–7). This battle, in Renaissance costume, takes place between the Pisans who live north of the river Arno and those who live south. Arranged into teams, they attempt to push a seven-tonne carriage over the historic Ponte di Mezzo (literally, the Middle Bridge), which divides the city. On the actual day, the river's banks are crowded with thousands of onlookers. This event probably has its roots in pre-Renaissance times, when there was no regular army and all citizens had to be trained and ready for war.

Some of the participants wear suits of antique armour which date from the 15th and 16th centuries, and their shields bear the colours of the city's different districts. This regalia is kept in the Museo Nazionale di San Matteo (see p157) when it is not in use.

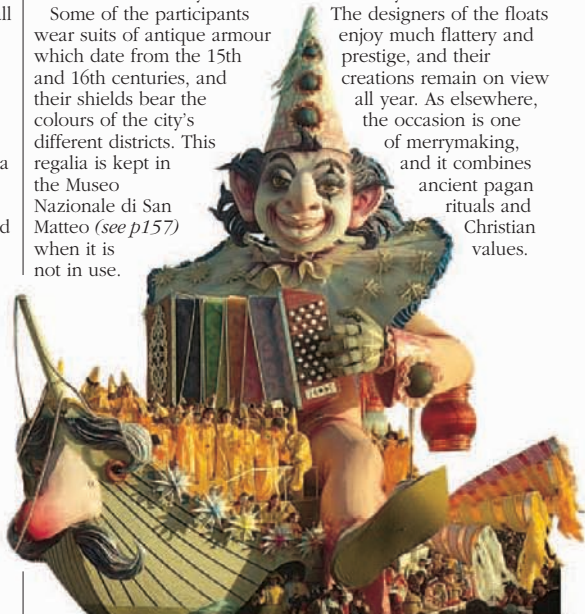

Pisa's Game of the Bridge

NORTHERN TUSCANY

Carnevale (Carnival) in Viareggio (see p175), on Shrove Tuesday and the four Sundays leading to it, is famous for its imaginative floats. These carry elaborate satirical models of politicians and other public figures. After courting controversy in recent years, however, this celebration is now more of a family event, but there is still an abundance of pointed visual jokes that can be appreciated by those in the know.

The designers of the floats enjoy much flattery and prestige, and their creations remain on view all year. As elsewhere, the occasion is one of merrymaking, and it combines ancient pagan rituals and Christian values.

EASTERN TUSCANY

The Piazza Grande in Arezzo (see pp198–9) is the scene of the Giostra del Saracino, or Joust of the Saracen. Held on the first Sunday in September, this tournament dates back to the Crusades in the Middle Ages, when all Christendom dedicated itself to driving the North African Arabs (the Moors) out of Europe.

There are lively and colourful processions to precede the event, in which eight costumed knights charge towards a wooden effigy of the Saracen. The aim is to try to hit the Saracen's shield with lances and then avoid a cat-of-three-tails swinging back and unseating them. Each pair of knights represents one of Arezzo's four rival contrade (districts), and their supporters occupy a side each of Piazza Grande. They are quiet when their own contrada knights are jousting, but make as much noise as is possible to distract the opposition. The winner receives a gold lance.

CENTRAL TUSCANY

The most important festival in this region is Siena's Palio (see p222), but the

Sagra del Tordo, or Festival of the Thrush, is also a great attraction.

It takes place in Montalcino (see pp224–5) on the last Sunday in October. The 14th-century Fortezza (castle) is the setting for an archery contest which is fought in traditional costume by members of the town's four contrade. This is accompanied by considerable consumption of the local red Brunello wine and, much to the horror of many bird-lovers, of charcoal-grilled thrush.

Archery at the Festival of the Thrush in Montalcino

The festival is essentially an excuse for gastronomic over-indulgence, and a celebration of its thriving local economy, which is based on olive oil and wine production. Brunello is widely regarded as one of the finest of Italian wines.

Visitors are welcome to participate, and more conventional specialities, such as porchetta (roast suckling pig), are available for those who prefer not to eat songbirds. Archery competitions are also held in Montalcino during August to mark the beginning of the hunting season.

SOUTHERN TUSCANY

Balestro del Girifalco, or the Falcon Contest, takes place in Massa Marittima (see p234) on the first Sunday after the feast of San Bernardino (20 May) and again on the second Sunday in August. It is preceded by a long procession through the town of people in dazzling Renaissance costume, accompanied by flag-waving and music. The contest itself is a test of ancient battle skills and the teams represent the town's three traditional historic divisions, which are known as terzieri or thirds. Marksmen come forward and try to shoot down a mechanical falcon, tethered on a wire, with their crossbows. Great precision is required to hit the target and the whole contest is imbued with intense terzieri rivalry.

THE HISTORY OF FLORENCE AND TUSCANY

Tuscany is rich in historical monuments. Etruscan walls encircle many of the region's hilltop towns and the streets within are lined with medieval and Renaissance palazzi, town halls testifying to the ideals of democracy and self-government, and churches built on the ruins of ancient pagan temples. The countryside, too, is dotted with castles and fortified villages, symbols of the violence and intercommunal strife that tore Tuscany apart for so many years during the medieval period. Typical of these is the hilltop town of San Gimignano (see pp212–15), with its defensive towers.

Some of the most imposing castles, such as the Fortezza Medicea in Arezzo (see p198), bear the name of the Medici family. Their coat of arms, found all over Tuscany, is a reminder of the role they played in the region's history. They presided over the simultaneous birth of Humanism and the Renaissance and, later, when they were Grand Dukes of Tuscany, patronized eminent scientists and engineers such as Galileo. Tuscany has also played a part in wider events: Napoleon was exiled to Elba, and Florence served briefly as capital of the newly united Italy (1865–71).

Much damage was done to Tuscany's art and monuments by World War II bombing and the floods of 1966. However, major restoration projects undertaken as a result have stimulated research into up-to-date scientific methods. In this way, Tuscany's artistic heritage continues to inspire contemporary life – something it has always done for the many creative people who live and work here and for its endless trail of admiring visitors.

Etruscan and Roman Tuscany

Etruscan earrings worked in gold

The Etruscans migrated to Italy from Asia Minor around 900 BC, attracted to the area they called Etruria (now in Tuscany, Lazio and Umbria) by its mineral wealth. This they exploited to produce weapons, armour, tools and jewellery to trade with Greece. After a fierce war with Rome in 395 BC, the Etruscan civilization was eclipsed by Roman rule. Many aspects of Roman religion can be attributed to the Etruscans, including animal sacrifice and divination – reading the will of the gods in animal entrails or cloud patterns. Everyday Etruscan life and the preoccupation with the afterlife are reflected in detailed carved cremation urns and tombs like those at Volterra (see pp166–7).

Bronze Chimera (4th-century BC)
The wounded chimera (part goat, lion and serpent) is a dramatic example of Etruscan bronze casting.

A covered wagon carved on the urn shows the Etruscans were skilled at carpentry.

Athletic Games

Tomb paintings depicting chariot races, dancing and athletics suggest that the Etruscans had festivals similar to the Olympic Games of the ancient Greeks.

Etruscan priests recorded details of their prayers and religious rites on lead tablets. However, their language has not yet been fully deciphered, and many of their beliefs and traditions are not yet understood.

WHERE TO SEE ANCIENT TUSCANY

The famous bronzes of the Chimera and the Orator are in Florence's Museo Archeologico (see p99). Good museum collections are in Fiesole (pp132-3), Volterra (p166), Chiusi (p228), Cortona (p204) and Grosseto (p238). There are tombs at Vetulonia (p238) and Sovana (p238), and the ruins of an Etruscan town have been excavated near Roselle (p238).

Early Medieval Tuscany

Medieval carved stone lion

The church kept the flame of learning alive during the dark years when Tuscany was under attack from Teutonic tribes such as the Goths and Lombards. Charlemagne, responding to the pope's request for help, drove the Lombards out of Tuscany in the 8th century. He was crowned Holy Roman Emperor as his reward, but this was soon to spark off a long conflict between church and emperor about who should rule Italy.

Mosaic Madonna

A 12th-century mosaic of the Virgin from Cortona (see p204) is typical of the Byzantine-influenced art of the early medieval period.

The capitals are carved with biblical scenes.

Knight on Horseback

This 11th-century carving from Sovana's cathedral symbolizes the conflict between pope and emperor over control of the church.

Chapel of Sant'Agata

Like most early churches in Tuscany, the 12th-century octagonal brick chapel in Pisa, with its pyramid-shaped roof, was built on the grave of a Christian saint martyred by the Romans (see p156).

Early churches have simple wooden joists.

Priests' quarters

Semi-circular chapels with limpet-shell roofs are a typical feature of the period.

WHERE TO SEE EARLY MEDIEVAL TUSCANY

Well-preserved early medieval churches are found throughout Tuscany: in San Piero a Grado (see p161); Barga (p174); Lucca (pp178–9); San Quirico d'Orcia (p225); Massa Marittima (p234); Sovana (p238); San Miniato al Monte in Florence (p130); and in Fiesole (p132).

12th-century Tuscan School Crucifixion

Late Medieval Tuscany

During the 13th century Tuscany grew rich on textile manufacturing and trade. Commercial contact with the Arab world led the Pisan mathematician Fibonacci to introduce Arabic numerals to the West; a new understanding of geometry followed and Tuscan architects began to build ambitious new buildings. At the same time, Tuscan bankers developed the book-keeping principles that still underlie modern accountancy and banking practice. It was also an age of conflict. Cities and factions fought ruthlessly and incessantly to secure wealth and power.

Condottieri (mercenaries) were hired to settle conflicts.

Dante's Inferno

Dante (in blue) was caught in the Guelph-Ghibelline conflict and was exiled from Florence in 1302. He took revenge in his poetry, describing his enemies' torments in Hell.

Petrarch and Boccaccio

Petrarch and Boccaccio (top and bottom left), like Dante, wrote in the Tuscan dialect, not Latin. Petrarch's sonnets and Boccaccio's tales were very popular.

Defensive towers protected the city.

GOOD GOVERNMENT

Ambrogio Lorenzetti's early 14th-century allegorical fresco in Siena's Palazzo Pubblico (see pp218–19) shows thriving shops, fine buildings and dancing citizens, symbolizing the benefits of good government. Another fresco, Bad Government, shows rape, murder, robbery and ruin.

WHERE TO SEE LATE MEDIEVAL TUSCANY

San Gimignano's spectacular towers (see pp212–15) show what most Tuscan cities must have looked like during the Middle Ages. Siena has the best surviving late medieval town hall (pp218–19), and Pisa's Leaning Tower, Duomo and Baptistry (pp158–60) reflect the willingness of architects of this period to experiment with new styles.

Medieval building techniques

Lucignano

Some of Tuscany's best-preserved medieval architecture, including several defensive towers, can be seen in Lucignano (p203).

The Renaissance

Della Robbia roundel from the Cappella de' Pazzi (1430)

Under astute Medici leadership, Florence enjoyed a period of peace and prosperity. Rich bankers and merchants invested in fine palaces to replace their cramped tower houses, and paid for the adornment of churches. The result was an outpouring of art and architecture, remarkable for its break with the Gothic past and its conscious attempt to give “rebirth” to Classical values. The rediscovery of works by ancient philosophers like Cicero and Plato profoundly influenced the intellectual pre-occupations of the day. Their ideas inspired the Humanists, who emphasized the role of knowledge and reason in human affairs.

Terracotta roundels of babies in swaddling bands, added by Andrea della Robbia in 1487, reflect the building's function as an orphanage.

Battle of San Romano (1456)
Florence hired condottieri (mercenaries) to fight its battles. Its citizens were therefore free to concentrate on making the city wealthy. Uccello's striking depiction of the Florentine victory over Siena in 1432 is an early attempt to master perspective.

Textile Market

The thriving Florentine textiles industry allowed the textile guilds and merchants like the dye importer Rucellai (see p104) to become patrons of the arts.

SPEDALE DEGLI INNOCENTI

Classical arches illustrate the Florentine passion for ancient Roman architecture.

The archetypal Renaissance building, Brunelleschi's colonnade (1419–26) for the Spedale degli Innocenti (see p95) is a masterpiece of restrained Classical design. Europe's first orphanage, the Spedale is also a major social monument.

Most of Florence was rebuilt during the Renaissance. High-lights include San Lorenzo (see pp90-91), Masaccio's frescoes in the Brancacci Chapel (pp126-7), many paintings in the Uffizi (pp80-83) and the sculptures at the Bargello (pp68-9).

The Medici of Florence

Medici coat of arms, San Lorenzo

The Medici family held power in Florence almost continuously from 1434 until 1743. Their rule began discreetly enough with Cosimo il Vecchio, son of a self-made man, Giovanni di Bicci. For years, Cosimo and his descendants directed policy with popular support, but without ever being voted into office. Later generations gained titles and power but ruled by force. Two were elected pope and, after the Republic (see pp52–3), the decadent Alessandro took the title Duke of Florence. From him control passed to Cosimo I, who was crowned Grand Duke of Tuscany.

Giovanni di Bicci

An astute merchant banker, he founded the Medici fortune.

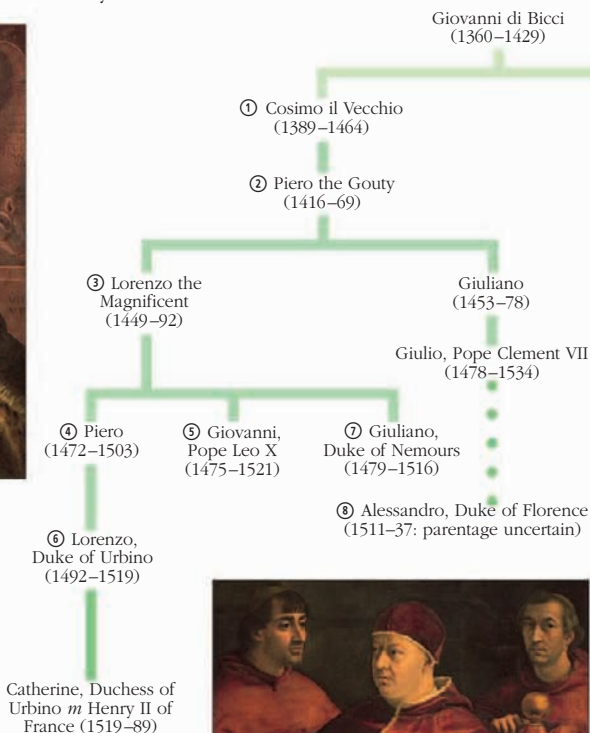

Lorenzo the Magnificent

A poet and statesman, Lorenzo was the model Renaissance man. One of his greatest achievements was to negotiate peace among the cities of northern Italy.

Catherine of France

Catherine married Henri II of France in 1533. She is shown with two of her sons, who both became French kings: Charles IX and Henri III. Yet another son became Francis II of France.

Pope Leo X

Elected pope when only 38, Leo's corrupt plans to fund the rebuilding of St Peter's in Rome triggered a furious reaction that led to the birth of the Protestant movement.

MEDICI PATRONAGE

As one of the most powerful families in Florence, the Medici were responsible for commissioning some of the greatest works of the Renaissance. Many artists flattered their patrons by placing them prominently in the foreground of their paintings. In Botticelli's Adoration of the Magi (1475), the grey-haired king who is pictured kneeling at the feet of the Virgin is Cosimo il Vecchio. The kneeling figure in the white robe is his grandson, Giuliano. The young man holding a sword, on the far left of the painting, is thought to be a rather idealized portrait of Lorenzo the Magnificent, Cosimo's other grandson.

The Florentine Republic

Savonarola

In 1494, when Piero de' Medici abandoned Florence to the invading troops of Charles VIII of France, the city was declared a Republic. Under the leadership of the religious fundamentalist, Girolamo Savonarola, the people were encouraged to believe that God was their only ruler.

After his execution in 1498, the Republic survived 32 years of constant attack. Finally, in 1530, the Medici Pope, Clement VII, and the Holy Roman Emperor, Charles V of Spain, combined forces and returned the city to Medici rule.

THE SIEGE OF FLORENCE (1529-30)

Besieged by 40,000 papal and imperial troops, the citizens of Florence held out for ten months before starvation and disease led to their surrender. Vasari's fresco in the Palazzo Vecchio shows the full extent of the city's defenses and the scale of the enemy assault.

The Grand Duchy

Cosimo I was created Grand Duke of Tuscany in 1570, having forced Tuscany into a state of political unity for the first time. A period of prosperity followed, in spite of the corrupt and debauched nature of Cosimo's heirs. When the Medici line ended in 1737, the Grand Duchy was inherited by the Austrian Dukes of Lorraine. They were removed from power in 1860 during the Risorgimento, when the Italian people joined forces to overthrow their foreign rulers. From 1865–70, Florence was the nation's capital. With the final unification of Italy in 1870, however, the centre of power returned to Rome.

Leopoldo and Family

Leopoldo I, later Emperor Leopold II of Austria, introduced many reforms, including abolition of the death penalty.

Livorno Harbour

Livorno became a free port in 1608: ships from every nation were granted equal docking rights, and the resulting influx of Jewish and Moorish refugees contributed to the city's prosperity.

The Church rejected Galileo's discoveries.

The Old Market

Florence's Old Market was knocked down in 1865, when the city was briefly the Italian capital. In its place is the triumphal arch of the Piazza della Repubblica (see p112).

THE AGE OF SCIENCE

Galileo was one of several brilliant scientists who benefited from Medici patronage during the 17th century, making Tuscany a centre of scientific innovation. His experiments and astronomical observations laid the foundations for modern empirical science, but led to his persecution for contradicting the teachings of the Roman Catholic Church.

WHERE TO SEE GRAND DUCHY TUSCANY

The Uffizi art collection (see pp80–83) was assembled by the Medici at this time, along with the collections in the Palazzo Pitti (pp120–23), the building from which the Grand Dukes ruled Tuscany for over 300 years. The story of Galileo and his contemporaries is told in the Museo di Storia della Scienza in Florence (p74). The Modern Era

The 20th century has seen many threats to Florence's fragile artistic heritage. The city's historic bridges, except for the Ponte Vecchio, were destroyed during World War II, and worse was to come in 1966 from devastating floods. Traffic and pollution have also taken their toll, leading to tough environmental controls aimed at preserving the historic city centre. Fortunately, the city has energetically risen to these challenges. It continues to thrive both on its proud heritage as a tourist destination and as a living, working city with a robust commercial and industrial base.

Traffic Control
In 1988 Florence banned cars from the city centre.

This popular opera by Puccini, Tuscany's greatest composer, often features in the region's music festivals (see p35).

ART RESTORATION

Great pride is taken in Tuscany's artistic heritage, and modern scientific methods are used to analyse frescoes before restoration, such as The Procession of the Magi (see p89). These methods include computer-aided mapping of the pigments and plotting any structural damage.

The dominant building in this part of Florence is the magnificent Duomo, the first place most people will visit when they arrive in the city. Traffic is now banned in the Piazza del Duomo, which makes it easier to appreciate the immensity of this great building. It is, in fact, so large that a comprehensive view is impossible from such close quarters. As you wander the streets to the south you will continually catch glimpses of its multi-coloured marble cladding.

The area's other major church, Santa Croce, containing the tombs and monuments of many great Florentines, sits at the centre of the traditional artisans' quarter. These streets have few prestigious palaces, but there is a lively and attractive sense of community. It is here that you will find characterful neighbourhood shops and restoration workshops where specialists continue to repair the many books and works of art damaged in the 1966 floods (see pp56-7).

Statue on Orsanmichele façade

Much of Florence was rebuilt during the Renaissance, but the eastern part of the city retains a distinctly medieval feel. With its confusing maze of tiny alleyways and hidden lanes, it would still be recognizable to Dante. His house, the Casa di Dante, still stands near the parish church where he first glimpsed his beloved, Beatrice Portinari (see p70).

He would also recognize the Bargello and, of course, the Baptistry. One of the oldest streets is the Borgo degli Albizi. Now lined with Renaissance palaces, it follows the line of the ancient Roman road to Rome.

★ Duomo, Campanile and Baptistry

The vast Duomo holds up to 20,000 people. It is elegantly partnered by Giotto's campanile and the Baptistry, whose doors demonstrate the artistic ideas that led to the Renaissance 1

The Loggia del Bigallo was built for the Misericordia by Alberto Arnolfini in 1358. During the 15th century, abandoned children were displayed here for three days. If, after this time, their parents had not claimed them, they were sent to foster homes.

The carvings on the walls of this Gothic church depict the activities and patron saints of the city's trade guilds, such as the Masons and Carpenters 3

Duomo, Campanile and Baptistry ①

Set in the heart of Florence, Santa Maria del Fiore – the Duomo, or cathedral of Florence – dominates the city with its enormous dome. Its sheer size was typical of Florentine determination to lead in all things, and to this day, no other building stands taller in the city. The Baptistry with its celebrated doors (see p66) is one of Florence's oldest buildings, dating perhaps to the 4th century. In his capacity as city architect, Giotto designed the Campanile in 1334; it was completed in 1359, 22 years after his death.

The Campanile
At 85 m (276 ft), the Campanile is 6 m (20 ft) shorter than the dome. It is clad in white, green and pink Tuscan marble.

★ Baptistry Ceiling

Colourful 13th-century mosaics illustrating the Last Judgment are set above the large octagonal font where many famous Florentines, including Dante, were baptized.

The Neo-Gothic marble façade echoes the style of Giotto's Campanile, but was only added in 1871–87.

Brunelleschi's revolutionary achievement was to build the largest dome of its time without scaffolding. As you climb the 463 steps to the top, you can see how an inner shell provides a platform for the timbers that support the outer shell.

Bricks of varying size were set in a self-supporting herringbone pattern – a technique Brunelleschi copied from the Pantheon in Rome.

The East Doors of the Baptistry

Lorenzo Ghiberti

Lorenzo Ghiberti's celebrated doors were commissioned in 1401 to mark Florence's deliverance from the plague. Ghiberti was chosen after a competition involving seven leading artists, including Donatello and Brunelleschi. Ghiberti's and Brunelleschi's trial panels (see p69) are so different from Florentine Gothic art of the time that they are often regarded as the first products of the Renaissance.

The "Gate of Paradise"

Having spent 21 years on the North Doors, Ghiberti worked on the East Doors from 1424 to 1452. Michelangelo enthusiastically dubbed them the "Gate of Paradise". The original panels are in the Museo dell'Opera del Duomo; those on the Baptistry are copies.

The jagged rocks, symbolizing Abraham's pain, are carefully arranged to emphasize the sacrificial act.

The Museo dell'Opera del Duomo has been extensively remodelled to allow for a series of rooms dedicated to the history of the Duomo. Information about the renovation is available in English and Italian.

From the ticket booth, the main room is reached through open spaces containing Etruscan and Roman relief, carvings and sarcophagi.

The main ground floor room contains statues from the work-shop of Arnolfo di Cambio, which were once placed in the cathedral's niches. Some are by Arnolfo himself, including the Gothic Madonna of the Glass Eyes. Nearby visitors can see Nanni di Banco's St Luke,

Pulley used to build Brunelleschi's dome

Bernardo Ciuffagni's St Matthew and, most striking of all, Donatello's St John. The three were carved between 1408 and 1415. A side room, added during the renovation, contains 14th–15th century religious paintings and a number of reliquaries, one of which includes the finger of San Giovanni.

Michelangelo's Pietà has pride of place on the staircase. The hooded figure of Nicodemus is widely believed to be a self-portrait. That Mary Magdalene is the inferior work of a pupil is strikingly obvious.

The first room on the upper floor is dominated by two choir lofts, dating to the 1430s, by Donatello and Luca della Robbia. Carved in crisp white marble and decorated with coloured glass and mosaic, both depict children playing musical instruments and dancing. But while della Robbia's figures seem innocent, Donatello's look like frenzied participants in some primitive ritual.

Among a number of works by Donatello in this room are his statue of La Maddalena (1455) (see p27) and several Old Testament figures, including the prophet Abakuk (1423–5), affectionately known by Florentines as lo zuccone (marrow-head).

The room to the left contains an exhibition of the tablets which used to decorate the bell tower, some by Andrea Pisano and della Robbia.

Leaving this room, visitors descend to a lower level that houses examples of the tools used by Brunelleschi's workmen, and a copy of di Cambio's original cathedral façade. Visitors then descend to a courtyard, where one finds some of the original panels of doors of the baptistry, as well as the exit.

The name is a corruption of Orto di San Michele, a former monastic garden. Orsanmichele was built in 1337 as a grain market, but was soon turned into a church. The open arcades became windows, and though these are now bricked in, the original Gothic tracery can still be seen. The outside walls have 14 niches, each holding a statue of the patron saint of one of Florence's major Arti (guilds).

The interior has two parallel naves. To the right is an extraordinary 1350s altar by Andrea Orcagna. It is covered in cherubs and carved reliefs and encrusted with coloured marble and glass. Close by is Bernardo Daddi's Virgin and Child (1348), its frame beautifully carved with angels.

The Bargello 6

Built in 1255 as the city's town hall, the Bargello is the oldest seat of government surviving in Florence. In the 16th century it was the residence of the chief of police and a prison: executions took place here until 1786. After extensive renovation, it became one of Italy's first national museums in 1865. The Bargello houses a superb collection of Florentine Renaissance sculpture, with rooms dedicated to the work of Michelangelo, Donatello, Verrocchio, Giambologna and Cellini, as well as a collection of Mannerist bronzes and examples from the decorative arts.

GALLERY GUIDE

To the right of the entrance hall, the Michelangelo Room is presided over by his Bacchus (1497). The courtyard staircase leads up to the Upper Loggia, filled with statues of birds by Giambologna. To the right is the Donatello Room, which contains the panels for the Baptistry doors competition of 1401. The Magdalen Chapel and Islamic Collection are also on the first floor. The Verrocchio Room, the Andrea and Giovanni della Robbia rooms, the Arms and Armour Collection and the Room of the Small Bronzes are on the second floor.

The courtyard was once the place of execution.

★ Bacchus

The Roman god of wine with a small satyr was Michelangelo's first major work (1497). The modelling is Classical, but the unsteady, drunken posture mocks the poise of ancient works.

BARGELLO PRISON

Among the notorious figures executed here was Bernardo Baroncelli. He went to the gallows in 1478 for his part in the failed attempt to assassinate Lorenzo the Magnificent in the Pazzi conspiracy (see p49). Baroncelli's body, hanging from a window in the Bargello as a warning to other anti-Medici conspirators, was sketched by Leonardo da Vinci.

It is uncertain whether the poet Dante Alighieri (1265–1321) was actually born here, but at least the house looks the part. In 1911, the remains of a 13th-century tower house were restored to give the building its rambling appearance.

Just a short stroll north of the house is the parish church of Santa Margherita de' Cerchi, built during the 11th century. It is here that Dante is said to have first caught sight of Beatrice Portinari, whom he idolized in his poetry. The church, which is often used for Baroque chamber music and organ recitals, contains a fine altarpiece by Neri di Bicci (1418–91).

Bust of Dante on the façade of Casa di Dante

The peaceful Chiostro degli Aranci (“cloister of the orange trees”) is a little hard to find. Look for a door to the right of the altar. Sadly, the orange trees that the monks used to cultivate here are no longer present. The two-tier cloister, built by Rossellino in 1435–40, has a well-preserved fresco cycle showing scenes from the life of St Benedict. Dating from the 15th century, it was restored as recently as 1973.

An early fresco by Bronzino (1503–72) can also be seen in the north walkway. Excellent views of the hexagonal campanile, which gets mentioned by Dante in the Paradiso section of The Divine Comedy, can be enjoyed from the cloister.

In the 14th century, a series of readings and lectures devoted to Dante's work were given at the Badia by the poet Boccaccio. In keeping with the spirit of these meetings, the abbey is today often used for talks and concerts.

The abbey, one of Florence's oldest churches, was founded in 978 by Willa, the widow of Count Uberto of Tuscany. Their son, Count Ugo, was buried inside the church in 1001. His splendid tomb was carved by Mino da Fiesole and dates from 1469–81. Mino also carved the altarpiece and, in the right transept, the tomb of Bernardo Giugni, the Florentine statesman, with its fine effigy of Justice.

Filippino Lippi's The Virgin Appearing to St Bernard (1485) also enlivens an otherwise drab and solemn interior. Its remarkable detail, particularly in the landscape, makes it one of the most artistically significant works of the 15th century.

The museum traces the development of the city through drawings, plans and paintings. One of the most fascinating exhibits is the Pianta della Catena, a 19th-century copy of a woodcut made around 1470. The title refers to the chain-like border that surrounds the whole image, which shows Florence at the height of the Renaissance. Some buildings, for instance the Palazzo Pitti, can be seen.

The Palazzo Pitti features again in the delightful sequence of lunettes made by the Flemish artist Giusto Utens in 1599. They show all the Medici villas and gardens, with fascinating vignettes of rural life (see pp121 and 165).

One room is devoted to a scheme devised by Giuseppe Poggi, the city architect involved in remodelling much of central Florence during its brief stint as the capital of Italy in 1865–71. If the scheme had been implemented, large parts of the centre would have been destroyed. The scheme was halted after an international outcry, but not before buildings had been cleared for the new Piazza della Repubblica (see p112) and the 14th-century walls had been torn down.

Michelangelo (whose surname was Buonarroti) lived briefly in this group of three houses which he bought as an investment in 1508. Subsequent generations of his descendants added what they could to a significant collection of his works.

Among these is his earliest known work, the Madonna della Scala, a marble tavoletta, or rectangular relief, carved in 1490–92. There is also a relief from 1492, showing The Battle of the Centaurs, and the design, never used, for the façade of San Lorenzo, shown in a wooden model.

Santa Croce ①

The magnificent Gothic church of Santa Croce (1294) contains the tombs of many famous Florentines, including Michelangelo and Galileo. The spacious, airy interior is enhanced by the radiant frescoes of Giotto and his gifted pupil, Taddeo Gaddi, painted early in the 14th century. The Arnolfo and Brunelleschi Cloisters provide visitors with fine examples of Renaissance architectural precision, and a moment of peace and tranquillity during their tour. The rest of the monastic buildings ranged around the cloister form a museum of religious painting and sculpture.

The façade was re clad with coloured marble in 1863 paid for by an English benefactor, Francis Sloane.

Galileo's Tomb

Condemned by the church in 1633, Galileo was denied a Christian burial until 1737, when this tomb by Giulio Foggini was erected.

Lorenzo Ghiberti

Machiavelli (see p53) was buried here in 1527. His monument, by Innocenzo Spinazzi, was erected in 1787.

The museum's small collection of paintings, sculpture and decorative arts was left to the city by Herbert Percy Horne (1844-1916), the English art historian. It is housed in a splendid example of a Renaissance palazzino (small town house), built in 1489 for the wealthy Alberti family.

The arrangement of rooms, with a working and storage area at ground level and grander apartments above, is typical of many Renaissance houses. The Alberti family, who grew wealthy from the city's thriving cloth trade, had wool-dyeing vats in the basement and drying racks in the courtyard.

Most of the museum's major artifacts, for instance a number of important 17th- and 18th-century drawings, are now housed in the Uffizi. However, the collection still boasts at least one major exhibit: Giotto's 13th-century St Stephen polyptych (an altarpiece with more than three panels). There is also a Madonna and Child attributed to Simone Martini (1283-1344) and Madonna by Bernardo Daddi (c.1312-48).

The kitchen, which was built on the top floor to stop fumes passing through the entire house, now contains Horne's collection of Renaissance pots and cooking utensils.

This small museum is something of a shrine to the Pisan-born scientist Galileo Galilei (1564-1642). Exhibits include his telescopes and the lens he used to discover the largest moons of Jupiter.

The museum also features large-scale reconstructions of his experiments into motion, weight, velocity and acceleration. These are sometimes demonstrated by the attendants.

In memory of Galileo, in 1657 Florence founded the world's first-ever scientific institution, the Accademia del Cimento (Academy for Experimentation). Some of the academy's inventions, such as early thermometers, hygrometers and barometers are on show here. Of equal interest are the huge globes made during the 16th and 17th centuries to illustrate the motion of the planets and stars.

Also look out for Lopo Homem's map of the world, dating to 1554, and the nautical instruments invented by Sir Robert Dudley, the Elizabethan marine engineer. He was employed by the Medici dukes to build the harbour at Livorno from 1607-21 (see p162).

MAPPING THE WORLD

The same preoccupation with space that made Florentine artists such as masters of perspective also made them excellent navigators and mapmakers. Florentine cartographers based their maps on the observations and navigational records of early explorers. That is how America came to be named after the Florentine Amerigo Vespucci rather than Christopher Columbus. When Columbus returned from his transatlantic voyage, King Ferdinand of Spain hired Vespucci, an expert navigator, to check whether Columbus really had discovered a new route to the Indies. Vespucci was the first to realize that Columbus had discovered a new continent and he described his own voyage in a series of letters to Piero de' Medici. As soon as the letters were made public, Florentine cartographers rushed out revised maps of the world based on Vespucci's account. Out of loyalty to a fellow Florentine, they named the New World Amerigo, which was later corrupted to America.

Citizens gathered here when called to a parlamento (a public meeting) by the Palazzo's great bell. The statues, some copies, commemorate major events in the city's history. Palazzo Vecchio 17

The Palazzo Vecchio (“Old Palace”) still fulfils its original role as Florence’s town hall. It was completed in 1322 when a huge bell, used to call citizens to meetings or warn of fire, flood or enemy attack, was hauled to the top of the imposing belflower. The palazzo has retained its medieval appearance, but much of the interior was remodelled for Duke Cosimo I when he moved into the palace in 1540. Leonardo and Michelangelo were asked to redecorate the interior, but it was Vasari who finally undertook the work. His many frescoes (1563–5) glorify Cosimo and his creation of the Grand Duchy of Tuscany.

The Uffizi 18

The Uffizi was built in 1560–80 as a suite of offices (uffici) for Duke Cosimo I's new administration (see p50). The architect, Vasari, used iron reinforcement to create an almost continuous wall of glass on the upper storey. From 1581 Cosimo's heirs used this well-lit space to display the Medici family art treasures, creating what is now the oldest gallery in the world. A major expansion of the exhibition space is underway for 2013.

The Loggia dei Lanzi terrace merits a visit for its unusual views of the Piazza della Signoria (see pp76–7).

Corridor ceilings are frescoed in the "grotesque" style of the 1580s, inspired by Roman grottoes.

The Ognissanti Madonna
Giotto's grasp of spatial depth in this altarpiece (1310) was a milestone in the mastery of perspective.

GALLERY GUIDE

Ancient Greek and Roman sculptures are in the corridor around the inner side of the horseshoe-shaped building. The paintings are hung in a series of rooms off the main corridor, in chronological order, to show the development of Florentine art from Gothic to Renaissance and beyond. Many well-known paintings are in rooms 7–18. Five new rooms opened on the ground floor in 2004 and a major expansion of the gallery, due to be completed in 2013, is underway. Pick up a gallery guide for advice on layout changes during building works. To avoid queues, book your ticket and visiting time in advance using Firenzemusei (see p299).

Exploring the Uffizi's Collection

The Uffizi offers an unrivalled opportunity to see some of the greatest works of the Renaissance. The collection was born from the immense wealth of the Medici family (see pp50–51), who commissioned work from many great Florentine masters. Francesco I housed the family collection at the Uffizi in 1581. His descendants added to it until 1737, when Anna Maria Lodovica, last of the Medici, bequeathed it to the people of Florence.

GOTHIC ART

Following the collection of antiquities in room 1, the gallery's next six rooms are devoted to Tuscan Gothic art from the 12th to 14th centuries.

Giotto (1266–1337) introduced a degree of naturalism that was new in Tuscan art. The angels and saints in his Ognissanti Madonna (1310), in room 2, express a range of human emotions, from awe and reverence to puzzlement. The throne in this painting, and the temple in Lorenzetti's Presentation in the Temple (1342) in room 3, show a concern for three-dimensional depth quite at odds with the flatness of much Gothic art.

Giotto's naturalism extends throughout the works in room 4, devoted to the 14th-century Florentine School. One of the most obvious examples is the Pietà (1360–65), attributed to Giotto. Look at the difference between the characters' expressions, their medieval, rather than Biblical, style of dress and the blood, still fresh on the cross.

EARLY RENAISSANCE

A better understanding of geometry and perspective allowed Renaissance artists to create an illusion of space and depth in their works. Paolo Uccello (1397–1475) was obsessed with perspective; witness his nightmarish The Battle of San Romano (1456) (see p48) in room 7.

Also in this room are two panels by Piero della Francesca (1410–92), depicting the Duke and Duchess of Urbino on one side and representations of their virtues on the other. Painted between 1465 and 1470, these are two of the first Renaissance portraits.

If these works seem oddly experimental, Fra Filippo

Lippi's Madonna and Child with Angels (1455–66), in room 8, is a masterpiece of warmth and humanity. Like so many Renaissance artists, Lippi uses a religious subject to celebrate earthly delights, such as feminine beauty and the Tuscan landscape.

Madonna and Child with Angels (1455–66) by Fra Filippo Lippi

BOTTICELLI

The Botticelli paintings in rooms 10–14 are the highlight of the Uffizi's collection. The brilliant colours and crisp draughtsmanship of, for instance, The Birth of Venus (about 1485) (see p81), are a reminder that Renaissance artists often experimented with new pigments to achieve striking colour effects. The subject of this painting, the Roman goddess Venus, is also significant. By painting Venus instead of the Christian Virgin, Botticelli expressed the fascination with Classical mythology common to many Renaissance artists.

The same is true of his other famous work, Primavera (about 1480). It breaks with the tradition of Christian religious painting by illustrating a pagan rite of spring. Other works to see here include the Adoration of the Magi (about 1475), a thinly disguised Medici family portrait (see p51).

LEONARDO DA VINCI

Detail from The Annunciation (1472–5) by Leonardo da Vinci

Room 15 contains works attributed to the young Leonardo. Still under the influence of his teachers, he was already developing his own masterly style, as in The Annunciation (1472–5) and the unfinished Adoration of the Magi (1481).

THE TRIBUNE

The octagonal tribune, with its mother-of-pearl ceiling, was designed in 1584 by Buontalenti so that Francesco I could display all his favourite works from the Medici collection in one room.

Notable paintings include Bronzino's portrait (1545) of Eleonora di Toledo with her son, Giovanni (see p51), and the same artist's portrait of Bia, Cosimo I's illegitimate daughter. It was painted just before her early death in 1542. The Medici Venus, probably dating to the 1st century BC, is a Roman copy of the Greek original by Praxiteles. A small room off the Tribune contains a copy of the Hellenistic sculpture, The Hermaphrodite.

NON-FLORENTINE ART

The works in rooms 19 to 23 show how rapidly the artistic ideas and techniques of the Renaissance spread beyond Florence. Umbrian artists like Perugino (1446–1523) and Northern European painters such as Dürer (1471–1528) are well represented.

THE ARNO CORRIDOR

The corridor overlooking the Arno, which links the east and west wings of the Uffizi, offers fine views of the hills to the south of Florence.

The ancient Roman statues displayed here were mainly collected by the Medici during the 15th century. Their anatomical precision and faithful portraiture were much admired and copied by Renaissance artists, who saw themselves as giving rebirth to Classical perfection in art.

The Roman statues were equally popular during the 17th and 18th centuries with visitors on their way to Rome on the Grand Tour (see p55). The Renaissance works, which attract visitors today, were largely ignored until John Ruskin, the art historian, wrote about them in the 1840s.

HIGH RENAISSANCE AND MANNERISM

Michelangelo's The Holy Family (1506–8), in room 25, is striking for its vibrant colours and the unusually twisted pose of the Virgin (see p81). This painting proved to be enormously influential with the next generation of Tuscan artists, notably Bronzino (1503–72), Pontorno (1494–1556) and Parmigianino (1503–40). The latter's Madonna of the Long Neck (about 1534) in room 29, with its contorted anatomy and bright, unnatural colours, is a remarkable example of what came to be known as the Mannerist style.

Two other masterpieces of the High Renaissance are located nearby. Raphael's tender Madonna of the Goldfinch (1506), in room 26, still shows signs of earthquake damage dating to 1547. Titian's The Venus of Urbino (1538), said to be one of the most beautiful nudes ever painted, is in room 28.

Madonna of the Goldfinch (1506) by Raphael

LATER PAINTINGS

Works by Rubens (1577–1640) and Van Dyck (1599–1641) are in rooms 41 and 42 (sometimes closed), while Rembrandt (1606–69) can be found in room 44. New rooms on the ground floor hold paintings by Caravaggio (1573–1610) and his school, as well as by Guido Reni (1577–1642).

CITY CENTRE NORTH

This area of Florence is stamped with the character of Cosimo il Vecchio. The man who founded the great Medici dynasty maintained his position of power by astute management of the city's financial affairs, as opposed to resorting to threats and violence. Cosimo was a highly educated and sophisticated man with a passion for building, and he wanted the churches, palazzi and libraries that he built to last a thousand years, like the buildings of ancient Rome. To this end, he commissioned some of the greatest architects and artists of the time to build the churches of San Lorenzo and San Marco as well as the Medici's first home, the Palazzo Medici Riccardi. He is regarded as one of the great innovators of the Renaissance in Florence. Even after the Medici family had moved across the river Arno to the Palazzo Pitti in 1550, the Grand Dukes made their final journey back to the north of the city to be buried in the extravagant Cappelle Medicee in San Lorenzo. For the tombs in the New Sacristy, Michelangelo contributed his magnificent allegorical sculptures, Day and Night, and Dawn and Dusk.

This area is stamped with the character of Cosimo il Vecchio, founder of the Medici dynasty, who commissioned San Lorenzo and the Palazzo Medici Riccardi. Around San Lorenzo, a huge general market fills the streets, its colourful awnings almost obscuring the various monuments. The market is a reminder that Florence has always been a city of merchants. Many of the products on sale – leather goods and silk, wool and cashmere garments – are very good value especially if, like the Florentines, you are prepared to bargain.

Built in 1874, the central market is packed with fish, meat and cheese stalls downstairs, while fruit and vegetables are sold upstairs beneath the glass and cast-iron roof ①

Palazzo Riccardi-Manelli, begun in 1557, stands on the site of the house where Giotto was born in 1266.

The Cappelle Medicee are situated in San Lorenzo, but are reached from a separate entrance in Piazza di Madonna degli Aldobrandini. Michelangelo designed the New Sacristy and two Medici tombs. Some of his pencil sketches survive on the walls inside.

Cheap cafés and cooked meat stalls abound in the vicinity of the market. They sell traditional Italian take-away foods, such as tripe and roast suckling pig, chicken and rabbit.

It was carved by Baccio Bandinelli in 1540, and is almost hidden from view among the market stalls stretching all the way up the side of San Lorenzo church and into the streets leading off the piazza. The stalls closest to the church cater mostly for tourists, selling leather goods, T-shirts and souvenirs. In the streets around the market, everything from lentils to bargain-priced clothes is sold. The neighbouring shops have become an integral part of the market, selling cheeses, hams, home-baked bread, pastries, fabrics and table linen.

Emilio Pucci's boutique can be found at Via de' Tornabuoni 22r. In the past, haute couture clients were fitted out in palatial rooms above the showroom. Pucci is most famous for smart but casual clothes, and designed the stylish blue uniforms worn by Florentine traffic police, the vigili urbani (see p301).

Home of the Medici for 100 years from 1444, the palazzo was later acquired by the Riccardi family and now houses government offices. It was built to an austere design by Michelozzo for Cosimo il Vecchio, who rejected Brunelleschi's original plans as being too flamboyant – Cosimo did not want to flaunt his wealth. The windows on either side of the entrance were added in 1517 and designed by Michelangelo.

Through the main door, the courtyard walls are covered in ancient Roman masonry fragments. The roundels above the arcade show scenes copied from antique intaglios now on display in the Museo degli Argenti (see p123). Donatello's statue of David (now in the Bargello, see pp68–9) used to be here, but today the place of honour is given to Bandinelli's marble statue of Orpheus.

Only a few rooms in the palazzo are open to the public. In the Cappella dei Magi is a colourful fresco of The Procession of the Magi painted in 1459–60 by Benozzo Gozzoli. It depicts several members of the Medici dynasty (see pp48–9). The Sala di Luca Giordano is named after the Neapolitan artist who painted its walls with The

Giardino dei Semplici

The word "Semplici" refers to the raw ingredients, "simples", used by medieval apothecaries in preparing medicine – thus the Giardino dei Semplici was where medicinal herbs were grown and studied. It was set up in 1545 by Niccolò Tribolo for Cosimo I in the area between Via Micheli, Via Giorgio la Pira and Via Gino Capponi. The garden retains its original layout but now the collection includes tropical plants as well as flora native to Tuscany.

Around the garden are small specialist museums: a geology collection includes fossils; the mineralogy section shows the geological structure of Elba, whose ores attracted bronze traders in the 10th century BC. The botanical museum has specimens of rare plants.

San Lorenzo ②

San Lorenzo was the parish church of the Medici family, and they lavished their wealth on its adornment. Brunelleschi rebuilt the church in Renaissance Classical style in 1419, although the façade was never completed. In 1520 Michelangelo began work on the Medici tombs and designed the Biblioteca Mediceo-Laurenziana in 1524 to house the manuscripts collected by the Medici. In both the New Sacristy and the Cappella dei Principi, extensive scaffolding has been erected (for an indefinite period) to protect visitors from falling marble.

★ Cappella dei Principi

The marble decoration of the Medici mausoleum, begun in 1604 by Matteo Nigetti, was not completed until 1962.

★ Michelangelo's Staircase

The Mannerist pietra serena sandstone staircase to the Biblioteca is one of Michelangelo's most innovative designs. It was built by Ammannati in 1559.

Michelangelo designed the desks and ceiling of the Biblioteca, which is entered from Manetti's graceful, tiered cloister, built in 1462.

The Martyrdom of St Lawrence

Bronzino's huge Mannerist fresco of 1569 is a masterly study of the human form in various contorted poses (see p27).

The huge dome by Buontalenti echoes that of Brunelleschi's Duomo (see pp64-5).

The Old Sacristy was designed by Brunelleschi (1420-29) and painted by Donatello.

The formal cloister garden is planted with clipped box hedges, pomegranate and orange trees.

★ Medici Tombs

Michelangelo's monumental funerary figures, symbolizing Night, Day, Dawn and Dusk, are among his greatest works.

Six Grand Dukes are buried in the Cappella dei Principi.

Donatello's Pulpits

Donatello was 74 when he began work on the bronze pulpits in the nave in 1460; they depict Christ's Passion and Resurrection.

A simple stone slab marks the unostentatious grave of Cosimo il Vecchio (1389–1464), founder of the Medici dynasty.

St Joseph and Christ in the Workshop

Pietro Annigoni (1910–88) is one of the few modern artists whose work is seen in Florence.

Michelangelo submitted several designs for the façade of San Lorenzo, but it remains unfinished.

The Academy of Fine Arts in Florence was founded in 1563 and was the first school in Europe set up to teach the techniques of drawing, painting and sculpture. The art collection displayed in the gallery was formed in 1784 with the aim of providing the students of the academy with material to study and copy.

Since 1873, many of Michelangelo's most important works have been in the Accademia. Perhaps

Madonna del Mare (c.1470)
 by Sandro Botticelli

the most famous of all dominates the collection: Michelangelo's David (1504). This colossal Classical statue (5.2 m/17 ft) depicts the biblical hero who killed the giant Goliath. It was commissioned by the city of Florence and positioned in front of the Palazzo Vecchio. This established Michelangelo, then aged 29, as the foremost sculptor of his time. In 1873 it was moved to the Accademia, to protect it from the weather and pollution. One copy of David is now to be found in its original position in Piazza della Signoria (see pp 76–7) and a second stands in the middle of Piazzale Michelangelo (see p 131).

Michelangelo's other masterpieces include a statue of St Matthew finished in 1508, and the Quattro Prigionieri (the four prisoners) which were sculpted between 1521 and 1523 and intended to adorn the tomb of Pope Julius II. Presented to the Medici in 1564 by Michelangelo's cousin, the muscular figures struggling to free themselves from the stone are among the most dramatic of his works. The statues were moved to the Grotta Grande in the Boboli Gardens in 1585, where casts of the originals can now be seen (see pp 124–5).

The gallery contains an important collection of paintings by 15th- and 16th-century local artists: contemporaries of Michelangelo such as Fra Bartolomeo, Filippino Lippi, Bronzino and Ridolfo del Ghirlandaio. There are many major works including the Madonna del Mare (Madonna of the Sea), attributed to Botticelli (1445–1510), and Venus and Cupid by Jacopo Pontormo (1494–1556), based upon a preparatory drawing by Michelangelo. Also on display is an elaborately painted wooden chest, the Cassone Adimari, by Scheggia, Masaccio's step-brother. Dating from around 1440, it was originally used as part of a bride's trousseau, and is covered with details of Florentine daily life, clothing and architecture. The bridal party are pictured standing in front of the Baptistery.

David by Michelangelo

Pacino di Bonaguida's Tree of Life (1310) is a prominent painting among the collections of Byzantine and late 13th- and 14th-century religious art, much of which is stylized and heavily embossed with gold.

The Salone della Toscana (Tuscany Room) is full of 19th-century sculpture and paintings by members of the Accademia, and a series of original plaster models by the sculptor Lorenzo Bartolini. Born in 1777, he became professor at the Accademia in 1839, a post he held until his death in 1850. His work includes busts of major figures such as the poet Lord Byron and the composer Franz Liszt.

Situated in the former monastery of San Niccolò, the opificio (factory) is a national institute specializing in teaching the Florentine craft of producing inlaid pictures using marble and semi-precious stones. This tradition has flourished since the end of the 16th century, when it was funded through the patronage of the Medici Grand Dukes, who decorated their mausoleum with pietre dure.

There is a museum in the same building displaying 19th-century workbenches, tools, vases and portraits showing pietre dure work. Several table tops decorated with pietre dure are on display: one inlaid with a harp and garlands by Zocchi, made in 1849, another with flowers and birds, designed by Niccolò Betti in 1855. A stockpile of exquisite marbles and other semi-precious stones dates back to Medici times.

This “hospital” is named after Herod's biblical Massacre of the Innocents following the birth of Jesus. It opened in 1444 as the first orphanage in Europe, and part of the building is still used for this purpose. UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Fund, also has offices here.

Brunelleschi's arcaded loggia (see pp 48–9) is decorated with glazed terracotta roundels, added by Andrea della Robbia around 1487, showing babies wrapped in swaddling bands. At the left-hand end of the portico is the rota, a rotating stone cylinder on which mothers could place their unwanted children anonymously and ring the orphanage bell. The stone was then turned around and the child was taken in.

Within the building there are two elegant cloisters built to Brunelleschi's designs. The larger Chostro degli Uomini (Men's Cloister), built between 1422 and 1445, is decorated with sgraffito designs of cherubs and roosters scratched into the wet plaster. The smaller Women's Cloister (1438) leads to a gallery which has several paintings donated by children from the orphanage who became successful in later life. Among these is the Adoration of the Magi (1488) painted by Domenico del Ghirlandaio, showing the massacre in the background.

San Marco 7

Dominican friar in grey habit

The convent of San Marco was founded in the 13th century and enlarged in 1437 when Dominican monks from nearby Fiesole moved here at the invitation of Cosimo il Vecchio. He paid a considerable sum to have the convent rebuilt by his favourite architect, Michelozzo, whose simple cloisters and cells are the setting for a remarkable series of devotional frescoes (c.1438–45) by Fra Angelico.

The Mocking of Christ
Fra Angelico's beautiful allegorical fresco (c.1440) shows Jesus blindfolded and being struck by a Roman guard.

Cells 12 to 15 contain relics of the religious fanatic Savonarola, made prior of San Marco in 1491 (see pp52–3).

An ancient cedar stands in Michelozzo's Sant'Antonino cloister.

The Deposition (1435–40)
This poignant scene of the dead Christ, and other works by Fra Angelico and his School, are displayed in the former Pilgrims' Hospice.

For hotels and restaurants in this area see pp251–52 and p271

Cells 38 and 39 were reserved for Cosimo il Vecchio when he retreated to the convent to find spiritual sustenance and peace.

Map 2 D4.

The delicate nine-bay arcade on the eastern side of this elegant square was designed by Brunelleschi in 1419 and forms the façade to the Spedale degli Innocenti (see p48). Brunelleschi's round arches gave rise to the Classical style widely copied by Renaissance architects. In the centre of the square is an equestrian statue of Duke Ferdinando I, started by Giambologna towards the end of his career. It was finished in 1608 by his assistant, Pietro Tacca, who also designed the two stylized Mannerist bronze fountains in the square.

A fair is held annually in the piazza on the feast of the Annunciation, 25 March, when homemade sweet biscuits called brigidini are sold from the stalls.

The Church of the Holy Annunciation was founded by the Servite order in 1250 and later rebuilt by Michelozzo between 1444 and 1481. There is a series of early 16th-century frescoes in the atrium by Mannerist artists Rosso Fiorentino, Andrea del Sarto and Jacopo Pontormo, but many of these frescoes have suffered from damp and are fading. The most celebrated are The Journey of the Magi (1511) and The Birth of the Virgin (1514) by del Sarto.

The interior is dark and heavily decorated, with a frescoed ceiling completed by Pietro Giambelli in 1669.

The church also boasts one of the most revered shrines in Florence, a painting of the Virgin Mary begun in 1252 by a monk. Devout Florentines believe it was finished by an angel, and many newly wed couples traditionally come here after their wedding ceremony to present a bouquet of flowers to the Virgin and pray for a long and fruitful marriage. Nine chapels radiate from the sanctuary. The central one was reconstructed by Giambologna to use as his tomb, and contains bronze reliefs and a crucifix sculpted by him.

Through the door in the north transept of the church is the Chiostro dei Morti (Cloister of the Dead), so called because it was originally used as a burial ground and is packed with memorial stones. The fresco above the entrance porch is by Andrea del Sarto. Painted in 1525, it shows the Holy Family resting on their flight to Egypt and is usually known as La Madonna del Sacco, since Joseph is depicted leaning on a sack.

The Cappella di San Luca off the cloister has been owned by the Accademia delle Arte del Disegno since 1565 and a special service dedicated to artists is held here every year on St Luke's day (which falls on 18 October). Benvenuto Cellini is among the artists buried in the vault below.

The Archaeological Museum is in a palazzo built by Giulio Parigi for the Princess Maria Maddalena de' Medici in 1620. It now exhibits outstanding collections of Etruscan, Greek, Roman and ancient Egyptian artifacts.

A section on the second floor is dedicated to Greek vases, with a room given over to the François Vase, found in an Etruscan tomb at Ponte Rotella near Chiusi (see p228). Painted and signed in 570 BC, it is decorated with six rows of black and red figures depicting scenes from Greek mythology. The Etruscan collection was very badly damaged by the 1966 floods in Florence (see p57) and restoration of some pieces is still ongoing.

In addition to the splendid series of bronze Etruscan statues, on the first floor of the museum there are two famous bronzes. The Chimera (see p42), sculpted in the 4th century BC, is a mythical lion with a goat's head imposed on its body and a serpent for a tail, shown here covering in terror. It was ploughed up in a field near Arezzo in 1553 and presented to Cosimo I de' Medici by Giorgio Vasari, the artist, author and critic. The Arringatore (Orator) was found c.1566 near Lake Trasimeno in central Italy and is inscribed with the name of an Etruscan aristocrat, Aulus Metullus. The sculpture dates from the 1st century BC, and the figure, splendidly dressed in a Roman toga, appears to be addressing his audience.

Part of the Egyptian collection was acquired during a joint French and Tuscan expedition in 1829. It is especially rich in wooden, cloth and bone artifacts, which were well preserved in the dry atmosphere of the desert tombs in which they were found. They include a near-complete chariot of bone and wood found in a tomb near Thebes (dating to c.15th century BC), along with textiles, hats, ropes, furniture, purses and baskets.

This former convent has been restored following the floods of 1966. Originally run by the Cistercian order, it was taken over by Carmelites in 1628, and Augustinian monks have lived here since 1926. The chapterhouse, which is entered from the crypt, contains the famous Crucifixion and Saints fresco painted in 1493–6 by Perugino (his real name was Pietro Vannucci), who was one of the founders of the Umbrian School of artists. This beautiful and well-preserved fresco is regarded as a masterpiece, bearing all Perugino's trademarks, most notably the background, which is a detailed landscape of wooded hills and winding streams painted in soft blues and greens. The main chapel, decorated with coloured marble by Ciro Ferri (1675), is one of the best examples of the High Baroque style in a Florentine church. In 1492 Giuliano da Sangallo designed the church's unusual and striking portico, with its square-topped, Ionic-style arcades.

Interior of the Tempio Israelitico

The green copper-covered dome of Florence's main synagogue stands out on the horizon as you look down on the city from the surrounding hills. As elsewhere in Europe, Jews in Florence were alternately welcomed and persecuted over the years. In the early 17th century they flocked to Livorno and then to Florence when it was freed from its strong political ties with Spain by Grand Duke Ferdinando I (1549–1609).

In the Inquisition, Grand Duke Cosimo III (1642–1723) passed laws forbidding Christians to work for Jewish families and businesses. In the 1860s the Jewish ghetto was cleared to make way for the Piazza della Repubblica (see p112). The synagogue was built by Marco Treves in 1874–82 in Spanish-Moorish style. It has a museum of ritual objects dating to the 17th century.

CITY CENTRE WEST

At one end of this part of Florence is the main railway station – a rare example of modern architecture in the city centre. At the other end, a magnet for visitors and Florentines alike, is the Ponte Vecchio, the city's oldest bridge. It is lined with jewellers' shops, here since 1593, and presents a scene little changed since.

Between these two focal points there is something to interest most people, from the frescoes of Santa Maria Novella and Santa Trinità to the luxurious 14th-century interiors of the Palazzo Davanzati and the awe-inspiring scale of Palazzo Strozzi.

Detail from Strozzi Chapel in Santa Maria Novella

Nearby is Piazza della Repubblica, originally laid out as part of the grandiose plans to remodel Florence when it was briefly the nation's capital. Most locals may consider it an eyesore, but the cafés here have always been very popular. This is also the part of Florence in which to shop, from the leather goods, silks and woollens of the Mercato Nuovo to the elegant showrooms of the top couturiers in Via della Vigna Nuova and Via de' Tornabuoni. In the smaller streets off these, local artisans continue Florence's proud tradition of craftsmanship, from stonemasonry to restoration work.

Street-by-Street: Around Piazza della Repubblica

Underlying the street plan of modern Florence is the far older pattern of the ancient Roman city founded on the banks of the Arno. Nowhere is this more evident than in the rectilinear grid of narrow streets in the western half of the city centre. Here the streets lead north from the river Arno to the Piazza della Repubblica, once the site of the forum, the main square of the ancient Roman city. It later became the city's main food market (see p54) until the city authorities decided to tidy it up in the 1860s, building the triumphal arch that now stands in today's café-filled square.

The former church of San Pancrazio has been turned into a museum devoted to the work of Italy's best known abstract artist, Marino Marini (1901–80). Marini was born in Pistoia, where more of his work can be seen in the Palazzo del Comune and in the Centro Marino Marini (see p186). Marini studied art in Florence before moving on to teaching in Monza and at the prestigious Brera Academy in Milan. He sought to reinterpret Etruscan and medieval art forms and is noted for rugged and elemental bronzes. Many of these are on the theme of horse and rider, expressing a range of moods and experiences, from sombre weariness to joyous eroticism.

the 9th century, though its most attractive features are from the Renaissance period, including a graceful Classical façade and porch (1461–7)

by Leon Battista Alberti.

San Pancrazio was the parish church of the wealthy merchant Giovanni Rucellai. Inside, in the Cappella di San Sepolcro, built by Alberti in 1467, is Rucellai's tomb, which is modelled on the Holy Sepulchre in Jerusalem (the tomb of Christ).

Palazzo Rucellai ②

Built in 1446–51, this is one of the most ornate Renaissance palaces in the city. It was commissioned by Giovanni Rucellai, whose wealth derived from the family business, the import of a rare and costly red dye made from a lichen found only on Majorca. The dye was called oricello, from which the name Rucellai is derived.

Giovanni commissioned several buildings from the architect Leon Battista Alberti, who went on to write an influential architectural treatise called De Re Aedificatoria (Concerning Architecture) in 1452. Alberti designed the Palazzo Rucellai almost as a textbook illustration of the major Classical orders. In ascending order of complexity, the pilaster strips on the ground floor are Doric, those above are Ionic and those on the top floor are Corinthian. The construction of the palace combined eight medieval houses into one structure.

Two symbols are carved into the entablature: the Rucellai's billowing sails of Fortune and the ring symbol of the Medici family. The ring is a reminder that Bernardo Rucellai formed an alliance with the Medici in the 1460s by marrying Lorenzo de' Medici's sister, Lucrezia. The Loggia del Rucellai, opposite the palace, was most likely built to commemorate the marriage. The Loggia is now a shop, but it is still possible to see the architrave.

Today the Palazzo remains the property of the Rucellai family. It is located on a prominent shopping street and is within easy walking distance of several main sights and the Stazione di Santa Maria Novella. Part of the building is used as an educational center, the Institute at Palazzo Rucellai, which provides a liberal arts, study abroad programme for students of North American colleges. On site are fully-equipped classrooms, a library and a Fine art studio for classes and student exhibitions.

THE BIGGEST PALAZZO IN FLORENCE

The Strozzi family were exiled from Florence in 1434 for their opposition to the Medici, but in 1466 the banker Filippo Strozzi, having built up a fortune in Naples, returned to the city, determined to outdo his great rivals. He became a man obsessed. For years he bought up and demolished other palaces around his home. At last, he acquired enough land to achieve his ambition: to build the biggest palace ever seen in

Filippo Strozzi (1428–91)

Florence. Having spent so much money to get this far, nothing was left to chance. Astrologers were brought in to choose the most favourable day on which to lay the foundation stone, and the walls of the monumental palace began to rise in 1489. Two years later Filippo Strozzi was dead, and though his heirs struggled on with the building, the cost of pursuing Filippo's grandiose vision finally left them penniless and bankrupt.

The Strozzi Palace is awesome because of its sheer size: 15 buildings were demolished to make way for it, and although it is only three storeys high, each floor is as tall as a normal palazzo. The palace was commissioned by the wealthy banker Filippo Strozzi, but he died in 1491, only two years after the foundation stone was laid.

The building was not completed until 1536, and three major architects had a hand in its design – Giuliano da Sangallo, Benedetto da Maiano and Simone del Pollaiuolo (also known as Cronaca). The exterior, built of huge rusticated masonry blocks, remains unspoiled. Look out for the original Renaissance torch-holders, lamps and rings for tethering horses, which adorn the corners and façades.

The elegance of the courtyard itself has been destroyed by a huge iron fire escape, constructed when the building was converted to a major exhibition venue. In recent years, it has hosted world-class exhibitions of art and antiquities. During major exhibitions, visitors can also access "La Strozziina" free of charge. This is a vaulted gallery space at basement level with changing displays. When there are no exhibitions, visitors may access only the central courtyard.

The palace also houses various learned institutes and an excellent library, the Gabinetto Vieusseux, named after the 19th-century Swiss scholar Gian Pietro Vieusseux. He founded a scientific and literary association in 1818, which was attended by, among others, the French author Stendhal.

Ponte Vecchio 9

The Ponte Vecchio, or Old Bridge – indeed, the oldest bridge in Florence – was built in 1345. It was the only bridge in the city to escape being blown up during World War II. There have always been workshops on the bridge, but the butchers, tanners and blacksmiths who were here originally (and who used the river as a convenient rubbish tip) were evicted by Duke Ferdinando I in 1593 because of the noise and stench they created. The workshops were rebuilt and let to the more decorous goldsmiths, and the shops lining and overhanging the bridge continue to specialize in new and antique jewellery to this day.

Medieval Workshops

Some of the oldest workshops have rear extensions overhanging the river, supported by timber brackets called sporti.

Private Corridor

The aerial corridor built by Vasari along the eastern side of the bridge is hung with the self-portraits of many great artists, including Rembrandt, Rubens and Hogarth.

The three-arched medieval bridge rests on two stout piers with boat-shaped cutwaters.

Bust of Cellini

A bust of Benvenuto Cellini (1500–71), the most famous of all Florentine goldsmiths, was placed in the middle of the bridge in 1900.

VASARI'S CORRIDOR

The Corridoio Vasariano was built in 1565 by Giorgio Vasari and links the Palazzo Vecchio to the Palazzo Pitti, via the Uffizi. This private elevated walkway, also known as Percorso del Principe ("Prince's Route"), allowed members of the Medici family to move between their residences without having to step into the street below and mix with the crowds. The Corridor is occasionally open by guided tour only; tickets must be booked in advance.

Noble Palazzi line this busy square. To the south is the Palazzo Spini-Feroni, originally built in 1290 but much rebuilt in the 19th century; today the ground floor houses the famous boutique of Salvatore Ferragamo (see p284), specializing in shoes and leather goods. To the north, on the corner with Via delle Terme, is the Palazzo Bartolini-Salimbeni. Built during 1520–29, it is one of the city's best examples of High Renaissance architecture. In between the two palazzi is a column of oriental granite originally from the Baths of Caracalla in Rome and given to Cosimo I by Pope Pius IV in 1560. The figure of Justice on top was made in 1581.

Just south of the square is the Ponte Santa Trinità, considered the most beautiful bridge in Florence. It affords fine views of the surrounding hills and especially of the Ponte Vecchio (see pp106–7). It was originally built in wood in 1252, and then rebuilt by Ammannati in 1567 as a monument to Cosimo I's defeat of Siena. Michelangelo is credited with the elegant design, based on an intriguing elliptical curve echoing those on the famous Medici tombs (see p91). The statues of the Four Seasons at each end were added in 1608 for Cosimo II's marriage to Maria of Austria. The bridge was restored after it was blown up by the Germans in 1944, and the statues were dredged up from the river bed.

Look west from here to the golden-yellow Palazzo Corsini (1648–56), with statues on the roof balustrade. It is one of the best examples of Baroque architecture in Florence.

The nave of Santa Trinità

The original church, built in the second half of the 11th century by the Vallombrosan monastic order, was very plain – a reflection of the austerity of the order, which was founded in Florence in 1092 to restore the simplicity of monastic rule. Gradually, the building became more ornate, with a Baroque façade added in 1593. Inside, the east wall shows traces of its Romanesque predecessor.

Ghirlandaio's frescoes in the Sassetti Chapel (right of the High Altar) show what the church looked like in 1483–6. In one scene St Francis of Assisi performs a miracle in the Piazza di Santa Trinità, with the church and the Palazzo Spini-Feroni in the background. The donors of the chapel, Francesco Sassetti and his wife Nera Corsi, are portrayed on either side of the altar. In another scene, St Francis is receiving the Rule of the Franciscan order from Pope

The little church of the Holy Apostles is, along with the Baptistry, among the oldest surviving churches in Florence. Florentines like to think that the church was founded in 800 AD by the first Holy Roman Emperor, Charlemagne, but it more likely dates to 1059–1100. The church has a simple Romanesque façade and the basilican plan typical of early Christian churches, but with 16th-century side aisles.

Santi Apostoli fronts Piazza del Limbo, so called because there was a cemetery here for infants who died before they were baptized. Hence, according to medieval theology, their souls dwelt in limbo – halfway between heaven and hell.

Also known as the Museo dell'Antica Casa Fiorentina, the Palazzo Davanzati is preserved as a typical house of wealthy Florentines of the 14th century. The entrance courtyard was designed to trap unwanted visitors; holes in the vaulted ceiling were used for dropping missiles. In the more peaceful inner courtyard, a staircase links all the floors. In one corner is a well and a pulley system so buckets of water could be raised to each floor – this ingenious mechanism was quite a luxury since most households had to fetch all their water from a public fountain.

The main living room on the first floor looks plain, but hooks beneath the ceiling show that the walls would have been hung with tapestries. Many rooms have bathrooms attached, and are decorated with frescoes of scenes from a French romance.

The restored Salone Madornale, where large gatherings would have been held, and the Sala dei Pappagalli (Parrots Room), with its frescoes and rich tapestries, are impressive. Restoration in two rooms dedicated to lace is ongoing.

This characterful building served as the headquarters of the Guelph party and the residence of its captains from around 1266, after the Guelphs began to emerge as the stronger of the two medieval factions struggling for control over Florence.

In the complex politics of the period, the Guelphs supported the Pope and the Ghibellines took the side of the Holy Roman Emperor in the dispute over who should rule northern Italy (see p46).

The lower part of the building dates to the 13th century, but the upper part was added by Brunelleschi in 1431. There are stemmae (coats-of-arms) under the crenellations. The elegant open staircase, added in 1589, is by Vasari.

Santa Maria Novella 18

The Gothic church of Santa Maria Novella contains some of the most important works of art in Florence. The church was built by the Dominicans from 1279 to 1357. Beside the church is a cemetery walled in with avelli (grave niches), which continue along the façade and the wall beyond. The cloisters form a museum. Here, the frescoes in the Spanish Chapel show the Dominicans as whippets – domini canes or hounds of God – rounding up the “stray sheep”.

★ Spanish Chapel

The chapel used by the Spanish courtiers of Eleonora of Toledo, the wife of Cosimo I (see p51), has dramatic frescoes on the theme of salvation and damnation.

★ The Trinity

Masaccio's pioneering work is a masterpiece of perspective and portraiture (see p26).

Green Cloister

The name comes from the green tinge to Uccello's Noah and the Flood frescoes, unfortunately damaged by the 1966 floods.

The billowing sail emblem of the Rucellai (see p104) appears on the façade because they paid for its completion in 1470.

Alberti added the volutes in 1458–70 to hide the roofs over the side chapels.

Strozzi Chapel

The 14th-century frescoes by Nardo di Cione and his brother, Andrea Orcagna, were inspired by Dante's epic poem, The Divine Comedy. Dante himself is portrayed in the Paradise fresco on the left, along with members of the Strozzi family.

The arcade arches are emphasized by grey and white banding.

★ Tornabuoni Chapel

Ghirlandaio's famous fresco cycle, The Life of John the Baptist (1485), portrays Florentine aristocrats and contemporary costumes and furnishings. Opposite is his other masterpiece, The Life of the Virgin.

★ Filippo Strozzi Chapel

Filippino Lippi's dramatic frescoes show St John raising Drusiana from the dead and St Philip slaying a dragon. Boccaccio set the beginning of The Decameron in this chapel.

The walls of the old cemetery are decorated with the emblems and badges of wealthy Florentines.

Mercato Nuovo 12

Map 3 C1 (6 D3). ☐ Apr–Oct:

The Mercato Nuovo (New Market) is sometimes called the “Straw Market” because goods woven out of straw, such as hats and baskets, were sold here from the end of the 19th century until the 1960s. In fact, it was originally built in 1547–51 as a central market for silk and other luxury goods. Today’s stallholders sell leather goods and souvenirs, and on summer evenings buskers gather to entertain visitors.

To the south of the market is a little fountain called Il Porcellino. This is a 17th-century copy in bronze of the Roman marble statue of a wild boar that can be seen in the Uffizi. Its snout gleams like gold, thanks to the superstition that any visitor who rubs it will return to Florence some day. Coins dropped in the water basin below are collected and distributed to the city’s charities.

Until 1890, when the present square was laid out, this had been the site of the Mercato Vecchio (Old Market) and before that of the ancient Roman forum. A single column from the old market still stands on the square, topped by an 18th-century statue of Abundance. Dominating the western side of the square is a triumphal arch built in 1895 to celebrate the fact that Florence was then the capital of Italy. The demolition of the Old Market was intended as the first step in a wholesale remodelling of Florence, but leading members of the English community led an international campaign opposing this grand scheme, which would have led to the destruction of almost every historic building in the city centre. Fortunately, the campaign was successful and the demolition halted.

The square, popular with both tourists and locals, is lined with pavement cafés, such as the very smart Gilli (No. 39r) or the Giubbe Rosse (No. 13–14r), so called because of the red jackets of the waiters. In the early part of this century, the Giubbe Rosse was the haunt of writers and artists, including those of Italy’s avant-garde Futurist movement. Rinascente, one of Florence’s department stores (see p287), is on the eastern side of the square.

The family owns large and productive estates all over Tuscany and in the neighbouring region of Umbria, producing a range of well-regarded wines, olive oils and liqueurs. You can sample these in the frescoed wine bar to the right of the courtyard, the Cantinetta Antinori.

The wine bar also specializes in typical Tuscan cuisine, with dishes such as crostini alla toscana, together with traditional cheeses and a range of other produce from the Antinori estates.

The church of All Saints, or Ognissanti, was the parish church of the merchant family of the Vespucci, one of whose members, the 15th-century navigator Amerigo, gave his name to the New World. Amerigo is depicted in Ghirlandaio's fresco of the Madonna della Misericordia (1472) in the second chapel on the right. Amerigo Vespucci was the first to realize that the land discovered by Columbus was a new continent, not the eastern shore of the Indies. He made two voyages following Columbus's route and, because his letters enabled cartographers to draw the first maps (see p75) of the new land, it was given his name.

Ognissanti is also the burial place of Sandro Botticelli. His fresco of St Augustine (1480) can be seen on the south wall. It is complemented by Ghirlandaio's St Jerome (1480) on the opposite wall.

Alongside the church is a cloister and refectory, containing Ghirlandaio's fresco The Last Supper (1480), with its background of birds and trees.

A fine example of modern architecture in Italy, the central railway station was designed in 1935 by a group of Tuscan "Functionalist" artists, including Piero Berardi and Giovanni Michelucci. They believed that a building's form should reflect its purpose. The exterior was designed to compliment the Gothic architecture of the city centre, while the interior uses metal and glass to create a feeling of space and light.

OLTRARNO

Oltrarno means “across the Arno”, and living on the south bank of the river was once considered inferior. Here lived people who did not have sufficient wealth to build a palazzo within the city centre. That stigma did not change until the household of the Medici Grand Dukes moved to Oltrarno in 1550.

Statue, Museo Bardini increased almost threefold in size in comparison with the original plans, and the Boboli Gardens were laid out on the land around it. A few Florentine aristocrats followed the Medici lead and moved across the river to make their homes here. In the late 16th and 17th centuries, many palazzi were built in the area surrounding Via Maggio and Piazza di Santo Spirito. Today, this is primarily a quiet area full of artisan workshops

MEDICI POWER BASE

The Palazzo Pitti became the base from which Tuscany was ruled for the next 300 years. Eleonora di Toledo, the Spanish wife of Cosimo I, purchased the Palazzo Pitti in 1549. Suffering from a wasting disease, perhaps malaria or tuberculosis, Eleonora persuaded Cosimo that her health might well improve if they lived in the relatively rural setting of Oltrarno. Over the years the Palazzo Pitti

The local merchants' association organizes guided tours, events and fairs to expose visitors to the artisan treasures on the south bank. It is a fascinating area to wander around and discover the true character of Florence.

For the most part, the Oltrarno area consists of relatively small houses and shops selling antiques, bric-à-brac and foodstuffs. The Via Maggio breaks this pattern, with its numerous imposing 16th-century palazzi close to the Medici's Palazzo Pitti. As it is one of the main routes into the city, the road is busy and there is constant traffic noise. Step into the side streets, however, and you escape the noise and bustle to discover traditional Florence; restaurants are authentic and reasonably priced, and the area is full of workshops restoring antique furniture.

The Augustinian foundation of this church dates from 1250. The present building has an unfinished 18th-century façade, which dominates the northern end of Piazza di Santo Spirito. Brunelleschi designed the church in 1435, but it was not completed until the late 1400s, well after his death.

Inside, the harmony of the proportions has been somewhat spoiled by the elaborate Baroque baldacchino and the High Altar, which was finished in 1607 by Giovanni Caccini. The church has 38 side altars, decorated with 15th- and 16th-century Renaissance paintings and sculpture, among them works by Cosimo Rosselli, Domenico Ghirlandaio and Filippino Lippi. The latter painted a Madonna and Child (1466) for the Nerli Chapel in the south transept.

In the north aisle, a door beneath the organ leads to a vestibule with an ornate coffered ceiling. It was designed by Simone del Pollaiuolo, more commonly known as Cronaca, in 1491. The sacristy adjoining the vestibule was designed by Giuliano da Sangallo in 1489.

This part of Florence is best appreciated by wandering around the square and its market, looking at the many furniture restorers' workshops and medieval palazzi. The biggest house in the square is the Palazzo Guadagni at No. 10, on the corner with Via Mazzetta. It was built around 1505, probably to the designs of Cronaca. The windows have distinctive stone surrounds with tear-drop shaped keystones. The top floor forms an open loggia, the first of its kind to be built in the city. The loggia set a fashion among 16th-century Florentine aristocrats, who incorporated the design into their own palazzi.

The English poets Elizabeth and Robert Browning rented an apartment here after eloping in 1847. Inspired by Tuscan art and landscape, this is where they wrote much of their best poetry.

The Capponi family chapel to the right of the entrance houses two works by Mannerist artist Jacopo da Pontormo: a panel depicting The Deposition and an Annunciation fresco. Painted in 1525–8, they make use of vivid colours such as salmon pink, light green, apricot and gold. Stefano Bardini was a 19th-century antiquarian and avid collector of architectural materials – mostly salvaged from the churches and palazzi demolished when the Piazza della Repubblica was built in the 1860s (see p112). In 1883 he built his palazzo in Piazza de' Mozzi almost entirely from recycled medieval and Renaissance masonry, including carved doorways, chimney pieces and staircases as well as painted and coffered ceilings. The rooms are full of sculpture, statues, paintings, armour, musical instruments, ceramics and antique furnishings. In 1922 this collection of antiquities was bequeathed to the people of Florence.

The San Frediano area, with its small, low houses, has long been associated with the wool and leather industries. The parish church of San Frediano in Cestello stands beside the Arno looking across the river. It has a bare stone exterior with a large dome that is a local landmark. It was rebuilt on the site of an older church in 1680–89 by Antonio Maria Ferri: the fresco and stuccowork inside are typical of the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Nearby is a well-preserved stretch of the 14th-century city walls. The Porta San Frediano, built in 1324, has a tower overlooking the road to Pisa. Its wooden doors have retained their original 14th-century locks and detailed ironwork.

Palazzo Pitti 6

The Palazzo Pitti, begun in 1457, was originally built for the banker Luca Pitti. Its huge scale was developed into its actual shape by the Medici, who one century later bought the palazzo when building costs bankrupted Pitti's heirs. In 1550 it became the main Medici residence and subsequently all Florentine rulers lived here. Today the richly decorated rooms exhibit treasures from the Medici collections (see pp122-3) and the Habsburg-Lorraine court.

The side wings were added in 1828 by the Dukes of Lorraine, who ruled the city after the Medici.

Brunelleschi is thought to have designed the façade of the palazzo, which was later extended to three times its original length.

Exploring the Palazzo Pitti

The Palatine gallery was realized by the Medici family and the Habsburg-Lorraine duchies in the 1600s and 1700s. The frescoed halls were hung with works from their private collection and the gallery was opened to the public in 1833. Other attractions include the royal apartments, the Medici collection of jewellery and treasures, the gallery of modern art and an exhibition of Italian clothing from the 18th, 19th and 20th centuries.

THE PALATINE GALLERY

The gallery contains a superb collection of works dating from the Renaissance and Baroque. They are hung as the 17th- and 18th-century Grand Dukes wished, placed purely for their effect, regardless of subject or chronology. The decoration of the rooms in the gallery reflects the tastes and preoccupations of the time. Rooms 4 to 8 are painted with Baroque ceiling frescoes begun by Pietro da Cortona between 1641–7, and finished by his pupil Ciro Ferri in 1666. They allegorize the education of a prince by the gods. In Room 1, the prince is torn from the love of Venus by Minerva (knowledge) and in the following rooms he is taught science from Apollo, war from Mars and leadership from Jupiter. Finally Saturn welcomes him to Mount Olympus, home of the gods in Roman mythology.

THE PALATINE GALLERY

The gallery is on the first floor of the Palazzo Pitti.

The other rooms in the gallery were private apartments and range from the opulence of the formal drawing rooms to the severity of Napoleon's bathroom (Room 27) (see p55), in a suite of rooms designed by Giuseppe Cacialli for the emperor in 1813 following his conquest of northern Italy.

Mary Magdalene by Titian (c.1535)

Although some of the Medici collection has been transferred to the Uffizi over the years, the Palatine Gallery is still packed with masterpieces by artists such as Botticelli, Perugino, Titian, Andrea del Sarto, Pontormo, Tintoretto, Veronese, Caravaggio, Rubens and Van Dyck, among others. There are approximately 1,000 paintings here, providing a vast survey of 16th- and 17th-century European painting.

The Sala di Venere (Venus) is dominated by the statue of Venus Italica by Antonio Canova, commissioned by Napoleon in 1810 as a replacement for The Medici Venus in the Uffizi Gallery, which was to be taken to Paris. Napoleon was not normally so generous, as his agents were renowned for stealing a large number of fine works of art from Italy during the Napoleonic Wars.

Several of Titian's works in the following rooms were commissioned by the Duke of Urbino. La Bella (1536) is a portrait of a lovely but unknown woman, whom he also used as a model in other paintings. His portrait, Mary Magdalene, in the Sala di Apollo, was painted between 1530–35 in an overtly sensual manner, bathed in soft light.

Venus Italica by Antonio Canova (1810)

Madonna of the Chair (c.1510) in the tondo (roundel) form which became very popular during the Renaissance.

The Consequences of War by Peter Paul Rubens (1638) is an allegorical painting of the Thirty Years War (1618–48), showing Venus preventing Mars from unleashing his fury on the cowering, beleaguered figure of Europe, completely robed in black mourning.

ROYAL APARTMENTS

The Throne Room

The Royal Apartments on the first floor of the south wing of the palazzo were built in the 17th century. They are decorated with frescoes by various Florentine artists and a series of portraits of the Medici by the Flemish painter Justus Sustermans, who worked at the court between 1619–81. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries, the apartments were completely revamped in Neo-Classical style by the Dukes of Lorraine when they succeeded the Medici dynasty as the rulers of Florence (see pp54–5).

The apartments are lavishly appointed with ornate gold and white stuccowork ceilings and rich decoration, as on the walls of the Parrot Room, which are covered with an opulent crimson fabric detailed with a bird design. The apartments' varied ownership is revealed in their design, which embraces three distinct artistic periods.

MUSEO DEGLI ARGENTI

This museum is on the ground and mezzanine floors, below the Palatine Gallery, in the rooms used by the Medici as their summer apartments. It displays the massive private wealth of the Medici dynasty: the collection encompasses rare and beautiful examples of ancient Roman glassware, ivory, carpets, crystal and amber and fine works by Florentine and German goldsmiths. The pride of the collection are 16 pietre dure vases displayed in the Sala Buia. These belonged to Lorenzo the Magnificent and are from the ancient Roman and Byzantine periods.

The family's lavish tastes are reflected in the museum's polished ebony furniture inlaid with semi-precious marbles and stones. Portraits of the Medici hang throughout the rooms, including a series of the Grand Duchesses, and Cosimo I and his family carved in an onyx cameo.

GALLERIA D'ARTE MODERNA

Here the paintings span the period from 1784 to 1924; many of them were collected by the Dukes of Lorraine to decorate the Palazzo Pitti.

The present museum has combined this collection with pictures donated by the state and various private collectors. The museum contains Neo-Classical, Romantic and religious works, but probably the most important collection is of the group of late 19th-century artists known as the Macchiaioli (spot-makers), similar to French Impressionists.

The Macchiaioli used bright splashes of colour to represent the sun-dappled Tuscan landscape.

This collection was given to the city of Florence in 1897 by the art critic Diego Martelli, and includes paintings by Giovanni Fattori (see p121) and Giovanni Boldini. Two works by Camille Pissarro hang in the same room.

GALLERIA DEL COSTUME

Opened in 1983, the gallery is on the ground floor of the Palazzo Meridiana. This was designed in 1776 by Gaspare Maria Paoletti for the Royal Family; they lived until the abolition of the monarchy (see p52). The exhibits reflect the changing tastes in the courtly fashion of the late 18th century up to the 1920s. Some rooms have been restored to correspond to a 1911 inventory, while the rest of the gallery has been renovated.

Boboli Gardens 7

The Boboli Gardens were laid out for the Medici in 1550, one year after they bought the Palazzo Pitti. A perfect example of stylized Renaissance gardening, they were opened to the public in 1766. The more formal parts of the garden, nearest the palazzo, consist of box hedges clipped into symmetrical geometric patterns. These lead to wild groves of ilex and cypress trees, planted to create a contrast between artifice and nature. Statues of varying styles and periods are dotted around, and the vistas were planned to give views over Florence.

★ Amphitheatre

Stone for the Palazzo Pitti was quarried here and the hollow was turned into a stage for the first-ever opera performances.

Kaffehaus

The Rococo-style pavilion, built in 1774, now houses a coffee house. It is open during the summer and offers beautiful views over the city.

★ La Grotta Grande

The casts of Michelangelo's Quattro Prigioni (see p94) are built into the walls of this Mannerist folly (1583–93), which also houses Vincenzo de' Rossi's Paris with Helen of Troy (1560) and Venus Bathing (1565) by Giambologna.

The Neptune Fountain was built between 1565–8 by Stoldo Lorenzi.

Bacchus Fountain (1560)

A copy of the original by Valerio Cioli, the statue shows Pietro Barbino, Cosimo I's court dwarf, as Bacchus, the Roman god of wine, astride a turtle.

Lunette of Boboli Gardens

The Flemish artist Giusto Utens painted this picture of the Palazzo Pitti and Boboli Gardens in 1599.

The Porcelain Museum is accessed via the Rose Garden.

Viottolone

The avenue of cypress trees, planted in 1612, is lined with Classical statues.

★ L'Isolotto (Little Island)

The centrepiece of the moated garden is Giambologna's Oceanus Fountain (1576). The original statue of Oceanus has been moved to the Bargello (see pp68–9).

Brancacci Chapel 10

The church of Santa Maria del Carmine is famous for The Life of St Peter frescoes in the Brancacci Chapel, commissioned by the Florentine merchant Felice Brancacci around 1424. Masolino began the work in 1425 but many of the scenes are by his pupil, Masaccio, who died before completing the cycle. Filippino Lippi finished the work 50 years later, in 1480. Masaccio's use of perspective in The Tribute Money and the tragic realism of his figures in The Expulsion of Adam and Eve placed him at the vanguard of Renaissance painting. Many great artists, including Michelangelo, later visited the chapel to study his pioneering work.

St Peter Heals the Sick

Masaccio's realistic portrayal of cripples and beggars was revolutionary in his time.

The grouping of stylized figures in Masaccio's frescoes reflects his interest in the sculpture of his contemporary Donatello (see p69).

Masaccio's simple style allows us to focus on the figures central to the frescoes without distracting detail.

Expulsion of Adam and Eve

Masaccio's ability to express emotion is well illustrated by his barrowing portrait of Adam and Eve being driven out of the Garden of Eden, their faces wracked by misery, shame and the burden of self-knowledge.

Masolino's Temptation of Adam and Eve is gentle and decorous, in contrast with the emotional force of Masaccio's painting on the opposite wall.

Masolino's work is painstakingly decorative in contrast with Masaccio's simpler style.

FOUR GUIDED WALKS

In Florence the countryside is never very far away, and you can be walking down quiet, rural lanes within just a few minutes of leaving the Ponte Vecchio (see pp106–7), in the bustling heart of the city. The first walk is popular with the Florentines, who like to stroll on a Sunday beneath the city walls and take in the panoramic views that can be enjoyed from San Miniato al Monte and the Piazzale Michelangelo. Fiesole, the setting for the second walk, is 8 km (5 miles) north of Florence. It was once a powerful Etruscan city, but was later eclipsed by the rise of Florence, so that it is now merely a village. There are archaeological remains to provide a hint of its previous glory. The third walk shows Renaissance Florence at its best, taking in Brunelleschi's cupola and many of the grand palazzi. The last walk ends in the serene Piazza Santo Spirito after exploring the Florentine backstreets.

A Two-Hour Walk to San Miniato al Monte

This walk takes you from the centre of Florence to the exquisitely decorated church of San Miniato al Monte high on a hill in the south of the city. The route follows quiet lanes along the city walls, and then takes in the bustling Piazzale Michelangelo, packed with souvenir stalls, before returning to the town centre.

No. 19 Costa di San Giorgio ③

From the Ponte Vecchio ① walk south down Via de' Guicciardini and take the second turning left into the square fronting Santa Felicità ②. On the left of the church, take the steep road to the right, Costa di San Giorgio. No. 19 ③ was once the home of Galileo. The Porta San Giorgio (St George's Gate) ④ is straight ahead at the end of the lane.

Built in 1260, this is the oldest city gate to survive in Florence. The weathered fresco within the arch is The Virgin with St George and St Leonard by Bicci di Lorenzo (1460). On the outer face of the arch is a carving of St George fighting the dragon, a copy of the original 1284 work, which has been removed and is currently being restored.

The Forte di Belvedere ⑤ is to the right through the gate, and was designed by Bernardo Buontalenti in 1590. Originally the fortress was built to guard the city against attack from its political rivals, but it soon became a private refuge for the Medici Grand Dukes. From here there are extensive views over the Boboli Gardens ⑥ below, and across to the olive groves and cypress trees in the countryside south of the city. Head downhill along Via di Belvedere, which runs along a stretch of city walls (to the left) dating from 1258. Porta San Miniato ⑦, a small arch in the wall, is situated at the bottom of the hill.

San Miniato al Monte

Turn right into Via del Monte alle Croci and walk uphill for 500 m (550 yds) to the Viale Galileo Galilei. Bear right and cross the road to the vast stone steps leading to the terrace in front of San Miniato al Monte ⑧. Catch your breath and admire the view of the Forte di Belvedere.

San Miniato al Monte is one of the most unspoiled of all the Romanesque churches in Tuscany. It was built in 1018 over the shrine of the early Christian martyr, San Miniato (St Minias). He was a rich Armenian merchant beheaded for his beliefs by Emperor Decius in the 3rd century. The façade was begun around 1090 and has geometric patterning in green-grey and white marble, typical of the Romanesque style. The statue on the gable shows an eagle carrying a bale of cloth, the symbol of the powerful Arte di Calimala (guild of wool importers) who financed the church in the Middle Ages. The restored 13th-century mosaic below the gable shows Christ, the Virgin and St Minias. Inside the church, the High Altar is raised above the nave and there is a Byzantine-style mosaic in the apse, again of St Minias with Christ and the Virgin. Below this is the crypt, built using columns salvaged from ancient Roman buildings. The floor of the nave is covered with seven marble mosaic panels of lions, doves and the signs of the Zodiac (1207); similar intarsia work panels can be seen on the raised marble choir and pulpit. In the north wall is the funeral chapel of the 25-year-old Cardinal of Portugal, Iacopo di Lusitania, who died in Florence in 1439. Antonio Rossellino carved the figure of the cardinal guarded by angels on the elaborate marble tomb (1466). The terracotta roundels on the ceiling, showing the Holy Spirit and Virtues, were sculpted by Luca della Robbia (1461). Outside, the massive belltower was begun in 1523 by Baccio d'Agnolo, but was never finished. Cannons were installed here to shoot at the Medici troops during the Siege of Florence (see pp52–3). The cemetery ⑩ surrounding the church opened in 1854 and this contains tombs the size of miniature houses, built to show off family wealth.

Leave San Miniato by an arch in the buildings to the west and follow the path that threads down to the church of San Salvatore al Monte ⑩. Here steps lead down to the Viale Galileo Galilei; take a right turn to reach Piazzale Michelangelo ⑪. The piazzale was laid out in the 1860s by Giuseppe Poggi, and is dotted with copies of Michelangelo's famous statues. It is lined with souvenir stalls and has far-reaching views over the rooftops of central Florence.

Either take the No. 13 bus back to the city centre, or the stone steps on the west side of the piazza down to Porta San Niccolò ⑫, a 14th-century gateway in the city wall. Go left along Via di San Niccolò and Via de' Bardi, lined with medieval buildings. This includes the 13th-century Palazzo de' Mozzi ⑬ on Via de' Bardi; the Museo Bardini ⑭ (see p119) is opposite. From here you can return along the Arno to the Ponte Vecchio ①.

A Two-Hour Walk through Fiesole

The village of Fiesole stands in the foothills of the Mugello region, 8 km (5 miles) north of Florence, and has substantial Roman and Etruscan remains. The area has been a popular summer retreat since the 15th century, thanks to its fresh breezes and hilltop position.

The belltower of the Duomo ②

Piazza Mino da Fiesole

The No. 7 bus arrives at its last stop, in Fiesole's main square ①, after a 30-minute journey from Florence through countryside dotted with villas. Settled in the 7th century BC, Fiesole was a powerful force in central Italy by the 5th century BC. It began to decline after the Romans founded Florence in the 1st century BC, but kept its independence until 1125, when Florentine troops razed most of the city. The Duomo of San Romolo ② in the piazza was begun in 1028 and has a massive belltower. The bare Romanesque interior has columns which are topped with reused Roman capitals.

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Starting point: Piazza Mino da Fiesole.

Length: 1.5 km (1 mile). Allow 2–3 hours for the walk to include time to visit the various museums. Note that Via di San Francesco is steep.

Badia Fiesolana: Open Sunday morning for services.

Getting there: No. 7 bus from Piazza di San Marco in Florence.

Stopping-off points: There are several cafés around Piazza Mino da Fiesole. The tiny ice-cream parlour Il Tucano (Via Gramsci 8) is also worth a stop.

From here, walk up the square to the front of the 14th-century Palazzo Comunale ③. Here there is a bronze statue of King Vittorio Emanuele II and Garibaldi, called Incontro di Teano (Meeting at Teano) ④. Returning to the church, take the first turning right, down Via Dupre, to the Roman theatre ⑤ and into the archaeological park.

After its defeat by Florence in 1125, Fiesole went into a decline, and many Etruscan and Roman remains went undisturbed until excavation in the 1870s. The Teatro, built in the 1st century BC, is used for the annual Estate Fiesolana festival (see pp38–9). Its tiers of stone seats can hold 3,000 spectators. Next to the theatre is the Museo Faesulanum ⑥, built in 1912–14. Inside are finds from the Bronze Age onwards: coins, jewellery and ceramics, bronzes and marble sculpture. The building is a copy of the 1st-century Roman temple whose remains are in the northern part of the complex. It is built on Etruscan foundations, and part of the Roman frieze dating from the 1st century BC is still intact. There are some partly restored Roman baths close by ⑦, and, at the northern edge of the park, 4th-century BC Etruscan walls (8). From the theatre turn into Via Dupre to Museo Bandini (9) to the right, with a collection of medieval religious paintings built up by local aristocrat Angelo Bandini in the 19th century.

Back in Piazza Mino da Fiesole, turn right down Via di San Francesco to the left of the Palazzo Vescoville (10). There are views over Florence and back to Fiesole (11) on the road up to Sant'Alessandro church (12), which has a Neo-Classical façade combined with a 9th-century

Romanesque interior. Original Roman columns used in the nave are made out of cipollino (onion ring) marble. From here carry on up to San Francesco (8), a Franciscan friary founded in 1399 and restored in 1907. It has a pretty cloister and a museum of artifacts collected by the monks.

From Fiesole to San Domenico

Retrace your steps or walk through the park back to the town centre. Continue down Via Vecchia Fiesolana. On the left is the Villa Medici (14), built in 1461 by Michelozzo for Cosimo de' Medici. Walk down Via Bandini and Via Vecchia Fiesolana to San Domenico. In this little hamlet is the 15th-century church of San Domenico (15), with two good works by Fra Angelico, Dominican prior of the monastery here until 1437. The Madonna with Angels and The Crucifixion are in the chapter house and were both painted around 1430.

Opposite, Via della Badia dei Roccellini leads to the Badia Fiesolana (16), a pretty church with a Romanesque façade of inlaid marble. The interior is decorated with local grey sandstone, pietra serena. The No. 7 bus back to Florence can be caught from the village square in San Domenico.

A 90-Minute Walk Around Renaissance Florence

This walk takes in the Renaissance heart of the city and passes some of its greatest landmarks. Ideally, it should be done early on in your visit to get a real feel for the place, and if you incorporate a climb up Giotto's Campanile, you will get a bird's eye view of the narrow streets, the characteristic red-tiled rooftops and the many towers that are not so easy to see from ground level.

Ponte Vecchio to Piazza di San Firenze

The walk begins in the centre of the Ponte Vecchio ① (see pp106–7), where butcher's and grocery shops were first built in the 13th century, then replaced by goldsmiths at the end of the 16th century. The bust here is of Benvenuto Cellini, the most famous goldsmith of them all. Note the Vasari Corridor with its round windows running over the shops on the eastern side of the bridge. Walk north up Via Por Santa Maria. A short way along on the right is Vicolo Santo Stefano and the ancient, deconsecrated church of Santo Stefano al Ponte ②, which was badly damaged in 1993 when a car bomb exploded in nearby Via Lambertesca. Further up Por Santa Maria is the Mercato Nuovo ③ (see p112), a site on which there has been a market for centuries. The famous bronze "porcellino" (wild boar) is on the southern side; it is a copy of a copy of a sculpture by Tacca. It is said that if you rub his snout you will return to Florence one day. Turn right into Piazza della Signoria, past the open air sculpture gallery of the Loggia dei Lanzi ④ and turn right to walk the length of the Uffizi gallery portico (see pp80–81) and back along the opposite side. Turn right and take Via della Ninna out of the square; turn left at the end into Piazza di San Firenze ⑤. On the corner of Via dei Gondi stands Sangallo's late 15th-century Palazzo Gondi, which has a very graceful courtyard. The huge Baroque building opposite (1772–5) houses the law courts; to its left is the 17th-century church of San Filippo Neri, which has a painted ceiling.

Via del Proconsolo to Via dei Servi

rooftops, is the Badia Fiorentina ⑥, one of the city's oldest churches. Across the street is the forbidding ex-prison building that now houses the Bargello museum ⑦ (see pp68–9) and its superb collection of sculpture. Continue north up Via Proconsolo. At no. 10 stands Palazzo Pazzi-Quaratesi, once the home of the Pazzi family of bankers, protagonists in the famous Pazzi conspiracy against the Medici of 1478. At no. 12 is Buontalenti's Palazzo Nonfinito (see p70) begun in 1593 and "unfinished", which today houses the Anthropological Museum and its wonderfully old-fashioned collection of curios. Via Proconsolo emerges at the east end of the Duomo ⑧ (see pp64–5). Skirt around the south side of this massive building, past the stone plaque known as "Il Sasso di Dante" ⑨, where the poet would sit and contemplate the construction of the cathedral; it's on the left just before Via dello Studio.

Enter Piazza di San Giovanni with its extraordinary religious buildings, crowds of visitors, and postcard sellers. Just south of the Baptistery at the top of Via de' Calzaiuoli is the 14th-century Loggia del Bigallo ⑩. Piazza di San Giovanni is the heart of religious Florence and if you have the time and energy to climb the 400-odd steps of the Giotto's Campanile, you will be rewarded by a close-up of the great dome by Brunelleschi (see pp64-5), and a view of the city below. Afterwards, walk round the north side of the Duomo and turn left up Via dei Servi. At no. 10 is Palazzo Niccolini with its typical mid-16th century façade ⑩. If the main door is open, you can see into the courtyard and small garden beyond with its double loggia. A little further up, take a right turn into Via degli Alfani where Brunelleschi's octagonal Rotonda di Santa Maria degli Angeli ⑫ is on the right.

Piazza Santissima Annunziata to Santa Maria Novella

Go back to Via dei Servi and right to Piazza Santissima Annunziata ⑬ (see p98), flanked on the right side by Brunelleschi's loggia and the Spedale degli Innocenti (see p95). Turn left out of the square on Via Cesare Battisti and enter the Piazza San Marco ⑭. The portico immediately left dates from 1384 and was once part of a hospital. Today, it is home to the Accademia di Belle Arti, an art school founded in 1784. Also in the piazza is the convent of San Marco (see pp96-7) where Fra Angelico's sublime frescoes are housed. Walk south down Via Cavour to Palazzo Medici-Riccardi ⑮ (see p89), where the Cappella dei Magi is painted with Benozzo Gozzoli's delightfully vivid fresco. Turn right along Via de' Gori to the church of San Lorenzo and the Medici Chapels ⑯ (see pp90-91).

Walk past the chapels and bear right down Via del Melarancio. Cross Piazza dell'Unità Italiana and Via Panzani to make your way into Piazza di Santa Maria Novella where the walk finishes at the Santa Maria Novella church, under Alberti's glorious symmetrical façade ⑰ (see pp110-11). To return to the Duomo, catch the no. 1 bus from the Piazza.

A 90-Minute Walk to Piazza Santo Spirito

Stazione di Santa Maria Novella

Begin under the digital clock on the south side of Florence's main train station ① (see p113). Designed in 1935, this is one of the few important "modern" buildings in a city dominated by Medieval and Renaissance architecture. The Italians invented the digital clock and the one here is an early version. Cross over Piazza della Stazione and bear left towards the back of the great parish church of Santa Maria Novella (see pp110–11) ②. Follow the arched recesses along one side of the church, which were once the family vaults of Florentine nobles, and you will emerge in the Piazza Santa Maria Novella ③, a once scruffy square that has undergone renovation. At the southern end is the Loggia di San Paolo, a copy of Brunelleschi's famous Loggia degli Innocenti dating from 1489. In the 17th century the piazza was used for carriage races and the two obelisks sitting on turtles marked the turning points. Exit the square on the south side along Via dei Fossi and turn left into Via della Spada, a busy local shopping street. On the right is the former church of San Pancrazio ④, one of the oldest in Florence and, today, home to the Museo Marino Marini (see p104). Turning left into Via delle Belle Donne, right into Via del Trebbio and right again will bring you out in Via de' Tornabuoni with its impressive mansions and designer shops (see p105). On the corner is Palazzo Antinori ⑤ (see p112), built by Giuliano da Maiano from 1461–69; you can walk into the splendid courtyard. Note the 17th-century church of San Gaetano across the road with its a fine Baroque façade.

A designer shop in chic Via de' Tornabuoni

Piazza Santa Trinità

Walk past Palazzo Strozzi (see p105) and down to Piazza Santa Trinità ⑥ (see p108), which marks the meeting of three ancient Roman roads and is lined with noble palaces. Walk towards the river and turn right along Lungarno Corsini. At no. 2 is Palazzo Masetti ⑦, today occupied by the British Consulate but once the home of Bonnie Prince Charlie's widow, the Countess of Albany, who later married the dramatist Vittorio Alfieri.

The huge building a little further down on the right is Palazzo Corsini ⑧; it houses the Corsini family's private art collection (entrance on Via del Parione), which includes works by artists such as Botticelli.

At Piazza Carlo Goldoni (named after the playwright whose statue is on the far side), continue west along Borgo Ognissanti which opens onto the Arno at Piazza Ognissanti ⑨. Palazzo Lenzi, on the right, was built in the mid-15th century and has a

Across the River Arno

Cross the Ponte Amerigo Vespucci and walk on to Borgo San Frediano, a delightful area that's filled with artisan workshops and characteristic houses set on narrow streets. To the right is Porta San Frediano ⑩, built in 1324, whose massive wooden doors are still intact. The adjoining stretch of city wall is particularly well preserved.

Double back along Borgo San Frediano and turn left down Via Castello into Piazza del Castello ⑪, where the entrance to the church of San Frediano in Castello (see p119) faces the river. Return to Borgo San Frediano turning right into Piazza del Carmine ⑫. The church of Santa Maria del Carmine is famous for its Brancacci Chapel (see pp126–7), which is decorated with frescoes begun by Masolino and Masaccio, and finished by Filippino Lippi.

Leave the square at the southernmost corner along Via Santa Monaca and turn left into Via dei Serragli where there is a pretty tabernacle. Walk towards the river and turn right into Via di Santo Spirito. Note the Medici Crest at no. 58r, the 13th–14th-century Torre de' Lanfredini stands at no. 40r and Palazzo Frescobaldi (home of the wine-growing Frescobaldi family) is at nos. 5–13. Turn into Via de' Coverelli and walk to Piazza Santo Spirito ⑬, the heart of this Bohemian district and the walk's end. To return to the city centre, catch bus no. 11 to the Duomo.

Where two map references are provided, the second (in brackets) relates to the large-scale maps, 5 and 6.

HOW THE MAP REFERENCES WORK

Ognissanti 17

Borgo Ognissanti 42. Map 1 B5
 (5 A2) Tel 055 239 87 00.
Open 8am-noon, 4-7pm.

The letter and number are a grid reference. You will find the letters at the top and bottom of the map and the numbers at the sides.

The second reference refers to the large-scale maps of Florence (5 & 6). It is read in exactly the same way as the first.

Tuscany at a Glance

Tuscany is rich in culture and landscape. Out of Florence, most visitors' first port of call is Pisa, in Western Tuscany, with its Leaning Tower. Northern Tuscany has mountains and beaches, and Eastern Tuscany the lush forests of the Mugello. Siena and San Gimignano in Central Tuscany draw their own visitors, while Southern Tuscany with its sparse vegetation and unspoiled beaches is more off the beaten track.

Sights in Tuscany are grouped within their own sections in this book, corresponding with the colour-coded map below.

WESTERN TUSCANY

Tuscany's hard-working economic engine, this area is characterized by its factories and ports, particularly Livorno. There are also some extraordinary sights, most famously the Leaning Tower of Pisa. To the south, the windswept ancient Etruscan town of Volterra, standing high on a barren plateau, has some of the finest museums and medieval architecture in Italy.

From the 11th to the 13th centuries, when at the height of its powers, Pisa dominated the Western Mediterranean. Its strong navy opened up extensive trading links with North Africa, and brought to Italy the benefits of Arabic scientific and artistic achievement.

These new ideas had a profound effect on 12th- and 13th-century architects working in western Tuscany. Many of the era's splendid buildings, for instance Pisa's Duomo, Baptistry and Campanile, are decorated with complex geometric patterns made from beautiful inlaid marble, alternating with bizarre arabesques.

During the 16th century the Arno estuary began to silt up, ending Pisan supremacy. In 1571, work began to establish Livorno as the region's main port. This proved so successful that it remains Italy's second busiest port. Pisa, meanwhile, is the gateway to Tuscany following the extensive development of Galileo Galilei airport. The Arno valley is mainly an industrial area, with huge factories producing glass, furniture, motorcycles, leather and textiles. Even so, there are some rewarding sights lurking within the urban sprawl, like the Romanesque church of San Piero a Grado or the entertaining museum in Vinci, which contains models of many of Leonardo da Vinci's brilliant inventions.

South of the Arno valley, the landscape is pleasant but unremarkable, consisting of rolling hills and expanses of agricultural land. But the imposing ancient town of Volterra, with its unmatched collection of Etruscan artifacts, demands a visit.

Landscape of rolling hills near Volterra

Exploring Western Tuscany

Pisa, with its world-famous leaning tower, and Volterra, with a wealth of ancient Etruscan remains, are the highlights of the region. There is, however, much more to see, especially in the gentle hilly countryside that rises on either side of the Arno valley. It was here that Renaissance architects pioneered new styles of villa building; their work can be admired at Poggio a Caiano and Artimino. San Miniato is gloriously sited on a hilltop commanding extensive views; the museum in Vinci, on the other side of the valley, celebrates the inventive genius of Leonardo da Vinci.

GETTING AROUND

Western Tuscany has a number of busy roads. An express route, the Fi-Pi-Li motorway, links Pisa with Florence, but travellers may find the old S67 more convenient for reaching the sights lining the Arno valley. The S1 coastal road skirts Livorno on its way to Rome.

The region is well served by buses and trains. A regular rail service runs between Florence and Pisa, stopping at the major Arno valley towns.

It can be difficult to reach Volterra, as there is no train service, but several buses depart each day from Florence, Pisa and Livorno.

Pisa 1

Inlaid marble,
Duomo façade

From the 11th to the 13th centuries, Pisa's powerful navy ensured the city's dominance in the Western Mediterranean. Trading links with Spain and North Africa led to a cultural revolution (see p46) reflected in the splendid buildings of the era: the Duomo, Baptistry and Campanile. Pisa's decline was assured when the Arno began to silt up. Salt marsh, partly a nature reserve, now divides the city from the sea.

This fascinating museum displays sketches from the fresco cycle that once covered the walls of Campo Santo cemetery (see pp158–9). The frescoes disintegrated when the cemetery was bombed in 1944, but the underlying sketches survived. They were removed from the walls for conservation before being rehoused in the museum. There are also displays showing how fresco artists went about their work.

Housed in the cathedral's 13th-century former Chapter House, the museum was opened in 1986. All the exhibits were formerly in the Duomo and Baptistry. Modern display methods ensure that they are excellently presented. Exhibits such as the intricately inlaid marble arabesque panels and fine Corinthian capitals reveal the twin influences of Rome and Islam on Pisan architects in the 12th and 13th centuries. Be sure to see the imposing 10th-century hippogriff (half horse, half gryphon); this statue, cast in bronze by Islamic craftsmen, was looted by Pisan adventurers during the wars against the Saracens.

The museum also contains 13th-century statues and sculptures by Nicola and Giovanni Pisano, including Giovanni's ivory Virgin and Child (1300) carved for the Duomo's High Altar. There are paintings from the 15th to 18th centuries, a fine Roman and Etruscan archaeological collection, and ecclesiastical treasures and vestments dating from the 12th century.

The museum cloister offers a wonderful view of the Leaning Tower (see p160).

🏛️ Piazza dei Cavalieri

The Piazza dei Cavalieri stands at the heart of Pisa's student quarter. The huge building on the north side of the square, covered in exuberant black and white sgraffito decoration (designs scratched into wet plaster), is the Palazzo dei Cavalieri and houses one of Pisa University's most prestigious colleges: the Scuola Normale Superiore. The site was originally occupied by Pisa's medieval town hall, but Cosimo I ordered its destruction when the city fell under Florentine rule. The council chamber, however, was spared and is now a lecture hall. The present flamboyant building was designed in 1562 by Vasari, as the headquarters of the Cavalieri di San Stefano, an order of knights created by Cosimo in 1561. An equestrian statue of Cosimo by Pietro Francavilla (1596) stands outside. Santo Stefano dei Cavalieri

Virgin and Child polyptych (1321) by Simone Martini

(1365–9), the knights' church, stands next to the Palazzo dei Cavalieri. Also designed by Vasari, it has a splendid gilded and coffered ceiling. The walls are hung with figureheads and battle standards. There is also a splendid organ (look out for notices of recitals).

On the other side of the Palazzo dei Cavalieri is the Palazzo dell'Orologio, incorporating the medieval town jail. The building, which is now housing a library, was the scene of a most shameful and gruesome historical episode. In 1288 Count Ugolino, mayor of Pisa, was accused of treachery and walled up with his sons and grandsons. The entire male side of the Ugolino family was wiped out.

Campo dei Miracoli

Cemetery memorial

Pisa's world famous Leaning Tower is just one of the splendid religious buildings that rise from the emerald-green lawns of the "Field of Miracles". Lying to the northwest of the city centre, it is partnered by the Duomo, begun in 1063, the Baptistry of 1152–1284 and the Campo Santo cemetery begun in 1278. These buildings combine definite Moorish elements, such as inlaid marble in geometric patterns (arabesques), with delicate Romanesque colonnading and spiky Gothic niches and pinnacles.

The Triumph of Death

These late 14th-century frescoes depict various allegorical scenes such as this of a knight and lady overwhelmed by the stench of an open grave.

Campo Santo

The cemetery contains earth from the Holy Land and carved Roman sarcophagi.

The domed Cappella del Pozzo was added in 1594.

★ Baptistery Pulpit

Nicola Pisano's great marble pulpit, completed in 1260, is carved with lively scenes from the Life of Christ.

★ Duomo Façade
Coloured sandstone, glass and majolica plates decorate the lombard-style 12th-century façade. Its patterned surface includes knots, flowers and animals in inlaid marble.

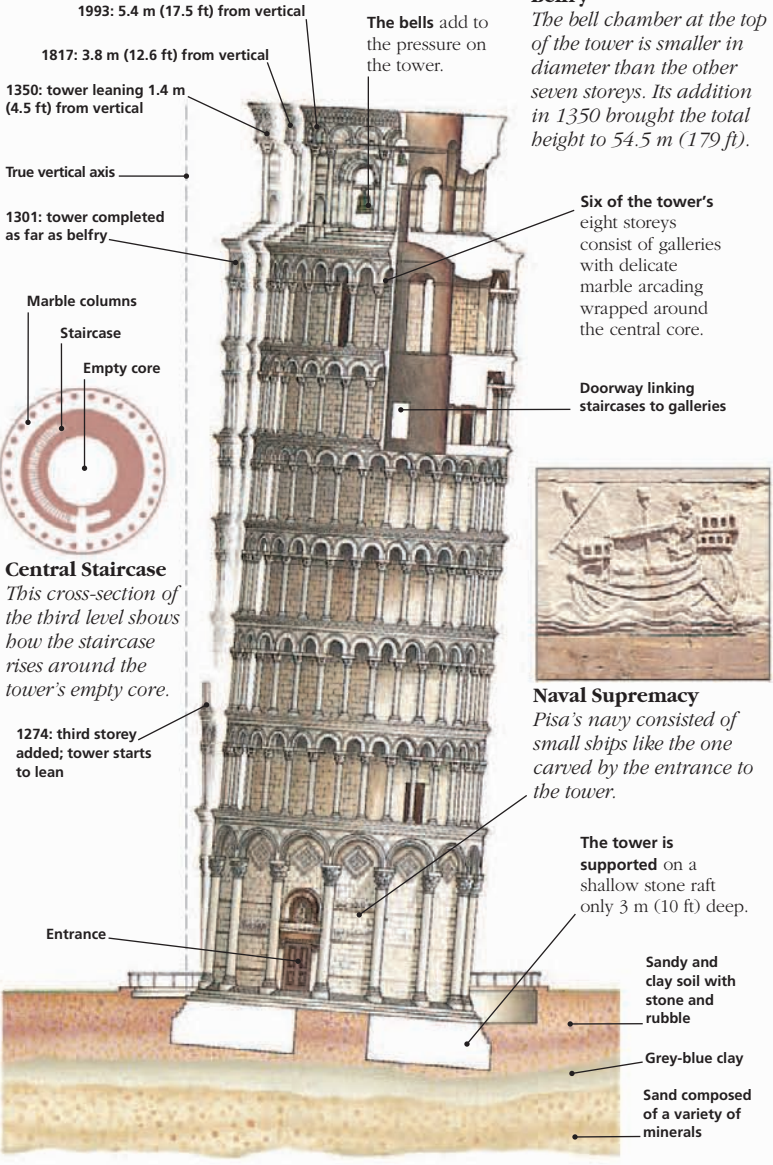

The Leaning Tower of Pisa

All the buildings of the Campo dei Miracoli lean because of their shallow foundations and sandy silt subsoil, but none tilts so famously as the Torre Pendente – the Leaning Tower. Begun in 1173, the tower began to tip sideways before the third storey was completed. Even so, construction continued until its completion in 1350. Over ten years of engineering interventions to 2008 have succeeded in stabilizing the tower and should keep it stable for at least 200 years.

Belfry

The bell chamber at the top of the tower is smaller in diameter than the other seven storeys. Its addition in 1350 brought the total height to 54.5 m (179 ft).

The church was built to house an unusual relic: a thorn from the Crown of Thorns forced on to Christ's head during the cruel mock coronation that preceded His crucifixion.

Much of the salt marsh to the west of Pisa has now been drained and reclaimed, and a large US Air Force base (Camp Darby) now occupies the area south of the Arno. There are extensive sandy beaches on the Arno estuary, and here lies Marina di Pisa, a seaside resort with some pretty Art Nouveau houses, backed by pine woods.

On the drive there you may catch sight of grazing camels – these are the descendants of a large herd established under Duke Ferdinand II in the mid-17th century. The village of Tirrenia, with its sandy beaches, lies 5 km (3 miles) south of Marina di Pisa.

San Piero a Grado ④

Road map B2. Tel 050 96 00 65. ☐ 8am–7pm daily. ♿

San Piero is a handsome 11th-century church built on the spot where St Peter is believed to have first set foot on Italian soil in AD 42. According to the New Testament Book of Acts, he arrived at a set of landing steps by the Arno. Archaeologists have discovered the foundations of Roman port buildings underneath the present church, which stands at the point where the Arno once flowed into the sea. Silt deposits mean that the church now stands some 6 km (3.5 miles) from the shore.

An unusual feature of the church is the lack of any façade. Instead, it has semi-circular apses at both the east and west ends. The exterior is decorated with blind arcading and with Moorish-style ceramic plates set into the masonry around the eaves – an unusual feature that it shares with the Duomo in San Miniato (see p163).

The present church was built during the reign of Pope John XVIII (1004–9) and the varied capitals of the nave come from ancient Roman buildings. High up on the nave walls there are frescoes by Deodato Orlandi, painted around 1300, on The Life of St Peter. These are interspersed with portraits of all the popes from St Peter to John XVII.

 Piazza del Popolo 1 (0571 427 45).  Tue, 1st & 2nd Sun of each month.

San Miniato suffers from its proximity to the vast industrial conurbation of the Arno valley. Straddling the crest of one of the region’s highest hills, it manages, however, to remain somewhat aloof. There are a number of fine historic buildings, including the 13th-century Rocca (castle) built for Frederick II (1194–1250), the German Holy Roman Emperor.

The town played a major part in Frederick’s Italian military campaigns. He dreamed of rebuilding the ancient Roman empire that lay divided between papal and Imperial authority. To this end he conquered large areas of Italy. His battles fuelled fierce local struggles between the imperial Ghibellines and the papal Guelphs (see p46).

Local people still refer to the town as San Miniato al Tedesco (of the German).

Only the red-brick façade survives from the original 12th-century building. The majolica plates set within it show evidence of trade with Spain or North Africa. They seem to represent the North Star and the constellations of Ursus Major and Minor: key reference points for early navigators.

The campanile, the Torre di Matilda, is named in honour of the great Countess Matilda (see p45), who was born in Livorno in 1046.

Piazza della Repubblica

The Piazza della Repubblica (also known as the Piazza del Seminario) occupies a long, narrow space dominated by the decorated façade of the 17th-century seminary. The frescoes and sgraffito (scenes scratched out of plaster) on the façade show allegories of the Virtues painted below quotations from key religious texts, for instance the writings of Pope Gregory (540–604).

To the right of the seminary are several well-restored 15th-century shops. Buildings like these can be seen in many medieval frescoes, such as Lorenzetti's 14th-century Good Government (see p46).

This hilltop town is the birthplace of Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519). To celebrate his extraordinary genius, the 13th-century castle in the centre of the town was restored in 1952 to create the Museo Leonardiano. Among the displays are wooden models of Leonardo's machines and inventions, based on the drawings from his notebooks, copies of which are shown alongside. These range from his conception of a car, to an armoured tank and even a machine-gun. A pair of skis, designed for walking on water, show that he could occasionally miss the mark. The museum is best avoided on Sundays, when it can be extremely crowded.

Close to the museum is Santo Stefano church and the font in which Leonardo was baptized. His actual birthplace, the Casa di Leonardo, is 2 km (1.25 miles) from the town centre at Anchiano. Road map C2.

Artimino is a fine example of a borgo, a small fortified hamlet, and is remarkable for the unspoiled Romanesque church of San Leonardo. Outside the walls, higher up the hill, lies the Villa di Artimino, designed by Buontalenti in 1594 for Grand Duke Ferdinando I. It is often referred to as the “Villa of a Hundred Chimneys”, because of the numerous and highly ornate chimney pots crowding the roofline. The building is now used as a conference centre, but the Museo Archeologico Etrusco in the basement, which exhibits Etruscan and Roman artifacts, is open to the public.

The church of San Michele in Carmignano, only 5 km (3 miles) north of Artimino, contains Pontormo’s (1494–1557) great masterpiece, The Visitation (1530).

The Villa di Poggio a Caiano, built by Giuliano da Sangallo for Lorenzo de’ Medici (see p50) in 1480, was the first Italian villa to be designed in the Renaissance style. Its original severity is now softened by the graceful, curved staircase (added in 1802–7) leading up to the terrace, with its views of the park beyond.

The villa’s barrel-vaulted salone contains 16th-century frescoes by Andrea del Sarto and Franciabigio. They were commissioned by the future Leo X, the Medici pope, to portray his family as great statesmen in the manner of ancient Roman figures.

The salone also contains Pontormo’s colourful Conette fresco (1521). It portrays the Roman garden deities, Vertumnus and Pomona – a perfect evocation of a Tuscan summer afternoon.

The Charterhouse of Florence lies in the suburb of Galluzzo, where the Ema and Greve rivers meet. The high, fortress-like walls have sheltered a small community of monks since 1341, when the monastery was founded here.

The cloister and Palazzo degli Studi within contain several artworks, including a damaged but still beautiful series of 16th-century frescoes by Pontormo depicting scenes from the Passion of Christ.

Situated, like many Etruscan cities, on a high plateau, Volterra offers uninterrupted views over the surrounding hills. In many places the ancient Etruscan walls still stand. Volterra's famous Museo Guarnacci contains one of the best collections of Etruscan artifacts in Italy. Many of the exhibits were gathered from the numerous local tombs. After its museums and medieval buildings, the city is famous for its craftsmen who carve beautiful white statues from locally mined alabaster.

The pride of the Guarnacci Museum is its collection of 600 Etruscan funerary urns. Adorned with detailed carving, they offer a unique insight into Etruscan customs and beliefs (see pp42–3).

The museum's two main exhibits are on the first floor. Room 20 contains the terracotta "Married Couple" urn. The elderly couple on the lid are portrayed realistically, with haggard, careworn faces.

Room 22 contains the elongated bronze known as the Ombra della Sera (Shadow of the Evening). This name was bestowed by the poet Gabriele d'Annunzio, who said that the bronze reminded him of the shadow thrown by a human figure in the dying light of the evening sun. It is probably a votive figure dating to the 3rd century BC, but it is difficult to speak of it with any certainty; unusually, it was cast with no clothes or jewellery to indicate rank, status or date. It is only by chance that this remarkable figure survived. Ploughed up by a farmer in 1879, it was used as a fire poker until someone recognized it as a masterpiece of Etruscan art.

Volterra's excellent art gallery is situated in the 15th-century Palazzo Minucci-Solaini. The best works are by Florentine artists. In Ghirlandaio's Christ in Majesty (1492), Christ hovers above an idealized Tuscan landscape. It was meant for the San Giusto monastery, which was abandoned after a landslip like the one shown in the middle distance and beyond. Luca Signorelli's Madonna and Child with Saints (1491) shows his debt to Roman art through the reliefs on the base of the Virgin's throne. His Annunciation (1491) is another beautiful composition.

The museum's main exhibit is Rosso Fiorentino's Mannerist work (see p27), The Deposition (1521). Attention is focused on the grief-stricken figures in the foreground and the pallid, empty shell of Christ's body, its dead weight symbolizing that His spirit is elsewhere.

Work on Volterra's cathedral began in the 1200s and continued intermittently over the next two centuries.

To the right of the High Altar stands a Romanesque wood-carving of The Deposition (1228). The Altar itself is flanked by graceful marble angels carved by Mino da Fiesole in 1471; they face the same artist's elegant tabernacle, carved with figures of Faith, Hope and Charity.

The nave, remodelled in 1581, has an unusual coffered ceiling with stucco figures of bishops and saints painted in rich blue and gold. The pulpit, in the middle of the nave, dates to 1584, but was created using sculptural reliefs from the late 12th and early 13th centuries. The Last Supper panel, facing into the nave and thought to be the work of the Pisan artist Guglielmo Pisano, has a number of humorous details including a monster snapping at the heels of Judas. Nearby, in the north aisle, Fra Bartolomeo's The Annunciation (1497) hangs above one of the side chapel altars.

More sculptures are housed in the oratory off the north aisle, near the main entrance. The best is a tableau of the Epiphany, preserved behind glass. The remarkably humane painted terracotta figures of the Virgin and Child in the foreground are believed to be by Zaccaria da Volterra (1473–1544), a local sculptor.

This fine square is dominated by the Palazzo dei Priori, dating to 1208. A sober building, it is said to have been the model for the Palazzo Vecchio in Florence (see pp 78–9).

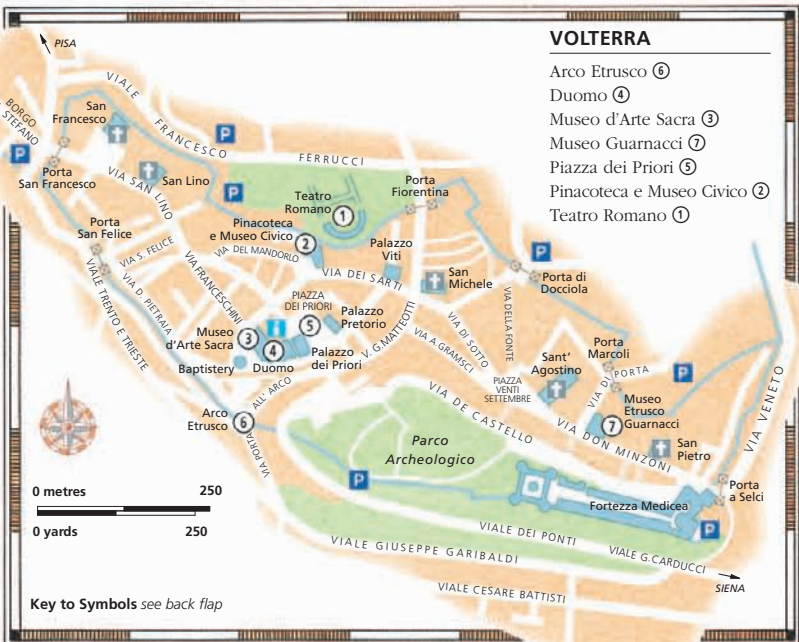

The 13th-century Porcellino tower, on the other side of the square, is named after the small pig, now almost worn away, carved at its base.

NORTHERN TUSCANY

Of all the regions of Tuscany, this one offers something for everyone. The historic towns are rich in art, architecture and music festivals, while many sporting activities can be enjoyed along the coast or in the mountains. The landscape, too, is marked by a vast range of features, from marble quarries to market gardens, and from mountain ranges and nature reserves to beaches.

The heavily populated Lucchese plain between Florence and Lucca is dominated by industry: the textile factories of Prato produce three out of every four woollen garments exported from Italy. But in spite of their large suburbs, cities such as Prato, Pistoia and, above all, Lucca have rewarding churches, museums and galleries within their historic city centres.

The land between the cities is fertile and is therefore intensively cultivated. Asparagus and cut flowers are two of the most important crops, and the wholesale flower market at Pescia is one of the biggest in Italy. East of Lucca towards Pescia are garden centres and nurseries where huge quantities of young trees and shrubs are grown in long, neat rows.

North of the Lucchese plain the scenery is very different again. A series of foothills is covered in olive groves which produce some of the finest oil in Italy. Then, the land rises to the wild and mountainous areas of the Garfagnana, the Alpi Apuane (Apuan Alps) and the Lunigiana, with its fortified towns and castles built by the Dukes of Malaspina. Here you will find some of Tuscany's highest peaks, rising to 2,000 m (6,550 ft) or more. Vast areas of the mountains are designated as nature parks and the wild scenery attracts rambblers, trekkers and riders as well as hang-gliding enthusiasts.

Finally, the coastal area, known as the Versilia, includes some of Italy's most elegant and popular beach resorts. It stretches from the famous marble-quarrying town of Carrara in the north down to the area's main town, Viareggio, and to Torre del Lago Puccini, the lakeside home of Giacomo Puccini, where he wrote nearly all his operas.

GETTING AROUND

Lucca, Montecatini Terme, Prato and Pistoia are all on the A11 autostrada and are easy to reach by car from Pisa, Florence and other major cities outside Tuscany, such as Bologna. There are several trains a day between Pisa and Florence via Lucca, Montecatini Terme, Prato and Pistoia, and along the coast between Pisa and Carrara. From Lucca you can also travel by train up the Serchio valley to Castelnuovo di Garfagnana. But, since this is a mountainous region, much of it is only accessible by car.

The Lunigiana (Land of the Moon) area is named after the port of Luni – so called because of the moon-like luminescence of the marble shipped from here in Roman times. From the 16th century onwards, the Dukes of Malaspina fortified villages against banditry and built castles at Massa, Fosdinovo, Aulla, Fivizzano and Verrucola.

At Pontremoli, the 14th-century Castello del Piagnaro houses the Museo delle Statue-Stele Lunigianesi, which shows prehistoric carved stone figures from the region.

Carrara is world famous for its white marble. The 300 or so quarries near the town date to Roman times, making this the oldest industrial site in continuous use in the world. In Carrara itself there are numerous showrooms and workshops where the marble is sawn into sheets or sculpted into statues and ornaments. Many of the workshops welcome visitors. You can also discover more about the techniques of crafting marble at the Museo Civico del Marmo.

Carrara's Duomo uses the local marble to good effect in its Pisan-Romanesque façade featuring a rose window. In the same square is the house where Michelangelo used to stay on his visits to buy marble for his sculptures. The façade is marked by a plaque and by carvings of the sculptor's tools.

Tour buses from Carrara regularly visit the quarries at Colonnata and at Fantiscritti, where a museum displays various marble quarrying techniques. You can also drive there, following the numerous signs that say “Cave di Marmo”.

The beaches are divided into numerous bathing establishments run by hotels or private operators, who charge for use of the beach and its facilities. Forte dei Marmi is perhaps the most beautiful of these resorts, much favoured by wealthy Florentines and Milanese.

Barga's Duomo stands on a grassy terrace at the highest point in the town. There are glorious views from here of the gleaming white marble and limestone peaks of the Alpi Apuane.

The 11th-century Duomo is dedicated to San Cristoforo (St Christopher). The exterior is decorated with interesting Romanesque carvings of interlaced knots, wild beasts and knights in armour. Over the north portal, a frieze thought to be a scene from a folk tale depicts a banquet.

Inside, a huge wooden statue of St Christopher dates to the 12th century, and there is a gilded tabernacle guarded by two charming terracotta angels by Luca della Robbia.

Most impressive of all is the massive marble pulpit, standing fully 5 m (16.5 ft) tall, supported by pillars which in turn rest on the back of man-eating lions. The pulpit is the work of Guido Bigarelli of Como and dates to the early 13th century. The lively sculptures on the upper part

Street-by-Street: Lucca ①

Lucca became a colony of ancient Rome in 180 BC, and the town's Roman legacy is still evident in the regular grid pattern of its streets. The remarkable elliptical shape of the Piazza del Mercato (see p169) is a survival of the amphitheatre. The name of the church of San Michele in Foro indicates that it stands beside the Roman forum, laid out as the city's main square in ancient times and still serving that function to this day. San Michele is just one of Lucca's many churches built in the 12th and 13th centuries in the elaborate Pisan-Romanesque style.

Mosaic in San Frediano

Lucca is enclosed by massive red brick walls which help to give the city its special character by shutting out traffic and the modern world. Built in 1504–1645, the walls are among the best-preserved Renaissance defences in Europe. Within these walls, Lucca is a peaceful city of narrow lanes, preserving intact its original ancient Roman street plan. Unlike several of Tuscany's hilltop cities, Lucca is flat: many locals use bicycles, which lends the city added charm.

Almost none of the ancient Roman amphitheatre survives: the stone was gradually stolen for use elsewhere, leaving the atmospheric arena-shaped Piazza del Mercato of today (see p169). The piazza is enclosed by medieval houses that were built up against the walls of the amphitheatre. Its shape, perfectly preserved, is a striking reminder that Lucca was founded by the Romans around 180 BC. Low archways at north, south, east and west mark the gates through which beasts and gladiators would once have entered the arena.

Housed in the 14th-century former Archbishop's Palace, the museum displays the treasures of the Duomo, San Martino. These include the 11th-century carved stone head of a king from the original façade. There is also a rare 12th-century Limoges enamel casket, which possibly held a relic of St Thomas à Becket. The Croce di Pisani made by Vincenzo di Michele in 1411 is a masterpiece showing Christ hanging from the Tree of Redemption, surrounded by angels, the Virgin, St John and the other Evangelists.

The imposing Palazzo Pfanner, built in 1667, has a delightful formal garden to the rear, which can also be viewed from the ramparts. Laid out in the 18th century, the garden's central avenue is lined with Baroque statues of ancient Roman gods and goddesses, alternating with lemon trees in huge terracotta pots.

The house itself contains an interesting collection of furniture, antiques and medical instruments.

Piazza Napoleone and Piazza del Giglio

Piazza Napoleone was laid out in 1806 when Lucca was under the imposed rule of Elisa Baciocchi, Napoleon's sister. The statue in the square is of her successor, Marie Louise de Bourbon. She faces the massive Palazzo Ducale, with its elegant colonnade built by Ammannati in 1578. Behind her is the Piazza del Giglio, with the Teatro del Giglio (1817) on the south side of the square. The theatre is famous for its productions of operas by Puccini, who was born in Lucca.

Lucca's extraordinary cathedral, with its façade abutting incongruously on to the campanile, is dedicated to St Martin. He is the Roman soldier depicted on the façade dividing his cloak with a sword to share with a needy beggar. This and other scenes from the life of the saint form part of the complex decorations covering the 13th-century façade. There are also reliefs depicting The Labours of the

Months and intricate panels of inlaid pink, green and white marble showing hunting scenes, peacocks and flowers.

The altar painting in the Sacristy, The Madonna and Saints (1449–94), is by Ghirlandaio.

This revered 13th-century wooden effigy was believed by medieval pilgrims to have been carved by Christ's follower, Nicodemus, at the time of the Crucifixion.

★ Façade

The gabled façade has three tiers of ornate colonnading (1204). Every one of the carved columns is different, and there are lively hunting scenes above them.

Circular clerestory windows, in the nave and above the aisle roof, light the unusually tall nave of the cross-shaped church.

The campanile was built in 1060 as a defensive tower. The upper two tiers were added in 1261 when the tower was joined to the cathedral.

San Frediano

Piazza San Frediano. daily.

The striking façade of Lucca's San Frediano church features a colourful 13th-century mosaic, The Ascension, by the School of Berlinghieri. Inside, to the right, is a splendid Romanesque font which could easily be mistaken for a fountain, because it is so big and impressive. The sides are carved with scenes from The Life of Christ and the story of Moses.

One dramatic scene shows Moses and his followers dressed in 12th-century armour, looking like Crusaders, as they pass through the divided Red Sea with an entourage of camels.

Amico Aspertini's frescoes (1508–9) in the second chapel in the north aisle tell the story of Lucca's precious relic, the Volto Santo (see p180), and give a good idea of what the city looked like in the early 16th century.

Also in the church is a coloured wooden statue of the Virgin, carved by Matteo Civitali, and an altar-piece carved from a single block of marble by Jacopo della Quercia in the Cappella Trenta. It is carved in the shape of a polyptych with five Gothic-spired niches.

San Michele in Foro

Piazza San Michele. daily.

As its name suggests, this church stands on the site of the ancient Roman forum. It has a wonderfully rich Pisan-Romanesque façade that competes in splendour with that of San Martino (see pp180–81). John Ruskin, the English artist and art historian whose work did so much to revive interest in Italian art during the 19th century (see p55), spent many hours sketching the rich mixture of twisted marble columns and Cosmati work (inlaid marble). The façade is almost barbaric in its exuberance, and the inlaid marble scenes depict wild beasts and huntmen on horseback rather than Christian subjects. Only the huge winged figure of St Michael, standing on the pediment and flanked by two angels, marks this out as a church. The splendour of the façade, built over a long period from the 11th to the 14th centuries, is matched by the arcading of the belltower.

The interior has little of interest except for Filippino Lippi's restored Saints Helena, Jerome, Sebastian and Roch, among the most beautiful of his paintings.

The square outside is circled by 15th- and 16th-century palazzi, which are now mostly occupied by banks, while the portico of the Palazzo Pretorio to the south shelters a 19th-century statue of Lucca's greatest artist and architect, Matteo Civitali (1436–1501).

Lucca's principal shopping street winds its way through the heart of the city towards the Anfiteatro Romano (see p178). It is a good place to stroll in the cool of the early evening. A Day Out around Lucca

This motoring tour takes you by a scenic route to the best of the villas around Lucca. After leaving Lucca the first stop is the Romanesque church of San Giorgio at Pieve di Brancoli; then comes the ancient hump-backed Ponte della Maddalena, also known as Devil's Bridge (see p174). In the spa town of Bagni di Lucca the pretty suspension bridge across the Lima dates from 1840. On reaching Collodi, explore the village on foot, as the streets are too steep and narrow for cars. The Villa Garzoni, with its splendid gardens, lies below the town, and the Pinocchio Park is on the other side of the road. Continue to the Villa Torrigiani, which is set in a fine park and contains 13th–18th-century porcelain and furnishings. The tour ends at the 17th-century Villa Mansi, with its Baroque façade and a garden enlivened by statues of Diana and other pagan deities.

There are two main sights in this town: the Villa Garzoni with its theatrical terraced gardens tumbling down the hillside and, for children, the Pinocchio Park (see p183).

The author of The Adventures of Pinocchio (1881), Carlo Lorenzini, was born in Florence but his uncle was custodian of the Villa Garzoni and Lorenzini frequently stayed here as a child. Fond memories led him to use Collodi as his pen name and in 1956 the town decided to repay the compliment by setting up the theme park.

The park consists of gardens featuring mosaics and sculptural tableaux based on the adventures of the puppet, plus a maze, playground, exhibition centre and children's restaurant.

Of all Tuscany's many spa towns, Montecatini Terme is the most interesting. It has beautiful formal gardens and the architecture of its spas is particularly distinguished.

encouraged the development of Montecatini Terme in the 18th century.

The most splendid is the Neo-Classical Terme Tettuccio (1925–8) with its circular, marble-lined pools, fountains and Art Nouveau tiles depicting languorous nymphs.

Terme Torretta, named after its mock medieval tower, is noted for its tea-time concerts, while Terme Tamerici has beautifully tended gardens.

Visitors can obtain day tickets to the spas to drink the waters and relax in the reading, writing and music rooms. More information is available from the Direzione delle Terme at Viale Verdi 41.

A popular excursion from Montecatini Terme is to take the funicular railway up to the ancient fortified village of Montecatini Alto. In the quiet main piazza, there are antique shops and well-regarded restaurants with outdoor tables. From the Rocca (castle) you can take in sweeping views over the mountainous countryside.

Nearby at Ponte Buggianese, in San Michele church, you can see modern frescoes by the Florentine artist Pietro Annigoni (1910–88) on the theme of Christ's Passion.

At Monsummano Terme, another of Tuscany's well known spa towns, the Grotta Giusti spa prescribes the inhalation of vapours from hot sulphurous springs found in the nearby caves.

Above Monsummano Terme is the fortified hilltop village of Monsummano Alto, with its ruined castle. Today, few people live in the sleepy village, with its pretty 12th-century church and crumbling houses, but there are some fine views from here.

TAKING THE WATERS IN TUSCANY

The therapeutic value of bathing was first recognized by the ancient Romans. They were also the first to exploit the hot springs of volcanic origin that they found all over Tuscany. Here they built bath complexes where the army veterans who settled in towns such as Florence and Siena could relax. Some of these spas, as at Saturnia (see p238), are still called by their original Roman names.

Other spas came into prominence during the Middle Ages and Renaissance: St Catherine of Siena (1347–80) (see p219), who suffered from scrofula, a form of tuberculosis, and Lorenzo de' Medici (1449–92), who was arthritic, both bathed in the sulphurous hot springs at Bagno Vignoni (see p226) to relieve their ailments. Tuscan spas really came into their own in the early 19th century when Bagni di Lucca was one of the most fashionable spa centres in Europe, frequented by emperors, kings and aristocrats (see p174).

However, spa culture in the 19th century had more to do with social life: flirtation and gambling took precedence over health cures.

Today treatments such as inhaling sulphur-laden steam, drinking the mineral-rich waters, hydro massage, bathing and application of mud packs are prescribed for disorders ranging from liver complaints to skin conditions and asthma. Many visitors still continue the tradition of coming to fashionable spas such as Montecatini Terme or Monsummano Terme, not just for the benefits of therapeutic treatment but also for relaxation and in search of companionship.

The Cappella del Tau symbol

The citizens of Pistoia acquired a reputation for viciousness and intrigue in the 13th century and the taint has never quite disappeared. The cause was a feud between two of the city's rival factions, the Neri and Bianchi (Blacks and Whites), that spread to involve other cities. Assassination in Pistoia's narrow alleyways was commonplace. The favoured weapon was a tiny but deadly dagger called the pistole made by the city's ironworkers, who also specialized in surgical instruments. The city still thrives on metalworking: everything from buses to mattress springs is made here. Its historic centre has several fine buildings.

Cappella di San Jacopo ☐ daily. Piazza del Duomo, the city's main square, is dominated by the Cattedrale di San Zeno and its bulky campanile, which was originally built in the 12th century as a defensive watchtower in the city walls.

The interior is rich in funerary monuments, including the tomb of poet Cino da Pistoia, in the south aisle. He is depicted in a relief (1337) lecturing to a class of young boys.

Nearby is the Cappella di San Jacopo, with its extraordinary silver altar decorated with over 600 statues and reliefs. The earliest of these date from 1287 and the altar was not completed until 1456. During that time, nearly every silversmith of note in Tuscany contributed to the extraordinarily rich design. Among them was Brunelleschi, who began his career working in metal before switching to architecture. Also in Piazza del Duomo, facing the Cattedrale, is the octagonal Baptistery, which was finished in 1359.

Prato 16

Prato has been one of Italy's most important textile-manufacturing cities since the 13th century. One of its most famous citizens was the immensely wealthy Francesco di Marco Datini (1330–1410), who has been immortalized by Iris Origo in The Merchant of Prato (1957). Datini left all his money to charity, and the city contains several reminders of him, particularly in his own Palazzo Datini. Prato also attracts pilgrims from all over Italy who come to see the Virgin's Girdle, a prized relic kept in the Duomo and on view five times a year.

EASTERN TUSCANY

From the forests of the Mugello and the Casentino to the heights of La Verna, this is an area of outstanding natural beauty. Hermits and mystics have long favoured its more remote reaches, where ancient monastic orders continue to flourish. Only this part of Tuscany could have produced an enigmatic artist like Piero della Francesca, whose celebrated frescoes decorate San Francesco in Arezzo.

Eastern Tuscany's main transport route, the A1 Autostrada, channels speeding traffic southwards along the Arno valley towards Arezzo and Rome. Away from this busy artery, Eastern Tuscany is a little-visited region of steep hills cloaked in beech, oak and sweet chestnut trees. It is particularly attractive in autumn, when the huge forests of the Mugello and the Casentino take on fiery shades of red and gold. This is also the season when mushrooms and truffles abound. Driving through the region at this time of year, you'll see them for sale at roadside stalls.

The tiny mountain pastures to the east of the region are grazed both by sheep, whose milk is made into cheese, and by beautiful white cattle, which were once highly prized by the Romans as sacrificial beasts.

This is also a land of saints, hermits and monasteries. The mountain-top sanctuary of La Verna is reputed to be the place where St Francis received the stigmata – marks resembling Christ's wounds.

The 11th-century hermitage at Camaldoli was intended as the site for a Benedictine order who wished to live in complete isolation, but proved so popular with religious day-trippers that a visitors' centre soon had to be built nearby. The monastery at Vallombrosa has such glorious woodlands that John Milton was moved to describe them in his epic poem, Paradise Lost (1667).

For art-lovers, eastern Tuscany is the region of Piero della Francesca. His frescoes in Arezzo, largely ignored until the late 19th century, form one of the world's greatest fresco cycles.

Exploring Eastern Tuscany

The ancient city of Arezzo and the hilltop town of Cortona, with its steep streets, narrow, ladder-like alleys and ancient houses, will amply satisfy visitors in search of culture, art and architecture. The region will also appeal to those who love nature. The woodlands, meadows and streams are ideal for exploring on foot. There are plenty of well-marked paths and picnic areas to encourage you, especially within the beautiful ancient forests surrounding the monasteries at Vallombrosa and Camaldoli.

GETTING AROUND

The region's main highways, the A1 Autostrada and the S71, linking Bibbiena, Poppi and the Casentino, offer swift access to most of the region. The remaining roads are delightfully rural, particularly the S70, with its fine views near Vallombrosa, but be prepared for steep gradients and hairpin bends. Some roads in the Casentino are very narrow. There are passing places, but a speed limit of 40 km/h (25 mph) means you should leave plenty of time for your journey.

Bus and rail transport is very limited. An intercity train service links Florence to Arezzo, from where there are irregular bus services to other major towns in the region.

Like the monasteries of the Casentino (see p196), the abbey buildings at Vallombrosa are surrounded by woodland. The routes to this sight are all very scenic.

The Vallombrosan order was founded by Saint Giovanni Gualberto Visdomini in 1038. He aimed to persuade like-minded aristocrats to join him in relinquishing their wealth and adopting a life of great austerity. Contrary to these worthy ideals, the order grew wealthy and powerful during the 16th and 17th centuries. It was then that today's fortress-like abbey was built. Today, the order comprises some 20 monks.

In 1638 the English poet John Milton (1608–74) visited the abbey. The beautiful scenery of this area inspired a passage in his epic poem, Paradise Lost.

The monastery was founded in 1046 and today houses 40 Carthusian monks. Visitors to Camaldoli will want to see not only the monastery but the original eremo (hermitage), 2.5 km (1.5 miles) away. A narrow, winding road leads up from the monastic complex to the hermitage through thick forest. This ancient woodland, which is some of the most ecologically rich in Europe, was declared a National Park in 1991.

The hermitage dates back to 1012 when San Romualdo (St Rumbold) came here with a small group of followers, to cut themselves off completely from the outside world.

Today's monks lead a more gregarious life, providing a small café in the monastery below. As you descend to the monastery complex you will also pass numerous picnic spots and some of the many local footpaths.

The monks still tend the magnificent beech and chestnut woodland that surrounds the ancient monastery, as their predecessors have for nearly 1,000 years. A pharmacy, dating to 1543, now sells soaps, toiletries and liqueurs made by the monks.

There is a small, privately owned ornithological museum across the road from the monastery, opposite the car park, which illustrates the area's rich bird life.

The rocky outcrop on which La Verna monastery stands, called La Senna, was split, according to legend, by an earthquake when Christ died on the Cross. The site was given to St Francis by the local ruler, Count Orlando Cattani, in 1213, and it was here, in 1224, that the saint was miraculously marked with the stigmata – the wounds of Christ.

Today, the monastery is both a popular tourist sight and a charismatic religious centre. Its modern buildings are not particularly attractive, but they contain numerous sculptures by the della Robbia workshops. There are several waymarked paths through the surrounding woodland, leading to some excellent viewpoints.

One of the wealthiest cities in Tuscany, Arezzo produces gold jewellery for shops all over Europe. It is famous for Piero della Francesca's frescoes and for its antiques market. Following World War II, there was much rebuilding – broad avenues have replaced many of the medieval alleys. The Chimera fountain near the station is a reminder of the city's past. It is a copy of an Etruscan bronze (see p42) cast here in 380 BC.

San Francesco

The 13th-century church of San Francesco contains Piero della Francesca's Legend of the True Cross (1452–66), one of Italy's greatest fresco cycles. The frescoes, now visible again after a long restoration, show how the Cross was found near Jerusalem by the Empress Helena. Her son, the Emperor Constantine, adopted it as his battle emblem. In reality, Constantine granted the Christian faith official recognition through the Edict of Milan, signed in 313. He is said to have bequeathed the Empire to the Church in 337, although this was still hotly disputed when Piero painted the frescoes. Visitors have a limited time in the chapel and advance booking is mandatory.

Exaggerated Hats

Painted Crucifix

The 13th-century Crucifix forms the focal point of the fresco cycle. The figure at the foot of the Cross represents St Francis.

The Empress Helena watches the Cross being dug up. The town shown in the background, symbolizing Jerusalem, is an accurate representation of 15th-century Arezzo.

The Cross returns to Jerusalem.

Judas reveals where the Cross is hidden.

The Annunciation, with its stately figures and aura of serenity, is typical of Piero's enigmatic style.

The Defeat of Chosroes

The battle scene shows the chaos of Renaissance warfare. Piero was influenced by ancient Roman carving, especially the battle scenes that often decorated sarcophagi.

The Death of Adam

This vivid portrayal of Adam and Eve in old age illustrates Piero's masterly treatment of anatomy. He was one of the first Renaissance artists to paint nude figures.

The prophets appear to play no part in the narrative cycle; their presence may be for purely decorative reasons.

The wood of the Cross is buried in a pit.

Champignon
(Marasmius oreades)

The people of Tuscany consider mushrooms a great delicacy. Collecting fungi can be dangerous, unless you are an expert, but you can sample the best varieties in the region's restaurants. The smaller edible varieties are sometimes chopped and combined with mashed garlic to make a pasta sauce. As starters, many menus include funghi trifolati (sautéed mushrooms with garlic and parsley), or the region's most popular mushrooms, porcini, served in gratella (grilled). The prized truffle is often simply grated over home-made pasta; it has a pronounced flavour and should be used sparingly.

The town stands on the western edge of the Valdichiana, once a marshy and malaria-ridden plain that was drained by Cosimo I in the 16th century. It is now an area of rich farmland used to rear cattle whose meat is used for Bistecca alla Fiorentina, the famous beefsteaks served in Florentine restaurants (p267).

Agriculture has made the town prosperous, and its streets are lined with handsome buildings and churches. Some of these are by the High Renaissance sculptor and architect Andrea Contucci, known as Sansovino (1460–1529), who was born in the town; a number are by Antonio da Sangallo the Elder (1455–1537), his contemporary.

The town's main street, Corso Sangallo, starts at the Porta Fiorentina town gate, built in 1550 to Giorgio Vasari's design. The street leads past the 14th-century Cassero, or Citadel, whose exterior walls are now almost entirely hidden by 17th-century houses. There are good views from the interior, which contains the tourist office and the small Further up the street is the handsome Classical Loggia dei Mercanti (1518–20), designed by Sansovino, and the Palazzo Comunale, originally built as the Palazzo di Monte by Sangallo for Cardinal Antonio di Monte in 1515. Sansovino's house can be seen in the Piazza di Monte. He laid out the square, built the fine double loggia with Ionic columns that fronts Sant'Agostino church and went on to design the cloister standing alongside it. Inside the church is a series of 15th-century frescoes illustrating scenes from The Life of Christ, and Vasari's Assumption altarpiece (1539). Sansovino's worn tomb slab lies beneath the pulpit.

The 14th-century Palazzo Comunale houses the Museo Comunale. Its highlight is a massive gold reliquary, 2.5 m (8 ft) high, to which numerous artists contributed over the period 1350–1471. Because of its shape, it is known as the Tree of Lucignano.

Also of note are two 14th-century paintings by Luca Signorelli: a lunette showing St Francis of Assisi miraculously receiving the wounds of Christ to his hands and feet, and a Madonna and Child. There are several fine 13th- to 15th-century Siena School paintings and a small painting of the Madonna by Lippo Vanni (1341–75).

The vaulted ceiling of the main chamber, the Sala del Tribunale, has frescoes of famous biblical figures and characters from Classical mythology painted from 1438–65 by various Siena School artists.

Cortona 17

Cortona is one of the oldest cities in Tuscany. It was founded by the Etruscans (see p42), whose work can still be seen in the foundations of the town's massive stone walls. The city was a major seat of power during the medieval period, able to hold its own against larger towns like Siena and Arezzo; its decline followed defeat by Naples in 1409, after which it was sold to Florence and lost its autonomy. The main street, Via Nazionale, is remarkably flat in comparison with the rest of Cortona. The numerous ladder-like alleys leading off it, for instance the Vicolo del Precipizio (Precipice Alley), are far more typical.

The church, rebuilt from 1856–97 in the Romanesque-Gothic style, has excellent views over the surrounding country-side. CENTRAL TUSCANY

With Siena at its heart, this is an agricultural area of great scenic beauty, noted for its historic walled towns such as San Gimignano and Pienza. To the north of Siena is the Chianti Classico region, where some of Italy's best wines are produced; to the south is the Crete, with landscapes characterized by round clay hillocks, eroded of topsoil by heavy rain over the centuries.

The vine-clad hills to the north of Siena are dotted with farmhouses, villas and baronial castles. Many are now turned into luxury hotels or rental apartments, offering various leisure facilities such as tennis courts, swimming pools and riding stables: this is now one of the most popular areas for family holidays in the Tuscan countryside.

To the south of Siena, in the Crete, shepherds tend sheep whose milk is used to produce the pecorino cheese popular throughout Tuscany. Cypress trees, planted to provide windbreaks along roads and around isolated farms, are an important sculptural feature in this empty and primeval landscape.

Linking the two regions is the S2 highway, an ancient road along which pilgrims made their way in the Middle Ages, followed by travellers on the Grand Tour (see p55) in the 18th and 19th centuries. Romanesque churches line the roads, and the valleys and passes are defended by castles and garrison towns, most of which have hardly changed over the years.

CONSTANT CONFLICT

The history of the region is of a long feud between the two city states of Florence and Siena. Siena's finest hour was its victory in the Battle of Montaperti in 1260, but when Siena finally succumbed to the Black Death, and subsequently to a crushing defeat by Florence in the siege of 1554–5, the city went into decline.

As several other Central Tuscan cities experienced the same fate, this lovely region became a forgotten backwater, frozen in time. But after centuries of neglect, the graceful late-medieval buildings in many of the towns are now being well restored, making this the most architecturally rewarding part of Tuscany to explore.

The beautifully preserved fortified town of Monteriggioni

Exploring Central Tuscany

The beautiful city of Siena, with its narrow streets and medieval buildings of rose-coloured brick, is the natural starting place for exploring the heart of Tuscany. From here it is only a short drive to the castle-dotted landscapes of Chianti to the north, or to historic towns such as San Gimignano and Montepulciano. Although these towns are full of visitors during the day, at night they revert to their timeless Tuscan character and many have first-class restaurants serving local fare. The landscape is of cypresses, olive groves, vineyards, simple churches and stone farmhouses.

Wicker-covered damigiane (demijohns) transporting local Chianti wine

GETTING AROUND

The S2 is the main road south through Siena. The S222 links Florence with Siena and is known as the Chiantigiana (Chianti Way) as it passes through the Chianti wine-growing area. Both routes are well served by bus services, and tour operators in both cities offer tours of the main sites. Train services are limited to one line between Florence and Siena. A car is a great advantage, especially for visiting the Chianti wine estates.

The approach to this abbey is through thick cypresses, with stunning views of eroded cliffs and sheer drops to the valley floor. It was founded in 1313 by the Olivetan order, who were dedicated to restoring the simplicity of Benedictine monastic rule. The 15th-century rose-pink abbey church is a Baroque building with outstanding choir stalls of inlaid wood.

Alongside is the Great Cloister (1427–74), whose walls are covered by a cycle of frescoes on the life of St Benedict, begun by Luca Signorelli, a pupil of Piero della Francesca, in 1495. He completed nine panels; the remaining 27 were finished by Sodoma in 1508. The cycle, which begins on the east wall with Benedict's early life, is considered a masterpiece of fresco painting for its combination of architectural and naturalistic detail.

Street-by-Street: San Gimignano 1

The distinctive skyline of San Gimignano must have been a welcome sight to the faithful in medieval times, for the town lay on the main pilgrim route from northern Europe to Rome. This gave rise to its great prosperity at that time, when its population was twice what it is today. The plague of 1348, and later the diversion of the pilgrim route, led to its economic decline. Following World War II there was a rapid recovery thanks to tourism and local wine production. For a small town, San Gimignano is rich in works of art, and good shops and restaurants.

one of the most frescoed churches in Italy. The arches bordering the central aisle are painted in striking blue and white stripes, and the deep blue paint of the vaulted roof is speckled with gold stars. At the back of the church, on the nave walls, are scenes from The Last Judgment, painted by Taddeo di Bartolo (1393–6). They depict the souls of the damned being tortured in hell by devils relishing their task.

The tiny Santa Fina chapel, off the south aisle, is covered with a cycle of frescoes by

Exploring Siena

Siena is a city of steep medieval alleys surrounding the Piazza del Campo. The buildings around the square symbolize the golden age of the city between 1260 and 1348, when wealthy citizens contributed to a major programme of civic building. Siena's decline began in 1348 when the Black Death hit the city, killing a third of the population; 200 years later many more died in an 18-month siege ending in defeat by the Florentines. The victors repressed all further development and building in Siena, which remained frozen in time, crammed with many renovated medieval buildings.

The fountain now seen in the square is a 19th-century copy of the original, which was carved by Jacopo della Quercia in 1409–19. This was removed to preserve it from the ravages of the weather.

The reliefs on the fountain depict Adam and Eve, the Madonna and Child, and the Virtues. Water is fed into it by a 25-km (15-mile) aqueduct, which has brought fresh water into the city from the hills since the 14th century.

The belltower to the left of the Palazzo Pubblico is the second-highest in Italy, at 102 m (330 ft). Built by the brothers Muccio and Francesco di Rinaldo between 1338–48, it is named after the first bell ringer, who was nicknamed Mangiaguadagni (literally “eat the profits”) because of his great idleness. (It was the bell ringer's responsibility to warn the citizens of impending danger.) There are 505 steps to the top of the tower, which has views across Tuscany.

The Palazzo Pubblico serves as the town hall, but the state rooms are open to the public. The main council chamber is called the Sala del Mappamondo, after a map of the world painted by Ambrogio Lorenzetti in the early 1300s. One wall is covered by Simone Martini's Maestà (Virgin in Majesty). Painted in 1315, it depicts the Virgin Mary as the Queen of Heaven, attended by the Apostles, saints and angels. Opposite is Martini's fresco of the mercenary Guidoriccio da Fogliano (1330).

The walls of the adjacent chapel are covered with frescoes of the Life of the Virgin (1407) by Taddeo di Bartolo, and the choir stalls (1428) feature wooden panels inlaid with biblical scenes.

The Sala della Pace contains the famous Allegory of Good and Bad Government, a pair of frescoes by Ambrogio Lorenzetti, finished in 1338. In The Good Government (see pp46–7) civic life flourishes, while The Bad Government reveals ruins and rubbish-strewn streets. The Sala del Risorgimento is Siena's patron saint, Catherine Benincasa (1347–80), was the daughter of a tradesman. She took the veil aged eight, and experienced many visions of God, from whom she also received the stigmata. Her eloquence persuaded Gregory XI to return the seat of the papacy to Rome in 1376, after 67 years of exile in Avignon. She died in Rome and was canonized in 1461. Today, her house is surrounded by chapels and cloisters. It is decorated with paintings of events from her life by artists such as Pietro Sorri and Francesco Vanni, both her contemporaries.

Siena Duomo

Siena's Duomo (1136–1382) is one of the most spectacular in Italy, and one of the few to have been built south of the Alps in full Gothic style. Many ordinary citizens helped to cart the black and white stone used in its construction from quarries on the outskirts of the city. In 1339, the Siennese decided to build a new nave to the south with the aim of making it the biggest church in Christendom. This plan came to nothing when plague hit the city soon afterwards, killing off much of the population. The uncompleted nave now contains a museum of Gothic sculpture.

Carved by Nicola Pisano in 1265–8, the panels on the octagonal pulpit depict scenes from The Life of Christ.

The Palio is Tuscany's most celebrated festival and takes place on 2 July and 16 August each year in the Campo (see p218). It is a bareback horse race and was first recorded in 1283, but may have had its origins in Roman military training. The jockeys represent the 17 contrade or districts; the horses are chosen by the drawing of straws and are then blessed at the local contrada churches. The races are preceded by heavy betting and pageantry, but only last about 90 seconds each. The winner is awarded a palio (banner).

Abbey and oratory daily.

The ruined Cistercian abbey is surrounded by woodland and in a superb setting. It is very remote but well worth the effort of getting there for the beauty of the surroundings and the majesty of the roofless building. Begun in 1218, the abbey is Gothic in style; unusual in Tuscany, this reflects the French origins of the Cistercian monks who designed and built it.

The monks avoided contact with civilization and divided their lives between prayer and labour, clearing the hills of vegetation to graze their sheep. Despite the Cistercian emphasis on poverty, the monks became wealthy from the sale of wool; by the middle of the 14th century, the abbey was corruptly administered and gradually fell into decline.

In the late 14th century, the English mercenary Sir John Hawkwood sacked the abbey and by 1397 the abbot was the sole occupant. Numbers recovered for a time but the abbey was eventually dissolved in 1652. Empty for many years, the cloister and other monastic buildings alongside the church are now being restored for the Olivetan order of nuns.

On a hill above the abbey is the beehive-shaped chapel of Montesiepi, built on the site of St Galgano's hermitage around 1185, a few years after his death in 1181.

St Galgano's sword stands embedded in a stone just inside the door of the circular oratory. The 14th-century stone walls of the side chapel are covered with frescoes showing scenes from Galgano's life by Ambrogio Lorenzetti (1344); some are now in a poor state of repair.

The shop alongside the chapel sells locally-made herbs, wines, olive oils and toiletries along with books on the history of the region.

Montalcino's foremost activity is wine-producing, as is evident from the number of shops where you can both sample and buy the excellent local Brunello wines (see p268).

The town, situated on the top of a hill, is of timeless character and the streets are narrow, winding and steep. The highest point is the 14th-century Fortezza and its impressive ramparts, built by Cosimo I in 1571.

THE LEGEND OF ST GALGANO

Galgano was born in 1148, the son of noble parents, and grew into a brave but dissolute young knight. He saw his life as futile and turned to God, renouncing the material world. When he tried to break his sword against a rock as a symbol of his rejection of war, it was swallowed by the stone. This he interpreted as a sign of God's approval. He built a hut on the site of today's chapel at Montesiepi, and died a hermit in 1181. In 1185 Pope Urban III declared him a saint and an example to all Christian knights.

Montalcino's 14th-century Fortezza

Spectacular views over the surrounding countryside are available from the walkway on the ramparts.

There is an Enoteca (wine shop) in the grounds of the Fortezza, where the Brunello red wines are on sale.

Inside the fortress there is an ancient Siennese battle standard, a reminder that the town gave refuge to a band of rebels after Florence conquered Siena in 1555. In remembrance of this, flag-bearers from the village of Montalcino are given the honour of leading the parade before the Palio in Siena every year (see p222).

As you walk down into the town from the Fortezza, the monastery of Sant'Agostino and its 14th-century church, with an attractive rose window, are on the right. Just beyond is the Palazzo Vescovile, formerly the bishop's palace. The Palazzo Comunale stands on the Piazza del Popolo. Constructed in the 13th and 14th centuries, its tall, slim tower rises above the town.

The Duomo, San Salvatore, was designed in 1818–32 by Agostino Fantastici, and replaced the original Romanesque church building.

Collegiata in San Quirico

Standing just inside the city walls, San Quirico d'Orcia's pride is the Collegiata, featuring three ornately carved Romanesque portals built onto an 8th-century structure. Begun in 1080, the capitals and lintels of the portals are carved with details of dragons, mermaids and other mythical beasts.

The church commemorates the 3rd-century martyr St Quiricus, who was killed at the age of five by the Romans for the simple act of declaring himself a Christian. Quiricus is depicted in the elaborate altar piece by Sano di Pietro, along with the Virgin and Child and other saints.

Next to the church is the 17th-century Palazzo Chigi, whose frescoed interior has recently been restored. The Horti Leonini nearby is a 16th-century garden of box hedges nestling within the town walls. It was intended as a refuge for pilgrims, and is now used as a public sculpture garden during the summer months.

The pool is no longer open for bathing but is still well worth a visit to admire the architecture. Sulphur pools in the grounds of the Posta Marcucci hotel are open for swimming.

He planned to transform his birthplace into a model Renaissance town, but the grand scheme never progressed beyond the handful of buildings around the Piazza Pio II. The architect Bernardo Rossellino was commissioned to build a Duomo, papal palace and town hall, which were finished in three years. Subsequently Rossellino was caught embezzling papal funds, but Pius II forgave him because he was so delighted with his new buildings.

Montepulciano is built along a narrow limestone ridge and, at 605 m (1,950 ft) above sea level, is one of the highest of Tuscany's hilltop towns. The town is encircled by walls and fortifications designed by Antonio da Sangallo the Elder in 1511 for Cosimo I. Inside the walls the streets are crammed with Renaissance-style palazzi and churches, but the town is chiefly known for its good local Vino Nobile wines (see p268). A long winding street called the Corso climbs up into the main square, which crowns the summit of the hill.

On the Corso is the Art Deco Caffè Poliziano, which has an art gallery in the basement. In July the café hosts a jazz festival and the town fills with musicians who perform at the Cantiere Internazionale d'Arte (see p35), an arts festival directed by the German composer Hans Werner Henze.

In August there are two festivals: the Bruscello takes place on the 14th, 15th and 16th, when scenes from the town's turbulent history are re-enacted. For the Bravio delle Botti, on the last Sunday in August, there is a parade through the streets followed by a barrel race and a banquet.

This beautiful abbey church (see pp44–5) has inspired many poets and painters and enchants everyone who comes here. The creamy travertine church is set against a background of tree-clad hills in the Starcia valley. The very earliest surviving church on the site dates back to the 9th century, but locals prefer to think the church was founded by the Holy Roman Emperor Charlemagne in 781. The main part of the church was built in 1118 in the French Romanesque style, and the exterior is decorated with interlaced blank arcades carved with the symbols of the Four Evangelists.

The soft, honey-coloured alabaster interior has an odd luminous quality which is seen to change according to time of day and season. The capitals in the nave are carved with geometric designs, leaf motifs and biblical scenes. Recorded plainsong echoes around the walls, adding to the eerie atmosphere.

The Augustinian monks who tend the church sing Gregorian chant at mass every Sunday and there are organ concerts in the church during July and August.

Gaiole is a very quiet agricultural town with a stream running down the main street; wine can be sampled here at the local cooperative. In Badia a Coltibuono there is a restaurant (see p292) and a Romanesque church, and Radda in Chianti offers extensive views over the Parco Naturale della Virigilia. At Castellina in Chianti, there is a 15th-century underground passage built for defence purposes, and the Enoteca Vini Gallo Nero (Via della Rocca 13), which is a showcase for the region's wines (see pp268–9).

SOUTHERN TUSCANY

The southernmost part of Tuscany and the island of Elba have a very different feel to any other Tuscan region. Thanks to the hotter, drier and sunnier climate, the hills are cloaked in aromatic Mediterranean scrub, known as macchia. Palm trees grow in towns and also edge the sandy beaches, and strands of prickly pear cactus are traditionally used to mark field boundaries in the countryside.

The coastline, lined with fishing villages and beaches, is very popular in the summer, with numerous holiday villages and caravan sites. Resorts such as Monte Argentario have a much more exclusive image, and are favoured by the wealthy, yacht-owning Italians from Rome and Milan. Inland, the region's wild and unspoiled hills are popular with sportsmen, who come to hunt for wild boar and deer.

The transformation of the marshy coastal strip, known as the Maremma, into a holiday playground is a recent development. The ancient Etruscans, followed by the Romans (see p42), drained its swamps to create richly fertile farming land. After the collapse of the Roman Empire, the drainage channels became choked, turning the Maremma into an inhospitable wilderness of marshland and stagnant pools plagued by malaria-carrying mosquitoes. Re-draining of the land began again in the late 18th century and, with the help of insecticides, the malaria-mosquito was finally eliminated in the 1950s.

LITTLE DEVELOPMENT

The region slumbered from Roman times and for long periods was virtually uninhabited except for farmers and fishermen. Consequently there are few cities or major architectural and artistic monuments. On the other hand, archaeological remains have survived because there were few people here to salvage the stone for new buildings. The relative lack of intensive farming means the region is still rich in wildlife, from butterflies and orchids to tortoises and porcupines.

Detail of Romanesque tympanum on the Duomo at Massa Marittima

Exploring Southern Tuscany

Away from the coastal resorts, this region remains relatively undiscovered; quiet roads and a lack of tourists only add to the pleasure of exploring rock-cut tombs in Sovana, bathing in hot sulphurous springs at Saturnia or wandering through the Maremma spotting the wildlife. For a busier atmosphere, visit the resorts of Orbetello and Monte Argentario, which have plenty of choice for shopping, restaurants and nightlife.

GETTING AROUND

The S1 coastal route cannot cope with the traffic in summer and is best avoided. A busy railway line runs alongside; most trains stop at Grosseto and Orbetello, and buses from Grosseto serve most towns in the area. Vehicle and passenger ferries depart from Piombino to Elba every 30 minutes during the day in summer. Bus services from Portoferraio cover all parts of the island.

Set in the Colline Metallifere (metal-bearing hills), from which lead, copper and silver ores were mined, Massa Marittima is far from being a grimy industrial town. Its history is closely associated with mining and there are some excellent examples of Romanesque architecture.

A Day Out on Elba

Elba's most famous resident was Napoleon, who spent nine months here after the fall of Paris in 1814. Today the island is mainly populated by holidaymakers, who come by ferry from Piombino, 10 km (6 miles) away on the mainland. The main town is Portoferraio, with an old port and a modern seafront with smart hotels. The landscape of the island is varied: on the west coast there are sandy beaches, suitable for all water sports; inland, olive groves and vineyards line hillsides, and vegetation covers the mountains. The east coast is more rugged, with high cliffs and stony beaches.

Marciana Marina ③

Return to the main road and follow the coast round, past Procchio with its long sandy bays. From here it is 7.5 km (4.5 miles) to the marina.

Marciana Alta ④

From the marina take the main road into the hills to the old medieval town. After 8 km (5 miles) turn left on to a minor road leading to the cable car up to the top of Monte Capanne.

Marina di Campo ⑤ Stay on the coast road, round the west end of the island, until Marina di Campo.

The Maremma 7

Maramma butterfly

The ancient Romans were the first to cultivate the marshes of the Maremma, but after the collapse of their empire the area went virtually uninhabited until the 18th century. The land has since been reclaimed, the irrigation canals unblocked and farming developed on the fertile soil.

The Parco Naturale dell'Uccellina was set up in 1975 to protect the abundant local flora and fauna and prevent more development taking place.

This salt marsh, cut by irrigation canals, is home to herons, storks and other wading birds.

Canoes can be hired to explore the irrigation canals.

There are picnic tables on the beach in the shade of pine trees.

Sea lilies and hollies grow along the sandy shoreline, backed by groves of parasol pines, mastic trees and juniper.

Wildlife

The undergrowth and marshes are home to wild boar and other wildlife.

Entry permits are sold at Alberese.

Beaches

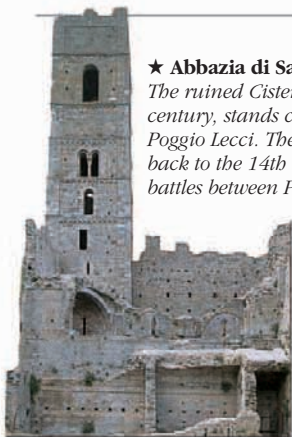

The shoreline south of Marina di Alberese has wide, sandy beaches sheltered by steep cliffs.

The cliffs are crowned by 16th-century watchtowers, part of a defence system built by the Medici to protect the coastal region from attack.

★ Abbazia di San Rabano

The ruined Cistercian abbey, built in the 12th century, stands close to the park's highest peak, Poggio Lecci. The tower and fortifications date back to the 14th century, the time of the fierce battles between Pisa and Siena.

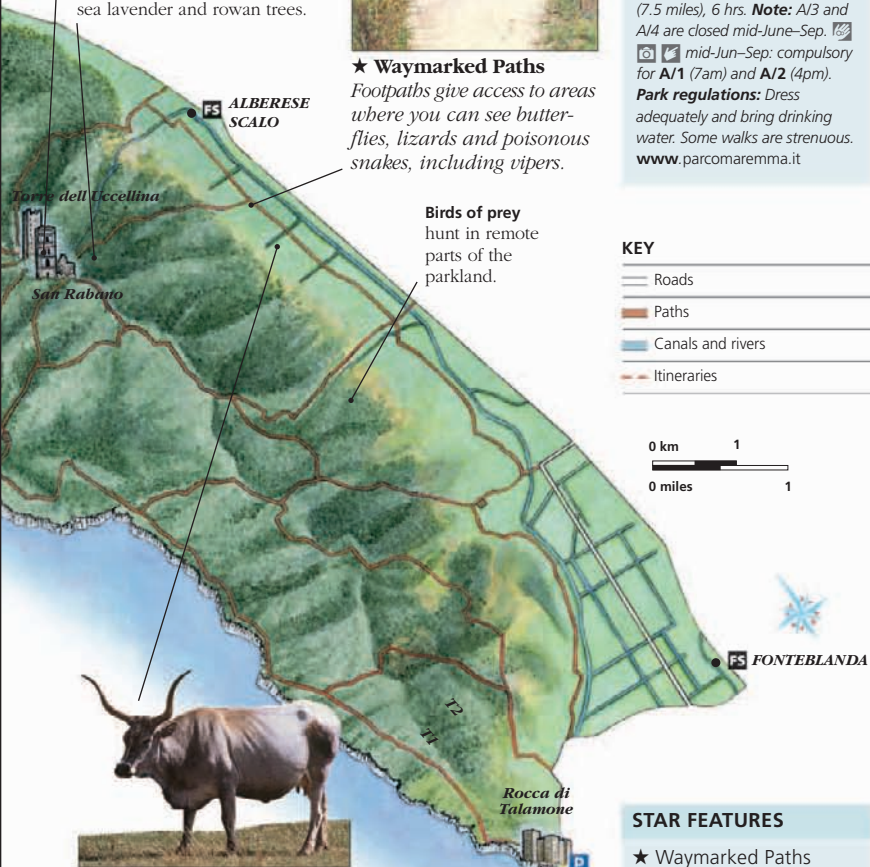

The hills running parallel to the coast are cloaked in scrub called macchia, consisting of rosemary, broom, rock rose, sea lavender and rowan trees.

The frescoes of the late 15th-century Siena School in the medieval church of Santa Maria were discovered under the whitewashed walls. The main altar is sheltered by a 9th-century canopy that was originally in the Romanesque Duomo. This 12th-century building incorporates sculpture from earlier churches built on the same site.

Monte Argentario was an island until the early 18th century, when the shallow waters separating it from the mainland began to silt up, creating two sandy spits of land, known as tomboli, that enclose the Orbetello lagoon. Orbetello itself was linked to the island in 1842, when a dyke was constructed linking the mainland to Terrarossa.

The two harbour towns of Porto Ercole and Porto Santo Stéfano are both favoured by wealthy yacht owners. There are good fish restaurants in both towns (see p263), and from the Strada Panoramica there are views over rocky coves, cliffs and bays. Ferries from Porto Santo Stéfano go to the island of Giglio, popular with Italian tourists for its sandy beaches and rich wildlife.

WHERE TO STAY

Of all Italy's regions, Tuscany has some of the most charming places to stay. Inland these range from ancient villas to elegant town houses. Smaller, family-run establishments excel in their cuisine and are sometimes filled with antiques. The major cities also offer B&B accommodation. Hotels on the riviera tend to be less distinctive, but the popularity of coastal resorts in summer means that standards are high. Many visitors opt for self-catering holidays. Often the accommodation is a small flat or house on a farm, and the prices can prove very reasonable. Other options include hostels and dormitories and, for walking enthusiasts, there are mountain huts throughout the region. For more information on hotels in Florence and Tuscany see the listings on pages 250–63.

Sign showing hotel rating

Terrace at Hotel Continentale, Florence (see p251)

WHERE TO LOOK

Florence has a wide range of hotels, but prices can be high. The most attractive locations are along the north bank of the Arno, the historic centre and in nearby Fiesole.

Parking is a problem in the city centre, so if you have a car it is best to choose a hotel which has parking facilities.

Accommodation in central Pisa is generally sub-standard but there are some lovely Tuscan villa hotels a short drive from the centre.

Though large, Arezzo has relatively few hotels and those in the centre are mostly geared for business people. If you can, stay outside the town and travel in to visit the centre.

The hill towns of central Tuscany offer a number of quality villa hotels, manor houses and even former palaces. The Chianti region is rich in converted villa hotels, with excellent regional restaurants, particularly around Radda and Gaiole. Siena's more attractive options are outside the city, such as the tiny hamlet of Strove.

Street sign showing the direction and location of hotels

HOTEL PRICES

During the low season (November to March) prices are cheaper and often negotiable. Florence is less busy than other parts of Tuscany in July and August, but this is the peak holiday season on the coast. Avoid the city during certain weeks of January and July when fashion shows fill the top hotels, raising low-season prices.

Single room rates are higher than individual rates for two people sharing a double room. Prices include tax and service. Bear in mind that accommodation in Florence and Siena is more expensive than elsewhere in the region.

HIDDEN EXTRAS

Before making a reservation, establish whether breakfast is included in the price. Garage parking, laundry and snacks in the hotel or from the minibar may be pricey and telephone charges from your hotel room can be phenomenal. Check the rates first if you are concerned. Some hotels may expect you to take full- or half-board during the high season.

HOTEL GRADINGS AND FACILITIES

Hotels in Italy are classified by a star-rating system, from one to five stars. However, each province sets its own levels for grading; consequently, standards for each category may vary from one area to another. Some hotels may not have a restaurant but those that do will usually welcome non-residents to stop by and eat.

Some of the converted castles and ancient villas are not air-conditioned, but as the stone walls are thick the midsummer heat barely penetrates the buildings.

Children are welcome but the smaller hotels generally have limited facilities. Often, more up-market hotels will arrange a baby-sitting service.

WHAT TO EXPECT

In Florence, street numbers can be confusing (see p305), so refer to the map references in the listings.

Hotel proprietors are obliged by law to register you with the police, so they will ask for your passport when you arrive. Make sure you take it back, as you will need some form of identification to change money or travellers' cheques.

Even a humble pensione should have a reasonably smart bathroom. Rooms without a bathroom will usually have wash basins and towels.

As far as hotel decoration goes, you may sometimes have to sacrifice smart decor for the charm of an old establishment.

The Italian breakfast is light – a cappuccino and a pastry (brioche). Most hotels serve a continental breakfast of coffee, tea or hot chocolate, bread rolls and jam. However, it may be cheaper to go to a local bar or a pasticceria .

Florence can be very noisy. Top-class hotels usually have some form of soundproofing, but ask for a room facing away from the street if you are easily disturbed by noise.

Check-out time is usually noon in four- and five-star hotels and between 10am and noon in other establishments. If you stay longer you will be asked to pay for an extra day. However, many hotels will store your baggage if you plan on leaving the city several hours after check-out time. Most hotels offer Internet access and accept credit cards but be sure to check when booking, if you require these or any other facilities.

BOOKING AND PAYING

Book at least two months in advance if you want to stay in a particular hotel in high season or at Easter. The local tourist office will have listings of all the hotels in the area and will be able to advise you on the best hotels for each category. Most hotels take credit cards, but check which ones when booking. You can usually pay the deposit by credit card, or send an international money order. Confirm your reservation by fax or e-mail including the dates of your stay and your credit card details.

Under Italian law, a booking is valid as soon as the deposit is paid and confirmation is received. As in restaurants, you are required by law to keep your hotel receipt until you leave Italy.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

Facilities for the disabled are usually limited. The hotel listings on pages 250–63 indicate which hotels have these facilities.

HOTELS IN HISTORIC BUILDINGS

The Tuscany regional tourist board publishes a leaflet which lists hotels in historic buildings and those of artistic interest. Some of the best are included in the listings here. The booklet is also available from national Italian tourist offices worldwide. Relais & Châteaux produces a guide that includes a number of fine Tuscan hotels and hotel restaurants of historic interest, all of high quality.

Villa San Michele, a former monastery, in Fiesole (see p256)

AGRITURISMOS

Farm and villa holiday accommodation abounds in Tuscany. Tourist offices can help visitors arrange a rural stay with an agriturismo. These vary from B&Bs to working farms, and give the visitor an opportunity to experience traditional rural life, and sample locally sourced food.

SELF-CATERING

There are many international agencies offering self-catering holidays around Florence such as Your Way to Florence. Other agents include Cuendet in Monteriggioni and Prima Italia in Grosseto. Tastes of Italy is based in the UK, and Interhome has offices in the UK, the US and Australia.

Prices for self-catering vary enormously depending on the season and location. Generally, a four-person villa within a complex in the low season will cost around €450 per week, while an individual villa in its own grounds can cost as much as €1,750 per week during the peak season.

STAYING IN PRIVATE HOMES

Rooms in private homes can usually be rented through one of the recreational associations such as AB&BA (Associazione Bed & Breakfast Affittacamere) in Florence. Meals are not provided but can sometimes be arranged on request.

complexes of small apartments, often with swimming pools or bars. The minimum period of stay is usually a week, but there is more flexibility in low season.

Residential hotels in Florence include Residence San Niccolò and Palazzo Ricasoli. The local tourist offices can help.

HOTEL COOPERATIVES

These are not chains but consortiums of different hotel types. Family Hotel specializes in small, intimate family hotels and B&Bs, while Florence Promhotels provides a wider range of accommodation. Chianti Slow Travel books rooms in villas, castles and farmhouses in the Chianti region.

BUDGET ACCOMMODATION

For one- and two-star budget hotels, visitors should expect to pay from €30 to €50 per person per night. They are generally small, family-run establishments that were originally known as pensioni. The term is no longer in use; however, many places retain the name and personal character that has made them so popular. Most offer breakfast and some have rooms with private bathrooms, but do not expect particularly high standards of service.

Hostel and dormitory accommodation can often be found in convents and religious institutions. Dormitory accommodation can be arranged through the local tourist office. The Associazione Italiana Alberghi per la Gioventù (Italian Youth Hostel Association) in Rome has lists of youth hostels in Italy. The main youth hostel in Florence is Europa Villa Camerata.

Full lists and booking facilities for youth hostels are available through the Italian tourist board (ENIT) worldwide or from the local tourist offices. Go to www.enit.it; alternatively, log on to www.ostellionline.org.

ALBERGHI

Albergo is Italian for hotel but the term tends to refer to the upper categories. Room sizes vary considerably: in city centres even expensive hotels can have far smaller rooms than their counterparts in other countries, whereas outside the city your room may be more like a small suite. In general, alberghi will have private showers in all rooms and the more luxurious have baths. In city centres you may come across the sign albergo diurno. This is a day hotel without accommodation but with bathroom, showers, hairdressing, drying and other cleaning facilities you may need when travelling. Day hotels are usually situated at or near the main railway station.

MOUNTAIN REFUGES AND CAMP SITES

If you are likely to be trekking, backpacking or walking, there are mountain refuges and huts dotted throughout Tuscany. The Garfagnana in the north west of Tuscany is worthy of note for these outdoor activities. This area caters for tourists well and is renowned for its outstanding natural beauty. There are also camp sites on the fringes of most towns. A list of camp sites and mountain refuges is available from www.enit.it or local tourist offices. Club Alpino Italiano in Milan owns most of the huts in the mountain districts of Italy, including Tuscany. The Touring Club Italiano publishes a list of camp sites in Campeggi e Villaggi Turistici in Italy.

Florence's Best Hotels

In a city renowned for its splendid architecture, it is hardly surprising that many of Florence's hotels are favoured by visitors for their charm and individual character. Former palazzi, monasteries such as Villa San Michele, and town villas offer a range of accommodation, though usually at a high price. Original features are sometimes preserved at the expense of modern comforts: among the older establishments listed on pages 250–56 we try to include those that combine both. The hotels shown here are a selection of the best.

Hotel Beacci Tornabuoni

This family-run former palace is particularly welcoming and furnished with fine antiques. (See p253.)

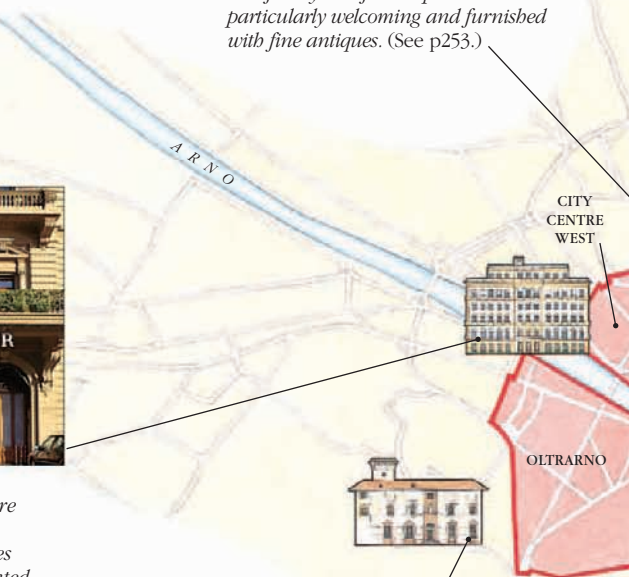

Hotel Excelsior

On a 13th-century square near the river Arno, this beautiful hotel epitomizes luxury, with well-appointed bedrooms and 19th-century fittings. (See p253.)

Torre di Bellosguardo

Vast, ancient and individual, this imposing hilltop tower and luxurious villa lives up to its name: beautiful view. (See p256.)

RESTAURANTS, CAFES AND BARS

Food is one of the great Italian passions, and eating out on a balmy summer's evening can be a memorable experience. Few restaurants in Tuscany serve anything but Italian food, and most concentrate on the robust fare that typifies the region's cuisine. Most Tuscans take their lunch (pranzo) around 1pm, and have dinner (cena) from 8pm. Restaurants may shut for several weeks during the winter and also during the holiday season in summer. If in doubt, phone first to check that the restaurant is open. Finding the restaurants in Florence can be confusing due to the dual numbering of the streets (see p305), so use the map references. The restaurants listed on pages 270–281 have been selected from the best the city and region can offer across all price ranges.

Italian waiter at your service

TYPES OF RESTAURANTS AND BARS

Italian restaurants have a bewildering variety of names, but in practice there's little difference between a trattoria, osteria or ristorante in terms of price, cooking or ambience. Both a birreria and spaghetteria are more down-market establishments, and sell beer, pasta dishes and snacks. A pizzeria is a cheap, informal restaurant with pasta, meat and fish on the menu as well as pizzas. It is usually open only in the evening, especially if it has wood-fired ovens.

At lunchtime you could visit a tavola calda, which will offer a range of hot and cold pasta dishes, vegetables and meats. A rosticceria offers spit-roast chicken to take away, often with other fast foods. Most bars sell filled rolls (panini) and sandwiches (tramezzini) and small pizza bars sell slices of pizza (pizza taglia) to eat on the street.

Old-fashioned wine bars (vinai or fiascbetterie) are a dying breed, but they are atmospheric places to grab a snack or a glass of wine. Ice cream parlours (gelaterie), by contrast, are thriving, and Florence has some of the best in Italy.

VEGETARIAN FOOD

Most Italians find it hard to understand vegetarianism, and Florence boasts only a couple of vegetarian restaurants. However, in the wake of mad-cow disease, restaurants are offering a wider vegetarian selection and you should have no trouble assembling a meat-free meal, particularly if you eat fish and seafood. Starters (antipasti) will usually include some suitable dishes. There are also vegetable-based soups and pasta sauces, although you will need to check that they have been cooked with vegetable stock (brodo vegetariano).

HOW MUCH TO PAY

Prices are often higher in Florence than elsewhere. In the cheaper eating establishments and pizzerias you can have a two-course or a fixed-price (menù turistico) meal with half a litre of wine for around €15–€20. Average prices for a three-course meal are €20–€30, and in up-market restaurants you could easily pay as much as €40–€50.

Nearly all restaurants have a cover charge (pane e coperto), usually no more than €3.

Many also add a 10 per cent service charge (servizio) to the bill (il conto), so always establish whether or not this is the case. Where leaving a tip is a matter of your own discretion, 12–15 per cent is acceptable.

Restaurants are obliged by law to give you a receipt (una ricevuta). Scraps of paper with an illegible scrawl are illegal, and you are perfectly within your rights to ask for a proper bill.

The 13th-century Il Pozzo in Monteriggioni (see p279)

Cash is the preferred form of payment in most cafés and bars, but many restaurants, particularly the more expensive, will accept major credit cards. Check which cards are accepted when booking.

MAKING RESERVATIONS

Florence's best restaurants in all price ranges are well patronized. It is therefore advisable to try and reserve a table, even in the more down-market places. Where restaurants do not accept bookings, try to arrive early to avoid queuing.

SMOKING

Legislation requires restaurants and bars throughout Italy to provide separate no-smoking areas or they will be fined. At cafés and restaurants that do not provide sealed-off areas, smoking is limited to outside tables.

CHOICE OF WINE

House wines will usually be Chiantis or some close cousin. The cheaper establishments usually have only house wine, or a small choice of other Tuscan wines. Those in the €40–€50 price range will have a fuller selection of regional wines, as well as wines from other parts of Italy. At the top of the scale, there should be a wide range of Italian and local wines, and, as at the Enoteca Pinchiorri (see p271), a selection of French and other foreign vintages. (See also pp268–9.)

CHILDREN

Children are generally welcome in restaurants, but less so in the evening and in more up-market places. Special facilities such as high chairs are not commonly provided. Check the menu for the option of a small portion (una porzione piccola): most restaurants will prepare a half portion (mezza porzione) if requested.

WHEELCHAIR ACCESS

Few restaurants make special provision for wheelchairs, though a word when you are booking should ensure a conveniently situated table and assistance on arrival.

DRESS CODE

Italians are relaxed about eating out, but nevertheless like to dress up to dine. If in doubt, check if formal dress is required when booking.

READING THE MENU

A meal in a restaurant will usually start with antipasti, or hors d'œuvres (hams, olives, salamis, crostini), followed by primi (soups, pasta or rice). Main courses – secondi – will be meat or fish, either served alone or accompanied by vegetables (contorni) or a salad (insalata).

To finish, there will probably be a choice of fruit (frutta), cheese (formaggio), puddings (dolci), or a combination of all three. Coffee – always espresso, never cappuccino – is ordered at the end of a meal, often with a digestivo (see p269). In cheaper restaurants, the menu (il menù or la lista) may be written on a blackboard and in many establishments the waiter (cameriere) will recite the chef's daily specials at your table.

The Flavours of Florence and Tuscany

Tuscany is the orchard and vegetable garden of Italy, a vision of rolling, vine-clad hills and silvery grey olive groves, while the Ligurian sea yields a fabulous bounty of fish and seafood. The cuisine is rustic and simple, but always using the finest ingredients. It is said that Tuscany is where Italian cooking was born, thanks to Catherine de' Medici, an accomplished gourmet. Tuscans are known as mangiafagioli (bean eaters), because pulses are used so much in soups and robust stews. Juicy steaks from prized Valdichiana cattle, pork and game all feature strongly. Fungi are highly prized; even more so are truffles – “black gold”.

Black truffles

Freshly harvested Tuscan olives, for pressing into olive oil

FIRST AND FOREMOST

Tuscan olive oil is simply outstanding in quality. This “liquid gold” has countless uses and is an integral part of crostini, slices of toasted bread smeared with olive oil on which are spread different toppings, such as crostini alla Toscana, topped sautéed with chickens livers. Salumi producers are an important feature of the region and prosciutto di cinghiale (wild boar ham) is a rich, gamey delicacy. Soups and minestrone are also very popular, often made with beans, especially the white kidney beans known as cannellini. The most typical pasta is pappardelle, broad noodles that are often served with a rich hare sauce, called pappardelle alla lepore.

EARTH AND WATER

The shining star of meat dishes is tender, succulent beef steak, bistecca alla fiorentina. The best is from cattle raised in Valdichiana, south of Arezzo, delicious marinated with extra virgin olive oil and herbs, grilled over an open fire and usually served very rare. Tuscans are passionate hunters and

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Cantucci

The olive is the staple ingredient – even the branches of the tree are used for grilling.

Soups vary from those enriched with beans such as ribollita (“boiled again”), a rich soup of beans, herbs and vegetables whose second boiling makes it thicker and intensifies the flavour, to the simple, thin vegetable acquacotta (literally meaning “cooked water”) to which an egg is added before serving. The vast array of salamis and cold cuts includes finocchiona, salami flavoured with wild fennel. Robust stews include lepore in dolce e forte. This hare stew is cooked with citrus fruits, cocoa, garlic, rosemary, vegetables and red wine. For the sweet-toothed, Tuscany offers ricciarelli (diamond-shaped almond cakes), cantucci (above) and torta di riso – a golden, rich rice cake that is mouthwateringly delicious.

Minestrone alla fiorentina

This thick vegetable and bean soup may also contain cbicken and pork giblets.

A colourful assortment of local produce everything from the smallest songbird to the largest wild boar features on menus. Hare is a special favourite.

FUNGI FORAYS

From late August to early October Tuscans are seized by fungi fever. Armies of people with baskets make an annual pilgrimage to the Garfagna, Mugello and Maremma for prize pickings. The most sought-after are porcini (boletus or cep). Picking tends to be limited by licence and is certainly only advisable to those who know their edible fungi. Out of season, dried wild mushrooms accompany many dishes. But the star and most highly prized fungi hide underground, waiting to be sniffed out by hunters with their keen-scented dogs – the truffle (tartufo). The location of truffle troves is a closely-guarded secret as they are, literally, worth their weight in gold. San Miniato produces about a quarter of Italy's truffle crop, including the prized white truffle.

SWEET DELIGHTS

Chestnuts are plentiful and have many uses. They, with almonds and honey, are the main ingredients in some favourite and famous recipes. Castelnuovo della Garfagnana produces a superb chestnut cake, called torta garfagnana. Panforte, the Christmas cake originating from Siena, is a rich mix of fruits, nuts and spices. For something a little less rich, almond cantucci biscuits are sublime dipped into sweet vin santo wine.

Zuccotto In this Tuscan speciality, sponge cake is filled with almonds, hazelnuts, chocolate and cream.

What to Drink in Florence and Tuscany

Medieval engraving of a grape crusher

Tuscany is a major wine-producing region whose wines make ideal partners for the robust local food. Both reds and whites are made here, ranging from light, house wine (vino della casa) to the very best Europe can produce. The most famous reds, notably Brunello di Montalcino, Vino Nobile di Montepulciano and Chianti, are made from the Sangiovese grape and are produced inland, on the hills of Tuscany. A number of estates, particularly in Chianti Classico, also experiment with non-Italian grape varieties with considerable success. Throughout Tuscany, bars and cafés are open all day serving drinks from wine to beer and coffee. See also A Day Out in Chianti on page 229.

Il Poggione is an excellent producer of Brunello di Montalcino.

Carmignano, a good dry red, is made north of Florence.

RED WINE

Solaia

Chianti produced by Ruffino

Chianti is made in seven defined zones, but the best wines generally come from the hilly areas of Classico and Rufina. Brunello, from further south, needs ageing and can be expensive but Rosso di Montalcino, made for younger drinking, often offers better value. Tuscan table wine can be cheap or expensive – the top-priced wines may not fit the traditional Chianti regulations, but are likely to be extremely good. Sassicaia, made from the French Cabernet Sauvignon grape, is an example. Other fine reds include Fontalloro, Cepparello and Solaia.

WHITE WINE

Galestro

Tuscany's white wines are less interesting than the reds, although some producers are experimenting with a handful of quality whites from grapes such as Chardonnay and Sauvignon. Most Tuscan white wine is made from the Trebbiano grape, at its lightest in the spritzly style called Galestro, but usually sold as plain dry Bianco della Toscana. Vernaccia di San Gimignano, from the Vernaccia grape, is sometimes good and Montecarlo, from near Lucca, a blend of grapes, offers more interesting drinking. Most Tuscan whites need to be drunk young.

Vin Santo

Vin Santo, or "Holy Wine", is a traditional wine once made on farms throughout the region and now seeing a revival of interest from modern producers. The best versions are sweet, though it can be found as a dry wine. It is often offered with cantucci, small almond biscuits, in Tuscan restaurants and homes. Vin Santo is made from Trebbiano and Malvasia grapes which are semi-dried, made into wine and then aged in small barrels for a number of years before bottling. The best are very concentrated in flavour. Quality varies, but superb versions are made by Avignonesi and Isole e Olena.

HOW CHIANTI IS MADE

Chianti is made as soon as possible after the October harvest. The quality of the wine can be very high, as wineries have combined the best of traditional and modern techniques.

De-stemmer

Crushing and De-stemming

The Sangiovese grapes are separated from the stalks. The tannin from the skins preserves the wine, but the stalk tannin is too harsh for fine wine.

Fermentation

The juice and grape skins go into the vat where a pump circulates wine over the floating "cap" of skins to extract colour, tannin and flavour. Fermentation may take up to 15 days or more.

Fermentation vat

Pressing the Residue

Once the new wine has been drained off, the remaining skins and pips are pressed, producing dark and sometimes harsh press wine. Stored separately, this may be used in the final blend.

Press

Harvest at the Brolio estate in Gaiole in Chianti

Maturation

A second fermentation, the malolactic, occurs in the spring, softening the wine, which is then run into wooden barrels to mature.

Wooden cask

The barrels are topped up to prevent air from reaching the wine.

Cinzano, a popular early evening aperitivo

APERITIFS AND DIGESTIFS

Pre- and post-meal tipples include Campari, Cinzano and the artichoke-based Cynar, as well as Crodino, the best-known of several non-alcoholic drinks. The herb-flavoured amaro or a grappa commonly round off a meal; otherwise try a limoncello, a sweet, lemon-based liqueur, the aniseed-scented Sambuca or almond-flavoured Amaretto.

BEER

Beer can be a great thirst-quencher, especially in the summer heat. Draught beer (birra alla spina) is less expensive than bottled beer, and is sold by the measure. Good Italian lager-style beers include Peroni and Moretti.

OTHER DRINKS

Fruit juices are sold in small bottles (succo di frutta) or freshly squeezed (spremuta). In summer, iced tea or coffee can be refreshing. Italian coffee is drunk with frothy milk for breakfast (cappuccino) or black after meals (espresso). An espresso with a spot of milk is called a macchiato.

FLORENCE

CITY CENTRE EAST Cantinetta del Verrazzano

Map 6 D3

Perfect for lunch in the city or an after-shopping snack, this popular place is part-bakery and part wine bar. It belongs to the Verrazzano wine estate, and sells their wines exclusively. Sample a glass with some fine local cheeses. They serve a wonderful lunch of mixed Tuscan toasts or sandwiches, and also light cooked dishes. Open till 9pm.

CITY CENTRE EAST Semolina

Piazza Ghiberti 87, 50122 Tel 055 234 75 84

Map 4 F1

Try excellent thin crust pizzas at this lively pizzeria on the other side of Sant' Ambrogio market. Regular pasta dishes and Florentine specialities such as bistecca Fiorentina are also available. It has a bright decor with tribal African touches. Service is cheeky and the atmosphere is fun and noisy.

CITY CENTRE EAST L'Antico Noe

Volta di San Pietro 6, off Bargo degli Albizi, 50122 Tel 055 234 08 38

Map 6 F3

L'Antico Noe is a rustic little eatery hidden under an arched alleyway. It is typically Tuscan, with cured hams and cop- perware hanging on the walls, exuberant service and excellent food made from seasonal ingredients. The grilled meats and the traditional Florentine T-bone steak are very good, and there is a range of fresh pasta dishes.

CITY CENTRE EAST Baldovino

Via San Giuseppe 22r, 50122 Tel 055 24 17 73

Map 4 E1

Big, noisy and lively, Baldovino is one of those places where you can eat anything, from a salad or a plate of cheese to a full meal. In between there are excellent pizzas, good pasta dishes, a choice of fish or meat main courses and a number of vegetarian options. Puddings are particularly good and there's a long wine list.

CITY CENTRE EAST Boccadama

Piazza Santa Croce 25–26r, 50122 Tel 055 24 36 40

Map 6 F4

This wine bar/restaurant enjoys a superb position on Piazza Santa Croce with a handful of outside tables; shelves of wine line the walls of the cosy interior. Wine can be ordered by the glass or the bottle from a long list. You can either nibble on a selection of cheese or cold meats or go for a full meal; the food is good and quite imaginative.

CITY CENTRE EAST Coquinaros

Via delle Oche 15r, 50122 Tel 055 230 21 53

Map 6 E2

A convenient, cosy little place, just behind the Duomo, where you can eat at almost any time of the day or evening. There are some delicious pasta dishes (try the ravioli with pecorino and pears). You can also order a salad, a plate of cheese or cured meats or a toasted open sandwich. There are good wines by the glass and bottle too.

CITY CENTRE EAST Antico Fattore

Map 6 D4

This trattoria, a favoured haunt of the Florentine literati, was founded in 1908. Though it has lost some of its old charm, having been badly damaged by the 1993 Uffizi bomb, the food and service are still of a refreshingly old-fashioned kind. Try the pasta with wild boar and the involtini (meat wraps) with artichoke hearts.

CITY CENTRE EAST Buca dell'Orafo

Via de Girolami 28, 50122 Tel 055 21 36 19

Map 6 D4

This Florentine "cellar" restaurant is down steep stairs in an alley by the Ponte Vecchio. The fantastic Tuscan fare is prepared from fresh local ingredients – try spaghettoni with fresh peas or an omelette of fried artichokes in season, before the must-have bistecca Fiorentina, which is always perfectly cooked and served with a slick of oil.

CITY CENTRE EAST Frescobaldi Wine Bar

Via dei Magazzini 2/4r, 50122 Tel 055 28 47 24

Map 6 E3

This wine bar and restaurant is owned by one of Tuscany's foremost wine producers. Lunch is a casual affair while dinner is a little more formal, with white cloths and gleaming crystal. Creative, elegant food is accompanied by some fine, in-house wines; if you just want a snack and a glass, pop into Frescobaldino next door.

CITY CENTRE EAST Teatro del Sale

Via de' Macci 111, 50122 Tel 055 200 14 92

Map 4 E1

An inventive mix of private members' club, canteen and theatre, this is another venture from Fabio Picchi of Cibreo fame. Typically Tuscan dishes, such as tripe and risotto, are offered buffet style – with unlimited refills. A €5 membership fee gives access to the buffet lunch for €15, including wine and coffee.

CITY CENTRE EAST Osteria del Caffè Italiano

V Isola delle Stinche 11/13r, 50122 Tel 055 28 93 68

Map 6 F3

You can eat at any time of the day in this beautifully appointed restaurant; at mealtimes there is a full menu of mainly Tuscan dishes, but in between times, you can snack on excellent cheeses or cured meats and choose from a selection of Tuscan wines. The next door pizzeria is under the same ownership.

CITY CENTRE EAST Cibreo

Map 4 F1

This restaurant offers superbly prepared traditional Tuscan dishes. There is no pasta, but an array of sublime soups and thoroughly Florentine dishes such as tripe, cockscomb or kidneys. Safer options include lamb with artichokes or stuffed pigeon. Desserts are fabulous. Next door is the cheaper Cibreo Trattoria, serving food from the same kitchen.

CITY CENTRE EAST Enoteca Pinchiorri

Map 4 E1

Michelin-starred Pinchiorri is frequently described as Italy's finest restaurant and it has one of Europe's best stocked cellars with over 80,000 bottles. On the ground floor of a 15th-century palazzo, the ambience is very special too, but the food (ultra-refined Tuscan/French) and the fussy service will not please all.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Da Rocco

Map 4 F1

Only lunch is served at this busy market eatery which offers Florentine food such as hearty bread soup (ribollita) and pappa al pomodoro made from fresh tomatoes and bread. Creamy lasagne and succulent roast beef are also available. It's speedy, very cheap and good, and always packed with locals so be prepared to wait and share a table.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Trattoria Mario

Map 1 C4

This lively trattoria is always packed with a mix of stall owners, business people and tourists who all come for the good, traditional, homely food at very reasonable prices. The daily handwritten menu is posted on the wall near the kitchen and features hearty soups, simple pastas and a number of meat and side dishes.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Il Vegetariano

Map 2 D3

One of Florence's few vegetarian restaurants, this place has been around for a long time, but continues to be popular. The decor is rustic and the food wholesome and cheap; choose from the menu written on a blackboard, pay at the desk and take your receipt to the counter to collect your food. There's a great salad bar.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Da Sergio

Map 1 C5

A popular, family-run eatery in the San Lorenzo area, Sergio's trattoria is hidden behind the market stalls. Big tables (you may end up sharing) are laid with white cloths in two airy rooms. The food is quintessentially Tuscan casalinga (traditional) cooking and very good; there's always tripe on Mondays and Thursdays and fresh fish on Fridays.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Trattoria Za Za

Piazza del Mercato 26r, 50129 Tel 055 21 54 11

Map 1 C4

Though a bit touristy, with wooden stools and tressle tables, this old-style trattoria is great value. Soups, such as ribollita, pappa al pomodoro (thick soup of bread and tomato) and pasta e fagioli (bean soup with pasta), are a speciality. The arista, roast pork spiked with garlic or rosemary, is reliable. Finish with apple tart alla zaza.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Il Grande Nuti

Via Borgo San Lorenzo 22/24, 50123 Tel 055 21 01 45

Map 6 D1

This well located restaurant in San Lorenzo is an established classic. It has a wood-burning oven for classic pizzas, as well as serving traditional Tuscan dishes. Start with Tuscan crostini, little toasts with toppings such as chopped chicken liver and fresh tomatoes, and then follow with Florentine steak served rare and bloody, as it should be.

CITY CENTRE NORTH Don Chisciotte

Map 1 C3

This small restaurant near Fortezza Basso serves inventive Italian food, with an emphasis on fish and vegetable dishes. Try squid filled with ricotta and Sardinian cheese, or tagliatelle with asparagus and prawns. The lighting is soft and the surroundings are elegant, with intimate corners for the romantically inclined.

CITY CENTRE NORTH La Taverna del Bronzino

Map 2 D3

The 15th-century palazzo housing this restaurant was designed by the Florentine painter Bronzino, hence the name. Businessmen on expense account lunches and well-heeled tourists make up the clientele. The atmosphere in the airy, vaulted room is reserved and the food (elegant Tuscan) is of the highest quality.

CITY CENTRE WEST Cantinetta AntinoriPiazza Antinori 3, 50123 Tel 055 292 234Map 5 C2

More than just a wine bar, yet not a full-blown restaurant, this room on the ground floor of one of Florence's finest Renaissance palaces makes a lovely place to eat. There are traditional Florentine dishes such as tripe and pasta with duck sauce, and a fine selection of Antinori wines.

CITY CENTRE WEST ObikaVia de Tornabuoni 16, 50123 Tel 055 277 35 26Map 5 C2

This mozzarella bar, part of a small chain, serves fantastic fresh buffalo mozzarella and great salads, and has a stunning setting in the inner courtyard of the Palazzo Tornabuoni in the heart of town. You can taste three different hand-made mozzarellas, or there are light meals such as aubergine parmigiana, and aubergine and smoked rice tart.

CITY CENTRE WEST Colle BeretoPiazza Strozzi 4-6, 50123 Tel 055 28 31 56Map 5 C3

Florence's most fashionable bar is also a popular lunch spot with a great terrace, right opposite Palazzo Strozzi. Light meals are the order of the day, with gourmet hamburgers, pastas and grilled succulent cuts of beef. Dinners are more elaborate. Good wine list and a buzzing atmosphere in a lounge setting.

CITY CENTRE WEST I LatiniVia dei Palchetti 6r, 50123 Tel 055 21 09 16Map 5 B3

There is always a crowd of both foreigners and locals clamouring for a table outside I Latini's large, noisy trattoria, where huge hams hang from the ceiling. The food is traditional and portions are enormous. Bypass the pasta and try the succulent grilled and roasted meats; bistecca alla fiorentina (broiled T-bone steak) is an experience.

CITY CENTRE WEST GargaVia del Moro 48r, 50123 Tel 055 239 88 98Map 5 B2

A Florentine classic presided over by Giuliano, one of the city's great characters, Garga is fun and often full. The walls are daubed in garish frescoes and you eat in one of a series of cosy rooms. Some dishes are better than others but taglierini del Magnifico (pasta with a creamy orange-and-mint flavoured sauce) is superb.

CITY CENTRE WEST Osteria TornabuoniVia de Corsi 5, 50123 Tel 055 27 73 51Map 5 C2

This chic osteria is frequented by Florence's VIP crowd and features modern Tuscan food cooked with flair, an extensive wine list and a chic, modern decor comprising clean lines and row upon row of wine bottles. The Chianina beef melts in the mouth and the peposà, a slow-cooked stew, is divine. Book ahead.

CITY CENTRE WEST OlivieroVia delle Terme 51r, 50123 Tel 055 21 24 21Map 5 C3

A vaguely retro atmosphere prevails at this elegant restaurant in the centre of town, but the food is up-to-the-minute creative Tuscan and delicious too. Choose between interesting fish and meat dishes – try galantine of rabbit or seared tuna steak with ginger and white beans. Service is professional and there's an excellent wine list.

OLTRARNO Antica Porta

Map 3 A5

Possibly the best pizzeria in the city, Antica Porta is always crowded, so be prepared to queue. The pizzas are thin and absolutely perfect, with dollops of melting mozzarella, cooked in a huge wood oven. There are some shared tables at the front. Try to get a table at the back to avoid the crowds.

OLTRARNO Al TramvaiPiazza T Tasso 14r, 50124 Tel 055 22 51 97Map 3 A1

A typically Florentine place, styled as the interior of the old trams, with long bench seats. There is also a cosy back room. The traditional Tuscan food is always excellently cooked – the fried artichokes and zucchini are crisp, never greasy or heavy. The rabbit is extremely good, and this is the place to try fried brain – it's light, fluffy and delicious.

OLTRARNO Fuori PortaVia Monte alle Croci 10r, 50125 Tel 055 234 24 83Map 4 E3

One of Florence's classic enoteche, this is a popular place where you can go for a glass of wine or settle down to something more substantial. Choose wine from a list featuring over 600 labels. The crostini (toasted open sandwiches) make a particularly good accompaniment, but there are also excellent pastas and salads.

OLTRARNO La CasalingaVia del Michelozzo 9r, 50125 Tel 055 21 86 24Map 5 B5

In spite of the high numbers of tourists that flock to this no-frills trattoria, it is still very much a family-run eatery where the food is wholesome and plentiful. Go for the local dishes – ribollita (bread and vegetable soup), arista (roast pork) or bollito misto (mixed, boiled meats), served with a tangy salsa verde. Try the home-made tiramisù.

OLTRARNO Da RuggeroVia Senese 89, 50124 Tel 055 22 05 42Map 3 A5

A very popular family trattoria beloved by locals south of the river. There are always queues to get in, so do book ahead. The fantastic hearty cooking is straight from mamma's kitchen, with Florentine favourites such as bread soup (ribollita) and large ravioli with butter and sage. It's an unfussy place, full of people who have been coming for years.

OLTRARNO 4 LeoniVia dei Vellutini 1r, 50125 Tel 055 21 85 62Map 5 B4

This restaurant is conveniently situated five minutes from the city centre, near the Ponte Vecchio. In warm weather, tables at this revamped trattoria are set out on the pretty Piazza della Passera, but the ambience is pleasant inside too. Though no longer the simple, traditional place it once was, the service is always friendly and the setting charming.

OLTRARNO Ristorante RicchiPiazza Santo Spirito 8r, 50125 Tel 055 21 58 64Map 3 B2

With elegant, modern decor and a lovely terrace, this small fish restaurant is situated on one of Florence's most beautiful squares. Oriental influences are evident in dishes such as pasta with shrimps and mint, sword fish with sichuan pepper and salt cod in a spice crust. There's a limited choice for carnivores too.

The San Jacopo enjoys a fabulous setting on the south bank of the Arno. Ask for one of the coveted tables on the tiny terrace. The chic and breezy atmosphere suits the unpretentious but beautifully served food very well. Fish fans should try brodetto (fish soup), an Adriatic speciality.

OLTRARNO NovePiazza degli Scarlatti 1r, 50125 Tel 055 29 00 76Map 5 B4

Trendy and bustling, Nove has a sleek, modern look that wouldn't be out of place in London or New York. The imaginative food, however, is firmly rooted in Italian traditions and is generally very good. The menu, featuring both fish and meat, changes regularly and there is an interesting wine list.

OLTRARNO OniceViale Michelangelo 78, 50125 Tel 055 68 16 31Map 4 F3

This restaurant, with a Michelin star, is part of the smart Villa La Vedetta hotel that overlooks the city from near Piazzale Michelangelo. The ambience is elegant and contemporary, while the food is superb and prepared with minimum fuss. Menu changes with the season.

FURTHER AFIELD Da BurdeVia Pistoiese 6r, 50145 Tel 055 31 72 06

It's worth trekking 6 km (4 miles) from the city centre to this family-run trattoria, to soak up an air of a time gone by. All the classics of traditional Florentine cooking are to be found on the menu – fettunta (Tuscan garlic bread), ribollita (Tuscan bread soup), trippa alla fiorentina (tripe) and spezzatino (meat stew).

FURTHER AFIELD TargaLungarno C Colombo 7, 50136 Tel 055 67 73 77

Background jazz and a warm wood-and-glass interior, softened by lots of greenery, make for a relaxed setting in this bistro, set 2 km (1 mile) from the city centre on the Arno. The food is understated and based on seasonal local traditions; crêpes with artichokes and taleggio (cheese), rack of lamb with asparagus and broad beans. Fantastic wine list.

FURTHER AFIELD Fuor d'AcquaVia Pisana 37r, 50143 Tel 055 22 22 99

Many locals say that this is the best fish restaurant in Florence – and one of the most expensive. The fish is very fresh indeed, coming straight off the boats in Versilia and cooked with the minimum of fuss. Some crustaceans are served raw. Try the black tagliolini (pasta) with calamari and sage.

WESTERN TUSCANYARTIMINO da DelfinaVia della Chiesa 1, 59015 Tel 055 871 80 74Road map C2

Surrounded by vineyards and some interesting historic villas, this delightful restaurant is located in a walled medieval village just 22 km (14 miles) from Florence. Owner Carlo Cioni renews the culinary traditions of his mother, Delfina. The rabbit galantine and maccheroni (pasta) with duck sauce are simply exquisite.

CASCIANA TERME Il MerloPiazza Minati 5, 56034 Tel 0587 64 40 40Road map C3

Bean soup, mushrooms, chestnuts and wild boar are the main ingredients for winter dishes in this friendly little eatery. In the summer, fish comes to the fore: anchovies, seafood salad, linguine with squid ink and fish soup. There is a good selection of local cheeses, and a discerning wine list, with a few contributions from smaller producers.

Friendly, family-run tavern open only for lunch. The day's menu, written on a blackboard, offers tasty local dishes such as fish soup, octopus and potatoes, spelt with vegetables, salt cod with mushrooms. The desserts include excellent fruit tarts. This is also a good place for a glass of wine and a snack.

LIVORNO La Barcarola*Viale Carducci 39, 57122 Tel 0586 40 23 67Road map B3

Though Livorno may not be Tuscany's prettiest city, it is not without gastronomic charm. Fish-based dishes abound, including the hearty cacciucco (fish stew), for which this friendly restaurant is renowned. Much of your future meal can be seen swimming in ample tanks. Pleasantly comprehensive wine list.

LIVORNO Da Galileo*Via della Campana 20, 57122 Tel 0586 88 90 09Road map B3

For two generations the Piagneri family has been delighting diners with authentic local cuisine in this reassuringly simple restaurant. Over the years, Da Galileo's passion for gastronomy has not waned. Fish prevails, including various soups, seafood fettuccine and salt cod cooked with onions, Livorno-style.

MONTEPOLI VAL D'ARNO Trattoria dell'Orcio Interrato*Piazza San Michele 2, 56020 Tel 0571 46 68 78Road map C2

Those with a taste for history will find a palatable welcome at this trattoria, in the converted wine cellars of what is now the Albergo Quattro Gigli. The restaurant specializes in medieval and Renaissance recipes, interpreted with inventive flair: cockerel cooked with pomegranate or tripe with egg and saffron.

PISA Osteria I Santi*Via S Maria 71-73, Pisa, 56126 Tel 050 280 81Road map B2

A good, reasonably priced restaurant close to the Leaning Tower. Service is friendly and the decor is bright and cheerful with wonderfully kitsch art. Try baccalà, salted cod, or the hearty zuppa Toscana. There is a very decent tourist menu for €10. Expect a lively atmosphere and be prepared to chat with the locals at the rows of long tables.

PISA Osteria dei Cavalieri*Via San Frediano 16, 56126 Tel 050 58 08 58Road map B2

This friendly tavern occupies the ground floor of a medieval tower-house halfway between Pisa's two most prestigious centres of further education. It's common to find a scholarly-looking crowd enjoying the special all-in-one lunch dishes. The menu expands in the evening. Try the beef with beans and mushrooms.

PISA Ristorante V Beni*Piazza Gambacorti Chiara 22, 56125 Tel 050 250 67Road map B2

The speciality of this small restaurant is fresh fish, expertly prepared. The place is so popular, it is wise to book in advance, even at lunchtime. In the summer months, you can enjoy your meal al fresco, with a view on to one of Pisa's lively squares, only a 15-minute walk from the Leaning Tower. Closed Sun, 3 wks in Aug.

SAN MINIATO Collebrunacchi*Via Collebrunacchi 6a, 59028 Tel 0571 40 95 93Road map C2

A hospitable family-run restaurant a short drive outside of San Miniato, in a setting with glorious panoramic views of the surrounding countryside and a cool breeze that is a welcome change from the torrid Tuscan summer heat. In November, try the tartufo bianco (white truffle), a regional speciality. Closed Mon, 10 days in Jan.

SAN MINIATO Il Convio*Via San Maiano 2, 56028 Tel 0571 40 81 14Road map C2

Just outside town, a fine, old 19th-century farmhouse has been converted into a restaurant serving classic local cuisine. Many of the dishes are made with home-grown ingredients, including the olive oil. Since San Miniato is renowned for its truffles, in November this "food of the gods" also features prominently on the menu.

VOLTERRA Il Sacco Fiorentino*Piazza XX Settembre 18, 56048 Tel 0588 885 37Road map C3

NORTHERN TUSCANY

CASTELNUOVO DI GARFAGNANA Vecchio Mulino

Via Vittorio Emanuele 12, 55032 Tel 0583 621 92

Road map B1

This traditional wine bar has changed little in aspect since the early 1900s. Run by Andrea Bertucci and his family, it now offers a fine choice of wines, plus some of Italy's best (and rarest) salamis, cold cuts and cheeses. The home-made quiches and steaming pots of polenta are a further delight. Only one table outside.

LUCCA Da Giulio in Pelleria

Road map C2

You must book ahead and enter into the spirit of this bright, boisterous and extremely busy neighbourhood restaurant. This is the reign of hearty local dishes such as zuppa di farro (Tuscan white bean and spelt soup) and polenta, so expect no gastronomic surprises. The prices are remarkably reasonable.

LUCCA Locanda Buatino

Via Borgo Giannotti 508, 55100 Tel 0583 34 32 07

Road map C2

The eatery attached to this traditional inn also caters to locals who appreciate good food at extremely reasonable prices. So don't be alarmed at the lack of a menu with prices. Choose from the great soups, various pasta dishes, and secondi such as salt cod, pig's liver, sausages and beans. Good house wine and home-made desserts.

LUCCA Vecchia Trattoria Buralli

Road map C2

Exceptionally vegetarian-friendly, this trattoria provides a complete vegetarian menu on Friday evenings. Try the vegetable-based zuppa alla frantoiana. For dessert, go for buccellato di Lucca, a warm pudding of fried bread, anise and raisins soaked in Vin Santo. The wine list features Luccan recipes and wines.

LUCCA Buca di Sant'Antonio

Road map C2

This duly restored 19th-century tavern, with an excellent location, serves classic local fare with the occasional innovative touch. The stuffed rabbit en crouste with mushrooms is excellent. In winter, several dishes feature locally-grown chestnuts. Try buccellato, the tasty local pudding. Interesting wines.

GREVE La Cantinetta di Rignana

Loc. Rignana, Greve in Chianti, 50022 Tel 055 85 26 01

Road map D3

With incredible views from its large terrace, this country restaurant serves breathtaking yet simple Tuscan food. The pasta with chestnuts is rich and creamy – and you won't taste a fresher salad. Roast pigeon is tender, and the rabbit delectable. Upstairs is rowdier than the cosier room downstairs, but the large terrace is best of all.

MONTALCINO Il Boccon Divino

Località Colombaio, 53024 Tel 0577 84 82 33

Road map D4

Perfect for summer dining alfresco, this restaurant offers some interesting dishes and a magnificent view. The carabaccia (onion soup) is a must, and the scottiglia di cinghiale (wild boar stew) is excellent. Not exclusively local, the cheese board is also interesting. Excellent wine list, as befits the town.

MONTEFOLLONICO La Chiesa

Via della Madonna, 88, Montefollonico, 53040 Tel 0577 66 96 68

Road map E4

Brick arches, antiques and wild flowers furnish what is reputedly the best restaurant in southern Tuscany. Staying true to its farming roots, the restaurant's cuisine is in the peasant tradition, and includes bread soup and pulse soup, as well as excellent courgette flowers and vegetable flans. Local truffles and porcini mushrooms are used in season.

MONTEPULCIANO La Grotta

Località San Biagio, 53045 Tel 0578 75 76 07

Road map E4

A restaurant for discerning diners, La Grotta is located right opposite one of the foremost expressions of Renaissance architecture in Tuscany: Sangallo the Elder's Church of San Biagio. Specialities include the excellent pici (local pasta strips) with duck and saffron sauce. Also good is the fillet of Chianina beef with asparagus and truffles.

MONTERIGGIONI Il Pozzo

Road map D3

Occupying 13th-century stables, Il Pozzo is an ideal place for lunch. The food is rigorously Tuscan, essentially simple, but never banal. Try the truffle-fragrant tortelli al cartoccio (tortelli cooked in tinfoil), which comes wrapped up like a packet to conserve the aromas. Equally delicious is the stuffed pigeon.

PANZANO IN CHIANTI Solociccia

Road map D3

Butcher Dario Cecchini's quest to promote all cuts of meat is the impetus behind this innovative restaurant serving a set six-course meal. Modern design and communal tables provide the backdrop for the dishes, which include every cut but the bistecca. Cecchini also has another restaurant nearby. Book ahead. Open Thu–Sat pm and Sun lunch only.

PIENZA La Pergola

Road map E4

Unpretentious but inventive, La Pergola is the best restaurant in the area. Chef Emanuele injects a little of his Abruzzo origins into Tuscan fare, conjuring up dishes that have real flair. Try the sformato di verdura con crema di porri e patata, a vegetable flan with a leek and potato sauce. Excellent wine list.

POGGIBONSI La Galleria

Road map D3

The setting – in a shopping arcade in industrial Poggibonsi – is unpromising but loyal locals swear the chef here is one of the best in Tuscany. You'll get traditional Tuscan food with more than a dash of flair, including good fish and seafood. Probably the best reason to stop in Poggibonsi.

SAN CASCIANO Nello

Via 4 Novembre 66, San Casciano in Val di Pesa, 50026 Tel 055 82 01 63

Road map D2

Nello's serves simple but excellent food and is just a short drive from Florence. The restaurant is large and the decor unfussy, while the food includes tasty bean dishes as well as pappardelle with wild boar, and ravioli in the house sauce. On Fridays fish appears on the menu, including excellent spaghetti al vongole.

SAN GIMIGNANO Osteria delle Catene

Road map C3

This small restaurant specializes in regional cooking enhanced with its own special touch. You could start off with cold cuts made from wild boar, then continue with a saffron soup made according to a medieval recipe. The hare cooked in local wine is also good, and the home-made desserts are worth leaving room for.

SAN GIMIGNANO Dorandò

Road map C3

This restaurant is small and very select, so booking is advised. Impressive wine list, and dishes to go with it. The pasta with pigeon sauce on a bed of creamed mushrooms is delicious. There are various fish specialities, including angler fish in a nutty crust served with leeks. Take your time to enjoy it all.

SANT'ANGELO IN COLLE SCALO Il Marrucheto

Road map D4

Il Marrucheto is known for its simplicity, warmth and good value: a combination that's becoming increasingly rare in Tuscany. The focus is fish, or pizza, though there are meat dishes too. Try the seafood spaghetti, which is very filling. The zuppa di cozze, or clam soup, is also good. Finish up with a simple salad.

SARTEANO Santa Chiara*Via Costa S. Chiara 30, 53047 Tel 0578 26 54 12Road map E4

A small hotel with a good restaurant, Santa Chiara is located in an old convent with lovely views across the valley. Home-made pasta, including exquisite ravioli stuffed with dandelion and borage leaves, is a speciality. Mushrooms also feature on the menu when they're in season. The rabbit with wild fennel makes a perfect secondo.

SEGGIANO Silene*Località Pescina, 58038 Tel 0564 95 08 05Road map D4

A little distance up the road from Seggiano, just past Daniel Spoerri's sculpture garden, you will come to this mountain hamlet with an inn serving excellent food, prepared and presented to perfection. The pigeon ravioli and small gnocchi with truffles are exquisite. Great wines and memorable desserts.

SIENA Enoteca I Terzi*Via dei Termini 7, 53100 Tel 0577 443 29Road map D3

This restaurant has a nice vaulted space and a friendly atmosphere in which to enjoy a good bottle of wine accompanied by a wide range of premium cold cuts, carpaccio, smoked meats, steak tartare, and cheeses from all over Italy. In addition, each day there are three cooked dishes which change with the seasons.

SIENA La Taverna del Capitano*Via del Capitano 6/8, 53100 Tel 0577 28 80 94Road map D3

Located up near the Duomo, this restaurant with vaulted ceilings and dark wood furnishings is quintessentially Sienese. The ribollita soup; pici with pecorino and pepper, stewed rabbit and tasty beef tagliata, all speak for unbroken tradition. What's more, the house wine is good too.

SIENA La Compagnia dei Vinattieri*Via delle Terme 79, 53100 Tel 0577 23 65 68Road map D3

An impressive underground, vaulted space with a magnificent wine cellar and some interesting food to go with it. You can sip by the glass, with a platter of cheese and salami, or enjoy a bottle with a hot meal such as salt cod soup. Good desserts and unusual sweet wines. Only one table outside.

SIENA La Sosta di Violante*Via di Pantaneto 115, 53100 Tel 0577 437 74Road map D3

Close to Piazza del Campo, La Sosta di Violante provides two small rooms in which you can relish local seasonal ingredients cooked with imagination: aubergine rolls containing Scamorza cheese and pine nuts, for instance, or pici (pasta) with duck sauce. Great care is taken in matching the meat dishes with suitable wines.

SIENA Osteria Le Logge*Via del Porrione 33, 53100 Tel 0577 480 13Road map D3

Sienna's prettiest, and often full, restaurant has a dark wood and marble interior. The tables are laid with crisp linen cloths and decorated with plants. Home-produced oils and Montalcino wines accompany dishes that wander slightly from mainstream Tuscan cooking. The stuffed guinea fowl is delicious.

SOUTHERN TUSCANYCAPALBIO Da MariaVia Nuovo 3, 58011 Tel 0564 89 60 14Road map D5

Capalbio's holiday population of Roman politicians and media types sit down with locals in this pleasant eatery to enjoy genuine Maremma cuisine. Dishes include stuffed pasta with truffles, spelt soup, cinghiale alla cacciatora (rich, spicy wild boar) and an enticing warm apple and pear tart.

CASTIGLIONE DELLA PESCAIA Pierbacco*Piazza Repubblica 24, 58043 Tel 0564 93 35 22Road map C4

Located in a building dating back to the 1500s, this restaurant largely serves seafood: the little potato gnocchi with lobster sauce is just one example. The mixed seafood platter varies in content daily but is always excellent. To further enhance your enjoyment, there is an impressive wine list.

CECINA Il Doretto*Via Pisana Livornese 32, San Pietro in Palazzi, Cecina, 57023 Tel 0586 66 83 63Road map C3

There are rustic interiors with elegant touches in this restaurant, which gives equal emphasis to both meat and fish. Fritto misto, assorted fried fish, is very good – crispy but not dry. In season, the wild boar is also excellent. The feel of the place is cosy, although the tables can be a tad too close. Closed Wed.

ELBA Rendez-Vous da Marcello*Piazza della Vittoria 1, Marciana Marina, 57033 Tel 0565 992 51Road map B4

Outdoor tables on the harbour front at this noted fish restaurant make a pleasant retreat from the summer crowds of Marciana Marina. Clearly, the dishes reflect the morning's catch. Most dishes are pleasantly simple, but on occasions the menu also embraces the fashionable culinary fads of the moment.

ELBA Publius

Road map B4

Food with a view. Not only does this historic trattoria have perhaps the best cellar on the island, but it also provides an alternative to the seafood that prevails elsewhere. In addition to fish, you can eat poultry, game, lamb roasted in herbs and a choice of pecorino and other cheeses.

MAGLIANO IN TOSCANA Da Sandra

Road map D5

This quietly classy establishment showcases some of the best wines, now made in this promising area. The menu reflects the changing seasons. Pasta with truffles or mushrooms, wild asparagus (growing abundantly in the spring sun), game, including beautifully cooked wild boar. Good desserts.

MAGLIANO IN TOSCANA Antica Trattoria Aurora

Road map D5

With its lovely hanging gardens for summer eating, this attractive restaurant serves dishes that add flair to local traditions. The tortelli with duck cooked in Morellino wine is excellent. Likewise, the delectable breast of goose is perfectly offset by a slightly tart bilberry sauce. Wine is also served by the glass.

MARINA DI BIBBONA La Pineta

Road map C3

La Pineta is not much more than a shack on the beach, but foodies swear this is the best place for seafood in southern Tuscany. Owner-chef Zazzeri is a former fisherman who still gets the daily catch from the family's boats. There is a cookbook, so you can take the magic home. Great service and wine list.

MASSA MARITTIMA Da Tronca

Road map C4

Da Tronca has a rustic ambience befitting the well-cooked, simple fare. The zuppa dell'osteria (kale and cannellini beans on garlic-rubbed bread drizzled with oil) is delicious. There's also a good chickpea soup, served hot. Otherwise try the tripe, or the rabbit baked with potatoes. Good local wine list.

MASSA MARITTIMA Taverna Vecchio Borgo

Road map C4

Ancient barrel-vaulted rooms with an enticingly well-stocked wine cellar. The menu usually features pasta stuffed with ricotta and dressed with a sauce of nuts and herbs as well as acquacotta bread soup. The wild boar cooked with olives and the pheasant breast done in Vin Santo are also recommended.

MASSA MARITTIMA Bracali

Road map C4

If you drive a small distance north out of Massa Marittima, you will come across this attractive family-run restaurant, where local culinary traditions are revisited with flair. The aubergine flan, served with a potato and anchovy sauce, is a case in point; likewise the hare cooked with fennel and juniper.

ORBETELLO I Pescatori

Road map D5

This simple place run by the local fishermen's cooperative serves only fish caught in the lagoon on which it is located. Order and pay at entry, take a seat and await the fresh fish and seafood which can be washed down with local wines. Specialities include smoked eel and fillet of grey mullet.

ORBETELLO Osteria del Lupacante

Road map D5

This pleasant osteria sticks to old ways in a place increasingly overrun by affluent out-of-towners. Based on seafood, the cooking is light in touch and quite adventurous. The zuppa di pesce (fish soup) is excellent. The risotto with prawns and pine nuts and the sole with almonds and onions are also good.

PITIGLIANO Il Tufo Allegro

Vicolo della Costituzione 5, 58017 Tel 0564 61 61 92

Road map E5

This little restaurant features local Maremma cuisine with a subtle difference. There are pappardelle with a lamb ragout, and lasagne with artichokes, mature cheese and rabbit ragout. The saddle of rabbit with wild fennel is excellent, as is the courgette and goat's cheese flan.

PORTO SANTO STEFANO I Due Pini

Road map D5

Try this restaurant for its beautiful beachside setting and some of the best seafood on the coast. Have a simple meal of fish fresh from the boats, grilled to perfection, or try the spaghetti al nero di seppia (black squid ink pasta) followed by spezzatino di pesce spada (swordfish stew). There's live music at night, with the sunset as backdrop.

SATURNIA Bacco e Cerere

Road map D5

The wide range of antipasti at this small, friendly place is a great introduction to the traditional Maremma cuisine. The zuppa di ricotta makes a delectable change from the traditional acquacotta (vegetable soup served over toast). The enoteca of the same name offers an interesting range of wines. Occasional live music in summer. Closed Wed.

Light Meals and Snacks in Florence

The traditional pavement café is not as much a part of local life in Florence as in other Italian cities. However, small, hole-in-the-wall bars can be found on most of the city's streets. Here, you can have alcoholic and soft drinks, as well as a range of tempting breakfast and lunch-time snacks. Old-fashioned wine bars provide alternative eating and drinking venues, and the city has plenty of take-away establishments, especially near Santa Maria Novella station, if you want to eat on the move.

Sitting down at a bar or café can be expensive, as there is a charge for taking a table. If you only want a quick snack, it may be cheaper to eat at the stand-up counter. It is also worth noting that some cafés and bars may close during August.

BARS

Locals generally use bars as stop-offs for a coffee, quick snack, an early morning apéritif, to make a phone call or to use the toilet (il bagno). Some bars may stay open late, particularly during the summer, but most are busiest during the day. Most of them have a stand-up counter rather than tables.

Some bars also double as a pastry shop (pasticceria) and virtually all serve filled rolls (panini) or sandwiches (tramezzini) for lunch.

Breakfast is usually un caffè (a short espresso) or un cappuccino (milky coffee) with a plain jam or custard-filled croissant (una brioche or un cornetto).

The cheapest way to buy beer at a bar is from the keg (una birra alla spina) either as a piccola, media or grande measure. Italian bottled beers such as Peroni are also reasonably priced but foreign beers are expensive. Other drinks available are freshly squeezed fruit juice (una spremuta), grappa and wine by the glass (un bicchiere di vino).

Once you have chosen what to eat or drink, you must first pay at the cash desk (la cassa), and then take your receipt (lo scontrino) to the bar, where you will be served. A small tip on the counter will usually ensure quicker service.

There are numerous bars dotted around Florence, and many are convenient for the sights. For example, Il Caffè is opposite the Palazzo Pitti.

WINE CELLARS

Though wine cellars of the rustic style (vinaii or fiaschetterie) are a dying breed, they are quickly being replaced by modern, upscale versions, where you can sample from a wide range of Tuscan and Italian wines, accompanied by antipasti, often featuring local salamis, cheeses, and a variety of crostini and other light snacks.

CAFES

Four of Florence's handful of old-world cafés stand around the dour perimeter of Piazza della Repubblica. Gilli, renowned for its cocktails, dates back to 1733. It has two rear panelled rooms still redolent of an earlier age.

Giubbe Rosse, once the haunt of the city's turn-of-the-century literati, also evokes its former glory with dazzling chandeliers. However, like the neighbouring cafés, it is overpriced and likely to be filled with wealthy foreigners rather than elegant Florentines.

Instead, locals head for the Rivoire, also expensive, but with more genuine class and a beautiful marble interior. Bars which offer Manaresi, a locally roasted coffee, are usually worth a stop. This coffee is considered by many to be the best in Italy.

The young and fashionable hang out at Noir, an elegant bar/bistro along the river, or at Procacci, justly renowned for its delicious truffle rolls (tartufati).

TAKE-AWAY FOOD

Traditional street food includes tripe and lampredotto (pig's intestines) sandwiches, sold from the stalls at the Mercato Centrale (see p88), around the Mercato Nuovo (see p112), as well as in the Piazza dei Cimattori. The Mercato Centrale is a great place to buy picnic provisions if you are planning a day's excursion out of the city.

In the same areas there are often vans selling porchetta, crispy slices of suckling pig in bread rolls. Small shops selling pizza by weight or slice (al taglio) are found all over the city, especially around Santa Maria Novella station.

As well as bread, bakeries sell schiacciata, a focaccia sold plain, with oil and salt, or with herbs and spices. Bars offer other take-away options including panini, tramezzini and ice cream. Some vinaii, notably in Via dei Cimattori and Piazza dell'Olio, serve crostini and sandwiches to eat out on the pavement.

Snack bars, such as Gastronomia Vera, selling burgers, chips and flavoured milk shakes, are becoming increasingly popular.

ICE-CREAM PARLOURS

Florentines often round off a meal or the evening passaggiata (walk) with an ice cream (gelato). No day in the city is complete without one visit to an ice-cream parlour (gelateria). You can choose between a cone (un cono) and a cup (una coppa) and pay by size, usually starting at €1 and working up in 50-cent stages to enormous multi-scoop offerings at €5.

It's best to avoid bars where the selection is limited and the ice cream is made off the premises. Make instead for Bar Vivoli Gelateria (see p71), thought by many to make the best ice cream in Italy, or to Badiani, famed for its egg-rich Buontalenti. Carabè is well known for its Sicilian ice granitas, made with coffee or fruit.

SHOPS AND MARKETS

Shopping in Florence can be a unique experience as you wander through its ancient and medieval streets, exploring the city's renowned tradition of crafts and family-run businesses. Few cities of comparable size can boast such a profusion and variety of high-quality goods. Walking around the city you will find shops selling Italian

Protective bag with designer label fashion, antiques and jewellery as well as typical Florentine crafts. Tuscany is dwarfed by Florence when it comes to shopping possibilities. However, the rich traditions of many outlying towns and villages boast a variety of local crafts and specialities. These range from ceramics, hand-woven materials to the region's many gastronomic delicacies. (See also pp30–31.)

A colourful shop display of elegant handbags

WHEN TO SHOP

Generally, shops open around 9am and close at 1pm. In the afternoon they re-open from 3:30pm to 7:30pm, though food shops tend to open earlier in the morning and remain closed from 1pm to 5pm. Most shops are shut on Monday morning but food stores are closed on Wednesday afternoon.

Almost all shops close on Saturday afternoon in summer, and shops and markets tend to close for two or three weeks around 15 August, the national holiday (ferragosto).

HOW TO PAY

Major credit cards are usually accepted in larger shops, but smaller ones prefer cash. Travellers' cheques are now rarely accepted for goods and services.

Shopkeepers and market stallholders should by law give you a receipt (ricevuta fiscale). If a purchased item is defective, most shops will change the article or give you a credit note, as long as you show the till receipt. Cash refunds are uncommon.

VAT EXEMPTION

Visitors from non-EU countries can reclaim the 20 per cent sales tax (IVA) on purchases from the same shop exceeding €160. Ask for an invoice (la fattura) when you buy the goods and inform the shop of your intention to reclaim the tax. You will need to show your passport and the shop will fill out and stamp a form which can be taken to the relevant office at the airport.

SHOPPING IN FLORENCE

The centre of Florence is packed with shops selling everything from designer clothes to second-hand books. It is compact and easy to get around, as many streets are pedestrianized. It is also worth exploring the streets away from the centre around Piazza di Santa Croce, Piazza dei Ciompi and Piazza di

Window shopping in the Via de' Tornabuoni, Florence

Santo Spirito for furniture and gift shops where craftsmen are busy at work. The best time for bargains is during the January and July sales (saldi).

DEPARTMENT STORES

The city's main chain store is Coin, a popular independent department store with branches in Montecatini Terme and Livorno. This store stocks mid-range casual clothing, shoes, toiletries, children's clothing and toys, and a huge range of fashion accessories, including hosiery, sunglasses, bags and scarves. It also has an extensive home collection.

Rinascente in Piazza della Repubblica has designer clothing, lingerie, household items and a rooftop bar with direct views of the Duomo. Principe has classic menswear and women's and children's clothes as well as upmarket home accessories.

CLOTHING

In Florence the big names in Italian fashion – Gucci, Armani, Ferragamo, Versace, Prada and Roberto Cavalli – are mostly found in Via de' Tornabuoni (see p105). This elegant street is also home to the French designer Yves Saint Laurent and, at the top of the street in Piazza Antinori, is Hermès. Opposite the imposing Palazzo Strozzi is Louis Vuitton, with its impressive collections of footwear, clothing and luggage; Dolce & Gabbana is in Via degli Strozzi nearby and Valentino is in Via dei Tosinghi.

On Via della Vigna Nuova (see p105), you will find affordable fashions at Mariella

Burani and designer underwear at La Perla, while younger styles can be found at Gioel and Intimissimi.

Luisa Via Roma and Raspini stock top-designer clothing and shoes, while Eredi Chiarini and Matucci have more casual styles. Emilio Pucci (see p88), famous for his extravagant 1960s print clothes is in Via de' Tornabuoni.

There are opulent hand-woven fabrics, fine silks and vintage fabrics at Casa dei Tessuti, and embroidered linen can be found at Taf. Those looking for discounts on Italian designer clothing and shoes should venture out to The Mall or Barberino Designer Outlet. Both these outlets are located approximately 30 minutes away from Florence so require a special trip.

Classic leather goods at Beltrami

SHOES

Italy is renowned worldwide for its shoes and, with the local Tuscan tanneries, there is nowhere better than Florence to find footwear for all tastes. Some shops design and make classic shoes by hand in-store, while others stock huge collections of new styles for each season.

At the top end, the refined finishing and elegance of Ferragamo's shoes are sought-after by Hollywood stars, and Gucci and Prada are both meccas for admirers of designer Italian shoes. If you prefer more classic styles then head across the Arno to Francesco, a tiny shop that sells simple handmade shoes and sandals, or Quercioli for high quality hand-stitched leather shoes for both men and women. The mid-priced range is well represented by Romano, which stocks collections of shoes and boots in good-quality leather. For more casual and sporty styles, try the reasonably-priced Peluso. Alternatively stroll down Via de' Cerretani, which houses many affordable shoe shops including the popular Divarese.

LEATHER GOODS

Piazza di Santa Croce (see pp72-3) and the adjoining streets are filled with leather shops and workshops. Inside the cloisters of the church itself is the Scuola del Cuoi, where leather craftsmen work in front of the customers. Classic leather bags and gifts are sold at Bojola, Il Bisonte and Beltrami, and more contemporary styles can be found at Coccinelle and Furla. Peruzzi stocks leather clothing and accessories for men and women. The best place to buy gloves is Madova. For good value bags, belts and leather jackets try the Mercato di San Lorenzo or the market stalls in Via Pellicceria (see p287).

TOILETRIES

For toiletries and beauty products head to a profumeria (perfumery), such as Aline, Profumeria Inglese or Le Vanita', which also has a beauty centre and solarium. Erboristerie (herbalists) sell a range of natural products. Try the Erboristeria di Palazzo Vecchio (see p75) for unique handmade perfumes. The Erboristeria Inglese on Via de' Tornabuoni dispenses natural remedies and tisanes, and stocks natural beauty products, perfumes and gifts. Also worth a visit is the Farmacia di Santa Maria Novella, a frescoed apothecary, selling products from the elixirs of the Camaldoli monks to perfumes, herbal remedies and sweets.

JEWELLERY

Florence has always been noted for its gold and silversmiths. Go to Torrini, whose family has produced jewellery for six centuries, and to Pommellato's stunning shop on Via de' Tornabuoni, for its famous chunky white gold rings with huge semi-precious gems. Bulgari is on the same street, and so is Parenti, which has beautiful Baccarat rings and unique antique jewels. Try Aprosio & Co. for decorative jewellery made from precious metals and tiny glass stones.

The tiny wooden shops on Via de' Tornabuoni (see pp106-7) are all jewellery shops, some with beautiful antiques from Italy and abroad, others with high-quality new Italian gold pieces.

ART AND ANTIQUES

Florence has always been a centre of artistic excellence. This heritage has translated into a wealth of antiques and fine art shops. The antiques shops are mostly clustered around Via dei Fossi (see p112-3), Via Maggio (see p118) and Via dei Serragli.

For top-quality antiques go to Neri or the nearby Cei.

Romanelli has bronze statuary and works encrusted in semi-precious stones, while Ducci has an exquisite selection of handmade boxes, prints and sculpture in marble and wood. For lovers of modern art, there is Galleria Tornabuoni, while modern art objects and gifts can be found at Armando Poggi. Ugo Poggi has a selection of household objects, including elegant porcelain.

Ugolini and Mosaico di Pitti create tables and framed pictures using the age-old technique of marble inlay.

Arredamenti Castorina has a wonderful selection of picture frames, mouldings, brassware and intricate intarsias. More contemporary styles are at Mirabili, which showcases furniture and interior designers.

GIFTS

Florence is a treasure trove for unusual gifts and souvenirs. Via de' Guicciardini and the area between Piazza di Santa Croce and Piazza della Signoria are good places to look for gifts.

Housed in a converted wine cellar, Signum has postcards, posters and prints, and items such as miniature shop models and tiny packs of cards. Mandragora in Piazza del Duomo has a wide choice of gifts based on famous artworks in the city, while the renowned Pineider has upmarket stationery and office gifts in leather, linen and paper.

For locally made terracotta and decorative glazed ceramics visit Sbigoli Terracotte. La Bottega dei Cristalli has Murano glass kitchenware, chandeliers and decorative objects. Passamaneria Valmar sells decorative key and curtain tassels, tapestries and soft furnishings in silks and wools, while Lisa Corti Home Textile Emporium has hand-printed cotton throws, bedcovers and cushions as well as a range of children's clothes and pottery.

BOOKS AND PAPER

The main bookshops in Florence are Feltrinelli International, which sells publications in various languages, and Edison, which stocks magazines, maps, books in English as well as coffee-table photography books, and also houses a café. Paperback Exchange has an extremely wide selection of new and second-hand books in English.

Typical Florentine crafts include bookbinding and handmade marbled paper, which is used to decorate a variety of gift objects. These are easily available at Giulio Giannini, Il Papiro and Il Torchio; it's worth going to the latter just to see bookbinding in action, as you can watch it being done on the balcony workshop.

FOOD AND WINE

Those shopping for food should go to Pegna, a mini-supermarket in the heart of Florence that stocks fresh, as well as vast selection of gourmet, foods. The Bottega dell'Olio has shelves of extra virgin Tuscan olive oils, spice-flavoured oils and gifts. For typically British items such as teas and speciality foods go to Old England Stores.

Dolceforte sells chocolate souvenirs in the shape of the Duomo and the statue of David. A huge selection of biscuits and chocolates fills the front half of Alessi, while at the back and in the cellar are fine wines, spirits and liqueurs. Another good place to buy wine is Zanobini,

Fresh vegetables at a Florentine market stall where you can mix with the locals and sample the wines. At Procacci in Via de' Tornabuoni, shoppers can stop for a glass of wine and a canapé while choosing between pots of black or white truffles and other delicacies to take away.

FLORENCE'S MARKETS

Florence's central street market is the Mercato di San Lorenzo, which caters mostly for tourists (see p88). Nearby, in Via dell'Ariento, is the covered

Mercato Centrale, the city's main food market (see p88). The Mercato di Sant' Ambrogio also has fresh fruit and vegetable stalls, as well as clothing and household goods. Beneath the 16th-century Loggia del Porcellino, is the Mercato Nuovo, or Straw Market, which sells leather goods and souvenirs (see p112). On Tuesday mornings, there is an enormous market at the Parco delle Cascine with cheap clothing, shoes and food. The Mercato delle Pulci is a flea market, selling antiques and bric-à-brac. Garden enthusiasts might want to check out the Mercato delle Piante held on Thursday mornings under the porticoes of Via Pellicceria, selling flowers, houseplants and herbs.

Occasional markets spring up in Piazza Santa Croce and Piazza Santa Maria Novella, notably the German gift market in the weeks before Christmas and the monthly antiques market in Piazza Santo Spirito.

Shopping in Tuscany

Small towns throughout Tuscany have a multitude of shops selling a range of handicrafts, foods and some of the best wine in Italy. These are invariably displayed in small shops or at the frequent markets, seasonal fairs and local celebrations (see pp34–9), which are such an integral part of Tuscan rural life.

Display of local pottery

GIFTS AND SOUVENIRS

Characteristic ceramics are found throughout the region, from the famed raw terracotta of Impruneta to the decorated glazed pottery of Montelupo and Siena. In San Gimignano, look out for shops selling artistic ceramics (see p30) and hand-woven fabrics.

The best in marble can be found in Pietrasanta and Carrara (see p172). The famous white marble of the Alpi Apuane still serves local craftsmen, who make busts and replicas of sculpted works of art, as in Michelangelo's day.

The Etruscans mastered the art of working alabaster, and today the tradition lives on in Volterra, where many shops sell a range of souvenirs (see p166). The Etruscans also had knowledge of the minerals and precious stones typical of the volcanic Colline Metallifere, Maremma and Elba, the latter famous for its quartz and opals (see pp234–5).

For textiles, Lucca lays claim to a rich tradition of silk manufacture, as well as embroidery and hand-woven fabrics, reflecting the strong rural craft tradition of the nearby Garfagnana area. Rustic crafts are common in the Mugello and Casentino.

FOOD AND WINE

Excursions into Tuscany should be accompanied by visits to a local vineyard where wine is sold directly from the cellars. The Chianti region is studded with farms producing their own wines (see p229). Greve has several good wine outlets, and during the third week of September there is the annual wine festival, the Rassegna del Chianti Classico (see p38).

The excellent Vernaccia, a white wine, is typical of the San Gimignano area. The vineyards around Montalcino produce some of the best wine in Italy (see p224).

Tuscany's rich gastronomic tradition is reflected in the profusion of local products. The main streets of towns such as Greve, Montalcino, San Gimignano and Pienza have a range of food shops.

Sheep's cheese (pecorino), produced around the area of Crete, can be bought directly from the farm or from shops in local towns. In Pienza, shop shelves are laden with local cheeses (see p226), cured meats, wines and grappas. In Grosseto you will find truffles.

Siena is renowned for its panforte, a dark cake spiced with cloves and cinnamon, which has been produced since the Middle Ages. Biscuits include cavallucci (ground walnuts and aniseed) and ricciarelli, made from almonds, orange peel and honey.

MARKETS IN TUSCANY

Markets are aplenty throughout the region. Particularly famous is the Mercato dell'Antiquariato, which sells goods from antique furniture to bric-à-brac. It takes place in Arezzo on the Piazza Grande on the first weekend of each month, in Pisa on the Ponte di Mezzo on the second weekend, and in Lucca in Piazza San Martino on the third weekend.

ENTERTAINMENT

There is plenty going on in Florence and Tuscany by way of entertainment throughout the year. The warm summer months see a concentration of events from traditional festivals, classical concerts and dance performances to open-air films and live music in alfresco bars. The areas of Santo Spirito in the Oltrarno and Santa Croce are home to lively bars and restaurants, while clubs tend to be situated on the edge of town. Opera lovers will not be disappointed; Florence's Teatro del Maggio, one of Italy's best, hosts some fine operas and concerts, while Tuscany plays host to the celebrated Puccini Opera Festival.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Local newspapers, such as La Nazione and the Florence section of La Repubblica, carry entertainment listings. The monthly magazine Firenze Spettacolo, with a short section in English, lists local events, entertainment venues and places to eat and drink. Look out too for the free, bi-lingual, Concierge Information, which is a useful source of listings, and the twice-weekly English newspaper The Florentine. Websites detailing events in the region include www.firenze.net, www.comune.firenze.it, and www.turismo.toscana.it.

BOOKING TICKETS

Box Office is a ticket agency for concerts, opera and ballet nationwide. Tickets for performances at the Teatro del Maggio can also be purchased at their box office and online. It is advisable to buy tickets for opera in advance, but for other events, tickets are generally available on the door.

FACILITIES FOR THE DISABLED

Most major concert halls and music venues in Tuscany are now fully wheelchair accessible. However, churches, villas and gardens, which hold occasional performances, are unlikely to be so well equipped. If in doubt, always check in advance. There is a booklet published by the Province of Florence available at tourist offices, which details the accessibility of many outdoor venues in the area.

OPERA AND CLASSICAL MUSIC

The most important musical event in Tuscany is the annual Maggio Musicale festival (see p32), held at Teatro del Maggio in Florence between late April and late June, and features opera, concerts and ballet. The theatre also puts on a year-round programme, while Orchestra della Toscana gives several concerts a month at its base in Teatro Verdi. From October to April the wonderful 18th-century Teatro della Pergola in Florence hosts world-class chamber music concerts. Estate Fiesolana organizes opera, dance and music events from July to August in Fiesole's atmospheric amphitheatre.

The rest of Tuscany also celebrates the arts. Puccini's lakeside villa on the shores of Lago di Massaciuccoli makes a spectacular setting for the Puccini Opera Festival, held every July to August. The Opera Barga festival showcases little-known works in the restored Teatro dei Differenti (see p174). In July and August, Siena hosts the Estate Musicale Chigiana in the magnificent abbeys of San Galgano, Monte Oliveto Maggiore and Sant'Antimo. The Incontri in Terra di Siena festival is known for its excellent chamber music, and the Tuscan Sun Festival, based in Cortona, has an exciting music and arts programme.

FILM, THEATRE AND DANCE

Films in English are shown three times a week at the Odeon Original Sound in Florence, and several other Tuscan towns now cater for the huge number of foreign visitors by screening English-language films.

Theatre has a long and distinguished history in Tuscany, but performances in

Fiesole's Roman amphitheatre is the setting for opera and dance events

Contemporary dance performance

English are rare, and as such, the genre attracts few non-Italian speaking visitors. However, Tuscany's 300 local theatres – many of them now restored – are worth a visit.

Dance is popular throughout the region and several festivals, including the Florence Dance Festival, feature classical and contemporary dance.

JAZZ, BLUES AND ROCK

Florence will not disappoint jazz fans. A great season of progressive jazz concerts, often featuring international names, is staged in the Sala Vanni, while several bars regularly hold live jazz sessions.

Big-name rock concerts are mostly held at the 7,000-seater Nelson Mandela Forum or at the city's football stadium. For smaller, more intimate venues go to clubs such as Auditorium Flog, Tenax or Saschall. Firenze Spettacolo has a detailed list of bars and clubs hosting live music.

In summer, Florence's piazzas and gardens become the venues for alfresco bars and live music. Summertime also sees open-air jazz and rock concerts taking place all over the region.

Blues fans should look out for Pistoia Blues, a mid-July weekend jamboree of open-air blues concerts, which attracts well-known names.

OPEN-AIR ENTERTAINMENT

Unique to Tuscany are the many traditional festivals celebrated through the year, the most famous being the Palio in Siena (see p222). The others range from large events attended by thousands of spectators to tiny little village sagre. Commonly defined by food, drink and music, these events are a great way to see the Tuscans at play.

CHILDREN'S ENTERTAINMENT

While Florence and Tuscany are extremely child-friendly, child-orientated entertainment is lacking so parents need to be inventive. As far as museums are concerned, only the Museo dei Ragazzi in Palazzo Vecchio (see pp78-9) has a specific programme for children, but several other museums, such as Museo di Storia della Scienza (see p74) and Museo "La Specola" (see p119), are fun too. For children below ten years, Mondobimbo Inflatables Parterre has bouncy castles and Giardino di Boboli is good for a run-around.

Outside Florence, there's a small zoo in Pistoia (see p187) and Parco Preistorico, with its gigantic model dinosaurs, is near Pisa. Pinocchio Park at Collodi (see 183), is dedicated to one of Tuscany's most loved characters, and Parco Giochi Cavallino Matto is a huge funfair with plenty of rides to keep the kids amused.

SPECIALIST HOLIDAYS AND OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES

Nowhere is the Italian motto for good living, la dolce vita, more in evidence than in Tuscany. Sitting outside a café in a Tuscan village you can glimpse original Renaissance art or take in the sight of well-tended olive groves and vineyards terraced into the steep hillsides. No wonder the gentle pace of an activity holiday here, which in many cases means painting the stunning countryside or sipping vintage wines, is so appealing. For those more interested in energetic pursuits the region has plenty of sporting activities on offer, from horse riding to water sports. For educational courses see p298.

ART

Those of an artistic persuasion can enrol at art school and try their hand at sculpture, art restoration or painting the beautiful countryside. Centro d'Arte Verrocchio, a residential art school in the hilltop village of Casole d'Elsa offers courses in drawing, painting and sculpture. Students can work on the terrace in stunning surroundings. For city-based courses try Lorenzo de' Medici Art Institute of Florence. The semester and summer school programmes include sketching, watercolour, fine art, painting, print-making, restoration and art history.

COOKERY AND WINE TASTING

Tuscany offers many gastronomic delights from pecorino cheese to porcini mushrooms. The regional cuisine values quality of ingredients rather than complex technique, and recipes are handed down from one generation to the next.

There are plenty of cookery courses where you can learn Italian food traditions – some of which are listed on Nonna Lina's Kitchen website.

Originally a medieval Benedictine abbey, Badia a Coltibuono (see p229) is a prestigious Chianti wine-producing estate. Courses on offer here range from brief wine and olive oil tastings, to five-day residential cookery courses with tours of the vineyards, olive mills and wine-making cellars at Monti in Chianti.

Apicius Culinary Institute in Florence is affiliated to Lorenzo de' Medici Art Institute. The duration of the cookery courses range from one-week to year-long diplomas.

La Cucina del Garga cookery school and restaurant, also in Florence, teaches recipes with a modern flourish. It holds one-day classes in the city and four to eight-day gastronomic excursions in Tuscany.

Vineyards offer wine tastings by appointment. Chianti Classico promotes stays at vineyards in the Chianti Classico region, while Consorzio del Vino Brunello di Montalcino has information on visits to the Brunello region. Specialist enoteca (wine bars) and shops, including Millesimi near Santa Spirito, also arrange wine tastings by appointment.

WALKING, CYCLING AND HORSE RIDING

Tuscany's scenery can be best enjoyed at walking pace. Several holiday companies offer walking itineraries, some through the landscape of forested hills and olive groves, while others wend their way through the medieval hilltop towns, taking in cultural landmarks along the way. Ramblers Holidays and Sherpa Expeditions are two such companies, and Club Alpino Italiano runs guided mountain treks.

Another great way to see the Tuscan countryside is by bike. For cycling holidays contact Cicloposse, which deals in both guided and self-guided bike tours.

Painting the beautiful Tuscan countryside

The Maremma in southern Tuscany is famous for its wild horses and butteri (cowboys), and there are plenty of riding schools in the region. Vallebona in Pontassieve organizes trekking holidays and guided tours on horseback and Rendola Riding Stables at Monteverchi offers riding lessons.

SPA HOLIDAYS

Spa holidays are enjoying a renaissance with many hotels offering a pool, gym and massage treatments, but Tuscany has the real thing. Try the thermal pools at Terme di Saturnia in the Maremma, or bathe in the warm sulphurated waters of Cascate del Gorello (see p238) close by. You can purchase a day pass to experience the therapeutic waters of Montecatini Terme (see pp184–5), with its nine spas. A vast array of health and beauty treatments is also available.

WATER SPORTS

Tourists on the Ponte Vecchio (see pp106–7) can watch canoes gliding through the inky waters of the River Arno. Societa Canottieri Firenze offers keen rowers visitor membership for a nominal sum.

In summer, many locals travel to the coast to escape the city heat. Those who can't head for one of the open air swimming pools. Costoli is open summer and winter, and Piscina Bellariva has indoor and outdoor pools.

For the more adventurous there is diving off the coast of Elba (see pp234–5) through Spiro Sub Diving Club.

MOUNTAIN SPORTS

Skiing in the Appennines is a possible day trip from Florence because, rather than being isolated in Alpine resorts, the slopes at Abetone near Pistoia are only 80 km (50 miles) away. Weekly as well as daily ski passes are available.

Ufficio Guides organise summer mountaineering courses, but single-minded climbers can go rock climbing independently at Le Cave di Maiano at Fiesole.

GOLF

Combine a few rounds of golf at Ugolino Golf Course with sightseeing in Florence, or enjoy a golfing holiday at Punta Ala Golf Club overlooking the coast, at Grosseto (see p238), an hour from Pisa airport.

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 296–305

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Visitors have been coming to Tuscany for centuries, drawn by its splendid art and architecture, landscape and cuisine. These may all seem overwhelming at first, so plan carefully to make the most of this beautiful region. Start your day early and take time over lunch: most sights and shops close for several hours and reopen in the late afternoon.

Try to have a relaxed attitude to your sightseeing – opening hours can be erratic and may vary depending on the season. Most Italians take their holiday in August, so some places may be shut. If your stay in Florence is limited, you could take a city tour. For a longer stay, consider a study course, offered throughout the year by colleges and language schools.

WHEN TO GO

Tuscany is great to visit year-round and has four distinct seasons. There is a pleasant long spring, making April and May the best months to visit. September and October are generally warm. July and August tend to be very hot and crowded, especially in Florence. It rains a lot in winter, with cooler temperatures, but the region is much less crowded. Coastal areas are best visited from May to September; the mountains are good for snow sports in December through to March. In winter, many towns at high altitudes may be hard to reach without snow tyres.

VISAS AND PASSPORTS

All visitors need a valid passport. European Union (EU) residents and visitors from the US, Canada, Australia and New Zealand do not need visas for stays of up to three months. A visa is required for longer stays; apply at your local embassy or consulate. All visitors to Italy must by law register with police within three days of arrival. Most hotels will register visitors when they check in. For a longer stay you are responsible for registering yourself in person at the Questura. If in doubt, contact the local police department or the Questura.

CUSTOMS INFORMATION

Duty-free allowances are as follows: non-EU residents can bring in either 200 cigarettes, 50 cigars, 100 cigarillos or 250 grams of tobacco; 1 litre of alcohol above 22% vol; 4 litres of wine; 50 grams of perfume. Allowances for EU residents are almost unlimited, providing that the goods are for personal use only. Beware that random checks are often made to guard against drugs traffickers.

Non-EU residents who spend €160 in a single establishment that displays a tax-free sign are entitled to a partial refund for Valued Added Tax, known as IVA (see p284). Ask the cashier to fill out the form for you, and when departing the country take the goods and receipts in your carry-on luggage for approval at the airport office. Ask for credit to be added to your credit card for faster processing.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Florence, Pisa and Siena have several Uffici Informazioni Turistiche (tourist offices) offering information about tourist sights and authorized guides throughout the region. The "Tourist Rights Protection" desk in the main tourist office in Florence is specifically for making serious, written complaints against service providers. Tourist offices in small towns tend to give details only on their particular town. Travel agents, such as CTS Viaggi, can provide information on tours and rail and coach travel in Italy, as well as tickets (see pp308–11).

Tourist information office on a Florence street

ENTERTAINMENT INFORMATION

The best guide for entertainment is the monthly magazine Firenze Spettacolo, which has restaurant and café guides, as well as comprehensive details of concerts, exhibitions, museums and sporting events. For select event and exhibition listings, pick up a free copy of The Florentine English-language newspaper. Tourist offices have leaflets on local entertainment and events. During summer evenings, fêtes with local bands are held throughout Tuscany, all listed at www.saimicadove.it.

ETIQUETTE AND SMOKING

Italians act conservatively in public: they do not sit on the ground or eat while walking, and they tend to drink in moderation with meals. Smoking, though banned in indoor public spaces, is still common and you will see many people smoking on the streets.

It is traditional to greet and thank shop staff when entering and exiting stores; if you enter a small store say buon giorno (good morning), then grazie when you leave.

Visitors in Santa Maria Novella, Florence

VISITING CHURCHES

Churches enforce a strict dress code: knees and shoulders must be covered when entering any church. Women should carry a shawl to cover up, while men should avoid wearing shorts. Hemlines at the knee or below are usually fine.

LANGUAGE

Italian is the only official language in Italy, though English is taught in schools. Young people and those in the tourist industry all speak some English, while the elderly and those in small towns will be less likely to know other languages. Effort to speak a few words of Italian is always appreciated.

OPENING HOURS

Opening times tend to vary widely, though in general most museums are closed on Mondays. There are three main museum types: state, city and private, and each has its own opening hours. Plan your time carefully.

Generally, state museums such as the Uffizi, Galleria dell' Accademia and Palazzo Pitti tend to open Tue–Sun, 8:15am–6:50pm. Others such as the Bargello and San Marco are open mornings only, with occasional Monday openings.

City museums are open 9am–7pm daily and private museum hours vary. In the country, most diocese museums (next to each town's duomo) close at noon and reopen late afternoon.

ADMISSION PRICES

Admission costs for museums average €6–10. Some churches also charge a small entrance fee. Booking in advance is advisable for the Accademia and Uffizi via the official website or by phone (see p299). Amici dei Musei offers an annual pass for state museums, and there are ongoing plans to introduce a city-wide museum pass.

PUBLIC CONVENIENCES

Gabinetto means public toilet, though signs often say WC. Availability is improving throughout Tuscany, although standards vary. There are toilets at almost all museums and cafés. In a bar it is polite to make a small purchase before using their facilities.

A small fee may be charged at the Duomo and train stations, but elsewhere toilets are usually free. Small towns often have a toilet near the main parking area. Carrying tissue paper and hand sanitizer is recommended.

TAXES AND TIPPING

A 20% tax is included in the price of goods and services. In restaurants there is usually a €1–3 coperto (cover charge), so leave extra only for superb service. It is not necessary to tip a taxi driver, although they often expect the fare to be rounded up to the next euro.

TRAVELLERS WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Facilities for the disabled traveller in Tuscany are limited. Pavements are often narrow and difficult to navigate with a wheelchair. Always request an accessible hotel room in advance. Package tour representatives can arrange assistance at airports and hotels. Accessible Italy is a specialized non-profit organization that can help you plan your trip and arrange the help you need on-site.

Trenitalia provides passenger assistance for all trains. Many Italian stations have a Sala Blu (Blue Hall), which is an assistance point for disabled travellers – there is one in Florence Santa Maria Novella Station (see p308). You may reserve services in advance by email or phone.

Tourists and buskers outside the Uffizi

TRAVELLING WITH CHILDREN

Italians love children, and while hotels and restaurants may not be completely equipped for young visitors, they will be happy to accommodate them. Most restaurants have high chairs and will serve children basic meals such as pasta with olive oil or tomato sauce.

It's best to request cribs or cots at your hotel in advance. Most hotels do not have a kettle or other food preparation facilities for newborns; short-let apartments (see p246) are an excellent solution if you need kitchen access. Negotiating narrow pavements can be difficult with pushchairs. Buses in cities have a reserved seating area for people with pushchairs; enter the bus by the wide centre doors. Most sights offer a discounted entry rate for children.

SENIOR TRAVELLERS

Special services or discounts for seniors are few in Tuscany. EU citizens over 65 can get into state museums for free and receive a 25% discount on entry fees to city museums (valid photo ID must be shown), but seniors from outside the EU are not eligible. There is no discount on bus tickets. A train ticket discount of 15% is given to holders of the Carta Argento, an annual card you can apply for at train stations. It costs €30 for over 60s, so is only worthwhile if you're planning a lengthy stay in Tuscany. It is free for over 75s.

GAY AND LESBIAN TRAVELLERS

Certain areas of Tuscany are particularly favoured by GLBT travellers, although the scene remains discreet. Most popular are the seaside resorts of Viareggio and Torre del Lago, which have many gay bars, and certain beaches in Torre del Lago and Maremma. There are numerous gay-friendly B&Bs in Tuscany, especially in Florence.

The oldest gay bar (men only) in Italy is Tabasco in Florence's Piazza della Signoria. There are few organized venues for women, but Florence's Piccolo Caf  on Borgo Santa Croce is open to both men and women.

Florence hosts the Queer Festival, dedicated to the arts and film, each November (www.florencequeerfestival.it) and Pitti Immagine fashion events also attract a large gay crowd. The Arcigay and Ireos associations provide further information (in Italian).

STUDENT AND BUDGET TRAVELLERS

Travellers on a budget will find reasonably priced lodging and meal options throughout Tuscany, but there are very few free activities. Some small churches may be free to visit, and students with International Student Identity Cards (ISIC) are usually able to claim a discount on admission fees at museums and other attractions. The ISIC card also gives access to a 24-hour telephone helpline that provides general advice and information.

The national travel organization, CTS Viaggi, has branches throughout Italy and Europe. CTS can issue student cards and offers reasonably priced car hire. They are also able to organize holidays, excursions and courses.

Some traditional trattorie have inexpensive set menus, and lunchtime menus tend to be cheaper. There are numerous hostels and budget hotels in Florence and around Tuscany. Camp sites on the outskirts of some towns (see p247) are a good option, while those looking for something a little different could opt to stay in a convent. Bear in mind that convents are likely to have curfews and rules about unmarried couples staying together. Facilities vary from basic to luxurious, with corresponding cost.

EDUCATIONAL COURSES

There are many language and art schools in Tuscany. The British Institute in Florence is one of the better known, and The Learning Center of Tuscany offers TEFL certificate courses. The Palazzo Spinelli Istituto per l'Arte e il Restauro offers courses on art, drawing, ceramics and painting. The Centro Internazionale Dante Alighieri or the Universit  per Stranieri in Siena have courses on Italian culture, history and cooking. A list of schools in Tuscany is available from the Uffici Informazioni Turistiche.

TUSCAN TIME

Tuscany is 1 hour ahead of Greenwich Mean Time (GMT). The time difference between Tuscany and other cities is as follows: London: -1 hour; New York: -6 hours; Perth: +7 hours; Auckland: +11 hours; Tokyo: +8 hours. These figures may vary for brief periods in the summer with local changes. For all official purposes the Italians use the 24-hour clock (eg 10pm = 22.00 hrs).

Student relaxing in the sun in Gaiole in Chianti

ELECTRICAL ADAPTORS

Electrical current in Italy is 220V AC, with two-pin, round-pronged plugs. It is probably better to buy an adaptor before leaving for Italy. Most hotels with three stars and above have electrical points for shavers, and provide hairdryers in all bedrooms.

RESPONSIBLE TOURISM

There are many ways to travel more sustainably in Tuscany thanks to the Local market produce region's respect for tradition. In the countryside, consider staying at an agritourismo (see p246) and learn about what they produce, or visit local organic farms and wine producers. Tasty local food produce can be purchased at markets in both towns and cities; small-town markets are often bi-weekly so ask your host for dates. Buy your souvenirs at local artisan workshops. Tuscany is known for hand-decorated paper, ceramics and leather. In Florence, Context Travel offers an Oltrarno Artisan tour to meet and learn about these craftspeople.

Personal Security and Health

Tuscany and its cities are generally safe as long as common-sense precautions are taken. Reports of serious crimes are rare, but petty theft and pickpocketing are common problems in the crowded tourist areas of Florence and Pisa. Ensure that you have adequate travel insurance before leaving for Italy, as it is very difficult to obtain once you are in the country.

POLICE

The vigili urbani, or municipal police (see p313), wear blue uniforms in winter and white during summer. They are most often seen in the streets regulating traffic. The carabinieri are the military police. They dress in black trousers with a red stripe on the leg and deal with a variety of offences from theft to speeding. La polizia (the state police) wear grey trousers with a magenta stripe. They specialize in serious crimes. While uniforms differ, in an emergency the first officer on the scene is responsible and will help you.

A team of carabinieri on duty in Florence

WHAT TO BE AWARE OF

When looking after your personal safety, use common sense as you would in any large city. Pickpocketing takes place on public transport and in crowded piazzas, markets and queues. Italian women tend to keep one hand on the closure of their handbag at all times (zip closures are best), while men put a hand over the pocket in which they keep their wallet. Young women may occasionally be subjected to harassment from whistling men on the street.

Women should not walk home alone late at night. Always use official taxis which clearly display their licence number. When you call for a taxi you will be given the car number, for example Napoli 37, which will be visible on a sticker on the side of the taxi.

IN AN EMERGENCY

The telephone number for medical emergency services is 118 and the operator should be able to assist you. Report all serious crime to the police, through dialling 112.

LOST AND STOLEN PROPERTY

Avoid being a victim of theft in Tuscany in the same way as you would at home: lock doors, keep valuables in a safe and never leave anything in plain view inside a car. In the case of robbery, you must report the theft to the police within 24 hours and obtain a statement (denuncia) in order to make an insurance claim. Ask your hotel reception for assistance in doing this.

Lost property may be difficult to recover. Lost items on trains can sometimes be located by asking customer services. In some stations, lost bags will be put in a safe deposit box and you will have to pay to collect them.

MINOR HAZARDS

Inoculations are not necessary for Tuscany. Mosquitoes are an irritation. Equip yourself with mosquito repellent as these insects are common, especially in the centre of Florence, and screens on windows are rare. Alternatively, use an electrical device (referred to as vape from the brand name), which works by heating mosquito repellent in tablet or liquid form. Vape can repel mosquitoes for up to 12 hours. These small devices are available in grocery stores and houseware shops (mesticheria). For a longer stay you might prefer to use a temporary window net or to place a mosquito net over your bed. Both are available from a mesticheria.

Do not underestimate the strength of the sun – drink plenty of water and use a high factor sunscreen. Although Italians prefer the taste of bottled water, tap water is perfectly safe in the cities. Many rural homes use water from a well – visitors may prefer to drink bottled water.

HOSPITALS AND PHARMACIES

If you are in need of urgent medical attention, you should go at once to the Pronto Soccorso (outpatients/emergency) department of the nearest main hospital.

If you have a medical problem during the night or at the weekend, but it is not an emergency, the Guardia Medica service in Florence is a fast and easy solution, similar to a walk-in medical clinic. It is open through the night and at weekends, and may charge a small fee for treatment.

In the summer, major tourist areas (including Florence and Siena) set up a Tourist Medical Centre, which operates during daytime hours.

In Florence and Siena, the Associazione Volontari Ospedalieri has interpreters who can help with medical volunteers, but there is also a fully qualified medical team. The traditional black cassock is for formal parade only; volunteers do not wear it during medical emergencies.

TRAVEL AND HEALTH INSURANCE

Visitors from the EU are officially entitled to reciprocal state medical care in Italy. Before you travel, pick up a European Health Insurance Card (EHIC), which covers emergency medical treatment. It is available online (www.dh.gov.uk) or at the post office. The EHIC does not cover repatriation costs or additional expenses, such as accommodation or flights for anyone travelling with you. Purchasing additional travel insurance before leaving home is recommended.

Visitors from outside the EU should take out a comprehensive travel insurance policy before travelling.

Banking and Currency

Visitors to Tuscany have a number of options available to them for changing money. Banks and ATMs tend to give more favourable rates than bureaux de change, hotels and travel agents, but the paperwork when using a bank is usually more time consuming. When changing money you will need to show some form of identification, such as a passport. Alternatively, credit cards can be used for purchasing goods. Traveller's cheques are no longer frequently used.

Entering and leaving a bank through an electronic double door

BANKS AND BUREAUX DE CHANGE

Banks usually open between 8:30am and 1:20pm Mon–Fri. Most branches also open for an hour or so in the afternoon from about 2:45pm till 4pm. They close at weekends and on public holidays (see p37). Exchange offices stay open longer, but in general the rates are less favourable.

In Florence, the exchange office behind the railway station is open from 8am till late evening, depending on the season. In Pisa, the exchange offices in Piazza del Duomo and at the railway station are open until the evening and at weekends.

To change money at a bank, bring your passport and be prepared to fill out numerous forms. As procedures vary from branch to branch, it may be worth asking staff for help.

For security reasons, most Italian banks have electronic double doors. Press the button to open the outer door, then wait for it to close behind you. The inner door then opens automatically. Metal objects may set off emergency detectors as you enter. You may be asked to deposit your belongings in lockers outside the secured area.

ATMS

The most convenient way to access your cash in Italy is to make withdrawals using an ATM. To avoid complications, check which cards the ATM accepts before inserting your card. Travelling with more than one debit (and credit) card is recommended in case one is not accepted. Most ATM machines accept VISA or MasterCard for cash advances, but be aware that interest is payable as soon as the money is withdrawn.

Italian ATMs dispense a maximum daily amount (approximately €300), so if you need to make a larger cash payment you should plan ahead and make withdrawals from cash machines over more than one day.

Before your trip, be sure to tell your bank that you are travelling to Italy. They should remove any flags or limits on your bank and credit cards to avoid having them blocked. Ask your bank if you need a different PIN number for use in Italy: if you have a 6-digit PIN it may not work, as Italian ATMs usually accept 4- or 5-digit PINs only.

CREDIT CARDS AND TRAVELLER'S CHEQUES

Credit cards are widely accepted throughout Italy, and it is worth bringing one, or more, with you. VISA and MasterCard are the most popular, while American Express and Diners Card are rarely accepted. To avoid problems using your card during a trip you should inform your credit card company before travelling.

Some restaurants, cafés and shops may require a minimum expenditure to accept credit card payment. Be aware that petrol stations do not accept credit cards, only cash. Always make sure you have some cash in case your credit card is not accepted.

Traveller's cheques are no longer in common use. Few stores will accept them (or even know what they are) although hotels may accept them for payment or exchange. If a bureau de change does accept traveller's cheques, be aware that there is a minimum commission charge, which may make changing small sums of money uneconomical.

THE EURO

The euro (€) is the common currency of the European Union. It went into general circulation on 1 January 2002, initially for 12 participating countries. Italy was one of those 12 countries, and the lira was phased out in February 2002. EU members using the euro as their sole official currency are known as the Eurozone. Several EU members have opted out of joining this common currency.

Euro notes are identical throughout the Eurozone, each one including designs of fictional architectural structures and monuments. The coins, however, have one side identical (the value side), and one side with an image unique to each country. Both notes and coins are exchangeable in each participating country.

Euro Bank Notes

Euro bank notes have seven denominations. The €5 note (grey in colour) is the smallest, followed by the €10 note (pink), €20 note (blue), €50 note (orange), €100 note (green), €200 note (yellow) and €500 note (purple).

Payphones are few and far between in Italy, as access to Internet services and the use of mobile phones have increased. Pre-paid long-distance telephone cards are also now increasingly used by visitors. The postal service in Italy, once dogged by slow service, is much improved and also offers relatively fast courier services.

Italians produce a lot of magazines (though fewer newspapers), and international and foreign-language print material can be found in areas catering to large numbers of tourists.

INTERNATIONAL AND LOCAL TELEPHONE CALLS

The growing use of mobile phones in Italy has caused a cutback in public telephone services. Telecom Italia no longer has telephone offices, although there are some privately operated calling centres offering international phone services. Payphones are rare on the street, although there should be working payphones at train stations and airports. To use a public payphone you need to purchase a Telecom Italia scheda telefonica card at any tabacchi or newsagent. Insert the card before making a call. You can also use a pre-paid long-distance calling card in public payphones (without using a Telecom scheda), also available from tabacchi. These have an 800 number on the back and a scratch-off code.

When dialling locally, city landline numbers start with a 0. To make a long-distance call, dial 00, followed by the country code and area code, before dialling the number. If using a long-distance calling card, use the 800 number provided, dial the country and area codes (without the 00 prefix), and then dial the number.

You can usually make landline phone calls from your hotel, although these are expensive – ask for a price list if it is not displayed. You can also use long-distance calling cards with hotel phones – it should be free to connect. Most private apartment rentals and agriturismos do not have phones in guest rooms. Faxes can be sent from post offices, copy centres, cartolerie (paper/office stores) and Internet points.

MOBILE PHONES

The cost of mobile phones and services has reduced to such an extent that it can now make sense to buy a mobile phone in Italy if you are visiting the country for more than one week and intend to use your phone a lot. The two major providers, Tim and Vodafone, sell basic phones for around €30, including a SIM card with €5 credit. You can purchase additional credit from any tabacchi, newsagent or mobile phone store (be sure to specify the carrier name). To buy a mobile phone, you will need to bring a copy of your passport. When you purchase a new SIM card, you need to make a 1 minute call to a landline or other mobile phone in order to activate it, which can take up to 24 hours. However, it is possible to buy an unlocked Italian mobile phone and SIM online if you wish to get set up before your trip. The SIM usually expires one year from your last top up.

If you have an unlocked phone from the UK or Europe, you can purchase an Italian SIM and use it in your phone. Alternatively, set up a roaming agreement with your provider. If using a roaming plan, be sure to top up your credit before leaving home.

If you are travelling from North America, Australia or New Zealand, a tri-band/GSM phone should, technically, work in Italy. Check with your phone operator about roaming charges.

When using an Italian mobile phone, note that calls between phones using the same provider may cost less than calls to mobile phones serviced by other providers, depending on the package you signed up to. Long-distance rates are usually high but you can use a long-distance calling card with your mobile phone – calls will still cost more than from a landline, however.

INTERNET AND WI-FI

Increasing numbers of hotels and businesses are providing free or paid Internet services to their customers, and some Italian cities plan to offer free Wi-Fi for residents and tourists. You will be required to complete a brief registration process to use any Internet service in Italy. If your hotel Internet service is fast, Skype calls via your laptop will be perfectly viable; calls to landlines will require a small cash credit. Skype also allows you to make calls to toll free numbers in the US and UK (convenient if you need to contact your bank or credit card company), though you will be charged at the standard rate for these calls.

For those without a laptop, there are also many privately operated Internet points in Tuscany. In small towns these may be located at the back of a store or bar. Internet Train (www.internettrain.it) has 25 stores in Tuscany (with eight in Florence); you simply buy a charged magnetic card which can be used across their network.

POSTAL SERVICES

To send letters or postcards, purchase stamps (francobolli) at any tabbachi. There is usually a red mailbox right outside. Mailboxes have two slots: the one designated per la città is only for destinations within the city; altri destinazioni is for everywhere else.

For oversized letters or packages, go to the post office. Sub-post office hours are usually 8:30am–2pm Mon–Sat. Main offices stay open until 8pm. Post offices also provide banking services, so for the postal desk you must follow the correct procedure. Take a number from the yellow machine with the green envelope symbol by the entrance. The letter “P” combined with your number will be called out.

Priority mail (posta prioritaria) now designates regular airmail. Delivery time is somewhat variable, ranging from four days to six weeks worldwide. However, the post office also offers a well-priced international and national courier service (paccocelere) for tracked, on-time mail. Fedex and UPS are the main consumer courier services. Check www.fedex.com and www.ups.com for offices in Tuscany. Mailboxes Etc. also ships mail using either courier; they have five stores in Florence and one in each of Siena, Arezzo and Pisa.

ADDRESSES

Florence has a confusing dual address system. Each street has a double set of numbers: a red number indicates a shop, restaurant or business, while a blue or black number refers to a hotel or domestic residence. When writing to a business, insert an “r” after the number to distinguish it from a residential address. Each set of numbers has its own sequence, so business premises at, say, No. 10r may well be next to a residential address at No. 23.

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

Most Italian newspapers such as La Repubblica and La Nazione, publish supplements with a regional focus. European and American newspapers such as USA Today, the International Herald Tribune and the Financial Times are available on the day of issue at stations, hotels and major newsagents.

TELEVISION

There are a dozen Italian TV channels including two music channels (MTV and DeeJay). Many hotels have satellite TV with BBC and CNN news in English, as well as German and French channels.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Tuscany is easily reached by air, with airports in both Florence and Pisa. Amerigo Vespucci (Peretola) airport in Florence offers connections with all major European cities, although it does not accommodate long-haul flights. Pisa airport (Galileo Galilei) receives low-cost and scheduled flights, including a direct international New York JFK–Pisa flight daily in summer.

The city of Florence is also well connected by train and coach from most European cities. Train and coach travel, although slower and not necessarily cheaper, is a greener alternative to flying or driving.

Check-in area at Florence airport

GREEN TRAVEL

Getting to Tuscany from mainland Europe without flying is possible due to Italy's excellent train network, which serves major towns and cities including Florence, Pisa and Arezzo. Small discounts are available if travelling by train in a group of 10 or more. For information on train travel see pp308–9.

For those areas of Tuscany which are badly served by train, such as Siena and the coast, you may need to rent a car – look for economical diesel-engine models that use less fuel. If you want to explore the rolling hills of Tuscany without a car, two options are worth considering: ATAF (see p315) offers an inexpensive coach tour of the Chianti area, while a tourist steam train (see p309) runs occasional scenic day trips to seasonal fairs. Most towns and cities, can be explored on foot or using local buses (see pp314–15).

ARRIVING BY AIR

There are numerous daily arrivals at both Florence and Pisa airports from all major airlines, including Alitalia and British Airways. Some of the low-cost airlines also serve the region. Ryanair flies from London Stansted and Dublin to Pisa, EasyJet flies Gatwick–Pisa, and Meridiana flies Gatwick–Florence.

As there are few direct intercontinental flights to Tuscany, consider flying to Rome and taking the train up to Florence. The journey is approximately 1 hour 25 mins. Alternatively, you could hire a car in Rome and drive to Tuscany. Alitalia flies direct to Rome from Los Angeles, Chicago, Montreal, Toronto, Perth and Melbourne, and many other airlines offer good worldwide connections via Rome and other European capitals.

FLORENCE AIRPORT (FLR)

Florence's Amerigo Vespucci airport, often known as Peretola, is small, with relatively few shops and bars. The "Vola in Bus" goes to and from the airport every 30 minutes 6am–8pm and hourly 9–11pm. The bus to the city centre leaves from in front of the airport building, while the bus to the airport departs from Florence's Santa Maria Novella train station. The evening buses (from 9pm) leave from Piazza dell'Unità. The journey takes 20 minutes and tickets may be purchased from the driver. Line 2 of the tramway system will link the airport to Santa Maria Novella train station and Piazza Libertà once it is complete.

Only take a taxi from the official taxi rank. Drivers will charge a supplement for coming from the airport plus a supplement for any luggage. There is also an extra charge on Sundays and holidays. Fares start at €20 for the journey to/from the airport. Check that the meter is switched on at departure.

PISA AIRPORT (PSA)

Pisa airport has several shops, bars and restaurants. There are no money-changing facilities in the baggage hall so take some euros with you in order to hire a trolley.

There is a taxi rank at the front of the airport and good public transport links. Trains run directly from Pisa's Galileo Galilei airport to Florence's Santa Maria Novella station. To reach the trains, turn left as you leave the airport arrivals hall. Train tickets can be bought from the information kiosk at the airport. The journey to Florence takes 1 hour and the service generally runs once an hour, but is less regular in the early morning and evening. There is also an infrequent train serving Lucca and Montecatini. The train to Florence stops at Pisa Centrale and Empoli, where you can change on to the local line serving Siena.

The No. 3 bus runs from Pisa airport to the town centre. Buy tickets before you

AIR TICKETS AND FARES

It is worth shopping around for the lowest air fares online or with a travel agent such as CIT Viaggi. There is no rule as to when the best prices may come up; if fares seem high when you start looking, try a few days later and you may be pleasantly surprised. A good way to start is by comparing online prices at Expedia and Travelocity, and looking at the airlines' own websites. Signing up for email alerts or special offers is another way of getting a good deal.

PACKAGE HOLIDAYS

Package holidays incorporating a stay in Florence with nights in Rome and Venice are often available. Compare prices online and look at websites for major hotel resellers, such as Expedia. Whilst convenient, package deals are not always a cheaper option. Through contacting a hotel directly, it may be possible to negotiate a lower rate than those found online. This is also a good way to support local hoteliers, as they will receive payment direct from the customer.

CAR RENTAL

All the major car rental firms have rental offices at both Florence and Pisa airports.

Travelling by Train

Travelling overland can be a pleasurable way of getting to and travelling around Tuscany. Italy's state railway (Ferrovie dello Stato, or FS) has a train for every type of journey, from the quaintly slow regionale (local trains) through various levels of rapid intercity service to the luxurious, super-fast freccia rossa, which rushes between Italian cities at a speed to match its ticket price. The network between large cities is good, but journeys to towns on branch lines may be quicker by coach (see p310).

Freccia rossa (red arrow) train at Santa Maria Novella station

ARRIVING BY TRAIN

Florence is a major arrival point for trains from Europe. The Galilei from Paris and the Italia Express from Frankfurt travel direct to Florence. Passengers from London have to change in Paris or Lille. From Florence, there is a direct train link with Pisa's airport (see p307).

Trains from all over Italy arrive at and depart from Pisa Centrale and Florence's Santa Maria Novella stations. The high-speed freccia rossa train stops at Santa Maria Novella, connecting to Bologna and Milan in one direction, Rome and Naples in the other.

Some intercity and regional trains stop at Florence's other two (smaller) stations; from here you can take a regional train to Santa Maria Novella for free, or it may be quicker to take a local bus to your final destination (see p314).

SANTA MARIA NOVELLA STATION, FLORENCE

Santa Maria Novella (see p113) is Florence's central railway station. It is always crowded and attracts some unsavoury characters, so you need to be vigilant and take care of your belongings. There is a taxi rank in front, and local buses (see p314) depart from the side of the building.

Facilities include a left luggage office, a pharmacy, a sala blu (for disabled traveller assistance), a hotel-booking service, and newspaper kiosks which also sell city bus tickets. The nearest tourist information office is at Piazza della Stazione 4, across the street. Florence also has two other smaller train stations – Campo de Marte and Rifredi – running some regional trains and intercity night trains.

SIENA STATION

Siena's train station is situated outside the city walls on Piazzale Carlo Rosselli. It is quite small and about a 20-minute walk from the centre. Any bus from opposite the station goes to the city centre. The TRA-IN bus company (see p315) runs coaches to Montepulciano, Montalcino and Buonconvento. These depart from the front of the station. Tickets must be bought from the bus ticket window or self-service machines before you board.

PISA CENTRALE

Pisa's central station is quite large, with facilities including a restaurant and bar, newspaper kiosks selling bus tickets, a currency exchange booth and left luggage office.

Tourist information is at the front of the station. Most local buses, including to the Campo dei Miracoli (see pp158–9) and to the airport, stop in front of the station. A bus information and ticket office are close by. Pisa also has another train station at the airport (see p307).

TICKETS AND FARES

Fares vary by train type (the slowest trains cost the least) and class (first and second). Fares and timetables are listed online (www.trenitalia.it). Fast trains have obligatory seat booking, while regional trains do not have reserved seats.

There are often special offers online for certain trains or destinations, as well as online price variations for fast trains (Eurostar and freccia rossa). You can get a 15–30 per cent discount on advance bookings for the freccia rossa, but such tickets come with limited flexibility if you need to change your booking later; you can also pay a 20 per cent surcharge in order to have total flexibility.

Trenitalia offers a Travelcard for one week, two weeks, or a month on the route and train type of your choice, offering 1,000 km (620 miles) of travel during the specified period. Travelcards can be purchased online or at train stations.

Logo on an intercity train

BUYING TICKETS

Always buy a ticket before you travel, otherwise you will be charged the price of a full-fare ticket plus a €50 fine. If the ticket office is busy, try one of the self-service ticket machines found at most stations. You must validate your ticket before every trip by stamping it in one of the yellow machines situated at the entrance to most platforms. If you forget to stamp your ticket, write the time and date on the edge of the ticket and explain your error to the inspector in order to avoid paying a fine.

To purchase tickets online you must first register at www.trenitalia.com. American Express is not accepted. You can download and print your ticket in PDF form or show the reservation number to the agent on the train. Tickets bought online do not need to

Travelling by Bus and Coach

Florence is linked by coach to most major European cities, and local companies operate an extensive network of services within Tuscany. Coaches are considered to be quicker where there is no direct train link, particularly in the countryside. Although the train is faster for long journeys, the coach may be a cheaper option. The coach companies' main offices, usually situated near city railway stations, stock timetables and route maps to help you plan your journey. This information is also provided online, but due to the complexity of schedules it is usually more helpful to consult a local travel agent.

ARRIVING BY COACH

Santa Maria Novella railway station in Florence is Tuscany's main arrival and departure point for all long-distance coach journeys, and the hub of the extensive local coach network. The Lazzi company runs coach services to major European cities from Florence and sells tickets for Eurolines coaches. Tickets can be booked at their office by Santa Maria Novella station. There are express services from Florence to Rome, run by Lazzi, and from Florence to Siena run by TRA-IN or SITA.

THE NETWORK

Florence has four main coach companies. Lazzi serves the region north and west of Florence and SITA serves the southern and eastern regions (including Siena, San Gimignano and Volterra). The COPIT bus company connects the city with the Abetone/Pistoia, region and CAP links it to the Mugello area north of the city. All of these companies have ticket and information offices near Santa Maria Novella railway station.

Siena's main bus and coach company is TRA-IN, which runs local and regional services. Local services leave from Piazza Antonio Gramsci and regional buses from Piazza San Domenico. There is a ticket office in both squares. TRA-IN runs buses to most of Tuscany, including a direct coach to Rome twice daily.

In Pisa, the city bus company CPT serves the surrounding area, including the towns of Volterra, Livorno, San Miniato and Pontedera. These buses leave from Piazza Sant'Antonio. Lazzi runs a service to Viareggio, Lucca and Florence from Pisa, departing from Piazza Vittorio Emanuele II, where there is a Lazzi ticket office. Arezzo's La Ferroviaria Italiana bus lines connect to all the small towns nearby including Cortona.

TICKETS AND RESERVATIONS

Coach tickets must be purchased at an authorized ticket reseller or at the bus company's office. It's worth

A SITA coach, serving southern and eastern Tuscany

Travelling by Ferry and River Boat

Tuscany has a long and beautiful coast that boasts seven islands of which Elba, Giglio, Capraia, and Giannutri are visitable. All are well served by the ferry companies Moby and Toremar, especially during the summer months. The mainland ports are Piombino, Santo Stefano and Livorno (Leghorn). The closest airport is Pisa, from which you can reach Piombino by a combination of bus and train, or by car. For Livorno, bus No. 101 from the airport arrives in Livorno city; from there switch buses for the port.

Portoferraio, the main port on Elba

ARRIVING BY FERRY

Tuscany can be reached by ferry from other regions of Italy. Livorno is connected to Sardinia (port of Cagliari) and Sicily (Palermo); Piombino connects to Sardinia (Olbia) and Corsica (Bastia). Livorno is also the major port for international cruise ships.

PORTS

Tuscany's mainland ports are Livorno, Piombino and Porto Santo Stefano. On the islands, Elba's main port is Portoferraio, along with the smaller Rio Marina and Porto Azzurro. The other islands have only one tourist port.

If you arrive at Stazione Marittima, at the port of Livorno, and wish to take a self-guided day trip to Florence, the train is your best option. It takes 1½ hours and there are trains every hour. Take the shuttle bus (€5 return) from the port to Piazza Grande, in front of the Duomo. From here various city bus lines go to Livorno Centrale train station. Alternatively, Piazza Grande is about 10 minutes' walk from where ferries dock. It will take longer to walk from other parts of the port used by major cruise lines, but taxis are available. From the port, there is also a bus service to Pisa Airport and Pisa train station, which takes around 35 minutes. The train to Pisa runs approximately every 20 minutes and the journey takes 15–20 minutes.

TRAVELLING BY FERRY

When driving to any port, follow signs for Porto/Imbarchi and then the sign for your chosen ferry company (Moby or Toremar).

If you are taking your vehicle on the ferry, you will be directed to line up and turn off your engine in a numbered lot to await the boat. There is also short- and long-term parking available at Livorno and Piombino.

Washrooms are scarce at ports, but services on board are available and reasonably clean. Ferries have both indoor and outdoor seating and a snack bar. There is limited shade outdoors so be sure to wear a hat.

Ferries from Piombino to Elba and Porto Santo Stefano to Isola del Giglio take approximately 1 hour. Livorno to Capraia is nearly 3½ hours on the ferry or 1½ hours on the fast boat (passengers only, no vehicles). Ticket costs vary depending on what vehicle you take and the number of passengers you are travelling with. Toremar tends to be the cheaper option.

TICKETS

Tickets for all ferries can be purchased directly from the ferry company. It's also worth checking their websites, which may have special offers. Avoid resellers who may charge extra. Advance booking is strongly recommended if you are travelling with a vehicle; for travel in August you will need to book a few weeks in advance. Individuals travelling without a vehicle can usually get tickets on the day of travel.

RIVER BOAT TOURS

From June through to September, the Renaioli Association in Florence offers inexpensive 1 hour boat tours on the Arno, departing from near Ponte alle Grazie. Boats seat up to 16 people with a minimum of six people per group. It is possible to reserve a tour guide to accompany you on the tour. Price varies by number of guests and use of guide.

Driving in Florence and Tuscany

There are certain areas of Tuscany, such as tiny hill towns and authentic agritourismo locations, which are best reached by car. However, heavy traffic in some areas and narrow roads in others can make driving difficult, and it is unwise to drive without someone to help navigate. Train and coach travel (see pp308–10) are good options for reaching larger towns and cities. It is best to avoid having a car if you intend to stay in the cities of Florence or Siena; both cities restrict car traffic and parking is difficult and expensive.

Country road in the mountainous Garfagnana region of Tuscany

ARRIVING BY CAR

The main autostrada (toll highway) that services Tuscany (between Rome and Bologna) is the A1, also known as Autostrada del Sole. Autostrada signage is green. The Firenze–Mare (A11) goes to Pisa, Lucca and the coast. There are two superstradas (four-lane highways): the Firenze–Siena and the “Fi–Pi–Li”, short for the cities it serves (Firenze, Pisa and Livorno). Superstrada signage is blue. Both types of highway have large service stations with good facilities, including self-service restaurants and large markets selling everything from prosciutto to CDs.

Drivers from the UK need a Green Card for insurance purposes, and the vehicle's registration document. EU nationals who intend to stay for more than six months and do not have the standard pink licence will need an Italian translation of their licence (IDP: International Drivers' Permit), available from most motoring organizations and Italian tourist offices.

SOS columns on the road allow instant access to emergency services. In a rental car, call the 800 number provided by the agency. The ACI (Automobile Club d'Italia) will tow anyone for free and offers free repairs to members of affiliated associations, such as the AA or RAC in the UK.

RULES OF THE ROAD

Drive on the right, use the left lane only for passing, and give way to the right. Seat belts are compulsory in the front and back. You must carry a warning triangle in case of breakdown and a fluorescent safety vest, which you must wear if you exit the vehicle on the highway. Speed limits for cars are: in town centres 50 km/h (30 mph); on roads outside cities 70 or 90 km/h (43/55 mph); on the superstrada 90/110 (55/70 mph) as indicated, and on the autostrada 130 km/h (80 mph).

DRIVING IN TOWNS AND CITIES

City centres are usually fraught with one-way systems, limited traffic zones and moped drivers who weave through traffic. You must be constantly vigilant and aware of other road users in order to avoid accidents. In Lucca, Siena and San Gimignano, only residents and taxis may drive inside the city walls, while Pisa has limited traffic zones around the Arno. Visitors may go in to unload at their hotel but must then park outside the residents' area.

Florence has an extensive pedestrian zone around the Duomo so that not even taxis or buses may use the roads connecting major sights in that area. Inside the viali (ring road), there is a strict zona a traffico limitato (ZTL), with electronic gates barring traffic when the ZTL sign is red. The fine for an infraction is steep. The light is green only on Sundays and late at night. If you stay in a hotel in the ZTL you will be given a temporary access permit so that you can unload your luggage, but then you must park elsewhere.

PARKING

Street parking in the centre of Florence (and in most of Tuscany) is indicated by blue or white lines on the pavement. White lines indicate residents' parking only. Visitors must park in the designated areas marked by blue lines and pay at the meter. Insert the amount of money for the time you need, and leave the receipt visible on the dashboard.

There are three large underground car parks in central Florence: at Santa Maria Novella station; below the Mercato Centrale; and at the Fortezza da Basso. Slightly further out, and less costly (€1.50 per hour, €18 daily rate), are the Parterre north-east of Piazza della Libertà, and the ultra-modern Alberti car park near Via Aretina. Some hotels offer their own parking while others have agreements for reduced rates with private garages.

In Tuscany, one day a week is set aside for street cleaning, when parking is forbidden. Parking signs show a small symbol (which looks a little like a tractor) with a day and time, indicating when cleaning takes place each week.

If you park illegally, your car could be towed away. If this happens, phone the Vigili, the municipal police, to find out where it has been taken.

Road signs in Gaiole in Chianti, central Tuscany

DRIVING IN THE COUNTRYSIDE

Driving on Tuscan country roads offers incredible views and hairpin bends. Sound your horn when approaching a blind bend (flash your lights at night). If using GPS, always check the route on a printed map and avoid impossibly convoluted white roads; they are likely to be poorly paved, narrow and steep. Avoid driving in unfamiliar areas of the countryside at night.

TOLLS AND FUEL

Autostradas are toll highways; you are issued with a ticket on entry, and pay as you exit. At the toll exit, signs above each lane indicate the payment method available – either an attendant who will accept cash or a machine that accepts credit cards. The yellow lane is reserved for electronic “Telepass” holders.

Fuel stations are regularly spaced on autostradas, but less so on superstradas. In the countryside they can be found in or just outside most towns. Small fuel stations close for a long lunch, but most operate 24 hours with automatic machines – insert banknotes into the machine, select the tank number, then begin pumping fuel. Don’t put in more money than is needed to fill your tank, as the machine does not give change. Instead, a receipt is issued which you can use to get change when the fuel station is open. The machines do not take credit cards.

CAR RENTAL

Car rental in Italy is expensive and, ideally, should be booked online or through a tour operator before travelling. To rent a car you must be over 21, and have held a licence for at least a year. Visitors from outside the EU need an International Drivers’ Permit (IDP). Make sure the rental package includes collision damage waiver, breakdown service and insurance against theft (casco).

MOPED AND BIKE RENTAL

Moped (scooter) rental is available across Tuscany. It is not advisable for visitors to ride a moped in cities due to heavy traffic, but touring the countryside is very pleasant. Helmets are mandatory.

Getting Around Towns and Cities in Tuscany

Tuscan cities are compact enough to get around reasonably comfortably on foot, and the city buses are relatively cheap, regular and wide-ranging. A one-way ticket takes you 15 km (10 miles) out of town, making the bus ideal for trips from the city centre to outlying areas of Florence, Pisa or Siena.

WALKING

Sightseeing on foot in Tuscan cities is made all the more pleasurable by the fact that there are plenty of squares in which to rest and watch the world go by, or cool churches to pop into when the heat gets too much. Most towns have pedestrian zones, including the area around Florence's Duomo and almost all of Siena, in which walking is very pleasant. On streets where traffic does have access, pavements tend to be narrow and crowded.

Be sure to cross the street at the white pedestrian crossings, which are sometimes accompanied by traffic lights. Although required to by law, not all drivers will stop voluntarily at crossings so proceed with caution. It helps to make eye contact with drivers and then step out slowly but confidently. Some very large streets have pedestrian underpasses.

Signs for sights and landmarks have brown backgrounds. In Florence, use the Duomo and river as orientation points. A gentle stroll around the main sights of Florence can take just a couple of hours. The main sights in Pisa are all in the same square. Siena is compact but hilly, so be sure to wear comfortable shoes.

The cities can be unbearably hot in summer. Plan your day so that you are inside for the hottest part. Recuperate Italian-style with a leisurely lunch followed by a siesta. Shopping is more pleasant in the early evening, when it is cooler and the streets start to come alive.

CYCLING

Bicycles can be rented in all towns and cities. Lucca is a great town for cycling as it is flat and has a bike path along the city walls. Florence has some bike paths on the viali (tree-lined avenues), but otherwise bikes share the road with other vehicles.

Tour companies, such as Florence by Bike, offer bike tours departing from Florence and Siena. They take a pleasant route into the countryside and provide bikes, helmets, water and food.

No Pedestrian Access sign

GUIDED TOURS

Tours and private guides can be arranged through APT or a travel agent. For guided walks around the city, contact ArtViva or Context Travel.

Citysightseeing Firenze offers a hop-on hop-off bus service (complete with audioguide) to all the major sites in the city. Segway tours of Florence and Pisa are arranged by Segway Firenze. The Florence tour is limited to the historic centre due to the number of narrow streets.

One of Florence's ATAF buses in a narrow street

CITY BUSES

Florence's city bus company is called ATAF, Pisa's is CPT, and Siena's TRA-IN. City buses are bright orange. Most lines run frequently until around 9:30pm, after which they tend to run hourly. There are designated night bus lines offering services through the night, but these are very infrequent.

Florence does not have a main terminus, but most buses can be picked up alongside Santa Maria Novella station or in Piazza San Marco. Buses run near most major sights: normal bus routes indicated by numbers and names are supplemented by electric minibuses, indicated by letters C1, C2, C3 through to D, that serve the narrow streets in the very centre of town.

Pisa's buses also serve the main sights. Most buses stop at the railway station and Piazza Vittorio Emanuele II. In Siena the main bus stops are Piazza Antonio Gramsci and Piazza San Domenico. There are bus information kiosks at all these points, but they are not always open. Tourist information offices can usually help, or consult the route maps online.

In all cases, enter the bus at the front or back and get off through the middle doors. The four low seats at the front of the bus are meant for the elderly, the disabled and people with children, although Italian etiquette calls for people to give up their seats for anyone in greater need than themselves.

BUS TICKETS

Tickets for city buses must be bought before travel and validated (stamped) in the machines on the bus. They can be bought at newsstands, bars displaying the bus company sign (ATAF, APT, TRA-IN) or tabacchi, or at the bus terminus. If you are likely to make a few trips, buy multi-trip tickets that offer a slight discount. There are two- and four-trip paper tickets available; in Florence there is also the Carta Agile with an electronic chip loaded with €10, €20, or €30. Any of these multi-trip tickets can be used by people travelling together; just validate once for each passenger. Children under 1 metre high travel free.

If you are planning to stay longer in any one town, consider a multi-day ticket or monthly pass, which are non-transferable. Anyone wishing to claim a student discount must first purchase a student photocard.

TRAMS IN FLORENCE

There have been plans to run trams through Florence for several years. In 2010, Line 1 finally opened. This connects the suburb Scandicci to Santa Maria Novella train station. Line 2 from Florence airport to Santa Maria Novella train station and Piazza Libertà is still under construction. Line 3 is still under debate.

Tickets for the bus are also valid on the tram. Be sure to validate the ticket on whichever transport you use first, by stamping it in the machine found on board.

TAXIS IN TUSCANY

Ticket-stamping machine

Official taxis found in Tuscan towns and cities are white with a "Taxi" sign on the roof. Only take taxis at official ranks – ignore all offers from touts at the stations. There are supplements for baggage, for rides between 10pm and 7am, on Sundays and on public holidays, and for journeys to and from the airport. If you phone for a taxi, the meter starts to run from the moment you book it, so by the time it arrives you could already owe several euros. Generally, travelling by taxi is rather costly. Taxi drivers are usually honest, but make sure you know what any supplements are for. Italians give very small tips or nothing at all

In Florence, there are ranks at Via Pellicceria, Piazza di Santa Maria Novella (near the station) and Piazza di San Marco. In Siena, taxis can be found in Piazza Matteotti and Piazza della Stazione; and in Pisa at the Piazza del Duomo, Piazza Garibaldi and Piazza della Stazione.
