HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide helps you get the most from your visit to Italy, providing expert recommendations as well as detailed practical information. Introducing Italy maps the whole country and sets it in its historical and cultural context. The 15 regional chapters, plus Rome, Florence, and Venice, describe important sights with the help of maps and images. Each section is introduced with features on regional architecture and food specialities. Travellers' Needs gives details of hotels and restaurants and the Survival Guide contains practical information on everything from transport to personal safety.

ROME

The center of Rome was divided into five sightseeing areas. Each area has its own chapter, which opens with a list of the sights described. All the sights are numbered and plotted on an Area Map. The detailed information for each sight is presented in numerical order, making it easy to locate within the chapter.

Sights at a Glance lists the chapter's sights by category: Churches, Museums and Galleries, Historic Buildings, Streets and Piazzas.

All pages relating to Rome have red thumb tabs.

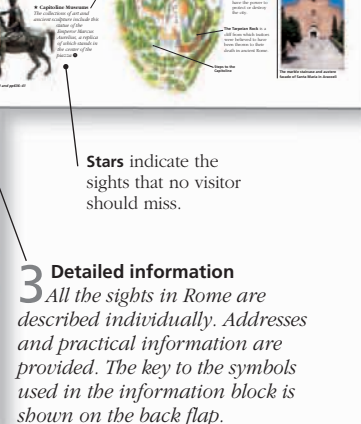

A locator map shows where you are in relation to other areas of the city centre.

1 Area Map
For easy reference, the sights are numbered and located on a map. The sights are also shown on the Street Finder on pages 447-57.

Stars indicate the sights that no visitor should miss.

3 Detailed information
All the sights in Rome are described individually. Addresses and practical information are provided. The key to the symbols used in the information block is shown on the back flap.

SICILY

On a crossroads in the Mediterranean, part of Europe and Africa, yet belonging to neither, Sicily was brought across by half the ancient world. As conquerors came and went, they left behind a rich and varied cultural deposit. This has resulted in a quirky mixture in almost every corner of the island of the most remarkable from language, customs, and cooking to art and, most notably, the diverse architecture of the island.

During the 6th and 5th centuries BC, Greek colonies have been much influenced by the Greek culture of Sicily. These colonies are among the most important of our world. The Roman Empire took over in the 3rd century BC, followed by the Visigoths, Ostrogoths, and Byzantines, but each that is not Greek has left its mark. The Norman era, beginning in 1071, opened high levels of achievement, such as the cathedrals of Monreale and Cefalù, while the selection of the papacy in Avignone, the papal curia in Sicily, and the Sicilian Kingdom of the 13th and 16th centuries is part of the island's history. The palaces and churches of Palermo, reflecting the elaborate trend of the Spanish Renaissance, created local islands, and the buildings are a mix of styles, including the Sicilian Gothic style. The Sicilian Gothic style is a mix of Gothic and Renaissance styles, with some of the most important and interesting of the past in Sicily. The Sicilian Gothic style is a mix of Gothic and Renaissance styles, with some of the most important and interesting of the past in Sicily.

1 Introduction
The landscape, history and character of each region is described here, showing how the area has developed over the centuries and what it offers to the visitor today.

ITALY AREA BY AREA
Apart from Rome, Florence, and Venice, Italy has been divided into 15 areas, each of which has a separate chapter. The most interesting towns and places to visit have been numbered on a Regional Map.

Exploring Sicily

The first chapter of Italy (Italy) provides a general overview of the island, its history, and its culture. It covers the island's geography, climate, and population. It also provides a list of the most important towns and places to visit, along with a list of the most important sights. The chapter is written in a clear and concise style, making it easy to read and understand. It is a great resource for anyone planning a trip to Sicily.

Each area of Italy can be identified quickly by its colour coding, shown on the inside front cover.

This shows the main road network and gives an illustrated overview of the whole region. All entries are numbered and there are also useful tips on getting around the region by car and train.

3 Detailed information
All the important towns and other places to visit are described individually. They are listed in order, following the numbering given on the Regional Map. Within each entry, information is given on the most important sights. The name of the provincial capital is given for smaller towns at the top of each entry.

Taormina
A beautiful town on the east coast of Sicily, known for its stunning beaches and ancient ruins. The Theatre of Taormina Major is a highlight, along with the Villa Taormina and the Taormina Archaeological Park. The town is a mix of ancient and modern, with a vibrant atmosphere and a rich cultural heritage.

Mount Etna
A massive volcano that dominates the Sicilian landscape. It is one of the most active volcanoes in the world and has a long history of eruptions. The mountain is a popular destination for hikers and tourists, offering breathtaking views and a unique experience.

INFLUENCES ON TRADITIONAL SICILIAN COOKING
Sicilian cuisine is a blend of various influences, including Greek, Arab, and Spanish. It is known for its use of fresh ingredients and its unique flavors. The cuisine is a reflection of the island's rich history and its position as a crossroads of cultures.

Monreale
A magnificent cathedral in Palermo, Sicily, known for its Norman Gothic architecture. It is a masterpiece of art and architecture, with a rich history and a stunning interior. The cathedral is a must-visit for anyone in Palermo, offering a glimpse into the island's past and its cultural heritage.

Story boxes explore specific subjects further.

For all the top sights, a Visitors' Checklist provides the practical information you need to plan your visit.

4 Italy's top sights
These are given two or more full pages. Historic buildings are dissected to reveal their interiors; museums and galleries have colour-coded floorplans to help you locate the most interesting exhibits.

DISCOVERING ITALY

Italy offers a remarkable kaleidoscope of regions and experiences for all visitors. Extending over 620 miles (1,000 km) from top to toe, it stretches from far northern reaches that take in the Alps and the industrialized Po plain, all the way down to sun-soaked

Emperor Augustus, Turin

Mediterranean shores and islands of the south. Its incomparable artistic and cultural heritage centers on the Renaissance, but there are also myriad natural wonders. The following four pages are designed to help visitors pinpoint the highlights of each fascinating region.

VENICE

- Magical Piazza San Marco
- Rialto fresh produce market
- Romantic gondola cruises

Enchanting Venice, city-on-water par excellence, simply demands to be visited. But remember that it does get damp and foggy and can be outrageously expensive.

More-over there is hardly a low season, meaning that the main sights such as Piazza San Marco (see pp108–9) and the Rialto bridge and markets (see p97), as well as the many art galleries and museums, can get crowded. In contrast, leisurely days can be spent wandering through the labyrinthine alley-ways and happening upon out-of-the-way churches adorned with exquisite works of art.

Starting with the fascinating Grand Canal (see pp88–91), vaporetti convey passengers around town and across the lagoon to distinctive outlying islands such as Murano and Burano (see p121). A romantic gondola trip is a great way to discover the mystical backstreets and quieter canals.

VENETO & FRIULI

- Romeo and Juliet's Verona
- Padua's splendid Cappella degli Scrovegni
- The ruins of Aquileia

Nymphaeum statue, Veneto

The northeast of Italy has undergone large-scale industrial development since World War II, but its splendid heritage of history and art merits exploring. A drive through the vine-clad hills is rewarded by stately villas, charming towns, and family-run wineries that produce high-grade vintages. The bustling Veneto cities of Verona (see pp142–7), the setting for the tragic story of Romeo and Juliet, and Padua with its impressive Cappella degli Scrovegni (see pp156–7), make for memorable visits.

Vine-clad hills typical of the Veneto countryside

Farther east is low-key Friuli and the melancholy remains of former Roman city Aquileia (see p164), razed to the ground in glee by notorious Attila the Hun in AD 452. Delightful Civiale di Friuli (see p163) is set at the foothills of the beautiful Julian Alps.

TRENTINO-ALTO ADIGE

- Skiing in the Dolomite mountain range
- Enchanting medieval castles
- The "Ice Man" in Bolzano

An impeccable combination of traditional alpine pastoral culture and Germanic heritage is the trademark of these erstwhile Austrian domains. Ancient timber farmhouses and medieval castles and monasteries grace the slopes of the imposing Dolomites (see pp82–3), in dramatic contrast to the modern resorts that serve the winter crowds who flock here to ski and snowboard. In summer time nature enthusiasts and climbers take to paths through flourishing orchards and across meadows of wildflowers, en route to high-altitude mountain huts.

For rainy days, the pretty town of Bolzano (see p172) hosts the 5,000-year-old mummy of Ötzi the "Ice Man" in a state-of-the-art museum.

LOMBARDY

- Fashion capital Milan
- The glorious lakes by ferry
- Bergamo and Mantova

Milan, home to Versace, Gucci, and Armani, boasts elegant architecture such as the Gothic Duomo (see p193) and a wealth of art treasures, headed by Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper (see p192). It is also home to La Scala (see p193), the country's leading opera house. Nearby are Italy's famous lakes – Como and Maggiore (see pp190–91) – adorned with villas and served by leisurely ferries.

Bergamo (see p201) merits a visit, as do Pavia (see p203) and Mantova (Mantua) (see p207), each with exquisite Renaissance monasteries and palaces.

Window shopping in Via Montenapoleone, Milan

VALLE D'AOSTA & PIEDMONT

- Turin and the Shroud
- Olympic skiing
- Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso

The Piedmont capital Turin (see pp220–25) is synonymous with the Fiat automobile plant and the remarkable Holy Shroud; it also hosted the 2006 Winter Olympics. It is renowned for its fine food and the Langhe hills produce some of Italy's best red wines, such as Barbera and Nebbiolo. Cheeses are also noteworthy, as well as rice in waterlogged fields near Vercelli (see p228).

A little farther afield, the imposing western Alps rise to giddy heights, peaking with glacier-bound Mont Blanc (see p214), astride the French-Italian border.

The wild alpine valleys of Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso (see pp216–7) are home to vast numbers of wildlife, predominantly ibex and chamois.

LIGURIA

- Cinque Terre
- Italian Riviera resorts
- The thriving city of Genoa

Tourists flock to the delightful hamlets of the dramatic Cinque Terre coast (see p241), to roam along the dizzy pathways that cut across terraced hillsides. The Italian Riviera enjoys a balmy climate and is famous for its flower and fresh food markets, San Remo (see p235) in particular. The Ligurian Sea also attracts yachting enthusiasts, whose craft call in to the many picturesque village marinas.

The region's capital, Genoa (see pp236–9), also has much to offer the visitor, from pasta with pesto sauce to the house of Christopher Columbus, and from a regenerated waterfront to one of Europe's largest aquariums.

Mosaic from Sant'Apollinare Nuovo basilica, Ravenna

EMILIA-ROMAGNA

- Beach life at Rimini
- Historic Bologna
- Ravenna and its mosaics

Centrally located with an extension to the Adriatic coast, Emilia-Romagna takes in a large slice of the Apennine mountains, providing opportunities for a wide range of outdoor activities. A visit should include Bologna (see p262–5), the impressive beach resort of Rimini (see p266), with its extensive seafront, and the marvelous Byzantine mosaics in the churches of Ravenna (see pp266–9).

Food plays an important part in life here and it is probably the region's gastronomy that attract most people. Tortellini pasta, cured Parma ham, Parmesan cheese and fragrant balsamic vinegar from Modena (see p260) are known the world over.

FLORENCE & TUSCANY

- Renaissance art in Florence
- Pisa and the Leaning Tower
- Chianti vineyards

Justifiably popular, if over-crowded, Florence is home to Renaissance art, perfect Italian gardens, magnificent squares, and splendid sights such as the Duomo (see pp280–81) and the Uffizi (see p286–9).

Nearby are Pisa, famous for its Leaning Tower (see p326), Lucca (see pp320–23), and Sienna (see pp338–43), just a few of the attractive towns dotted around the area.

The Tuscan countryside with its rolling hills, pencil-thin cypress trees, and bright poppy fields in spring is a dream for artists and visitors alike. A host of vineyards in the renowned Chianti region (see pp250–51) invite passers-by for a tasting.

UMBRIA

- Assisi and St. Francis
- Art town of Perugia
- Spectacular scenery of the Monti Sibillini

Quieter than Tuscany, this inspirational region has a lot to offer in terms of both nature and Romanesque art. Assisi (see p354–5) is high on the sightseeing list for its beautiful position and 13th-century basilica, associated with the peregrinations of St. Francis. Other memorable towns include medieval Perugia (see p352–3), Orvieto

Tiered exterior of Rome's ancient Colosseum

The quintessential Tuscan countryside

(see p358) with its glorious Duomo, and peaceful Spoleto (see p360). The Monti Sibillini (see p362) put on unrivaled displays of wildflowers in summer, while the densely wooded hills encourage wildlife, including boars and songbirds.

LE MARCHE

- The republic of San Marino
- The Adriatic's beach resorts
- Renaissance Urbino

This low-key region on the Adriatic coast has a wealth of surprises in store and is also home to Europe's oldest republic – San Marino (see p368). Its resorts and beaches are busy in midsummer as the lively nightlife attracts young crowds. The port towns of Ancona (see p372) and Pesaro (see p368) have animated fish markets, vital for the region's seafood cuisine. Set in the hilly interior, Urbino (see pp370–71) is simply glorious – its Palazzo Ducale a triumph of 15th-century architecture.

ROME & LAZIO

- The ancient Roman Colosseum and Forum
- Vatican City and St. Peter's
- Etruscan sites

The nation's capital city has an overwhelming array of memorable sights ranging from Roman to Renaissance to Baroque. The ancient Forum (see p390–92) and Colosseum (see p393) are a must.

The independent Vatican City state is a highlight of any visit, with its wealth of art treasures, the Sistine Chapel (see pp424–6), and the magnificent St. Peter's (see pp418–9).

Out-of-town sights include the atmospheric ancient Etruscan sites of Cerveteri (see p466) and Tarquini (see p466), as well as renowned villas at Tivoli (see p468) and Viterbo (see pp464–5).

The historic cathedral of Amalfi in Campania

NAPLES & CAMPANIA

- The ruins of Pompeii
- The trendy island of Capri
- Gorgeous Amalfi Coast

A region of contrasts, Campania has several of Italy's top sights. Naples (see pp486–93) spells excellent pizzas, wonderful museums, and enchanting churches, although it can be maddeningly chaotic. Pompeii (see pp494–5), the Roman town that was laid waste by the mighty volcano Vesuvius in AD 79, is fascinating, although many relics found here are housed at the Museo Archeologico Nazionale (see pp490–91) in Naples.

A ferry trip to the legendary island of Capri (see pp498–9), beloved of the Romans, is recommended, and should take in the limestone rock formations and marine caves.

Last but definitely not least is the divine and immensely popular Amalfi Coast (see p497) with terraced hillsides planted with fragrant lemon trees, high above sparkling bays and beaches.

Unusual Trulli houses in Alberobello, Puglia

ABRUZZO, MOLISE, & PUGLIA

- Gargano beaches
- Trulli houses in Alberobello
- Parco Nazionale d'Abruzzo

Something for everyone can be had in these southern regions. There are beaches galore on the Gargano peninsula (see p508), curious trulli houses at Alberobello (see p511), ancient sights at Trani (see p509), L'Aquila (see p504), and Lecce (see pp512–13) – famed for its decorative Baroque architecture.

In contrast, wolves and bears inhabit the wild reaches of the rugged Gran Sasso in the Parco Nazionale d'Abruzzo (see pp506–7), where high altitude trekking is popular. Age-old pastoral life and traditional dress persist in the mountain village of Scanno (see p505).

Temple of Concord in the Valley of Temples, Sicily

BASILICATA & CALABRIA

- The "stone town" of Matera
- The Riace bronze statues
- Unspoiled fishing villages

Italy's far south receives few visitors. The handful of attractions commence with Matera (see pp518–19), the UNESCO World Heritage site that rose to fame as the location for the controversial film Passion of Christ (2004). Here, over the ages, primitive stone dwellings were shaped into the rocky hillsides, making an astonishing sight.

A pair of awesome 5th-century BC statues known as the Riace Bronzes are worth a trip to Reggio di Calabria (see p521), on the Straits of Messina. Down on the coast, the pretty fishing village of Tropea (see p520) promises fine views and good beaches.

The beautiful turquoise waters of the Costa Smeralda, Sardinia

SICILY

- Active volcanoes
- Charming Cefalù and Taormina
- Monumental Greek ruins

Mediterranean in essence, Sicily has a remarkable range of landscapes. Towering Mount Etna (see p539) dominates, the mountainous interior offers excellent walking amid brilliant wildflowers, while a string of stunning beaches attract sunlovers.

Visitors will be enchanted by the Byzantine marvels at Monreale cathedral (see pp530–31), pretty Cefalù (see p535), as well as Classical Greek ruins at Taormina (see p538), Selinunte (see p534), and Agrigento (see p535).

SARDINIA

- Jet set beach resorts
- Prehistoric nuraghe
- Charming Alghero

Sardinia is an island of contrasts. Gorgeous turquoise water laps the exclusive Costa Smeralda (see p548), and sleek yachts call in at its scenic bays. Cala Gonone (see p550) is a little quieter, and charming Alghero (see p548) on the western coast has a distinctly Spanish flavor.

The wild and rocky interior is frequented by reticent shepherds, and enigmatic nuraghe (see p549) can be found all over the island.

Putting Italy on the Map

Italy sits at the heart of the Mediterranean, shielded from the rest of Europe by the vast sweep of the Alps. The Po, its longest river, arcs across the industrial north, while the Apennine mountains split the boot-shaped peninsula down its length. Italy, with a population of 58 million governed from Rome, covers 116,320 sq miles (301,268 sq km) and includes Sicily and Sardinia.

Northern Italy

Airline connections link the rest of Europe with Milan, Turin, Bologna, Pisa, Florence, Verona, and Venice. Major roads and railroads also provide excellent links to cities all over Europe. Transportation services are very efficient, with freeways and railroads along both coasts, and across the area's main east-to-west axis at the foot of the Alps. Milan, Verona, and Bologna are the key transportation hubs, while Florence forms the focus of links to the south.

Venice by Road
 Venice is joined to the mainland by a causeway. This gives easy access to freeway links with Verona and Padua.

Central Italy

Southern Italy

International airline services operate to Rome, Naples, and Palermo in southern Italy. Transportation links within the region are generally slower than in the north, particularly inland and on the islands of Sicily and Sardinia, where buses are often a faster option than trains. Mainland coastal road and rail links are good, however, especially those linking Rome and Naples, the region's main transportation hubs, which are connected by a high-speed train service. Two trans-Apennine freeways offer the quickest cross-country routes.

Sicily and Sardinia

Ferries operate to Sicily from Naples, Villa San Giovanni, and Reggio di Calabria. Onward connections include boats to Malta and Tunisia. Ferries run to Sardinia from several mainland ports, notably Civitavecchia, Genoa, and Livorno.

A PORTRAIT OF ITALY

Italy has drawn people in search of culture and romance for many centuries. Few countries can compete with its Classical origins, its art, architecture, musical and literary traditions, its scenery, or food and wine. The ambiguity of its modern image is also fascinating: since World War II Italy has climbed into the top ten world economies, yet at its heart it retains many of the customs, traditions, and regional allegiances of its agricultural heritage.

Italy has no single cultural identity. From the northern snow-capped peaks of the Alps, to the rugged southern shores of Sicily, lies a plethora of distinctive regions and peoples. Politically, Italy is a young country: it did not exist as a unified nation state until 1870, and its 20 regions have maintained their cultural individuality. Visitors to Italy are often pleasantly surprised by the diversity of its dialects, cuisines, and architecture. There is also a larger regional division. People speak of two distinct Italies: the rich industrial north and the poorer agricultural south, known as Il Mezzogiorno or Land of the Midday Sun. The frontier separating the two is indeterminate, lying somewhere between Rome and Naples.

The north is directly responsible for Italy's place among the world's top industrial nations. It has been the powerhouse behind the Italian economic miracle, its success achieved by internationally renowned names such as FIAT, Prada, Ferragamo, Pirelli, Olivetti, Zanussi, Alessi, and Armani. In contrast, the south, once a cradle of high culture and civilization, has been dogged by unemployment and organized crime. Some of its areas rank among the most depressed in Europe, although many southern towns did benefit from an injection of Millennium funds.

The historic divide between north and south is a powerful factor in contemporary politics. The federalist party, the Northern League, owes its popularity to this split. Those in favor of separation complain that the south is a drain on resources: Milan is seen as efficient and rich, while Naples is viewed as chaotic, dirty, and corrupt.

History and geography have both contributed to the division. The north is closer in both location and spirit to Germany and France while the south has suffered a succession of invasions from foreign powers: Carthaginians and Greeks in ancient times, Saracens and Normans in the Middle Ages, and until the middle of the 19th century, the Bourbons from Spain held sway.

TRADITION

Distinctive variations in Italy's regions have much to do with the mountainous landscape and inaccessible valleys. Tuscan and Ligurian hill-towns, for instance, have quite different silhouettes, and the farmhouses in Puglia, the famous trulli, are unlike those found in the landscape of Emilia-Romagna.

A conversation in the open air

In southern Italy the landscape, architecture, dialects, food, and even the appearance of the people, have closer affinities with the Eastern Mediterranean and North Africa than with Europe.

In the far south, study of the local dialects has revealed traces of ancient Greek and old Albanian, preserved in tightly knit communities isolated by the rugged geography. Christianity and pagan ritual are closely linked; sometimes the Virgin is portrayed as a thinly disguised Demeter, the Earth goddess.

Throughout Italy, ancient techniques of husbandry endure and many livelihoods are closely connected to the land and the seasons. Main crops include sugar beet, corn, wheat, olives, and grapes; colorful Easter celebrations (see p66) pay tribute to the bounty of the soil. Although some of the north's postwar economic prosperity can be attributed to industry (especially car production in and around Turin), much of it has grown from the expansion of family-owned artisan businesses and the export of handmade goods abroad. This is recognized as a distinct sector of the economy. The internationally successful retail clothes chain Prada is a good example. The "Made in Italy" label, found on goods such as clothes, shoes, and leather bags, guarantees a high standard.

CULTURE AND ARTS

The arts in Italy have had a long and glorious history and Italians are very proud of this. Given the fact that Italy has more than 100,000 monuments (archaeological sites, cathedrals, churches, houses, and statues), all of which have major historical significance, it is not surprising that there is a shortage of funds to keep them in good repair. Many museums in Italy, particularly those in the south, are closed, or partially closed. You may find churches in Venice hidden behind permanent scaffolding or those in Abruzzo shut due to earthquake damage. However, with tourism accounting for around 12 percent of Italy's Gross Domestic Product, efforts are being made to put as many buildings and collections on show as possible. The Jubilee 2000 helped matters by allocating large amounts of money for the restoration of buildings and sites belonging to the Catholic Church.

The performing arts are also underfunded, yet there are some spectacular cultural festivals. Almost every town of any size has its own opera house and La Scala opera house in Milan stages world-class productions.

Film is another flourishing art form in Italy and has been so since its invention. The sets at Cinecittà, on the outskirts of Rome, have been used by many famous directors such as Fellini, Pasolini, de Sica, Visconti, and many others. Italian films such as La Vita è Bella and The Son's Room have found critical acclaim and box-office success both in Italy and abroad. In Italy the arts belong to everyone: opera is attended by people from all backgrounds, regardless of social status, as are movie theaters and galleries.

SOCIAL CUSTOMS AND POLITICS

Italian society is still highly traditional, and Italians can be very formal. Between the generations degrees of familiarity exist: reserve ciao (hello or goodbye) for friends your age or younger, and greet older people with piacere (pleased to meet you), buon giorno (good day), or buona sera (good evening) and on parting, say arrivederci (goodbye). Strangers are met with a handshake, but family and friends receive a kiss.

Italian chic decrees that the clothes you wear should give the impression of wealth. If Italians wear similar outfits, it is because they are conformists in fashion as in other aspects of daily life.

Italian politics, in contrast, are not so well regulated. Governments in the postwar era were characterized by shortlived coalitions, dominated by the Christian Democrats. In 1993 Italy experienced a political crisis when an organized network of corruption was exposed, disgracing a huge number of politicians and businessmen. Although the investigations failed to eradicate corruption, they led to the formation of two large coalitions, center-left and center-right. Silvio Berlusconi, leader of the Forza Italia party, became prime minister in 1994 but lasted only a short while as he, too, was accused of corruption. In 1998 Massimo D'Alema became Italy's first leftwing Prime Minister. Recent years have seen an alternation of center-right and center-left governments, some of them short-lived.

MODERN LIFE

Food and soccer are the great constants; Italians live for both. Much time is spent on preparing food and eating. The Italian diet, particularly in the south, is among the healthiest in the world. Soccer is a national passion and inspires massive public interest and media attention, not least as a way of expressing regional loyalties.

Statue of Emperor Domitian in the Vatican Gardens

The solution to heavy traffic in Rome: motorbikes and scooters

As far as religion is concerned, the number of practicing Catholics has been in decline for some years. Although Rome lies at the center of world Catholicism, today many Italians are uninterested in religion, but still attend mass in number on saints' days or feast days. As a consequence of immigration, other religions are now on the increase.

The emphasis on conformity and a commitment to the institution of the family remain key factors in Italian society despite the country's low birth rate. Grandparents, children, and grandchildren often still live in family units, although this is becoming less common. All children are pampered but the most cherished ones are, usually, male. Women's Liberation fought a powerful campaign in the 1970s and did much to change attitudes to women in the workplace, particularly in metropolitan areas.

However, the idea that men should help with housework and the care of the children is still a fairly foreign notion among the older generation.

With the miracle of its postwar economic recovery, where industry and technology were united with design, Italy has become a success story.

Although the economy was dented by the worldwide recessions of recent years, the exposure of corruption in many walks of public life, and political upheaval, Italy appears unchanged to foreign visitors. Its ability to keep its regional identities and traditional values allows it to ride out any changes relatively unscathed.

Medieval and Early Renaissance Art

The story of early Italian art, from the 13th century until the late 15th century, illuminates one of the richest periods in European art history. For the first time since Classical antiquity, painters and sculptors created a convincing pictorial space in which figures, modeled “in the round,” were given life. Ethereal buildings were replaced by those firmly rooted in the real world, reproducing what artists actually saw. This revolution in art included the reintroduction of the fresco technique, giving artists huge surfaces for telling pictorial stories.

FRESCO TECHNIQUE

Fresco, meaning “fresh,” refers to the technique of painting onto a thin layer of damp, freshly laid plaster. Pigments are drawn into the plaster by surface tension and the color becomes fixed as the plaster dries. The pigments react with the lime in the plaster to produce strong, rich colors, such as those in Masaccio’s The Tribute Money.

High Renaissance Art

The High Renaissance in the late 15th century was marked by an increasing sense of realism in many religious works and the technical mastery of such renowned artists as Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, and Raphael. The different schools of Renaissance painting, while drawing on Classical models, produced varying styles: Florentine painting was noted for its cool clarity, while sensuous color and warm light characterized many Venetian works. By the mid-16th century, however, these styles shifted to the fanciful, contorted imagery of Mannerism.

Italian Architecture

Corinthian capital

The buildings of Italy span almost 3,000 years, drawing influences from a wide variety of sources. Etruscan and Roman buildings borrowed heavily from ancient Greece, while in later centuries Norman, Arabic, and Byzantine styles colored Italy's Romanesque and Gothic architecture. Classical ideals infused the country's Renaissance buildings, later giving way to the inspired innovations of the Baroque period.

The Basilica di San Marco

Orvieto's Duomo displays the ornate and intricate decoration, notably sculpture, common to many Gothic cathedrals. Building stretched from the 13th through the early 17th centuries.

The Basilica di San Marco (AD 832–1094) in Venice combines Classical, Romanesque and Gothic architecture, but its key inspiration was Byzantine (see pp110–11).

Triumphal arches such as Rome's Arch of Constantine (AD 313) were a uniquely Roman invention. Built to celebrate military victories, they were adorned with reliefs depicting episodes from successful campaigns (see p380).

The round-arched Romanesque style emerged from the Dark Ages in structures such as the Duomo in Modena. The churches usually had simple interiors that derived from Roman basilicas.

The building of domes over square or rectangular spaces was a major development of the Byzantine era.

ETRUSCAN ARCHITECTURE

Virtually the only architectural memorials to the Etruscans are their necropolises (c.6th century BC), found primarily in Tuscany, Lazio, and Umbria. Little else survives, probably because most day-to-day buildings were made from wood. The Etruscans' close cultural and trading ties with Greece, however, suggest their architecture would have borrowed heavily from Greek models. Rome, in turn, looked to Etruscan architecture for inspiration, and most early Roman public buildings were probably Etruscan in style.

The cathedral of Monreale in Sicily, built in the 12th century, contains Norman elements blended with exotic Arabic and Byzantine decoration (see pp530–31).

Bramante's Tempietto at San Pietro in Montorio, Rome (built 1502–10) was a Renaissance tribute to the precise, Classical temples of ancient Rome (see p380).

Baroque facades, such as this one added to Syracuse's Duomo between 1728 and 1754, were often grafted onto older churches.

Industrial innovations in glass and metal were applied in new buildings, like Mengoni's imposing Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II (1865) in Milan (see p194).

The Classical ideals of Rome and ancient Greece were reintroduced into Italian architecture during the Renaissance.

Papal patronage and the vigour of the Counter-Reformation fueled the Baroque, a period of architectural splendor, invention and exuberance.

The Mole Antonelliana (1863–89), in Turin, topped by a soaring granite spire, was for a time the tallest building in the world (p224).

Torre Velasca's 26-floor tower in Milan (1950s) pioneered the use of reinforced concrete.

Siena's Duomo (1136–1382), an imposing Romanesque-Gothic cathedral, went through 200 years of architectural transformation (see pp342–3).

Santa Maria Novella in Florence has a Renaissance facade (1456–70) by Alberti and a Gothic interior.

Gian Lorenzo Bernini (1598–1680), architect of St. Peter's Square, was a dominant figure in Roman Baroque.

Andrea Palladio (1508–80) built Neo-Classical villas and palazzi. His style was imitated in Europe for over two centuries (see p80).

Outer skin of dome, supported by 24 ribs

Brunelleschi's dome for the Duomo in Florence, completed in 1436, was a masterpiece of Renaissance design and ingenious engineering (see p253).

The Gesù in Rome was designed for the Jesuits by Vignola in 1568. With its powerful facade and lavish decoration it was the prototype for countless other Baroque churches (see p381).

The Pirelli building in Milan, designed by Ponti and Nervi (late 1950s), is a great example of modern Italian architecture (see p185).

Saints and Symbols in Italian Art

Saints and symbols are especially important in Italian art. They form part of an established visual language used by artists to narrate stories of the Bible and the Catholic church to churchgoers. Paintings of the saints were the focus for prayer and each offered assistance in a particular aspect of daily life. Patron saints protected specific cities, or trades, and individuals who bore their name. Saints' days and religious festivals still play an important part in Italian life.

THE EVANGELISTS

The four evangelists, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John are each represented by a winged creature, standing for their divine message.

(St. John)

St. Dominic is usually portrayed wearing the habit of his order. The lily is another of his attributes.

St. Cosmas and St. Damian are always shown together, dressed in physicians' clothing.

St. John carries the Gospel that bears his name.

St. Lawrence carries a palm leaf as well as the gridiron on which he was roasted.

Virgin Enthroned with the Child and Saints (c. 1450) was painted on dry plaster by the Dominican friar, Fra Angelico. It is on display at the Museo di San Marco, Florence (see p276).

The Virgin, usually shown in blue robes, is depicted as Mater Amabilis – the “Mother Worthy of Love.”

SYMBOLS

In order to identify different saints or martyrs they were given “attributes” or symbols – particular objects to carry, or clothing to wear. These were items that played a particular role in their life story. Martyrs were known by their instruments of torture or death. Symbolism also appears in the sky, animals, flowers, colors, and numbers.

The lamb symbolizes Christ, the Lamb of God, or in early Christian art, the sinner.

The skull is a “memento mori” to remind us of death and impermanence.

Winged man
(St. Matthew)

Winged lion
(St. Mark)

Winged ox
(St. Luke)

Giovanni Bellini's painting of Madonna and Child with Four Saints (see p119)

St. Peter the Apostle, the "rock" on which the Christian church was founded, carries the keys to heaven.

The Madonna, with the Christ Child, is an emblem of perfect motherly love.

St. Catherine of Alexandria is shown here with a piece of the wheel on which she was martyred.

St. Jerome is always portrayed as an old man, often a hermit, whose life was devoted to scholarship.

Detail from Madonna and Child with Four Saints, by Giovanni Bellini. The painting was produced for an altarpiece at San Zaccaria, Venice in 1505, where it is still on display.

The angel, a messenger of God to man, is portrayed in this scene as a musician of Heaven.

St. Lucy is depicted here holding her own eyes in a dish. She became the patron saint of the blind and symbolizes light.

The lily, flower of the Virgin, is the symbol of purity, resurrection, peace, and chastity.

The cockle shell most often represents pilgrimage. It is a particular attribute of St. Roch.

The palm represents, in Christian art, a martyr's triumph over death.

Writers, Poets, and Dramatists

Italy has produced many writers (in Latin and Italian) who have won worldwide acclaim. Each of them provides an illuminating insight into the country's turbulent past: the Classical poets Virgil, Horace, and Ovid give vivid accounts of the concerns and values of ancient Rome; medieval Florence and Tuscany are brought to life in the poetry of Dante and Petrarch and the salacious tales of Boccaccio. In less than a century these three great writers created a new literary language to rank with any in Europe. Italy's modern literature still commands international attention – Umberto Eco has to his credit one of the most widely read books of the 20th century.

Umberto Eco (born 1932), a professor at the University of Bologna, wrote the novel The Name Of The Rose, which explored his passion for the Middle Ages. The book was made into a movie (above) in 1986.

Primo Levi (1919–87) gave an astonishing account of his survival of the Jewish Holocaust and World War II's aftermath in The Truce and If This Is A Man.

Dario Fo (born 1926) won the Nobel prize for Literature in 1997.

Pinocchio, written by Carlo Collodi (1826–90) in 1883, is one of the world's best known children's stories. "Collodi" was Carlo Lorenzini's pseudonym, taken from his mother's birthplace in Tuscany.

Giovanni Boccaccio (1313–75) is notable for providing a fascinating social record of his era. The Decameron, his captivating collection of 100 short stories, is set in the plague-stricken Florence of 1348.

Dante's (1265–1321) Divine Comedy (c.1308–21), is a journey through Hell, Purgatory, and Paradise. It includes horrific accounts of the torments suffered by the damned.

Venetian author Carlo Goldoni (1707–93) reacted against the satirical tradition of La Commedia dell'Arte, preferring to write more forgiving plays on contemporary Venice society.

The Veneto and Friuli

Le Marche

Umbria

Petrarch (1304–74), one of the earliest and greatest lyric poets, produced works which showed the first indications of Humanism.

St. Francis of Assisi (1182–1226) was the first author to write in Italian instead of formal Latin. As well as letters and sermons, he wrote poems and songs, including the popular Canticle of the Sun.

Lazio

Abruzzo, Molise and Puglia

Campania

Basilicata and Calabria

Roman writer Alberto Moravia (1907–90) is usually labelled a “Neo-Realist.” His novels and short stories focus on the corrupt values of contemporary society. Among his best known works are Gli Indifferenti and Agostino.

The Sicilian Nobel Prize-winner Luigi Pirandello (1867–1936) was preoccupied with themes of illusion and reality. Six Characters In Search Of An Author is his most famous work.

Sicily

CLASSICAL ROMAN WRITERS

Texts in Latin by Classical Roman philosophers, poets, dramatists, and politicians are part of the bedrock of Western culture. Today the names Virgil (The Aeneid), Ovid (Metamorphoses), and Pliny (Historia Naturalis) are literary legends. Fascinating histories such as Livy's Early History of Rome, Caesar's Gallic Wars, Tacitus's Annals, and Suetonius's The Twelve Caesars, give us an invaluable window on the distant Roman past, as do the caustic Satires of Juvenal. Many Latin works owe their survival to the teams of medieval monks who diligently copied and illustrated them. In the Renaissance the stories of Ovid's Metamorphoses were plundered by many writers and the works of Cicero had a profound influence on prose style; Seneca was seen as a master of tragedy and Plautus's Pot of Gold served as a model for comedies.

Music and Opera in Italy

violin

Before Italy's unification, particularly during the 17th and 18th centuries, each major city had its own traditions of music-making. Rome, as the papal city, had musical traditions less hedonistic than elsewhere, and avoided opera. Florence had its day at the turn of the 16th century, with its celebrated camerata (groups set on reviving the traditions of ancient Greek spectacle). Venice fostered church music on a grand scale, and Naples, during the 18th century, was renowned for comic opera. In the 19th century, Milan became the undisputed center of Italian opera, centered on La Scala.

THE MEDIEVAL AND RENAISSANCE PERIODS

Through Boccaccio (see p34), among others, it is known that singing, dancing, and poetry often went hand in hand in medieval and Renaissance Italy. Italy concentrated on music as part of a spectacle rather than as a pure art form.

Important contributors to the music of these periods include Guido d'Arezzo (c.995–1050), a monk who perfected musical notation, and Francesco Landini (1325–97), one of the first known composers whose songs displayed a distinct concern for lyricism. The next 150 years were to be characterized by the Ars Perfecta style, culminating with composer Giovanni Palestrina (1525–94). His vocal style subjected dissonance to strict control, and it was employed for most church music. Madrigals (vocal settings of poems by Petrarch and other poets) were also popular.

The early 17th century saw Italian composers such as Carlo Gesualdo (c.1561–1613) and Claudio Monteverdi challenge these traditions by introducing more declamation and more of the unexpected.

THE BAROQUE ERA

Claudio Monteverdi's music straddled the transition from the Renaissance period to 17th-century Baroque. The word "baroque" means highly ornamented, even bizarre, and embellishment was rife. Monteverdi's madrigals began as standard pieces for four voices but ended up as mini-operas.

This was due to the popularity of an individual instrumental style and the development of the basso continuo (a supporting organ, harpsichord, or lute that unleashed the possibility for solos and duets). At this point, the beginnings of the string orchestra were in place.

A new fashion for declamation meant that various emotional states were being represented with sighs and sobs rather than just description. Monteverdi's Vespers followed others' in exploiting the stereophonic possibilities of San Marco in Venice by contrasting different forces

MAJOR ITALIAN COMPOSERS THROUGH THE AGES

Claudio Monteverdi (1567–1643) was best known for his Vespers of 1610. Both his madrigals and operas are considered major landmarks in the development of music.

Antonio Vivaldi (1678–1741) wrote over 600 concertos, many of which are for the violin. The Four Seasons, a set of concertos, is among the bestselling classical music of all time.

Gioacchino Rossini (1792–1868) was most famous for his comic operas, like The Barber of Seville. The romantic, expressive side of his more serious works was often overlooked.

Luciano Pavarotti performed in the most modern surroundings in different parts of the building. In the 1680s, Arcangelo Corelli (1653–1713) turned to classicism. Corelli was famous for the concerto grosso, a style that contrasted the solo string group with the full ensemble. He was followed by Antonio Vivaldi (1678–1741), who concentrated his efforts on developing the solo form of the concerto grosso. He used wind and plucked instruments as well as violins.

THE EMERGENCE OF OPERA

Opera first emerged during the wedding celebrations of Italy's wealthy 16th-century families. Monteverdi was the first composer to establish his work firmly in the opera repertoire. During the 17th century, Alessandro Scarlatti (1660–1725) formulated a model which consisted of an orchestral overture followed by a sequence of narrative, set as recitative, and interrupted by da capo (three-part) arias. Themes for the weightier opera seria were largely drawn from mythology, while the lighter opera buffa had stock scenes that sometimes owed a large debt to the traditions of Commedia dell'Arte. Famous for his comic operas, such as The Barber of Seville, was the composer Gioacchino Rossini. Among other contributors, Vincenzo Bellini (1801–35) and Gaetano Donizetti (1797–1848) developed bel canto singing, a style stressing fine tone and ornamentation.

Giuseppe Verdi (1813–1901), whose first works were for La Scala, was the most important opera composer of the 19th century. His most celebrated works include Rigoletto and Aida.

The two most prominent opera composers of the latter half of the 19th century were Giuseppe Verdi and Giacomo Puccini (1858–1924). Verdi often turned to the works of Shakespeare as well as to contemporary subjects in order to form a basis for his work, while many composers, like Puccini, turned to the new trend of verismo (slices of realism) – La Bohème is one of the most refined examples of this style.

THE 20TH CENTURY

In the early 20th century, Puccini's La Fanciulla del West (The Girl of the Golden West) brought cowboys into opera, Turandot looked toward the Orient, and Tosca brought torture and murder. Some composers have attempted to emulate French and German music, and only a few Italian pieces, such as those by Ottorino Respighi (1879–1936), have been regularly performed. The most important name in postwar Italian music was Luciano Berio (1925–2003), who developed Music Theater, an art form lying somewhere between drama and opera.

In later years, however, Berio continued the tradition of Grand Opera with his elaborate production of Un Re in Ascolto. But it is Luciano Pavarotti (1935–2007) who must be credited with renewing an international interest in opera. In the 1990s, his televised performances with “Three Tenors” co-stars José Carreras and Plácido Domingo secured a massive world audience for opera.

Italian Design

Italy has had phenomenal success evolving stylish, desirable forms for everyday objects. Its 20th-century achievements can be credited to a handful of forward-thinking industrial giants, such as Olivetti, willing to entrust important product decisions to a group of inspired designers, like Ettore Sottsass. The design genius was to rethink the function of consumer objects, apply new technology, and then make the result look seductive.

The streamlined aesthetic of Italian design extends even to pasta; this Marille version was created by car designer Giorgio Giugiaro for Voiello in 1983.

Sleek, sculptural Alessi cutlery (1988), designed by Ettore Sottsass, combines maximum utility with elegance and aesthetic integrity.

The Alessi kettle (1985), designed by Michael Graves, achieved such popularity in its first year of production that over 100,000 were sold.

One of the best known coffee-makers is Bialetti's Moka Express. Although designed in 1930, it is still enormously popular today.

Christophe Pilet's chair, designed for Giulio Cappellini's collection of contemporary furniture, expresses the idea of the living style of the 1990s.

The folding Cumano table, designed by Achille Castiglione for Zanotta in 1979, is still revered as a "designer object."

The Patty Difusa chair, with unusual wooden arms that curve into legs, was designed by William Sawaya for Sawaya & Moroni in Milan.

Pininfarina's streamlined form for the Ferrari Testarossa (1986) pushes car design almost into the realms of sculpture.

Light in weight, and compact in shape, Olivetti's Valentine typewriter revolutionized the role of the desk typewriter. Designed by Ettore Sottsass in 1969, its portability allowed the user to work anywhere.

Milan's Giorgio Armani is best known for his updating of classic items such as the jacket, creating a flattering, smart and comfortable, "deconstructed" look.

Prada, the Milan-based fashion house headed by Miuccia Prada, features minimalist, cutting-edge designs and the use of innovative fabrics.

The Artemide company is renowned for combining metal and glass in many of their designs, especially lamps and lighting fixtures.

Florence has a long reputation as a producer of high-quality crafts, particularly fashion accessories such as handbags, shoes, belts, jewelry, and briefcases.

Gucci's classic items, including bags and shoes, are a revered totem for the fashion-conscious.

Piaggio's innovative Vespa scooter (1946), by Corradino d'Asciano, provided cheap, fast, and reliable mobility at a time when few could afford the expense of a car. Hugely successful, the Vespa is still a common sight on Italy's streets.

The FIAT 500 (1957), like the Vespa, became a symbol of mobility and democratization, an expression of Italy's rapid postwar recovery.

Scientists, Inventors, and Explorers

Italy has fostered a long tradition of important scientific thought and discovery, fueled in the Renaissance by such men as Galileo, who searched for a new understanding of the universe. Meanwhile, explorers such as Columbus had set off to find new worlds, a move heralded in the 13th century by Marco Polo. The spirit of scientific inquiry continued up to the 20th century, with the invention of radio and pioneering work in the field of nuclear physics.

After deducing that an electric current made frogs' legs move, Alessandro Volta invented the electric battery, a "pile" of metal disks in contact with acid. He demonstrated it to Napoleon in 1801.

Genoese-born Christopher Columbus sailed west from Spain in 1492. He reached the Indies in three months, navigating with such aids as an astrolabe.

The explorer Amerigo Vespucci established that the New World was a separate land mass. A pamphlet wrongly described him as its discoverer, and so, in 1507, America acquired its name.

Leonardo da Vinci was the ultimate Renaissance man, accomplished in both arts and sciences. He conceived his first design for a flying machine in c.1488, more than 400 years before the first airplane took off. This model is based on one of his technical drawings.

Guglielmo Marconi invented the first practical system for sending radio signals. In 1901, he succeeded in picking up a signal that had been sent to England from Newfoundland.

The telescope enabled astronomers to produce accurate lunar maps. Domenico Cassini, astronomy professor at Bologna University, refined the instrument. In 1665 he traced the meridian line in the church of San Petronio.

The Venetian Marco Polo set off for the East as a youth in 1271. He stayed at the court of the Mongol emperor, Kublai Khan, for nearly two decades before returning home. He is seen here arriving at Hormuz in the Persian Gulf from India.

Galileo Galilei proved that the Earth revolved around the sun, overturning Church doctrine. He was convicted of heresy in 1633. Here he shows the rings of Saturn to Venetian senators.

Winner of the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1938, Enrico Fermi directed the first controlled nuclear chain reaction. He built the world's first nuclear reactor for producing power at the University of Chicago.

Pliny the Elder wrote his catalog of human knowledge, Natural History, in AD 77. He died when Vesuvius erupted two years later, but his book retained its authority for 1,500 years.

Spectacles were invented in Italy in the 13th century. They are first recorded in Venice, still an important center for glasswork today.

The mathematician Archimedes was born in c.287 BC in Syracuse, Sicily, then a Greek colony. Legend has it that he discovered the principle of specific gravity while in the bath.

THE HISTORY OF ITALY

The concept of Italy as a geographic entity goes back to the time of the Etruscans, but Italy's history is one of discord and division. Prior to the 19th century, the only time the peninsula was united was under the Romans, who by the 2nd century BC had subdued the other Italian tribes. Rome became the capital of a huge empire, introducing its language, laws, and calendar to most of Europe before succumbing to Germanic invaders in the 5th century AD.

Another important legacy of the Roman empire was Christianity and the position of the Pope as head of the Catholic church. The medieval papacy summoned the Franks to drive out the Lombards and, in AD 800, crowned the Frankish king Charlemagne Emperor of the Romans. However, what seemed to be the dawn of a new age turned out to be anything but. For five centuries popes and emperors fought to decide which of them should be in charge of their nebulous empire.

Meanwhile, a succession of foreign invaders – Normans, Angevins, and Aragonese – took advantage of the situation to conquer Sicily and the south.

Julius Caesar

The north, in contrast, saw a growth of independent city states, the most powerful being Venice, fabulously wealthy through trade with the East. Other cities, such as Genoa, Florence, Milan, Pisa, and Siena, also had their days of glory. Northern Italy became the most prosperous and cultured region in western Europe and it was the artists and scholars of 15th-century Florence who inspired the Renaissance. Small, fragmented states, however, could not compete with great powers. In the 16th century Italy's petty kingdoms fell prey to a foreign invader, this time to Spain, and the north subsequently came under the control of Austria.

One small kingdom that remained independent was Piedmont, but during a war between Austria and France it fell to Napoleon in 1796. In the 19th century, however, it was Piedmont that became the focus for a movement toward a united Italy, a goal that was achieved in 1870, thanks largely to the heroic military exploits of Garibaldi. From 1922 to 1943, the Fascists held power and, in 1946, the monarchy was abandoned for today's republic.

The Age of the Etruscans

The Etruscans were Italy's first major civilization. The frescoes, jewelry, and pottery found in their tombs are evidence of a highly artistic, cultured people. Their origin is a mystery, as is their language, but from the 9th century BC they spread through central Italy, their chief rivals being the Greeks in the south. Etruria was never a unified state, just a loose confederation of cities. In the 6th century Etruscan kings ruled Rome, the city that would ultimately eclipse them.

Tuscany, Lazio, and Umbria are rich in Etruscan remains, especially tombs. There are huge necropolises in Lazio at Cerveteri and Tarquinia (p466). The latter also has an important museum. Other museums with major collections of Etruscan art and artifacts include Villa Giulia (p440) and the Vatican's Museo Gregoriano (p422) in Rome, the Museo Archeologico in Florence (p277), the Museo Nazionale in Chiusi (p332), and the Museo Guarnacci in Volterra (p334).

From Republic to Empire

Roman mask and helmet (1st century BC)

From the scores of tribes inhabiting ancient Italy, one people, the Romans, emerged to conquer the peninsula and impose their language, customs, and laws on the rest. Rome's success was due to superb skill in military and civil organization. The state was a republic ruled by two consuls, elected each year, but as the extent of Rome's conquests grew, power passed to generals such as Julius Caesar. The Republic became unworkable and Caesar's heirs became the first Roman emperors.

Oscan Inscription
The languages of the peoples conquered by Rome lived on for centuries before being replaced by Latin. The Oscans lived in what is now Campania.

Julius Caesar
The great general, conqueror of Gaul, returned to Italy in 49 BC to defeat Pompey. His rise to absolute power marked the end of the Republic.

War Elephant
In 218 BC the great Carthaginian general Hannibal brought 37 elephants across the Alps – to spread alarm in the Roman ranks.

Roman Aqueduct
The Romans' talent for engineering found its most spectacular expression in huge aqueducts. These could be up to 50 miles (80 km) long, though for most of that distance the water ran underground.

WHERE TO SEE ITALY FROM THE REPUBLICAN ERA

Republican structures are very rare, most having been rebuilt under the Empire. In Rome itself, two notable exceptions are the 2nd-century BC temples of the Forum Boarium (p433). However, the legacy of the age to modern Italy is not hard to appreciate. Countless roads, such as the Via Appia Antica (p441), and towns were planned originally by Roman engineers. Two striking examples of towns with original Roman street plans are Lucca (pp320–21) and Como (p191).

These huge basalt blocks at Tbarros in Sardinia (p551) were part of a Roman road.

ROMAN ROADS

After conquering other tribes, the Romans imposed their authority by building roads along which legions could march rapidly to deal with any trouble. They also built towns. Many, such as Ariminum (Rimini), were “colonies,” settlements for Roman citizens – often veteran legionaries.

Aerial View of Bologna

The Golden Age of Rome

From the age of Augustus to the reign of Trajan, Rome's power grew until her empire stretched from Britain to the Red Sea. Despite the extravagance of emperors such as Nero, taxes and booty from military campaigns continually refilled the imperial coffers. Under the wiser rule of Trajan, Hadrian, and Marcus Aurelius in the 2nd century AD, Roman citizens enjoyed wealth and comfort, with most of the work performed by slaves. Entertainment included visits to the baths, the theater, and the games. The town of Pompeii, buried when Vesuvius erupted in AD 79, preserves many fascinating details of everyday life.

WHERE TO SEE IMPERIAL ROME

The best places to discover how people lived are Pompeii (pp494-5) and Herculaneum. Artifacts and works of art from these sites are held at the Museo Archeologico in Naples (pp490-91), while local museums all over Italy contain statues and other remains. Famous sights in Rome include the Pantheon (p404) and the Colosseum (p393). Hadrian's Villa, at Tivoli (p468), and Ostia (p467) are also fascinating to visit, but the whole country preserves traces of Rome's glory – from the Arch of Augustus in Aosta (p215) to Villa del Casale (p537) in Sicily.

The Splitting of the Empire

Glass flask with Christian symbol (4th century AD)

A decisive turning point in the history of the Roman Empire came with Emperor Constantine I's conversion to Christianity in AD 312 and his decision to build a new capital at Constantinople (Byzantium). By the 5th century the Empire was split into two. Rome and the Western Empire could not stem the tide of Germanic invaders migrating southward and Italy fell first to the Goths and later to the Lombards. The Eastern Empire retained nominal control over parts of Italy from its stronghold at Ravenna, which became the richest, most powerful city of the age, while the great palaces and arenas of Rome were reduced to ruins.

WHERE TO SEE EARLY CHRISTIAN AND BYZANTINE ITALY

Though the fall of the Roman Empire led to war, famine, and depopulation, the continuity of the Christian religion has preserved many monuments of the late Empire and Byzantine period. Rome has the catacombs (p442) and great basilicas, such as Santa Maria Maggiore (p413). In Ravenna, the administrative capital of Byzantine Italy, are the churches of San Vitale and Sant'Apollinare (pp268-9) with their magnificent mosaics. Sicily and the south also preserve many Byzantine churches, while the finest example of late Byzantine architecture is San Marco in Venice (pp110-11).

Stilo in Calabria has a beautiful Byzantine church, the Cattolica (p520), dating from the 10th century.

Santa Costanza in Rome (p441) was built in the 4th century as the mausoleum of Constantine I's daughter. Late Roman mosaics decorate the vaults.

THE COURT OF JUSTINIAN

Byzantine churches were decorated with glorious mosaics of colored glass and gold leaf. This one from the apse of the church of San Vitale in Ravenna (see p268), completed in 547, depicts members of the imperial court.

The Rise of Venice

Enrico Dandolo, Doge of Venice (c.1120–1205)

Medieval Italy saw waves of foreign invaders joining in the struggle for power between popes and emperors. In the confusion, many northern cities asserted their independence from feudal overlords. The most powerful was Venice, governed by its doge and Great Council, which grew rich through trade with the East and by shipping Crusaders to fight the Saracens in the Holy Land. Its maritime rivals on the west coast were Genoa and Pisa.

The Late Middle Ages

Siense

Old feuds between Pope and emperor thrived throughout the 14th century, kept alive by two warring factions – the Guelphs, who backed the papacy, and the Ghibellines, who favored imperial power. The cities of Lombardy and Tuscany used the political confusion to grow in strength. It was against this turbulent backdrop that a great new age in painting was inspired by artists such as Duccio and Giotto. Also at this time the Florentine poets Dante and Petrarch laid the foundations of Italian literature.

MEDIEVAL TOWN SQUARE

Throughout central Italy, the town square was an expression of civic pride and independence. Towns, such as Perugia (see pp.352–3), tried to overshadow their rivals in the splendor of their town halls. The center of Perugia has changed little since the 14th century when the town's main rival was Siena.

The main chamber of the town hall, the Sala dei Notari, is decorated with the coats of arms of Perugia's mayors.

The Fontana Maggiore was begun in 1275 and includes panels by Nicola Pisano. Prominently placed, it is an emblem of the town's wealth.

Condottieri

Cities paid condottieri, leaders of bands of mercenaries, to fight their wars. Siena hired Guidoriccio da Fogliano, seen here in a fresco by Simone Martini (1330).

Dante's Inferno

One of the harshest punishments in Dante's vision of hell is reserved for corrupt popes, such as Boniface VIII (reigned 1294–1303), who are placed upside down in fiery pits.

WHERE TO SEE LATE MEDIEVAL ITALY

Many central Italian cities and towns have public buildings from the 13th and 14th centuries; among the most impressive are Palazzo Vecchio (p291) in Florence and Siena's Palazzo Pubblico (p340). Smaller towns that preserve much of their medieval character include Volterra (p334) and the walled Monteriggioni (p334) in Tuscany; Gubbio (p352) and Todi (p359) in Umbria; and Viterbo (pp464-5) in Lazio. The Duomo in Orvieto (pp358-9) is a fine example of a late 13th-century Gothic cathedral.

Piazza dei Priori in Volterra (p324) is one of the most beautiful medieval squares in Italy.

The cathedral was started in 1350 and used to include an outside pulpit in the square.

Construction of Alessandria
Almost all towns were ringed with strong walls. This fresco (1407) by Spinello Aretino is a valuable record of medieval building techniques.

Return of Pope Gregory XI to Rome (1378) For 70 years the popes had lived in Avignon, protected by the French kings, while nobles and republicans fought for control of Rome.

The Renaissance

(1452–1519)

Fifteenth-century Italy saw a flowering of the arts and scholarship unmatched in Europe since the days of Greece and Rome. Architects turned from the Gothic to Classical models for inspiration, while painting, with its new understanding of perspective and anatomy, produced a generation of artists that included such giants as Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, and Michelangelo. The patronage for this cultural “rebirth” came from the wealthy families that ruled the city states of the north, led by the Medici of Florence. In spite of intense rivalry, they oversaw a period of uneasy stability out of which the Renaissance grew.

ITALY IN 1492

- Aragonese possessions

Handing over the Keys of St. Peter
Perugino's fresco in the Sistine Chapel (see p426) links the authority of the Pope to the New Testament and, through the Classical buildings in the background, to ancient Rome.

Galeazzo Maria Sforza was the son of Milan's ruler.

Piero de' Medici, Lorenzo's father, was given the nickname “the Gouty.”

Execution of Savonarola (1498)
Having assumed the leadership of Florence in 1494, the fanatical monk was hanged, then burned for heresy in Piazza della Signoria.

THE PROCESSION OF THE MAGI

Benozzo Gozzoli's fresco (1459) in the Palazzo Medici-Riccardi, Florence, depicts members of the Medici family and other contemporary notables. It contains many references to a great church council held in Florence in 1439.

WHERE TO SEE RENAISSANCE ITALY

Many cities were flourishing centers of the arts in the 15th century. None can rival Florence (pp270-313) with its great palazzi and the Uffizi gallery (pp286-89), but Venice (pp84-137), Urbino (pp370-71), and Mantova (p207) all preserve great treasures. In Rome, do not miss the Vatican's Sistine Chapel and Raphael Rooms (pp424-27).

The Spedale degli Innocenti by Brunelleschi in Florence (p277) shows the Classical symmetry and restraint of Renaissance architecture.

Carpaccio's painting of St. Augustine is thought to show Cardinal Bessarion (c.1395-1472), one of the scholars who revived interest in Classical philosophy, especially Plato.

Lorenzo de' Medici (the Magnificent) was depicted as one of the three kings traveling to Bethlehem.

Pope Julius II

During his reign (1503-13), the worldly Julius made the papacy a major power in European politics. Raphael's portrait shows him as a shrewd old statesman.

The Counter-Reformation

Gian Lorenzo Bernini

After the Sack of Rome in 1527, Italy was at the mercy of Charles V, Holy Roman Emperor and king of Spain. Pope Clement VII, who had opposed Charles, crowned him emperor in Bologna. In response to the growing threat from Protestantism, a series of reforms, known as the Counter-Reformation and backed by the Inquisition, imposed rigid orthodoxy. New religious orders, such as the Jesuits, were set up to take the battle for souls far overseas. The missionary spirit of the age inspired the dramatic forms of the Baroque.

The Virgin Mary intervenes on the side of the Christians.

BAROQUE STUCCO DECORATION

This stucco relief by Giacomo Serpotta (c.1690) in the Oratory of Santa Zita in Palermo is a magnificent example of Late Baroque exuberance. The subject is a favorite of the period, the Battle of Lepanto, a great naval triumph for the combined forces of Christendom against the Turks (1571).

The centre of the ingenious creation is, in effect, a framed painting in perspective.

Baroque Architecture

Guarino Guarini's decoration of the dome of the Chapel of the Holy Shroud in Turin (see p221) was completed in 1694.

The young boy rests his hand on a helmet, symbol of the victorious Christians.

Revolt of Masaniello (1647)

High taxes made Spanish rule in Naples unpopular. A proposed tax on fruit sparked off this failed revolt.

WHERE TO SEE BAROQUE ITALY

The Ecstasy of St. Teresa by Bernini (p412) has the dynamic theatricality characteristic of the best Baroque sculpture.

The Baroque is strongly associated with Rome and in particular with its great public spaces such as Piazza Navona (pp398–9) and the many churches by Borromini and Bernini. Other cities and towns with striking Baroque architecture include Lecce (pp512–13) in Puglia, Palermo (pp526–29), Noto (p543), and Syracuse (pp542–3) in Sicily, and Turin (pp220–21).

The Grand Tour

The Romantic poet Shelley, visitor to Italy

The treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle in 1748 marked the start of 50 years of peace. It was about this time that Italy, with its great art treasures and Classical ruins, including the newly excavated Pompeii, became Europe's first great tourist destination. Young English "milords" visited Rome, Florence, and Venice as part of a new type of pilgrimage, the Grand Tour; while artists and poets sought inspiration in Rome's glorious past. In 1800, Napoleon, who conquered and briefly united Italy, threatened to destroy the old order, but in 1815 the status quo was restored.

Goethe in the Roman Campagna

Goethe toured Italy in the 1780s. Great poets who followed his example included the Romantics Keats, Shelley, and Byron.

Charles III's Fleet at Naples (1753)

Ruler of Naples from 1734 to 1759, when he became king of Spain, Charles attempted genuine political reforms.

Farnese Hercules (see p491)

The Dying Galatian (see p386)

Venetian Carnival

The colorful folklore of Carnival attracted many tourists, but Venice's days of greatness were over. In 1797, the proud maritime republic was ceded to Austria by Napoleon.

GALLERY OF VIEWS OF ANCIENT ROME BY PANNINI

Giovanni Pannini (1691–1765) painted views of Roman ruins for foreigners. This painting is a capriccio, an imaginary scene incorporating many well-known views and Classical statues.

WHERE TO SEE 18TH-CENTURY ITALY

The 18th century produced two of Rome's best-loved tourist attractions: the Spanish Steps (p409) and the Trevi Fountain (p410). It was also the age of the first purpose-built museums, including the Vatican's Museo Pio-Clementino (p421). The Neo-Classical sculpture of Antonio Canova (1757–1822) was immensely popular during this period. His tomb is in Santa Maria Gloriosa dei Frari in Venice (pp98–9). Of Neo-Classical buildings, the most imposing is a vast monument to enlightened despotism: the Palazzo Reale at Caserta (p496).

Pauline Borghese, Napoleon's sister, was the model for Antonio Canova's Venus (1805) in the Villa Borghese collection in Rome (p439).

Napoleon

When Napoleon conquered Italy in 1800, he was seen by many as a liberator. The enchantment wore off as he took priceless works of art back to Paris.

Congress of Vienna (1815)

The conference decided that Austria should keep Lombardy and Venice, thereby sowing the seeds of the Italian unification movement.

The Risorgimento

Victor Emmanuel

The word "Risorgimento" (resurgence) describes the five decades of struggle for liberation from foreign rule, culminating in the unification of Italy in 1870. In 1848, patriots rose against the Austrians in Milan and Venice, the Bourbons in Sicily, and the pope in Rome, where a republic was declared. Garibaldi valiantly defended the republic, but all the uprisings were too localized. By 1859, the movement was better organized with King Vittorio Emanuele II at its head. Two years saw the conquest of all but Venice and Rome, both of which fell within a decade.

ITALY IN 1861

Giuseppe Mazzini

(1805–72)

An exile for much of his life, Mazzini fought alongside Garibaldi to unite Italy as a republic, rather than a kingdom.

The red shirt was the badge of the Garibaldini.

Italian Railroads

The short railroad line from Naples to Portici was opened in 1839. Politically fragmented, Italy was slow to create an effective rail network.

Revolt of Messina

When Messina revolted in 1848, Ferdinand II subjected the town to a savage bombardment, earning himself the nickname King Bomba.

GARIBALDI AND THE THOUSAND
 Giuseppe Garibaldi (1807–82) was a leader of courage and genius. In 1860, he landed at Marsala with 1,000 volunteers. The garrison at Palermo surrendered, Sicily fell, and he went on to conquer Naples, thus presenting Victor Emmanuel with half a kingdom.

WHERE TO SEE RISORGIMENTO ITALY

Almost every town in Italy honors the heroes of the Risorgimento with a Via Garibaldi, a Via Cavour, a Piazza Vittorio, a Via Mazzini, and a Via XX Settembre (the date of the fall of Rome in 1870). Many cities also have Risorgimento museums. One of the best is in Turin (p223).

The Victor Emmanuel Monument (p384) is a prominent, but largely unloved, Roman landmark.

Count Camillo di Cavour

(1810–61) Cavour's diplomacy as prime minister of Piedmont ensured that the House of Savoy became rulers of the new Italy. He also coined the word "Risorgimento".

The skiffs were lent by other ships moored in Marsala harbor.

Giuseppe Verdi
 (1813–1901)
 Composers such as Verdi, Donizetti, and Rossini made the 19th century the great era of Italian opera. Verdi's early operas inspired the Risorgimento.

Modern Italy

Fascism under Mussolini (1922–43) promised the Italians greatness, but delivered only humiliation. In spite of this, Italy has become one of Europe's leading economies with a standard of living undreamed of at the turn of the 20th century. This has been achieved in the face of great obstacles. Since 1946, the Republic has passed through many crises: a series of unstable coalitions, the terrorist outrages in the 1970s and, in the 1990s, corruption scandals involving numerous government ministers and officials.

ITALIAN CINEMA SINCE WORLD WAR II

The social problems of late 1940s Italy inspired a wave of cinema known as Neo-Realism. Leading exponents included Roberto Rossellini, who made Roma Città Aperta (1945), Vittorio de Sica, the director of Bicycle Thieves (1948), Pier Paolo Pasolini and Luchino Visconti. Since that time, the major Italian directors have cultivated their own personal styles.

Vittorio de Sica (1901-74)

Visconti's later films, such as Death in Venice (1971), show formal beauty and decadence, while Federico Fellini's La Dolce Vita (1960) and Roma (1972) depict life as a grotesque carnival.

Italy has also produced some commercially successful films, such as Sergio Leone's late 1960s westerns and the Oscar-winning Cinema Paradiso and La Vita è Bella.

ITALY THROUGH THE YEAR

Throughout Italy, the variety of local character and color is astonishing. This is mainly due to the survival of regionalism, particularly in the southern parts of the country. Old traditions, customs, and lifestyles are still greatly respected and there is a deep attachment to the land, which is reflected in a healthy interest in food and produce, as well as the perseverance of seasonal religious and secular events. Annual festivals, whether in rural or urban areas, range from winetasting and gastronomic celebrations to elaborate commemorations of every patron saint imaginable.

SPRING

The Italian spring begins early, particularly in the south. City streets and main sights are rarely overcrowded (except at Easter in Rome). The weather, however, can be unpredictable and wet in the central and northern parts of the country. Spring specialties, such as asparagus, spinach, and rocket, begin to feature on restaurant menus. This is a season of great celebration; festivals and fairs abound, especially in Sicily, and the Easter papal address always draws massive crowds to St. Peter's.

MARCH

Mostra Vini Spumanti, (mid-Mar), Madonna di Campiglio, Trentino-Alto Adige. Fair celebrating sparkling wine.

Sa Sartiglia, Oristano, Sardinia. Three-day carnival ending on Shrove Tuesday.

Procession of the Grieving Madonna on the isle of Procida

Su e zo per i ponti (Sun, varies), Venice. A lively race through the city's streets, up and down the bridges.

APRIL

Procession of the Grieving Madonna (Good Friday), Procida, Campania. A colorful religious procession throughout the island.

Holy Week (Easter Week). Numerous Easter celebrations from Palm Sunday to Easter Sunday, throughout the country.

Papal Address (Easter Sunday), Rome. The Pope makes his Easter address from the Vatican.

Dance of the Devils and Death (Easter Sunday), Prizzi, Sicily. Dance recital symbolizing the attempts of evil to vanquish the forces of God.

Scoppio del Carro (Easter Sunday), Florence. Firework display is lit by a mechanical dove in front of the Duomo.

Festa della Madonna che Scappa in Piazza (Easter Sunday), Sulmona, Abruzzo. Re-enactment of a meeting between the Virgin and the Risen Christ.

Festa degli Aquiloni (first Sun after Easter), San Miniato, Tuscany. Kite lovers perform aerial acrobatics at this festival.

Festa di San Marco (Apr 25), Venice. St. Mark, the patron saint of Venice, is commemorated by a gondola race across St. Mark's Basin.

Mostra Mercato Internazionale dell'Artigianato (last week), Florence. An important European exhibition of arts and crafts.

Scoppio del Carro (Explosion of the Carriage) festival in Florence

Sagra Musicale Lucchese

Street carpeted with flowers for the Infiolata in Genzano

SUMMER

Summer brings the crowds to Italy, particularly the cities. Italians, however, flee and head for the coast, usually in August. The lines for tourist attractions can be long and hotels are often fully booked. Festivals vary; religious events are interspersed with those of the arts and local folklore.

JUNE

Festa della Fragola (Jun 1), Borgo San Martino, Piedmont. Musical and folkloric performances in celebration of the strawberry.

Biennale (Jun-Sep), Venice. The world's biggest exhibition of contemporary art takes place during odd-numbered years only.

Infiolata (Corpus Christi day), Genzano, Lazio. A procession through streets carpeted with flowers.

Festa di San Giovanni (mid-Jun-mid-Jul), Turin, Piedmont. Festival in honor of the city's patron, St. John.

Calcio Storico (Jun 24 and two other days in Jun), Florence. Soccer in 16th-century costumes; fireworks.

Festa di Sant'Andrea (Jun 27), Amalfi, Campania.

Fireworks and processions.

Festival dei Due Mondi (late Jun-early Jul), Spoleto, Umbria. International festival of drama, music, and dance.

Gioco del Ponte (last Sun), Pisa. "The Bridge Parade" of marchers in antique armor.

Estate Romana (late Jun-mid-Sep), Rome. Open-air movies, performances, ballet, and concerts.

JULY

Corsa del Palio (Jul 2), Siena. Tuscany's most famous event (see p331) presents a medieval flagwaving exhibition and horse race.

Festa della Madonna della Bruna (first Sun), Matera, Basilicata. A lively procession of clergymen and knights in costume.

Festa de' Noantri (last two weeks of Jul), Rome. A colorful festival in the streets of Trastevere.

Festa della Santa Maria del Carmine (Jul 16), Naples. Featuring the illumination of the city's bell tower.

Umbria Jazz (Jul), Perugia. World-

Musician from Florence's Calcio famous jazz artists perform.

International Film Festival (Jul-Aug), Taormina, Sicily.

The Sienese Palio in action

Opera Festival (Jul-Aug), Verona, Veneto. Renowned opera festival (see p137) overlapping with the Shakespeare Festival, providing music, drama, opera, and dance.

AUGUST

Medieval Palio (first weekend Aug) Feltre, Veneto. Parades and archery competitions, medieval-style.

Festa dei Candelieri (Aug 14), Sassari, Sardinia. "Festival of the Candle", dating from the 16th century.

Festa del Mare (Aug 15), Dianio Marina, Liguria. This "Festival of the Sea" boasts a spectacular firework display.

Corsa del Palio (16 Aug), Siena, Tuscany. See July entry.

Venice Film Festival (late Aug-early Sep). International festival on the Lido.

Rossini Festival (Aug-Sep), Pesaro, Le Marche. A celebration of the composer's work, in his birthplace.

Settimane Musicali di Stresa (late Aug-end Sep), Stresa, Lombardy. Four weeks of concerts and recitals.

FALL

Fall is a slow, gentle season in Italy but that doesn't mean there are fewer festivals and fairs. In addition to the various religious events at this time of year, gastronomic festivals are especially popular, commemorating such delectables as chestnuts, local cheeses, sausages, and mushrooms. Fall is the season of the vendemmia, the grape harvest, which is often used as an excuse for village festivities at which the latest local wines flow freely.

The climate (see pp72-3) in late fall is often cold and wet in the north. The south, however, can be quite warm right through October.

SEPTEMBER

Festa di San Sebastiano e Santa Lucia (Sep 1-3), Sassari, Sardinia. Includes a contest where competitors improvise short poems.

Procession of the Macchina di Santa Rosa (Sep 3), Viterbo, Lazio. Commemoration of the saint's body being transported to the church of Santa Rosa in 1258.

Giostra del Saracino (first Sun), Arezzo, Umbria. Joust of the Saracen and knights, dating from the 13th century.

Regata Storica (first Sun), Venice. A procession of historic boats followed by a colorful gondola race.

Human chess game (second week), Marostica,

The widely cultivated olive tree near Vicenza. A popular costumed game held in the main square every even year.

Rassegna del Chianti Classico (second week), Chianti, Tuscany. Celebration of the local wines.

La Notte Bianca (mid-Sep), Rome. Concerts, events, and free admission to some museums during the night.

The Miracle of San Gennaro (Sep 19), Naples. Re-enactment of the liquefaction of the saint's blood, in a lively mass at the Duomo.

Palio (third Sun), Asti, Piedmont. Includes a costumed medieval procession and bareback horse racing.

OCTOBER

Amici della Musica (Oct-Apr), Florence, Tuscany. The "Friends of Music" concert season begins.

Fiera del Tartufo (first Sun), Alba, Piedmont. A variety of events centered around the locally grown white truffle.

Festa di San Francesco (Oct 4), Assisi, Umbria. Feast in honor of the saint.

Wine festivals (first week), Castelli Romani, Lazio.

Sagra del Tordo (last Sun) Montalcino, Tuscany.

Celebration of the thrush; costumed archery contests.

Festa dell'Uva (dates vary), Bolzano, Trentino-Alto Adige. Grape festival with live music and a costumed procession featuring allegoric casts.

International Festival of Cinema (dates vary), Rome. A week of screenings, high-profile events, and celebrity-spotting in the capital.

WINTER

There are fairs, markets, and religious events up and down the country at this time of year. Neapolitan Christmas cribs are famous and nearly every church has one. The Christmas holiday itself is low key; more is made of other religious events such as the liquefaction of San Gennaro's blood in Naples and the Carnevale in Venice.

DECEMBER

Festa di Sant' Ambrogio

(early Dec), Milan. The official opening of La Scala Opera season (see p193).

Festa della Madonna di Loreto

(Dec 10), Loreto, Le Marche. Celebration of the Virgin's Holy House.

Mercato della Befana (mid-Dec-Jan 6), Rome. Well-known Christmas fair held in Piazza Navona.

The Miracle of San Gennaro

(Dec 16), Naples. See September.

Christmas fair (mid-Dec),

Naples. Fair selling crib figures and decorations.

Fiaccole di Natale

(Christmas Eve), Abbadia di San Salvatore, Tuscany. Features carols and processions in memory of the first shepherds.

Midnight Mass (Dec 24), at churches all over the country.

Christmas Day (Dec 25), St. Peter's Square, Rome. Public blessing by the Pope.

The Sporting Year

World Cup mania

Soccer is by far the most important sport in Italy, uniting the country when the national team (Azzurri) plays. Other sports throughout the year also attract a large following, so fans are never at a loss for varied activities. For most big sporting events, tickets can be obtained for cash at club outlets such as the venue itself. Agencies provide hard-to-get tickets at often higher prices. Beware of the inevitable touts at popular events as their expensive tickets may not be valid.

Calcio Fiorentino, one of Italy's few indigenous sports, is said to be a medieval precursor of modern soccer.

The professional water polo season takes place from March through July. The Canottieri Napoli team play consistently well through the championship.

Coppa Italia soccer final

Memorial d'Aloia rowing competition, held in Umbria

The Giro d'Italia cycling race takes place over many stages. Mario Cipollini won a record number of stages.

January	February	March	April	May	June

Rugby is becoming increasingly popular. Italy takes part in the Six Nations Championship in February and March, along with England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, and France.

Indoor Athletics Championships

Rome Marathon

The Rome Masters, previously known as the Italian Open, takes place in Rome during May. The event is one of the most prestigious clay court tennis competitions in the world.

International Showjumping, Rome

The Italian leg of the Circuito Mondiale in Mugello. Valentino Rossi has dominated the MotoGP World Championship for over a decade.

Italy has some of the best ski resorts in Europe, and in 2006 Turin hosted the Winter Olympics. Above is Alberto Tomba, once a champion of the slopes.

The Italian Grand Prix, held annually at Monza, is Italy's round of the international Formula One World Championship. Giancarlo Fisichella is one of Italy's most successful drivers.

Trofeo dei Templi rowing competition, Sicily

The San Remo Car Rally, held each year in October, was made famous by driver Micky Biason and the Lancia Delta Integrale.

The Italian soccer season runs from September through May. It culminates with the Coppa Italia final, which is equivalent to the British FA Cup. Italy's soccer obsession, however, reaches fever pitch when the World Cup takes place every four years.

The Outdoor Athletics Championship has become very popular. One of Italy's foremost athletes was Stefano Baldini (now retired), winner of an Olympic gold medal in 2004.

The Climate of Italy

The Italian peninsula has a varied climate falling into three distinct geographical regions. Cold Alpine winters and warm, wet summers characterize the northern regions. In the extensive Po Valley, arid summers contrast with freezing, damp winters. The rest of Italy has a pleasant climate with long, hot summers and mild winters. Cooler weather along the backbone of the Apennines can bring snow during the winter months.

Northeast Italy at a Glance

The sheer variety to be found in northeast Italy makes it a fascinating area to explore. The majestic Dolomites dominate the north, straddling Trentino-Alto Adige and the Veneto, and are dotted with medieval castles and modern skiing resorts. On the plain, the cities of Verona, Vicenza, and Padua are all noted for outstanding architecture and museums, while the rural hinterland boasts beautiful villas. The incomparable and spectacular city of Venice, with its magnificent monuments, rises from the lagoon. Farther east, in Friuli, there are important Roman remains. This map pinpoints some of the highlights.

Alto Adige is a dramatic region of snow-covered mountain valleys scattered with forbidding castles and onion-domed churches in the Tyrolean style (see pp170–71).

The Dolomites (see pp82–3) form the spectacular backdrop to many towns in northeast Italy, among them Trento, the region's capital (see pp174–5).

Verona is one of the loveliest cities in the Veneto, boasting the Castelvecchio and a Roman arena now used for performances of opera (see pp142–7).

Vicenza, a model Renaissance city, is dominated by the buildings of Palladio, such as the Palazzo della Ragione and La Rotonda (see pp150–53).

The Flavors of Northeast Italy

This diverse region is the least Italian area of Italy. Bordering on Balkan and Austro-Hungarian territory, its food reflecting its rich culture and landscape. Venice's traditional trading links have given a Middle Eastern flavor to some dishes, such as sweet and sour saor sauce, and spices like nutmeg, saffron, and cinnamon feature widely. While pasta is eaten, many dishes are accompanied with the more typical polenta, made from yellow corn flour, and risotto is also a favorite. Butter tends to be used more than olive oil. From hearty, ribsticking fare to the most delicate and sophisticated of dishes, this is a region full of gastronomic surprises.

THE VENETO & VENICE

The Veneto is now one of Italy's main rice-growing regions. Rice was introduced from Spain by the Arabs, and is the staple ingredient for many versatile local dishes. Creamy risottos come in many guises including di mare (with seafood), in which cuttlefish ink gives the dish a dramatic, dark appearance. The Veneto's favorite pasta is bigoli, a thick spaghetti.

Vegetables are plentiful, including zucchini (courgettes), asparagus, bitter red radicchio (endive) from Treviso, and variegated radicchio from Castelfranco.

Venetian specialties include cicchetti and antipasti – snacks and starters such as marinated sardines, fried artichokes (articiocchi in Venetian dialect), and seafood in bitesize portions, especially mussels (peoci). Venetian crab (granceola) is highly prized, and the local fish soup (sopa de pesse) is deliciously hearty. Finely sliced raw beef (carpaccio), had its origins here, created by Giuseppe Cipriani at Venice's Harry's Bar. Delicious, traditional tiramisù is also said to originate from Venice, and sorbets are common too. It was the Venetians who introduced cane sugar to Europe and their sweet tooth is still evident in the rich candied fruit, sultanas, and pine nuts acquired from the Turks and Byzantines.

Selection of Venetian antipasti, the perfect appetizer

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Antipasto di frutti di mare (a mixed seafood appetizer) is a special favorite in Venice, where the ingredients come fresh from the Adriatic. From lovely Lake Garda, anguilla del pescatore (stewed eel), lavarelli al vino bianco (lake fish in white wine), and carpione (a type of lake trout) are all fishy delights. Another fish specialty of the region is baccalà alla veneziana, made with dried salt cod. Pork and salamis feature throughout the area but in Friuli goose is often used as an alternative to pork, with succulent cured meat offerings such as salame d'oca (goose salami). Game is also found on the menu, together with sauerkraut and filling goulash, while desserts often have an Austrian flavor, too, such as apfel strudel. But the region is also proud of claiming as its own the voluptuous, classic Italian dessert tiramisù.

FRIULI-VENEZIA GIULIA

A culinary crossroads, this region marks the meeting point of Slavic, Germanic and Latin traditions and was once the poorest of the northern Italian regions. Varieties of Hungarian goulash and

Fresh radichio and peppers piled high in a Treviso market

Austrian strudels often appear on local menus. The area produces fine sweet ham and prosciutto (including the fabled, succulent San Daniele). Goose is a staple dish, as is Istrian lamb, grazed in the open air on local herbs and grasses that impart a delicious flavor.

Trieste is famous for its Viennese pastries and sweet gnocchi, prune dumplings sprinkled with sugar and cinnamon. Friuli's dairy specialty is Montasio, a hard cheese made from cow's milk.

TRENTINO & ALTO ADIGE

Strong Austrian influences from the Alto Adige combine with hearty fare from the mountainous region of Trentino as well as more southern Italian flavors.

Staple dishes include cured meats such as speck (smoked ham) and salamis, as well as warming soups including the classic minestrone. Bread dumplings – canederli in Italian but knödel in Alto Adige – feature more than pasta. Trentino risottos include sweet and savory variations. Especially good are those made with finferli mushrooms, highly prized and similar to Tuscan porcini (ceps) in flavor and quality. Alpine trout is flavorful and game dishes, especially venison and rabbit, are popular in season, often served with polenta. The Trentino apple is crisp and delicious.

ON THE MENU

Carpaccio (Venice & the Veneto) Wafer-thin slices of raw beef in extra virgin olive oil with rocket leaves and slivers of Parmesan cheese.

Fegato alla Veneziana Calf's liver served on a bed of onions.

Jota (Friuli-Venezia Giulia) A soup of barley and sauerkraut. This cheap and filling dish is often mixed with brovada – turnips that have been steeped in a wooden cask of grape pressings.

Strangolapreti (Trentino-Alto Adige) Dumplings (gnocchi) made with bread, spinach or potatoes, coated with butter and cheese. Literally means “priest stranglers!”

Risi e bisi Soft and moist risotto mixing rice with fresh peas, sometimes with ham and Parmesan cheese.

Polenta Cornmeal porridge served plain as a side dish, often with rabbit, or con pancetta (with bacon).

Tiramisù A rich pudding of mascarpone, sponge fingers, coffee, and marsala. The name means “pick me up.”

Understanding Architecture in Venice and the Veneto

Trade contact with the East led medieval Venice to develop its own exotic style – known as Venetian Gothic – blending Byzantine domes and Islamic minarets with European Gothic pointed arches and quatrefoils. In the 16th century, Palladio introduced his interpretations of Classical architecture through a series of churches, public buildings, and rural villas in Venice and the Veneto. The 17th century brought the Baroque style, though its exuberance was tempered by Palladio-influenced restraint.

THE ARCHITECTURE OF VENICE: BYZANTINE TO BAROQUE

The Basilica di San Marco, western Europe's finest Byzantine church (completed 11th century), was given lavish treatment to make it a dazzling shrine for the relics of St. Mark, the Evangelist, and a fitting symbol of Venetian aspirations (see pp110–13).

THE GENIUS OF PALLADIO

Villa Barbaro at Masèr was one of the villas designed by Palladio from the 1550s when it became fashionable for rich Venetians to acquire rural estates. This villa is typical, combining a working farm, housed in the side wings, with the elegant buildings of a country house (see p149).

WHERE TO SEE THE ARCHITECTURE

A vaporetto trip along the Grand Canal in Venice (see pp88-91) is a splendid way of getting an overview of Venetian architecture. Ca' d'Oro, Ca' Rezzonico, and Ca' Pesaro may also be visited as they contain museums and a visit to the Basilica di San Marco and the Palazzo Ducale is a must. There are numerous examples of Palladio's architecture in the Veneto, but the star is the Villa Barbaro (see p149). Several of his villas line the Brenta Canal (see p160), and the town of Vicenza (see pp150-53) is full of his buildings, including La Rotonda, his famous villa.

San Giorgio Maggiore, built in 1559-80, is marvelously sited at the entrance to the Venetian inner harbor. It broke from the prevailing Gothic style, introducing the clean simplicity and harmonious proportions of Classical architecture to Venice, and more resembles an ancient Roman temple than a Christian church (see pp120-21).

The Dolomites

The Dolomites are the most distinctive and beautiful mountains in Italy. They were formed of mineralized coral which was laid down beneath the sea during the Triassic era, and uplifted when the European and African continental plates dramatically collided 60 million years ago. Unlike the glacier-eroded saddles and ridges of the main body of the Alps, the pale rocks here have been carved by the corrosive effects of ice, sun, and rain, sculpting the cliffs, spires, and "organ pipes" that we see today. The eastern and western ranges of the Dolomites have slightly different characteristics; the eastern section is the more awe-inspiring, especially the Catinaccio (or Rosengarten) range which is particularly beautiful, turning rose pink at sunset.

STRADA DELLE DOLOMITI

One of the most spectacular routes through the Dolomites links Bolzano (see p172) with Cortina d'Ampezzo (see p161). It follows the lie of the land, passing some of the greatest peaks, and the most majestic landscape.

Marmolada is the highest peak in the Dolomite chain. A cable-car ascends to 3,000 m above the glacier.

Lago di Misurina is a large and beautiful lake lying beside the resort of Misurina. The crystal clear waters reflect the surrounding mountains, mirroring various peaks such as the distinctive and dramatic Sorapiss, in shimmering colors.

Outdoor activities in this area of dramatic landscapes include skiing in winter, and walking and rambling along the footpaths, and to picnic sites, in summer. Chairlifts from the main resorts provide easy access up into the mountains themselves, transporting you into some breathtaking scenery.

Tre Cime di Lavaredo or Drei Zinnen dominate the valleys north of the Lago di Misurina.

NATURE IN THE DOLOMITES

Forests and meadows support a breathtaking richness of wildlife in the region. Alpine plants, which flower between June and September, have evolved their miniature form to survive the harsh winds.

The Flora

Gentian roots are used to make a bitter local liqueur.

The orange mountain lily thrives on sun-baked slopes.

The pretty burser's saxifrage grows in clusters on rocks.

Devil's claw has distinctive pink flower beads.

The Fauna

The ptarmigan changes its plumage from mottled brown in summer to snow white in winter for effective camouflage. It feeds on mountain berries and young plant shoots.

The chamois, a shy mountain antelope prized for its soft skin, is protected in the national parks, where hunting is forbidden.

Roe deer are very common as their natural predators – wolves and lynx – are decreasing in number. An appetite for tree saplings causes problems for foresters.

VENICE

Lying in the extreme northeast of Italy, Venice, gateway to the Orient, became an independent Byzantine province in the 10th century. Exclusive trading links with the East and victory in the Crusade of 1204 brought wealth and power, which were only gradually eroded by European and Turkish rivals. Today, Venice's ties are with the local Veneto region which stretches from the flat river plains to the Dolomites.

Venice is one of the few cities in the world that can be truly described as unique. It survives against all the odds, built on a series of low mud banks amid the tidal waters of the Adriatic, and regularly subject to floods. During the Middle Ages, under the leadership of successive doges, Venice expanded its power and influence throughout the Mediterranean to Constantinople (modern Istanbul). The immense wealth of the city was celebrated in art and architecture throughout the city.

The riches of St. Mark's alone bear witness to Venice's position as a world power from the 12th to 14th centuries. After slowly losing ground to the new states of Europe, however, it fell to Napoleon in 1797. Finally, Venice joined the kingdom of Italy in 1866, so uniting to the country for the first time since the Roman empire.

Today, Venice has found a new role. Her palazzi have become museums, shops, hotels, and apartments and her convents have been turned into centers for art restoration. Yet little of the essential fabric of Venice has altered in 200 years. The city's sounds are still those of footsteps and the cries of boatmen. The only engines are those of barges delivering supplies or water-buses ferrying passengers between stops. The same well-worn streets are still trodden. More than 14 million visitors a year succumb to the magic of this improbable place whose "streets are full of water" and where the glories of the past are evident at every turn.

Exploring Venice

Venice is divided into six ancient administrative districts or sestieri: Cannaregio, Castello, San Marco, Dorsoduro, San Polo, and Santa Croce. You can walk to most places in Venice itself, and ride a waterbus to any of the islands. The Venice Card (see p682) covers all transportation as well as admission to most museums, such as Ca' Rezzonico, the Palazzo Ducale, and Museo Correr.

GETTING AROUND

The only road into Venice is the S11 from Mestre, which carries you over the causeway to the Tronchetto and Piazzale Roma where there are parking lots and bus stops. Rail travelers arrive at Santa Lucia station on the Grand Canal. In the city, public transportation is by vaporetto, or waterbus – the No.1 is best for sightseeing as it travels the length of the Grand Canal (see pp136–7).

The Grand Canal: Santa Lucia to the Rialto

The best way to view the Grand Canal as it winds through the heart of the city is from a vaporetto, or waterbus. Several lines travel the length of the canal (see p683). The palaces lining the waterway were built over a span of five centuries and present a panoramic survey of the city's history, almost all bearing the name of some once-great Venetian family.

San Marcuola
The church was rebuilt in the 18th century, but the planned new facade overlooking the canal was never completed.

San Geremia houses the relics of St. Lucy, once kept in the church of Santa Lucia where the railroad station now stands.

THE GONDOLAS OF VENICE

The gondola has been a part of Venice since the 11th century. With its slim hull and flat underside, the craft is perfectly adapted to negotiating narrow, shallow canals. There is a slight leftward curve to the prow, which counteracts the force of the oar, preventing the gondola from going round in circles.

In 1562 it was decreed that all gondolas should be black to stop people making an ostentatious show of their wealth. For special occasions they are decorated with flowers. Today, gondola rides are expensive and usually taken by tourists (see p683). However, traghetti (gondola ferries) are a cheap, convenient way of crossing the Grand Canal.

The Grand Canal: the Rialto to San Marco

After passing the Rialto, the canal doubles back on itself along a stretch known as La Volta (the bend). It then widens out and the views become more spectacular approaching San Marco. Facades may have faded and foundations frayed with the tides, yet the canal remains, in the words of the French ambassador in 1495, "the most beautiful street in the world."

This lovely Gothic church, founded in the mid-14th century, was dedicated to St. Christopher, patron saint of travelers, to protect the boatmen who ferried passengers to the islands in the northern lagoon. A 15th-century statue of the saint, restored by the Venice in Peril fund, stands above the main portal. The dedication was changed and the church reconstructed in the early 15th century, after the discovery, in a nearby vegetable garden (orto), of a statue of the Virgin Mary said to have miraculous powers.

The interior, faced almost entirely in brick, is large and uncluttered. On the right is a magnificent painting by Cima da Conegliano, St. John the Baptist and Other Saints (c.1493). The vacant space in the chapel opposite belongs to Giovanni Bellini's Madonna with Child (c.1478), stolen in 1993 for the third time.

The church's greatest remaining treasures are the works of art by Tintoretto, who was a parishioner of the church. His tomb, which is marked with a plaque, lies with that of his children, in the chapel to the right of the chancel.

Giovanni de' Santi. It was restored by the Venice in Peril fund, and inspired the rededication of the church.

In 1420 Marino Contarini, a wealthy patrician, commissioned the construction of what he hoped would be the city's most magnificent palace (see p81). The building's intricate carving was entrusted to a team of Venetian and Lombard craftsmen, while the facade was beautifully adorned with the most elaborate and expensive decorative finishes of the day, including gold leaf, vermilion and ultramarine. Over the years the palace was extensively remodeled, and by the 18th century was in a state of semi-dereliction. In 1846 it was bought by the Russian Prince Troubetzkoy for the famous ballerina Maria Taglioni.

Under her direction the palace suffered barbaric restoration, losing, among other things, its staircase and much of its original stonework. It was finally rescued by Baron Giorgio Franchetti, a wealthy patron of the arts, who bequeathed both the building and his private art collection to the state in 1915.

Pride of place on the first of the gallery's two floors goes to Andrea Mantegna's St. Sebastian (1506), the artist's last work, which occupies a special alcove of its own. Elsewhere, the floor's main exhibits are ranged around the portego (gallery). This is largely dominated by the vivid 15th-century Double Portrait (c.1493) by the sculptor Tullio Lombardo; Sansovino's lunette of the Madonna and Child (c.1530); and several bronze reliefs by the Paduan Andrea Briosco, "Il Riccio" (1470–1532). Rooms leading off the right contain numerous bronzes and medallions, with some examples by Pisanello and Gentile Bellini. Paintings here also include the famous Madonna of the Beautiful Eyes, attributed to Giovanni Bellini, a Madonna and Child, attributed to Alvise Vivarini (both late 15th century), and Carpaccio's Annunciation and Death of the Virgin (both c.1504). A room to the left of the portego contains non-Venetian paintings, notably a Flagellation by Luca Signorelli (c.1480). A lovely staircase leads to the second floor, which opens with a room hung with tapestries. It has bronzes by Alessandro Vittoria and paintings by Titian and Van Dyck. The portego displays frescoes (c.1532) by Pordenone from the cloister of Santo Stefano, while an anteroom contains damaged frescoes by Titian taken from the Fondaco dei Tedeschi.

This pretty terracotta-colored church is located close to the Rialto. Constructed between 1479 and 1504, it is a lovely Renaissance design, the last work of Mauro Coducci.

The interior is built on a Greek-cross plan. The light meter illuminates Giovanni Bellini's St. Jerome with Saints Christopher and Augustine (1513) above the first altar on the right. This was most probably Bellini's last painting, executed when he was in his eighties.

Campo dei Miracoli. Map 3 B5. Tel 041 275 04 62. Rialto, Fondamente Nuove. 10am–5pm Mon–Sat. Jan 1, Dec 25.

An exquisite masterwork of early Renaissance architecture, the Miracoli is the church where many Venetians like to get married. Tucked away in a maze of alleys and waterways in eastern Cannaregio, it is small and somewhat elusive.

Santa Maria dei Miracoli is decorated in various shades of marble, with some fine bas-reliefs and sculpture. It was built in 1481–9 by the architect Pietro Lombardo and his sons to enshrine The Virgin and Child (1408), a painting believed to have miraculous powers. The picture, by Nicolò di Pietro, can still be seen above the altar.

The interior of the church is embellished by pink, white, and gray marble, at its best when lit up by rays of pale sunshine. It is crowned by a barrel-vaulted ceiling

Decorative column from inside Santa Maria dei Miracoli

(1528) which has 50 portraits of saints and prophets. The balustrade, between the nave and the chancel, is decorated by Tullio Lombardo's carved figures of St. Francis, Archangel Gabriel, the Virgin, and St. Clare.

The screen around the high altar and the medallions of the Evangelists in the cupola spandrels are also Lombardo's work. Above the main door, the choir gallery was used by the nuns from the neighboring convent, who entered the church through an overhead gallery. Santa Maria dei Miracoli has undergone a major restoration program, which was funded by the American Save Venice organization.

The marble panels are fixed to the bricks by metal hooks. This method prevents the build-up of damp and salt water behind the panels, and dates from the Renaissance.

Street by Street: San Polo

The Rialto bridge and markets make this area a magnet for visitors. Traditionally the city's commercial quarter, it was here that bankers, brokers, and merchants conducted their affairs. Streets are no longer lined with stalls selling spices and fine fabrics, but the food markets and pasta stores are unmissable. Away from the bridge, streets quickly become less crowded, leading to tiny squares and quiet churches.

The Rialto Markets have existed for centuries, and are renowned for their produce. The Pescheria sells fresh fish and seafood.

The 17th-century church of San Cassiano houses a carved altar (1696) and a Crucifixion by Tintoretto (1568).

Sant'Aponal has a façade decorated with worn Gothic reliefs. The church was founded in the 11th century, but is now deconsecrated.

The Rialto takes its name from rivo alto (high bank) and was one of the first areas of Venice to be inhabited. A banking and then market district, it remains one of the city's busiest and most bustling areas. Locals and visitors alike jostle among the colorful stalls of the Erberia (fruit and vegetable market) and Pescheria (fish market).

Stone bridges were built in Venice as early as the 12th century, but it was not until 1588, after the collapse, decay, or sabotage of earlier wooden structures, that a solid stone bridge was designed for the Rialto. Completed in 1591, the new bridge remained the only means of crossing the Grand Canal until 1854, when the Accademia bridge was built.

Few visitors leave Venice without crossing the famous bridge. It is a wonderful place to watch and photograph the constant activity of boats on the Grand Canal below.

This church is a focal point of a quiet quarter of Santa Croce. The name “dell’Orio” may derive from a laurel tree (alloro) that once stood near the church. San Giacomo was founded in the 9th century, rebuilt in 1225, and thereafter repeatedly modified, resulting in a mixture of styles. The campanile, basilica ground plan, and Byzantine columns survive from the 13th century. The ship’s keel roof and the columns are Gothic, and the apses are Renaissance.

More commonly known as the Frari (a corruption of Frati, meaning brothers), this vast Gothic church dwarfs the eastern area of San Polo. The first church on the site was built by Franciscan friars in 1250–1338, but was replaced by a larger building completed in the mid-15th century. The airy interior is striking for its sheer size and for the quality of its works of art, including masterworks by Titian and Giovanni Bellini, a statue by Donatello, and several grandiose tombs.

Scuola Grande di San Rocco 9

Restored main entrance to the Scuola di San Rocco

Founded in honor of San Rocco (St. Roch), a saint who dedicated his life to helping the sick, the Scuola started out as a charitable confraternity. Construction began in 1515 under Bartolomeo Bon and was continued by Scarpagnino until his death in 1549. The work was financed by donations from Venetians keen to invoke San Rocco's protection and the Scuola quickly became one of the wealthiest in Venice. In 1564 its members decided to commission Tintoretto to decorate its walls and ceilings. His earliest paintings, the first of over 50 works he eventually left in the Scuola, fill the small Sala dell'Albergo off the Upper Hall. His later paintings occupy the First Floor Hall, immediately within the entrance.

FIRST FLOOR HALL

The first floor cycle was executed in 1583–7, when Tintoretto was in his sixties, and consists of eight large paintings illustrating, among others the life of Mary. The series starts with an Annunciation and ends with an Assumption.

The tranquil scenes of The Flight into Egypt, St. Mary Magdalene, and St. Mary of Egypt are remarkable for their serenity. This is portrayed most lucidly by the repentant hermit's isolated spiritual contemplation in St. Mary of Egypt. In all three paintings, the landscapes are rendered with rapid strokes, and are an important part of the composition.

UPPER HALL AND SALA DELL'ALBERGO

Scarpagnino's great staircase (1544–6), with its upper flight decorated with two vast paintings commemorating the plague of 1630, leads to the Upper Hall. Here, biblical subjects decorate the ceiling and walls, painted by Tintoretto from 1575–81.

The ceiling paintings portray scenes from the Old Testament. The three large and dynamic square paintings in the center show episodes from the Book of Exodus: Moses Strikes Water from the Rock, The Miracle of the Bronze Serpent, and The Fall of Manna in the Desert. These all allude to the charitable aims of the Scuola in alleviating thirst, sickness, and hunger respectively. All three paintings are crowded compositions displaying much violent movement.

The vast wall paintings in the hall feature episodes from the New Testament, linking with the ceiling paintings. Two of the most striking paintings are The Temptation of Christ, which shows a handsome young Satan offering Christ two loaves of bread, and The Adoration of the Shepherds. Like The Temptation of Christ, The Adoration is composed in two halves, with a female figure, shepherds, and an ox below, and the Holy Family and onlookers above.

The beautiful carvings below the paintings were added in the 17th century by sculptor Francesco Pianta. The figures are allegorical and include (near the altar) a caricature of Tintoretto with his palette and brushes, representing Painting.

The easel painting Christ Carrying the Cross, also in the Upper Hall, was once attributed to Giorgione, though many believe it to be by Titian.

Near the entrance to the Sala dell'Albergo is The Annunciation by Titian. The Sala dell'Albergo itself holds the most breathtaking of his works – The Crucifixion

Fumiani's epic ceiling painting (1680–1740) in San Pantalon

The overwhelming feature of this late 17th-century church is its vast painted ceiling, dark, awe-inspiring, and remarkable for its illusionistic effect of height. The ceiling comprises a total of 40 scenes, and admirers claim that this is the world's largest work of art on canvas.

The scenes show the martyrdom and apotheosis of the physician St. Pantalon. The artist, Gian Antonio Fumiani, took 24 years (1680–1704) to achieve the masterwork, before allegedly falling to his death from the scaffolding.

Santa Margherita

Built upon a strata of solid subsoil is the sestiere of Dorsoduro – the name means “hard backbone.” It has as its focal point the lively Campo Santa Margherita, the largest open space in this part of Venice. The square bustles with activity, particularly in the morning when the market stalls are open, and in the evening when it is the haunt of students from nearby Ca’ Foscari, now part of Venice university. The surrounding streets contain some architectural stunners, notably Ca’ Rezzonico and the Scuola Grande dei Carmini, which has decorations by Tiepolo. Of the area’s waterways, the delightful Rio San Barnaba is best appreciated from the Ponte dei Pugni, near the barge selling fruit and vegetables – itself a time-honored Venetian sight. Alongside the Rio Terrà Canal there are some lively cafés and a fascinating shop selling masks for Carnevale.

This palazzo houses the museum of 18th-century Venice, its rooms furnished with frescoes, paintings, and period pieces taken from other palaces or museums. Building began with Longhena (architect of La Salute, see p105) in 1667, but the funds of the Bon family, who commissioned it, ran dry before the third floor was started. In 1712 the unfinished palace was bought by the Rezzonico family of Genoa, who spent a large portion of their fortune on its completion.

The Rezzonico family sold it on, in 1888, to the famous poet Robert Browning and his son, Pen. The outstanding attraction in the palace today is Giorgio Massari's ballroom, which occupies the entire breadth of the building. It is adorned with gilded chandeliers, carved furniture by Andrea Brustolon, and a ceiling with trompe l'oeil frescoes. Other rooms have frescoes by Giambattista Tiepolo, including his lively Nuptial Allegory (1758), and one by his son, Giandomenico, originally in his villa at Zianigo. There are paintings by Longhi, Guardi, and – rare in Venice – Canaletto. On the top floor is a reconstructed 18th-century apothecary's shop and the Pinacoteca Martini.

Ponte dei Pugni was a traditional scene of fist fights between rival factions. They were finally banned in 1705 for being too violent.

San Barnaba is a thriving community, with its own floating barge stall crammed with fresh fruit and vegetables. It is a focal point for tourists and locals alike.

Campo San Nicolò. Map 5 A3. Tel 041 275 03 82. San Basilio. 10am–noon, 3–5pm Mon–Sat.

Contrasting with the remote and rundown area which surrounds it, this church still remains one of the most charming in Venice. Founded in the 7th century, it has been rebuilt extensively over the years. The little porch on the north flank is 15th century and once sheltered the beggars, or mendicanti, who gave the church its name.

Thanks to the Venice in Peril fund, in the 1970s the church underwent one of the most comprehensive restoration programs since the floods of 1966. Flooding had become such a problem that the priest often ferried himself around the church in a small wicker boat. The floor, which was 1 ft (30 cm) below the level of the canals, was rebuilt and raised slightly to prevent further flood damage. The roofs and lower walls were reconstructed, and paintings and statues restored.

The interior is delightfully embellished, particularly the nave with its 16th-century gilded wooden statues. These include the figure of San Nicolò himself. On the upper walls is a series of paintings of the life of Christ (c.1553) by Alvise dal Friso and other pupils of Veronese.

Outside, a small column supports a stone lion, in a humbler echo of the Column of San Marco in the Piazzetta.

Campo San Sebastiano. Map 5 C3. Tel 041 275 04 62. San Basilio. 10am–5pm Mon–Sat. Jan 1, Dec 25.

This church has one of the most homogeneous interiors in the whole of Venice. The splendor was created by Veronese who, from 1555 to 1560 and again in the 1570s, was commissioned to decorate the sacristy ceiling, the nave ceiling, the frieze, the east end of the choir, the high altar, the doors of the organ panels, and the chancel.

The paintings feature radiant colors and rich costumes. Those on the sacristy ceiling depict the Coronation of the Virgin and the Four Evangelists.

Of the other paintings, the finest are the three that tell the story of Esther, Queen of Xerxes I of Persia, famous for securing the deliverance of the Jewish people.

Veronese is buried here. His tomb is situated in front of the beautifully paved chapel to the left of the chancel.

Peggy Guggenheim Collection 16

Palazzo Venier dei Leoni. Map 6 F4. Tel 041 240 54 11. Accademia. 10am–6pm Wed–Mon. Dec 25.

Intended as a four-story palace, the 18th-century Palazzo Venier dei Leoni in fact never rose beyond the first floor – hence its nickname,

Il Palazzo Nonfinito (The Unfinished Palace). In 1949 the building was bought as a home by the American millionaire Peggy Guggenheim (1898–1979), a collector, dealer, and patron of the arts.

A perspicacious and high-spirited woman, she initially befriended the careers of, many innovative abstract and Surrealist artists. One was Max Ernst, who became her second husband. The collection consists of 200 fine paintings and sculptures, each representing the 20th century's most influential modern art movements. The dining room has notable Cubist works of art, including The Poet by Pablo Picasso, and an entire room is devoted to Jackson Pollock, who was "discovered" by Guggenheim. Other artists represented are Braque, Chagall, de Chirico, Dalí, Duchamp, Léger, Kandinsky, Klee, Mondrian, Miró, Malevich, Rothko, Bacon, and Magritte, whose Surreal Empire of Light (1953–4) shows a night scene of a darkened house in a wooded setting with a bright day sky above. The sculpture collection, which includes Constantin Brancusi's elegant Maiastra (1912), is laid out in the house and garden.

Perhaps the most provocative piece is Marino Marini's Angelo della Città (Angel of the Citadel, 1948), located on the terrace overlooking the Grand Canal. This shows a prominently displayed man sitting on a horse, erect in all respects. Embarrassed onlookers avert their gaze to enjoy views of the Grand Canal.

The Guggenheim, one of the most visited sights in Venice, is the best place in the city to see modern art. Light-filled rooms and the large modern canvases provide a striking contrast to the Renaissance paintings that usually form the highlights in most Venetian churches and museums. A bonus for English speakers is the team of assistants, who are often visiting arts graduates from English-speaking countries.

The garden has been paved and features an array of sculptures. Peggy Guggenheim's ashes are also preserved here, near the place where her pet dogs were buried. A shop and restaurant are housed in buildings off the garden. Call for information on temporary exhibits.

This great Baroque church standing at the entrance of the Grand Canal is one of the most imposing architectural landmarks of Venice. Henry James likened it to "some great lady on the threshold of her salon."

Interior of the Salute with the octagonal space at its core Santa Maria della Salute was built in thanksgiving for the city's deliverance from the plague epidemic of 1630, hence the name Salute, which means health and salvation.

Each November, in celebration, worshipers light candles and approach across a bridge of boats spanning the mouth of the Grand Canal for the occasion.

Baldassare Longhena started the church in 1630 at the age of 32, and worked on it for the rest of his life. It was not completed until 1687, five years after his death.

The interior is comparatively sober. It consists of a large octagonal space below the cupola and six chapels radiating from the ambulatory. The large domed chancel and grandiose high altar dominate the view from the main door.

The altar's sculptural group by Giusto Le Corte represents the Virgin and Child giving protection to Venice from the plague. The best of the paintings are in the sacristy to the left of the altar: Titian's early altarpiece of St. Mark Enthroned with Saints Cosmas, Damian, Roch, and Sebastian (1511–12) and his dramatic ceiling paintings of Cain and Abel, The Sacrifice of Abraham and Isaac, and David and Goliath (1540–9). The Wedding at Cana (1551) on the wall opposite the entrance is a major work by Jacopo Tintoretto.

Accademia 15

The art collection in the Accademia offers a complete spectrum of the Venetian school, from the Byzantine era through the Renaissance to the Baroque and later. The basis of the collection was the Accademia di Belle Arti founded in 1750 by the painter Giovanni Battista Piazzetta. In 1807 Napoleon moved the collection to these premises, enriching it with artworks removed from churches and monasteries. The Accademia is currently undergoing extensive restoration, which may result in changes to the floorplan.

BYZANTINE AND INTERNATIONAL GOTHIC

Room 1 shows the influence of Byzantine art on the early Venetian painters. In Paolo Veneziano's glowing Coronation of the Virgin (1325), the linear rhythms are unmistakably Gothic, but the gold background and central panel are distinctly Byzantine.

In contrast, The Coronation of the Virgin (1448) by Michele Giambono reveals a delicate naturalism, typical of the International Gothic style.

RENAISSANCE

The Renaissance came late to Venice, but by the second quarter of the 15th century it had transformed the city into a thriving art center rivaling Florence and Rome. Central to Venetian art in the 15th century was the Sacra Conversazione, in which the Madonna is portrayed with various saints in a harmonious composition. Giovanni Bellini's altarpiece for San Giobbe (c.1487) in Room 2 is one of the finest examples of this subject.

In contrast, the High Renaissance exuberance of Paolo Veronese is exemplified in the monumental Feast in the House of Levi (1573). The painting occupies a whole wall in Room 10. Tintoretto's huge masterwork The Miracle of St. Mark Freeing a Slave (1548) is also on display here.

BAROQUE, GENRE, AND LANDSCAPE

Venice lacked native Baroque painters, but a few non-Venetians kept the Venetian school alive in the 17th century. The most notable was the Genoese Bernardo Strozzi (1581–1644). The artist was a great admirer of the work of Veronese, as can be seen in his Feast at the House of Simon (1629) in Room 11.

Also represented in this room is Giambattista Tiepolo, the greatest Venetian painter of the 18th century.

The long corridor (12) and the rooms that lead from it are largely devoted to light-hearted landscape and genre paintings from the 18th century. Among them are pastoral scenes by Francesco Zuccarelli, works by Marco Ricci, scenes of Venetian society by Pietro Longhi, and a view of Venice by Canaletto (1763). This is a fine example of his sense of perspective.

CEREMONIAL PAINTING

Rooms 20 and 21 return to the Renaissance, featuring two great cycles of paintings from the late 16th century. The detail in these large-scale anecdotal canvases provides a fascinating glimpse of the life, customs and appearance of Venice at the time.

Room 20 houses The Stories of the Cross by Venice's leading artists. In Room 21, minutely detailed Scenes from the Legend of St. Ursula (1490s) by Carpaccio mix reality and imagination by linking episodes from the life of the saint to the settings and costumes of 15th-century Venice.

Basilica di San Marco 18

Venice's famous Basilica blends the architectural and decorative styles of East and West to create one of the greatest buildings in Europe. The exterior owes its almost Oriental splendor to countless treasures from the Republic's overseas empire. Among these are copies of the famous bronze horses, brought from Constantinople in 1204, and a wealth of columns, low reliefs, and colored marbles studded across the main façade. Mosaics from different epochs adorn the five doorways, while the main portal is framed by some of Italy's loveliest Romanesque carving (1240–65).

The elegant arches echo those of the lower floor, forming a repeat pattern.

THE BUILDING OF ST. MARK'S

Built on a Greek cross plan and crowned with five huge domes, this is the third church to stand on the site. The first, which enshrined the body of St. Mark in the 9th century, was destroyed by fire. The second was pulled down in favor of a church reflecting Venice's growing power. The present design was inspired by the Church of the Apostles in Constantinople and was completed and decorated over the centuries. From 1075, all ships returning from abroad had, by law, to bring back a precious gift to adorn "the House of St. Mark." The mosaics inside are mostly 12th–13th century and cover 45,622 sq ft (4,240 sq m). Some were later replaced by such artists as Titian and Tintoretto. Until 1807 St. Mark's was the doge's private chapel, used for ceremonies of State, after which it succeeded San Pietro di Castello as the cathedral of Venice.

Exploring the Basilica

St. Mark's magnificent interior is clad with dazzling mosaics, which begin in the narthex, or atrium of the basilica, and culminate in the glittering panels of the Pentecost and Ascension domes. The Genesis Cupola in the atrium has a stunning Creation of the World described in concentric circles. The pavimento or floor is also patterned with mosaics in marble and glass. Steps from the atrium lead to the Museo Marciano, home to the basilica's famous horses. Other treasures include the jewel-encrusted Pala d'Oro, behind the high altar, the Nicopeia icon and the precious hoards of silver, gold, and glassware in the Treasury.

MOSAICS

Clothing the domes, walls, and floor of the basilica are over 43,000 sq ft (4,000 sq m) of gleaming golden mosaics. The earliest, dating from the 12th century, were the work of mosaicists from the East. Their delicate techniques were soon adopted by Venetian craftsmen, who gradually took over the basilica's decoration, combining Byzantine inspiration with Western influences. During the 16th century, many sketches by Tintoretto, Titian, Veronese, and other leading artists were reproduced in mosaic.

Among the most dazzling mosaics – many of which have been heavily restored – are those in the 13th-century central Ascension Dome and the 12th-century Pentecost Dome over the nave.

PALA D'ORO

Beyond the Cappella di San Clemente lies the entrance to the most valuable treasure of San Marco: the Pala d'Oro. This jewel-spangled altarpiece, situated behind the high altar, consists of 250 enamel paintings on gold foil, enclosed within a gilded silver Gothic frame. Originally commissioned in Byzantium in AD 976, the altarpiece was further embellished over the centuries. Napoleon stole some of the precious stones in 1797, but the screen still gleams with pearls, rubies, sapphires and amethysts.

MUSEO MARCIANO

Steps from the atrium, signposted Loggia dei Cavalli, take you up to the church museum, where the gallery offers a splendid view into the basilica. The gilded bronze horses, housed in a room at the far end of the museum, were stolen from the top of the Hippodrome (ancient racecourse) in Constantinople (modern Istanbul) in 1204 but their origin, either Roman or Hellenistic, remains a mystery. Also on show are mosaics, medieval manuscripts, and antique tapestries.

BAPTISTRY AND CHAPELS

The baptistry (closed to the public) was added by Doge Andrea Dandolo (1343–54), who is buried here, with Sansovino, who designed the font. The adjoining Cappella Zen (also closed to the public) became a funeral chapel for Cardinal Zen in 1504 in return for a bequest to the State. The left transept of the Cappella dei Mascoli is decorated with scenes from the life of Mary, while the third chapel in the same transept houses the icon of the Madonna of Nicopeia. Looted in 1204, it was once carried into battle at the head of the Byzantine army.

Palazzo Ducale <sup>19</sup>

Mars by Sansovino

The Palazzo Ducale (Doges' Palace) was the official residence of each Venetian ruler (doge) and was founded in the 9th century. The present palace owes its external appearance to the building work of the 14th and early 15th centuries. To create their airy Gothic masterwork, the Venetians broke with tradition by perching the bulk of the palace (built in pink Veronese marble) on top of an apparent fretwork of loggias and arcades (built from white Istrian stone).

A passage from the Porta del Frumento opens into the palace courtyard. The ticket office and palace entrance are to the left. At the top of Antonio Rizzo's 15th-century Giants' Staircase, the new doge would be crowned with the zoglia or ducal cap. The Scala d'Oro (golden staircase), designed by Jacopo Sansovino, leads to the palace's upper floors. It takes its name, however, from the elaborate gilt stucco vault created by Alessandro Vittoria (1554–8).

SALA DELLE QUATTRO PORTE TO THE SALA DEL SENATO

The second flight of the Scala d'Oro leads to the Sala delle Quattro Porte, with a ceiling designed by Palladio and frescoed by Tintoretto. The end walls of the next room, the Anticollégio, are decorated with mythological scenes by Tintoretto, while Veronese's masterly Rape of Europa (1580), opposite the window, is one of the palace's most dramatic works. The adjoining Sala del Collegio was where the doge and his counselors met to receive ambassadors and discuss matters of state. Embellishing the magnificent ceiling are 11 paintings by Veronese. In the next room, the Sala del Senato, the doge and some 200 senators discussed foreign affairs. The paintings are by Tintoretto and pupils.

SALA DEL CONSIGLIO DEI DIECI TO THE ARMERIA

The Sala del Consiglio dei Dieci was the meeting room of the powerful Council of Ten, founded in 1310 to protect state security. Two fine works by Veronese adorn the ceiling: Age and Youth and Juno Offering the Ducal Crown to Venice (both

The room's bocca di leone (lion's mouth), was used to post secret denunciations and was just one of several in the palace. The wooden door here leads to the State Inquisitors' Room and thence to the torture chamber and prisons. The Armory – one of the finest such collections anywhere in Europe – occupies the following rooms.

SALA DEL MAGGIOR CONSIGLIO

The Scala dei Censori leads to the third floor and past the Sala del Guariento and Antonio Rizzo's statues of Adam and Eve (1480s) to the magnificent Sala del Maggior Consiglio. A vast chamber, it was used as a meeting place for the Great Council and for grand state banquets. By the mid-16th century the Great Council had around 2,000 members. Any male Venetian of high birth over 25 was entitled to a seat unless he married a commoner.

Tintoretto's huge Paradise (1587–90) occupies the eastern wall. Measuring 25 by 81 ft (7.45 by 24.65 m), it is one of the largest paintings in the world. The itinerary then continues in more somber vein, crossing the Bridge of Sighs to enter the dank world of the prisons.

From the top of St. Mark's campanile, high above the piazza, visitors can enjoy views of the city, the lagoon, and, visibility permitting, the Alps. It was from here that Galileo demonstrated his telescope to Doge Leonardo Donà in 1609. To do so he would have climbed the internal ramp. Access today is via an elevator.

The first tower, completed in 1173, was built as a lighthouse to assist navigators in the lagoon. It took on a less benevolent role in the Middle Ages, when offenders were imprisoned – and in some cases left to die – in a cage hung near its summit. With the exception of several 16th-century renovations, the tower survived unharmed until July 1902 when, with little warning, it collapsed. The only casualties were the Loggetta at the foot of the tower and the custodian's cat. Donations flooded in, and in 1903 the foundation stone was laid for a new campanile “dov'era e com'era” (“where it was and as it was”). The new tower was finally opened on April 25 (the Feast of St. Mark), 1912. Due to small structural shifts, work has begun to reinforce the foundations and should be completed by 2012.

Teodoro Correr bequeathed his extensive collection of works of art to Venice in 1830, thus forming the core of the city's fine civic museum.

Its first rooms form a suitably Neo-Classical backdrop for early statues by Antonio Canova (1757–1822). The rest of the floor covers the history of the Venetian Republic, with maps, coins, armor, and a host of doge-related exhibits. The third floor contains a picture collection second only to that of the Accademia.

The paintings, hung chronologically, trace the evolution of Venetian painting, and show the influence that Ferrarese, Paduan, and Flemish artists had on the Venetian school.

The gallery's most famous works are by Carpaccio: Portrait of a Young Man in a Red Hat (c.1490) and Two Venetian Ladies (c.1507). The latter is traditionally, but probably incorrectly, known as The Courtesans because of the ladies' low-cut dresses. The Museo del Risorgimento on the same floor looks at the history of Venice until unification with Italy in 1866.

Campo Santo Stefano. Map 6 F2. Tel 041 275 04 62.  Accademia or Sant'Angelo.  10am–5pm Mon–Sat.  Jan 1, Dec 25.

Decossecrated six times on account of the blood spilled within its walls, Santo Stefano – one of Venice's most beautiful churches – is now remarkably serene. Built in the 14th century, and altered in the 15th, the church has a carved portal by Bartolomeo Bon, and a campanile with a typical Venetian tilt. The interior has a splendid ship's keel ceiling, carved tie-beams, and a sacristy crammed with valuable paintings.

Santi Giovanni e Paolo 24

Known more colloquially as San Zanipolo, Santi Giovanni e Paolo vies with the Frari (see pp98–9) as the city's greatest Gothic church. Built by the Dominicans in the 14th century, it is striking for its vast scale and architectural austerity. Known as the Pantheon of Venice, it houses monuments to no fewer than 25 doges. Among these are several fine works of art, executed by the Lombardi family and other leading sculptors.

The Nave

The cross-vaulted interior is tied by wooden beams and supported by stone columns.

The bronze statue is a monument to Doge Sebastiano Venier, who was Commander of the Fleet at Lepanto.

★ Tomb of Nicolò Marcello

This magnificent Renaissance monument to Doge Nicolò Marcello (died 1474) was sculpted by Pietro Lombardo.

The doorway, which is decorated with Byzantine reliefs and carvings by Bartolomeo Bon, is one of Venice's earliest Renaissance architectural works.

★ Tomb of Pietro Mocenigo

Pietro Lombardo's superb tomb (1481) commemorates the doge's military pursuits when he was Grand Captain of the Venetian forces.

★ Polyptych by Bellini

Statue of Colleoni 25

Bartolomeo Colleoni, the famous condottiere, or commander of mercenaries, left his fortune to the Republic on condition that his statue was placed in front of San Marco. A prominent statue in the piazza would have broken with precedent, so the Senate cunningly had Colleoni raised before the Scuola di San Marco instead of the basilica. A touchstone of early Renaissance sculpture, the equestrian statue of the proud warrior (1481–8) is by the Florentine Andrea Verrocchio, but was cast in bronze after his death by Alessandro Leopardi. The statue has a strong sense of power and movement which arguably ranks it alongside the works of Donatello.

Palma il Vecchio's St Barbara (c.1510) in Santa Maria Formosa blend of Flamboyant Gothic and Classical Renaissance styles. Founded in the 9th century, its facade was later rebuilt by Antonio Gambello in Gothic style. When Gambello died in 1481, Mauro Coducci completed the upper section, adding many of its Renaissance panels.

The interior's artistic highlight is Giovanni Bellini's serene and sumptuously colored Madonna and Child with Saints (1505) in the north aisle. A door off the right nave leads to the Chapel of St. Athanasius, which in turn leads to the Chapel of San Tarasio. The chapel contains vault frescoes (1442) by Andrea del Castagno, and polyptychs (1443–4) by Antonio Vivarini and Giovanni d'Alemagna.

Designed in 1492 by Mauro Coducci, this church is most unusual in having two principal facades – one overlooks the campo, the other the canal. The bell tower, or campanile, added in 1688, is noted for the grotesque face at its base. Two paintings stand out in the interior: a triptych (1473) by Bartolomeo Vivarini and Palma il Vecchio's St. Barbara (c.1510).

Within this small gem are some of the finest paintings of Vittore Carpaccio. They were commissioned by the Schiavoni, or Dalmatian Slav community in Venice.

The Scuola was established in 1451 and rebuilt in 1551. It has changed very little since. The exquisite frieze, executed between 1502 and 1508, shows scenes from the lives of patron saints: St. George, St. Tryphone, and St. Jerome. Each episode of the narrative cycle is remarkable for its vivid coloring, minute detail, and historic record of Venetian life. Outstanding among them are St. George Slaying the Dragon and St. Jerome Leading the Tamed Lion to the Monastery.

Campo Bandiera e Moro. Map 8 E2. Tel 041 520 59 06. M Arsenale. ☐ 9am–noon Mon–Sat. **🎨

The existing church is essentially Gothic (1475–9) and the interior contains major works of art that demonstrate the transition from Gothic to early Renaissance. Bartolomeo Vivarini's altarpiece Madonna and Child with Saints (1478) is unmistakably Gothic. Contrasting with this is Cima da Conegliano's large-scale Baptism of Christ (1492–5), which adorns the main altar.

18th-century engraving of the Arsenale

The Arsenale was founded in the 12th century and by the 16th had become the greatest naval shipyard in the world, capable of constructing a whole galley in 24 hours, using an assembly-line system. Surrounded by crenellated walls, it was like a city within a city. Today the site is largely disused. Its impressive 15th-century gateway, twin towers and guardian lions can be viewed from the campo or bridge outside. The gateway was built by Antonio Gambello and is often cited as Venice's first Renaissance construction.

Around the corner, in Campo San Biagio, the Museo Storico Navale charts Venetian naval history from the heyday of the Arsenale to the present. Exhibits include friezes from famous galleys of the past and a replica of the Bucintoro, the doge's ceremonial barge.

Appearing like a stage set across the water from the Piazzetta is the little island of

St. George Slaying the Dragon (1502–8) by Carpaccio, in the Scuola di San Giorgio degli Schiavoni

San Giorgio Maggiore. The church and monastery, constructed between 1559–80, are among Andrea Palladio's greatest architectural achievements. The church's temple front and the spacious interior with its perfect proportions and cool beauty are typically Palladian (see pp80–81). These qualities are echoed by the church of Il Redentore on the nearby island of Giudecca, built by Palladio in 1577–92.

On the chancel walls of San Giorgio Maggiore, are two fine paintings by Tintoretto: The Last Supper and Gathering of the Manna (both 1594). In the Chapel of the Dead is his last work, The Deposition (1592–4), finished by his son Domenico.

The top of the campanile affords superb views of the city and lagoon. You can see the monastery cloisters below, now part of the Fondazione Cini, a cultural center that is used to host international exhibitions.

Murano 32

LN, 41 and 42 from Fondamenta Nuove; DM from Ferrovia and Piazzale Roma.

Much like Venice, Murano comprises a cluster of small islands, connected by bridges. It has been the center of the glassmaking industry since 1291, when the furnaces were moved here from the city because of the risk of fire and the disagreeable effects of smoke. Some of the houses on the water date from this period.

In the 15th and 16th centuries Murano was the principal glass-producing center in Europe and today, most tourists visit for glass alone. The Museo Vetrario in the Palazzo Giustinian houses a fine collection of antique pieces. The prize exhibit is the dark blue Barovier wedding cup (1470–80), with enamel work by Angelo Barovier.

With its lovely colonnaded apse, this basilica is the architectural highlight of the island. Despite some heavy-handed restoration undertaken in the 19th century, this 12th-century church still retains much of its original beauty. Visitors should note the Gothic ship's keel roof, the apse with its mosaic Madonna, and the beautiful medieval mosaic floor, which dates from 1140.

Burano 33

Burano is the most colorful of the lagoon islands and can be distinguished from a distance by the tilting tower of its church. In contrast with the haunting Torcello, the island is densely populated, its waterways fringed with brightly painted houses.

The main thoroughfare is Via Baldassare Galuppi, named after the Burano-born composer. It features traditional lace and linen stalls and open-air trattorias serving fresh fish.

The people of Burano are fishermen and lace-makers by tradition. You can still see fishermen scraping their boats or mending nets, but today lacemakers are rare. In the 16th century the local lace was the most sought-after in Europe – it was so delicate it became known as punto in aria ("points in the air"). After a slump in the 18th century, the industry revived and a lace-making school was set up here in 1872. Authentic Burano lace is hard to find, but you can watch it being made at the school, now a museum, which also displays fine examples of antique lace.

Torcello 34

Established between the 5th and 6th centuries, the island of Torcello boasts the oldest building in the lagoon – the cathedral of Santa Maria dell'Assunta. Founded in AD 639, it contains some splendid ancient mosaics. The adjoining church of Santa Fosca, of pure Byzantine design, is another mark of Torcello's former glory – before being eclipsed by Venice it had a population of 20,000.

The present basilica dates from 1008, but includes earlier features. The pulpit contains 7th-century fragments.

Shopping in Venice

The attractive shop windows that line the narrow streets of Venice are an irresistible attraction for any visitor. Myriad fashion brands are available in gleaming ultramodern stores, but the city also has a strong artisan tradition. Expert craftspeople in tiny workshops open to the public create delightful and highly original objects in glass, wood, leather, and papier-mâché. Skilled hands transform colored glass rods into playful miniature animals and exquisite flowers, while plaster molds turn out shapes destined to become ornate masks. Interior-design establishments also abound, and sleek kitchenware and fabrics make unusual purchases. Beautiful boutiques offering antique furniture and accessories are concentrated in the city center.

WHERE TO SHOP

The glittering Mercerie, which runs from Piazza San Marco to the Rialto, has been Venice's main shopping street since the Middle Ages and, along with the fashion avenue Calle Larga XXII Marzo, is still a draw for the crowds. The zig-zagging Frezzeria is full of unusual shops, while across the Grand Canal, the narrow streets from the Rialto southwest toward Campo San Polo are lined with a variety of less expensive stores. The bustling Lista di Spagna, near the station, and the Strada Nova toward the Rialto cater for the everyday needs of the locals.

The islands of Murano and Burano are the places to buy traditional glass and lace.

FOOD AND MARKETS

One of the delights of Venice is exploring the city's food markets and shops. Fruit and vegetable stalls sprawl to the west of the Rialto Bridge and along the Grand Canal. The Pescheria, or fish market, occupies the farthest section. The neighboring streets are full of gourmet food shops. Wine, olive oil, vinegar, and grappa in decorative bottles, as well as dried pasta in many shapes, colors, and flavors are all good purchases.

Aliani's cheese shop offers a mouthwatering selection of picnic fare, while Drogheria Mascari has a fine range of dried fruit, coffee, and alcohol. Rizzo, on the other side of the bridge, is a master pastemaker.

GLASS

The island of Murano is a good place to watch expert glassblowing. However, for contemporary glass creations head back to Venice, around San Marco – try Venini's showroom for stunning platters and huge vases, and L'Isola for Carlo Moretti's tumblers in rich colors.

The art of beadmaking is alive and flourishing thanks to sisters Marina e Susanna Sent's simple, irresistible necklaces. At Antichità Claudia Zaggia, customers can sort through an astonishing range of beautiful antique beads and create their own necklaces.

CLOTHING AND ACCESSORIES

Promod, near San Marco, has reasonably priced fun gear for the young set. Nearby is Benetton's megastore, with its trademark bright clothes, while, opposite, Max Mara has superlative womenswear. Other leading names in fashion – Armani, Roberto Cavalli, Missoni and Gucci – also have stylish shops around Piazza San Marco.

Just off San Lio, Giovanna Zanella can be found at her cobbler's bench crafting zany shoes and sandals. Her amazing range even includes gondola decorations.

MASKS AND COSTUMES

Mass-produced Carnival masks can be found all over the city, but a genuine one makes for a wonderful souvenir. With its striking designs, Papier Mâché has revived traditional maskmaking. Near Campo San Polo, Tragicomica sells masks and costumes, as well as Commedia dell'Arte figures. You will also find these at Leon d'Oro, where they make string puppets too. At the end of Calle Larga XXII Marzo is La Ricerca, a showcase for the De Marchi brothers' remarkable leather masks. Dorsoduro also has several outstanding workshops: Mondonovo, just off Campo Santa Margherita, has a marvelous selection of masks, some of which featured in the Kubrick film Eyes Wide Shut.

JEWELRY

Nardi, located in the arcades of Piazza San Marco, crafts an exquisite brooch with a moor's head, among other things. A short distance away are the sparkling premises of Bulgari, while Cartier, with its beautiful collection of watches, can be found along the nearby Mercerie. Shops on the Rialto Bridge sell cheaper designs; this is a good place to find bracelets and chains, the prices of which are determined by the weight of the gold. Under the bridge, under the arcades of the ancient goldsmiths' district, is Attombri, two brothers who create unusual jewelry from antique Murano glass beads.

FABRICS AND INTERIOR DESIGN

Venice is famed for fine silks and velvets and sumptuous brocades, many of which are still sold at Trois, close to the Gritti Palace hotel. On the Grand Canal, at Sant'Angelo, Rubelli is fabric heaven, with a wide range of designs and rich upholstery. More down-to-earth but good-quality household linen and brilliantly colored bath accessories are sold at TSL, which has several stores around town.

For original kitchen items, the choice at Epicentro is hard to beat; or head to Marchiol, hidden away in a Castello backstreet, for modern light fittings and lamps.

BOOKS AND GIFTS

At the Giardinetti Reali, on the San Marco waterfront, the Venice Pavilion Bookshop annexe of the Tourist Board has an exhaustive collection of books dealing with many aspects of the city. The Libreria Mondadori bookstore offers a decent English-language section, while Mare di Carta offers nautical books and magazines.

Alberto Vales-Ebru uses a distinctive marbling technique on fabrics as well as paper. Nearby, Paolo Olbi has a wide range of papers and artistic books for sale.

On the opposite side of the Grand Canal, at San Tomà, Daniela Porto has lovely old printed maps and frames, perfect as gifts, and Signor Blum on Campo San Barnaba has charming handmade carved and painted wooden objects and toys.

VENICE STREET FINDER

All the map references given for sights, hotels, and restaurants in Venice refer to this section of the book. The key map below shows which areas of the city are covered by the Street Finder. The first figure of the map reference indicates which map to turn to, and the letter and number which follow are for the grid reference. Standard Italian spelling has been used on all the maps in this book, but when exploring Venice you will find that the names on many street signs are written in Venetian dialect.

Mostly this means only a slight variation in spelling (as in the word Sotoportico/Sotoportego below), but some names look totally different. For example, the church of Santi Giovanni e Paolo (see map 3), is frequently signposted as "San Zanipolo." A further map showing the vaporetto routes follows the street maps.

RECOGNIZING STREET NAMES

The signs for street (calle), canal (rio), and square (campo) will soon become familiar, but the Venetians have a colorful vocabulary for the maze of alleys that makes up the city. When exploring, the following may help.

FONDAENTA S.SEVERO

Fondamenta is a street that runs alongside a canal, often named after the canal it follows.

RIO TERRA GESUATI

Rio Terrà is a filled-in canal. Similar to a rio terrà is a piscina, which often forms a square.

SOTOPORTEGO E PONTE SCRISTOFORO

Sotoportico or Sotoportego means a covered passageway.

SALIZADA PIO X

Salizzata is a main street (formerly a paved street).

RIVA DEI PARTIGIANI

Riva is a wide fondamenta, often facing the lagoon.

RUGAGIUFFA

Ruga is a street lined with shops.

CORTE DEI DO POZZI

Corte means a courtyard.

RIO MENUO O DE LA VERONA

Many streets and canals in Venice often have more than one name: o means "or."

Venice Vaporetto Routes

The Vaporetto Routes

The ACTV network runs regular services around the city and out to most of the islands. Some services are circular; others extend their routes during the high season. There are also additional lines during the summer months. More details of the different types of vaporetti and how to use them are given on pages 682–3.

THE VENETO AND FRIULI

The Veneto is a region of tremendous contrasts, encompassing the breathtaking natural beauty of the Dolomites, Lake Garda (Italy's largest lake), and the rolling Euganean Hills, and the man-made delights of magnificent ancient cities such as Verona, Vicenza, and Padua. Neighboring Friuli-Venezia Giulia lines the border with Slovenia to the east, taking in the Carnic Hills in the north, the Roman town of Aquileia, and the bustling Adriatic port of Trieste.

The Romans built frontier posts on this fertile land of silt deposits, and these survive today as the cities of Vicenza, Padua, Verona, and Treviso. Strategically placed at the hub of the empire's road network, the cities prospered under Roman rule, but suffered in the wave of Germanic invasions of the 5th century AD.

The region's fortunes revived under the benign rule of the Venetian empire. The medieval cities of the Veneto lay on important trade routes such as the Serenissima, the road connecting the flourishing port cities of Venice and Genoa, and the Brenner Pass, used by commercial travelers crossing the Alps from northern Europe.

Wealth from agriculture, commerce, and the spoils of war paid for the beautification of these cities through the building of Renaissance palaces and public buildings, many designed by the Veneto's great architect, Andrea Palladio. His palazzi and villas are telling symbols of the leisured existence once enjoyed by the area's aristocrats.

Today the Veneto is a thriving wine exporter, textile producer, and agricultural center, and Friuli is a focus for new technology, while remaining largely agricultural. Both regions are popular tourist destinations, despite lying a little in the shadow of Venice, and boast an abundant and enchanting variety of attractions.

Exploring the Veneto and Friuli

The flat landscape of the Veneto plain is dramatically offset by the spectacular Dolomite mountains which form the northwestern border to the Veneto. Friuli, Italy's most northeasterly region, lies tucked up against Austria to the north and Slovenia to the east. Both the Veneto and Friuli are bordered to the south by the Adriatic, with its beaches and ports, which provide a contrast with the area's gently rolling countryside, the vast stretch of Lake Garda, and the many attractive resorts and ancient towns.

GETTING AROUND

An extensive rail network and good bus services make this region easy to explore by public transportation, though only buses operate around Lake Garda. Freeways and major roads provide good links between the main cities. The Venice Simplon-Orient-Express train, which operates from London to Venice, offers a novel approach to the area.

Verona 1

Scaligeri statue in Castelvecchio

Verona is a vibrant trading center, the second biggest city in the Veneto region (after Venice) and one of the most prosperous in northern Italy. Its ancient center boasts many magnificent Roman ruins, second only to those of Rome itself, and fine palazzi built of rosso di Verona, the local pink-tinged limestone, by the city's medieval rulers. Verona has two main focal points: the massive 1st-century AD Arena, which is still the setting for major events including a large opera festival, and Piazza Erbe with its colorful market. One of the main attractions, however, is the church of San Zeno Maggiore (see pp146–7), which boasts unusual medieval bronze door panels: they are carved with extraordinary scenes, some biblical, others on the life of San Zeno.

Verona's Rulers

In 1263 the Scaligeri began their 124-year rule of Verona. They used ruthless tactics in their rise to power, but once established, the Scaligeri family brought peace to the city. They proved to be relatively just and cultured rulers – the poet Dante was welcomed to their court in 1301, and dedicated the final part of his epic Divine Comedy to the ruling Cangrande I. Today their legacy remains in their ornate tombs and in Castelvecchio.

In 1387 Verona fell to the Visconti of Milan, and a succession of outsiders – Venice, France, and Austria – then ruled the city until the Veneto was united with Italy in 1866.

This impressive castle, built by Cangrande II between 1355 and 1375, houses one of the finest art galleries in the Veneto outside Venice. It is arranged to give striking views of the castle as well as the exhibits within.

painted with a portrait of Christ the Shepherd in gold, and the carved marble sarcophagus of Saints Sergius and Bacchus (1179).

The section on medieval and early Renaissance art vividly demonstrates the influence of northern art on local painters: the emphasis is on brutal realism as opposed to serene idealism. The late Renaissance works include a fine collection of 15th-century Madonnas.

Jewelry, suits of armor, swords and shield bosses, Veronese's Deposition (1565), and a portrait attributed to either Titian or Lorenzo Lotto are displayed in other sections.

A walkway offers views of the Adige River, the Ponte Scaligero, and the 14th-century equestrian statue of Cangrande I from his tomb (see p144).

Ponte Scaligero

This medieval bridge was built by Cangrande II between 1354 and 1376. Such is the Veronese affection for the bridge that it was rebuilt after the retreating Germans blew it up in 1945, an operation that involved dredging the river to salvage the masonry. The bridge leads from Castelvécchio to the Arsenal on the north bank, built by the Austrians between 1840 and 1861 and now fronted by public gardens.

The lower church, begun in 1065 by Benedictine monks on the site of an earlier sanctuary, has frescoes on the simple arcades. The more impressive upper church dates from 1313 and is covered with a splendid ship's keel roof. The interior also boasts much medieval fresco work including a 14th-century section by Stefano da Zevio depicting Musician Angels. Nearby is the Brenzoni mausoleum (c.1440) by Giovanni di Bartolo, and above it a 1426 fresco of the Annunciazione by Pisanello (1377-1455).

Exploring Verona

Since the days of the Roman Empire, Piazza Erbe – built on the site of the ancient Roman forum – has been the center of Verona. Many of the city's fine palazzi, churches, and monuments are nearly as ancient, several dating from the medieval period.

The fountain, erected in the 14th century at the center of Piazza Erbe

🏛️ Piazza Erbe

Piazza Erbe is named after the city's old herb market. Today's stalls, shaded by umbrellas, sell everything from herb-flavored roast suckling pig in bread rolls to succulent fresh-picked fruit and delicious wild mushrooms.

At the northern end of the square is the Baroque Palazzo Maffei (1668), surmounted by statues. In front of it rises a column supporting the Venetian lion marking Verona's absorption into the Venetian empire (1405). On the west side is the Casa dei Mercanti, a largely 17th-century building that dates originally from 1301. Opposite, wall frescoes are still visible above the cafés.

The fountain in the middle of the piazza is often overshadowed by the market stalls, though the statue at its center dates from Roman times. It serves as a reminder that this piazza has been used as a marketplace for 2,000 years.

🏛️ Piazza dei Signori

Torre dei Lamberti

Tel 045 927 30 27. ☐ 8:30am–7:30pm daily (Mar–Oct to 8:30pm). 📷

In the center of the square is a 19th-century statue of Dante, whose gaze seems fixed on the forbidding Palazzo del Capitano, once the home of Verona's military commanders. Beside it is the equally intimi-dating Palazzo della Ragione, the Palace of Reason, or law court; both were built in the 14th century. The courtyard of the law court has a handsome external stone staircase, added in 1446–50. Stunning views of the Alps can be enjoyed from atop the 275-ft (84-m) Torre dei Lamberti, which rises from the western side of the courtyard.

Behind the statue of Dante is the Loggia del Consiglio (1493), the council chamber. The building is topped by statues of Roman worthies born in Verona: they include Pliny the Elder, the natural historian, and Vitruvius, the architectural theorist.

The square is linked to Piazza Erbe by the Arco della Costa, or the Arch of the Rib, named after the whale rib long ago hung beneath it.

The frescoed Renaissance facade of the Loggia del Consiglio on Piazza dei Signori

🏛️ Tombs of the Scaligeri

Via Arche Scaligeri.

Beside the entrance to the tiny Romanesque church of Santa Maria Antica, once the parish church of the powerful Scaligeri family, lie a profusion of bizarre tombs of the one-time rulers of Verona.

Over the entrance to the church is the impressive tomb of Cangrande I (died 1329), surmounted by an equestrian statue of the ruler, a copy of the original which is now in Castelvécchio (see p143).

The other Scaligeri tombs are next to the church, behind a wrought-iron fence which incorporates the ladder emblem of the family's original name (della Scala, meaning "of the steps").

Towering above the fence are the tombs of Mastino II (died 1351) and Cansignorio (died 1375), splendidly decorated with a profusion of tiny Gothic spires. Other members of the Scaligeri family lie within a series of plainer tombs which stand nearer the church wall.

🏛️ Sant'Anastasia

Piazza Sant'Anastasia. Tel 045 59 28 13. ☐ daily. 📷 Nov–Feb: Mon. 📷

The huge and lofty church of Sant'Anastasia was begun in 1290. Faded 15th-century frescoes and carved scenes from the life of St. Peter Martyr adorn its Gothic portal.

Inside, there are two holy-water stoups, supported on figures of beggars, known as i gobbi (the hunchbacks). These figures were carved a century apart: the earlier one (on the left) dates from 1495.

The sacristy, off the north aisle, is home to a fine (but damaged) fresco by Pisanello: St. George and the Princess (1433–8).

The so-called Casa di Giulietta

ROMEO AND JULIET

The tragic story of Romeo and Juliet, two young lovers from rival families, was written by Luigi da Porto of Vicenza in the 1520s and has inspired countless dramas, movies, and ballets.

At the Casa di Giulietta (Juliet's house), No. 23 Via Cappello, Romeo is said to have climbed to Juliet's balcony; in reality this is a restored 13th-century inn. Crowds throng to see the simple facade, and stand on the small marble balcony. The run-down Casa di Romeo is a few streets away, in Via Arche Scaligeri.

The so-called Tomba di Giulietta is displayed in a crypt below the cloister of San Francesco al Corso on Via del Pontiere. The stone sarcophagus lies in an extremely atmospheric setting.

Both the Casa and the Tomba di Giulietta are open daily (on Mondays in the afternoon only). There is an admission charge.

Duomo

Piazza Duomo. Tel 045 59 56 27.  daily.  Nov–Feb: Mon.   Verona's cathedral was begun in 1139 and is fronted by a magnificent Romanesque portal carved by Nicolò, one of the two master masons responsible for the facade of San Zeno (see pp146–7). Here he sculpted the swordbearing figures of Oliver and Roland, two of Charlemagne's knights, whose exploits were much celebrated in medieval poetry. Alongside them stand evangelists and saints with wide eyes and flowing beards. To the south there is a second Romanesque portal carved with Jonah and the Whale and with comically grotesque caryatids.

The highlight of the interior is Titian's lovely Assumption (1535–40), and outside there is a Romanesque cloister in which the excavated ruins of earlier churches are visible. The 8th-century baptistry, or San Giovanni in Fonte (St. John of the Spring), was built from Roman masonry; the marble font was carved in 1200.

Teatro Romano

Museo Archeologico

Regaste Redentore 2. Tel 045 800 03 60.  1:30–7:30pm Mon (all day if pub hol); 8:30am–7:30pm Tue–Sun. The theater closes early in the afternoon on performance days.

 Jan 1, Dec 25 & 26.

This Roman theater was built in the 1st century BC; little survives of the stage area, but the semicircular seating area is largely intact. It offers great views over Verona: in the foreground is the only one of three Roman bridges to have survived, though it was rebuilt after World War II.

A lift carries visitors from the Teatro Romano up the cliffs to the monastery above, now an interesting archaeological museum. The exhibits around the tiny cloister and in the old monks' cells include mosaics, pottery, and glass. There is also a fine bronze bust of the first Roman emperor, Augustus (63 BC–AD 14), who in 31 BC overcame his opponents, including Mark Antony and Cleopatra, to become the sole ruler of the Roman world.

Statuary and formal hedges in the Renaissance Giardino Giusti

Giardino Giusti

Via Giardino Giusti 2. Tel 045 803 40 29.  9am–8pm daily (Oct–Mar: to sunset).  Dec 25.

This fine Renaissance garden was laid out in 1580. As with other gardens of the period, there is a deliberate juxtaposition of nature and artifice: the formal lower garden of clipped box hedges, gravel walks, and potted plants contrasts with wilder, natural woods above.

John Evelyn, the English author and diarist who visited Verona in 1661, thought this the finest garden in Europe.

San Giorgio in Braida

Lungadige San Giorgio. Tel 045 834 02 32.  daily.  during mass.

This lovely domed Renaissance church was begun in about 1530 by Michele Sanmicheli. The altar includes the famous Martyrdom of St. George (1566) by Veronese, and above the west door is the Baptism of Christ, usually attributed to Tintoretto (1518–94).

The imposing facade of Verona's Duomo, Santa Maria Matricolare

Verona: San Zeno Maggiore

Detail from San Zeno's facade

San Zeno, built in 1120–38 to house the shrine of Verona's patron saint, is the most ornate Romanesque church in northern Italy. The facade is adorned with an impressive rose window, marble reliefs, and a graceful porch canopy.

The highlight, however, is the fascinating 11th- and 12th-century bronze door panels. A squat tower just north of San Zeno is said to cover the tomb of King Pepin of Italy (777–810).

Nave Ceiling

The nave has a magnificent example of a ship's keel ceiling, so called because it resembles the inside of an upturned boat. This ceiling was constructed in 1386 when the apse was rebuilt.

The bell tower, started in 1045, reached its present height of 236 ft (72 m) in 1173.

Altarpiece by Mantegna

★ Cloister (1293–1313)

Former washroom

Crypt

The vaulted crypt contains the tomb of San Zeno, appointed eighth bishop of Verona in AD 362, who died in AD 380.

Nave and Main Altar

The plan of the church is modeled on an ancient Roman basilica, or hall of justice. The main altar is situated in the raised sanctuary where the judge's throne would have stood.

Striped brickwork is typical of Romanesque buildings in Verona. Courses of local pink brick are alternated with ivory-colored tufa.

The rose window, dating from the early 12th century, symbolizes the Wheel of Fortune: figures on the rim show the rise and fall of human luck.

Marble side panels, which were carved in 1140, depict events from the life of Christ (to the left of the doors) and scenes from the Book of Genesis (to the right).

BRONZE DOOR PANELS

The 48 bronze panels of the west doors are primitive but forceful in their depiction of biblical stories and scenes from the life of San Zeno. Those on the left date from 1030 and survive from an earlier church on the site; those on the right were made after the earthquake in 1137. The panels are the work of three separate craftsmen, and are linked with masks. Huge staring eyes and Ottoman-style hats, armor, and architecture feature prominently. Among the scenes, some of which are unclear, are Adam and Eve, Salome dancing for the head of John the Baptist, and a startling Descent into Limbo.

The Romanesque porch is one of the finest examples of the style in northern Italy. Since 1138 it has shielded biblical bas-reliefs, above the west doors, from the elements.

★ West Doors

Each of the wooden doors has 24 bronze plates nailed on to make the doors look like solid metal. A multicolored bas-relief above them depicts San Zeno, flanked by the people of Verona, vanquishing the devil.

Lake Garda ②

Garda, the largest and easternmost of the Italian lakes, borders three regions: Trentino to the north, Lombardy to the west and south, and the Veneto to the south and east. The low-lying countryside around the southern stretches becomes increasingly dramatic further north, until impressive rocky cliffs, sometimes swathed in pines, hug the shoreline of the northern tip. The numerous sporting facilities, many sights, and splendid scenery of snowcapped mountains help make the lake a favorite summer playground.

Eastern tip of Sirmione Peninsula

Gardone is noted for its exotically planted park and for Il Vittoriale, the Art Deco villa of the poet Gabriele d'Annunzio, which is filled with curiosities.

The Republic of Salò was established here by Mussolini in 1943. The cathedral in this elegant town of pastel-painted houses contains a 14th-century altarpiece by Veneziano.

Largo Corona d'Italia 35 (0424 52 43 51). Thu & Sat am.

This peaceful town lies at the foot of Monte Grappa. The Brenta River is straddled by the graceful Ponte degli Alpini, which was designed in 1569 by Palladio. It is built of timber to allow it to flex when hit by the spring meltwaters. Bassano is well known for its majolica products (decorated and glazed earthenware), some of which are on display in the Palazzo Sturm. The town is also synonymous with the popular Italian after-dinner drink, the clear spirit known as grappa. It is produced from the lees (graspa) left over from wine production; information about the process is given in the Museo degli Alpini.

Asolo 4

Treviso. 2,000. Piazza Garibaldi 73 (0423 52 90 46). Sat. www.asolo.it

Asolo is beautifully sited among the cypress-clad foothills of the Dolomites. This tiny walled town was once ruled by Queen Caterina Cornaro (1454–1510), the Venetian wife of the King of Cyprus, who poisoned her husband so that Venice would gain Cyprus. Cardinal Pietro Bembo, a poet, coined the verb asolare to describe the bittersweet life of enforced idleness she endured in exile here. Among others who fell in love with the narrow streets and grand houses was poet Robert Browning, who named a volume of poems Asolanda (1889) after Asolo.

Environs: At Masèr, 6 miles (10 km) east of the town, stands the magnificent Villa Barbaro (see pp80–81). It was designed by Palladio in about 1555, in conjunction with the artist Veronese, and perfectly blends symmetry and light, airy rooms with sumptuous trompe l'oeil frescoes.

Fortified in 1199 by rulers of Treviso as a defense against the neighboring Paduans, the historic core of this town lies within well-preserved walls. In the Casa di Giorgione, said to be the birthplace of the painter Giorgione (1478–1511), about whom little is known, there is a museum devoted to his life. Giorgione innovatively used landscape to create mood, adding figures to intensify the atmosphere – for instance in his broodingly mysterious but evocative most famous work, The Tempest (see p106). Another of his few directly attributable works hangs here in the Duomo: the Maddonna and Child with Saints Liberal and Francis (1504).

Environs: About 5 miles (8 km) northeast of the town, at the village of Fanzolo, lies the Villa Emo (c.1555). Designed by Palladio, it is a typical example of his work: a cube flanked by two symmetrical wings. Inside there are lavish frescoes by Zelotti.

Contrà Porti

Vicenza is known as the adoptive city of Andrea Palladio (1508–80), who started out as a stonemason and became the most influential architect of his time. The evolution of his distinctive style is visible all around the city. In the center is the monumental basilica he adapted to serve as the town hall, nearby is the Teatro Olimpico, and all around are the palaces he built for Vicenza's wealthy citizens.

Palazzo Valmarana Braga

Palladio's impressive building of 1566 is decorated with giant pilasters and sculpted scenes. It was not completed until 1680, 100 years after the architect's death.

This square at the heart of Vicenza is dominated by the Palazzo della Ragione, often referred to as the Basilica. Its green, copper-clad roof is shaped like an upturned boat with a balustrade bristling with the statues of Greek and Roman gods. The colonnades were designed by Palladio in 1549 as a facing to support the city's 15th-century town hall, which had begun to subside. This was Palladio's first public commission, and a great success. Beside it stands the 12th-century Torre di Piazza.

The Loggia del Capitaniato, to the northwest, was built by Palladio in 1571: the Loggia's upper rooms contain the city's council chamber.

☞ Contrà Porti

Contrà (an abbreviation of contrada, or district) is the Vicenza dialect word for street. On one side of the Contrà is a series of pretty Gothic buildings with painted windows and ornate balconies, reminiscent of Venice and a reminder that Vicenza was once part of the Venetian empire.

Several elegant Palladian palazzi stand on this street. Palazzo Porto Barbarano (No. 11), Palazzo Thiene (No. 12), and Palazzo Iseppo da Porto (No. 21) illustrate the sheer variety of Palladio's style – all share Classical elements but each is unique. An intriguing detail is that Palazzo Thiene appears to be of stone, though it is in fact built of cheap, lightweight brick, cleverly rendered to look like masonry.

Europe's oldest surviving indoor theater is a remarkable structure, largely made of wood and plaster, and painted to look like marble. Palladio began work on the design in 1579, but he died the year after. His pupil Vincenzo Scamozzi took over the project, completing the theater in time for its opening performance of Sophocles' tragic drama Oedipus Rex on March 3, 1585.

The Anteodeon contains frescoes depicting the theatre's opening performance, and oil lamps from the original stage set.

Street by Street: Padua 7

Padua (Padova) is an old university town with an illustrious academic history. Rich in art and architecture, it has two particularly outstanding sights. The magnificent Cappella degli Scrovegni (see pp156–7), north of the city center, is famous for Giotto's lyrical frescoes.

Close to the railroad station, it forms part of the complex incorporating the Eremitani church and museums. The basilica di Sant'Antonio, which forms the focal point in the southern part of the city, is one of the most popular pilgrimage destinations in Italy.

Padua: Cappella degli Scrovegni

Enrico Scrovegni built this chapel in 1303, hoping thereby to spare his dead father, a usurer, from the eternal damnation in hell described by the poet Dante in his Inferno. The interior of the chapel is entirely covered with beautiful frescoes of scenes from the life of Christ, painted by Giotto between 1303 and 1305. As works of great narrative force, they exerted a powerful influence on the development of European art.

GIOTTO

The Florentine artist Giotto (1266–1337) is regarded as the father of the Renaissance, the great revival in the Classical traditions of Western art. His work, with its sense of pictorial space, naturalism, and narrative drama, marks a decisive break with the Byzantine tradition of the preceding 1,000 years. Although he was regarded in his lifetime as a great artist, few of the works attributed to him are fully documented. Some may have been painted by others, but his authorship of the frescoes in the Scrovegni Chapel need not be doubted.

Exploring Padua

Padua is a city of many attractions, with a rich history: this is reflected in the major museum complex which occupies a group of 14th-century monastic buildings attached to the church of the Eremitani, a reclusive Augustinian order. Next door is the Cappella degli Scrovegni (see pp156–7).

Padua is, in addition, the setting for one of Italy's most important churches – the splendid basilica di Sant'Antonio – and for one of the earliest universities to be founded in Italy.

The Eremitani church, built from 1276 to 1306, contains magnificent roof and wall tombs. Among them is that of Marco Benavides (1489–1582), a professor of law at the city university, whose Renaissance tomb was the work of Florentine architect Ammannati (1511–92).

Celebrated frescoes (1454–7) by Mantegna, portraying scenes from the lives of St. James and St. Christopher, were destroyed during a bombing raid in 1944.

Two scenes from this magnificent series survive in the Cappella Ovetari, south of the sanctuary: The Martyrdom of St. James and The Martyrdom of St. Christopher

The Museo Civico Eremitani comprises a coin collection

This exotic church, with its minaret-like spires and Byzantine domes, is also known as Il Santo. It was built from 1232 to house the remains of St. Anthony of Padua, a preacher who modeled himself on St. Francis of Assisi. Although he was a simple man who rejected worldly wealth, the citizens of Padua built one of the most lavish churches in Christendom to serve as his shrine.

The influence of Byzantine architecture is clearly visible in the basilica's outline: a cone-shaped central dome rises above seven encircling domes; the facade combines Gothic and Romanesque elements.

Inside, the high altar features Donatello's magnificent reliefs (1444–5) on the miracles of St. Anthony, and his statues of the Crucifixion, the Virgin, and Paduan saints. The tomb of St. Anthony, hung with offerings, lies in the north transept; large marble reliefs depicting the saint's life, carved in 1505–77 by various artists, adorn the walls around it. A lively fresco scene of the Crucifixion by Altichiero da Zevio (1380s) adorns the south transept.

🏛️ Statue of Gattamelata

Beside the entrance to the basilica stands one of the great works of the Renaissance: a statue of the mercenary soldier Gattamelata. This gritty portrait was created in 1443–52, in honor of a man who during his life did great service to the Venetian Republic. The artist Donatello won fame for the monument, the first equestrian statue made on such a large scale since Roman times.

Over the centuries, in order to prevent the Venetian lagoon silting up, the rivers flowing into it were diverted. The Brenta River was canalized in two sections: the older branch, between Padua and Fusina (just west of Venice), dates back to the 1500s and flows for 22 miles (36 km). Its potential as a transportation route was quickly realized and fine villas were built along its length. Many of these elegant buildings can still be admired today – the S11 road runs alongside most of the canal's length – and several of them are open to the public.

The 18th-century Villa Nazionale at Strà has an extravagant frescoed ceiling by Tiepolo. The Barchessa Valmarana at Mira (a pretty village) boasts 18th-century decorations. In the village of Malcontenta is Villa Foscari, or Villa Malcontenta, one of Palladio's loveliest villas (see pp80–81). It was built in 1560 and the interior decorated with magnificent frescoes by Zelotti. These villas may also be visited as part of an indulgent 8.5-hour guided tour from Padua, traveling to Venice (or, on alternate days, from Venice to Padua) along the river in a leisurely fashion aboard the Burchiello motor launch – the cost, however, is fairly prohibitive.

Despite comparisons with Venice, the lovely fortified city of Treviso has its own very distinctive character.

A good place to start a tour of the streets, some lined with attractive balconied houses, is Calmaggiore. The streetp links the Duomo with the Palazzo dei Trecento, the rebuilt 13th-century town hall. The Duomo was founded in the 1100s but rebuilt several times. Inside, Titian's Annunciation (1570) vies for attention with the striking Adoration of the Magi fresco (1520) by Titian's archrival, Il Pordenone. More paintings by Titian and other artists of the Renaissance may be seen in the Museo Civico.

The fish market, which dates from medieval times, is held on an island in the middle of Treviso's Sile River; this allows the remains of the day's trading to be flushed away.

The bulky Dominican church of San Nicolò, nestling by the 16th-century city wall, contains interesting tombs and frescoes, including, on a wall of the chapter house, the first-ever depiction of spectacles in art. A magnificent tomb (1500) by Antonio Rizzo is framed by a fresco of pageboys (c.1500) by Lorenzo Lotto.

Conegliano lies among Prosecco-producing vineyards, and winemakers from all over Italy learn their craft at Conegliano's renowned wine school. Via XX Settembre, the winding and arcaded main street, is lined with fine 15th- to 18th-century palazzi, many in the Venetian Gothic style or decorated with fading frescoes. The Duomo contains the town's one great work of art, an altarpiece painted by local artist Cima da Conegliano (1460–1518) depicting the Virgin and Child with Saints (1493).

Reproductions of Cima's most famous works are on show in the Casa di Cima, the artist's birthplace. The detailed landscapes in the background of his paintings were based on the hills around the town; the same views can still be seen from the gardens surrounding the Castelvecchio (old castle).

Belluno 12

Picturesque Belluno, capital of Belluno province, serves as a bridge between the two different parts of the Veneto, with the flat plains to the south and the Dolomite peaks to the north. Both are encapsulated in the views to be seen from the 12th-century Porta Rugo at the southern end of Via Mezzaterra, the main street of the old town. More spectacular still are the views from the bell tower of the 16th-century Duomo (subsequently rebuilt). The nearby baptistry houses a font cover with the figure of John the Baptist carved by Andrea Brustolon (1662–1732). Brustolon's works also grace the churches of San Pietro (on Via San Pietro) and Santo Stefano (Piazza Santo Stefano). North of Piazza del Duomo stands the city's most elegant building, the Palazzo dei Rettori (1491) – once home to the town's Venetian rulers – and the 12th-century Torre Civica, all that now survives of a medieval castle.

The Museo Civico contains paintings by Bartolomeo Montagna (1450–1523) and Sebastiano Ricci (1659–1734), and a notable archaeological section. North of the museum is Belluno's finest square, the Piazza del Mercato, with its arcaded Renaissance palaces and its fountain of 1410. South of the Belluno 6,800. Piazzetta San Francesco 8 (0436 32 31). am & Fri am. www.infodolomiti.it

Italy's top ski resort, much favored by the smart set from Turin and Milan, is well supplied with restaurants and bars. Cortina is set amid the extremely dramatic scenery of the Dolomites (see pp82–3), which explains part of the resort's attraction: all around, crags and spires thrust their distinctive weatherbeaten shapes above the trees.

Cortina benefits from better than average sports facilities, thanks to hosting the 1956 Winter Olympics. In addition to downhill and cross-country skiing, there is also a ski jump and a bobsleigh run for those who favor something more adventurous than usual, as well as an Olympic ice stadium, several swimming pools, tennis courts, and riding facilities.

During the summer months, Cortina becomes an excellent base for walkers. Useful information on trails and guided walks is available from the tourist office or, during the summer, from the Guides' office opposite.

Tolmezzo is the capital of the Carnia region, named after the Celtic tribe that inhabited the area around the 4th century BC. The town is surrounded by the high peaks of the Carnic Alps, including the pyramidal Monte Amariana (6,253 ft – 1,906 m) to the east. The best place to begin a tour of the region is the Museo delle Arti Popolari, which has displays of local costumes, crafts, textiles, and agriculture.

Southwest of the town, a scenic road climbs 8.5 miles (14 km) to the ski resort of Sella Chianzutan, a good base for walking in the summer. More resorts line the road, west of Tolmezzo, to Ampezzo, at which point a minor road heads north through the gorge of the Lumiei River. Following this road to the Ponte di Buso bridge and the Lago di Sauris is an excellent introduction to the majestic Carnic Alps.

Above this point the road is often impassable in winter, but in summer there are flower-filled meadows all along the road up to Sella di Razzo, and then back along the Pesarina Valley, via Comeglians and Ravascletto. Returning south, Zuglio was once the Roman town of Forum Iulii Carnicum, guarding the road over the pass. Today it is worth a detour for the remains of its Roman basilica, baths, and forum.

Old Pordenone consists of one long street, the Corso Vittorio Emanuele, lined with pretty arcaded houses of pink brick, some with the faded traces of decorative frescoes on their facades. The 13th-century Palazzo Comunale forms a striking conclusion to the street with its eccentrically shaped roofline of curves and minaret-like side towers, and its 16th-century clock-tower. Opposite is the Museo d'Arte, housed in the 17th-century Palazzo Ricchieri, where works by the local artist Il Pordenone (1484–1539) are on display.

Around the corner stands the Duomo, which contains the lovely altar painting of the Madonna della Misericordia (1515) by Il Pordenone. The bell tower beside the Duomo is a fine example of Romanesque decorative brickwork.

Udine 16

99,000. Piazza I Maggio 7 (0432 29 59 72). Sat.

Udine is a city of varied and surprising architecture. In the center lies Piazza della Libertà, where the Loggia del Lionello (1448–56), built of pink stone in Venetian Gothic style, stands beside the Art Deco Caffè Contarena. Opposite, the Renaissance symmetry of the Porticato di San Giovanni is interrupted by the Torre dell'Orologio (Clock Tower, 1527) crowned by two bronze Moors who strike the hours. Note also the fountain of 1542, the two 18th-century statues, and the column supporting the Lion of St. Mark.

Beyond the Arco Bollani, a gateway designed by Palladio in 1556, steps lead up to a 85-ft (26-m) hill which offers sweeping views over the city. On the hill is the 16th-century castle, now the Musei Civici e Galleria di Storia e Arte Antica, which houses fine art and archaeology collections.

Southeast of Piazza Matteotti, where a small market is held, at the end of Via Savorgnana, stands the Oratorio della Purità, and the Duomo with its octagonal bell tower. Both contain important paintings and frescoes by Giambattista Tiepolo (1696–1770). More of Tiepolo's work can be seen in the Palazzo Arcivescovile, which the artist decorated with frescoes.

A gate in the medieval walls of Cividale leads down the main street and straight to the dramatic ravine of the Natisone River, which is spanned by the arch of the Ponte del Diavolo (Devil's Bridge).

Above the river's north bank stands the Tempietto Longobardo (Lombardic Chapel), a very rare example of an 8th-century church decorated with reliefs of saints, modeled in stucco. The town's history is traced in the excellent Museo

Archeologico Nazionale, which contains the excavated remains of buildings from a Roman town, and a collection of Lombardic items including jewelry, ivory, and weapons.

Next door is the Duomo, rebuilt in 1453 after a fire, with its beautiful silver altarpiece (13th century). The Museo Cristiano, off the south aisle, contains sculptures from the original church: of particular interest is the altar donated by Ratchis, the Lombardic duke of Friuli and later king of Italy (737–44), which is finely carved with scenes from the life of Christ, including a charming Nativity. There is in addition the unusual baptismal font of Patriarch Callisto (737–56): this octagonal structure, with a roof supported by pillars, is decorated with symbols of the Evangelists.

Gorizia was at the center of fierce fighting during both world wars and was split in two by the 1947 Treaty of Paris, leaving part in Italy, part in Yugoslavia (now Slovenia).

The town's arcaded streets and pastel-painted houses have been carefully restored following substantial damage during World War II. A visit to the modern Museo Provinciale della Grande Guerra (Museum of the Great War), housed in the basement of the Museo Provinciale, provides a fascinating introduction to the realities of war. The museum uses videos, photographs, and life-size mock-ups of trenches, latrines, and gun emplacements to show the waste, squalor, and heroism of war. Rooms on the upper floor of the museum house temporary exhibitions and items from the town's art collection, which includes works by local artists.

On a mound nearby rises the castle, encircled by 16th-century fortifications. From here there are extensive views stretching over the town to the mountains beyond.

Environs: To the southwest of Gorizia, scenic country roads pass through the foothills of the Carso, a limestone plateau stretching down to Trieste. The plateau is dotted with fields enclosed by drystone walls, and gouged with tunnels, caves, and underground rivers.

Aquileia, now little more than a village but encircled by the ruins of palatial villas, baths, temples, and market buildings, provides a poignant reminder of the lost splendor of the Roman Empire.

It was here that Emperor Augustus received Herod the Great, king of Judea, in 10 BC, and it was here too, in AD 381, that the early Christian church held a major council attended by the learned saints Ambrose and Jerome to settle doctrinal issues. In the 5th century, however, the town was abandoned following several sackings. Fortunately, substantial parts of the early Christian basilica have survived, which contain the town's particular treasure: ornate floor mosaics.

Basilica

Piazza Capitolo. Tel 0431 910 67. daily. during mass. Crypt The basilica was founded in about AD 313 and much of the original structure still survives, including the magnificent floor mosaics of the nave and Cripta degli Scavi below. The designs are a mixture of geometric patterns, Bible stories, and scenes from everyday life in ancient Aquileia. There is a lively portrayal of the tale of Jonah, who was swallowed by an extraordinary sea monster: the fishing boats are also surrounded by a rich array of creatures from the deep, including wide-eyed dolphins and squid.

Environ: South of Udine, Palmanova is worth a visit for its remarkable octagonal layout and intact walls. The town was built in 1593 by the Venetians to commemorate the Battle of Lepanto.

Grado sits on a group of low islands in the middle of the Adriatic lagoon, attached to the mainland by a narrow causeway. The town grew into a port for Aquileia in the 2nd century and was used as a haven by Aquileia's citizens during the barbarian invasions. Today, Grado is a popular seaside resort. At the center of the old town is the Duomo, which contains 6th-century frescoes in the apse, similar to those on the vaults of San Marco in Venice (see pp110–13). Nearby, in the church of Santa Maria delle Grazie, there are more 6th-century mosaics.

SYMBOLISM IN EARLY CHRISTIAN ART

Christians were persecuted until their religion was granted official status by Constantine the Great in AD 313. Prior to this they had developed a language of secret symbols to express their beliefs, many of which can be seen in the mosaics and marble tomb chests of Aquileia. Many of these and other symbols later found their way into popular bestiaries and folk art.

The Winged figure of Victory holding a laurel wreath was a Classical symbol of triumph, and holiness. Later, it came to represent Christ's resurrection, and more generally, victory over death.

TRENTINO-ALTO ADIGE

The Italian-speaking Trentino – named after Trento, the regional capital – and the German-speaking Alto Adige or Südtirol (South Tyrol, the region bordering the upper reaches of the Adige River) differ dramatically in culture. However, they do share one feature in common: the majestic Dolomites that form the backdrop to every town and village, covered in snow for three months of every year and carpeted with exquisite Alpine plants for another three.

The region's mountains have been cut by glaciers into a series of deep, broad valleys. Many of these face south, so it remains unusually warm and sunny, even in winter. Travelers have passed up and down these valleys for generations – as confirmed by the extraordinary discovery, in 1991, of a 5,000-year-old man's body found emerging from the surface of a melting glacier in Alto Adige. The frozen corpse wore leather boots, stuffed with hay for warmth, and was armed with a copper ice pick.

The paths that Neolithic man once trod became major road networks under the Romans, when many of the region's cities were founded. By the Middle Ages, Alto Adige had established its very own distinctive culture under the counts of Tyrol, whose land (later appropriated by the Habsburgs) straddled both sides of today's Italian/Austrian border. The Tyrolean nobility built the castles that still line the valleys and the mountain passes, in order to protect travelers from brigands.

Another ancient legacy is the tradition of hospitality to be found in the numerous guesthouses along the valleys. Many of these are built in the distinctive Tyrolean style, with beautiful timber balconies for making the most of the winter sun, and overhanging roof eaves to keep snow at a distance. Cosy in winter, with log fires and warming food, and offering marvelous views, they make the ideal base for enjoying the region's mountain footpaths and ski slopes.

Exploring Trentino-Alto Adige

Trentino-Alto Adige is a region where unspoiled nature is complemented by a wealth of sporting opportunities. The tributary valleys feeding into the Adige valley contain lakes, rivers, and streams, and also woodland, vineyards, and Alpine pasture full of butterflies, birds, and flowers. South-east of the region rise the distinctive limestone peaks of the Dolomites, while farther north the area becomes more mountainous still, enclosed finally by the splendid heights of the Alps.

GETTING AROUND

The region's main artery is the Brenner Pass road: it runs from Austria in the north, following the Adige River from Bolzano to Trento, and southward on to Verona. Both the freeway and the main road beside it are among the busiest in Europe, and the valley roads can also be congested during the ski season. Winter driving can be hazardous, requiring special tires and snow chains. An excellent rail and bus network serves the whole area.

This attractive town, overlooked by the imposing form of its medieval castle, retains 14th-century fortifications and a network of narrow streets that can only be explored on foot. The church of St. Ursula, to the northwest of St. Ursula's Gate, holds a series of outstanding mid-15th-century altar reliefs of the Nativity. The Museo Etnografico di Teodone offers displays of traditional agricultural life and local costumes; this folklore museum also provides an ideal opportunity to visit a 16th-century farmhouse and barn.

St. Ursula's Gate sundial, Brunico

Bressanone lies the Abbazia di Novacella, a picturesque group of fortified monastic buildings with an outstanding series of cloister frescoes. Farther north up the valley, at Rio di Pusteria (Mühlbach), the remains of a 16th-century fortified barrier can be seen to the east of the town. The barrier funneled ancient travelers through the customs post that divided Tyrol from the Görz district.

High above Rio di Pusteria, to the southeast, looms the massive outline of the Castello di Rodengo (Rodeneck). The castle contains wonderful 13th-century frescoes showing battle scenes, the Last Judgment, and courtly episodes from the Iwein romance by Hartmann von Aue, the medieval poet.

Bolzano, the capital of the Alto Adige, is the gateway between the Italian-speaking Trentino region and the German-speaking Alto Adige or Südtirol, and has a marked Tyrolean atmosphere. The old center, Piazza Walther, is dominated by the 15th-century Gothic Duomo, with its multicolored mosaic-patterned roof and elaborate spire.

The "wine door" inside the Duomo is carved with figures at work among vines and reflects the importance of wine to the local economy.

In the middle of Piazza Walther is a statue of Walther von der Vogelweide, the 13th-century troubadour – born, according to legend, in this area. North of the square, the streets are lined with houses adorned with intricate gables, balconies, and oriel windows. The outdoor market, starting at Piazza Grano, forms an inviting array of local produce that continues along the arcaded Via dei Portici. This street continues to the Museo Civico, where South Tyrolean history is introduced through domestic interiors, wood carvings, and costumes, while the modern Museo

Cavalese is the chief town in the Val di Fiemme, a pretty region of flower-filled aromatic pastures, delightful wooded valleys, and Tyrolean architecture. At the center of the town stands the Palazzo della Magnifica Comunità. Originally built in the 13th century, this was the seat of the medieval governing council which ruled the area as a semi-autonomous region. Today the paneled interiors contain medieval paintings by local artists, and an archaeology collection. The footpath to the pillars is well signposted, with informative noticeboards along the way explaining the formation of the bizarre columns, which are similar in appearance to giant termites' nests. Their setting amid bird-filled woodland makes the steep climb up to the site well worthwhile. ## Trento 13

105,000. Via Mancini 2 (0461 21 60 00). Thu am.

Trento, the capital of the region to which it gave its name, is also the most attractive town in Trentino: it has a fine Romanesque cathedral and a richly decorated castle, and streets lined with handsome Renaissance mansions. Trento is noted as the venue for the Council of Trent (1545–63), set up by the Catholic Church to consider reforms that might encourage breakaway groups, in particular the German Protestants, to return to the fold.

The reforms, which ushered in the period of the Counter-Reformation, were only partly successful.

The Duomo, site of some of the Council meetings, was built in robust Romanesque style from the 13th century. It was three centuries before it was completed, in 1515, but the builders maintained architectural harmony by ignoring Gothic and Renaissance styles entirely. The result is a church of unusual integrity, noble and assured. The Duomo stands on Piazza Duomo, the city's main square, which was first laid out by the Romans as their central market place or forum. Trento's Roman name, Tridentum, is commemorated in the figure of Neptune who stands holding his trident at the top of the 18th-century fountain, which stands in the middle of the main square.

This large castle, built in the 13th century and later enlarged with additional buildings, is part of the defenses of the town. Trento was an important frontier on the main road linking Italy to northern Europe, and thick walls still encircle the town.

The southern section of the castle consists of the magnificent Magno Palazzo (1530), built for the ruling prince-bishops of Trento, who were given extensive powers by the Holy Roman Emperor to foster loyalty and discourage defection to the Pope.

The lavish decoration (including frescoes of virile satyrs and nymphs by Gerolamo Romanino, 1531–2) speaks of huge wealth and a luxurious lifestyle. The fine rooms, now the setting for the Museo Provinciale, contain paintings, ceramics and 15th-century wood carvings, and prehistoric, Etruscan, and Roman items. The Torre dell'Aquila (Eagle Tower) nearby contains frescoes painted around 1400. They depict the Months

The views along the route are magnificent, in particular from Vaneze and Vason. East of Trento, Pergine marks the start of the Val Sugana, a broad valley with attractive and popular lakes. Rovereto was at the center of fierce fighting during World War I, after which the Venetian castle (built in 1416) that dominates the town was transformed into the Museo Storico della Guerra, a war museum. The displays include sections devoted to wartime humor, propaganda, and spying. Near the entrance to the museum, stairs lead out on to the castle roof for a view of the imposing Ossario del Castel Dante.

Some distance away is the Campana dei Caduti (Bell of the Fallen), one of the largest bells in Italy, which was cast from melted-down cannons at the end of World War II and mounted in an imposing building above the town; it is rung daily at sunset.

Below the war museum stands the Museo Civico, with its collections on archaeology, art, natural history, and folklore, while the Mario Botta-designed Museo di Arte Contemporanea di Trento e Rovereto (MART) showcases 20th-century Italian art.

Environ: A little over 5 miles (8 km) north of Rovereto is Castel Beseno, rising on a hill to the east. This enormous castle, by far the largest in the region, was built and rebuilt from the 12th century to the 18th to guard the junction of the three valleys. The ruins are undergoing restoration.

Three miles (5 km) south of Rovereto, the main road passes through a valley littered with massive house-sized boulders created by landslips: these are known as Lavini di Marco or Ruina Dantesca, because they are mentioned in Dante's Inferno (XII, 4–9). Fossilized dinosaur footprints have also been discovered there.

Northwest Italy at a Glance

The northwest of Italy is made up of three very different geological characteristics: the jagged Alps, the flat plain, and the undulating shoreline of the Mediterranean. Within this varied landscape, some of it still wild and unspoilt, lie extremely rich and diverse vestiges of the area's substantial cultural heritage. The major sights, in the regions of Valle d'Aosta and Piedmont, Liguria, and Lombardy, are shown on this map.

The Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso is a beautiful wilderness, and the habitat of rare Alpine fauna and flora (see pp216–17).

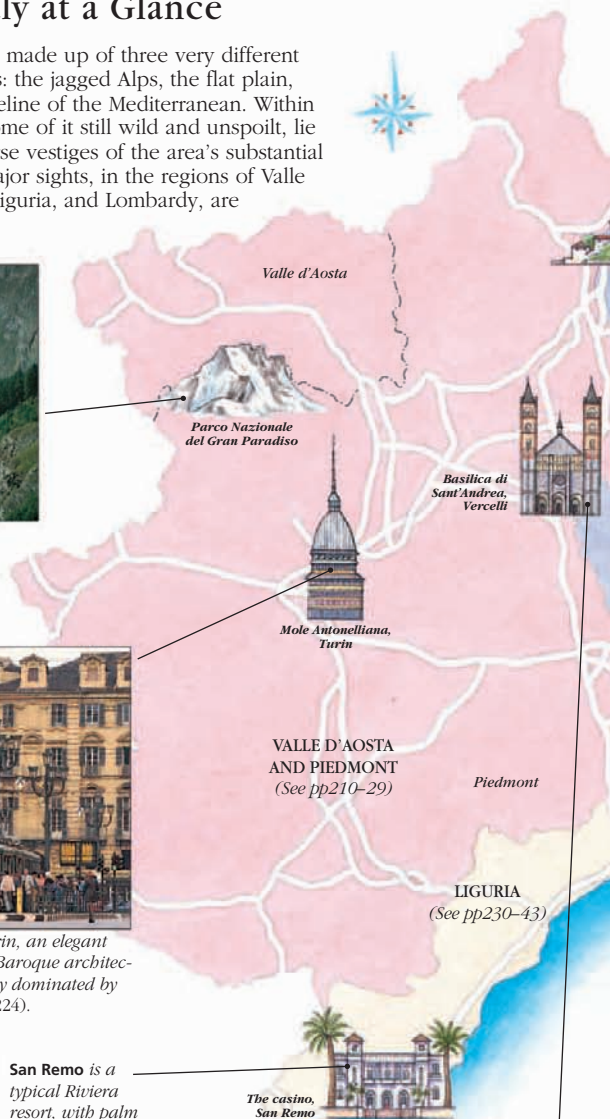

The capital of Piedmont is Turin, an elegant and bustling city of splendid Baroque architecture. Its skyline is dramatically dominated by the Mole Antonelliana (see p224).

San Remo is a typical Riviera resort, with palm trees and a casino. The onion-domed outline of the Russian church adds an exotic flavor to the town (see p234).

The Basilica di Sant'Andrea in Vercelli is an important Romanesque building, one of the earliest to use Gothic elements (see p228).

LOMBARDY

Isola Bella, Lake Maggiore

Duomo, Milan

Certosa di Pavia

Portofino

Portofino is one of Italy's most exclusive resorts. Nestling in a creek, its pretty pastel-colored houses surround a yacht-filled harbor (see p240).

Isola Bella is an enchanting island on romantic Lake Maggiore. Nearby lies beautiful Lake Como (see pp190–91).

Milan's Duomo, with its distinctive bristling spires, is one of the many architectural gems in this stylish city (see p193).

The Certosa di Pavia, a charming Carthusian monastery, includes a richly decorated Gothic church with a magnificent Renaissance facade, and a series of attractive cloisters (see pp204–5).

The Flavors of Northwest Italy

From Mediterranean Liguria to the Alps, the Lombardy plain, and Piedmont, this diverse area is characterized by its rich yet hearty cuisine. Along with the Veneto, Lombardy and Piedmont are Italy's main ricegrowing areas and risotto features widely, especially delicious when made with local wild mushrooms. The white truffles of Alba are the "white gold" of Piedmont, while lush pastures produce some of the country's best meat and many of Italy's finest cheeses. The mild Ligurian climate favors olives and herbs – especially basil, used in pesto sauce. And fish teem in the sparkling Mediterranean.

LOMBARDY

This is the home of dishes prepared alla Milanese, rich in butter, osso buco (shin of veal), vegetable soups, and boiled meats (bollito misto). From veal to beef and from pork to poultry, Lombardy produces some of the country's finest meat, but it is also associated with cucina povera (the cuisine of the poor) in which polenta (maize porridge) still features from its days as the staple diet of impoverished countryfolk. The other staple food, the shortgrained rice that is used in risotto, grows abundantly in the area around Pavia. Lombardy is one of Italy's largest cheese-making regions, the most famous including Gorgonzola, Bitto, Mascarpone, and Grana Padano.

Mouthwatering range of northwest Italy's finest cheeses

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Veal is especially popular in Lombardy and Piedmont, and a great favorite with the Milanese is osso buco. Another classic Piedmontese dish, vitello tonnato, is a surprisingly delicious blend of cold roast veal and tuna fish served with a mayonnaise sauce with gherkins and capers. As well as pesto, a traditional dish from Genoa is buridda alla Genovese – a delicious fish soup or stew containing mussels, shrimps, octopus, squid, and clams. Shavings of truffle in dishes such as risotto and fagiano tartufato (pheasant stuffed with white truffle and pork fat) give a taste of sheer luxury and, fortunately, a little of this very expensive delicacy goes a long way. And, for those with a sweet tooth, panettone is a soft Christmas cake studded with dried and candied fruit, another Milanese specialty.

Bagna Caôda From Piedmont, a warm mix of olive oil, anchovies, and garlic into which raw vegetables are dipped.

Boxes of fresh fish are unloaded onto a Ligurian quayside flavors are robust, rich, and earthy, laced with French flair, reflecting a history of French rule and influence.

The paddy fields of Vercelli are the rice capital of Europe and truffle risotto, especially when flavored using the prized white variety from Alba, is truly memorable fare.

The mountains are famous for cow's milk cheese, especially the semisoft Fontina from the Valle d'Aosta, cured meats, salamis, terrines, and game. Piedmont also produces Italy's greatest red wines, and the prized Barolo and Barbaresco often feature as a marinade in beef dishes.

The Turinese are passionate about chocolate, echoing Turin's tradition of chocolate-making originating in the 17th century. Most famous are the sublime ingot-shaped gianduiotti, filled with a rich chocolate-hazelnut cream.

The city is also the birthplace of grissini, crisp breadsticks that grace every restaurant table. The tradition of the aperitivo also originates in Turin. The spread that accompanies a glass of Prosecco or a cocktail in bars throughout the city between 6pm and 8pm is substantial.

Delicious focaccia bread made with Ligurian olive oil

LIGURIA

The Mediterranean climate is perfect for growing herbs, fruit and vegetables, nuts, and olives. Ligurian olive oil is of the highest quality and is used in the preparation of many dishes. To accompany pasta, pesto is the signature sauce, made from basil, pine nuts, garlic, and olive oil, as well as a mix of Pecorino and Parmesan. This use of aromatic herbs is typical of Ligurian cuisine in general.

Not surprisingly, fish and seafood are as common as meat and dairy in this region, where the vast majority of people live on the coast.

ON THE MENU

Agnolotti Piedmont pasta specialty – crescent-shaped ravioli stuffed with meat or vegetables. Served with ragù or a creamy sauce.

Brasato al Barolo Stewed beef cooked gently with vegetables in Barolo wine.

Lumache Piedmontese snails, the best of which come from Cherasco, served either in garlic and butter or in a sauce of olive oil, tomatoes, and garlic.

Oca alla Piemontese Goose preserved in fat.

Risotto alla Milanese Rich, saffron-scented dish of rice with white wine, onion, and Parmesan cheese.

Trenette con pesto A
Ligurian dish of flat noodles with a sauce of basil, garlic, pine nuts, and olive oil.

Osso Bucco Milanese shin of veal, stewed slowly in white wine. The bone marrow is considered a delicacy.

Zabaione A frothy dessert of egg yolks, sugar, and Marsala, zabaione is a specialty of the Piedmont region.

The Wines of Northwest Italy

Medieval illustration of a grape crusher

Grapes are grown throughout the northwest – from the cliffs of Valle d'Aosta. The best wines, however, come from Piedmont, in particular the Langhe hills southwest of Turin, source of two of Italy's finest reds: the rich, powerful, long-lived Barolo and Barbaresco. Both of these are now showing the benefits of modern techniques and a renewed interest in high-quality winemaking. Lighter, everyday red wines that go well with the local cuisine include Dolcetto and the popular Barbera. Another Piedmont speciality is sparkling spumante, Italians' instinctive choice whenever there is something around to celebrate.

Barbera d'Alba comes from the adaptable Barbera grape, which can grow on almost any slope. Its ubiquitous nature means that the wines it yields can be light and full of fruit, as well as dense, strong and full-flavored. Good producers include Aldo Conterno, Vozzio, Pio Cesare, Altare, Gaja, Vaira, and Vietti.

Dolcetto is grown in seven different areas. Dolcetto d'Alba has a delicious perfume and deep purple color. Best drunk within one or two years, it ranges in flavor from fresh and fruity to the rich, concentrated plumminess of some of the top wines, such as those produced by Giuseppe Mascarello.

Barolo, prized the world over for its complex array of flavors and firm tannins, is made from the Nebbiolo grape and may take up to 20 years to mature. Vigna Colonello is a top Barolo from Aldo Conterno, made only in the best years like 2006, 2005, 2004, and 1993.

The white truffle of Alba is an autumn speciality from the Langhe hills. Highly prized for its earthy scent, it is excellent with Barolo.

Castiglione Falletto in the heart of Piedmont

Moscato d'Asti is an excellent aperitivo or light dessert wine made from the aromatic, fruity Moscato grape. It is light in alcohol with a gently sweet finish and may have a slight sparkle.

Ideal for refreshing the palate after a hearty Piedmontese meal, Araldica's versatile Moscato is delicious when served well chilled.

Barolo is aged in wooden casks for at least two years before being put in bottles. This may be done in either the traditional, large botte or the smaller barrique, which imparts a strong oaky flavor to the wine.

GRAPES OF THE NORTHWEST

The Nebbiolo grape is used to produce two of Italy's finest red wines, Barolo and Barbaresco, as well as other regional wines in the Valtellina and north of Turin. It is a difficult grape to cultivate and requires a long growing season to soften its high acidity. However, the final results are worth it: in the Langhe region the Nebbiolo offers complex perfumes and a range of flavors, often encased within strong tannins. Easier to handle and lighter, the Dolcetto and Barbera both came from the Monferrato region originally. These reds yield lighter, fruitier wines but, when at their best, no less distinctive than those of the Nebbiolo. Of the white grapes, the Moscato is Piedmont's oldest known variety. Famous for the successful sparkling Asti Spumante, the best grapes are reserved for Moscato d'Asti.

Nebbiolo grapes

HOW TO READ THE LABEL

The name of the wine is shown in the center of the label: bricco is local dialect for a good hilltop vineyard.

Good Vintages

Barolo and Barbaresco had good years in 2006, 2005, 2004, 2003, 2000, 1998, 1997.

Understanding Architecture in Northwest Italy

Although the buildings of the northwest tend to be solid and imposing – a result partly of the more severe climate – there is no distinctive architectural stamp as there is around Venice, Florence, or even in Rome. Instead, a variety of buildings in different styles, many borrowed or reinterpreted from elsewhere, are dotted across the area: enchanting medieval castles, outstanding Romanesque and Gothic buildings, unusual Baroque structures. The northwest is also rich in modern architecture – in terms of both design and materials – influenced by the region’s industrial developments and its strong flair for innovative design, which also often draws its inspiration from earlier architectural styles.

CHARACTERISTICS OF NORTHWEST ITALIAN ARCHITECTURE

WHERE TO SEE THE ARCHITECTURE

The road to Aosta is flanked by numerous medieval castles (see p214) while inspirational Romanesque and Gothic churches are found in Lombardy – at Monza (p201), Pavia (p203), Milan (pp192–201), and Como (pp190–91). The 15th-century Certosa di Pavia (pp204–5) is a must, as well as the charming city of Mantua (p207). Turin (pp220–24) is famous for its unique Baroque school, and Bergamo for its exuberance. Architecture from the last two centuries is best represented in Milan and Turin, and in Genoa some exciting redevelopment projects are taking place.

19TH–20TH CENTURY ARCHITECTURE

The Mole Antonelliana (1863–97), designed by Antonelli, was the tallest building in the world when it was built (see p224).

Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II in Milan, designed by Mengoni in 1865, was the first Italian building to use glass and iron structurally (see p194).

Torre Velasca, Milan Milan is a 26-floor tower south of the Duomo. The design, from the 1950s, was influenced by medieval castles such as the Castello Sforzesco.

Milan's Pirelli building, by Ponti and Nervi, is an elegant and innovative skyscraper built in 1959.

The Lingotto building, Turin, was built in 1915–18 as FIAT's car factory. Made of advanced materials, it was the first large-scale modern building in Italy. The structure of the ramps up to the roof is similar to the interior of Guarini's Baroque dome for San Lorenzo in Turin.

LOMBARDY

The region of Lombardy stretches from the Alps, on the border with Switzerland, down through the romantic lakes of Como and Maggiore to the broad, flat plain of the Po River. It is an area of lakeside villas with azalea-filled gardens, of wealthy towns with imposing palazzi and highly decorated churches, and of efficient, modern industry and large-scale agriculture, the financial heart of Italy. At its center stands Milan, the style-conscious capital of Lombardy.

The region was named after the Lombards or Longobards, a Germanic tribe that invaded Italy in the 6th century AD. During the Middle Ages, Lombardy was part of the Holy Roman Empire, but not always loyal to its German emperors. The Lombards, who had a talent for banking and commerce, resented any outside interference in their prosperity.

The 12th century saw the rise of the Lega Lombarda, or Lombard League, a band of forceful separatists founded to counter the brutal imperialism of Frederick Barbarossa (their most modern incarnation being the Lega Nord political party). Power was seized by the region's great families, most notably the Visconti and the Sforza of Milan, from the 14th to the early 16th century. These dynasties also became great patrons of the arts, commissioning exquisite palaces, churches, and artworks, many of which can still be seen. Bergamo, Mantua, and Cremona – not to mention Milan itself – contain a remarkably rich array of art treasures. Here are such pinnacles of European civilization as the charterhouse at Pavia, Leonardo da Vinci's Last Supper, and the magnificent paintings of the Pinacoteca di Brera in Milan.

Lombardy – famous as the birthplace of Virgil, Monteverdi, Stradivarius, and Donizetti – today offers visitors the contrasting pleasures of lyrical lakeside landscapes (resorts on lakes Como and Maggiore have attracted poets, aristocrats, and gamblers for centuries) and beautiful, bustling cities.

Exploring Lombardy

The enormous plain of the River Po runs through much of Lombardy, providing a landscape that is flat and perfectly suited to the consequent expansion of industry in the region. This is, however, also a region of great contrasts. To the north, in a still unspoiled setting in the foothills of the mountains, lie the lakes Como and Maggiore, as well as the dramatic valleys and peaks of the Parco Nazionale dello Stelvio around Bormio, Sondrio, and Val Camonica. Farther south, busy industrialized areas give way to huge tracts of agriculture dotted with towns of great beauty such as Cremona, Mantua, and Pavia, which offer a rich and splendid array of artistic pleasures.

GETTING AROUND

Milan has three international airports, which are obvious gateways into northern Italy, and the vast and flat Lombard plain has its advantages when it comes to transportation: roads and railroad lines criss-cross it and make trips between the larger towns very easy. The lakes, however, are better visited by car, since only two main towns are served by trains, though there are bus and boat services around the shores. The Parco Nazionale dello Stelvio and the mountains are more remote still, but offer good tourist facilities.

Lake Como ❶

Set in an idyllic landscape of mountains and rugged hillsides, Lake Como has for centuries attracted visitors who come here to go boating, for walks in the hills, or for relaxation and inspiration. The northern stretches, in particular, are shrouded in an almost eerie calm. The long and narrow lake, crafted into a wishbone shape by glacial erosion, offers fine views up to the Alps and down to the towns of Como and Lecco.

Menaggio is one of a string of popular resorts lining the west bank.

The northern stretches are wilder and less populated than the southern part, offering visitors great tranquility.

Varenna, a ferry port, is overlooked by a ruined 11th-century castle. At Fiumelatte, just south, there is a foaming stream, the "river of milk."

In the heart of Como lies the elegant Piazza Cavour. Nearly rises the beautiful 14th-century Duomo, with its 15th- and 16th-century reliefs and paintings, and fine tombs. The 18th-century dome is by Turin's famous Baroque architect, Juvarra. Next to the Duomo stand the 13th-century Broletto (town hall), charmingly striped in white, pink, and gray, and the tall Torre del Comune. At Tremezzo, Villa Carlotta is an elegant 18th-century summer-house known for its gardens. In springtime, all sorts of flowers burst into color in this pretty setting. The villa houses a collection of sculptures.

Lecco, a small industrial town lying to the south of the lake's eastern arm, was home to Alessandro Manzoni (1785–1873). The writer's childhood home, the Casa Natale di Manzoni, is devoted to memorabilia of his life and works. A monument in Piazza Manzoni depicts scenes from his most famous novel, I Promessi Sposi (The Betrothed) – set in 17th-century Lecco and Milan.

Lake Maggiore, the second largest Italian lake after Lake Garda, is a long expanse of water nestling right against the mountains and stretching into Alpine Switzerland; it is warmer in atmosphere and more romantic than Lake Como. The gently sloping shores are dotted with camellias, azaleas, and verberna vegetation – from which the ancient lake derived its Roman name, Verbanus.

A huge copper statue of Cardinal San Carlo Borromeo, the chief patron of the lake, stands in Arona, the town where he was born in 1538. It is possible to climb up and look out over the lake through his eyes and ears. Arona also boasts a ruined castle and a chapel, Santa Maria, dedicated to the Borromeo family.

Farther up the western coast of the lake is Stresa, the chief resort and main jumping-off point for visits to the islands; the town boasts many grand hotels, handsome villas, and pleasant gardens. Behind Stresa, a cable-car ride away, rises Monte Mottarone, a snow-capped peak offering spectacular panoramic views of the surrounding mountains, including Monte Rosa.

The Borromeo islands, at the center of the lake near Stresa, are small jewels of natural beauty augmented by artificial grottoes, architectural follies, and landscaped gardens.

The Isola Bella is home to the 17th-century Palazzo Borromeo and its splendid gardens, while Isola Madre is largely given over to a botanical garden. The only island inhabited year round is Isola dei Pescatori, with a population of 50. The private Isola di San Giovanni is the smallest of the isles, with a villa that once belonged to the great conductor Arturo Toscanini (1867–1957).

The lake becomes quieter towards the Swiss border, but continues to be lined with attractive villas. The Villa Taranto, on the outskirts of Verbania, houses a fine exotic botanical collection.

About 2 miles (3 km) west of Cannobio, a market town near Switzerland, is the dramatic gorge and tumbling waterfall of the

Milan ③

Detail from

Center of fashion, business, and finance, Milan has a bustling, businesslike feel about it. It is smart rather than attractive – a city of wealth as opposed to imagination and the heartland of the Italian economy. Its name is thought to come from a composite of the Latin words medio and planum, meaning “middle of the plain.” It has long been an important trading center at the junction of transalpine routes, and a prize for powerful dynasties. Today, it is the best place to see Italy at its most cosmopolitan and stylish.

The first castle on this site was built by the Visconti family, but demolished when their reign ended in the mid-15th century. Milan’s new ruler, Francesco Sforza, built in its place this Renaissance palace. The castle is based on a series of courtyards, the most beautiful of which, the Cortile della Rocchetta, is a graceful arcaded square designed by Bramante and Filarete. The palace now contains, together with sections on Applied Arts, Archaeology, and Coins, the Musei del Castello. Milan's giant cathedral is one of the largest Gothic churches in the world. It was begun in the 14th century under Prince Gian Galeazzo Visconti but not completed until more than 500 years later. The building's most startling feature is its extraordinary roof, with its 135 spires and innumerable statues and gargoyles, and from which, on a clear day, there are views of the Alps. Below, the facade boasts a dazzling assortment of styles from Gothic through to Renaissance and Neoclassical.

The bronze doors are faced with low reliefs recounting episodes from the life of the Virgin and of Sant'Ambrogio, and scenes retelling the history of Milan.

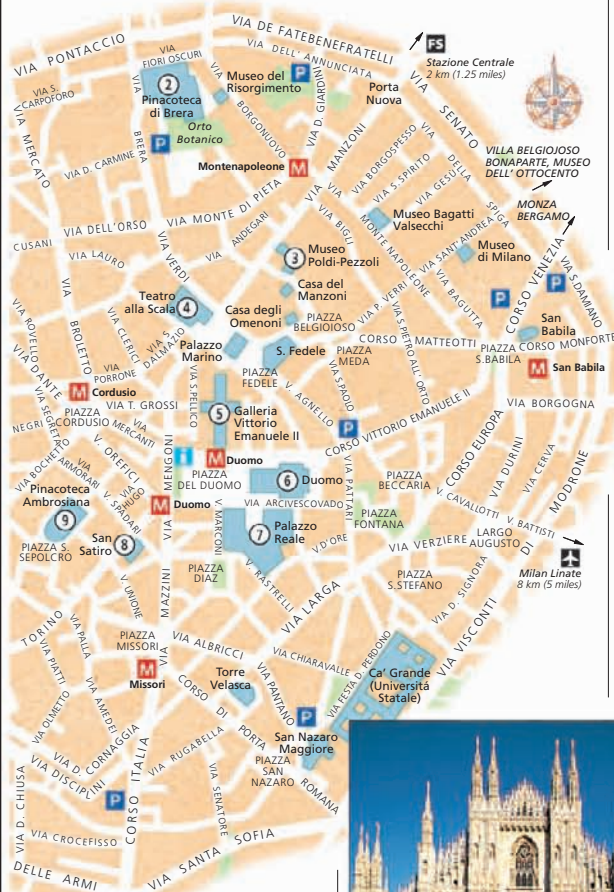

Inside, the aisles are divided by 52 giant pillars and lit from all sides by remarkable stained-glass windows. Look out for the Visconti family symbol – a serpent swallowing a man – in the fine tracery of the apse windows. Among the many tombs and statues is a depiction of the flayed San Bartolomeo carrying his own skin.

The treasury, beneath the main altar, contains much medieval gold and silverwork, and the remains of a 4th-century baptistry.

Exploring Milan

In addition to the great monuments in Milan, such as the cathedral and the castle, there is a host of varied and interesting museums, churches, and civic buildings which provide an enthralling mix of old and new. This chic and busy metropolis offers plenty of opportunities for cultural activities, gastronomic adventures, designer-fashion shopping, or just strolling about, Milan-style.

Galleria Vittorio Emanuele II

Main entrances on Piazza del Duomo and Piazza della Scala. This ornate shopping arcade, known as il Salotto di Milano (Milan's drawing room), was designed by the architect Giuseppe Mengoni in 1865. The galleria had a tragic start, however, as Mengoni fell to his death from the scaffolding not long before its inauguration in 1877 (a year before the arcade was actually finished). Tourists are nevertheless attracted to its stylish shops and cafés, as well as Savini, one of Milan's historic restaurants.

The galleria itself has a floor plan in the shape of a Latin cross, with an octagonal center adorned with mosaics representing four continents (Europe, America, Africa, and Asia), together with others representing Art, Agriculture, Science, and Industry. Its finest feature is its metal and glass roof, crowned with a magnificent central dome. The roof was the first structure in Italy to use metal and glass in a structural way, rather than just decoratively. The floors are decorated with mosaics of the signs of the zodiac; tourists may be seen stepping on the genitals of Taurus the Bull, in order to bring good luck.

The villa houses 19th-century Italian art, showing all the major art movements, as well as the Grassi and Vismara collections of 19th- and 20th-century Italian and foreign artists and the Marino Marini Museum. Of particular note are works by Giorgio Morandi (1890–1964) and Carlo Carrà (1881–1966), as well as by Modigliani (1884–1920) and De Chirico (1888–1978). The Ambrosiana is home to Cardinal Federico Borromeo's magnificent library of 30,000 manuscripts. These include a 5th-century illustrated Iliad, early editions of Dante's Divine Comedy (1353), and the Atlantic Codex (1478–1519) by Leonardo da Vinci. In order to exhibit as much of the Atlantic Codex as possible, the pages on show are changed every three months.

The building also houses an art gallery, bequeathed by Borromeo in 1618. The collection ranges from 14th-century pieces to works of the early 19th century. Among the canvases are Portrait of a Musician by Leonardo, the Madonna of the Canopy by Botticelli (15th century), a cartoon version of Raphael's Vatican fresco The School of Athens (16th century), and Caravaggio's Fruit Basket. There is also a strong collection of Venetian art, with paintings by Giorgione, Titian, Bassano, and Tiepolo, and panel paintings by the late 15th-century Lombard painter Bergognone.

in this room are two of the most important works in the museum: the Parabiago Patera and the Diatrete Cup. The Patera is a gilded silver plate with a relief of the goddess Cybele (4th century AD). The Diatrete Cup, dating from the same period, is a single piece of colored glass, with finely wrought, intricate decoration.

Shopping in Milan

In Milan, one of the most affluent cities in Italy, shopping is synonymous with buying designer apparel. High-fashion flagship stores here are invariably smart and stylish, especially in the city center, and looking is almost as satisfying as making a purchase. However, Milan also has many independent boutiques with a range of styles to suit all tastes. If you are looking for gifts to take home, there are some excellent pasticcerie (pastry shops), where you can buy authentic delicacies and traditional local confectionery. Alternatively, a cutting-edge object of design will make for an impressive souvenir of your trip to the city.

WHERE TO SHOP

All leading fashion designers have shops in the area between Via Montenapoleone, Via della Spiga, Via Manzoni, and Via Sant'Andrea, the so-called "fashion quadrilateral."

Those interested in interior design will enjoy Via Durini, while lovers of antiques should head to Brera or the Navigli, where antiques markets are held monthly.

If time is of the essence, call ahead to check opening hours. In Milan generally, nonfood shops are closed on Monday mornings, and food shops are closed on Monday afternoons. The largest shops tend to stay open throughout the day, but sometimes a lunch break is taken. Shops are closed on Sundays, except just before Christmas and during the main fashion shows.

DESIGNER FASHION

Milan is renowned as a world capital of fashion, and most national and international designers have a flagship store here. As well as the designers that you would expect to find in a fashion center, such as Dolce & Gabbana, Giorgio Armani, Gucci, Prada, and Hugo Boss, there are many smaller designer stores. For an overview of what's new, check out multibrand boutiques such as Banner, which features a selection of the best from a wide array of names. For the latest on what the younger set is wearing, go to Amedeo D or to the Corso di Porta Ticinese area.

Up-and-coming designers are gathering in the areas around Corso Garibaldi and Corso Como. As well as of-the-moment clothes and accessories, 10 Corso Como offers a bookstore, record store, art gallery, café, and restaurant, and even a top-class B&B. The Gianfranco Ferré boutique, on the other hand, has a spa attached.

Most designers carry men's as well as women's apparel. Specialist men's stores include Pal Zileri, Ermenegildo Zegna, and Corneliani.

REGULAR CLOTHING

Designer outlets sell samples, seconds, and last season's goods at a discount. Among Milan's longest-established outlets are Salvagente and DMagazine. Many designers also have their own outlets: fans of Max Mara, for example, should head for Diffusione Tessile.

Milan's main department stores are La Rinascente and Coin. The former carries many leading-edge fashion designers while the latter features smaller fashion labels, handbags, costume jewelry, and housewares. There is more to Milan than upscale, cutting-edge designer fashion, though. For good-value casualwear for the whole family, try Oviesse.

Many fashion shoppers also scour the stalls at the Saturday market at Viale Papiniano, at the Piazza Sant'Agostino end, which starts at 8.30am and goes on until 5pm. Corso Vercelli is also recommended.

ACCESSORIES

Handbags, shoes, hats, and jewelry, real or otherwise, are also worth seeking out. Chains such as Furla and Coccinelle offer a wide array of bags, while those looking for shoes can head to René Caovilla for a pair of stylish heels, or purchase comfortable shoes with a twist from Tod's and Hogan. Garlando carries a number of classic styles in a wide array of colors and sizes, while Ghigodonna has elegant shoes in larger sizes. Borsalino is synonymous with stylish headwear.

The "fashion quadrilateral" also features many jewelers, such as Federico Buccellati, Bulgari, and Pianegonda.

FOOD AND WINE

Gourmands will have a great time in Milan. Peck consists of three floors of the best that Italy can offer, in terms of both food and wine. Giovanni Galli Marroni e Canditi offers a different take on chocolate-coated delicacies.

For those who like a hands-on approach to their food, High Tech is a goldmine for kitchen tools, including all the top names such as Alessi, as well as plates and cutlery.

DESIGN, BOOKS, AND GIFTS

Milan is the cradle of designer furniture. Several top stores are around Piazza San Babila. A stroll down Via Durini will reveal, among others, Cassina and B&B. For lighting, see Flos and Artemide. Those interested in 20th-century design could visit Spazio 900.

If an item of furniture is not an option, the next best thing might be a book on design or architecture. Visit the bookshop of the Triennale or that of the art-catalog publisher Skira for the best on the market.

Fabrizio, the company that developed the first paper mill in the 1200s, has a store selling handsome writing paper, envelopes, and gift items.

Milan: Pinacoteca di Brera

Milan's finest art collection is held in an imposing 17th-century building, the Palazzo di Brera. This is where, in the 18th century, the Accademia di Belle Arti was founded; the picture collection developed alongside the academy. Inside the Brera hang some of the finest examples of Italian Renaissance and Baroque painting, including works by Piero della Francesca, Mantegna, Canaletto, Bellini, Raphael, Tintoretto, Veronese and Caravaggio. The collection also includes 20th-century works by some of Italy's most famous modern artists.

★ Dead Christ by Mantegna

The subtle lighting and dramatic perspective of this lamentation by Mantegna (1430–1506) make it one of his greatest masterpieces.

Twin staircases lead up to the second-floor entrance of the Pinacoteca.

The Kiss (1859)

Francesco Hayez's painting is one of the most reproduced works of Italian 19th-century art. Patriotic and sentimental, it became a symbol of the optimism surrounding the unification of Italy.

GALLERY GUIDE

The collection is displayed in 38 rooms, and was first built up by paintings from churches, later from acquisitions. Not all of it is permanently on view – this is due to restoration work and research.

KEY TO FLOORPLAN

- 15th- to 16th-century Italian painting
- 16th- to 17th-century Dutch and Flemish painting
- 17th-century Italian painting
- 18th- to 19th-century Italian painting
- 20th-century Italian painting and sculpture and Jesi Collection
- Non-exhibition space

Works by Rubens and Van Dyck represent some of the non-Italian artists on show.

Madonna della Candeletta

(c.1490)

This painting by Carlo Crivelli was the central part of a polyptych. It is richly detailed with much distinctive ornamentation.

Twinned columns support the arcades in the courtyard.

The stone facade presents a regular and slightly austere appearance.

This graceful altarpiece was painted in 1504. The circular temple is signed with the artist's name.

Milan: Southwest of the Center

Some of Milan's finest treasures are to be found in its religious buildings: the ancient monasteries and churches make up some very fine architectural ensembles in themselves, as well as incorporating important ruins and relics dating back to Roman times. It is also in Milan that one of the most famous images in the world is to be found: Leonardo's evocative masterpiece, The Last Supper.

Sant' Ambrogio, or St Ambrose, Milan's patron saint and its bishop in the 4th century, was so eloquent that bees were said to fly into his mouth, attracted by his honey tongue. This is the basilica that he began building in AD 379, though today most of it is 10th-century Romanesque. A gateway leads to the bronze doors of the entrance, flanked by two bell towers. Inside, note the fine rib vaulting and pulpit, and the striking 9th-century altar decorated with gold, silver and gems. In a chapel off the south aisle, fine mosaics line a stunning cupola. Down in the crypt lies the tomb of Sant' Ambrogio himself.

Above the portico, a small museum contains architectural fragments, tapestries, and paintings relating to the church.

This church contains a vast collection of Roman and early Christian remains. The octagonal basilica was built in the 4th century, above what was probably a Roman amphitheatre, and rebuilt in the 12th and 16th centuries.

In front of the church stands a row of 16 Roman columns and a statue of the Emperor Constantine. Fine 4th-century mosaics adorn the Cappella di Sant' Aquilino, a Romanesque chapel, which also contains two early Christian sarcophagi. Other Roman architectural elements, incorporated into the building of this church, are in a chamber below the chapel.

This beautiful 15th-century Renaissance convent, its lovely apse and calm small cloister designed by Bramante, contains one of the key images of western civilization: the Cenacolo (The Last Supper) by Leonardo da Vinci. The image captures the moment at which Christ tells his disciples that one of them will betray him. The Christ figure is unfinished: Leonardo did not consider himself worthy enough to complete it.

The artist also spurned the standard fresco technique of painting on wet plaster, applying tempera to the dry wall instead. The result has deteriorated badly: the paint is flaking off, and restoration has proved difficult. The painting is now protected by a filtering system.

THE EDICT OF MILAN

Milan was colonized by the Romans in 222 BC, and quickly grew to be an important city at the junction of various trading routes. As the Roman Empire grew and then split into two, the emperors began to neglect Rome for the better-placed Mediolanum (which may mean "city in the middle of the plain"). It was here that Emperor Constantine issued his edict of AD 313, in which Christianity was recognized as a permitted religion of the empire, ending centuries of persecution. The emperor is said to have converted following a vision, but by the 4th century adopting Christianity was also one way to unite the disparate empire.

Monza 4

Monza. 125,000. 9am–12:30pm, 3–6pm daily. Thu & Sat.

These days Monza is famous for its international Formula One Autodromo, which lies inside a vast park that also has an elegant Rococo hunting lodge, the Villa Reale, and a golf course. At one time, however, Monza was one of the most important towns in Lombardy: Theodolinda, the 6th-century Lombard queen, built its first cathedral and bequeathed her treasure to the town.

In the town center is the Duomo, with its notable green and white 14th-century facade and beautiful 15th-century frescoes portraying Theodolinda's life. Behind the high altar is the small Iron Crown, believed to have belonged to Emperor Constantine: it is prized for the iron strip, said to have been one of the nails from the cross of Christ. More local treasures may be found in the Duomo's Museo e Tesoro del Duomo, including a silver hen standing over seven tiny chicks – which symbolize Lombardy and the seven provinces it once ruled – and a relic said to be a tooth of St. John the Baptist.

www.comune.bergamo.it

Bergamo owes much of its artistic inspiration and architectural splendor to the influence of Venice, which ruled it from the 15th to the late 18th century. The town is divided into two distinct parts: Bergamo Alta crowning the hill, with its cluster of attractive medieval and Renaissance buildings, and the more modern Bergamo Bassa below.

The jewel of the upper town is Piazza Vecchia, containing one of the most appealing architectural ensembles in the region. Its buildings include the 12th-century Torre del

Comune with its fine clock and curfew bell that rings daily at 10pm, the late 16th-century Biblioteca Civica and the attractive 12th-century Palazzo della Ragione, or law courts, adorned with a statue of the Lion of Venice.

The arcades of the Palazzo della Ragione lead to Piazza del Duomo, the square of the Neoclassical Duomo. The square is dominated by the Cappella Colleoni (see p184), Leonello d'Este (c.1440) by Pisanello in the Accademia Carrara, Bergamo a chapel built in 1476 to house the tomb of Bergamo's famous political leader, Bartolomeo Colleoni. It is flanked by two 14th-century buildings: an octagonal baptistry and the porch leading to the Romanesque basilica of Santa Maria Maggiore. The basilica's austere exterior contrasts with its Baroque interior, which contains the tomb of Bergamo-born composer Gaetano Donizetti (1797–1848).

The collection from the Galleria dell'Accademia Carrara, a major picture gallery with works by Venetian masters and local artists, as well as masterworks from the rest of Italy, is housed temporarily in Palazzo della Ragione, while the building is being restored. It includes 15th- and 16th-century works by Pisanello, Crivelli, Mantegna, Giovanni Bellini, Botticelli, Titian, Raphael, and Perugino; 18th-century canvases by Tiepolo, Guardi, and Canaletto; as well as paintings by Dürer, Holbein, Brueghel, and Velázquez.

The Stelvio, Italy's largest national park, is the gateway from Lombardy to the glacier-strewn Dolomite mountains stretching into Trentino-Alto Adige. The glaciers are dotted with more than 50 lakes, and dominated by craggy peaks such as Gran Zèbrù, Cevedale, and Ortles – the tallest mountain here at 12,811 ft (3,905 m).

For walkers, the area offers excellent hiking, and access to remote areas populated by ibexes, marmots, chamois, and eagles. The only real population center in the Lombardy part of the park is at Bormio, which boasts plenty of winter and summer sports facilities, and is a good base from which to explore the area.

Along the shores of the lake are a clutch of fishing villages such as Sale Marasino and Iseo itself. From Marone, on the east bank of the lake, a road leads to the village of Cislano, about 3 miles (5 km) away. Here, extraordinary spire-like rock formations rise from the ground, each spire topped by a boulder. These distinctive erosion pillars, one Lombardy's second city after Milan boasts a rich artistic heritage, ranging from Roman temples to the triumphalist Mussolini-era architecture of Piazza Vittoriale. The major sights include the Roman ruins around Piazza del Foro, consisting of the Tempio Capitolino – a three-part temple incorporating the Museo di Santa Giulia, Brescia's main gallery – and a theater; the Pinacoteca Civica Tosio Martinengo, containing works by Raphael and Lorenzo Lotto; and the Duomo on Piazza Paolo VI, with its 11th-century core and white 17th-century exterior. One of the relics in the Duomo is the banner from the Carroccio, or sacred ox cart, which served as a symbol for the medieval Lega Lombarda. Piazza della Loggia, where the market is held, is named after the Renaissance loggia, built in Palladian style. The 18th-century church of San Nazaro e San Celso on Via Bronzoni contains an altarpiece by Titian.

During Pavia's golden age, the city was the Lombards' capital, and later witnessed coronations of Charlemagne and Frederick Barbarossa.

The Roman Tempio Capitolino in Brescia

Even after it lost its status to Milan in 1359, Pavia remained an important city, and great Romanesque churches, tall towers, and other monuments still reflect this.

As well as the Charterhouse (Certosa) (see pp204–5), there is the sandstone Basilica di San Michele off Corso Garibaldi. The building was founded in the 7th century but largely rebuilt in the 12th after being struck by lightning. Its facade is decorated with symbols and friezes of fantastic animals, and inside there are intricate carvings on the columns; a chapel to the right of the main altar contains a 7th-century silver crucifix.

In the town center, around Piazza della Vittoria, are several ancient monuments, such as the medieval Broletto (town hall), with its 16th-century facade, and the Duomo, originally begun in 1488 and worked on in turn by Amadeo, Leonardo, and Bramante. The dome was added in the 1880s. The 11th-century tower that stood next to it collapsed suddenly in 1989. Crossing the river is the Ponte Coperto, a Renaissance covered bridge with a consecrated chapel halfway along it. The bridge was rebuilt after World War II.

Pavia is also the site of one of Europe's oldest (1361) and most respected universities, now residing around a series of Neo-Classical courtyards off Strada Nuova. This road continues northward to the 14th-century castle, now home to the Museo Civico.

Northwest of Piazza Castello is the 12th-century church, San Pietro in Ciel d'Oro. It no longer boasts the fine gilded ceiling after which it is named, but does still contain a magnificent shrine to St Augustine, whose bones were allegedly brought to Pavia in the 8th century. The body of the philosopher Boëthius (c.480–524) is buried down in the crypt.

Certosa di Pavia 12

The Charterhouse 5 miles (8 km) north of Pavia is the pinnacle of Renaissance architecture in Lombardy, a gloriously decorated Carthusian monastery built over 200 years. Conceived as a monument to Gian Galeazzo Visconti, the Milanese ruler who founded the complex in 1396, this shrine was created by the great 15th-century craftsman Giovanni Antonio Amadeo, among others, who used innovative techniques of relief work and multicolored decoration. The Certosa is still home to Carthusian monks, who are under a strict vow of silence.

Pietra Dura Altar

Several of the 17th-century altars in the chapels have lavish designs worked in semiprecious stones ("pietra dura").

★ Frescoes by Bergognone (c.1488–93)

This striking portrait of Christ is one of several frescoes by Bergognone in the transept and chapels, together with an altar painting of Sant' Ambrogio.

Tomb of Ludovico il Moro and Beatrice d'Este

This realistic marble portrait of Ludovico and his child bride was begun by Cristoforo Solari in 1497, some 11 years before Ludovico's death.

The choir stalls (15th century) are deeply carved and inlaid with intricate marquetry.

The tomb of Gian Galeazzo Visconti (1351–1402) is in the south transept.

The grilles date from c.1660.

The side chapels are richly decorated with marble, trompe l'oeil frescoes, and ornate altars and altarpieces.

The interior of the church is largely Gothic.

The Duomo on Piazza del Comune, Cremona

Cremona 13

76,000. Piazza del Comune 5 (0372 232 33). Wed & Sat. www.provincia.cremona.it

Cremona, a major agricultural market, is most famous for music, thanks to native sons such as the composer Claudio Monteverdi (1567–1643) and the violin-maker Stradivarius (1644–1737). The town itself is dominated by the beautiful Piazza del Comune.

The main attraction is the exuberant part-Romanesque Duomo, and its bell tower – said to be the tallest medieval tower in Italy – known as the Torrazzo; the two are linked by a Renaissance loggia. The wonderful facade is dominated by the large 13th-century rose window and by a number of intricate touches, including a small portico with statues of the Virgin and saints. Inside, the Duomo is sumptuously decorated with magnificent early 16th-century frescoes and Flemish tapestries, as well as paintings in the side chapels. The top of the Torrazzo offers sweeping views. Outside the Duomo, note the pulpit where itinerant preachers, including San Bernardino di Siena, addressed the local populace.

Next to the Duomo stands an octagonal 12th-century baptistry, while on the other side of the piazzas rise the arcades of the late 13th-century Loggia dei Militi where the town's lords once met, now a war memorial.

The Palazzo del Comune is the other major building on the square. It was rebuilt in the 1200s and houses the Stradivari family collection of violins.

The Museo Civico, in a 16th-century palazzo, contains paintings, wood carvings, the cathedral's treasure, ceramics, and a section on archaeology. The building also houses the Museo Stradivariano, which displays drawings, models, and tools from Stradivarius's workshop.

On the eastern outskirts of the town, on the road to Casal Maggiore, lies the Renaissance church of San Sigismondo (closed at lunchtime). It was here that Francesco Sforza married Bianca Visconti in 1441, and the church was subsequently rebuilt (from 1463) in honor of the event. The interior is richly decorated with 16th-century paintings, altarpieces, and frescoes by artists of the Cremona school (Campi family, Gatti, and Boccaccino).

Mantua. 4,600. from Mantua. Piazza d'Armi 1 (0375 520 39). Wed am. apply at tourist office. www.sabbioneta.org

Sabbioneta is the result of a delightful experiment in the theory of Renaissance architecture. It was built by Vespasiano Gonzaga Colonna (1531–91) as an ideal city, and within its hexagonal walls is a perfect gridwork arrangement of streets and buildings designed on a human scale. The finest buildings include the splendid Teatro All'Antica designed by Scamozzi, the Palazzo Ducale, and the frescoed Palazzo del Giardino, which may be visited as part of a tour of the town.

ANTONIO STRADIVARI AND HIS VIOLINS

The city of Cremona has been synonymous with violin-making since the 1530s, when Andrea Amati's instruments became sought after at the royal courts throughout Europe because of their superior tone to the medieval fiddle.

However, it was Antonio Stradivari, known as Stradivarius (1644–1737) – the pupil of Andrea Amati's grandson Niccolò – who raised the level of violin craftsmanship to genius. He used to go walking in the forests of the Dolomites in search of the perfect wood for his instruments. Stradivarius produced more than 1,100 violins in his workshop, of which more than 400 exist to this day. The main stopping-off points on a Stradivarius tour of Cremona are the Museo Stradivariano, the Museo Civico, and the great man's tombstone in the public gardens in Piazza Roma.

 Andrea Mantegna 6 (0376 432 432).
 Thu. www.turismo.mantova.it

Mantua (Mantova in Italian) is a striking place of fine squares and aristocratic architecture, bordered on three sides by lakes formed by the Mincio River. The climate can be humid as a result, but the city makes up for it with its cultural history: it was the birthplace of the poet Virgil and the playground of the Gonzaga dukes for three centuries. It was also the refuge where Shakespeare sent Romeo into exile from Verona, and the setting for Verdi's opera Rigoletto. These links are all celebrated in street names, signposts, and monuments around the town. The theatrical connections are enhanced by the 18th-century Teatro Accademico Bibiena, on Via Accademia, which Mozart's father claimed was the finest he had ever seen.

Mantua is famous for three attractive main squares: Piazza dell'Erbe, Piazza del Broletto, named after the 13th-century building adorned with a statue of the poet Virgil, and the cobbled Piazza Sordello. On one side of Piazza Sordello is the Duomo, with an 18th-century facade and fine interior stuccoes by Giulio Romano (c.1492–1546); on another side, the forbidding facade of the Palazzo Bonacolsi, with its tall prison tower. Piazza dell'Erbe is dominated by the Basilica di Sant'Andrea (15th century), designed largely by Leon Battista Alberti, the early Renaissance architect and theorist, and now flanked by an arcade of shops. The square is also notable for the appealing 11th-century Rotonda di San Lorenzo, and the part-13th-century Palazzo della Ragione with its 15th-century clock tower.

The vast, 500-room home of the Gonzaga family covers the northeastern corner of the town and incorporates Castello San Giorgio (a 14th-century fortress), a basilica, and the palace proper. The many works of art include an unfinished series of 15th-century frescoes by Pisanello, retelling episodes from the Arthurian legends; a large portrait by Rubens (17th century) of the ducal family in the Salone degli Arcieri; and – most absorbing of all – the frescoes by Mantegna in the Camera degli Sposi (1465–74). These portray Lodovico Gonzaga and members of his family and court in all their magnificence (pp208–9). The entire room is decorated with images of people, animals, and fantastic landscapes, and completed by a lighthearted trompe l'oeil ceiling of figures, putti, and a blue sky.

At the other end of town stands the early 16th-century Palazzo Tè, built by Giulio Romano for the Gonzaga family as a base from which they could go horse riding. Here the artworks conspire with the architecture to produce striking effects: in the Sala dei Giganti, for instance, the frescoed Titans seem to be tearing down the very pillars of the room. Also remarkable is the Sala di Amore e Psiche, decorated with erotic scenes from Apuleius' Golden Ass and said to celebrate Federico II's love for his mistress. Other rooms are lavishly painted with horses and signs of the Zodiac.

VALLE D'AOSTA AND PIEDMONT

Piedmont and the neighboring Valle D'Aosta are – apart from Turin and its cultural splendors – essentially countryside. To the north lie the Alps, with ski resorts such as Courmayeur, and the wild stretches of the Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso. To the south lie the vineyard-clad hills around Barolo, and seemingly endless fields of grain and rice, used in the local dish, risotto.

The northwest is also rich in culture. From the 11th century to the 18th, both the verdant Valle d'Aosta and Piedmont were part of the French-speaking principality of Savoy and enjoyed the influences of both sides of the Alpine divide. Even today, French and dialectal variants are still spoken in the remote valleys of Piedmont and in much of the Valle d'Aosta. It was only under Duke Emanuele Filiberto in the 16th century that the region was brought definitively into the Italian sphere of influence; and later it was to play the key role in the Risorgimento (see pp62–3), the ambitious movement that united Italy under a king from Piedmont. The vestiges of this history are to be found in the medieval castles of the Valle d'Aosta and the clusters of chapels known as sacri monti (sacred mountains) built into the foothills of the Alps. Piedmont also spawned a school of painting, which is in evidence in the small parish churches and excellent fine art collections in the region. The most impressive architecture in the northwest, however, is undoubtedly to be found in Turin, a much underrated and surprisingly elegant Baroque city which boasts, among other things, one of the best Egyptian museums in the world. Piedmont is also known for its industry – FIAT in Turin, Olivetti in Ivrea, Ferrero in Alba – but it has not forgotten its agricultural roots, and food and drink play an important role in the life of the region: the hills of southern Piedmont produce many of the great Italian red wines.

Exploring Valle d'Aosta and Piedmont

The vast flat plain of the Po, covered with the watery expanse of rice fields around Vercelli and Novara, eventually gives way, in the west, to the majestic heights of the Alps. Turin, the largest city in the area and the capital of Piedmont, stands at the edge of the plain, nestling almost in the shadow of the mountains. Further northwest, attractive Alpine valleys headed by dramatic peaks provide the setting for the traditional villages, ancient towns, and castles around Aosta. The Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso is an unspoilt tract of breathtaking scenery.

The Fréjus Pass and the Mont Blanc Tunnel link France with northwest Italy, while the tunnel under the Simplon or Sempione Pass provides a direct rail route from Switzerland. From the rest of Italy there are excellent freeway connections across the plain to Turin and up to Aosta. The region is well served with rail links, and buses connect the main towns and outlying resorts. Getting around the mountains is more difficult, making the car the best method of transportation.

Monte Bianco (Mont Blanc), the tallest mountain in the Alps at 15,780 ft (4,810 m), dominates the western Aosta valley and its attractive all-year resort, Courmayeur. A series of cable-car rides from Entrèves, 3 miles (5 km) farther north, leads to Chamonix. Passing its highest point (12,606 ft, 3,842 m) at Aiguille du Midi, it offers a spectacular view. The Monks' Hospice, founded around 1050 by St. Bernard of Aosta, lies just over the Swiss border (bring your passport), on the shores of a lovely lake; the dogs are still being trained here. The pretty Great St. Bernard valley itself includes the town of Etroubles, set in a forest of conifers, the hamlet of St-Oyen with its pretty parish church, and the resort of St-Rhémy-en-Bosses.

name to the valley) and the resort of Breuil-Cervinia. From Breuil a cable-car rises to the Plateau Rosa (11,418, ft, 3,480 m) offering dramatic views of the surrounding mountains. This entire area is a paradise for both skiers and walkers.

Higher up, the resort of Champoluc has a cable-car connection with the striking Testa Grigia (10,877 ft/3,315 m). The Gressoney valley is home to the Walser people, who speak a German dialect. ### MEDIEVAL CASTLES AND FORTS IN THE VALLE D'AOSTA

The mountains alone provided insufficient protection to the fragmented fiefs that covered the Valle d'Aosta in the Middle Ages. The medieval lords, who ruled ruthlessly over their small domains, built castles to enforce their often fragile power. Of the many built, 70 castles survive in some form to this day. You will pass a number of them if you drive into Italy by the Mont Blanc tunnel; they stretch from Aosta to Pont-St.-Martin.

Originally Aosta castles were designed to be defensive and threatening, such as the looming tower of Montmayer, perched high on a huge rock by the Valgrisenche valley. Nearby, the equally forbidding dark tower of Ussel throws a melancholy, brooding watchfulness over the valley.

Fénis and Verrès represent an important shift in the function of the feudal castle. Both Fénis, a splendid 14th-century showpiece (see p184), and Verrès were not just important military outposts but also examples of palatial opulence and good living. Issogne too furthered this luxurious trend with its elaborate frescoes, loggias, and fountains.

Decoration was also important to King Victor Emmanuel II, owner of Sarre, who turned the halls of his fortress into a plush hunting lodge. The owners of Châteland, set in some of the highest vineyards in Europe, placed fine wine production alongside military aims.

Lying on a plain surrounded by dramatic mountains, the town of Aosta provides a remarkable mixture of ancient culture and spectacular scenery. The Romans captured it from the Salassian Gauls in 25 BC, and Aosta is still dotted with fine Roman architecture built in honor of Emperor Augustus – indeed the town was once called Augusta Praetoria, its name evolving into Aosta over the centuries. The medieval town was later fortified by the Challant family and then by the dukes of Aosta, who added towers to the old Roman walls.

Modern Aosta is a bustling crossroads for local industries and tourists on their way to the mountains. The center, however, still consists of a delightful grid of large squares and surprising architectural treasures, which justify Aosta's nickname of "Rome of the Alps."

In Roman times, entry to Aosta was over the bridge to the east of the town (beyond the modern bridge) and through the Arch of Augustus. This triumphal arch is today married by a roof added in the 18th century. Ahead stands the Porta Pretoria, its double row of stone arches flanked by a medieval tower; the gateway originally stood about 8 ft (2.5 m) higher than at present. Also worth a look is the 65-ft (20-m) high facade of the Roman Theater. The elliptical Amphitheater, a little to the north, is reached through the convent of San Giuseppe. In the old town, next to the cathedral, lies the Roman Forum, or marketplace, with its huge cryptoporticus: the function of this impressive underground gallery remains the subject of speculation.

East of the town walls is the architectural highlight of Aosta: a medieval complex of church buildings. Sant'Orso itself has an unusual Gothic facade with a tall, narrow portal. The interior has 11th-century frescoes, a crypt of the same date holding the tomb of St. Orso, patron saint of Aosta, and a beautiful cloister with columns and capitals carved into highly detailed figures and animals.

Environs: The castle at Fénis (see p214), 8 miles (12 km) east, is one of the few castles in the Aosta valley with a well-preserved interior, including beautiful frescoes and wooden galleries. Issogne, 23 miles (38 km) southeast, is the setting for another highly decorated castle, remodeled around 1490. ## Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso 6

A breathtaking wilderness of dramatic mountains and lush meadows, the Gran Paradiso is Italy's foremost national park, created in 1922 from part of a former royal hunting reserve of the house of Savoy. It is mainly a summer resort for walkers due to its unspoiled scenery, rare wildlife, and unusual Alpine flowers, though there is also cross-country skiing during the winter months. The king of the park is the ibex, a relative of the goat family all but extinct in the rest of Europe. The park is also prized by naturalists for its chamois, ptarmigan, golden eagles, rare butterflies, and marmots.

On the southern, Piedmont side of the extensive Parco Nazionale del Gran Paradiso (see pp216–17) lies the small resort of Ceresole Reale. The route from Cuornè traverses rolling countryside and follows the S460 along a narrow gorge with a cascading stream. At Noasca, a spectacular waterfall may be seen high above the houses.

Ceresole Reale lies in a basin surrounded by meadows and forests of larch, and framed by mountains – the Gran Paradiso range to the north, Levanna to the southwest – which are reflected in the clear waters of a spectacular artificial mountain lake, which is actually a dammed reservoir, providing energy to supply Turin with electricity. This nevertheless unspoiled corner of the country is a good base for walking, climbing, and hiking, and also offers facilities for skiing during the winter.

The closest ring of mountain resorts to Turin, and as a consequence popular for weekend excursions, is also known colloquially as the Via Lattea or “Milky Way.” Villages such as Bardonecchia and Sauze d'Oulx preserve traditional old stone and wood buildings that have been a feature of the region for centuries. The small church in Bardonecchia has, in addition, a fine 15th-century carved choir. In contrast, the super-modern complex at Sestriere was purpose-built to accommodate skiers in winter and hikers in summer.

From Bardonecchia a chairlift operates some of the way up Punta Colomion, which rises immediately to the south of the resort. The summit, at 6,738 ft (2,054 m), offers fine views, and numerous hiking and walking possibilities.

This somewhat forbidding abbey complex is perched on a ridge halfway up Monte Pirchiriano, at 3,156 ft (962 m). Its monastic community was founded around the year 1000, possibly on the site of a previous sanctuary, though the exterior looks every bit as much a fortress as the spiritual refuge that it was for 600 years.

During its prime, the abbey attracted pilgrims on their way to Rome, and as a result it grew enormously wealthy and powerful, controlling over 100 other abbeys in Italy, France, and Spain. It was subsequently looted several times, despite being fortified, before falling into decline and eventually being suppressed in 1662.

The sanctuary is reached by climbing 154 steep steps hewn out of the rock, which offer wonderful views over the surrounding countryside and up to the Alps. At the very top of this stairway, known as the Scalone dei Morti (Stairway of the Dead), is the Romanesque Porta dello Zodiaco, a doorway carved with creatures and symbols relating to the signs of the zodiac. Beyond the doorway a few more steps lead into the church itself, which dates from the 12th–13th centuries and incorporates traces of an earlier building. The interior houses 15th- and 16th-century paintings and frescoes, and a 16th-century triptych by the Piedmontese artist Defendente Ferrari. The crypt holds the tombs of the early dukes and princes of the house of Savoy-Carignano.

On a fine day, this small town perched beside two glacier-fed lakes and encircled by tall mountains looks breathtakingly beautiful. Avigliana is overlooked by a castle, first erected in the mid-10th century but now in ruins, which was once the home of the counts of Savoy. Until the early 15th century the town was one of their favorite bases.

The medieval houses here are largely unspoiled, particularly in the two main piazzas, Santa Maria and Conte Rosso. Other buildings of note are the Casa della Porta Ferrata and the 15th-century Casa dei Savoia, both on Via XX Settembre.

Pinerolo lies in an attractive setting beside hills at the confluence of the Lemina and Chisone valleys. The town was the capital of the Acaia family, a branch of the house of Savoy, and in the 14th and 15th centuries it was known for the cultural atmosphere that prevailed here under the family's patronage. However, the town enjoyed none of the stability of Turin: it was occupied by the French five times between the 15th and 18th centuries. During the 17th century the French demolished many of the town's ancient buildings in order to make Pinerolo a defensive stronghold; among the political prisoners allegedly held here was the notorious "Man in the Iron Mask." Today the town is a busy center of commerce.

A number of monumental buildings do remain, however. The Duomo, at the center of the town, was remodeled in Gothic style in the 15th–16th centuries and has a fine portal and an impressive bell tower. Via Principi d'Acaia climbs up to the 14th-century palace of the princes of Acaia, and to the 15th-century church of San Maurizio, where the Acaia princes are buried; beside it rises a 14th-century bell tower.

Turin 15

Mention Turin (Torino) and most people will think of industry and prosperity. It is certainly an economic powerhouse but it is also a town of grace and charm, with superb Baroque architecture and excellent museums, set against the dramatic scenery of the foothills of the Alps. Turin is also, of course, home to the famous Turin Shroud, the FIAT car company, and the Juventus soccer team. The 2006 Winter Olympics were held here.

Exploring Turin

Though settled by the Romans (Porta Palatina is an impressive 1st-century AD relic), and the seat of a university since the Middle Ages, Turin came into its own only after 1563, when Emanuele Filiberto of Savoy moved his capital here. Three centuries of prosperity ensued. Turin then became the base for Italy's unification movement and, from 1861 to 1865, the capital of the new kingdom of Italy. Subsequently its main power was economic. In 1899 the Agnelli family created the car company FIAT (Fabbrica Italiana Automobili Torino), which grew to be one of the biggest in Europe. After World War II, Turin attracted thousands of poor Italians from the south who came to work in its factories. Though there have been social conflicts and labor disputes as a result, managers and workers unite over soccer: the Juventus team is owned by the Agnelli family.

The sober square bell tower, which predates the rest of the church by 30 years, stands in refreshing contrast to Turin's sumptuous Baroque buildings; its top was designed by Filippo Juvarra in 1720. Inside, the Duomo is heavy with statuary and paintings. On the right side of the church is the Cappella della Sacra Sindone (Chapel of the Holy Shroud), which is actually incorporated into the Palazzo Reale (see p216). The chapel is a remarkable feat, designed by Guarini (1624–83), with an extraordinary mesh-like cupola; the exterior view is equally eccentric.

Detail of the mysterious 12th-century Turin Shroud

THE TURIN SHROUD

The most famous – and most dubious – holy relic of them all is kept in Turin's Duomo. The shroud, said to be the winding-sheet in which the body of Christ was wrapped after his crucifixion, owes its fame to the fact that the shroud bears the imprint of a crucified man with a wound in his side, and bruises from what might have been a crown of thorns.

The shroud is one of the most famous medieval relics. Its early history is unclear, but the house of Savoy was in possession of it around 1450, and had it displayed in Guarini's chapel from 1694. The "original" shroud – which sits in a silver casket inside an iron box within a marble coffer – is not on view, though a replica is, together with a welter of scientific explanations as to the shroud's possible origins. In 1988, however, the myth of the shroud was finally exploded: a radio carbon dating test showed that it dates back no farther than the 12th century. The shroud nevertheless remains an object of religious veneration.

Exploring Turin

The city of Turin is blessed with numerous interesting museums, which are housed in splendid palazzi and civic buildings. The center itself is relatively small, with broad, straight streets, often bordered with historic cafés and shops, which are pleasant places to stroll along. The city is also famous for its innovative cuisine and boasts some of the country's finest restaurants.

It was the booty he brought back that formed the basis of this very fine collection of Egyptian artifacts. On the first floor, the items on display include monumental sculptures and reconstructed temples; upstairs, there are collections of papyrus and everyday objects. Among the most impressive sculptures are a black granite Ramses II (13th century BC, or 19th dynasty), the slightly earlier Amenophis II, and the basalt figure of Gemenef-Har-Bak, a vizier from the 26th dynasty. The Sala della Nubia contains a reconstruction of the 15th-century BC Rock Temple of Ellesiya.

Extraordinary wall and tomb paintings are displayed on the upper floor, together with items of daily use such as the tools used for measuring, weaving, fishing, and hunting. The 14th-century BC tomb of Kha and Merit, complete with the food, tools, and ornaments buried with them for the afterlife, is particularly fascinating. The papyrus collection is beautiful and of enormous interest to scholars: these documents have been vital to modern understanding of Egyptian language, customs, and history – one document, the Papiro dei Re (Royal Papyrus), crucially lists all the pharaohs up to the 17th dynasty, with their dates.

The top two floors are the setting for a stunning array of works by Italian, French, Flemish, and Dutch masters.

The collection was originally begun in the mid- to late 1400s, and has been expanded over the centuries since. It is grouped in regional schools. The Piedmontese section includes masterworks by Gaudenzio Ferrari (c.1480–1546) and two early 16th-century paintings by Defendente Ferrari. Among works of particular interest from other Italian schools are Antonio and Piero Pollaiuolo's 15th-century Tobias and the Archangel Raphael, and the Ritratto di

The section on Dutch and Flemish art includes important works such as Jan Van Eyck's St. Francis (15th century) and Rembrandt's Old Man Sleeping (17th century), as well as several portraits by Van Dyck, including a study of the children of King Charles I of England, and his Principe Tommaso di Savoia-Carignano (1634). The main facade of Palazzo Carignano by Guarini

This Baroque palazzo is not only Guarini's masterwork, it is arguably the finest building in Turin, with its magnificent facade and ornate rotunda. It was built in 1679 for the Carignano family – an offshoot of the main house of Savoy and ancestors of the Italian kings – but came into its own in the 1800s. The first king of Italy, Victor Emmanuel II, was born here in 1829. After Italy was unified in 1861 by a series of referenda, the former royal residence was used as the first national parliament building.

The palazzo is home to the Museo Nazionale del Risorgimento, which through paintings and a collection of artifacts (housed in the rooms where history was made), tells the story of unification. It introduces Mazzini, Cavour, and Garibaldi – key figures in the Risorgimento (see pp62–3).

Running through the historic center, Turin's main street Via Roma leads from Piazza Castello (north) through Piazza San Carlo to the distinctive arched facade of Stazione Porta Nuova (south). Via Roma is a magnificent concourse lined with stylish shops and shaded arcades, interrupted only by cobbled squares. A grid pattern of side streets branches off either side of Via Roma, revealing additional shopping arcades.

Piazza San Carlo

The ensemble of Baroque architecture on this square, now a pedestrian zone, has earned it the nickname of "Turin's drawing room." At its southern end are the twin churches of Santa Cristina and San Carlo, both built in the 1630s, though Santa Cristina has a Baroque facade, crowned with statues, that was designed by Juvarra in the early 18th century.

At the center of the square stands a 19th-century statue of Duke Emanuele Filiberto. The work, by Carlo Marrocchetti, has become an emblem of the city. At the corners of the square, frescoes depict the Holy Shroud. The Galleria San Federico, in the square's northwestern corner, is a stylish shopping arcade.

Piazza San Carlo is known for its society cafés. In one such establishment, in 1786, Antonio Benedetto Carpano invented the drink known as vermouth, which is still very popular all over Italy today.

Turin: Symbols of the City

Turin's architecture mirrors the city's transition from monarchic power to industrial power. Witness the ostentation of the Baroque apartments of the Savoy family in Palazzo Reale; and contrast them with the futuristic Mole Antonelliana, a tall structure that heralded the dawn of the modern industrial age. Much of Turin's history in the 20th century has been dominated by the automobile: FIAT is synonymous with Turin. For the curious, the city's extensive auto museum is worth a visit, since it maps out the history of vintage and modern Italian car design.

One wing of the Palazzo Reale, on the northern side of the main square, provides the splendid setting for one of the most extensive and breathtaking collections of arms and armor in the world.

Opened to the public in 1837, the armory originally belonged to the house of Savoy. The fine rooms, such as the splendid Galleria Beaumont, designed by Juvarra in 1733, hold treasures ranging from Roman and Etruscan times to the 1800s. On a hill to the east of Turin, accessible by car or tram, stands the superb Baroque basilica of Superga, built by Juvarra in 1717–31. The commission came from Duke Vittorio Amedeo II, in fulfillment of a vow made to the Virgin Mary in 1706 while the French were besieging the duke and his army in Turin.

The beautiful yellow and white facade is dominated by a large portico designed like a Classical temple, with a 213-ft (65-m) high dome immediately beyond. It is flanked by twin bell towers. The interior is magnificent, decorated in light blue and yellow, and contains numerous fine paintings and carvings.

Underneath the basilica lies the great mausoleum that houses the tombs of the kings, princes, and princesses of Savoy from the 18th and 19th centuries. The victims of the 1949 air crash, including the city's soccer team, are commemorated on a plaque behind the basilica.

Lake Orta is one of Italy's least visited lakes – unjustly, as it is delightfully set among the foothills of the Alps.

The lake's main resort is Orta San Giulio, a small town containing handsome palazzi, and houses decorated with wrought-iron balconies. In the lakeside Piazza Principale stands the Palazzo della Comunità, a frescoed building of 1582 resting on arcades. A cobbled pathway leads up to the 15th-century church of Santa Maria Assunta (rebuilt in the 17th century), with a Romanesque doorway and an interior that is richly decorated with 17th-century frescoes and paintings.

Above Orta San Giulio is the sanctuary of Sacro Monte, built from 1591 to 1770 and dedicated to St. Francis of Assisi. A winding path, offering lovely views of the lake, climbs to the church. The path is lined by 21 chapels, most of them Baroque, in which frescoes and life-size figure groups by various artists depict scenes from the life of St. Francis.

In the center of the lake rises the picturesque Isola San Giulio. The island was said to have been liberated from snakes and monsters by the 4th-century Christian preacher Julius, from whom the island's name derives. The basilica here is notable for its 12th-century black marble pulpit decorated with wild animals and birds, and for the 15th-century frescoes – including one attributed to Gaudenzio Ferrari, of the Virgin and Child Enthroned.

Fresco detail of a horseman (17th century) by Morazzone in San Gaudenzio, Novara Novara has distant origins as the Roman city of Nubliaria – meaning “surrounded in mist.” Nowadays its delightful arcaded streets and squares, and historic buildings, exude a quiet affluence. Many of the most important buildings stand around Piazza della Repubblica. They include the beautiful Renaissance courtyard of the Broletto (town hall), with its graceful 15th-century red-brick arcades and covered stairway. The buildings now house a small Museo Civico, comprising an archaeological section and a picture gallery.

Across the piazza rises the Duomo, rebuilt by the architect Alessandro Antonelli in around 1865 in Neo-Classical style, with a huge central doorway. The interior contains dramatic Renaissance paintings of the Vercelli school and Flemish tapestries, as well as the remains of an earlier sanctuary on this site: these include the frescoed 12th-century chapel of San Siro and the 15th-century cloisters. The octagonal Baptistry next door dates in part from the 5th century and is painted with medieval frescoed scenes of the terrible Apocalypse.

A few streets away stands the Basilica di San Gaudenzio. It is strikingly crowned by an elongated four-tiered dome and spire, designed by Antonelli, and reminiscent of his Mole Antonelliana in Turin (see p224). At the top of the spire, which is 400 ft (121 m) high, is a statue of San Gaudenzio himself. Inside, the late 16th-century church contains a fine collection of Renaissance and Baroque paintings by artists from Piedmont: these include a notable 17th-century battle scene by Tanzio da Varallo, a 16th-century altarpiece by Gaudenzio Ferrari, and a fresco painting by Pier Francesco Morazzone (c.1572–1626).

50,000. FS Viale Garibaldi 90 (0161 58 002). Tue & Fri. www.atvalsesiavercelli.it

Vercelli is the rice capital of Europe, set in a vast plain of paddy fields that provide a sight of shimmering sheets of water stretching far into the distance. Vercelli itself also developed its own school of painting in the 16th century, and has one major architectural treasure, the 13th-century Basilica di Sant'Andrea.

The basilica, standing just across from the railroad station, is famous as the first example of Italian architecture to be influenced by the Gothic style of northern France – note the beautiful vaulted nave and the flying buttresses, typical Gothic elements. Overall, however, the basilica remains a stunning achievement in Romanesque architecture, built from 1219 to 1227 as part of an abbey for the papal legate Cardinal Guala Bicheri. The facade, curiously, changes color half-way up, the blue-gray of the lower part turning to red and white in the twin towers; these are linked by a double arcade. A carving attributed to Antelami (12th century) adorns the central lunette.

The three-aisled interior is gently illuminated through rose windows. The muted decoration is largely focused on the vaulting, which is supported by tall, slender shafts. Off the north side is the simple 13th-century cloister, beautifully framed by arcades rising from clustered columns.

Vercelli's other important historic buildings are not far away, including the imposing 16th-century Duomo, the Ospedale Maggiore (13th century), and the church of San Cristoforo, with frescoes and a particularly fine Madonna (both c.1529) painted by Gaudenzio Ferrari.

The Museo Borgogna is the best place to admire the masterworks of the Vercelli school. The main shopping street, Corso Libertà, has a handful of attractive 15th-century houses and courtyards.

(see pp182–3) and also a tranquil and noble city of medieval towers, elegant churches, and warm red roofs.

Just north of the main railroad station lies the Piazza del Campo del Palio, the largest square in Asti and formerly the site of its annual horse race, now in Piazza Alfieri. The race, held toward the end of September to coincide with the local wine fair, rivals the Palio in Siena (see p341) for outrageous horsemanship and medieval pageantry.

Beyond this square lies the triangular-shaped Piazza Alfieri. A statue here commemorates the local poet and dramatist Vittorio Alfieri (1749–1803), in whose honor both this square and the main street were renamed.

Corso Alfieri runs the entire length of the old city center. At its eastern end stands the 15th-century church of San Pietro in Consavia, with its terracotta decoration, 17th-century frescoes, and attractive cloister. Beside it is the circular Romanesque baptistry which dates from the 10th–12th centuries; it was once the church of the knights of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, who had their headquarters here.

West of Piazza Alfieri is the Collegiata di San Secondo (13th–15th century), named after Asti's patron saint, which houses a Renaissance polypych by Gandolfo d'Asti and 15th-century frescoes. The area around the western section of Corso Alfieri contains a few of the medieval towers for which the town was once famous; they include the Torre dei Comentini, the very elegant Torre Troyana, and, at the far end, the Torre Ropa. This was built on the ruins of a tower in which San Secondo, a Roman soldier, was held. The nearby 14th-century Gothic Duomo has a 15th-century porch and, inside, 18th-century frescoes, and two 12th- to 13th-century carvings on the west corner of the transept.

“Cuneo” in Italian means wedge-shaped, and this perfectly describes the sliver of land that the town occupies at the confluence of two rivers, the Gesso and the Stura di Demonte. In early November the town hosts the regional cheese fair, with unusual local cheese varieties.

The town centers on a large square, Piazza Galimberti, with its old arcades, where the traders come to hawk their wares every Tuesday. Much of the town was rebuilt in the 18th and 19th centuries, providing Cuneo with wide, tree-lined boulevards, though the impressive viaduct that takes the railroad line into town dates from the 1930s. The deconsecrated 13th-century church of San Francesco has a fine 15th-century portal.

The series of caves contains remarkable stalactite columns and shapes that have formed over many hundreds of thousands of years. Guided tours lead through different chambers – some of them surprisingly vast – following the underground rivers and lakes. The skeleton of a prehistoric bear, Ursus spelaeus, which was discovered here, is also on display.

One of the prettier resorts of the Maritime Alps, Gressio is no more than a sprinkling of houses spread out over the hills, surrounded by woods of chestnut trees. It is also a popular spa.

According to legend, the waters here have miraculous powers: in about AD 980 an octogenarian nobleman found instant relief from his kidney and circulatory problems by drinking the mineral-rich water. Since then, the waters have been drunk for their remedial properties – linked in particular with the relief of diuretic and digestive problems – and for their refreshing taste.

Environ: About 4 miles (10 km) west of Gressio stands the Castello di Casotto, the dramatically sited summer palace used by the house of Savoy. The royal family used to come here to enjoy the local mineral water, the attractive scenery, and the exceptionally pure air of the hills.

The town of Ormea, 7 miles (12 km) southwest, is interesting for its ruined 11th-century castle, its church with late 14th-century Gothic frescoes, and its attractive houses.

LIGURIA

Liguria is a long, thin coastal strip nestling at the foot of vine-covered mountains. Here pastel-colored houses bask in the Mediterranean sun, while their gardens, flourishing in the mild climate, are a riot of colorful plants. In contrast with resorts like Portofino and even San Remo, the bustling city of Genoa, for centuries a trading port of immense power, is the only major population center.

Genoa has a long history as a seafaring power, achieving greatness first as a trading post with ancient Greece and Phoenicia, and later, as the capital of a small commercial empire that at one stage eclipsed even Venice. The great sea admiral Andrea Doria came from Genoa, as did the 15th-century explorer of the Americas, Christopher Columbus.

Genoa's rise began in the 12th century, when it succeeded in beating the Saracen pirates that plagued the Ligurian coast. Thereafter, the maritime republic prospered, profiting from the Crusades to set up trading posts in the Middle East and marshaling its naval might to humble its rivals. The golden age lasted from the 16th to the mid-17th century, and included the glorious reign of Andrea Doria, who enriched the city by financing the wars of Genoa's European allies through the offices of the city's bank. Factionalism among the ruling aristocracy, however, and foreign conquest, by the French in 1668 and the Austrians in 1734, led to the region's decline. It was only in the early 19th century, with unification fervor spreading thanks to native son Giuseppe Mazzini and the revolutionary Garibaldi, that Liguria ever recaptured a glimpse of its former prominence. Today, sheltered by the steep slopes that rise from the sea, faded, elegant mansions lie along the coast, particularly in San Remo, where aristocrats came to spend the winter at the end of the 19th century.

Green shutters and rich ochre walls characterize the houses of Portofino

Exploring Liguria

Liguria divides neatly into two parts. The western coastline, known as the Riviera di Ponente, is a thin strip of coastal plain stretching across to the French border, while the eastern coastline, or Riviera di Levante, is more rugged and picturesque, descending directly into the sea. Between the two lengths of coast lies the region's capital and biggest port, Genoa (Genova). The faded elegance of the tranquil coastal villages contrasts with this cramped and busy port which snakes along the coast, hemmed in between the sea and the mountains rising steeply behind it.

GETTING AROUND

If you keep to the coast, transportation in Liguria is straightforward. The A10-E80 freeway, becoming the A12-E80 at Genoa, and a mainline railroad hug the shore from the French border to Tuscany. The main stations along the route are at Ventimiglia, San Remo, Imperia, Savona, Genoa, and La Spezia. There are good road and rail links between Genoa and Milan and Turin. Access to inland Liguria is harder because of the mountains. Bus services link many of the coastal towns with the prettiest hill villages. You can explore some of the countryside by car by following the smaller routes, such as the S28 from Imperia toward Gressio in Piedmont, the S334 from Albisola, or the S456 from Voltri toward Milan.

San Remo is a pleasant resort of faded elegance. The composer Tchaikovsky, Alfred Nobel (the father of modern explosives), and the poet Edward Lear all stayed in the stuccoed mansions of the palm-lined seafont avenue, the Corso Imperatrice. The focus of the town, then as now, is the Casino. A little farther down the Corso stands the ornate Russian Orthodox church of San Borililo.

The old town, La Pigna (fir cone), is a huddle of narrow lanes with medieval houses and pastel-colored shutters. A bus service goes from San Remo to San Romolo, a small village 2,579 ft (786 metres) above sea level that offers beautiful views of the area.

An enchanting flower market is held on Corso Garibaldi (6–8am, Jun–Oct), while the Italian Song Festival takes place here in February.

The town was rebuilt closer to the sea and since then the original village has been taken over by artists, who have restored some interiors, providing a venue for summer concerts and exhibitions.

Until the Middle Ages, the Roman port of Albium Ingaunum played an important maritime role. The sea, however, gradually moved farther out, leaving the town, now called Albenga, stranded on the Centa River. Most striking now is its Romanesque brick architecture, in particular the three 13th-century towers clustered

Street by Street: Genoa 9

There is something refreshingly rough-edged about Genoa (Genova in Italian), Italy's most important commercial port. In contrast to the genteel resorts along the neighboring coast, the narrow streets of the old town are the haunts of sailors and streetwalkers.

With its natural harbor and the mountains to protect it, Genoa rose to prominence as a sea-based power. During the 16th century Andrea Doria cemented Genoa's importance, and also proved an astute patron of the arts.

Piazza San Matteo

The houses and church of San Matteo were built by the Doria family in 1278. Palazzo Quartara has a bas relief of St. George above the doorway.

San Lorenzo

Palazzo Ducale

Once the seat of the doges of Genoa, this elegant building with its two fine 16th-century courtyards and arcades now contains a major arts and cultural center.

This grandiose cemetery, just over the hills northeast of Genoa along the Bisagno River, is so big (81.5 acres, 33 ha) that it has its own internal bus system. Founded in 1844, its tombs and monuments make up an eerie city of miniature cathedrals, Egyptian temples, and Art Nouveau palaces. Its most famous resident is Giuseppe Mazzini, the Genoese revolutionary who died near Pisa in 1872.

Environs: Until World War II, Pegli, 4 miles (6 km) west of the city center, was a popular weekend retreat for rich Genoese. Now it forms part of the city, but maintains an air of tranquillity thanks to its parks and two villas, the 19th-century Villa Durazzo-Pallavicini and the 16th-century Villa Doria. The latter houses a naval history museum celebrating Genoa's glorious past: you can see compasses, astro-

Nervi, 5 miles (8 km) to the east of the city, is another former resort town, famous for its sea-front promenade, the  Passeggiata Anita Garibaldi (named after Garibaldi's wife). The walk follows a route that has been cut into the rock face, giving panoramic views of the coast.

The lush Parco Municipale is another feature of Nervi. It once formed the grounds of two aristocratic villas – the Villa Serra and the Villa Gropallo. The former, on Via Capolungo, now houses the Galleria d'Arte Moderna featuring modern Italian painting. The Villa Luxoro on Via Aurelia is notable for its collection of clocks, fabrics, furniture, and lace. The area is also famous as Garibaldi's departure point when he set off for Sicily with his Mille (the famous "Thousand" men) to help bring about the unification of Italy. A large monument at Quarto dei Mille, about 2 miles (3 km) back toward the city, marks the place where the volunteers met in May 1860 to follow the intrepid revolution-ary (see pp62–3). Villa Grimaldi houses an art and sculpture collection showing late 18th- and early 19th-century works by Fattori, Boldi, and Messina.

Built on a pine-wooded slope, Camogli is a pretty fishing village where seashells adorn the pastelpainted house walls, and the smell of frying fish wafts out from the small restaurants into the streets. Near the pebble beach and fishing port is the medieval Castello della Dragonara.

Camogli celebrates its famous festival of the Blessing of the Fish on the second Sunday of May when sardines are fried in a huge pan 13 ft (4 m) in diameter. The fish is distributed free to all-comers.

Genoa. Portofino. Via Roma 35 (0185 26 90 24). www.turismoinliguria.it

Portofino is the most exclusive harbor and resort town in Italy, crammed with the yachts of the wealthy. Visitors can reach Portofino by road (cars are not allowed into the village), or boat, from the resort of Santa Margherita Ligure. Above the town are the church of San Giorgio, containing relics said to be of the dragon-slaying saint, and a castle.

On the other side of the peninsula, which visitors have to reach on foot (a two-hour walk) or by boat, is the Abbazia di San Fruttuoso, named after a 3rd-century saint whose followers were shipwrecked here and, according to legend, protected by three lions. The white abbey buildings, set among pines and olive trees, date mostly from the 11th century, although the imposing Torre dei Doria was added 500 years later.

You can take a boat to try to locate the Cristo degli Abissi, a bronze statue of Christ by Guido Galletti that sits on Historians know Rapallo as the place where two post-World War I treaties were signed, while movie buffs might recognize it from the 1954 movie The Barefoot Contessa, which was shot here. Rapallo was also a haven for writers such as D. H. Lawrence and Ezra Pound. Its villas still have a patrician feel to them, as do the riding stables, golf course, and tennis courts. The palmined esplanade ends in a small 16th-century castle, in which art exhibitions are occasionally held.

A cable-car from the center of the town leads to the 16th-century Santuario di Montaleggro, which houses a Byzantine icon said to possess miraculous powers.

The Cinque Terre are five self-contained villages – Monterosso al Mare, Vernazza, Corniglia, Manarola and Riomaggiore – located on the rocky coastline of the Riviera di Levante. Clinging dramatically to the steep cliffs, these villages are linked only by an ancient footpath known as the Sentiero Azzurro (Blue Path), which offers spectacular views of the rocky coastlines and terraced vineyards that produce the local dry white Cinque Terre wines. The footpath also provides access to secluded beaches.

These days the five villages suffer from some depopulation. The largest, Monterosso al Mare, on the northwestern edge of the Cinque Terre, overlooks a wide bay with its own sandy beach. Vernazza, farther down the coast, has streets linked by steep steps or aripaie. Corniglia, perched at the pinnacle of rocky terraces, seems untouched by the passage of time, as does Manarola, which is linked by the famous Via dell'Amore, or Lovers' Lane, to Riomaggiore, a 15-minute walk away.

The best way to visit the villages is by boat (from La Spezia, Lerici, or Porto Venere) or by train (La Spezia–Genoa railroad line).

This stretch of coast, along the Gulf of La Spezia or Poets' Gulf, was once popular with such literati as Yeats and D. H. Lawrence. The village of San Terenzo, across the bay from Lerici, was where the poet Shelley spent the last four years of his life. It was from his home, the Casa Magni, that he set out in 1822 on a voyage to meet Leigh Hunt in Livorno. Tragically, he was shipwrecked near Viareggio and drowned.

The popular resort of Lerici sits on the edge of a beautiful bay overlooked by pastel-colored houses. The forbidding medieval Castello di Lerici (13th century), built by the Pisans and later passed to the Genoese, dominates the holiday villas below. Today it houses a museum of geopaleontology and hosts art exhibitions and concerts.

Central Italy at a Glance

The central regions of Italy are popular with visitors because they offer a range of beautiful landscapes and towns rich in culture and history, including outstanding churches, towers, and palaces. Emilia-Romagna is home to the impressive Po Delta that provides a haven for wildlife. Tuscany is dominated by Florence, one of Italy's most celebrated centers. Umbria and Le Marche offer gentle pastoral countryside and picturesque hilltowns. The major sights of this rewarding area are shown here.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa and the Duomo (see pp324–6), splendid examples of 12th- and 13th-century architecture, are decorated with Arabic-inspired, complex geometric patterns.

The Duomo and the Baptistry, set in the heart of Florence, dominate the city (see pp280–82). The dome dwarfs many surrounding buildings.

The Flavors of Central Italy

Emilia-Romagna is Italy's gourmet capital, and home to Parmesan, Parma ham, and balsamic vinegar. Bologna has earned the epithet La Grassa ("the fat") for rich dishes in which butter, cheese, and velvety sauces feature strongly. The lush lands and rolling hills of Tuscany, Umbria, and Le Marche tend to offer simpler flavors and more rustic, peasant cuisine. Top-quality pork from the Cinta Senese pig, beef from the Chianina cattle of Tuscany, fabulous funghi and Umbrian truffles, superb game, and saffron-scented fish soups from the coast of Le Marche are all gastronomic delights of Central Italy.

EMILIA-ROMAGNA

Not only is this rich, fertile land the home of many of Italy's most classic ingredients, but it has also given the world bolognese sauce (ragù). The authentic sauce contains some 20 ingredients and is usually served with tagliatelle – never spaghetti. Pasta is an art form here.

Legend has it that tagliatelle was invented in honor of Lucrezia Borgia's golden hair, while tortellini pasta is said to be modeled on the shape of Venus's navel.

The region's pork butchers are the most famous in Italy, making excellent sausages, salumi, and mortadella, and using every part of the animal including the trotters, which are stuffed to form the local specialty zamponi. Emilia and coastal Romagna were once two provinces, and there is still a culinary distinction between them. While Emilia's gastronomy is liberally laced with butter, cheese, and mushrooms, Romagna's keynotes tend to be olive oil, garlic, and onions – and fish. The Adriatic in this region teems with life and is an especially good catching ground for turbot (rombo) – the "pheasant of the sea."

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Crostini alla Toscana

Tuscan olive oil is outstanding in quality. It has many uses and is an integral part of crostini, slices of toasted bread smeared with olive oil on which different toppings are spread, such as chicken livers in crostini alla Toscana. Salumi producers are a great feature of the region and prosciutto di cinghiale (wild boar ham) is a rich, gamey delicacy. As well as tagliatelle al ragù in Bologna, other very popular pastas include tortellini and tortelloni (the latter being larger than the former), often filled with cheese, butter, and herbs. Panforte is the Italian Christmas specialty cake – a delicious confection of fruits, nuts, honey, sugar, and spices. Try also ricciarelli, diamond-shaped almond biscuits, and torta di riso – a rich, golden cake made with rice.

Cacciucco A fish and seafood soup from Livorno, flavored with herbs and tomatoes and ladled over gartlicky toast.

Just part of a gigantic wheel of Parmigiano-Reggiano, or Parmesan

TUSCANY

Tuscany is the orchard and vegetable garden of Italy. It is also famous for its red meat, especially from the prized Valdichiana cattle, from south of Arezzo. Pork is also excellent, and the Tuscan passion for hunting ensures that hare, pheasant, and wild boar, often served with local chestnuts, feature prominently on menus.

If there is one staple Tuscan ingredient it is fruity olive oil, liberally used in cooking and for seasoning everything from bread to salads, vegetables, stews, and soups.

Broths and soups are very popular, often made with beans, especially white cannellini beans. Not for nothing are Tuscans known as toscani mangiafagioli (Tuscan bean eaters).

UMBRIA & LE MARCHE

Umbria, "the green heart of Italy," is the only area outside Piedmont where truffles are found in such high concentration. Norcia is the capital of the black truffle and shops everywhere sell truffle paste and truffle oils. Norcia is also famous for its pigs, and a favorite dish is porchetta – whole roast suckling pig stuffed with herbs. Wild mushrooms are plentiful in season, in particular delicious porcini (ceps). Game features too, usually in the form of birds such as pheasant, guinea fowl, or pigeon, with the odd songbird thrown in. The rural interior of Le Marche also features porchetta; lamb and rabbit are popular, too. The long coastline yields a bounty of fish, often made into fish broths and, a specialty of Ancona, zuppa di pesce, fish soup with saffron.

Tuscan market stall piled high with fresh, ripe vegetables

ON THE MENU

Baci From Perugia, these are chocolate-coated hazelnuts, their name literally meaning "kisses" in Italian.

Bistecca alla Fiorentina Steak, marinated in herbs, garlic, and finest extra virgin olive oil, rapidly grilled over wood coals. The best meat for this is Chianina beef.

Lepre in dolce e forte Traditional Tuscan hare stew with red wine, lemon, orange and lime peel, garlic, rosemary, vegetables, and cocoa.

Vincisgrassi A baked, layered dish from Le Marche of ham, pasta, and béchamel sauce, often served sprinkled with truffle shavings.

Tagliatelle al ragu Flat strips of pasta are tossed with the quintessential Italian meat sauce from Bologna.

Arista alla Fiorentina Pork loin is roasted in the oven with garlic and rosemary, a specialty of Florence.

Zuccotto A Tuscan specialty of light sponge cake filled with hazelnuts, almonds, chocolate, and cream.

The Wines of Central Italy

Roman mosaic of a bird eating grapes

Vineyards are seen everywhere in Central Italy, from the rolling cypress-fringed hills of Tuscany to the flatter, Lambrusco-producing plains of Emilia-Romagna. The finest red wines are made in the hills of southeastern Tuscany: Chianti Classico, Brunello di Montalcino, and Vino Nobile di Montepulciano. Today's innovative mix of modern and traditional techniques is steadily improving the quality of much of the region's wine.

Chianti Classico is the heart of the Chianti zone. Chianti may be light and fruity or dense and long-lived – price is the usual guide. Rocca delle Macie is very reasonably priced.

Vernaccia di San Gimignano is a Tuscan white wine with a long, distinguished history. Traditionally a golden, often oxidized wine, it is now also produced in a fresher style, for early drinking. Teruzzi e Puthod make consistently good Vernaccia.

Vino Nobile di Montepulciano is made from the same grapes as Chianti. It can be of superior quality, hence its claim to be a "noble wine." The vineyards are set around the delightful hilltop village of Montepulciano.

Brunello di Montalcino is made from Sangiovese, Brunello being its local name. Its firm tannins may need up to ten years to soften before the rich, spicy flavors are revealed. Rosso di Montalcino, on the other hand, can be enjoyed much younger.

SUPER-TUSCANS

During the 1970s innovative wine makers set out to create new, individual wines even though under the existing rules they would be labeled as simple table wine. A trend which started with Antinori's Tignanello (a Sangiovese-Cabernet Sauvignon blend), this approach has reinvigorated Tuscan wine, to produce some exciting variations.

introduction of the single vineyard Verdicchio, such as Umani Ronchi's CaSal di Serra, has won much acclaim.

Orvieto Classico is a popular Umbrian white wine. This fresh, dry (Secco) version from the Antinori estate is a good example of a modern-style Orvieto. The wine also comes in a sweeter form, known as Abbotato.

GRAPES OF CENTRAL ITALY

The versatile Sangiovese grape dominates wine making in Central Italy. It is the main grape in Chianti, in Vino Nobile di Montepulciano, in Brunello di Montalcino, and in many of the Super-Tuscan wines. Of the established whites, Trebbiano and Malvasia head the list. Imported varieties such as white Chardonnay and red Cabernet Sauvignon are playing an increasing role, often being used to complement and enhance native varieties.

Understanding Architecture in Central Italy

Central Italy has countless fine Renaissance buildings, many of them concentrated in and around Florence. Their clear lines, elegant simplicity and harmonious proportions came out of a re-evaluation of the past. Turning their backs on the Gothic style, the architects of the Renaissance returned to Classical Rome for inspiration. Most of the large buildings had been started by the late 15th century, paid for by the Catholic Church or by powerful noble families, such as the Medici of Florence.

The Palazzo Ducale in Urbino (began 1465)

RELIGIOUS BUILDINGS

Pienza's Duomo was built by Bernardo Rossellino in 1459 for Pope Pius II as part of his vision of the ideal Renaissance city (see p333).

The Pazzi Chapel of Santa Croce in Florence (1433) is one of Brunelleschi's most famous works, decorated with terracotta roundels by Luca della Robbia (see pp284–5).

Santa Maria della Consolazione in Todi, begun in 1508, owes much to the ideas of the architect Bramante (see p359).

TOWN AND COUNTRY HOUSES

The Palazzo Strozzi in Florence (1489–1536) is typical of many Tuscan city palaces (see p328). The three stories are given equal importance, and the massive rusticated stonework conveys the impression of strength and power (see p293).

WHERE TO SEE THE ARCHITECTURE

The simple canons of the Renaissance were interpreted differently away from the hotbed of artistic thought and cultural endeavor of Florence, which has the greatest number of churches and palaces. Alberti's Tempio Malatestiano at Rimini (see p266) evokes the sobriety of ancient Roman architecture yet seeks to reinterpret it in his own unique fashion. Urbino's Palazzo Ducale (pp370-71) perfects the grace and polish of the era and is a truly noble period residence. On a smaller scale are the planned Renaissance centers of elegant towns such as Ferrara (p261), Pienza (p333), and Urbania (p369). All three centers are examples of enlightened patronage, and pay homage to the art of antiquity.

The facade of Santa Maria Novella in Florence (1458-70) was designed by Leon Battista Alberti. He incorporated some of the existing Gothic features into an overall design typical of the Renaissance (see pp296-7).

The villa at Poggio a Caiano (1480) was redesigned in the Renaissance by Giuliano da Sangallo (see p328). The graceful, curved staircase was added around 1802.

EMILIA-ROMAGNA

Emilia-Romagna is the heartland of central Italy, a broad corridor through the hills and plains of the Po Valley that marks the watershed between the cold north of the Alps and the hot Mediterranean south. With its rich agricultural land, historical cities, and thriving industry, it is one of the most prosperous areas in Italy.

Most of the major towns in Emilia-Romagna lie near the Via Aemilia, a Roman road built in 187 BC that linked Rimini on the Adriatic coast with the garrison town of Piacenza. Prior to the Romans, the Etruscans had ruled from their capital, Felsina, located on the site of present-day Bologna. After the fall of Rome, the region's focus moved to Ravenna, which became a principal part of the Byzantine Empire administered from Constantinople.

During the Middle Ages pilgrims heading for Rome continued to use the Via Aemilia. Political power, however, passed to influential noble families – the Malatesta in Rimini, the Bentivoglio in Bologna, the d'Este in Ferrara and Modena, and the Farnese in Parma and Piacenza. Great courts grew up around the families, attracting poets such as Dante and Ariosto, as well as painters, sculptors, and architects whose works still grace the medieval centers of these towns. Cobbled together from separate states in 1860, modern Emilia-Romagna was given its present borders in 1947. Emilia, the western part of the region, is traditionally associated with a more northern outlook and a tendency toward the left in politics. Romagna, on the other hand, has witnessed an increase in the support for rightwing parties calling for political independence from Rome.

The entire region has a reputation as a great gastronomic center. Agriculture has long thrived on the Po's alluvial fringes, earning the Pianura Padana (Po Plain) epithets such as the "bread basket" and "fruit bowl" of Italy. Pigs still outnumber humans in many areas, and some of the country's most famous staples – Parma ham and Parmesan cheese – originate here.

Exploring Emilia-Romagna

Emilia-Romagna is a checkerboard of fields and plains between the Po River to the north and the forest-covered Apennine mountain slopes to the south. The best place to begin a tour of the region is centrally situated Bologna. Modena, its long-time rival, boasts one of the country's loveliest Romanesque cathedrals. Parma has a more provincial feel and Ferrara, too, has an easy-going air. Castell'Arquato offers a taste of the smaller villages that dot the hills south of the Po.

GETTING AROUND

Excellent road and rail links, aided by mostly flat terrain, make this region quick and easy to get around. Bologna is connected by the A1–E35 to Florence and by the A13 to Ferrara and Venice. The busy A1–E35 links Bologna to Milan via Piacenza, Fidenza and Parma. The A15–E31 connects Parma with La Spezia, and the A21–E70 joins Piacenza and Cremona. Fast, frequent train services run along almost parallel routes.

Piacenza traces its history back to Roman times. Located near the Po, it served as a fortified camp protecting the Emilian plain from invasion. The center is still based on the Roman plan.

Piacenza has a pleasantly understated old center full of fine medieval and Renaissance buildings. Pride of place goes to two bronze equestrian statues in the central Piazza Cavalli, the work of the 17th-century sculptor Francesco Mochi, a pupil of Giambologna. Lauded as masterworks of Baroque sculpture, the statues represent Alessandro Farnese, a soldier of fortune, and his son, Ranuccio: both were rulers of 16th-century Piacenza.

Behind the statues is the redbrick Palazzo del Comune, also known as "Il Gotico," an evocatively battlemented Lombard-Gothic palace begun at the end of the 13th century. It is one of Italy's most beautiful medieval buildings.

The Duomo, at the end of Via XX Settembre, has a rather leaden Lombard-Romanesque exterior (begun in 1122), and a 14th-century campanile. The interior features Guercino's painted cupola and medieval frescoes. There are also frescoed saints near the main door, painted to resemble members of the congregation.

The Museo Civico offers an eclectic mixture of sculpture and paintings – the star among these is the Madonna and Child with John the Baptist by Botticelli (1444 – 1510). There is also an armory and archaeology section. The highlight here is the so-called Fegato di Piacenza, an Etruscan bronze representation of the sheep livers once used by priests for divination, inscribed with deities' names.

Tucked into the folded hills between Fidenza and Piacenza, Castell'Arquato is one of the prettiest villages in the countryside south of the Po. Day visitors come on the weekends to escape Emilia's larger cities, thronging the restaurants and bars around the beautiful Piazza Matteotti. The best medieval building on the piazza is the 13th-century Palazzo Pretorio, a Romanesque basilica. The impressive Rocca Viscontea (14th century), a former fortress, is on Piazza del Municipio. The village's hilltop site offers good views, particularly over the verdant Arda valley to the east.

Like many towns hugging the line of the Po, Fidenza owed its early prominence to the Via Aemilia (the old Roman road). The town assumed greater importance as a medieval way station for pilgrims en route to Rome. Today Fidenza is visited for its superb Duomo on Piazza Duomo (13th century), a composite piece of architecture that embraces Lombard, Gothic, and transitional Romanesque elements. The most immediately eye-catching feature is the opulent facade, probably created by the craftsmen who worked with Benedetto Antelami on Parma's Duomo. Inside, the walls are dotted with fragments of medieval frescoes, while the crypt contains the relics of San Donnino, the Duomo's patron.

Few Italian towns are as prosperous as Parma, not only a byword for fine food and good living but also a treasure trove of excellent paintings, superlative sculpture, and fine medieval buildings. It boasts one of Italy's top opera houses and a panoply of elegant shops and first-rate bars and restaurants.

The Lombard-Romanesque Duomo on Piazza Duomo, among the greatest in northern Italy, is renowned for the painting that fills its main cupola, the Assumption (1526–30) by Antonio da Correggio. The nave is adorned with the work of Correggio's pupils. The south transept features a carved frieze of The Deposition (1178) by Benedetto Antelami, who was also responsible for much of the exquisite Baptistry (1196) just south of the cathedral. The reliefs inside and outside the latter – particularly those describing the months of the year – are among the most important of their age in Italy.

East of the Duomo is the church of San Giovanni Evangelista (rebuilt 1498–1510) whose dome features a fresco (c.1520) of the Vision of St. John at Patmos by Correggio. Frescoes by Parmigianino can be seen here and in the 16th-century church of Madonna della Steccata on Via Dante.

This vast palace was built for the Farnese family during the 1500s and rebuilt after bomb damage from World War II. It comprises several parts, including the Teatro Farnese (1628), a copy of Palladio's ravishing theater in Vicenza, built entirely of wood (see p152).

Both Correggio and Parmigianino are represented in the palace's Galleria Nazionale, which also houses works by Fra Angelico, El Greco, and Bronzino, and two paintings by Ludovico Carracci: the Apostles at the Sepulcher and The Funeral of the Virgin (both late 16th century).

THE MAKING OF PARMESAN CHEESE AND PARMA HAM

No cheese is as famous or as vital to Italy's cuisine as Parmesan (Parmigiano). There are two types: the superior Parmigiano-Reggiano and the lower-quality Grana. The cheese is made using techniques that have barely altered in centuries. Partially skimmed milk is added to whey, to promote fermentation, and rennet is used to curdle the milk. The cheese is then salted and shaped. Parmesan is not only used in cooking but is delicious eaten on its own, or with pears – an Italian speciality. Parma ham owes its excellence to techniques perfected over many years and to the special conditions in which it is cured. It is made from pigs fattened on whey left over from the making of Parmesan cheese. The meat has a character that requires little more than salt and pepper to produce the famous prosciutto crudo. The breezy hills of Langhirino, south of Parma, are ideal for curing the hams, which are aged for up to ten months. Each ham is branded with the five-pointed crown of the old duchy of Parma.

Modena 5

175,000. FS

To most Italians Modena means fast cars, for both Ferraris and Maseratis have factories in its industrial outskirts, and opera, since this is the birthplace of Luciano Pavarotti. Monuments to an earlier age, however, make this one of Emilia's most enticing historic destinations. A thriving colony since Roman times, the city rose to medieval prominence on the back of its broad agricultural hinterland and the arrival in 1598 of the d'Este nobles from Ferrara. This family continued to rule the city until the 18th century.

Duomo

Corso Duomo. Tel 059 21 60 78. daily Torre Ghirlandina Apr–Oct: 9:30am–12:30pm, 3–7pm Sun. Aug. Modena's superlative Duomo rises alongside the old Roman Via Emilia. One of the region's greatest Romanesque buildings, it was founded by Countess Matilda of Tuscany, ruler of Modena in the 11th century. It was designed by Lanfranco and dedicated to San Geminiano, the city's patron saint, whose stone coffin lies under the choir. Its most noticeable feature is the Torre Ghirlandina, a perilously leaning tower begun at the same time as the Duomo and completed two centuries later. It once housed the Secchia, a wooden bucket whose 1325 theft from Bologna allegedly sparked a war between the two cities. It also inspired Tassoni's 17th-century mock epic poem La Secchia Rapita (The Stolen Bucket), and became the symbol of a rivalry between the cities.

The large reliefs on the Duomo's main (west) facade are the work of the 12th-century sculptor Wiligelmus. The highlight of the rather severe interior is a large carved tribuna (rood screen) decorated with 12th-century scenes from the Passion.

Northwest of the Duomo, and reached through an attractive warren of old streets, is the Palazzo dei Musei. Formerly an arsenal and workhouse, it is now home to the city's best museums and galleries. Its finest section is the Galleria Estense, given over to the d'Este private art collection, which was transferred here when the city of Ferrara, the family's former dominion, became part of the Papal States. Most of the paintings are by Emilian and Ferrarese artists (notably Reni and the Carracci) but there are also works by Velázquez, Tintoretto, Bernini, and Veronese.

Among the permanent displays in the Biblioteca Estense, the d'Este Library, are a 1481 edition of Dante's Divine Comedy, and dozens of fascinating maps and diplomatic letters, many dating back centuries. A map dated 1501 was among the first to show the 1492 voyage by Columbus to the New World. The jewel of the collection is the magnificent illuminated Borso d'Este Bible, with gloriously decorated pages containing over 1,200 miniatures by 15th-century artists of the Ferrara school, most notably Taddeo Crivelli and Franco Russi.

THE D'ESTE FAMILY DYNASTY

During their medieval heyday, the d'Este family presided over one of Europe's leading courts, combining the roles of blood-crazed despots with enlightened Renaissance patrons. Nicolò III, for example, had his wife and her lover brutally murdered. Alfonso I (1503–34) married Lucrezia Borgia, descendant of one of Italy's most notorious families, while Ercole I (1407–1505) attempted to poison a nephew who tried to usurp him (and eventually had him executed). At the same time the d'Este court attracted writers like Petrarch, Tasso, and Ariosto, and painters such as Mantegna, Titian, and Bellini. Ercole I also rebuilt Ferrara, creating one of Europe's finest Renaissance cities.

The historic city center of Bologna is a handsome ensemble of brick buildings and charming porticoed streets. Medieval palaces are clustered around the two central squares, Piazza Maggiore and Piazza del Nettuno, flanked to the south by the churches of San Petronio and San Domenico. This Romanesque-Gothic church, begun in 1267 but altered substantially since, is visited mainly for the Cappella Bentivoglio, a superb family chapel founded by Annibale Bentivoglio in 1445 and consecrated in 1486. Pride of place naturally goes to a portrait with subtle characterization of the patrons by Lorenzino Costa (1460–1535), who was also responsible for the frescoes of the Apocalypse, the Madonna Entroned and the Triumph of Death. The chapel's altarpiece, depicting the Virgin and Saints with Two Angel Musicians (1488), is the work of Francesco Francia. The Bentivoglio family is further glorified in the tomb of Anton Galeazzo Bentivoglio (1435) opposite the chapel. It was among the last works of the noted Siennese sculptor, Jacopo della Quercia. The famous leaning towers – Torre degli Asinelli and Torre Garisenda – are among the few survivors of the original 200 that once formed the skyline of Bologna. Both were begun in the 12th century, though there were probably earlier towers on the site – Dante mentioned a pair of towers here in his Inferno. Torre Garisenda was shortened as a safety measure within only a few years of its construction, and still leans some 10 ft (3 m) from the vertical. At 318 ft (97 m) tall, Torre Asinelli is the fourth highest tower in Italy after those in Cremona, Siena, and Venice. Its 500-step ascent offers fine views over the city's rooftops to the hills beyond.

Dedicated to the city's 5th-century bishop, this church ranks among the greatest of Italy's brick-built medieval buildings. Founded in 1390, it was originally intended to be larger than St. Peter's in Rome, but its size was scaled down when the church authorities diverted funds to the nearby Palazzo Archiginnasio. The resulting financial shortfall left the church decidedly lopsided, with a row of columns on its eastern flank that were intended to support an additional internal aisle. The project's financial profligacy, nonetheless, was said to have been instrumental in turning Martin Luther against Catholicism.

The altarpiece of the Martyrdom of St. Sebastian is from the late Ferrarese School.

Also dating from the 11th century, its centerpiece is the tomb of St. Petronius, a marvelously overstated affair modeled on the Holy Sepulcher of Jerusalem. The courtyard contains the so-called Fontana di Pilato, an 8th-century basin.

The 5th-century Santi Vitale e Agricola is the oldest church in the city. It was rebuilt in the 8th and 11th centuries. Inside are the sarcophagi of Saints Vitalis and Agricola, martyred in the 4th century. Santa Trinità features a small museum of minor paintings and religious artifacts, including wooden statues of the Adoration of the Magi painted by Simone dei Crocifissi (c.1370).

Rimini was once a quaint seaside resort, whose charms were celebrated in the early movies of Federico Fellini (1920–93), the director born and raised here. Today it is the largest beach resort in Europe. The seafront, stretching for almost 9 unbroken miles (15 km), is lined with clubs, bars, and restaurants. The crowded beaches are clean and well groomed, though entrance fees are charged at private beaches.

The town's old quarter, by contrast, is pleasantly quiet. Its charming cobbled streets gather around Piazza Cavour, dominated by the 14th-century Palazzo del Podestà. Rimini's finest building is the Tempio Malatestiano, built as a Franciscan church but converted in 1450 by Leon Battista Alberti, the great Florentine architect, into one of Italy's great Renaissance monuments. The work was commissioned by Sigismondo Malatesta (1417–68), a descendant of Rimini's ruling medieval family, and reputedly one of the most evil and debauched men of his time. Ostensibly designed as a chapel, the Tempio became little more than a monument to Malatesta. Inside are sculptures by Agostino di Duccio and a fresco (1451) by Piero della Francesca of Malatesta kneeling before St. Sigismund (1451).

The entwined initials of Malatesta and his fourth wife, Isotta degli Atti, provide a recurring decorative motif, and there are reliefs depicting scenes of bacchanalian excess and oddities such as strangely posed elephants (a Malatesta family emblem). All this led Pope Pius II to condemn the building as “a temple of devil-worshippers,” and to burn Malatesta's effigy for acts of “murder, violation, adultery, incest, sacrilege, and perjury.”

Environs: Farther along the coast, the resorts become relatively quieter. Cesenatico, 11 miles (18 km) north, offers all the usual facilities yet the beaches are less crowded.

The Po is Italy's longest river. Its vast basin covers some 15 percent of the country and supports around a third of the nation's population. Although ravaged in many places by industrial pollution, at its finest it offers beautifully subtle landscapes – rows of poplar trees across misty fields and vistas over the shifting sands of its vast delta, an estuary of marshes, dunes, and islands.

The immense Parco Delta

del Po is a national park stretching for 234 sq miles (600 sq km), all the way to the Veneto. Wetland areas such as the Valli di Comacchio

north of Ravenna have long been nature reserves, a winter home to thousands of breeding and migrating birds. Ornithologists gather here to see gulls, coots, bean geese, and black terns, and far rarer species such as the white egret, hen harrier, and pygmy cormorant. Comacchio, the nearest settlement, comprises 13 tiny islands connected by bridges. It is one of several fishing villages in the area, and its most famous catch is eels, often caught using methods, like water gates, that date back as far as Roman times.

Other nature reserves include the Bosco della Mesola, a tract of ancient woodland planted by the Etruscans and cared for by generations of monks. You can walk or cycle through it, with excellent opportunities for seeing large herds of deer.

For a good look at the entire region, follow the S309

– part of the old Via Romea pilgrimage trail to Rome – that runs north to south

through some 62 miles (100 km) of the park. Numerous smaller lanes branch off into the wilderness. There are also boat trips to some of the delta's more remote corners:

key departure points include the villages of

Ca' Tiepolo, Ca' Vernier, and Taglio di

Po. Most areas also offer the possibility of renting bicycles. The 78-mile (125-km) ride along the right bank of the Po is popular with cyclists.

A Tour of Ravenna

Mosaic detail from San Vitale

Ravenna rose to power in the 1st century BC under the Emperor Augustus, who built a port and naval base at nearby Classe, currently the site of a major excavation project.

As Rome's power declined, Ravenna was made the capital of the Western Empire (AD 402), a role it retained under the rule of the Ostrogoths and Byzantines in the 5th and 6th centuries. Ravenna is renowned for its early Christian mosaics – the town had converted to Christianity in the 2nd century AD. The mosaics span the years of Roman and Byzantine rule, offering comparisons between Classically inspired designs and later Byzantine motifs.

The Good Shepherd ②

This mosaic adorns the tiny Mausoleo di Galla Placidia. Begun in 430, this exquisite building probably held the remains of Placidia, wife of Emperor Constantius III.

San Vitale ①

San Vitale's apse mosaics (526–547) show Christ, St. Vitalis (being handed a martyr's crown), two angels, and Bishop Ecclesius, who began the church (see pp50–51).

Baptism of Jesus ③

The 5th-century Battistero Neoniano (Neonian Baptistry) is named after the bishop who may have commissioned its decoration, including this beautiful mosaic. It was built near the remains of a Roman bathhouse and is Ravenna's oldest monument.

Battistero degli Ariani ⑤

FLORENCE

Florence is a vast and beautiful monument to the Renaissance, the artistic and cultural reawakening of the 15th century.

Writers such as Dante, Petrarch, and Machiavelli contributed to its proud literary heritage, though it was the paintings and sculptures of artists such as Botticelli, Michelangelo, and Donatello that turned the city into one of the world's greatest artistic capitals.

While the Etruscans had long settled the hills around Fiesole, Florence first sprang to life as a Roman colony in 59 BC. Captured by the Lombards in the 6th century, the city later emerged from the Dark Ages as an independent city state. By the 13th century a burgeoning trade in wool and textiles, backed by a powerful banking sector, had turned the city into one of Italy's leading powers. Political control was wielded first by the guilds, and later by the Florentine Republic. In time, power passed to leading noble families, of which the most influential were the Medici, a hugely wealthy banking dynasty. Florence, and later Tuscany, remained under the family's almost unbroken sway for three centuries. During this time the city was at the cultural and intellectual heart of Europe, its cosmopolitan atmosphere and wealthy patrons providing the impetus for a period of unparalleled artistic growth. Artists, sculptors, and architects flocked to the city, filling its streets, churches, and palaces with some of the world's greatest Renaissance works. By 1737 the Medici had died out, leaving the city under Austrian (and briefly Napoleonic) control until Italian Unification in 1860. From 1865 to 1871 Florence was the capital of the new kingdom of Italy. The historic streets and artistic heritage were ravaged by the Arno floods of November 1966.

Exploring Florence

Historic Florence is a surprisingly compact area, and the majority of the sights described on the following pages can easily be reached on foot. Most visitors head for the Duomo, the city's geographical and historical focus, ideally placed to explore the Campanile, Baptistery, and Museo dell'Opera del Duomo.

To the south is Piazza della Signoria, long the city's political heart, flanked by the Palazzo Vecchio, Florence's town hall, and the Uffizi, one of Italy's leading art galleries.

To the east lies the church of Santa Croce, home to frescoes by Giotto and the tombs of some of Florence's greatest men. To the west stands Santa Maria Novella, the city's other great church, also adorned with fresco-filled chapels. Across the Ponte Vecchio and the Arno – the river that bisects the city – is the district of Oltrarno, dominated by Santo Spirito and the vast Pitti Palace, containing galleries with works by great Renaissance artists including Raphael and Titian.

GETTING AROUND

Florence has an excellent bus service. A tram linking the city center to the outskirts is under construction. The compact city center, a restricted traffic area, is best negotiated on foot.

The buildings in this part of Florence once stood on the fringes of the city, serving as stables and barracks. The Medici menagerie of lions, elephants, and giraffes was housed here. Today it is a student quarter and the streets are often busy with young people attending the university or the Accademia di Belle Arti, the world's oldest art school, founded in 1563.

The Academy of Fine Arts, founded in 1563, was the first school established in Europe specifically to teach the techniques of drawing, painting, and sculpture. The art collection displayed here was formed in 1784 to provide material for students to study and copy.

The most famous work is Michelangelo's David (1504), a colossal (5.2 m/17 ft) nude of the biblical hero who killed the giant Goliath. The sculpture was commissioned by the city for Piazza della Signoria, but it was moved to the Accademia for safekeeping in 1873. One copy now stands in its original position (see pp290–91) and a second is on Piazzale Michelangelo. The David established Michelangelo, at the age of 29, as the foremost sculptor of his time.

Michelangelo's other masterworks in the Accademia include the Quattro Prigionieri (the Four Prisoners), sculpted between 1521 and 1523 and intended to adorn the tomb of Pope Julius II. The muscular figures struggling to free themselves from the stone are among the most dramatic of Michelangelo's works. The statues were presented to the Medici family in 1564 by the artist's nephew, Leonardo. They were then moved to the Grotta Grande in the Boboli Gardens, where casts of the originals can now be seen.

The Accademia also contains an important collection of paintings by 15th- and 16th-century Florentine artists, among them Filippino Lippi, Fra Bartolomeo, Bronzino, and Ridolfo del Ghirlandaio. The major works include the scene of the bridal party appears on the chest in front of the Baptistery.

Madonna del Mare (Madonna of the Sea), attributed to Botticelli (1445–1510), and Venus and Cupid by Jacopo Pontormo (1494–1556), based on a preparatory drawing by Michelangelo. Also here is an elaborately painted wooden chest, the Cassone Adimari (1440–45) by Lo Scheggia, the step-brother of Masaccio. Originally part of a wealthy bride's trousseau, it is decorated with details of Florentine life, clothing, and architecture. A

The Salone della Toscana (Tuscan Room) features more modest paintings and sculptures by 19th-century members of the Accademia and plaster models by the sculptor Lorenzo Bartolini.

The Convent of San Marco was founded in the 13th century and enlarged in 1437 when Dominican monks from nearby

Fiesole moved there at the invitation of Cosimo il Vecchio. He paid a considerable sum to have the convent rebuilt by his favorite architect, Michelozzo, whose simple cloisters and cells provide the setting for a remarkable series of devotional frescoes (c.1438–45) by Florentine painter and Dominican friar Fra Angelico. The convent and art collections form the Museo di San Marco.

Michelozzo's magnificent Chiostro di Sant'Antonino was named after the convent's first prior, Antonino Pierozzi (1389–1459), who later became the archbishop of Florence. Most of the faded frescoes in this cloister describe scenes from the saint's life by Bernardino Poccetti. The panels in the corner are by Fra Angelico. A door in the right side of the cloister leads to the Ospizio dei Pellegrini (Pilgrims' Hospice). Today it houses the museum's free-standing paintings, including two famous masterworks:

A detail from Fra Angelico's poignant Deposition (c. 1440)

Fra Angelico's moving Deposition (c.1435–40), an altarpiece painted for the church of Santa Trinità, and the Madonna dei Linaiuoli, commissioned by the Linaiuoli (flaxworkers' guild) in 1433.

In the courtyard, right of the convent's former bell, is the vaulted Sala Capitolare (Chapter House), decorated with a noted but over-restored Crucifixion and Saints (1440) painted by Fra Angelico.

Covering one wall of the small Refettorio (refectory) is a fresco of the Last Supper (c.1480) by Domenico Ghirlandaio. Stairs from the courtyard lead to the second floor, where you suddenly see Fra Angelico's Annunciazione (c.1440), thought by many to be among the city's most beautiful Renaissance paintings. Beyond, ranged around three sides of the cloister, are the Dormitory Cells. These 44 tiny monastic cells are frescoed with scenes from The Life of Christ by Fra Angelico and assistants (1439–45). The cells numbered 1 to 11 are generally attributed to Fra Angelico personally, as is the lovely fresco of the Madonna and Saints on the right of the corridor (see p32).

Cells 12–14 were once occupied by Savonarola, the zealous Dominican monk who became prior of San Marco in 1491. Among other deeds, Savonarola incited Florentines to rebel against the Medici and was responsible for the burning of many works of art. Denounced as a heretic, he was burned at the stake in Piazza della Signoria in 1498.

Along the third corridor lies an airy colonnaded hall, formerly a public library designed by Michelozzo in 1441 for Cosimo il Vecchio. Beyond it lie two cells (38 and 39) which were used by Cosimo when he went on retreat here. Each is decorated with two frescoes (the other cells have only one), and they are both larger than any of the neighboring rooms.

Founded by the Servite order in 1250, the church of the Holy Annunciation was later rebuilt by Michelozzo between 1444 and 1481. Its atrium contains frescoes by the Mannerist artists Rosso Fiorentino, Andrea del Sarto, and Jacopo Pontormo. Perhaps the finest of its panels are The Journey of the Magi (1511) and The Birth of the Virgin (1514) by Andrea del Sarto.

The heavily decorated, dark interior has a frescoed ceiling completed by Pietro Giambelli in 1669. Here is one of the city's most revered shrines, a painting of the Virgin Mary begun by a monk in 1252 but miraculously completed by an angel, according to devout Florentines. Newly-wed couples traditionally visit the shrine (on the left as you enter the church) to present a bouquet of flowers to the Virgin and to pray for a long, fruitful and fecund marriage.

A door from the north transept leads to the Chiostrino dei Morti (Cloister of the Dead), so called because it was originally used as a burial ground. Today it is best known for del Sarto's beautiful fresco, The Madonna del Sacco (1525).

The church is situated on the northern flank of Piazza della Santissima Annunziata, one of the finest Renaissance squares in Florence. Designed by Brunelleschi, the delicate nine-bay arcade fronts the Spedale degli Innocenti to its right, while at the center of the square stands a bronze equestrian statue of Duke Ferdinando I. Started by Giambologna, it was finished in 1608 by his assistant Pietro Tacca (who designed the square's bronze fountains).

The Archaeological Museum in Florence is in a palazzo built by Giulio Parigi for the Princess Maria Maddalena de' Medici in 1620. It now exhibits an outstanding collection of Etruscan, Greek, Roman, and Egyptian artifacts, although parts of the collection are being restored following the flood in 1966. The second floor contains a splendid series of Etruscan bronzes as well as the famous Chimera (4th century BC), a mythical lion with a goat's head imposed on its body and a serpent for a tail. Equally impressive is the 1st-century Arringatore bronze found near Lake Trasimeno in Umbria. It is inscribed with the name of Aulus Metellus. A large section on the third floor is dedicated to Greek vases, notably the famed François Vase, found in an Etruscan tomb near Chiusi.

Named after Herod's biblical Massacre of the Innocents, the "Hospital" opened in 1444 as Europe's first orphanage. Part of the building is still used for this purpose. Brunelleschi's arcaded loggia is decorated with glazed terracotta roundels, added by Andrea della Robbia around 1498, showing babies wrapped in swaddling bands. At the left end of the portico you can see the rota, a rotating stone cylinder on which anonymous mothers could place their unwanted children and ring the bell for them to be admitted to the orphanage.

Within the building lie two elegant cloisters: the Chiostrino degli Uomini (Men's Cloister), built between 1422 and 1445 and decorated with sgraffito roosters and cherubs, and the smaller Women's Cloister (1438). A small upstairs gallery contains a handful of fine works, including terracottas by della Robbia and pictures by Botticelli, Piero di Cosimo, and Domenico Ghirlandaio.

Street by Street: Around the Duomo

Stained glass window from the Duomo

While much of Florence was rebuilt during the Renaissance, the eastern part of the city retains a distinctly medieval feel. With its maze of tiny alleys, it is an area that would still be familiar to Dante (1265–1321), whose birthplace allegedly lay somewhere among these lanes. The poet would recognize the church of Santa Maria de' Cerchi where he first glimpsed Beatrice, as well as the gaunt outlines of the Bargello. He would also be familiar with the Baptistry, one of the city's oldest buildings, though he would not know the Campanile nor the Duomo, whose foundations were laid in the poet's old age.

The Cathedral Works Museum has reopened after extensive remodeling and now a series of rooms is dedicated to the history of the Duomo. The main first-floor room holds statues from Arnolfo di Cambio's workshop which were once placed in the cathedral's niches. Nearby is Donatello's St. John. Another room contains 14th- and 15th-century religious paintings and reliquaries.

Michelangelo's Pietà has pride of place on the staircase. The hooded figure of Nicodemus is widely believed to be a self-portrait.

The first room on the upper floor contains two choir lofts, dating to the 1430s, by Luca della Robbia and Donatello. Carved in crisp white marble and decorated with colored glass and mosaic, both depict children playing musical instruments and dancing. Other works by Donatello in this room are his statue of La Maddalena (1455) and several Old Testament figures.

The room to the left contains an exhibition of the tablets that used to decorate the bell tower. A lower level houses examples of the tools used by Brunelleschi's workmen and a copy of di Cambio's original cathedral facade.

Rising above the heart of the city, the richly decorated Duomo – Santa Maria del Fiore – and its orange-tiled dome have become Florence's most famous symbols. Typical of the Florentine determination to lead in all things, the cathedral is Europe's fourth largest church, and to this day it still remains the city's tallest building. The Baptistry, with its celebrated bronze doors, may date back to the 4th century, making it one of Florence's oldest buildings. The Campanile, designed by Giotto in 1334, was completed in 1359, 22 years after his death.

★ Dome by Brunelleschi

Brunelleschi's dome, finished in 1463, was the largest of its time to be built without scaffolding. The outer shell is supported by a thicker inner shell that acts as a platform for it.

The Last Judgment frescoes (1572–4) by Vasari were completed by Zuccari.

Bricks were set between marble ribs in a self-supporting herringbone pattern – a technique Brunelleschi copied from the Pantheon in Rome.

The East Doors of the Baptistry

Lorenzo Ghiberti's famous bronze Baptistry doors were commissioned in 1401 to mark the city's deliverance from the plague. Ghiberti was chosen to make a set of new doors after a competition that involved seven leading artists, including Donatello, Jacopo della Quercia, and Brunelleschi. The trial panels by Ghiberti and Brunelleschi are so different from Florentine Gothic art of the time, notably in the use of perspective and individuality of figures, that they are often regarded as the first works of the Renaissance.

Ghiberti's winning panel

"GATE OF PARADISE"

Having spent 21 years working on the North Doors, Ghiberti was commissioned to make the East Doors (1424–1452). Michelangelo enthusiastically dubbed them the "Gate of Paradise." The original ten relief panels showing scriptural subjects are now exhibited in the Museo dell'Opera del Duomo (see p279); those on the Baptistry are copies.

Built in 1337 as a grain market, Orsanmichele was later converted into a church which took its name from Orto di San Michele, a monastic garden long since vanished. The arcades of the market became windows, which are today bricked in, but the original Gothic tracery can still be seen. The decoration was entrusted to Florence's major Arti (guilds). Over 60 years they commissioned sculptures of their patron saints to adorn the 14 exterior niches; however today many of the figures are copies. Among the sculptors were Lorenzo Ghiberti, Donatello, and Verrocchio.

The beautifully tranquil interior contains an opulent 14th-century altar by Andrea Orcagna, a Virgin and Child by Bernardo Daddi (1348), and a statue of the Madonna and Child with St. Anne by Francesco da Sangallo (1522).

Florence's second-ranking museum after the Uffizi, the Bargello contains a wonderful medley of applied arts and Italy's finest collection of Renaissance sculpture. Begun in 1255, the fortress-like building was initially the town hall (making it the oldest seat of government in the city), but later became a prison and home to the chief of police (the Bargello). It also became known for its executions, which took place in the main courtyard until 1786, when the death sentence was abolished by Grand Duke Pietro Leopoldo. Following extensive renovation, the building opened as one of Italy's first national museums in 1865.

The key exhibits range over three floors, beginning with the Michelangelo Room, superbly redesigned after extensive damage during the 1966 flood. Three contrasting works by Michelangelo lie dotted around the room, the most famous a tipsy-looking

Brunelleschi's Sacrifice of Isaac (1402) in the Bargello

Bacchus (1497), the sculptor's first large free-standing work. Close by is a powerful bust of Brutus (1539–40), the only known portrait bust by Michelangelo, and a beautifully delicate circular relief depicting the Madonna and Child (1503–5). Countless works by other sculptors occupy the same room. Among them is an exquisite Mercury (1564) by the Mannerist genius, Giambologna, as well as several virtuoso bronzes by the sculptor and goldsmith Benvenuto Cellini (1500–71).

Across the courtyard, full of fragments and the coats of arms of the Bargello's various incumbents, two more rooms contain exterior sculptures removed from sites around the city. The courtyard's external staircase leads to the second floor, which opens with a wonderfully eccentric bronze menagerie by Giambologna. To the right is the Salone del Consiglio Generale, a cavernous former courtroom that contains the museum's Early Renaissance sculpture.

Foremost among its highlights is Donatello's heroic St. George (1416)–the epitome of “youth, courage, and valor of arms” in the words of Vasari. Commissioned by the Armorers’

Guild, the statue was brought here from Orsanmichele in 1892. At the center of the room, in direct contrast, is Donatello's androgynous David (c.1430), famous as the first free-standing nude by a Western artist since antiquity.

Among the room's more easily missed works, tucked away on the right wall, are two reliefs depicting The Sacrifice of Isaac (1402). Created by Brunelleschi and Lorenzo Ghiberti respectively, both were entries in the competition to design the Baptistry doors.

Beyond the Salone, the Bargello's emphasis shifts to the applied arts, with room after room devoted to rugs, ceramics, silverware, and a host of other beautiful objets d'art.

The most celebrated of these rooms is the Salone del Camino on the third floor, which features the finest collection of small bronzes in Italy. Some are reproductions of antique models, others are small copies of Renaissance statues. Giambologna, Cellini, and Antonio del Pollaiuolo are among those represented.

Museo Galileo 11

Piazza de' Giudici 1. Map 4 D1 (6 E4). Tel 055 26 53 11.  9:30am–6:30pm Mon–Sat (to 1pm Tue & Sat), 10am–6pm Sun & public hols.  Jan 1 & 6, May 1, Dec 8, 25, & 26.

This lively and superbly presented museum devotes two floors to various scientific themes, illustrating each with countless fine displays and a panoply of old and beautifully made scientific instruments. It is also something of a shrine to the Pisa-born scientist Galileo Galilei (1564–1642), and features two of his telescopes, as well as large-scale reconstructions of his experiments into motion, velocity, and acceleration. These are sometimes demonstrated by the attendants. Other exhibits come from the Accademia del Cimento (Academy for Experimentation), founded in 1657 by Grand Duke Ferdinand II in memory of Galileo.

Some rooms are devoted to astronomical, mathematical, and navigational instruments, with galleries concentrating on Galileo, telescopes, and optical games. Some of the best exhibits are early maps, globes, and astrolabes, antique microscopes, thermometers, and barometers. There are also some fine old clocks, mathematical instruments, calculators, a horrifying collection of 19th-century surgical instruments, and some graphic anatomical models. The museum has installed a large bronze sundial that can be used to read the hour and the date.

Ponte Vecchio 12

Map 4 D1 (6 E4).

Ponte Vecchio, the oldest surviving bridge in the city, was built in 1345, the last in a succession of bridges and fords on the site that dated back to Roman times. Designed by Giotto's pupil Taddeo

Gaddi, it was originally the domain of blacksmiths, butchers, and tanners (who used the river for disposing of waste). They were reviled for their noise and stench and were evicted in 1593 by Duke Ferdinando I – to be replaced by jewelers and goldsmiths. The elevated Corridoio Vasariano runs along the eastern side of the bridge, above the shops. Giorgio Vasari designed the corridor in 1565 to allow the Medici family to move about their residences without having to mix with the public. This was the city's only bridge to escape destruction during World War II and visitors today come as much to admire the views as to browse among the antique shops and specialized jewelry shops. A bust of the famous goldsmith Benvenuto Cellini stands in the middle of the bridge.

Uffizi 13

The Uffizi, Italy's greatest art gallery, was built in 1560–80 to house offices (uffici) for Duke Cosimo I. The architect Vasari used iron as reinforcement, enabling his successor, Buontalenti, to create an almost continuous wall of glass on the upper story. This was used as a gallery for Francesco I to display the Medici art treasures. In the 19th century the gallery's ancient objects were moved to the archaeological museum and sculpture to the Bargello, leaving a priceless collection of paintings. There are plans to double the entire exhibition space by 2013.

Bacchus (c.1589)
Caravaggio's early work depicting the god of wine can be found in the second floor exhibition rooms. The mood of dissipation is echoed in the foreground in the decaying fruit.

Annunciation (1333)

The Sienese painter Simone Martini was strongly influenced by French Gothic art, and this is one of his masterworks. The two saints are by Martini's pupil and brother-in-law, Lippo Memmi.

GALLERY GUIDE

Ancient Greek and Roman sculptures are in the third floor corridor around the inner side of the horseshoe-shaped building. The paintings are hung in a series of rooms off the main corridor, in chronological order, to show the development of Florentine art from Gothic to Renaissance and beyond. Many well-known paintings are in rooms 7–18. Due to planned building work until 2012–13 there may be disruptions, such as room closures, artworks moved, and changes to opening times.

Exploring the Uffizi

The Uffizi offers not only the chance to see the world's greatest collection of Italian Renaissance paintings, but also the opportunity to enjoy masterworks from as far afield as Holland, Spain, and Germany. Accumulated over the centuries by the Medici, the collection was first housed in the Uffizi in 1581, and eventually bequeathed to the Florentine people by Anna Maria Lodovica, the last of the Medici.

GOTHIC ART

Past the statues and antiquities of Room 1, the Uffizi proper opens in style with three altarpieces of the Maestà, or Madonna Enthroned, by Giotto, Duccio, and Cimabue, some of Italy's greatest 13th-century painters. Each work marks a stage in the development of Italian painting away from the stilted conventions of Byzantium to the livelier traditions of Gothic and Renaissance art. The shift is best expressed in Giotto's version of the subject (known as the Ognissanti Madonna), where new feeling for depth and naturalistic detail is shown in the range of emotion displayed by the saints and angels, and by the carefully evoked three-dimensionality of the Virgin's throne.

Giotto's naturalistic influence can also be seen among the paintings of Room 4, which is devoted to the 14th-century Florentine School, an interesting counterpoint to the Sienese paintings of Duccio and his followers in Room 3. Among the many fine paintings here are works by Ambrogio and Pietro Lorenzetti, and Simone Martini's Annunciation.

Room 6 is devoted to International Gothic, a highly decorative style that represented the height of Gothic expression. It is exemplified by Gentile da Fabriano's exquisite, glittering Adoration of the Magi painted in 1423.

EARLY RENAISSANCE

A new understanding of geometry and perspective during the 15th century increasingly allowed artists to explore the complexities of space and depth. None became more obsessed with these new compositional possibilities than Paolo Uccello

Madonna and Child with Angels (1455–66) by Fra Filippo Lippi

(1397–1475), whose picture of The Battle of San Romano (1456) in Room 7 is one of the gallery's most fevered creations.

Room 7 also contains two panels from 1460 by Piero della Francesca, another artist preoccupied with the art of perspective. The panels, which are among the earliest Renaissance portraits, depict the duke and duchess of Urbino on one side and representations of their virtues on the other.

While such works can seem coldly experimental, Fra Filippo Lippi's Madonna and Child with Angels (1455–66), in Room 8, is a masterwork of warmth and humanity.

Sandro Botticelli's allegorical painting, Primavera (1480)

Like many Renaissance artists, Lippi uses a religious subject to celebrate earthly delights such as landscape and feminine beauty. A similar approach is apparent in the works of Botticelli, whose famous paintings in rooms 10–14 are for many the highlight of the gallery. In The Birth of Venus, for example, Venus takes the place of the Virgin, expressing a fascination with Classical mythology common to many Renaissance artists. The same is true of the Primavera (1480), which breaks with Christian religious painting by illustrating a pagan rite of spring.

Detail from The Annunciation (1472–5) by Leonardo da Vinci

HIGH RENAISSANCE AND MANNERISM

Room 15 features works attributed to the young Leonardo da Vinci, notably a sublime Annunciation (1472–5), which reveals hints of his still emerging style, and the Adoration of the Magi (1481), which remained unfinished when he left Florence for Milan to paint The Last Supper (1495–8).

Room 18, better known as the Tribune, was designed in 1584 by Buontalenti in order to accommodate the best-loved pieces of the Medici collection. Its most famous work is the so-called Medici Venus (1st century BC), a Roman copy of a Greek statue deemed to be the most erotic in the ancient world. The copy proved equally salacious and was removed from Rome's Villa Medici by Cosimo III to keep it from corrupting the city's art students. Other highlights in room 18 include Agnolo Bronzino's portraits of Cosimo I and Eleonora di Toledo, both painted around 1545, and Pontormo's Charity (1530) and the portrait of Cosimo il Vecchio (1517).

Rooms 19 to 23 depart from the gallery's Florentine bias, demonstrating how rapidly Renaissance ideas and techniques spread beyond Tuscany. Painters from the German and Flemish schools are well represented, together with painters from Umbria like Perugino, but perhaps the most captivating works are the paintings by Venetian and northern Italian artists such as Mantegna, Carpaccio, Correggio, and Bellini.

Room 25, which returns to the Tuscan mainstream, is dominated by Michelangelo's Holy Family or Doni Tondo (1456), notable for its vibrant colors and the Virgin's unusually twisted pose. The gallery's only work by Michelangelo, it was to prove immensely influential with the next generation of painters, especially Bronzino (1503–72), Pontormo (1494–1556), and Parmigianino (1503–40). The last of these was responsible for the Madonna of the Long Neck (c.1534) in Room 29. With its contorted anatomy, unnatural colors and strange composition, this painting is a masterwork of the style that came to be called Mannerism. Earlier, but no less remarkable masterworks in rooms 26 and 28 include Raphael's sublime Madonna of the

Madonna of the Goldfinch (1506) by Raphael

Madonna of the Long Neck (c.1534) by Parmigianino

Goldfinch (1506) and Titian's notorious Venus of Urbino (1538), censured by Mark Twain as the "foulest, the vilest, the obscenest picture the world possesses." Others hold it to be one of the most beautiful nudes ever painted.

LATER PAINTINGS

Visitors, already sated by a surfeit of outstanding paintings, are often tempted to skim through the Uffizi's final rooms. The paintings in rooms 30 to 35 – which are mainly from the Veneto and Emilia-Romagna – are mostly unexceptional, but the gallery's last rooms (41–45) contain important paintings. Rooms 41 and 42 have works by Rubens and Van Dyck. Room 44, dedicated to Rembrandt and northern European painting, features Rembrandt's Portrait of an Old Man (1665) and two self-portraits of the artist as a young and old man (painted in 1634 and 1664 respectively). On the second floor works by Caravaggio can be seen. These include Medusa (1596–8), painted for a Roman cardinal; Bacchus (c.1589), one of the artist's earliest works; and the Sacrifice of Isaac (c.1590), whose violent subject is belied by the painting's gentle background landscape. These rooms also hold work by Guido Reni.

Piazza della Signoria 14

Savonarola
(1452–98)

Piazza della Signoria and Palazzo Vecchio have been at the heart of Florence's political and social life for centuries. The great bell once used to summon citizens to parlamenti (public meetings) here, and the square has long been a popular promenade for both visitors and Florentines. The piazza's statues (some are copies) commemorate the city's major historical events, though its most famous episode is celebrated by a simple sidewalk plaque near the loggia: the execution of the religious leader Girolamo Savonarola who was burnt at the stake.

The “Old Palace” still fulfils its original role as town hall.

It was completed in 1322 when a huge bell, used to call citizens to meetings or warn of fire, flood, or enemy attack, was hauled to the top of the imposing bell tower.

While retaining much of its medieval appearance, the interior was remodeled for Duke Cosimo I in 1540.

The redecoration was undertaken by Vasari, who incorporated bombastic frescoes (1563–5) of Florentine achievements. Michelangelo’s Victory statue (1525) graces the Salone dei Cinquecento, which also has a tiny study decorated by Florence’s leading Mannerist painters in 1569–1573.

Other highlights include the Cappella di Eleonora, painted by Bronzino (1540–45); the loggia, with its views over the city; the Sala dei Gigli (Room of Lilies) with Donatello’s Judith and Holofernes (c.1455) and frescoes of Roman heroes by Ghirlandajo (1485); as well as the museum for children and the secret rooms and passageways.

Street by Street: Around Piazza della Repubblica

Underlying the street plan of modern Florence is the far older pattern of the ancient Roman city. Nowhere is this more evident than in the grid of narrow streets around Piazza della Repubblica, site of the old Roman forum. This pivotal square housed the city's main food market until the 1860s, when redevelopment tidied up the area, and added the triumphal arch that now stands in today's café-filled square.

Sheer size accounts for the impact of the Palazzo Strozzi, and although it is only three stories high, each floor exceeds the height of a normal palazzo. It was commissioned by the wealthy banker Filippo Strozzi, who had 15 buildings demolished to make way for the palazzo. He hoped it would rival the Medici palaces elsewhere in the city. Strozzi died in 1491, just two years after the first stone was laid.

Work on the building continued until 1536, with three major architects contributing to its design – Giuliano da Sangallo, Benedetto da Maiano, and Simone del Pollaiuolo (also known as Cronaca). The exterior, built of huge rusticated masonry blocks, remains unspoiled. Look out for the original Renaissance torchholders, lamps, and the rings for tethering horses that still adorn the corners and facades. The palace is now primarily used as an exhibition venue. During exhibitions, visitors can also access “La Strozziina,” a vaulted gallery space in the basement, where small temporary exhibitions are held.

San Lorenzo <sup>18</sup>

San Lorenzo was the parish church of the Medici family, and in 1419 Brunelleschi was commissioned to rebuild it in the Classical style of the Renaissance. Almost a century later Michelangelo submitted some plans for the facade, and began work on the Medici tombs in the Sagrestia Nuova. He also designed a library, the Biblioteca Mediceo-Laurenziana, to house the family's collection of manuscripts. The lavish family mausoleum, the Cappella dei Principi, was started in 1604.

The Medici Chapels divide into three distinct areas. Beyond the entrance hall lies a low-vaulted crypt, a suitably subdued space for the brass-railed tombs of many lesser members of the Medici family. From here steps lead to the octagonal Cappella dei Principi (Chapel of Princes), a vast family mausoleum begun by Cosimo I in 1604. The ceiling is garishly frescoed and the walls are smothered in huge swathes of semiprecious pietre dure (inlaid stones). Spaced around the walls are the tombs of six Medici grand dukes. A corridor leads to Michelangelo's New Sacristy, designed as a counterpoint to Brunelleschi's Old Sacristy in San Lorenzo. ## Santa Maria Novella 21

The Church of Santa Maria Novella was built by the Dominicans between 1279 and 1357. The lower Romanesque part of its facade was incorporated into one based on Classical proportions by the pioneering Renaissance architect Leon Battista Alberti in 1456–70. The Gothic interior contains superb frescoes, including Masaccio's powerful Trinity. The famous Green Cloister, frescoed with perspective scenes by Paolo Uccello, is frescoed with perspective scenes by Paolo Uccello, and the dramatically decorated Spanish Chapel now form a museum.

Built in 1446–51, this is one of the most ornate Renaissance palaces in the city. It was commissioned by Giovanni Rucellai, whose enormous wealth derived from the import of a rare and costly red dye made from lichen found only on the Spanish island of Majorca. The precious dye was called oricello, from which the name Rucellai is derived.

Giovanni commissioned several buildings from the architect Leon Battista Alberti, who designed this palace as a virtual textbook illustration of the major Classical orders. The palazzo used to house the Museo Alinari but the collection has now moved to Piazza Santa Maria Novella.

The Alinari brothers began taking pictures of Florence in the 1840s. They supplied high-quality postcards and prints to visitors to Florence in the 19th century. The exhibits offer a vivid insight into the social history of Florence at that time. The museum also houses a collection of cameras, documents, and objects that illustrate the history of photography.

Ognissanti, or All Saints, was the parish church of the Vespucci, one of whose members, the 15th-century navigator Amerigo, gave his name to the New World. The young Amerigo is depicted in Ghirlandaio's fresco of the Madonna della Misericordia (1472) in the second chapel on the right between the Virgin and the man in the red cloak.

Ognissanti is also the burial place of Sandro Botticelli. His fresco of St. Augustine (1480) can be seen on the south wall.

Cappella Brancacci 26

The church of Santa Maria del Carmine is famous for the Brancacci Chapel, which contains frescoes on The Life of St. Peter, commissioned by the Florentine merchant Felice Brancacci around 1424. Although the paintings were begun by Masolino in 1425, many of the scenes are by his pupil, Masaccio (who died before completing the cycle) and by Filippino Lippi, who completed the work in 1480. Masaccio's revolutionary use of perspective, his narrative drama, and the tragic realism of his figures placed him in the vanguard of Renaissance painting. Many great artists, including Michelangelo, later visited the chapel to study his pioneering work.

In every scene, St Peter is distinguished from the crowds as the figure in the orange cloak.

St. Peter Healing the Sick
Masaccio's realistic portrayal of cripples and beggars was revolutionary in his time.

The grouping of stylized figures in Masaccio's frescoes reflects his interest in the sculpture of Donatello.

Masaccio's simple style allows us to focus on the figures central to the frescoes without distracting detail.

Expulsion of Adam and Eve
Masaccio's ability to express emotion is well illustrated by his harrowing portrait of Adam and Eve being driven out of the Garden of Eden, their faces wracked by misery, shame, and the burden of self-knowledge.

Street by Street: Oltrarno

Medici coat of arms

For the most part, the Oltrarno is a homely area of small houses, quiet squares, and shops selling antiques, bric-a-brac, and foodstuffs. The Via Maggio, a busy thoroughfare, breaks this pattern, but step into the side streets and you escape the bustle to discover a corner of old world Florence. The restaurants serve authentic, reasonably priced food, and the area is full of studios and workshops restoring antique furniture. Among the things to see are Santo Spirito and Palazzo Pitti, one of the city's largest palaces, whose medley of museums contains an art collection second only to that of the Uffizi.

Cenacolo di Santo Spirito, the old refectory of a monastery that once stood here, contains a dramatic fresco attributed to Orcagna (c.1360).

Palazzo Guadagni (1500) was the first in the city to be built with a roof-top loggia, setting a trend among the aristocracy.

Palazzo di Bianca Cappello (1579) is covered in ornate sgraffito work and was the home of the mistress of Grand Duke Francesco I.

Santo Spirito
Brunelleschi's simple church was completed after the architect's death 27

Masks and murals are handmade at this shop, Frieze of Papier Mâché.

The 16th-century fountain and gargoyle in Piazza de' Frescobaldi were designed by Buontalenti, as was the facade (1593–4) of the nearby church of Santa Trinità.

The Augustinian foundation of this church dates from 1250. The present building, dominating the northern end of the pretty Piazza di Santo Spirito, was designed by the architect Brunelleschi in 1435, but not completed until the late 15th century. The unfinished, modest facade was added in the 18th century.

Inside, the harmony of the proportions has been somewhat spoiled by the elaborate Baroque baldacchino and the high altar, which was finished in 1607 by Giovanni Caccini. The church has 38 side altars, decorated with 15th and 16th-century Renaissance paintings and sculpture, among them works by Cosimo Rosselli, Domenico Ghirlandaio, and Filippino Lippi. The latter painted a magnificent Madonna and Child (1466) for the Nerli Chapel in the south transept.

In the north aisle, a door beneath the organ leads to a vestibule with an ornate coffered ceiling. It was designed by Simone del Pollaiuolo, more commonly known as Cronaca, in 1491. The sacristy adjoining the vestibule, in which 12 huge columns are crammed into a tiny space, was designed by Giuliano da Sangallo in 1489.

Palazzo Guicciardini

Palazzo Pitti 28

The Palazzo Pitti was originally built for the banker Luca Pitti. The huge scale of the building, begun in 1457 and attributed to Brunelleschi, illustrated Pitti's determination to outrival the Medici family through its display of wealth and power. Ironically, the Medici later purchased the palazzo when building costs bankrupted Pitti's heirs. In 1550 it became the main residence of the Medici, and subsequently all the rulers of the city lived here. Today the richly decorated rooms exhibit countless treasures from the Medici collections.

GALLERIA PALATINA

The Palatine Gallery, which forms the heart of the Pitti museum complex, contains countless masterworks by artists such as Botticelli, Titian, Perugino, Andrea del Sarto, Tintoretto, Veronese, Giorgione, and Gentileschi. The works of art, accumulated by the Medici family and the house of Habsburg-Lorraine, are still hung much as the grand dukes wished, regardless of subject or chronology. The gallery consists of 11 main salons, the first five of which are painted with allegorical ceiling frescoes glorifying the Medici. Begun by Pietro da Cortona in 1641, they were completed in 1665 by his pupil Ciro Ferri. Room 1 (Sala di Venere) contains Antonio Canova's statue of the Venus Italica (1810), commissioned by Napoleon to replace the Venus de' Medici (which was to be taken to Paris). Room 2 (Sala di Apollo) features Titian's Portrait of a Gentleman (1540), perhaps the finest of several paintings by the artist in the gallery. Still finer pictures adorn rooms 4 and 5, including some by Perugino, Andrea del Sarto, and a host of paintings by Raphael. The most beautiful of the last group are Raphael's High Renaissance

Madonna of the Chair (c.1515) by Raphael

Judith (1620-30) by Artemisia Gentileschi

Madonna della Seggiola or Madonna of the Chair (c.1514-15), and the Donna Velata or Veiled Woman (c.1516), whose model was reputedly the artist's mistress.

Other paintings in the remaining gallery rooms include Fra Filippo Lippi's lovely Madonna and Child, painted in the mid-15th century, and Caravaggio's The Sleeping Cupid (1608).

APPARTAMENTI REALI

The royal apartments on the second floor of the south wing of the palazzo were built in the 17th century. They are decorated with frescoes by various Florentine artists, a series of portraits of the Medici by the Flemish painter Justus Sustermans, who worked at the court between 1619 and 1681, and a group of 18th-century Gobelin tapestries. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries, the apartments were revamped in Neoclassical style by the dukes of Lorraine when they succeeded the Medici dynasty as the rulers of Florence.

The apartments are lavishly appointed with ornate gold and white stuccoed ceilings and rich decoration, notably the walls of the Parrot Room, which are covered with an opulent crimson fabric detailed with a bird design. The Tapestry Rooms are hung with 17th- and 18th-century tapestries of French, Belgian, and Italian manufacture. The apartments reflect the tastes of three distinct historical periods.

OTHER COLLECTIONS

The Museo degli Argenti (Silverware Museum) is housed in rooms formerly used by the Medici as summer apartments. The family's lavish taste is reflected in the vast array of precious objects on display. These embrace beautiful examples of Roman glassware, ivory, carpets, crystal, amber, and fine works by Florentine and German goldsmiths. Pride of place goes to 16 pietre dure vases (decorated with hard or semiprecious inlaid stones), once owned by Lorenzo the Magnificent.

The Galleria del Costume, which opened in 1983, reflects the changing taste in the courtly fashion of the late 18th century up to the 1920s.

The highlights of the Galleria d'Arte Moderna

(Modern Art Gallery) are the wonderful paintings of the Macchiaioli ("spotmakers"), who were a group of Tuscan artists with a style very similar to that of the French Impressionists.

THE BOBOLI GARDENS

A copy of Giambologna's Oceanus Fountain (1576)

The Boboli Gardens, a lovely place to escape the rigors of sightseeing, were laid out for the Medici after they bought the Palazzo Pitti in 1549. An excellent example of stylized Renaissance gardening, they were opened to the public in 1766. The more formal parts of the garden, nearest the palazzo, consist of box hedges clipped into symmetrical geometric patterns. These lead to wilder groves of ilex and cypress trees, planted to create a contrast between artifice and nature. Countless statues adorn the gardens, particularly along the Viottolone, an avenue of cypress trees planted in 1637. High above the gardens stands the Forte di Belvedere, designed by Buontalenti in 1590 for the Medici grand dukes.

There has been a church on this site since the 4th century. The present structure, begun in the 11th century, was remodeled in 1736–9 by Ferdinando Ruggieri, who retained Vasari's earlier porch (added in 1564) as well as many of the church's original Gothic features.

The Capponi family chapel to the right of the entrance contains two works by Jacopo da Pontormo: The Deposition and The Annunciation (1525–28). Their strange composition and remarkable coloring make them two of the greatest masterworks of Mannerism.

Of all the great Florentine viewpoints – such as the Duomo and Campanile – none offers such a magnificent panorama of the city as Piazzale Michelangelo. Laid out in the 1860s by Giuseppe Poggi, and dotted with copies of Michelangelo's statues, its balconies attract many visitors and the inevitable massed ranks of souvenir sellers. However, this square remains an evocative spot, especially when the sun sets over the Arno and distant Tuscan hills.

San Miniato is one of the most beautiful Romanesque churches in Italy. Begun in 1018, it was built over the shrine of San Miniato (St Minias), a rich Armenian merchant beheaded for his beliefs in the 3rd century. The facade, begun around 1090, has the geometric marble patterning typical of Pisan-Romanesque architecture. The statue on the gable shows an eagle carrying a bale of cloth, the symbol of the powerful Arte di Calimala (guild of wool importers), who financed the church in the Middle Ages. The 13th-century mosaic shows Christ, the

Virgin, and St. Minias. The same protagonists appear in the apse mosaic inside the church, which sits above a crypt supported by columns salvaged from ancient Roman buildings. The floor of the nave is covered with seven mosaic panels of animals and signs of the zodiac. These mosaics date back to 1207.

Other highlights include Michelozzo's free-standing Cappella del Crocifisso (1448) and the Renaissance Cappella del Cardinale del Portogallo (1480) with terracotta roundels (1461) on the ceiling by Luca della Robbia. There is a fresco cycle of Scenes from the Life of St. Benedict by Spinello Aretino in the sacristy, which was completed in 1387.

Shopping in Florence

Few cities of comparable size can boast such a profusion and variety of high-quality shops as Florence. As you wander through its medieval streets, you will find all the big names in Italian fashion and jewelry alongside artisan workshops and family-run businesses. The city has translated its reputation as a center of artistic excellence into a wealth of antiques and fine-art shops. Tuscan tanneries are justifiably renowned, and there is nowhere better than Florence to buy shoes, bags, and other leather goods. Those searching for unusual gifts and souvenirs – from handmade stationery to delicious foodstuffs – will also be spoiled for choice.

WHERE TO SHOP

The center of Florence is packed with all sorts of shops, from fashion designer flagships to secondhand bookstores. The tiny jewelry shops on the Ponte Vecchio sell both antique items and high-quality new gold pieces. Antiques shops are mostly clustered around Via dei Fossi, Via dei Serragli, and Via Maggio. The best bargains can be found in the January and July sales.

CLOTHING

Most Italian designer names – Gucci, Armani, Versace, and Prada, for example – are in Via de' Tornabuoni, which is also home to the French designer Yves Saint-Laurent. Opposite Palazzo Strozzi is Louis Vuitton, with its collections of footwear, clothing, and luggage. Dolce & Gabbana is nearby, as is Patrizia Pepe, while Valentino is in Via dei Tosinghi. La Perla, specializing in sophisticated lingerie, is in Via della Vigna Nuova, but more affordable styles can be found at Intimissimi.

Most department stores sell clothing. For midrange fashion, try Coin. The more upscale La Rinascente has designer clothing, lingerie, and a great rooftop bar.

For discounts on designer fashion visit The Mall or Barberino Designer Outlet, both about 30 minutes away from Florence.

There are fine silks and handwoven fabrics at Casa dei Tessuti.

SHOES AND LEATHER GOODS

The main meccas for fans of designer Italian shoes are Ferragamo, Gucci, and Prada. For more classic styles, head to Quercioli, which stocks handmade footwear. The midpriced range is well represented by Peppe Peluso and the chain store Bata.

The streets around Piazza di Santa Croce are filled with leather shops. Inside the cloisters of the church itself is the Scuola del Cuoio, where customers can watch the leather craftsmen at work.

Classic leather bags are sold at Il Bisonte and Beltrami; for more contemporary styles head to Coccinelle and Furla.

Bound leather books, leather boxes, and leather-covered desk wooden objects are sold at Scriptorium.

JEWELRY

Florence has always been noted for its gold- and silversmiths. Visit Torrini, whose family has produced jewelry for six centuries, and Pomellato's stunning shop for its chunky white-gold rings with huge semi-precious gems. Bulgari is on the same street, and so is Parenti, which has unique antique jewels. Try Aprosio & Co for decorative jewelry made from precious metals and tiny glass stones.

ART AND ANTIQUES

Romanelli has bronze statuary and works encrusted in semi-precious stones, and Ducci has an exquisite selection of handmade boxes, prints, and sculpture in marble and wood. For lovers of Art Nouveau and Art Deco, there is Galleria Tornabuoni, while Ugo Poggi has a selection of elegant porcelain. Ugolini and Mosaico di Pitti create tables and framed pictures using the age-old technique of marble inlay.

BOOKS AND GIFTS

Feltrinelli International and Edison sell publications in several languages, while Paperback Exchange has a wide selection of new and secondhand books in English.

Typical Florentine crafts include bookbinding and handmade marbled paper, used to decorate a variety of objects. These are available at Il Torchio and Il Papiro.

For terracotta and ceramics, try Sbigoli Terracotte; for chandeliers and decorative glass objects head to La Bottega dei Cristalli.

Housed in a converted wine cellar, Signum sells postcards, posters, and prints, while Mandragora has a wide range of gifts based on famous artworks in the city.

FOOD AND MARKETS

Florence's main food market is the covered Mercato Centrale (see p295), but fruit and vegetable stalls can also be found at the Mercato di Sant'Amrogio. On Tuesday mornings, there is a large market at the Parco delle Cascine with food, affordable clothing, and shoes.

Pegna is a mini-supermarket that stocks fresh foods, as well as a range of gourmet items. The Bottega dell'Olio sells extra virgin Tuscan olive oils, spice-flavored oils, and gifts.

Dolceforte sells chocolate souvenirs in the shape of the Duomo and the statue of David. A huge selection of cookies and chocolates fills the front half of Alessi, while at the back are fine wines, spirits, and liqueurs. At Procacci, you can stop for a glass of Italian wine while choosing between pots of black or white truffles and other delicacies to buy.

FLORENCE STREET FINDER

Map references given for sights in the Florence section refer to the maps on the following pages. Where two references are provided, the one in brackets relates to the large-scale maps, 5 and 6. References are also given for Florence hotels (see pp576–8) and restaurants (see pp626–9), and for useful addresses in the Travelers' Needs and

Survival Guide sections at the back of the book. The map below shows the area of Florence covered by the Street Finder. The symbols used for sights and other features on the Florence Street Finder maps are listed below. Streets in Florence have double sets of numbers: red numbers are for businesses, and black or blue for domestic residences.

TUSCANY

Renowned for its art, history, and evocative landscape, Tuscany is a region where the past and present merge in pleasant harmony. Hill-towns gaze across the countryside from on high, many encircled by Etruscan walls and slender cypress trees. Handsome palaces testify to the region's wealth while medieval town halls indicate a long-standing tradition of democracy and self-government.

In the countryside, among the vineyards and olive groves, there are hamlets and farmhouses, as well as fortified villas and castles that symbolize the violence and intercommunal strife that tore Tuscany apart during the Middle Ages. Several imposing castles and villas were built for the Medici family, the great patrons of the Renaissance who supported eminent scientists, such as Galileo.

Northern Tuscany, and the heavily populated plain between Florence and Lucca, is dominated by industry, with intensively cultivated land between the cities and the wild mountainous areas.

The area centered around Livorno and Pisa is now the region's economic hub. Pisa, at the height of its powers, dominated the western Mediterranean from the 11th to the 13th centuries.

Its navy opened up extensive trading routes with North Africa, and brought to Italy the benefits of Arabic scientific and artistic achievement

During the 16th century the Arno estuary began to silt up, ending Pisan power.

At the heart of central Tuscany lies Siena, which was involved in a long feud with Florence. Its finest hour came with its victory in the Battle of Montaperti in 1260, but it was devastated by the Black Death in the 14th century and finally suffered a crushing defeat by Florence in the siege of 1554–5.

Northeastern Tuscany, with its mountain peaks and woodland, provided refuge for hermits and saints, while the east was home to Piero della Francesca, the early Renaissance painter whose timeless and serene works are imbued with an almost religious perfection.

Exploring Tuscany

Tuscan cities such as Florence, Siena, and Pisa, together with smaller towns like Lucca, Cortona, and Arezzo, contain some of Italy's most famous artistic treasures. Medieval villages such as San Gimignano, with its famous towers, or Pienza, a tiny Renaissance jewel, sit at the heart of the glorious pastoral countryside for which the region is equally renowned. Elsewhere landscapes range from the spectacular mountains of the Alpi Apuane to the gentle hills of Chianti.

Carrara ①

Massa Carrara. 70,000.
 Piazza Cesare Battisti 1 (0585 64 14 71). Mon.

Internationally renowned for its marble quarries, Carrara's almost flawless white stone has been prized for centuries by famous sculptors from Michelangelo to Henry Moore (the stone for Michelangelo's David came from Carrara). The region's 300 or more quarries date back to Roman times, making this one of the oldest industrial sites in continuous use in the world. Many of the town's marble-sawing mills and workshops welcome visitors, offering them the chance to see the ways in which marble and quartz are worked. These techniques – along with marble artifacts old and new – can be seen at the Museo Civico del Marmo.

Local marble is put to good use in the town's Duomo in Piazza del Duomo, particularly in the fine Pisan-Romanesque facade with its delicate rose window. The cathedral square also contains Michelangelo's house, used by the sculptor during his visits to select blocks of marble. The town has some lovely corners to explore, in particular the elegant Piazza Alberica. Most visitors head for the stone quarries that are open to the public at nearby Colonnata and at Fantiscritti (take one of the regular town buses or follow the signs to the "Cave di Marmo"). The latter features a small museum with displays of various marble quarrying techniques.

Garfagnana ②

Lucca. Castelnovo di Garfagnana. Piazza delle Erbe, Castelnovo di Garfagnana (0583 64 10 07).

A lovely verdant, silent valley wedged between the Orecchiella mountains and the Alpi Apuane, the Garfagnana region can be explored from Seravezza, Barga, or Castelnovo di Garfagnana.

While the town of Barga makes the prettiest base, thanks to its tawny stone cathedral and charming streets, Castelnovo is more convenient for drives and walks in the surrounding mountains. San Pellegrino in Alpe in the Orecchiella has a fascinating folklore museum, the Museo Etnografico. It is easily seen in conjunction with the Orto Botanico Pania di Corfino at the headquarters of the Parco dell'Orecchiella at Pania di Corfino, with its collection of local Alpine trees.

To the west is the Parco Naturale delle Alpi Apuane, an area whose spectacular jagged peaks and wooded valleys are criss-crossed by hiking trails and scenic mountain roads.

Bagni di Lucca 3

Lucca. 🏠 7,400. 📞 📍 Viale Umberto I 97 (0583 80 57 45). 📅 Wed, Sat.

All over Tuscany there are hot springs of volcanic origin, like Bagni di Lucca. The Romans first exploited the springs and built bath complexes where army veterans who settled in the area could relax. More spas came into prominence in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, and they have continued to be recommended for relieving a variety of ailments, such as arthritis.

Tuscan spas really came into their own in the early 19th century when Bagni di Lucca reached its heyday as one of Europe's most fashionable spas, frequented by emperors, kings, and aristocrats. Visitors came not only for thermal cures, but also for the Casino (1837), one of Europe's first licensed gambling houses. These days the town is rather sleepy, and its main sights are the 19th-century monuments, including the Neo-Gothic English Church (1839) on Via Crawford and the Cimitero Anglicano (Protestant Cemetery) on Via Letizia.

18th century, this town is one of the most interesting with a wide range of spa architecture, from Neoclassical to Art Nouveau spa establishments.

Viareggio 4

Lucca. 🏠 55,000. 📞 📍 Viale Carducci 10 (0584 96 22 33). 📅 Thu.

Known for its carnival, held in January and early February, this is also the most popular of the resorts on the Versilia coast. Its famous "Liberty" (Art Nouveau) style of architecture can be seen in the grand hotels, villas, and cafés built in the 1920s after the resort's original boardwalk and timber chalets went up in flames in 1917. The finest example of the architecture is the Gran Caffè Margherita at the end of Passeggiata Margherita, designed by the prolific father of Italian Art Nouveau, Galileo Chini.

Torre del Lago Puccini 5

Lucca. 🏠 11,000. 📞 📍 Viale Kennedy 2 (0584 35 98 93). 📅 Fri, & Sun.

A glorious avenue of lime-trees, the Via dei Tigli, connects Viareggio with Torre del Lago Puccini, once the home of the opera composer Giacomo Puccini (1858–1924). He and his wife are buried in their former home, now the Museo Villa Puccini, a small museum that features the piano on which the maestro composed many of his works. Equal prominence is given to the villa's original fittings, including the gun room that housed Puccini's hunting rifle. Lago Massaciuccoli, a nature reserve for rare and migrant birds, provides a pretty backdrop for open-air performances of Puccini's works.

Street by Street: Lucca 6

Lucca's regular grid of streets still follows the pattern of the former Roman colony founded in 180 BC. Great, solid ramparts, built in the 16th to 17th century, help to shut out traffic, making the city a pleasant place to explore on foot. San Michele in Foro – one of the town's many fine Pisan-Romanesque churches – stands on the site of the Roman forum (foro), the city's main square laid out in ancient times. It is still Lucca's main square today.

Casa Natale di Puccini

Giacomo Puccini (1858–1924), composer of hugely popular operas, including La Bohème, was born in this house.

 San Frediano's striking facade features a colorful 13th-century mosaic, The Ascension, a fine prelude to the church's wonderfully atmospheric interior.
 Pride of place goes to a splendid Romanesque font on scenes from the life of Christ and the story of Moses. Note the scene of Moses and his followers (dressed as medieval knights) as they pass

 In the second chapel in the north aisle, Aspertini's frescoes (1508-9) tell the story of Lucca's precious relic, the Volto Santo – a carving said to date from the time of the Crucifixion. The fine altarpiece (1422) in the fourth chapel of San Frediano's north aisle is by Jacopo della Quercia.

San Michele in Foro

Piazza San Michele. ☐ daily.
 Built on the site of the old Roman forum (foro), San Michele's rich mixture of twisted marble columns and Cosmati work (inlaid marble) adorns one of the most exuberant Pisan-Romanesque facades in Tuscany. Built between the 11th and 14th centuries, its decoration is overwhelmingly pagan. Only the huge winged figure of St.
 Michael on the pediment marks this out as a church. The interior has little of interest except for the beautiful painting of Saints Helena, Jerome, Sebastian, and Roch by Filippino Lippi (1457-1504).

Exploring Lucca

Lucca's peaceful narrow lanes wind among the medieval buildings, opening suddenly to reveal churches, tiny piazzas, and many other reminders of the city's long history, including a Roman amphitheater.

Medieval buildings mark the outline of Lucca's old Roman amphitheater

Anfiteatro Romano

Piazza del Mercato.

Roman Lucca was founded in 180 BC, and stones from the ancient Roman amphitheater have been ransacked over the centuries to build churches and palaces, leaving only a handful of original fragments studded into today's arena-shaped Piazza del Mercato. Slum housing clogged the piazza until 1830, when it was cleared on the orders of Marie Louise, the city's Bourbon ruler of that time. It was then that the amphitheater's original shape was revealed, a graphic and evocative reminder of Lucca's rich Roman heritage. Low archways at the piazza's cardinal points mark the gates through which beasts and gladiators would once have entered the arena.

Lucca's cathedral was built after the campanile, hence the facade's cramped and asymmetric appearance. The main portals contain remarkable 13th-century carvings by Nicola Pisano and Guidetto da Como. This elegant, imposing house (1667) has a beautiful outside staircase. It also boasts one of Tuscany's most delightful formal gardens. Laid out in the 18th century, the garden's central avenue is lined with Baroque statues of the gods and goddesses of ancient Roman mythology. The garden can also be viewed while walking along the ramparts.

The house itself contains an interesting collection of furniture, antiques, and medical instruments.

Ramparts

One of the pleasures of visiting Lucca is strolling along the ramparts – the magnificent city walls, whose tree-lined promenade offers some entrancing views of the city.

Work on the ramparts began around 1500, when advances in military technology made the old medieval defenses ineffective. On their completion in 1645, the walls were some of the most advanced of their time. One of their most curious features was the open space that lay beyond them, and which survives to this day, cleared to prevent the enemy taking cover in trees and undergrowth. Ironically, the walls never actually had to be defended, and they were eventually converted into a public park in the early 19th century.

This church was built at the end of the 12th century, beyond the Roman walls of Lucca. Its name, Forisportam, means "outside the gate." The unfinished marble facade, in Pisan-Romanesque style, has blind arcading. Above the central portal is a relief of the Coronation of the Virgin (17th century). The interior was redesigned in the early 16th century, resulting in the nave and transepts being raised. The fourth altar of the south aisle contains a painting of St. Lucy, and the north transept has an Assumption, both by Guercino (1591–1666).

Museo Nazionale di Villa Guigni

Via della Quarquonia. Tel 0583 49 60

33.  Tue–Sun (Sun to 2pm only).

 Jan 1, May 1, Dec 25.

This massive Renaissance villa was built in 1418 for Paolo Guigni, leading light of the noble family who ruled Lucca in the early 15th century.

A familiar landmark of the city is the battlemented tower, the Torre dei Guigni, with oak trees growing at the top. It offers good views over the city and the Apuan Alps. The garden features traces of a Roman mosaic, together with a pride of Romanesque lions removed from the city's walls.

Inside, the museum's first floor is devoted to sculptures and archaeological displays. The highlights are works by Matteo Civitali, Jacopo della Quercia, and fine Romanesque reliefs removed from several of Lucca's churches. Most of the paintings in the gallery on the floor above are by minor local artists, with the exception of two works by Fra Bartolomeo (c.1472–1517): God the Father with Saints Catherine and Mary Magdalene and the Madonna della Misericordia. The floor also has furnishings, church vestments, and choir stalls from Lucca's cathedral, inlaid with marquetry views of the city carved in 1529.

Pisa 7

Inlaid marble,
Duomo facade

For much of the Middle Ages, Pisa's powerful navy ensured its dominance of the western Mediterranean. Trading links with Spain and North Africa in the 12th century brought vast mercantile wealth and formed the basis of a cultural revolution that is still reflected in Pisa's splendid buildings – especially the Duomo, Baptistry, and Campanile (Leaning Tower). Pisa's decline began in 1284, with its defeat by Genoa, and was hastened by the silting up of the harbor. The city fell to the Florentines in 1406, but suffered its worst crisis in 1944 when it fell victim to Allied bombing.

Pisa's famous Leaning Tower is now the best-known building in the Campo dei Miracoli (Field of Miracles). Originally, however, it was intended as a campanile to complement the Duomo, which was begun by Buschetto in 1064. Today the Duomo stands as one of the finest Pisan-Romanesque buildings in Tuscany, its wonderful four-tiered facade a medley of creamy colonnades and intricate blind arcades. Buschetto's tomb is in the left arch of the facade. Other important features of the exterior include the Portale di San Ranieri (leading to the south transept) and the bronze doors (1180), decorated with reliefs cast by Bonanno Pisano, the first architect of the Leaning Tower. Inside, the highlights are the carved pulpit (1302–11) by Giovanni Pisano, the Tomb of Emperor Henry VII (1315) by Tino da Camaino,

A detail from the Duomo pulpit and a mosaic of Christ in Majesty in the apse, completed by Cimabue in 1302.

The circular Baptistry was begun in 1152 along Romanesque lines, and finished a century later (the delay caused by a shortage of money) in a more ornate Gothic style by Nicola and Giovanni Pisano. The former was responsible for the marble pulpit (1260) in the interior, carved with reliefs of the Nativity, the Adoration of the Magi, the Presentation, the Crucifixion, and the Last Judgment. The pillars that support the pulpit feature statues of the Virtues. The inlaid marble font (1246) is by Guido da Como.

The Camposanto (cemetery) is the fourth element in the Campo dei Miracoli's lovely ensemble. Begun in 1278 by Giovanni di Simone, the vast marble arcades of this long, rectangular building are said to enclose soil from the Holy Land. Bombs in World War II all but destroyed its once famous frescoes, leaving only traces of The Triumph of Death (1360–80). Nearby is the Orto Botanico, one of Europe's oldest botanical gardens.

Museo dell'Opera del Duomo

Piazza del Duomo 6. Tel 050 83 10 11.

Housed in the cathedral's 13th-century former Chapter House, this excellent modern museum displays exhibits removed over the years from the Duomo, Baptistry, and Camposanto. Among the highlights is an imposing 10th-century hippogriff (half horse, half griffin). Cast in bronze by Moorish craftsmen, this statue was looted by Pisan adventurers during the wars against the Saracens. There are also works by both Nicola and Giovanni Pisano, notably Giovanni's ivory Virgin and Child (1300), carved for the Duomo's high altar. Other exhibits include paintings, Roman and Etruscan remains, and ecclesiastical treasures.

The first rooms are devoted to sculpture and early Tuscan paintings. The best exhibits include a 14th-century polyptych by Francesco Traini of Scenes from the Life of St. Dominic, Simone Martini's fine polyptych of The Madonna and

Saints (1321), and a 14th-century statue of the Madonna del Latte, attributed to Andrea Pisano, another member of Pisa's talented school of medieval sculptors. The half-length statue, in gilded marble, shows Christ feeding at his mother's breast. In Room 6 are some of the highlights of the museum, including Masaccio's St. Paul (1426), Gentile da Fabriano's radiant 15th-century Madonna of Humility, and Donatello's reliquary bust of San Rossore (1424-7). Additional rooms contain paintings by Guido Reni, Benozzo Gozzoli, Rosso Fiorentino, and an important picture of Christ attributed to Fra Angelico (c.1395-1455).

This museum is located on the banks of the Arno in San Matteo, an elegantly fronted medieval convent that in the 1800s also served as a prison. Much of the building has been closed for years - several of the rooms have no numbers and some of the exhibits are poorly labeled. Nevertheless, the museum presents a unique opportunity to examine the complete sweep of Pisan and Florentine art from the 12th to the 17th centuries.

The roofline of this tiny church, located just beyond the Ponte Solferino, bristles with spiky Gothic pinnacles, miniature spires, and niches sheltering statues of apostles and saints. The decoration reflects the history of the church, which was built between 1230 and 1323 to house a thorn (spina) from Christ's Crown of Thorns, the gift of a Pisan merchant. The church was once even closer to the Arno, but was rebuilt on the present site in 1871 to protect it from flooding.

Piazza dei Cavalieri

The huge building on the north side of this square is the Palazzo dei Cavalieri, home to one of Pisa University's most prestigious colleges: the Scuola Normale Superiore. Designed by Vasari in 1562, the building, which is covered in exuberant black and white sgraffito decoration (designs scratched into wet plaster), served as the headquarters of the Cavalieri di Santo Stefano, an order of knights created by Cosimo I in 1561. The imposing statue outside depicts Cosimo I.

The Leaning Tower of Pisa

Begun in 1173 on sandy silt subsoil, the Leaning Tower (Torre Pendente) started to tilt even before the third story was finished in 1274. Despite the shallow foundations, construction continued and the structure was completed in 1350. The tower's apparent flouting of the laws of gravity has attracted many visitors over the centuries, including the Pisan scientist Galileo, who climbed to the top to conduct his experiments on the velocity of falling objects. After several engineering interventions that decreased the lean by 14 in (38 cm), the tower is once again safe and open to the public.

Florence. 1,500. Wed.

Famous as the birthplace of Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519), this hilltop town celebrates the genius in the Museo Leonardiano, housed in the 13th-century castle. Among the displays are wooden models of Leonardo's machines and inventions, most are based on drawings from his notebooks, copies of which are shown alongside. These include a bicycle, his conception of a car, an armored tank, and even a machine-gun.

Pistoia 9

93,000. Palazzo dei Vescovi, Piazza del Duomo (0573 216 22). Wed & Sat.

Pistoia's citizens were once known for violence and intrigue, a reputation grounded in the medieval disputes between the city's rival factions, the Bianchi and Neri (Whites and Blacks). Their favoured weapon was a tiny, locally made dagger known as a pistola. Long a centre of metalwork, everything from buses to mattress springs are now made here. In the center, several fine historic buildings are preserved.

Duomo

Piazza del Duomo. daily.
Piazza del Duomo, Pistoia's main square, is dominated by the Duomo (San Zeno) and its bulky 12th-century campanile, originally built as a watchtower in the city walls. The interior of the Duomo is rich in funerary monuments. The finest of these, in the south aisle, is the tomb of Cino da Pistoia. He was a friend of Dante and fellow poet, and is depicted in a relief (1337) lecturing to a class of young boys.

Nearby is the chapel of St James and its extraordinary silver altar decorated with more than 600 statues and reliefs. Although the earliest of these dates from 1287, the altar was not completed until 1456. One of the craftsmen involved was Brunelleschi, who began his career as a silversmith before turning to architecture. Also in the Piazza del Duomo is the octagonal Baptistery, completed in 1359.

This hospital and orphanage, founded in 1277, was named after the ceppo (hollowed-out tree trunk) that was used to collect donations for its work. Inside there are frescoes by Niccolò di Tommaso on the Creation and the Life of St Anthony Abbot (1370). Two doors down, the Palazzo Tau has work by Marino Marini, Pistoia's best-known 20th-century artist.

San Giovanni Fuorcivitas

Via Cavour. daily.
Built in the 12th to 14th centuries, the striking church of San Giovanni Fuorcivitas (literally "St John Outside the City") once stood beyond the city walls. Its north flank is clad in banded marble and there is a Romanesque relief of the Last Supper over the portal. Inside, the holy water stoup, carved in marble with figures of the Virtues, is by Giovanni Pisano (1245–1320). A masterly pulpit, carved in 1270 with scenes from the New Testament, is by Guglielmo da Pisa. Both are among the finest works of this period, when artists were reviving the art of carving.

Prato 10

170,000. Piazza Duomo 8 (0574 241 12). Mon.

While textile factories gird Prato's outskirts, the city center retains several important churches and museums. The Duomo (begun 1211) is flanked by the Pulpit of the Holy Girdle (1434–8), designed by Donatello and Michelozzo, used once a year to display a girdle, reputedly given to Thomas the Apostle before the Assumption of the Virgin. Inside the Duomo is The Life of John the Baptist (1452–66) by Fra Filippo Lippi, and a fresco cycle (1392–5) by Agnolo Gaddi.

Other sights include the Museo Civico, Santa Maria delle Carceri, a Renaissance church in Piazza delle Carceri; the Castello dell'Imperatore, a fortress built by Emperor Frederick II in 1237; the Centro per l'Arte Contemporanea Pecci; and the Museo del Tessuto, which traces the history of Prato's textile industry.

A small fortified hamlet, Artimino is remarkable for the unspoiled Romanesque church of San Leonardo.

Outside the walls lies the Villa Medici di Artimino, "La Ferdinanda," designed by Buontalenti in 1594 for Grand Duke Ferdinando I. Also called the "Villa of a Hundred Chimneys" – for the chimney pots crowding the roof – it houses the Museo Archeologico Etrusco, a collection of archaeological exhibits.

Environs: For lovers of Pontormo's paintings, the church of San Michele in Carmignano, 3 miles (5 km) north of Artimino, contains The Visitation (1530). East of here lies the villa of Poggio a Caiano. Built in 1480 by Giuliano da Sangallo for Lorenzo de' Medici (see p253), it was the first Italian villa to be designed in the Renaissance style.

San Miniato 12

Pisa. 3,900. Piazza del Bastione (0571 427 45). Tue.

This hilltop town manages to remain aloof from the vast industrial sprawl of the Arno valley. Its key building is the semiderelict Rocca (castle), built for Frederick II, German Holy Roman Emperor, in the 13th century. Close by stands the Museo Diocesano, which is home to a Crucifixion (c.1430) attributed to Filippo Lippi, a terracotta bust of Christ attributed to Verrocchio (1435–88), and the Virgin of the Holy Girdle by Andrea del Castagno (c.1417–57). Next door, the red-brick Romanesque facade of the Duomo dates from the 12th century. Its strange inset majolica plates, evidence of trade with Spain or North Africa, probably represent the North Star and the constellations of Ursa Major and Minor (all three were key points of reference for early navigators).

Fiesole 13

Florence. 15,000. Via Portigiani 3 (055 59 87 20). Sat.

Fiesole stands in rolling hilly countryside 5 miles (8 km) north of Florence. Idyllically situated among olive groves, it is a popular retreat from the city thanks to its hilltop position which attracts cool breezes. Founded in the 7th century BC, the original Etruscan colony was a powerful force in central Italy, only surrendering its supremacy after the foundation of Florence (1st century BC).

The restored Duomo of San Romolo in Piazza Mino da Fiesole was begun in 1028. It has a massive bell tower and a bare Romanesque interior. Behind the Duomo, an archaeological area contains the remains of a 1st-century BC Roman theater, traces of Etruscan walls from the 4th century BC, and the Museo Faesulanum, with a collection of bronzes, ceramics, and jewelry dating from the Bronze Age.

Via di San Francesco, a steep lane offering lovely views, leads to the Franciscan friary of San Francesco (14th century) and the interesting 9th-century church of Sant' Alessandro, with a Neo-Classical facade.

Via Vecchia Fiesolana leads to the hamlet of San Domenico, where the 15th-century church of the same name contains a painting of the Madonna with Angels and Saints (c.1430) by Fra Angelico and the Chapter House contains a fresco of The Crucifixion (c.1430), also by him. Close by, on the Via della Badia dei Roccellini, is the Badia Fiesolana, a pretty Romanesque church with a striped marble facade and interior of local gray sandstone, pietra serena.

Arezzo 14

 92,000.   Piazza della Repubblica 28 (0575 377 678).  Sat.

Arezzo is one of Tuscany's wealthiest cities, its prosperity based on a thriving jewelry industry. Although much of its medieval center was destroyed during World War II, resulting in extensive rebuilding and many medieval alleys being replaced by broad avenues, the city preserves some outstanding sights: foremost are Piero della Francesca's famous frescoes in the church of San Francesco (see pp330–31). Close to the church on Corso Italia, the main street, stands the Pieve di Santa Maria, which boasts one of the most ornate Romanesque facades in the region. To its rear stretches the steeply sloping Piazza Grande, flanked by an arcade (1573) designed by Vasari, and by the Palazzo della Fraternità dei Laici (1377–1552). The latter features a Madonna relief by Bernardo Rossellino. The huge Duomo to the north is best known for its 16th-century stained glass and a small fresco of Mary Magdalene by Piero della Francesca (1416–92). The Museo Diocesano features three wooden crucifixes, dating from the 12th and 13th centuries, a bas relief of The Annunciation (1434) by Rossellino and paintings by Vasari. More works by Vasari can be seen in the Casa di Vasari, a house built by the artist in 1540. Still more frescoes by him are displayed in the Museo d'Arte Medioevale e Moderna, a museum that is famed for its excellent collection of majolica pottery.

The Fortezza Medicea, a ruined Medici castle built by Antonio da Sangallo during the 16th century, has fine views.

Arezzo: San Francesco

The 13th-century church of San Francesco houses one of Italy's greatest fresco cycles, the Legend of the True Cross (1452–66), Piero della Francesca's masterwork. The scenes, on the walls of the choir, are now visible again after a long restoration. They describe the history of the Cross used to crucify Christ, from sprig to Tree of Knowledge, to its use as a bridge during the reign of Solomon, and ultimately its discovery by Helena, mother of Constantine, the first Christian emperor.

Cortona was founded by the Etruscans and apart from being one of the oldest hill-towns in Tuscany, it is also one of the most scenic. A major power in the Middle Ages, it was able to hold its own against Siena and Arezzo. Today it is a charming maze of old streets and medieval buildings, like the Palazzo Comunale on Piazza della Repubblica. The town's early history is traced in the Museo dell'Accademia Etrusca, which contains Etruscan artifacts and a wide variety of Egyptian and Roman remains. The small Museo Diocesano features several fine paintings, in particular a Crucifixion by the Renaissance artist Pietro Lorenzetti, a Deposition (1502) by Luca Signorelli, and a sublime Annunciation (c.1434) by Fra Angelico. Signorelli, born in Cortona, is buried in the church of San Francesco (built in 1245), which contains an Annunciation painted in Baroque style by Pietro da Cortona, another native artist. The Madonna del Calcinajo (1485), a gem of Renaissance architecture, is located on the southern outskirts of town.

Chiusi is now a largely modern town, but in the past it was one of the most powerful cities in the Etruscan league, reaching the height of its influence in the 7th and 6th centuries BC (see p45). Numerous Etruscan tombs lie dotted in the surrounding countryside, the source of the exhibits in the town's Museo Nazionale Etrusco. Founded in 1871, the museum is packed with cremation urns, vases decorated with black figures, and Bucchero ware, burnished to resemble bronze.

The Romanesque Duomo in Piazza del Duomo incorporates recycled Roman pillars and capitals. The wall decorations in the nave, resembling frescoes, were painted by Arturo Viligiardi in 1887. There is a Roman mosaic underneath the high altar. Visits can be made to several Etruscan tombs under the town from the Museo della Cattedrale, a museum in the cloister of the Duomo that also features displays of Roman, Lombardic, and medieval sculpture.

This is one of Tuscany's highest hill-towns, its walls and fortifications offering broad views over Umbria and southern Tuscany, and the vineyards providing the Vino Nobile wine that has made its name famous. The streets are brimming with Renaissance palazzi. The main street, the Corso, climbs to the Duomo (1592–1630), the setting for one of the masterworks of the Siense School, the Assumption (1401) by Taddeo di Bartolo. The High Renaissance church, Tempio di San Biagio (1518–34), lies off the road to Pienza.

Pienza 19

Siena. 🏠 2,300. 📞 📍 Piazza Dante Alighieri 18 (0578 74 83 59). 📅 Fri.

Pienza is a delightful village whose intimate little center was almost completely redesigned in the 15th century by Pope Pius II. Born as Aeneas Sylvius Piccolomini in 1405, when the village was known as Corsignano, he became a leading Humanist scholar and philosopher. Elected Pope in 1458, he decided to rebuild his birthplace, renaming it Pienza in his own honor. The Florentine architect and sculptor, Bernardo Rossellino, was commissioned to build a cathedral, papal palace and town hall (all completed in the three years from 1459 to 1462), but the grander scheme for a planned model Renaissance town was never realized. Some idea of what might have been, however, can still be gained from the Palazzo Piccolomini, the former papal palace, which continued to be inhabited by Pius's descendants until 1968. The rooms open to the public include Pius's bedroom and library, though the highlight of a visit is the superb panorama from the loggia and arcaded courtyard at the palace's rear.

Pleasant walks and more great views can be had from the village walls. The airy Duomo (see p252) next door contains six altarpieces of the Madonna and Child, each commissioned from the leading Siense painters of the day. Rossellino was forced to build the Duomo on a cramped site with poor foundations, and cracks appeared in the building before it was even completed. Today the church's eastern end suffers from severe subsidence.

Asciano. Antiche Fonti Lavatoio (0577 71 95 10).

To the south of Siena and central Tuscany is the area known as the Crete Senesi, which is characterized by round clay hillocks eroded by heavy rain over the centuries. Dubbed the “Tuscan desert,” it is almost completely barren. Cypress and pine trees, planted to provide windbreaks along roads and around isolated farm houses, are an important feature in this empty, primeval landscape. Shepherds tend flocks of sheep here; the milk is used to produce the strongly flavored pecorino cheese that is popular throughout Tuscany.

Siena. 7,000. Piazza Roma (0577 30 48 34). Jun–Aug. www.monteriggioniturismo.it

Monteriggioni is a gem of a medieval hilltop town. It was built in 1203 and ten years later became a garrison town. It is completely encircled by high walls with 14 heavily fortified towers, built to guard the northern borders of Siena’s territory against invasion by Florentine armies.

Dante used Monteriggioni as a simile for the deepest abyss at the heart of his Inferno, which compares the town’s “ring-shaped citadel...

crowned with towers” with giants standing in a moat. The perfectly preserved walls are best viewed from the Colle di Val d’Elsa road. Within the walls, the sleepy town consists of a large piazza, a pretty Romanesque church (on the piazza), a few houses, a couple of craft shops, restaurants, and shops selling many of the locally produced Castello di Monteriggioni wines.

Environ: West of Monteriggioni by 2 miles (3 km) lies the former Cistercian Abbey of Abbadia dell’Isola (12th century). This Romanesque church was largely rebuilt in the 18th century, after the cupola fell apart. It contains frescoes by Taddeo di Bartolo and Vincenzo Tamagni.

The Pisan-Romanesque Duomo, located on Piazza San Giovanni, has a fine 13th-century pulpit with sculptured panels.

Volterra’s excellent art gallery and museum, the Pinacoteca e

Museo Civico, features works by Florentine artists. Christ in Majesty (1492) by Ghirlandaio shows Christ hovering above an idealized Tuscan landscape. Luca Signorelli’s Virgin and Child with Saints (1491) states his debt to Roman art through the reliefs on the base of the Virgin’s throne. Painted in the same year, his Annunciation is a beautifully balanced composition. Another highlight is Rosso Fiorentino’s Mannerist painting, The Deposition (1521).

The city is famous for its craftsmen who have been carving elaborate statues and objets d’art from locally mined alabaster for 2,500 years.

The remote Cistercian abbey at San Galgano lies in a superb setting. San Galgano (1148–81) was a brave but dissolute knight who turned to God, renouncing the material world. When he tried to break his sword against a rock as a symbol of his rejection of war, it was swallowed by the stone. This he interpreted as a sign of God's approval. He built a hut on a hill above the abbey (the site of today's beehive-shaped chapel at Montesiepi, built c.1185). Here he later died a hermit. Pope Urban III declared him a saint.

The abbey, begun in 1218, is Gothic in style, reflecting the French origins of the Cistercian monks who designed it. They avoided contact with the outside world and divided their lives between prayer and labor. Despite an emphasis on poverty, the monks became wealthy from the sale of wood, and by the middle of the 14th century the abbey was corruptly administered and gradually fell into decline.

In the late 14th century, the English mercenary Sir John Hawkwood sacked the abbey and by 1397 the abbot was its sole occupant. It was eventually dissolved in 1652.

St. Galgano's sword stands embedded in a stone just inside the door of the circular oratory. The 14th-century stone walls of the side chapel are covered with worn frescoes showing scenes from Galgano's life by Ambrogio Lorenzetti (1344).

Set in the Colline Metallifere (metal-bearing hills) where lead, copper, and silver ores were mined as early as Etruscan times, Massa Marittima is far from being a grimy industrial town. Examples of Romanesque architecture survive from the time when the town became an independent republic (1225–1335). The Romanesque-Gothic Duomo in Piazza Garibaldi is dedicated to St. Cerbone, a 6th-century saint whose story is sculpted in stone above the main portal. Inside the building, the Maestà is attributed to Duccio (c.1316).

The Museo della Miniera (museum of mining) is located partially inside a former mine shaft and has exhibits that explain mining techniques, tools, and minerals.

Street by Street: Siena 22

Unicorn
Contrada

Siena's principal sights cluster in the maze of narrow streets and alleys around the fan-shaped Piazza del Campo. One of Europe's greatest medieval squares, the piazza sits at the heart of the city's 17 contrade, a series of parishes whose ancient rivalries are still acted out in the twice-yearly Palio (see p341). Loyalty to the contrada of one's birth is fierce, and as you wander the streets you will see the parishes' animal symbols repeated on flags, plaques and carvings. Siena's hilly position also means that city walks offer delightful hidden corners and countless sudden views.

Piazza del Campo

Italy's loveliest piazza occupies the site of the old Roman forum, and for much of Siena's early history was the city's principal marketplace. It began to assume its present shape in 1293, when the Council of Nine, Siena's ruling body at the time, began to acquire land with a view to creating a grand civic piazza. The red brick paving was begun in 1327 and completed in 1349, its distinctive nine segments designed to reflect the authority of the Council of Nine and to symbolize the protective folds of the Madonna's cloak. The piazza has been the focus of city life ever since, a setting for executions, bullfights, and the twice-yearly drama of the Palio (see p341), a festival centered around a bareback horse race. Cafés, restaurants, and fine medieval palazzi now line the Campo's fringes, dominated by the Palazzo Pubblico (1297–1342) and Torre del Mangia, built in 1348 (see p340). This imposing ensemble tends to overshadow the little Fonte Gaia on the piazza's northern edge. The fountain is a 19th-century copy of an original carved by Jacopo della Quercia in 1409–19. Its reliefs depict the Virtues, Adam and Eve, and the Madonna and Child (the originals are on the rear loggia of the Palazzo Pubblico). The fountain's water is still supplied by a 500-year-old aqueduct.

Once a capital to rival Florence, Siena is Italy's prettiest medieval town, still endowed with the grandeur of the age in which it was at its peak (1260–1348). Begin an exploration of its historic center in Piazza del Campo and the surrounding maze of medieval alleys.

Although it continues in its ancient role as Siena's town hall, the Palazzo Pubblico's medieval rooms, some decorated with paintings of the Sienese School, are open to the public. The Museo Civico is housed here. The main council chamber, or Sala del Mappamondo, is named after a map of the world painted by Ambrogio Lorenzetti in the early 14th century. One wall is covered by Simone Martini's fresco of the Maestà (1315), which depicts the Virgin in Majesty as the Queen of Heaven, attended by the Apostles, saints, and angels. Opposite is a fresco (attributed to Simone Martini, but possibly later) of the mercenary Guidoriccio da Fogliano (1330). The walls of the chapel alongside are covered with frescoes of the Life of the Virgin (1407) by Taddeo di Bartolo, and the choir stalls

The Sala del Risorgimento is covered with late 19th-century frescoes illustrating the events leading up to the unification of Italy under King Vittorio Emanuele II.

In the palace courtyard is the entrance to the magnificent Torre del Mangia, the palace's huge bell tower. Rising 330 ft (102 m), it is a prominent feature of Siena's skyline. Built by the brothers Muccio and Francesco di Rinaldo between 1338 and 1348, it was named after the first bellringer, whose idleness led to the nickname Mangiaguadagni (literally "eat the profits"). There are 505 steps to the top of the tower, which has wonderful views.

Siena's patron saint, Catherine Benincasa (1347–80), was the daughter of a tradesman. At the age of eight she devoted herself to God and had many visions, as well as later receiving the stigmata (wounds of Christ). Like her namesake, St. Catherine of Alexandria, she was believed to have been betrothed to the Christ Child in a vision – a scene which inspired many artists. Her eloquence persuaded Pope Gregory XI to return the seat of the papacy to Rome in 1376, after 67 years of exile in Avignon. St. Catherine died in Rome and was canonized in 1461.

Today Catherine's house is surrounded by chapels and cloisters. Among them is the church of the Crucifixion, which was built in 1623 in her orchard to house the late 12th-century Crucifixion, in front of which she received the stigmata in 1375. The house is decorated with paintings of events from her life by artists including her contemporaries Francesco Vanni and Pietro Sorri.

It now contains the Sienese state archives, account books, and taxation documents dating back to the 13th century. Some of the leading artists of their day were employed to paint the wooden bindings used to enclose the tax and account records. The paintings, now on display in the Sala di Congresso, often show scenes of Siena itself, bristling with towers, or episodes from the city's past.

Other records include a will attributed to Boccaccio and the council's contract with Jacopo della Quercia for the Fonte Gaia (see p339).

The chapel itself was built in 1460 for this purpose and is dominated by Sodoma's frescoes (1526), to the right and left of the altar, which show Catherine in states of religious fervor. The church has the only portrait of St. Catherine considered authentic, painted by her friend Andrea Vanni.

THE SIENESE PALIO

The Palio is Tuscany's most celebrated festival and it occurs in the Campo each year on July 2 and August 16 at 7pm. It is a bareback horse race first recorded in 1283, but it may have had its origins in Roman military training. The jockeys represent ten of Siena's 17 contrade (districts); the horses are chosen by the drawing of lots and are blessed at the local contrada churches. Preceded by days of colorful pageantry, costume processions, and heavy betting, the races themselves last only 90 seconds each. Thousands of spectators crowd into the piazza to watch the race, and rivalry among competitors is intense. The winner is rewarded with a silk palio (banner). Festivities for the winners can last for weeks.

Siena: Duomo

A symbol of the Risen Christ on the façade

Siena's Duomo (1136–1382) is one of Italy's greatest cathedrals, a spectacular mixture of sculpture, paintings, and Pisan-influenced Romanesque-Gothic architecture. Had 14th-century plans to create a new nave come to fruition, the building would have become the largest church in Christendom. In the event the plan came to nothing, abandoned when the plague of 1348 virtually halved the city's population. Among the Duomo's treasures are sculptural masterworks by Nicola Pisano, Donatello, and Michelangelo, a fine inlaid pavement, and a magnificent fresco cycle by Pinturicchio.

After an 18-month siege, during which more than 8,000 Siennese died, the town's banking and wool industries were suppressed by the Florentine masters and all major building work ended.

The fortress now houses the Enoteca Italiana, offering visitors the chance both to taste and to buy quality wines from all over Italy. There is also a restaurant on the site.

The 13 towers that dominate San Gimignano's majestic skyline were built by noble families in the 12th and 13th centuries, when the town's position – on the main pilgrim route from northern Europe to Rome – brought it great prosperity. The plague of 1348, and the diversion of the pilgrim route, led to its decline as well as its preservation. Today only one of the towers, the Torre Grossa, is open to the public. For a small town, San Gimignano is rich in works of art, good shops, and restaurants.

Elba's most famous resident was Napoleon, who spent nine months here after the fall of Paris in 1814. Today Italy's third largest island is mainly populated by holidaymakers, who come by ferry from Piombino, 6 miles (10 km) away on the mainland. The main town is Portoferraio, with an old port and a modern seafront of hotels and fish restaurants.

The landscape of the island is varied. On the west coast, which tends to be a little quieter, there are sandy beaches suitable for all water sports. The east coast, centered on the town of Porto Azzurro, the island's second port, is more rugged, with high cliffs and stony beaches. Inland, olive groves and vineyards line hillsides, and vegetation covers the mountains. A good way to see the interior is to take the road from Marciana Marina to the old medieval village of Marciana Alta. Close by, a minor road leads to a cable car that runs to Monte Capanne (3,300 ft/1,018 m), a magnificent viewpoint.

The Etruscans, followed by the Romans, were the first to cultivate the marshes and low hills of the Maremma. Following the collapse of the Roman Empire, however, the area fell prey to flooding and malaria, twin scourges that left it virtually uninhabited until the 18th century. The land has since been reclaimed, the irrigation canals unblocked and farming developed on the fertile soil. The stunning Parco Naturale della Maremma was set up in 1975 to preserve the area's native flora and fauna, and to prevent development on one of Italy's few pristine stretches of coastline. Entrance to much of the park is restricted to access on foot or by a park bus from Alberese. Other more marginal areas, however, such as the excellent beach at Marina di Alberese and the countryside around Talamone in the south, are easier to see.

UMBRIA

Long dismissed as Tuscany's "gentler sister," Umbria has finally emerged from the shadow of its more famous western neighbor. Forming an expanse of gentle pastoral countryside and high mountain wilderness, the picturesque region has been dubbed the "Green Heart of Italy." Umbria is also well known for the beauty and profusion of its medieval hill-towns.

The region was inhabited in the 8th century BC by the Umbrians, a peaceable farming tribe, and later colonized by the Etruscans and Romans. In the Middle Ages, the Lombards established a dukedom centered around Spoleto. By the 13th century much of the region was scattered with independent city-states, most of them eventually absorbed by the Papal States, where they remained until Italian unification in 1860.

Today the old towns are Umbria's chief glory. In Perugia, the region's capital, and the smaller centers of Gubbio, Montefalco, and Todi, there are numerous Romanesque churches, civic palaces, vivid fresco cycles, and endless medieval nooks and crannies. Spoleto, renowned for its summer arts festival, blends grandiose medieval monuments with Roman remains and some of Italy's oldest churches. The surrounding Vale of Spoleto is a checkerboard of agricultural countryside and fascinating traditional villages.

Assisi, the birthplace of St. Francis, contains the basilica di San Francesco, frescoed in part by Giotto. At Orvieto, magnificently situated on its volcanic crag, there are Etruscan remains and one of Italy's finest Romanesque-Gothic cathedrals.

Umbria's woods, ice-clear streams, and rich soils yield many delicacies. Chief among these are trout and truffles, olive oils to rival those of Tuscany, prized lentils from Castelluccio, cured meats from Norcia, and tangy mountain cheeses. A variety of well-regarded wines are produced from the vineyards of Torgiano and Montefalco.

Exploring Umbria

Assisi and Spoleto, Umbria's loveliest towns, are the most convenient and charming bases for exploring the region. Both these medieval gems are unmissable, as is the old center of Perugia, the region's capital, and the alluring hill-towns of Orvieto, Gubbio, Spello, Montefalco, and Todi. Umbria's landscapes are as compelling as its towns, from the eerie wastes of the Piano Grande and the mountain splendor of the Monti Sibillini national park (best reached from Norcia) to the gentler countryside of the Valnerina and the beach-fringed shores of Lake Trasimeno.

GETTING AROUND

Excellent road, rail, and bus links exist in the region. The A1 from Florence passes Orvieto, which is linked to Todi by the S448. The S75 connects Perugia, Assisi, and Spello, then the S3 continues to Trevi, Spoleto and Terni. Rome–Florence trains serve Orvieto, and Rome–Ancona trains serve Spoleto, with branch lines connecting Perugia, Spello, and Assisi.

Gubbio 1

Perugia. 33,000. Fossato di Vico-Gubbio. Via della Repubblica 15 (075 922 06 93). Tue.

Gubbio vies with Assisi for the title of Umbria's most medieval town. The beauty of its twisting streets and terracotta-tiled houses is enhanced by the forest-swathed Apennines. Founded by the Umbrians in the 3rd century BC as Tota Ikuvina, it assumed greater prominence in the 1st century AD as a Roman colony (Eugubium). It emerged as an independent commune in the 11th century having spread up the slopes of Monte Ingino. From 1387 to 1508 Gubbio was ruled from Urbino by the dukes of Montefeltro.

The 13th-century Duomo is distinguished by a wagon-vaulted ceiling whose curved arches symbolize hands in prayer. Medieval Via dei Consoli leads to the 13th-century Palazzo del Bargello – a stone-faced building formerly the headquarters of the chief of police. Also here is the Fontana dei Matti (Fountain of the Mad), named after the tradition that anyone who walks around it three times will go insane.

Macabre legends surround the walled-up Porte della Morte (Doors of Death) that can be seen in Via dei Consoli and elsewhere in the town. Reputedly used for the passage of coffins from houses, the doors, once tainted, were sealed and never used again. Their purpose was probably defensive. In the lower town, the church of San Francesco (1259–82) is known for 17 faded Dominating the skyline of Gubbio is this mighty civic palace, begun in 1332 by Gattapone. Its Salone dell'Arengo houses the Museo Civico, best known for the Eugubine Tablets (250–150 BC). Discovered in 1444, the seven bronze slabs are inscribed with Etruscan and Roman characters, probably a phonetic translation of prayers and rituals from the ancient Umbrian and Etruscan languages. Upstairs a small art gallery contains works by local painters.

Perugia's old center hinges around the pedestrianized Corso Vannucci, named after the local painter Pietro Vannucci (Perugia). At its northern end is Piazza IV Novembre, dominated by the Fontana Maggiore, a 13th-century fountain by Nicola and Giovanni Pisano. To the rear rises the 15th-century Duomo, its entrance flanked by a statue of Pope Julius II (1555) and a pulpit built for Siena's San Bernardino (1425). Its Cappella del Santo Anello contains the Virgin's "wedding ring," a weighty piece of agate said to change color according to the character of the person wearing it. The third pillar in the south nave holds a Renaissance painting of the Madonna delle Grazie by Gian Nicola di Paolo. The figure is credited with miraculous powers, and mothers bring newly baptized children to kneel before it. Buried in the transepts are Popes Urban IV and Martin IV.

Away from the Corso is the Oratorio di San Bernardino (1457–61) on Piazza San Francesco, with a colorful facade by Agostino di Duccio.

Beyond the old city walls on Borgo XX Giugno stands San Pietro, Perugia's most extravagantly decorated church. Founded in the 10th century and rebuilt in 1463, the best feature of the fine interior is the wooden choir (1526).

Piazza Giordano Bruno is home to San Domenico (1305–1632), Umbria's largest church, which is known for the Gothic tomb of Benedict XI (c.1304) and decoration by Agostino di Duccio.

emblem of Perugia. The Sala di Udienza del Collegio della Mercanzia, built around 1390, was formerly used by the Merchants' Guild. This room is late Gothic in style, with exquisite paneling and 15th-century inlaid wood.

Also in the palace is the Collegio del Cambio, Perugia's former money exchange, which was begun in 1452. This room was used by the Bankers' Guild. Its walls are covered with superlative frescoes (1498–1500) by Perugino, works that are devoted to a mixture of Classical and religious scenes. A glum self-portrait scowls down from the centre of the left wall, while the hand of Perugino's pupil Raphael may be evident in some panels on the right wall.

Edged with low hills, this is Italy's fourth-largest lake. Its miles of placid water and reed-lined shores have a tranquil, melancholy beauty.

Drainage of the lake began under the Romans, but today the lake is gently drying up of its own accord. The town of Castiglione del Lago, jutting out on a fortified promontory, has an easy-going atmosphere and small sandy beaches. The 16th-century castle is used for summer concerts. The church of Santa Maria Maddalena, begun in 1836, has a fine Madonna and Child (c.1500) by Eusebio di San Giorgio.

Like Castiglione, Passignano sul Trasimeno offers boat trips to Isole Maggiori. The island's charming village is known for lacemaking.

THE BATTLE OF LAKE TRASIMENO

In 217 BC the Romans suffered one of their worst ever military defeats on the shores of Lake Trasimeno. The Carthaginian general, Hannibal, lured the Romans (who were led by the consul Flaminius) into a masterful ambush close to present-day Ossaia (Place of Bones) and Sanguinetto (Place of Blood).

Some 16,000 legionaries perished, hacked down on the lake's marshy fringes. Hannibal, by contrast, lost only 1,500 men. Today you can explore the battlefield, which includes over 100 mass graves found near Tuoro sul Trasimeno.

Assisi: Basilica di San Francesco

The burial place of St. Francis, this basilica was begun in 1228, two years after the saint's death. Over the next century its Upper and Lower Churches were decorated by the foremost artists of their day, among them Cimabue, Simone Martini, Pietro Lorenzetti, and Giotto, whose frescoes on the Life of St. Francis are some of the most renowned in Italy. The basilica, which dominates Assisi, is one of the great Christian shrines and receives vast numbers of pilgrims throughout the year.

This beautiful medieval town, with its geranium-hung streets, lovely views, and fountain-splashed piazzas, is heir to the legacy of St. Francis (c.1181–1226), who is buried in the Basilica di San Francesco. Sadly the town suffered serious damage during the earthquake of September 1997, but restoration was relatively swift – completed in approximately two years. The tourist office can give information on which sights are open to visitors.

Piazza del Comune, Assisi's main square, is dominated by the columns of the Tempio di Minerva, a Roman temple-front from the Augustan age. The Palazzo Comunale, opposite, is home to the Pinacoteca Comunale, an art gallery with works by local medieval artists.

Down Corso Mazzini lies the Basilica di Santa Chiara, the burial place of St. Clare – Francis's companion and the founder of the Poor Clares (an order of nuns). One of its chapels contains the crucifix that is said to have bowed its head and ordered Francis to "Repair God's church." It came from San Damiano, a sublime church set amid olive groves south of the Porta Nuova.

The Duomo (San Rufino), built during the 12th and 13th centuries, has a superb Romanesque facade. Inside is a small museum of paintings, and there are archaeological items in the crypt. From the Duomo, Via Maria delle Rose leads to the Rocca Maggiore (rebuilt in 1367), an evocative if much-restored castle.

Thirteenth-century San Pietro, on Piazza San Pietro, is a simple and carefully restored Romanesque church. The nearby Oratorio dei Pellegrini, a 15th-century pilgrims' hospice, contains well-preserved frescoes by Matteo da Gualdo.

The facade and its rose window are early examples of Italian Gothic.

Perched on a 984-ft (300-m) plateau, Orvieto looks down over a vineyard-spotted plain. Visitors flood into the town to admire the Duomo, among the greatest of Italy's Romanesque-Gothic cathedrals.

The tiny 14th-century church of San Lorenzo in Arari is at the end of Via Scalza. Its walls feature frescoes describing the martyrdom of St. Lawrence, who was grilled to death. The altar is made from an Etruscan sacrificial slab. Via Malabranca leads to San Giovenale at Orvieto's western tip, a church that is beautifully and almost completely covered in detailed frescoes from the 15th and 16th centuries. It offers broad views over the surrounding countryside. Sant'Andrea, in Piazza della Repubblica, is distinguished by a curious 12-sided campanile, part of the original 12th-century building.

📍 Piazza del Popolo 38 (075 894 54 16). 🕒 Sat.

Looking down over the Tiber valley from its hilltop eyrie, Todi is one of the most strikingly situated of Umbria's famous hill-towns. An ancient Etruscan and then Roman settlement, it still preserves an uncorrupted medieval air, with several tiny churches, three austere public palaces, and many sleepy corners.

Most people are drawn here by the Piazza del Popolo, the main square, flanked by the lovely plain-faced Duomo. Built in the 13th century on the site of a Roman temple to Apollo, it has a dusky interior and one of Umbria's finest choirs (1521–30). Note Ferràù da Faenza's huge painting (1596) on the rear wall, a less than totally successful copy of Michelangelo's Last Judgment, and the altarpiece at the end of the right aisle by Giannicola di Paolo (a follower of Perugino).

Also flanking the piazza are the Palazzo dei Priori (1293–1337) and the linked Palazzo del Capitano (1290) and Palazzo del Popolo (1213).

In the Palazzo del Capitano, distinguished by its redoubtable medieval interior, lies the

Museo

Etrusco-Romano. The museum contains a collection of local Etruscan and Roman artifacts. There are altarpieces and sacred objects in the Pinacoteca Comunale, also housed in the palace.

A few steps from the piazza rises San Fortunato (1292–1462), named after Todi's first bishop, with a florid Gothic doorway (1415–58). The high vaulted gothic is based on German Gothic "hall" churches and the "barn" churches of Tuscany, characterized by a low-pitched vault, polygonal apse, and nave and aisles of equal height. The choir (1590) is superb, but the church's most famous work is a Madonna and Child (1432) by Masolino da Panicale (fourth chapel on the right). The crypt contains the tomb of Jacopone da Todi (c.1228–1306), a noted medieval poet and mystic.

To the right of the church are some shady gardens, from which a path (past the tiny castle) drops through the trees to emerge in front of Santa Maria della Consolazione (1508–1607), near the N79. One of central Italy's finest Renaissance churches, and based on a Greek cross, it may have been built to a plan by Bramante. The stark, chill interior is overshadowed by the harmonious exterior.

F Piazza della Libertà 7 (0743 21 86 20 or 21 86 21). Tue & Fri.
www.spoleto.umbria2000.it

Founded by the Umbrians, Spoleto was one of central Italy's most important Roman colonies, a prominence maintained by the Lombards, who in the 7th century made it the capital of one of their three Italian dukedoms. After a spell as an independent city state, in 1354 Spoleto fell to the papacy.

Spoleto, within its wooded setting, is the loveliest of the Umbrian hill-towns. Its urbane atmosphere is enhanced by its superb monuments and by the Festival dei Due Mondi, one of Europe's leading arts festivals held annually in June and July.

At the southern end of Piazza del Mercato is the Arco di

Druso, a 1st-century AD Roman arch. It is flanked by the church of Sant'Ansano, whose crypt is covered in frescoes that may date from the 6th century. Via Aurelio Saffi, at the piazza's northern end, leads to Sant'Eufemia. This utterly simple 10th-century Romanesque church is known for its matroneum (women's gallery), once used to segregate the congregation.

A short way beyond, the fan-shaped Piazza del Duomo opens out to reveal Spoleto's 12th-century Duomo, graced with an elegant Romanesque facade. Filling the apse of the Baroque interior is a great fresco cycle. The final work of Fra Lippo Lippi, from 1467–9, it describes episodes from the Life of the Virgin. The Cappella Erioli is adorned with Pinturicchio's unfinished Madonna and Child (1497).

The best of the exceptional churches in the lower town is 4th-century San Salvatore, located in the main cemetery, a spot suited to the church's eerie sense of antiquity. Nearby stands San Ponziano, fronted by a captivating three-tiered Romanesque facade typical of Umbria. It has a 10th-century crypt, supported by odd little columns and decorated with Byzantine frescoes.

Romanesque San Gregorio in Piazza Garibaldi dates from 1069, but its cramped facade and stolid campanile incorporate fragments of Roman buildings. Inside is a raised presbytery and a lovely multi-columned crypt.

Well-preserved patches of fresco dot the walls. Some 10,000 Christian martyrs are supposedly buried near the church. They were reputedly slaughtered in the town's Roman amphitheater, traces of which can be seen in the barracks on Via del Anfiteatro.

Ponte delle Torri

This magnificent 14th-century aqueduct, the "bridge of towers," is 262 ft (80 m) high.

Designed by Gattapone (from Gubbio), it is the town's single most famous monument.

ROMANESQUE CHURCHES IN UMBRIA

Umbria's church-building tradition had its roots in ancient Roman basilicas and in the chapels built over the shrines of its many saints and martyrs. The region's Romanesque facades are usually divided into three tiers, often with three rose windows arranged above a trio of arched portals. The three doors usually correspond to the interior's nave and two aisles, which derive from the simple barn-like plan of Roman basilicas. Inside, the presbytery is often raised in order to allow for the building of a crypt, which usually contained the relics of a saint or martyr. Many of the churches took centuries to build, or were repeatedly modified over time, often acquiring elements of Gothic, Baroque, or Renaissance styles.

San Lorenzo di Arari in Orvieto takes its name from an Etruscan altar (arari). This 14th-century church has a very simple facade (see p358).

Spoleto's Duomo (1198) has eight rose windows, a mosaic (1207), and a Renaissance portico (1491). The tower was built from old Roman remains.

From the bridge, there are views of the bastions of the Rocca Alborno, a huge papal fortress built in 1359–64, also by Gattapone. Across the bridge a path leads to the Strada di Montelucio and the church of San Pietro, famous for the fascinating 12th-century carvings on its facade.

Montefalco, whose name (Falcon's Mount) draws inspiration from its lofty position and sweeping views, is the best of the fascinating villages in the Vale of Spoleto. Criss-crossed by streets almost too narrow for cars, it takes less than five minutes to walk through the village. Yet you might happily spend a morning here, most of it in the polished Museo Civico, housed in the former church

The simple Gothic church of Sant'Agostino (begun 1279) on Corso Mameli is dotted with frescoes from the 14th–16th centuries. The church also contains three mummies.

In the main square local wines on sale include the rich, red Sagrantino di Montefalco. Just outside the town walls, the church of Sant'Illuminata is covered with charming frescoes, the work of the local 16th-century artist Francesco Melanzio. About 1 mile (2 km) beyond, the prettily situated church of San Fortunato is decorated with frescoes by Gozzoli and Tiberio d'Assisi.

Environs: The village in the Vale of Spoleto with the most spectacular setting is Trevi. The churches of San Martino (16th century), on Passeggiata di San Martino, and Madonna delle Lacrime (1487–1522), south of Trevi on the road into the village, contain paintings by Perugino and Tiberio d'Assisi, among others.

Spello is one of the better known villages in the Vale of Spoleto. It is renowned for a fresco cycle by Pinturicchio in the Cappella Baglioni of the church of Santa Maria Maggiore (12th–13th century) on Via Consolare. Executed around 1500, the frescoes depict scenes from the New Testament. Toward the center of the village is the Gothic church of Sant'Andrea (13th century) on Via Cavour. This road becomes Via Garibaldi, which leads to San Lorenzo, a Baroque gem of a church dating from the 12th century.

Spello also boasts Roman ruins from the age of Augustus: the Porta Consolare at the end of Via Consolare, and the twin-towered Porta Venere by Via Torri di Properzio.

The road to Assisi over Monte Subasio offers stunning views from the top of the mountain above Spello.

Environs: The least known village in the Vale of Spoleto is Bevagna. Like Spello, it sprang to life as a way-station on the Via Flaminia (the Roman road that ran through this part of Umbria). The medieval Piazza Silvestri is the setting for two Romanesque churches.

The lofty peaks of the Monti Sibillini in eastern Umbria

San Silvestro (1195) is the more atmospheric of the pair, thanks to its shadowy interior and ancient crypt, but San Michele (late 12th century) has an elegant portal, famed for the little gargoyles on either side. Both churches are the work of Maestro Binello.

The national park of the Monti Sibillini in eastern Umbria provides the region's wildest and most spectacular scenery. A range 25 miles (40 km) long, the mountains form part of the Apennines, a chain that runs the length of the Italian peninsula. Monte peninsula's third highest; it stands at 8,123 ft (2,476 m), a great whale-backed peak close to the cave of the mythical sybil that gave the region its name.

Good maps and trails make this a superb walking area, while drivers can follow hair-pin roads to some of Italy's most magical landscapes. Chief of these is the Piano Grande, a huge upland plain surrounded by a vast amphitheater of mountains. Bare but for flocks of sheep and bedraggled haystacks, the plain blazes with wild flowers in spring and with lentils later in the year. The only habitation is Castelluccio, a beautiful, neglected mountain village now being restored. It can be reached by road from Norcia and Arquata del Tronto.

Norcia 11

Perugia. 4,700.
f Piazza San Benedetto (0743 82 81 73). Thu.

The birthplace of St. Benedict, Norcia is a robust mountain town and an excellent base for exploring Valnerina and Monti Sibillini. One of Italy's culinary capitals, it is renowned for truffles and for some of Italy's best hams, sausages, and salamis. Indeed, the Italian word for a pork butcher's (norcineria) derives from the name of the town.

Norcia's main sights are in Piazza San Benedetto. On the eastern flank, the church of San Benedetto has a 14th-century portal adorned with statues of Benedict and his sister (Santa Scolastica). Legend claims that the church marks the site of Benedict's birth – indeed there are the remains of a 5th-century building in the crypt. However, the church was more likely to have been built over the site of an old Roman temple, since the forum of the Roman colony of Nursia once occupied this spot.

Left of the church stands the Palazzo Comunale, a monument to the town's period as a free commune during the 13th and 14th centuries. On the opposite side of the square rises the Castellina (1554), a blunt papal fortress designed by Vignola to help impose order on an unruly mountain district. The Duomo (1560), to the left of the Castellina, has been ravaged by earthquakes over the centuries. Indeed, Norcia has been the victim of successive earthquakes and its houses are low and heavily buttressed with thick walls to protect them from further damage.

Sant'Agostino on Via Anicia features a range of good 16th-century frescoes.

A little way beyond, the Oratorio di Sant'Agostinnaccio in Piazza Palatina contains a superb 17th-century ceiling. Via Umberto shelters the Edicola (1354), a strange tabernacle believed to have been carved for a Holy Week procession.

Valnerina 12

Perugia. Spoleto, then bus.

Piazza Garibaldi 1, Cascia (0743 711 47).

The Valnerina (Little Valley of the Nera River) curves through a broad swathe of eastern Umbria, draining the mountains around Norcia and the Sibillini before emptying into the Tiber. It is edged with craggy, tree-covered slopes and dotted with upland villages and fortified hamlets.

The high spot is San Pietro in Valle, an idyllically situated monastery in the hills above the village of Colleponete.

Founded in the 8th century, it is one of the few surviving memorials to the Lombards, whose central Italian duchy had its capital in Spoleto. The main body of the monastery church dates from this period, as does the high altar. The nave walls are covered in a wealth of 12th-century frescoes. Some of the best Romanesque carvings in Umbria can be found here.

More popular than the monastery are the Cascate delle Marmore near Terni, among Europe's highest waterfalls at 541 ft (165 m). Created by the Romans during drainage work, their waters are now diverted to produce hydroelectric power on all but a few special days. You can view the falls from Marmore village or the S209.

LE MARCHE

Tucked away in a remote corner between the Adriatic Sea and the Apennine mountains, Le Marche (the Marches) is an enchanting rural patchwork of old towns, hill country, and long, sandy beaches. In pre-Christian times the area was settled by the Piceni, a tribe eventually assimilated by the Romans.

In the 4th century BC, exiles from Magna Graecia colonized much of the region. The most notable town was Ancona, also the northernmost point of Greek influence on the Italian peninsula. During the early Middle Ages the region marked the edge of the Holy Roman Empire, giving rise to its present name (march meant border area).

The region's historical peak was reached in the 15th century under Federico da Montefeltro, whose court at Urbino became one of Europe's leading cultural centers. Much of Urbino's former grandeur survives, particularly in Federico's magnificent Renaissance Palazzo Ducale, now home to a regional art collection. Ascoli Piceno is almost as enchanting as Urbino, its central Piazza del Popolo among the most evocative old squares in Italy. Smaller towns like San Leo and Urbania and the republic of San Marino also boast fine medieval monuments.

Today probably as many people come to Le Marche for its beaches and towns as for its hilly, unspoilt interior. Especially beautiful are the snowcapped peaks of the Monti Sibillini, situated in magnificent walking and skiing country.

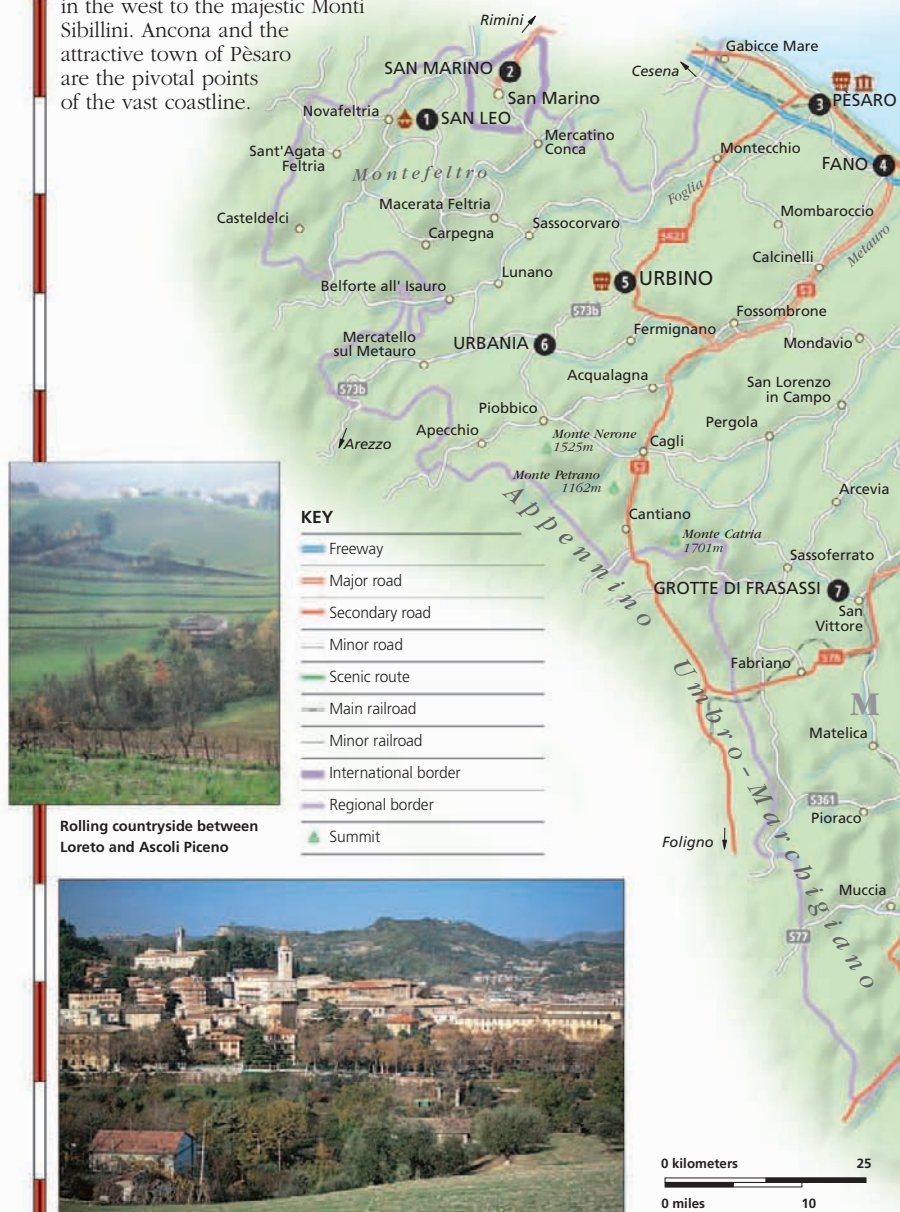

Regional cuisine encompasses the truffles and robust cheeses of the mountains, tender hams, and salamis, olive ascolane (olives stuffed with meat and herbs) and brodetto, fish soup made in several versions up and down the coast. Dry, white Verdicchio is the best known wine, although more unusual names, such as Bianchello del Metauro, are gaining in popularity.

Exploring Le Marche

The medieval towns of Urbino and Ascoli Piceno are the highlights of the region, but the rolling hills of the interior contain an abundance of smaller towns and all but undiscovered villages. San Leo, with its dramatic fortress, is one of the best. Most of the countryside is a pretty mixture of woods and remote hills, rising in the west to the majestic Monti Sibillini. Ancona and the attractive town of Pèsaro are the pivotal points of the vast coastline.

GETTING AROUND

The A14-E55 provides easy access to the coastal resorts. Divided-highway spurs from the A14-E55 lead to Jesi, Urbino, and Ascoli Piceno, but north-south roads in the interior can be slow. Bus services are generally good, but in the interior can be infrequent. The railroad service along the coast is excellent, with a good service through the heart of the region, though it can be slow.

Few castles are as impressive as the great fortress that towers over the village of San Leo. Dante used this crag-top site as a model for the landscapes of Purgatorio, while Machiavelli considered the citadel to be the finest piece of military architecture in Italy. Its rocky ramparts once contained the Mons Feretrius, a Roman temple dedicated to Jupiter.

An earlier Roman fortress on the site became a papal prison in the 18th century. Its most famous inmate was the larger-than-life Conte di Cagliostro. A swindler, womanizer, necromancer, quack, and alchemist, Cagliostro was imprisoned for heresy in the 1790s. His cell was specially built so that its window faced the village's two churches. It is still visible, together with a small picture gallery, state rooms, and the majestic Renaissance ramparts, built by Francesco di Giorgio Martini for the dukes of Montefeltro in the 15th century.

The captivating village has a quaint cobbled square with a superb 9th-century Pieve (parish church). Built partly with stone from the ruined Mons Feretrius, the church was raised over the site of a 6th-century chapel.

Just behind lies the 12th-century Duomo, a fine Romanesque building with Corinthian capitals and Roman columns from the Mons Feretrius. The lid of St. Leo's sarcophagus is in the crypt. Ancient pagan carvings can be seen on the wall behind the altar.

Europe's oldest republic, tiny San Marino was reputedly founded by St. Marinus, a 4th-century monk and stonemason forced to flee the religious persecution of the Emperor Diocletian. With him was St. Leo, founder of the nearby town of San Leo. Situated on the slopes of Monte Titano, the country has its own mint, stamps, soccer team – even its own 1,000-strong army. It is also famous for Formula One racing.

There are no customs formalities in this small country, whose borders are just 7 miles (12 km) apart at the widest point. Sadly, the capital, San Marino, is overrun with visitors and souvenir stalls for much of the year. Garibaldi, who sought shelter here after fleeing Venice in 1849, is honoured by a monument in Piazza Garibaldi.

Borgomaggiore, the largest town, lies at the foot of Monte Titano, with a cable car to the capital above.

One of the Adriatic's larger seaside resorts, Pèsaro has managed to retain a stylish air. Behind the promenade and the wall of white stucco hotels is a lively, attractive medieval area.

The art gallery of the Musei Civici contains Giovanni Bellini's sumptuous polyptych, the Coronation of the Virgin (c.1470). The museum also features Renaissance ceramics.

The Museo Archeologico Oliveriano presents historical displays from Roman remains to Iron Age artifacts from the necropolis of nearby Novilara.

The best of the town's churches is Sant'Agostino on Corso XI Settembre, remarkable for its choir stalls, each a patchwork of inlaid landscapes and narrative scenes.

Pèsaro is also a point of musical pilgrimage. In 1792 the composer Gioacchino Rossini was born here. His home, Casa Rossini, contains memorabilia, while his piano and some original manuscripts lie in the Conservatorio Rossini. His operas are performed in the Teatro Rossini in Piazza Lazzarini during the annual August music festival.

Ancient Fano stands out from the string of beach resorts south of Pésaro, thanks to its fine old center and historic monuments. Named after Fanum Fortunae, a pagan temple to the goddess Fortuna, it became the terminus of the Via Flaminia (an important consular road from Rome) and the largest Roman colony on the Adriatic coast. The Arco d'Augusto (AD 2), on Via Arco d'Augusto, is Fano's most significant ancient monument, having narrowly escaped destruction at the hands of Federico da Montefeltro in 1463. He destroyed its upper section while besieging the town as a papal condottiere.

The 16th-century Fontana della Fortuna, in Piazza XX Settembre, is dedicated to the goddess Fortuna. The large Palazzo Malatesta that rises up to its rear was built around 1420 and enlarged in 1544 for Fano's rulers, the Rimini-based Malatesta family. Inside is the small Museo Civico and the Pinacoteca Malatestiana, with works by Guercino, Guido Reni, and the Venetian artist, Michele Giambono.

Its chief attraction is a monument from an earlier age, the huge Palazzo Ducale, built by the dukes of Montefeltro as one of several residential alternatives to the Palazzo Ducale in nearby Urbino. It was begun in the 13th century, and then rebuilt in the 15th and 16th centuries. Beautifully situated alongside the Metauro River, it houses a small art gallery, a modest museum, old maps and globes, and the remnants of Duke Federico's famous library.

Urbino: Palazzo Ducale

Italy's most beautiful Renaissance palace was built for Duke Federico da Montefeltro, ruler of Urbino (1444–82). He was a soldier, but also a man of the arts, and his palace, with its library, paintings, and refined architecture, is a tribute to courtly life and to the artistic and intellectual ideals of the Renaissance. The Palazzo Ducale houses the Galleria Nazionale delle Marche.

The capital of Le Marche and its largest port (with ferries to and from Greece and Croatia), Ancona dates back to at least the 5th century BC, when it was settled by Greek exiles from Siracusa. Its name derives from ankon (Greek for elbow), a reference to the rocky spur that juts into the sea to form the town's fine natural harbor.

Heavy bombing during World War II destroyed much of the medieval town. The 15th-century Loggia dei Mercanti (merchants' exchange) on Via della Loggia survives as a monument to the town's medieval heyday.

Just north of the loggia is the Romanesque church of Santa Maria della Piazza, with a lovely facade. The nearby Pinacoteca Comunale F Podesti e Galleria d'Arte Moderna includes canvases by Titian and Lorenzo Lotto. In the Museo Archeologico Nazionale delle Marche there are displays of Greek, Gallic, and Roman art. The Arco di Traiano, by the harbor, was erected in AD 115 and is one of Italy's better preserved Roman arches.

Rome and Lazio at a Glance

The first settlements in the region can be traced back to the early Etruscan civilization in northern Lazio. Rome grew to rule a vast empire and, as the empire began to divide, the region became the center of the Christian world. Artists and architects flocked to work for the popes and their families, notably in the Renaissance and Baroque periods when some magnificent architectural works were created. The legacy of this uninterrupted history can be seen all over the city and the surrounding area.

St. Peter's, with its majestic dome by Michelangelo, is a magnificent and sumptuous 16th-century basilica (see pp418–19).

Piazza Navona, flanked by cafés, contains three Baroque fountains, including the colossal Fontana dei Quattro Fiumi, one of Bernini's finest works (see p399).

The Flavors of Rome and Lazio

The countryside of Lazio varies from gently rolling hills to mountains to shimmering coast. Olive groves and vineyards cloak this fertile area, where wild boar roam and many other kinds of game find their way on to the table. But authentic Roman cuisine takes its origins from offal and slow, inventive cooking transforms these traditionally “poor” cuts into flavorsome dishes. Pasta is still the vital ingredient in any meal, and several well-known dishes originate from Rome. Many of the capital’s top restaurants are dedicated to fish and seafood and, as home of la dolce vita, there is a long tradition of delicious pastries, cakes, and ice cream.

Globe artichokes

A stall of Lazio vegetables, fresh from field to market

Traditional Roman cuisine originated in the Testaccio area, near the old slaughterhouse whose butchers (vacchinari) were paid partly in meat, generally offal. The “fifth quarter” (quinto quarto) included head, trotters, tail, intestines, brain, and other bits of the beast not for the squeamish, but which, when cooked slowly and richly flavoured with herbs and spices, became a culinary delight. These robust dishes, such as the signature dish coda alla vaccinara (literally, oxtail in the style of the slaughterhouse butcher) still feature on many menus.

CUCINA ROMANA

Authentic cucina romana also has its roots in Jewish cuisine of the atmospheric Ghetto area, whose origins date back over 400 years. Plump, locally grown globe artichokes are fried whole in olive oil (carciofi alla giudia) or served alla romana, with oil, garlic, and Roman mint. Just as popular are salt cod fillets (filetti di baccalà) deep fried, Jewish-style.

Seafood and fish restaurants are among the best in Rome and, while not cheap, many are temples of gastronomy. It was in response to the launch of the first McDonald’s

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Bruschetta

Crispy fried vegetables, especially artichokes and zucchini (courgette) flowers, are often served as an antipasto. For the primo course, pasta dishes include bucatini all’amatriciana – long thin pasta tubes in a spicy tomato and bacon sauce, sprinkled with grated pecorino cheese made from tangy ewe’s milk. Veal is a great favorite and delicacies include rigatoni alla pajata (pasta with milk-fed veal intestines). Lamb is also very popular, such as abbacchio al forno (roasted milk-fed lamb) or alla cacciatore (“hunter’s style” with anchovy sauce). Offal (animelle) is very common in traditional trattorie and delicacies include cervelle (calves’ brains), ossobuco (beef shins with marrow jelly), pajata (veal intestines), and trippa (tripe).

Gnocchi alla romana Little dumplings, made with semolina flour, are usually served with a tomato or meat ragù.

in Rome in 1986 that the Slow Food Movement started in Piedmont (see p174), but more typical Roman fast food includes bruschetta (“lightly burnt bread” in Roman dialect) rubbed with garlic, sea salt, and olive oil and topped with a selection of intense flavors. There’s also authentic thin and crispy pizza romana from wood-fired ovens, often served al taglio – by the slice.

PASTA, PASTA

Pasta is still the mainstay of the Roman meal, especially spaghetti. Spaghetti alla carbonara, made with pancetta (cured bacon) or guanciale (pig’s cheek), egg yolks, and cheese, is a classic Roman dish, as is spaghetti alle vongole, with garlic and clams. At a conservative estimate, there is one type of pasta for every day of the year, many of which have wonderfully descriptive or poetic names, such as capelli d’angelo (angel’s hair) or ziti (bridegrooms) whose shape is best left to the imagination.

An array of mouthwatering gelati in a Roman ice cream parlor

LA DOLCE VITA

For those with a taste for “the sweet life,” nuts, fruits, and versatile ricotta cheese are often combined in mouthwateringly delicious sweets.

Ice cream is an art form in Rome, where some parlors offer over 100 flavors of homemade gelati. Types vary from the classic crema and frutta to grattachecca (water ice), from semifreddo (a half frozen sponge pudding, similar to tiramisù in consistency) to granità (ice shavings flavored with fruit syrups). Glorious gelato is one of the great pleasures here, to be enjoyed at any time of the day – or night.

Coda alla vaccinara

Oxtail braised in herbs, tomato, and celery.

Fave al guanciale

Young spring fava (broad) beans simmered in olive oil with pig’s cheek and onion.

Filetti di baccalà

Salt cod filets in batter – once a Jewish specialty, now a feature of Roman cuisine.

Spigola alla romana

Sea bass with porcini mushrooms (ceps), Roman-style.

Spaghetti alle vongole The classic Italian pasta is here served with a sauce made of baby clams and tomatoes.

Saltimbocca alla romana Veal slices are rolled with prosciutto and sage. Saltimbocca means “jump in the mouth.”

Torta di ricotta Ricotta cheese is baked in a tart with sugar, lemon, brandy, eggs, and cinnamon.

Understanding Architecture in Rome and Lazio

The architecture of Imperial Rome, a combination of Etruscan and Classical Greek styles, gradually developed new and uniquely Roman forms based on the arch, the vault, and the dome. During the early Christian period simple, rectangular basilicas were built, forms which by the 12th century had been incorporated into the stark Romanesque style. The Renaissance, inspired by the example of Florence, saw a return to Classical ideals of simplicity and harmonious proportions, though it was to be in the flamboyance of the 17th-century Baroque that Rome once again found great architectural expression.

The extravagant Baroque style of the Fontana di Trevi, Rome

FROM ETRUSCAN TO CLASSICAL ROME

The Podium made the temple more prominent.

A portico was a porch with columns.

Etruscan temples, based on Greek models, inspired early Roman architecture. A front portico was the only entrance.

The arch became a feature of Roman architecture.

Reliefs were scavenged from earlier monuments.

The Arch of Constantine (AD 315) is typical of triumphant Imperial Roman architecture (see p389). It stands at a colossal 82 ft (25 m).

Three naves divided the interior of the basilica.

Early Christian basilicas (4th century) were based on a rectangular floor plan.

FROM RENAISSANCE TO BAROQUE

Doric columns recall Classical architecture.

Bramante adopted the circular form of ancient temples.

The Tempietto at San Pietro in Montorio, Rome (1502) is a model of Renaissance architecture: simple and perfectly proportioned (see p429).

Rustication, massive blocks divided by deep joints, was used for palazzi.

Ionic pilasters lend an air of elegance to the imposing upper stories.

The elliptical staircase was a typical feature of Mannerist houses.

Palazzo Farnese at Caprarola, a pentagonal building completed in 1575 (see p465), combines some Mannerist tricks of architecture with the strict geometric proportions characteristic of the Renaissance.

WHERE TO SEE THE ARCHITECTURE

A walk through the back streets of the center of Rome will reveal masterpieces of virtually every architectural age. The most ancient treasures are seven obelisks stolen from Egypt. One stands on the back of Bernini's elephant (see p404). Highlights from Ancient Rome include triumphal arches and temples such as the Pantheon (see p404). Romanesque elements survive in the church of San Clemente (see p435), while the Renaissance finds expression in the dome of St. Peter's (see pp418-19). Magnificent Baroque treasures dot the entire city, in particular flamboyant fountains that adorn the squares. Outside the city the outstanding sights are the late Renaissance villas such as Caprarola (see p465).

Part of Bernini's elephant supporting an ancient Egyptian obelisk

Coffering reduces the weight of the dome.

The oculus, a hole at the top of the dome, provides the only light.

The portico dates from an earlier temple.

Doric columns had straight capitals.

Corinthian capitals were decorated with acanthus leaves.

Ionic columns had scrolled capitals.

The Pantheon (see p404) is one of the cardinal buildings of late Roman architecture. Completed in AD 125, it reveals how the form of the Greek temple was elaborated upon to create a masterpiece of perfect proportions.

The orders of Classical architecture were building styles based on ancient Greek models, identified by the column capitals.

Columns around the altar draw attention away from the prominent lateral axis.

A concave portico reflects the oval body of the church.

Engaged pillars replace the flat pilasters of the Renaissance.

Deep recesses create complex effects of light and shade.

Two superimposed equilateral triangles form the complex hexagonal floor plan.

The oval floor plan of the Baroque Sant'Andrea al Quirinale (see p411) makes ingenious use of restricted space.

The Gesù façade (1584) epitomizes Counter-Reformation architecture and has been imitated throughout the Catholic world (see p403).

Sant'Ivo alla Sapienza's floor plan (1642) favored grandiose design over Classical form (see p400).

THE ANCIENT CENTER

The Capitol, the southern summit of the Capitoline Hill, was the symbolic center of the Roman world and home to the city's three most important temples. These were dedicated to the god Jupiter Optimus Maximus, protector of Rome; Minerva, goddess of wisdom and war; and Juno Moneta, a guardian goddess. Below the Capitol lies the Forum, once the focus of political, social, legal, and commercial life; the Imperial Fora, built when Rome's population grew; and the Colosseum, the center of entertainment. Overlooking the Forum is the Palatine Hill, where Romulus is said to have founded Rome in the 8th century BC, and emperors lived for over 400 years.

Street by Street: The Capitoline Hill

The Capitol, citadel of ancient Rome, was redesigned by Michelangelo in the 16th century. He was responsible for the trapezoid Piazza del Campidoglio as well as the Cordonata, the broad flight of steps leading up to it. The piazza is flanked by Palazzo Nuovo and Palazzo dei Conservatori, housing the Capitoline Museums, with their fine collections of sculpture and paintings. It is also well worth walking behind the museums to the Tarpeian Rock, for a fine view of the Forum lying below.

The Victor Emmanuel Monument was begun in 1885 and inaugurated in 1911 in honor of Victor Emmanuel II, the first king of unified Italy.

San Marco, dedicated to the patron saint of Venice, has splendid 9th-century mosaics in the apse.

Palazzo Venezia, once the home of Mussolini, now holds a museum of fine and decorative arts. Exhibits include this medieval gilt and enamel angel.

The Aracoeli Steps were completed in 1348 to commemorate the end of the plague.

The Cordonata is presided over by the colossal statues of Castor and Pollux.

Trajan began to build his forum in AD 107 to commemorate his final conquest of Dacia (present day Romania) after successful campaigns in AD 101–2 and 105–6. His new forum was the most ambitious yet, with a vast colonnaded open space centering on an equestrian statue of the emperor, a huge basilica, and two big libraries. Dominating the ruins today is Trajan's Column, which originally stood between the two libraries.

Trajan's Column

Spiraling up its 98 ft (30 m) high stem are minutely detailed scenes from the Dacian campaigns, beginning with the Romans preparing for war and ending with the Dacians being ousted from their homeland. The subtly modeled reliefs were designed to be seen from viewing platforms on the libraries, and are consequently difficult to interpret from ground level. If you want to examine the scenes in detail there are casts in the Museo della Civiltà Romana (see p442). The market complex, which is situated directly behind the forum, was begun slightly earlier. Like the forum it was probably designed by Apollodorus of Damascus, and was the ancient Roman equivalent of the modern shopping center. There were around 150 shops selling everything from oriental silks and spices to fruit, fresh fish, and flowers. It was also here that the annone, or corn dole, was distributed. This was a free ration of corn given to Roman men, a practice which was introduced in the Republic by politicians who wanted to buy votes and prevent unrest during periods of famine.

The Forum of Augustus, which once stretched from a high wall at the foot of sleazy Suburra to the edge of Caesar's Forum, was built to celebrate Augustus's victory in 41 BC over Brutus and Cassius, the assassins of Julius Caesar. As a consequence the temple in its center was dedicated to Mars the Avenger. The temple, with its cracked steps and four Corinthian columns, is easily identified. Originally it had a statue of Mars that looked very like Augustus, but in case anyone failed to notice the resemblance, a colossal statue of the emperor himself was placed against the wall of the Suburra quarter.

cell, and to have used the water to baptize two prison guards. The prison was in an old cistern with access to the city's main sewer (the Cloaca Maxima). The lower cell was used for executions, and corpses were thrown into the sewer. However, the inmates, who received no food, often died of starvation.

The first of Rome's Imperial fora was built by Julius Caesar to relieve congestion in the Roman Forum when Rome's population boomed. He spent a fortune – most of it booty from his recent conquest of Gaul – buying up and demolishing houses on the site. Pride of place went to a temple dedicated in 46 BC to Venus Genetrix (Venus the Ancestor) as Caesar claimed to be descended from the goddess. The temple contained statues of Caesar and Cleopatra as well as of Venus, but all that remains today is a platform and three Corinthian columns. The forum was once enclosed by a double colonnade, under which was sheltered a row of shops. However, this burned down in AD 80 and was rebuilt by Domitian and Trajan. The latter also added the Basilica Argentaria – which became an important financial exchange – as well as shops and a heated public lavatory.

This triumphal arch is one of Imperial Rome's last monuments, built in AD 315, a few years before Constantine moved the capital of the Empire to Byzantium. It was built to celebrate Constantine's victory in AD 312 over his co-emperor Maxentius at the battle of the Milvian Bridge. Constantine attributed the victory to a dream in which he was told to mark his men's shields with chi-rho, the first two Greek letters of Christ's name. Christian tradition prefers a version in which the emperor has a vision of the Cross, mid-battle. There is nothing Christian about the arch: most of the reliefs were from earlier pagan monuments.

Roman Forum 6

In the early Republic, the Forum was a chaotic place, with food stalls and brothels as well as temples and the Senate House. By the 2nd century BC it was decided that Rome required a more salubrious center, and the food stores were replaced by business centers and law courts. The Forum remained the ceremonial center of the city under the Empire, with emperors renovating old buildings and erecting new temples and monuments.

THE VESTAL VIRGINS

The cult of Vesta, the goddess of fire, dates back to at least the 8th century BC. Romulus and Remus were allegedly born of the Vestal priestess Rhea and the god Mars. Six virgins kept the sacred flame of Vesta burning in her circular temple. The girls, who came from noble families, were selected when they were between six and ten years old, and served for 30 years. They had high status and financial security, but were buried alive if they lost their virginity and whipped by the high priest if the sacred flame died out. Although they were permitted to marry after finishing their service, few did so.

Exploring the Roman Forum

To appreciate the layout of the Roman Forum before wandering through its confusing patchwork of ruined temples, triumphal arches, and basilicas, it is best to view the whole area from the Capitoline Hill above. From there you can make out the more substantial ruins, and the course of the Via Sacra (Sacred Way), the route followed through the Forum by religious and triumphal processions making their way up to the Capitol to give thanks at the temple of Jupiter (see p385).

The Main Sights

The first building you come to on entering the Forum is the Basilica Aemilia. A rectangular hall built in 179 BC, it was a meeting place for moneylenders, businessmen, and tax collectors. Although little more remains of it than a pastel marble pavement fringed with column stumps, you can still find splashes of verdigrised bronze, reputedly the remains of coins which melted when the Visigoths invaded Rome and burnt down the basilica in the 5th century.

Inside the Curia – the stark brick building next to the basilica – are the Plutei of Trajan, relief panels commissioned by either Trajan or Hadrian to decorate the Rostra, the public oratory platform. On one panel are piles of books holding tax records, which Trajan had destroyed in order to free citizens from debts. The Arch of Septimius Severus is the best preserved of the Forum's monuments. The marble relief panels depict the military triumphs of the emperor in Parthia (modern-day Iran and Iraq) and Arabia.

The Temple of Saturn

was the focus of the annual Saturnalia celebrations, when, for up to a week in December, schools closed, slaves dined with their masters, presents were exchanged, and a fair and market were held.

Soaring above the remains of the Basilica Julia are three delicately fluted columns and a finely carved slab of entablature taken from the Temple of Castor and Pollux. This striking relic is dedicated to the twin brothers of Helen of Troy, who were supposed to have appeared at the battle of Lake Regillus in 499 BC, aiding the Romans in their defeat of the Etruscans.

The elegant circular Temple of Vesta was one of ancient Rome's most sacred shrines and was dedicated to the goddess of the hearth. The flame, kept alive by the Vestal Virgins, symbolized the perpetuity of the state and its extinction prophesied doom for the city. The building was partly reconstructed in 1930, but the circular form goes back to the Latin mud huts which originally occupied the site. Just behind is the House of the Vestal Virgins, the living quarters of the priestess and the Vestals. This enormous complex of 50 rooms was once annexed to the temple. Best preserved are the rooms overlooking a pretty courtyard, ornamented with statues of Vestals, ponds of waterlilies, and rose trees.

On the other side of the Forum lie the impressive remains of the Basilica of Constantine. It was begun in AD 308 by Maxentius, and is therefore also known as the Basilica of Maxentius.

Restored section of the temple of Vesta

Constantine completed it after he defeated his rival at the Milvian Bridge in AD 312. The stark remains of the huge arches and ceilings give an indication of the original scale and grandeur of the Forum's public buildings. Three enormous coffered vaults remain, which originally measured up to 115 ft (35 m) and were faced with marble. The interior walls, which held niches for statues, were also covered with marble below and stucco above. Remains of a spiral staircase which once led to the roof can be found scattered on the ground.

The basilica's apse and hexagonal arches were often used as models by Renaissance architects striving to recreate a Classical symmetry and nobility in their work. They include Michelangelo, who allegedly studied the basilica's architecture when working on the dome of St. Peter's.

Colosseum 9

Gladiator's shield

Rome's greatest amphitheater was commissioned by Emperor Vespasian in AD 72. Deadly gladiatorial combats and wild animal fights were staged by emperors and wealthy citizens, largely to gain popularity. Slaughter was on a huge scale: at the inaugural games in AD 80, over 9,000 wild animals were killed. The Colosseum could hold up to 55,000 people, who were seated according to rank.

The Velarium, a huge sailcloth awning which sheltered spectators from the sun, was supported by poles on the upper story.

Palatine 11

Statue of the goddess Cybele

The Palatine, once the residence of emperors and aristocrats, is the most pleasant of Rome's ancient sites. The ruins range from the simple house in which Augustus is thought to have lived, to the Domus Flavia and Domus Augustana, the public and private wings of a luxurious palace built by Domitian.

★ House of Livia

Many of the wall paintings have survived in the private quarters of the house where Augustus is believed to have lived with his wife Livia.

★ Domus Flavia

The courtyard of the Domus Flavia was lavishly paved with colored marble. The Roman poets praised this villa as the most splendid.

The Founding of Rome

According to legend the twins Romulus and Remus were brought up on the Palatine by a wolf. Here Romulus, having killed his brother, is said to have founded the village that was destined to become Rome. Traces of mud huts dating back to the 8th century BC have been found on the hill, lending archaeological support to the legend.

The Republic

By the 1st century BC the Palatine was the most desirable address in Rome and home to the leading citizens of the Republic. Its residents, including the erotic poet Catullus and the orator Cicero, were notoriously indulgent, and their villas were magnificent dwellings with doors of ivory, floors of bronze, and frescoed walls.

The Empire

Augustus was born on the Palatine in 63 BC, and lived there in a modest house after becoming emperor. The hill was therefore an obvious choice of abode for future emperors. Domitian's ambitious house, the Domus Flavia (1st century AD), and its private quarters, the Domus Augustana, remained the official residence of future emperors (who were referred to as Augustus) for more than 300 years.

AROUND PIAZZA NAVONA

The area around Piazza Navona, known as the centro storico, has been inhabited for at least 2,000 years. Piazza Navona stands above an ancient stadium; the Pantheon has been a temple since AD 27; and the Theater of Marcellus in the Ghetto has been converted into exclusive apartments. The area's heyday began in the 15th century, when the papacy returned to Rome. Throughout the Renaissance and Baroque eras princes, popes, and cardinals settled here, as did the artists and artisans they commissioned to build and adorn lavish palaces, churches, and fountains.

Street by Street: Around Piazza Navona

No other piazza in Rome can rival the theatricality of Piazza Navona. The luxurious cafés are the social center of the city, and day and night there is always something going on in the pedestrian area around the three flamboyant Baroque fountains. The Baroque is also represented in many of the area's churches. To discover an older Rome, walk along Via del Governo Vecchio to admire the facades of Renaissance buildings, browse in the fascinating antiques shops, and lunch in one of the many trattorias.

Piazza Navona 1

Rome's most beautiful Baroque piazza follows the shape of a 1st-century AD stadium built by Domitian, which was used for athletic contests (agones), chariot races, and other sports. Traces of the stadium are still visible below the church of Sant'Agnese in Agone, which is dedicated to a virgin martyred on the site for refusing to marry a pagan.

The piazza began to take on its present appearance in the 17th century, when Pope Innocent X, whose family palazzo was on the piazza, commissioned a new church, palace, and fountain. The fountain, the Fontana dei Quattro Fiumi, is Bernini's most magnificent, with statues of the four great rivers of the world at that time (the Nile, the Plate, the Ganges, and the Danube) sitting on rocks below an obelisk. Bernini also designed the muscle-bound Moor in the Fontana del Moro, though the present statue is a copy. Until the 19th century, the piazza was flooded in August by stopping the fountain outlets. The rich would splash around in carriages, while street urchins paddled. Even today the piazza remains the social center of the city.

Hidden in the courtyard of Palazzo della Sapienza, seat of the old University of Rome, Sant'Ivo's spiral belfry is nevertheless a distinctive landmark on Rome's skyline. Built by Borromini in 1642–60, the church is astonishingly complex, an ingenious combination of concave and convex surfaces. The work spanned the reigns of three Popes, and incorporated in the design are their emblems: Urban VIII's bee, Innocent X's dove and olive branch, and the star and hills of Alexander VII.

The French national church in Rome, San Luigi is a 16th-century building, best known for three magnificent canvases by Caravaggio in the Cerasi chapel. Painted between 1597 and 1602, these were Caravaggio's first significant religious works: The Calling of St. Matthew, Martyrdom of St. Matthew, and St. Matthew and the Angel. The first version of this last was initially rejected because it depicted the saint as an old man with dirty feet.

An extraordinary collection of Classical sculpture is housed in this branch of the Museo Nazionale Romano (see p412). Opened as a museum during the 1990s, the palazzo was originally built for Girolamo Riario, nephew of Pope Sixtus IV in 1480. In the popular uprising that followed the Pope's death in 1484, the building was sacked and Girolamo fled the city. In 1568 Cardinal Marco Sittico Altemps bought the palazzo, it was renovated in the 1570s by Martino Longhi the Elder, who added the obelisk-crowned belvedere and marble unicorn.

The Altemps family were avid collectors; the courtyard and its staircase are lined with ancient sculptures that complement the Ludovisi sculptures. One of the highlights is the marble statue The Galatian's Suicide, a copy of the bronze original, in the Salone del Camino. Also on the second floor is the Greek, 5th-century BC Ludovisi Throne; a carved relief shows Aphrodite.

San Filippo Neri commissioned this church in 1575 to replace the dilapidated one given to his order by Pope Gregory XIII.

Neri required his followers to humble themselves, and set aristocratic young men to work as laborers on the church. Against his wishes, the nave, apse, and dome were richly frescoed after his death by Pietro da Cortona. There are three paintings by Rubens around the altar. The first versions were rejected, so Rubens repainted them on slate, placing the originals above his mother's tomb.

A supreme example of the confident delicacy of early Renaissance architecture, this palazzo was begun in 1485, and was allegedly financed by the gambling proceeds of Raffaele Riario, a nephew of Pope Sixtus I. In 1478 Riario was involved in the Pazzi conspiracy against the Medici, and when Giovanni de' Medici became Pope Leo XIII in 1513, he took belated revenge, seizing the palace and turning it into the papal chancellery.

Campo de' Fiori 8

Map 2 E4. 116 & routes to Corso Vittorio Emanuele II.

Campo de' Fiori (field of flowers) was one of the liveliest and roughest areas of medieval and Renaissance Rome. Cardinals and nobles mingled with fishmongers and foreigners in the piazza's market; Caravaggio killed his opponent after losing a game of tennis on the square; and the goldsmith Cellini murdered a business rival nearby. Today, the area continues to be a hub of secular activity. The colorful market, trattorias, and down-to-earth bars retain the original animated atmosphere.

In the Renaissance the piazza was surrounded by inns, many of which were owned by the 15th-century courtesan Vannoza Catanei, mistress of Pope Alexander VI.

The square was also a place of execution. The statue in its center is the philosopher

Tiber Island, with Ponte Cestio, built in 46 BC, linking it to Trastevere

Giordano Bruno, burned at the stake for heresy on this spot in 1600 for suggesting the earth moved around the sun.

A stucco extravaganza studied with reliefs of illustrious Romans, this palazzo was built in 1550, but bought in 1637 by Cardinal Bernardino Spada. A keen patron of the arts, he commissioned Borromini to create an illusionistic tunnel that appears four times longer than it is. The cardinal's art collection, in the Galleria Spada, includes works by Guercino, Dürer, and Artemisia Gentileschi.

Map 2 F5 & 6 D1. 23, 63, 280, 780 and routes to Largo di Torre Argentina.

The first Jews came to Rome as traders in the 2nd century BC and were greatly appreciated for their financial and medical skills during the Roman Empire. Persecution began in the 16th century, when Pope Paul IV forced all of the Jews to live within a walled enclosure, an area later to form the hub of the present-day Ghetto.

Today Via del Portico d'Ottavia, the district's main street, leads to Rome's central synagogue, passing restaurants and shops selling Roman Jewish food. Ponte Fabricio links the Ghetto with Tiber Island, a center of healing since 293 BC when a temple to Aesculapius was founded. The island is now home to a hospital.

The remains of four temples were discovered in the 1920s at the center of Largo Argentina, now a busy bus terminal and traffic junction. They date from the era of the Republic, and are among the oldest found in Rome. For the purpose of identification, they are known as A, B, C, and D. The oldest (temple C) dates from the early 3rd century BC. It was placed on a high platform preceded by an altar and is typical of Italic temple plans as opposed to the Greek model. Temple A is from the 3rd century BC, but in medieval times the small church of San Nicola di Cesarini was built over its podium and the remains of its two apses are still visible. The column stumps to the north belonged to a great portico, known as the Hecastostylum (portico of 100 columns). In Imperial times two marble latrines were built here – the remains of one are visible behind temple A. Behind temples B and C, near Via di Torre

Argentina, are the remains of a great platform of tufa blocks. These have been identified as part of the Curia of Pompey, a rectangular building where the Senate met, and where Julius Caesar was assassinated by Brutus, Cassius, and their followers on March 15, 44 BC.

Built between 1568 and 1584, the Gesù was Rome's first Jesuit church. The Jesuit order was founded in Rome in 1537 by a Basque soldier, Ignatius Loyola, who became a Christian after he was wounded in battle. The order was austere, intellectual, and heavily engaged in missionary activity and religious wars.

The much-imitated design of the Gesù typifies Counter-Reformation architecture, with a large nave with side pulpits for preaching to crowds, and a main altar as the centerpiece for the mass. The illusionistic decoration on the nave ceiling and dome was added by Il Baciccia in the 17th century.

The nave depicts the Triumph of the Name of Jesus and its message is clear: faithful, Catholic worshippers will be joyfully uplifted to heaven while Protestants and heretics are flung into the fires of hell. The message is reiterated in the Cappella di Sant'Ignazio, a rich display of lapis lazuli, serpentine, silver, and gold. The Baroque marble by Legros, Triumph of Faith over Idolatry, shows a female "Religion" trampling on the head of the serpent Idolatry, while in Théudon's Barbarians Adoring the Faith, an angel aims a kick toward a decrepit old barbarian couple entangled with a snake.

One of Rome's rare Gothic buildings, this church was built in the 13th century over what were thought to be the ruins of a temple of Minerva. It was a stronghold of the Dominicans, who produced some of the Church's most zealous inquisitors, and who tried the scientist Galileo in the adjoining monastery.

Inside, the church has a superb collection of art and sculpture, ranging from

Interior of the Pantheon, burial place for Italian monarchs

13th-century Cosmatesque tombs to a bust by Bernini. Highlights include Antoniazzo Romano's Annunciation featuring Cardinal Juan de Torquemada, uncle of the infamous Spanish inquisitor, and the Carafa Chapel's frescoes by Filippino Lippi.

In the Aldobrandini Chapel are the tombs of the 16th-century Medici popes, Leo X and his cousin Clement VII, and near the steps of the choir is a stocky Risen Christ, begun by Michelangelo.

The church also contains the tombs of many famous Italians, such as St. Catherine of Siena who died in 1380 and Fra Angelico, the Dominican friar and painter, who died in 1455. Outside, Bernini's spectacular sculpture of an elephant holds an obelisk on its back.

The Pantheon, the Roman “temple of all the gods,” is the most extraordinary and best preserved ancient building in Rome. The first temple on the site was a conventional rectangular affair erected by Agrippa between 27 and 25 BC; the present structure was built and possibly designed by Emperor Hadrian in AD 118.

The temple is fronted by a massive pedimented portico screening what appears to be a cylinder fused to a shallow dome. Only from the inside can the true scale and beauty of this building be appreciated: a vast hemispherical dome equal in radius to the height of the cylinder giving perfectly harmonious proportions to the building. A circular opening, the oculus, lets in the only light.

In the 7th century Christians claimed to be plagued by demons as they passed by, and permission was given to make the Pantheon a church. Today it is lined with tombs, ranging from a restrained monument to Raphael to huge marble and porphyry sarcophagi holding the bodies of Italian monarchs.

This church was built by Pope Gregory XV in 1626 in honor of St. Ignatius of Loyola, founder of the Society of Jesus (Jesuits) and the man who most embodied the zeal of the Counter-Reformation.

Together with the Gesù (see p403), Sant'Ignazio forms the nucleus of the Jesuit area of Rome. It is one of the most extravagant Baroque churches and its vast interior is plated with precious stones, marble, stucco, and gilt, creating a thrilling sense of theater. The church has a Latin-cross plan, with an apse and many side chapels. A cupola was planned but never built, as the nuns from a nearby convent objected that it would obscure the view from their roof garden. Instead the space was filled by a perspective painting of a dome on a flat disk.

Even more striking is the illusionistic ceiling created by the Jesuit artist Andrea Pozzo in 1685, a propagandist extravaganza extolling the success of Jesuit missionaries throughout the world. Above four women, representing Asia, Europe, America, and Africa, lithe angels and beautiful youths are sucked into a heaven of fluffy clouds.

Home to Palazzo Chigi, official residence of the prime minister, Piazza Colonna is dominated by and named after the majestic column of Marcus Aurelius. This was erected after the death of Marcus Aurelius in AD 180 to commemorate his victories over the barbarian tribes of the Danube. It is clearly an imitation of Trajan's Column (see p388) with scenes from the emperor's wars spiraling in reliefs up the column. The 80-year lapse between the two works produced a great artistic change: the wars of Marcus Aurelius are rendered with simplified pictures in stronger relief, sacrificing Classical proportions for the sake of clarity and immediacy.

Situated in a small piazza near the Pantheon, the Maddalena's Rococo facade, built in 1735, epitomizes the love of light and movement of the late Baroque. The facade has been restored, despite the protests of Neo-Classicalists who dismissed its painted stucco as icing sugar.

The diminutive dimensions of the church did not deter 17th- and 18th-century decorators from filling the interior with paintings and ornaments from the floor to the top of the elegant cupola.

NORTHEAST ROME

This area stretches from the exclusive shopping streets around Piazza di Spagna to the Esquiline Hill, once bourgeois, but now a poor, often seedy area full of early Christian churches. The Piazza di Spagna and Piazza del Popolo district grew up in the 16th century, when the increase in the influx of pilgrims was such that a road was built to channel them as quickly as possible to the Vatican. About the same time, the Quirinal Hill became the site of a papal palace. When Rome became capital of Italy in 1870, Via Veneto became a lavish residential area, and the Esquiline was covered with apartments for the new civil servants.

Street by Street: Piazza di Spagna

The network of narrow streets around Piazza di Spagna forms one of the most exclusive areas in Rome, drawing droves of tourists and Romans to the elegant shops around Via Condotti. The square and its nearby coffee houses have long attracted those who want to see and be seen. In the 18th century the area was full of hotels for frivolous aristocrats doing the Grand Tour, as well as artists, writers, and composers, who took the city's history and culture more seriously.

Caffè Greco is an 18th-century café once frequented by writers and musicians such as Keats, Goethe, Byron, Liszt, and Wagner.

The Fontana della Barcaccia at the foot of the Spanish Steps

Piazza di Spagna and the Spanish Steps 1

Map 3 A2. 🚶 116, 117. M Spagna.

Shaped like a crooked bow tie, and surrounded by muted, shuttered facades, Piazza di Spagna is crowded all day and (in summer) most of the night. The most famous square in Rome, it takes its name from the Palazzo di Spagna, built in the 17th century to house the Spanish embassy to the Holy See.

The piazza has long been the haunt of foreign visitors and expatriates. In the 18th and 19th centuries the square stood at the heart of the city's main hotel district. Some of the travelers came in search of knowledge and inspiration, although most were more interested in collecting statues to adorn their family homes. When the Victorian novelist Charles Dickens visited, he reported that the Spanish Steps were crowded with models dressed as Madonnas, saints, and emperors, hoping to attract the attention of foreign artists.

The steps were built in the 1720s to link the square with the French church of Trinità dei Monti above. The French wanted to place a statue of Louis XIV at the top, but the Pope objected, and it was not until the 1720s that the Italian architect Francesco de Sanctis produced the voluptuous Rococo design which satisfied both camps. The Fontana Barcaccia, sunk into the paving at the foot of the steps due to low water pressure, was designed by Bernini's less famous father, Pietro.

It is now home to the French Academy, founded in 1666 to give artists the chance to study in Rome. From 1803 musicians were also allowed to study here: both Berlioz and Debussy were students.

The villa is only open for exhibitions, but the formal gardens, with a gorgeously frescoed pavilion, and copies of ancient statues, can be visited in certain months.

Pinturicchio's fresco of the Delphic Sibyl (1509) in Santa Maria del Popolo

Santa Maria del Popolo 3

Piazza del Popolo 12. Map 2 F1. Tel 06 361 08 36. 95, 117, 119, 490, 495, 926. Flaminio. 7:30am–noon, 4–7pm Mon–Sat; 7:30am–1:30pm, 4:30–7:30pm Sun.

Santa Maria del Popolo was one of the first Renaissance churches in Rome, commissioned by Pope Sixtus IV della Rovere in 1472. Lavish endowments by Sixtus's descendants and other powerful families have made it one of Rome's greatest artistic treasures.

Shortly after Sixtus died in 1484, Pinturicchio and his pupils frescoed two chapels (first and third right) for the della Rovere family. On the altar of the first chapel there is a lovely Nativity from 1490 that depicts a stable at the foot of a Classical column.

In 1503 Sixtus IV's nephew Giuliano became Pope Julius II and had Bramante build a new apse. Pinturicchio was called in again to paint its vaults with Sibyls and Apostles framed in an intricate tracery of freakish beasts.

In 1513 Raphael created the Chigi chapel (second left) for the wealthy banker Agostino Chigi. The design is an audacious Renaissance fusion of the sacred and profane; there are pyramid-like tombs and a ceiling mosaic of God holding the signs of the zodiac describing Chigi's horoscope. Raphael died before the chapel was finished and it was completed by Bernini who added the dynamic statues of Daniel and Habakkuk. In the Cerasi chapel, left of the altar, there are two realistic works painted by Caravaggio in 1601: the Conversion of St. Paul and the Crucifixion of St. Peter. The artist uses daringly exaggerated lighting effects and foreshortening techniques to intensify the dramatic effect.

Painstakingly reconstructed over many years from scattered fragments, the exquisitely carved Ara Pacis (Altar of Peace) celebrates the peace created by Emperor Augustus throughout the Mediterranean. Commissioned by the Senate in 13 BC and completed four years later, the altar stands in a square enclosure of Carrara marble, carved with realistic reliefs of such quality that experts think the craftsmen may have been Greek.

The reliefs on the north and south walls depict a procession that took place on July 4, 13 BC, in which the members of the emperor's family can be identified, including Augustus's grandson, Lucius, who is the toddler clutching at the skirts of his mother, Antonia. The site is now housed in a building by architect Richard Meier.

Now just a weedy mound ringed with cypresses and strewn with litter, this was once the most prestigious burial place in Rome. Augustus had the mausoleum built in 28 BC, the year before he became sole ruler, as a tomb for himself and his descendants. The circular building was 270 ft (87 m) in diameter with two obelisks (now in Piazza del Quirinale and Piazza dell' Esquilino) at the entrance. Inside were four concentric passageways linked by corridors where urns holding the ashes of the Imperial family were placed, including those of Augustus who died in AD 14.

master an unruly seahorse, the other leading a quieter beast, symbolizing the two contrasting moods of the sea.

The site originally marked the terminal of the Aqua Virgo aqueduct, built by Augustus' right-hand man and son-in-law, Agrippa, in 19 BC to channel water to Rome's new bath complexes. One of the reliefs on the second main story shows a young girl, Trivia, for whom the fountain may have been named. She is said to have first shown the spring, 14 miles (22 km) from the city, to thirsty Roman soldiers.

Sant'Andrea was designed for the Jesuits by Bernini and executed by his assistants between 1658 and 1670. The site was wide but shallow, so Bernini took the radical step of pointing the long axis of his oval plan toward the sides, and leading the eye round to the altar by means of a strong horizontal cornice. At the altar he combined sculpture and painting to create a theatrical crucifixion of Sant'Andrea (St. Andrew); the diagonally crucified saint on the altarpiece looks up at a stucco effigy of himself ascending to the lantern, where the Holy Spirit and cherubs await him in heaven.

In 1638, Borromini was commissioned by the Trinitarians to design a church and convent on a tiny cramped site at the Quattro Fontane crossroads. The church, so small that it is said it would fit inside one of the piers of St. Peter's, is designed with bold, fluid curves on both the facade and interior to give light and life to the diminutive building. The dome, with its concealed coffering, and tiny lantern designed to make it look higher than it really is, is a cunning feature.

The most dazzling room is the Gran Salone, with an illusionistic ceiling frescoed by Pietro da Cortona in 1633–9. The palazzo also houses part of the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Antica with works by Titian, Filippo Lippi, Caravaggio, and Artemisia Gentileschi. The most famous is a portrait of a courtesan, reputedly Raphael's lover, La Fornarina, said to be a baker's daughter, although not painted by the artist himself.

Santa Maria della Vittoria is an intimate Baroque church with a lavish, candlelit interior. Inside the Cornaro chapel is one of Bernini's most ambitious sculptures, the Ecstasy of St. Teresa (1646). collections. During the 1990s it underwent a major reorganization and now has five branches: the Palazzo Altemps (see p400); the Baths of Diocletian; the Aula Ottagona; the Crypta; Balbi, and the Palazzo Massimo. In the latter, exhibits dating from the 2nd century BC to the late 4th century AD are displayed in a series of rooms over three floors. Highlights include the Quattro Aurighe mosaics from a villa in northern Rome, the breathtaking series of frescoes from Livia's summer villa, and the famous statue of her husband, the Emperor Augustus.

The church's name means St. Peter in Chains, so called because it houses what are said to be the chains with which St. Peter was shackled in the Mamertine Prison (see p389). According to tradition, one set of chains was sent to Constantinople by Empress Eudoxia; when it was returned to Rome some years later it miraculously fused with its partner.

San Pietro is now best known for the tomb of Julius II, commissioned from Michelangelo by the Pope in 1505. Much to the artist's chagrin, Julius soon became more interested in the building of a new St. Peter's and the tomb project was laid to one side. After the Pope died in 1513, Michelangelo resumed work on the tomb, but had only completed the statues of the Dying Slaves (now in Paris and Florence) and Moses when he was called away to paint the Last Judgment in the Sistine Chapel.

Santa Maria Maggiore 15

A confident blend of architectural styles, ranging from Early Christian to late Baroque, Santa Maria is also famous for its superb mosaics. Founded in about AD 420, it retains the original colonnaded triple nave, lined with panels of rare 5th-century mosaics. The Cosmatesque marble floor and bell tower are medieval, as are the spectacular mosaics on the triumphal arch and in the loggia. The lavish coffered ceiling is Renaissance; the facades, domes, and chapels Baroque.

THE VATICAN AND TRASTEVERE

Vatican City, the world capital of Catholicism, is the world's smallest state. It occupies 106 acres (43 ha) within high walls watched over by the Vatican guard. It was the site where St. Peter was martyred (c.AD 64) and buried, and it became the residence of the popes who succeeded him. The papal palaces, next to the great basilica of St. Peter's, are home to the Sistine Chapel and the eclectic collections of the Vatican Museums, as well as being the residence of the pope. Neighboring Trastevere is quite different, a picturesque old quarter, whose inhabitants consider themselves to be the only true Romans. Sadly, the proletarian identity of the place is in danger of being destroyed by the proliferation of trendy restaurants, clubs, and stores.

This massive fortress takes its name from the vision of the Archangel Michael by Pope Gregory the Great in the 6th century as he led a procession across the bridge, praying for the end of the plague.

The castle began life in AD 139 as the Emperor Hadrian's mausoleum. Since then it has been a bridgehead in the Emperor Aurelian's city wall, a medieval citadel and prison, and a place of safety for popes during times of political unrest. A corridor links it with the Vatican Palace, providing an escape route for the Pope. From dank cells to fine apartments of Renaissance popes, the museums cover all aspects of the castle's history, including the Sala Paolina, with illusionistic frescoes (1546–8) by Pellegrino Tibaldi and Perin del Vaga, and the Courtyard of Honor.

St. Peter's 2

Catholicism's most sacred shrine, the sumptuous, marble-caked basilica of St. Peter's draws pilgrims and tourists from all over the world. It holds hundreds of precious works of art, some salvaged from the original 4th-century basilica built by Constantine, others commissioned from Renaissance and Baroque artists. The dominant tone is set by Bernini, who created the baldacchino twisting up below Michelangelo's huge dome. He also created the cathedra in the apse, with four saints supporting a throne that contains fragments once thought to be relics of the chair from which St. Peter delivered his first sermon.

HISTORICAL PLAN OF THE BASILICA OF ST. PETER'S

St. Peter was buried in AD 64 in a necropolis near the site of his crucifixion in the Circus of Nero. In AD 324

Constantine constructed a basilica over the tomb. The old church was rebuilt in the 15th century, and throughout the 16th and 17th centuries various architects developed the existing structure. The new church was inaugurated in 1626.

Exploring the Vatican's Collections

The Vatican's greatest treasures are its superlative Greek and Roman antiquities, together with the magnificent artifacts excavated from Egyptian and Etruscan tombs during the 19th century. Some of Italy's greatest artists, such as Raphael, Michelangelo, and Leonardo da Vinci, are represented in the Pinacoteca (art gallery) and parts of the former palaces, where they were employed by popes to decorate sumptuous apartments and galleries.

EGYPTIAN AND ASSYRIAN ART

The Egyptian collection contains finds from 19th- and 20th-century excavations in Egypt, as well as statues that were brought to Rome in Imperial times. There are also Roman imitations of Egyptian art from Hadrian's Villa (see p468) and from temples in Rome devoted to Egyptian gods and goddesses, such as Isis and Serapis.

The genuine Egyptian works, displayed on the lower floor next to the Pio-Clementine Museum, include statues, mummies, mummy cases, and a Book of the Dead. One of the main treasures is a colossal granite 13th-century statue of Queen Mutuy, the mother of Rameses II, which was found on the site of the Horti Sallustiani gardens near Via Veneto. Also noteworthy are the head of a statue of Montuhotep IV (20th century BC), the beautiful mummy case of Queen Hetepheres, and the tomb of Iri, who was the guardian of the pyramid of Cheops. This dates back to the 22nd century BC.

GREEK, ETRUSCAN, AND ROMAN ART

The greater part of the Vatican Museums is dedicated to Greek and Roman art. However, the Etruscan Museum houses a superb collection of Etruscan (see p44) and pre-Roman artifacts from Etruria and the Greek colonies of southern Italy. Here, the most famous exhibits are the gold jewelry and bronze throne, bed, and funeral cart, found in the 650 BC Regolini-Galassi tomb in Cerveteri (see p466).

Prize Greek and Roman pieces form the nucleus of the Pio-Clementine Museum.

These include high-quality Roman copies of 4th-century BC Greek statues, such as the Apoxyomenos (an athlete wiping his body after a race) and the Apollo del Belvedere. The splendid Laocoön (1st century AD), originally from Rhodes, was found in 1506 in the ruins of Nero's Golden House. Works such as these inspired Michelangelo and other Renaissance artists.

The much smaller Chiaramonti Museum is lined with ancient busts, and its extension, the Braccio Nuovo, has a 1st-century BC statue of Augustus from the villa of his wife Livia. It is based on the Doryphoros (spear-carrier) by the 5th-century BC Greek sculptor Polyclitus. There is also a Roman copy of this on display opposite. The Gregorian Profane Museum, housed in a separate wing, follows the evolution of Roman art from reliance on Greek models to a recognizably Roman style.

In this museum, original Greek works include large marble fragments from the Parthenon in Athens. Among the Roman pieces are two reliefs, the Rilievi della Cancelleria, commissioned by Domitian in AD 81 to glorify the military parades of his father, Emperor Vespasian. There are also fine Roman floor mosaics, two from the Baths of Caracalla (see p437), and one, in the Round Room, dated 3rd century AD, from the Baths of Otricoli in Umbria.

In the Vatican Library is the 1st-century AD Aldobrandini Wedding, a beautiful Roman fresco depicting a bride being prepared for her marriage.

EARLY CHRISTIAN AND MEDIEVAL ART

The main collection of early Christian antiquities is in the Pio-Christian Museum, which contains inscriptions and sculpture from catacombs and early Christian basilicas. The sculpture consists chiefly of reliefs from sarcophagi, though the most striking work is a free-standing 4th-century statue of the Good Shepherd. The sculpture's chief interest lies in the way it blends biblical episodes with pagan mythology. The idealized pastoral figure of the shepherd became Christ himself, while bearded philosophers turned into the Apostles.

The first two rooms of the Pinacoteca are dedicated to late medieval art, mostly wooden altarpieces painted in tempera. The outstanding work is Giotto's Stefaneschi Triptych of about 1300 which decorated the main altar of the old St. Peter's.

The Vatican Library has a number of medieval treasures including reliquaries, textiles, enamels, and icons.

15TH- TO 19TH-CENTURY ART

Many Renaissance popes were connoisseurs of the arts who considered it their duty to sponsor the leading painters, sculptors, and goldsmiths of the age. The galleries around the Cortile del Belvedere were decorated by great artists between the 16th and the 19th centuries.

The Gallery of Tapestries is hung with tapestries woven in Brussels to designs by students of Raphael. The Apartment of Pope Pius V has beautiful 15th-century Flemish tapestries, and the Gallery of Maps is frescoed with 16th-century maps of ancient and contemporary Italy.

Alongside the Raphael Rooms (see p427) are the Room of the Chiaroscuro and Pope Nicholas V's private chapel. This was frescoed between 1447 and 1451 by Fra Angelico. Also worth seeing is the Borgia Apartment, decorated in the 1490s by Pinturicchio and his pupils for the Borgia Pope, Alexander VI. Another set of fascinating frescoes can be found in the Loggia of Raphael, but a visit here requires special permission.

The Pinacoteca has many important Renaissance works. Highlights from the 15th century are a fine Pietà by Giovanni Bellini, part of his Coronation of the Virgin altarpiece in Pè사로 (see p368); and Leonardo da Vinci's unfinished St. Jerome, discovered, after being long lost, in two halves. One was being used as a coffer lid in an antique shop, the other as the seat of a stool in a shoemaker's. Exceptional pieces from the 16th century include eight tapestry cartoons, the Transfiguration and Madonna of Foligno by Raphael, in a room devoted to the artist; a Deposition by Caravaggio; an altarpiece by Titian; and St. Helen by Veronese, which shows the saint as a gorgeously dressed aristocrat.

Sistine Chapel: The Ceiling

Michelangelo frescoed the ceiling for Pope Julius II between 1508 and 1512, working on specially designed scaffolding. The main panels, which chart the Creation of the World and Fall of Man, are surrounded by subjects from the Old and New Testaments – except for the Classical Sibyls who are said to have foreseen the birth of Christ. In the 1980s the ceiling was restored, revealing colors of an unsuspected vibrancy.

RESTORATION OF THE SISTINE CEILING

The restorers of the Sistine Chapel used computers, photography, and spectrum technology to analyze the fresco before cleaning began. They separated Michelangelo's work from that of later restorers and discovered that the restorers had attempted to clean the ceiling with materials ranging from bread to retsina wine. The new restoration revealed the familiarly dusky, eggshell-cracked figures to have creamy skins and lustrous hair, and to be dressed in brightly colored, luscious robes: "a Benetton Michelangelo" mocked one critic, claiming that a layer of varnish that the artist had added to darken the colors had been removed. However, after examining the work, most experts agreed that the new colors probably matched those painted by Michelangelo.

Sistine Chapel: The Walls

The massive walls of the Sistine Chapel, the main chapel in the Vatican Palace, were frescoed by some of the finest artists of the 15th and 16th centuries. The 12 paintings on the side walls, by artists including Perugino, Ghirlandaio, Botticelli, and Signorelli, show parallel episodes from the life of Moses and of Christ. The decoration of the chapel walls was completed between 1534 and 1541 by Michelangelo, who added the great altar wall fresco, the Last Judgment.

THE LAST JUDGMENT BY MICHELANGELO

Revealed in 1993 after a year's restoration, the Last Judgment is considered to be the masterwork of Michelangelo's mature years. It was commissioned by Pope Paul III Farnese, and required the removal of some earlier frescoes and two windows over the altar. A new wall was erected which slanted inward to stop dust settling on it. Michelangelo worked alone on the fresco for seven years, until its completion in 1541.

The painting depicts the souls of the dead rising up to face the wrath of God, a subject that is rarely used for an altar decoration. The Pope chose it as a warning to Catholics to adhere to their faith in the turmoil of the Reformation. In fact the work conveys the artist's own tormented attitude to his faith.

It offers neither the certainties of Christian orthodoxy, nor the ordered view of Classicism.

In a dynamic, emotional composition, the figures are caught in a vortex of motion. The dead are torn from their graves and hauled up to face Christ the Judge, whose athletic, muscular figure is the focus of all the painting's movement.

Christ shows little sympathy for the agitated saints around him, clutching the instruments of their martyrdom. Neither is any pity shown for the damned, hurled down to the demons in hell. Here Charon, pushing people off his boat into the depths of Hades, and the infernal judge Minos, are taken from Dante's Inferno. Minos has ass's ears, and is a portrait of courtier Biagio da Cesena, who had objected to the nude figures in the fresco. Michelangelo's self-portrait is on the skin held by the martyr St. Bartholomew.

Raphael Rooms

Pope Julius II's private apartments were built above those of his hated predecessor, Alexander VI, who died in 1503. Julius was impressed with Raphael's work and chose him to redecorate the four rooms (stanze). Raphael and his pupils began in 1508, replacing works by better-known artists, including Raphael's teacher, Perugino. The new frescoes quickly established the young artist's reputation in Rome, but the project took 16 years to complete and he died before it was finished.

Detail from Raphael's The Mass of Bolsena (1512)

HALL OF CONSTANTINE

The frescoes in this room were started in 1517 and completed in 1525, five years after Raphael's death, and are largely the work of the artist's pupils. The theme of the decoration is the triumph of Christianity over paganism, and the four major frescoes show scenes from the life of Constantine, the first Christian emperor. These include The Vision of the Cross and the emperor's victory over his rival, Maxentius, at The Battle of the Milvian Bridge, for which Raphael had provided a preparatory sketch.

ROOM OF HELIODORUS

Raphael decorated this private antechamber between 1512 and 1514. The main frescoes all contain thinly veiled references to the protective powers of the papacy. The room's name refers to the fresco on the right, The Expulsion of Heliodorus from the Temple, showing Heliodorus felled by a horseman as he tries to rob the Temple in Jerusalem. It alludes to Pope Julius II's victory over foreign armies in Italy. The Mass of Bolsena on the left wall refers to a miracle that occurred in 1263, in which a priest who doubted the doctrine of the Holy Host was said to have seen blood issue from it at the moment of sacrifice.

ROOM OF THE SEGNATURA

Completed between 1508 and 1511, the frescoes here are the most harmonious in the series. The scheme followed by Raphael, dictated by Pope Julius II, reflected the Humanist belief that there could be perfect harmony between Classical culture and Christianity in the search for truth. The most famous work, The School of Athens, centers on the debate about truth between the Greek philosophers Plato and Aristotle. Raphael depicted some of his contemporaries as philosophers, including Leonardo da Vinci, Bramante, and Michelangelo.

ROOM OF THE FIRE IN THE BORGO

This was originally the dining room, but when the decoration was completed under Pope Leo X, it became a music room. All the frescoes exalt the reigning Pope by depicting events in the lives of his 9th-century namesakes, Leo III and IV. The main frescoes were designed by Raphael, but finished by his assistants between 1514 and 1517. The most famous, The Fire in the Borgo, shows a miracle of 847, when Pope Leo IV put out a fire by making the sign of the cross. Raphael draws a parallel between this and the legendary flight of Aeneas from Troy, recounted by Virgil. Aeneas appears in the foreground, carrying his father Anchises on his back.

The fabulously wealthy Sieneſe banker Agostino Chigi commissioned this villa in 1508 from his fellow Sieneſe Baldassare Peruzzi. Chigi's main home was across the Tiber, and the villa was designed purely for lavish banquets. Artists, poets, cardinals, princes, and the Pope himself were entertained here in magnificent style. Chigi also used the villa for sojourns with the courtesan Imperia, who allegedly inspired one of the Three Graces painted by Raphael in the Loggia of Cupid and Psyche.

The simple, harmonious design of the Farnesina, with a central block and projecting wings, made it one of the first true villas of the Renaissance. Peruzzi decorated some of the interiors himself, such as the Sala della Prospettiva upstairs, in which the illusionistic frescoes create the impression of looking out over 16th-century Rome through a marble colonnade.

Other frescoes, by Sebastiano del Piombo and Raphael and his pupils, illustrate Classical myths, while the vault of the main hall, the Sala di Galatea, is adorned with astrological scenes showing the position of the stars at the time of Chigi's birth. After his death the business collapsed, and in 1577 the villa was sold off to the Farnese family.

Built for Cardinal Domenico Riario in 1510–12, the Palazzo Corsini has numbered Bramante, the young Michelangelo, Erasmus, and the mother of Napoleon among its guests. Queen Christina of Sweden died here in 1689. The palazzo was rebuilt by Ferdinando Fuga, who planned the facade to be viewed from an angle, as Via della Lungara is too narrow for a full frontal view.

When the palazzo was bought by the state in 1893, the Corsini family donated their collection of paintings, which formed the core of the national art collection, and was soon augmented. The collection is now split between Palazzo Barberini and Palazzo Corsini. Although the best works are in the Barberini, there are paintings by Van Dyck, Rubens, Murillo, and, notably, an androgynous St. John the Baptist (c.1604) by Caravaggio and a Salome (1638) by Reni. The strangest work is a portrait of the rotund Queen Christina as the goddess Diana by J van Egmont.

Santa Maria in Trastevere was probably the first Christian place of worship in Rome, founded by Pope Callixtus I in the 3rd century, when emperors were still pagan and Christianity a minority cult. According to legend, it was built on the site where a fountain of oil had miraculously sprung up on the day that Christ was born. The basilica became the focus of devotion to the Madonna, and although today's church, and its remarkable mosaics, date largely from the 12th and 13th centuries, images of the Virgin continue to dominate. The facade mosaics probably date from the 12th century, and show Mary, Christ, and ten lamp-bearing women. Inside in the apse is a stylized 12th-century artist Pietro Cavallini's Coronation of the Virgin, and below, a series of realistic scenes from the life of the Virgin by the 13th-century artist Pietro Cavallini. The oldest image of the Virgin is a 7th-century icon, the Madonna di Clemenza, which depicts her as a Byzantine empress flanked by a guard of angels. It sits above the altar in the Cappella Altemps.

St. Cecilia, aristocrat and patron saint of music, was martyred here in AD 230. After an unsuccessful attempt to suffocate her by locking her in the hot steam bath of her house for three days, she was beheaded. A church was built, possibly in the 4th century, on the site of her house (still to be seen beneath the church, along with the remains of a tannery). Her body was lost, but it turned up again in the Catacombs of San Callisto (see p442). In the 9th century it was reburied here by Pope Paschal I, who rebuilt the church.

A fine apse mosaic survives from this period. The altar canopy by Arnolfo di Cambio and the fresco of The Last Judgment by Pietro Cavallini can be reached through the adjoining convent; they date from the 13th century, one of the few periods when Rome had a distinctive artistic style.

In front of the altar is a delicate statue of St. Cecilia by Stefano Maderno, which is based on sketches made of her perfectly preserved relics when they were briefly disinterred in 1599.

Entirely rebuilt in the 1680s by Cardinal Pallavicini, the church is rich in 17th- and 18th-century sculptures. Not to be missed in the Altieri chapel (fourth left, along the nave) is Bernini's exquisite late work, the Ecstasy of Beata Ludovica Albertoni (1674).

Bramante's circular Tempietto at San Pietro in Montorio

The Tempietto, a diminutive masterpiece of Renaissance architecture completed by Bramante in 1502, stands in the courtyard of San Pietro in Montorio. The name means "little temple" and its circular shape echoes early Christian martyria, chapels built on the site of a saint's martyrdom. This was erroneously thought to be the spot in Nero's Circus where St. Peter was crucified. Bramante ringed the chapel with Doric columns, a Classical frieze, and fine balustrade.

AVENTINE AND LATERAN

This is one of the greenest parts of the city, taking in the Celian and Aventine Hills, as well as the very congested area around San Giovanni in Laterano. The Celian, now scattered with churches, was a fashionable place to live in Imperial Rome. Some of the era's splendor is still apparent in the ruins of the Baths of Caracalla. Behind while to the south lies Testaccio, a lively working class district. The Baths rises the Aventine Hill, a peaceful, leafy area, with the superb basilica of Santa Sabina, and lovely views across the river to Trastevere and St. Peter's. In the valley below, cars and Vespas skim around the Circus Maximus, following the ancient charioteering track,

Street by Street: Piazza della Bocca della Verità

The site of Rome's first port and its busy cattle market, this is an odd little corner of the city, stretching from the heavily trafficked road running along the Tiber to the southern spur of the Capitoline Hill, a place of execution from ancient times until the Middle Ages. Although best known for the Bocca della Verità (Mouth of Truth) in Santa Maria in Cosmedin, which is supposed to snap shut on the hands of liars, there are many other sites in the area, notably two temples from the Republican era. In the 6th century the area became home to a Greek community who founded the churches of San Giorgio in Velabro and Santa Maria in Cosmedin.

These wonderfully well-preserved Republican-era temples are at their best in moonlight, standing in their grassy enclave beside the Tiber sheltered by umbrella pines.

During the day, they look less romantic, stranded in a sea of traffic. They date from the 2nd century BC, and were saved from ruin by being consecrated as Christian churches in the Middle Ages by the Greek community then living in the area. The rectangular temple, formerly known as the Temple of Fortuna Virilis, was probably dedicated to Portunus, the god of rivers and ports. Set on a podium it has four Ionic travertine columns fluted at the front and 12 half-columns embedded in the tufa wall of the cella – the room that housed the image of the god. In the 9th century the Temple was converted into the church of Santa Maria Egiziaca, after a 5th-century prostitute who reformed and became a hermit.

The smaller circular Temple, which is made of solid marble and surrounded by 20 fluted columns, was dedicated to Hercules, though it was long believed to be a temple of Vesta because of its similarity to the one in the Forum.

This beautiful church was built in the 6th century on the site of the ancient city's food market. The Romanesque bell tower and portico were added during the 12th century. In the 19th century a Baroque facade was removed and the church restored to its original simplicity. It contains many fine examples of Cosmati work, in particular the mosaic pavement, the raised choir, the bishop's throne, and the canopy over the main altar.

Set into the wall of the portico is the Bocca della Verità (Mouth of Truth), a grotesque marble face, thought to have Santa Maria in Domnica was probably founded in the 7th century, and renovated in the 9th century. By this time the Romans had lost the art of making mosaics, so Pope Paschal I imported mosaicists from Byzantium. They created an exquisite apse mosaic showing the Virgin, Child, and angels in a delicate garden of paradise. Paschal I is kneeling at the Virgin's feet wearing a square halo, indicating that he was alive when it was made.

In 1513 Andrea Sansovino added a portico decorated with lions' heads, a punning homage to Pope Leo X.

Santo Stefano Rotondo was built between 468 and 483 on a circular plan with four chapels in a cruciform shape.

Its circular inner area is enclosed by two concentric corridors. A third, outer corridor was demolished on the orders of Leon Battista Alberti in 1453. In the 1500s Niccolò Pomarancio, Antonio Tempesta, and others covered the walls with 34 frescoes detailing the martyrdoms of saints.

This fortified convent was built in the 4th century to house the relics of four Persian stonemasons, martyred after they refused to make a statue of the pagan god Aesculapius. It was rebuilt after invading Normans set fire to it in 1084.

Highlights are a delightful garden cloister and the chapel of St. Sylvester, where 12th-century frescoes recount the legend of Emperor Constantine's conversion to Christianity.

San Clemente 6

In 1857 Father Mullooly, the Irish Dominican prior of San Clemente, began excavations beneath the existing 12th-century basilica. Directly underneath he and his successors discovered a 4th-century church, and below that a number of ancient Roman buildings. Both basilicas are dedicated to St. Clement, the fourth Pope. On the lowest level is a temple devoted to the cult of Mithras, a mystical all-male religion imported from Persia which rivaled Christianity for popularity.

San Giovanni in Laterano 7

San Giovanni (St. John Lateran), Rome's cathedral, was founded in the early 4th century by Emperor Constantine. It has been rebuilt several times, notably in 1646 when Borromini restyled the interior, but retains its original basilica form. Before the papacy moved to Avignon in 1309, the adjoining Lateran Palace was the official papal residence. The present structure dates from 1589, but older parts survive, like the Scala Santa (Holy Staircase) which Christ is said to have climbed at his trial.

Rearing up at the foot of the Aventine Hill are the monolithic red-brick ruins of the Baths of Caracalla. Begun by Emperor Septimius Severus in AD 206, and completed by his son Caracalla in AD 217, they remained in use until the 6th century, when the Goths sabotaged the city's aqueducts.

Going for a bath was one of the social events of the day in ancient Rome. Large complexes such as Caracalla, with a capacity for 1,600 bathers, were not simply places to have a natter and get washed, but also areas which offered an impressive array of facilities: art galleries, gymnasia, gardens, libraries, conference rooms, lecture rooms, and stores selling food and drink.

A Roman bath was a long and complicated business, beginning with a form of Turkish bath, followed by a spell in the caldarium, a large hot room with pools of water to moisten the atmosphere. Then came the lukewarm tepidarium, followed by a visit to the large central meeting place known as the frigidarium, and finally a plunge into the natatio, an open-air swimming pool. For the rich, this was followed by a rub-down with scented wool-cloth.

Most of the rich marble decorations of the baths were scavenged by the Farnese family in the 16th century to adorn the rooms of Palazzo Farnese (see p401). There are, however, statues and mosaics from the Baths in the Museo Nazionale Archeologico in Naples (see pp490–91) and in the Vatican's Gregorian Profane Museum (see p422).

So dramatic is the setting that it used to be the regular venue for the open-air opera season in August.

High on the Aventine stands an early Christian basilica, founded by Peter of Illyria in AD 425 and later given to the Dominican order. It was restored to its original simplicity in the early 20th century. Light filters through 9th-century windows on to a nave framed by pale Corinthian columns. Above the main door is a blue and gold 5th-century mosaic inscription to Peter. In the side portico outside is a 5th-century paneled door carved with biblical scenes, notably one of the oldest images of the Crucifixion (top left-hand corner).

Villa Borghese 1

Map 3 B1. 52, 53, 88, 95, 116, 490. 3, 19. Park dawn–sunset daily.

The villa and its park were designed in 1605 for Cardinal Scipione Borghese, the sybaritic nephew of Pope Paul V. An extravagant patron of the arts, he amassed one of Europe's finest collections of paintings, statues, and antiquities, many of which are still displayed in the villa which he built especially to house his antique sculptures.

The park was one of the first of its kind in Rome, its formal gardens divided by avenues and graced with statues. It contained 400 newly planted trees, garden sculpture by Bernini's father, Pietro, along with many ingenious fountains, "secret" flower gardens, enclosures of exotic animals and birds, and even a grotto with artificial rain. There was also a speaking robot and a trick chair, which trapped anyone who sat in it. At first the grounds were open to the public, but after a visitor was shocked by the collection of erotic paintings, Paul V decided to keep the park private.

In 1773 work began on redesigning the park in the wilder, Romantic style made fashionable by landscape artists like Claude Lorrain and Poussin. Over the next few years mock-Classical temples, fountains, and casine (summerhouses) were added. In 1901, the park and villa were acquired by the state, and in 1911 the area was chosen as the site for the International Exhibition. Pavilions were built by many of the world's nations, the most impressive of which is the British School at Rome by Edwin Lutyens. In the northeastern corner of the park lie the Museo Zoologico and a small redeveloped zoo, known as the Bioparco, where the emphasis is on conservation. Today the estates of the Villa Borghese, Villa Giulia, and the Pincio gardens form one vast park, with the Giardino del Lago, at its center, named for an artificial boating lake. Its main entrance is marked by an 18th-century copy of the arch of Septimius Severus, while on the lake's island is a fake Ionic temple to the Classical god of health, Aesculapius, designed by the 18th-century architect Antonis Aspurucci.

A circular temple of Diana folly lies between the Porta Pinciana, at the top of Via Veneto, and Piazza di Siena, a grassy amphitheater which hosts Rome's international horse show in May. Its umbrella pines inspired the composer Ottorino Respighi to write The Pines of Rome (1924). The open-air opera season is also held in the park.

To the northwest of the park is the Galleria Nazionale d'Arte Moderna, and the Orangery is how home to the Carlo Bilotti museum.

Cardinal Scipione Borghese's villa was designed in 1605 as a typical Roman country house, with its wings projecting into the surrounding gardens. It was built by Flaminio Ponzio, Pope Paul V's architect, and was used by Scipione for entertaining guests and for displaying his impressive collection of paintings and sculpture. Between 1801 and 1809 Prince Camillo Borghese, husband to Napoleon's sister Pauline, unfortunately sold many of the family paintings to his brother-in-law, and swapped 200 of Scipione's Classical statues for an estate in Piedmont. These statues are still in the Louvre and, as a consequence, the remaining antique Classical collection is less interesting than it might once have been. However, the hedonistic cardinal was an enthusiastic patron of the arts and the sculptures he commissioned from artists such as the young Bernini now rank among their most famous works.

The eight rooms of the first floor of the Villa Borghese are set around a central hall, the Salone. The most famous statue is one of Bernini's finest works, Apollo and Daphne (1624) in Room 3, which shows the nymph Daphne with bay leaves sprouting from her outstretched fingers, roots growing from her toes and rough bark enfolding her smooth body, as she begins to metamorphose into a laurel tree (daphne) to escape being abducted by the god Apollo. Abduction is also the theme of The Rape of Proserpina, again by Bernini, in Room 4.

Depicting Pluto, the god of the underworld, carrying Proserpina, daughter of Ceres, off to be his bride, the sculpture is a virtuoso piece in which Bernini contrasts the taut musculature of Pluto with the soft yielding flesh of Proserpina, whose thin dimples in his iron grip.

The third famous Bernini piece, which dates from 1623, is David in Room 2. The artist captures the tensed, grimacing youth the moment before he releases the stone that slew Goliath. It is said that Pope Urban VIII held a mirror up to Bernini so that the sculptor could model David's face on his own. In the next alcove is the Villa Borghese's most infamous work – a sculpture, executed in 1805 by Canova, of Pauline Borghese as Venus Victrix (Venus the Conqueror). The semi-naked Pauline reclining on a chaise-longue shocked those who saw it and Pauline's husband kept the statue locked away, even denying Canova access to it.

The next room holds a selection of antiquities, notably a Roman copy of a plump Bacchus by the 4th-century BC Greek sculptor Praxiteles, and fragments of a 3rd-century AD mosaic found on one of the Borghese estates in Torrenova, showing gladiators battling with wild animals.

The Galleria Borghese, on the upper floor, houses some magnificent Baroque and Renaissance paintings. Works on display include Raphael's masterwork, the Deposition, various works by Caravaggio, the graceful Danäe by the 16th-century artist Correggio, as well as works by Pinturicchio, Barocci, Rubens, and Titian.

Villa Giulia ③

This villa was built in 1550 as a country retreat for Pope Julius III. Designed by Vignola and Ammannati, with contributions by Michelangelo and Vasari, it was intended for entertaining guests of the Vatican, such as Queen Christina of Sweden, rather than as a permanent home. The gardens were planted with 36,000 trees and peppered with pavilions and fountains. Villa Giulia also used to house an outstanding collection of sculptures: 160 boats filled with statues and ornaments were sent to the Vatican after the death of Pope Julius III in 1555.

Since 1889 the villa has been home to the Museo Nazionale Etrusco, an impressive collection of pre-Roman antiquities from central Italy.

Sant'Agnese fuori le Mura was built in the 4th century above the crypt of the 13-year-old martyr St. Agnes, and although much altered it retains the form of the original basilica. According to legend it was founded by Constantine's daughter Constantia, who was cured from leprosy after sleeping beside Agnes's tomb.

In the 7th-century apse mosaic, St. Agnes appears as a bejeweled Byzantine empress in a stole of gold and a violet robe. Tradition has it that she appeared like this eight days after her death holding a white lamb. On January 21 two lambs are blessed in the church and a vestment called a pallium is woven from their wool, to be given to a new archbishop.

This circular church was built in the early 4th century as a mausoleum for Emperor Constantine's daughters Constantia and Helena. The dome and its drum are supported by an arcade that rests on 12 magnificent pairs of granite columns, while the encircling ambulatory has a barrel-vaulted ceiling decorated with the world's earliest surviving Christian mosaics. Dating from the 4th century, they are thought to have been copied from a secular Roman floor and include flowers, animals, and birds. There is even a charming scene of a Roman grape-harvest, though the wine is said by Christians to represent Christ's blood.

In a niche on the far side of the church is a replica of Constantia's ornate porphyry sarcophagus, carved with cherubs crushing grapes. The original was moved to the Vatican Museums in 1790.

Circular interior of the 4th-century church of Santa Costanza

The sanctity of Constantia is somewhat debatable. Described by the historian Marcellinus as a fury incarnate, constantly goading her equally unpleasant husband, Hannibalianus, to violence, her canonization was probably the result of some confusion with a saintly nun of the same name.

Cypresses lining the Via Appia

The first part of the Via Appia was built in 312 BC by Appius Claudius Caecus. In 190 BC, when it was extended to the ports of Taranto and Brindisi, the road became Rome's link with its empire in the East. It was the route taken by the funeral processions of the dictator Sulla (78 BC) and Emperor Augustus (AD 14), and it was along this road that St. Paul was led as a prisoner to Rome in AD 56. The church of Domine Quo Vadis? marks the spot where St. Peter is said to have met Christ when fleeing Rome.

The road is lined with ruined family tombs, decaying monuments, and collective burial places (columbaria). Beneath the fields on either side lies a maze of catacombs, including those of San Callisto and San Sebastiano.

In burying their dead in underground cemeteries outside the city walls, the early Christians were simply obeying the laws of the time. They were not forced to use them because of persecution, as later popular myth has suggested. Many saints were buried here, and the catacombs later became shrines and places of pilgrimage.

Today several catacombs are open to the public. The vast Catacombs of San Callisto, hewn from volcanic tufa, contain niches, or loculi, which held two or three bodies, as well as the burial places of several early popes. Close by, walls in the Catacombs of San Sebastiano are covered in graffiti invoking St. Peter and St. Paul, whose remains may once have been moved here.

The Esposizione Universale di Roma (EUR), a suburb to the south of the city, was originally built for an international exhibition, a kind of “Work

EUR's Palazzo della Civiltà del Lavoro, the “Square Colosseum”

Olympics,” that was planned for 1942, but never took place because of the outbreak of war. The architecture was intended to glorify Fascism, and as a result the bombastic style of the buildings can look overblown and rhetorical to modern eyes. Of all the buildings the best known is probably the Palazzo della Civiltà del Lavoro (the Palace of the Civilization of Work), an unmistakable landmark for people arriving from Fiumicino airport.

The scheme was eventually completed in the 1950s. Despite the area's dubious architecture, EUR has been a planning success, and people are still keen to live here. As well as residential housing, the vast marble halls along the wide boulevards are also home to a number of government offices and museums. Best among the latter is the Museo della Civiltà Romana, famous for its casts of the reliefs from the Column of Trajan, and for a large scale model depicting 4th-century Rome with all the buildings which then stood within the Aurelian walls. The south of the suburb features a lake and shady park, and the huge domed Palazzo dello Sport, built for the 1960 Olympics.

Today's church is a faithful if soulless reconstruction of the great 4th-century basilica destroyed by fire in 1823. Only a few fragments of the earlier church survived, most notably the cloister (1241), with its pairs of colorful inlaid columns, considered one of the most beautiful in Rome.

Elsewhere, the church's triumphal arch is decorated on one side with heavily restored 5th-century mosaics, and on the other with mosaics by Pietro Cavallini originally on the facade. The equally fine mosaics (1220) in the apse represent the figures of Christ with St. Peter, St. Andrew, St. Paul, and St. Luke.

The single most outstanding work of art is the fine marble canopy over the high altar, the work of Arnolfo di Cambio (1285), with the possible assistance of Pietro Cavallini. Below the altar is the confessio where it is alleged St. Paul was once buried. To its right is an impressive paschal candlestick dating from the 12th century by Nicolò di Angelo and Pietro Vassalotto.

Shopping in Rome

Rome has always been a thriving center for design and shopping. In ancient times, the finest craftsmen were drawn to the city, and artifacts and products of all kinds, including gold, furs, and wine, were imported from far-flung corners of the Empire to satisfy the needs of the wealthy local population. Shopping in Rome today in many ways reflects this diverse tradition. Italian designers have a well-deserved reputation for their luxuriously chic style in fashion, knitwear, and leather goods (especially shoes and purses), as well as in interior design, fabrics, ceramics, and glass. The artisan tradition is strong, and the love of good design filters through into the smallest items. Rome is not a city for bargains (although it is often better value than Florence or Milan), but the joys of window shopping here will offer plenty of compensation.

FASHION

Italy is one of the leading lights in high fashion, or alta moda. Many famous designers may be based in Milan, but Rome is home to a cluster of sophisticated and internationally distinguished fashion houses. The most notable are probably Fendi, Laura Biagiotti, Prada, and Valentino, whose studio dominates Piazza Mignanelli.

But even for those unable to splash out on genuine designer gear, much fun can be gained from a stroll down the streets that radiate out from the Piazza di Spagna: some of the window displays here are truly spectacular.

Rome is not a good place to buy everyday wear, since there is a distinct lack of midprice shops bridging the gap between the dazzlingly priced alta moda designer exclusives and the ultracheap goods sold in markets. However, at Discount dell'Alta Moda you can find end-of-season designer labels at 50 percent less than the boutique prices.

BOOKS AND GIFTS

Rome offers huge scope for gift buying, both in the well-established tourist stores in the historic center and in smaller shops located in less frequented parts of the city that might not feature in your vacation itinerary.

The central Via del Pellegrino is a street crammed with small specialty outlets, such as Le Tre Ghinee, which sells ceramics and glass objects. If you are more interested in contemporary design, visit the Palazzo delle Esposizioni, where a wide range of objects by famous designers is available.

The Feltrinelli International bookshop has an excellent range of foreign-language fiction, as well as nonfiction covering various subjects, including Italian art and architecture, cookery, travel, and history. It also stocks some superb photographic, art and cinema posters. For cutprice deals on books try the secondhand stalls in Via delle Terme di Diocleziano and in Largo della Fontanella di Borghese.

Near the Pantheon, the Florentine Il Papiro sells a great range of illustrious paper-based products, including diaries, notebooks, envelopes, and beautiful seal-and-wax sets that make ideal gifts.

Religious artifacts are readily available in bookshops near the main basilicas, such as the Libreria Belardetti near St. Peter's. Other shops specialize in religious items for both the clergy and the layperson. Facing the Vatican gates, in Via di Porta Angelica, there are several shops, including Al Pellegrino Cattolico, that sell mementos to visiting pilgrims.

FOOD AND DRINK

If you are tempted to take home some irresistible Italian delicacies, such as pecorino romano cheese, Parma ham, extra virgin olive oil, dried porcini mushrooms, sun-dried tomatoes, olives, and grappa, as well as superb wines from Lazio and elsewhere then the traditional food stores, alimentari, are a great place to start. Try the well-stocked Fratelli Fabbi, near Piazza di Spagna, with its exceptional selection of delicious cold meats and cheeses from every corner of Italy, as well as quality wines and champagnes. A few doors down on the same street is Focacci, with its wonderful array of Italian delicacies. The historic but expensive Volpetti in Testaccio is synonymous with great service and uncompromising quality. Aside from specializing in unusual cheeses, olive oils, vinegars, and a fabulous selection of food hampers, it also stocks a variety of Italian lard and caviar – you can even try before you buy.

In Pinciano, Casa dei Latticini Micocci sells a comprehensive range of cheeses from even the most remote regions of Italy, while in Trastevere, the family-run Antica Caciara Trasteverina has a vast assortment of local and regional dairy products, which include sheep's ricotta and the Piedmontese toma del fen. More local, reasonably priced cheeses are available at Cisternino.

If cakes and chocolate feature on your list, then there is plenty of opportunity to satisfy those cravings too. Chocolat, in the historic center, sells brandname and home-made chocolate and organizes occasional tastings and dinners for connoisseurs, while Moriondo e Gariglio specializes in chocolate delights made from traditional Piedmontese recipes. La Deliziosa, near Piazza Navona, offers a great range of Italian desserts and cakes; the ricotta based variety deserves a special mention.

Bear in mind that customs restrictions can apply to certain foodstuffs.

MARKETS

Rome's open-air markets are quintessential examples of the bubbling exuberance and earthiness for which Romans are renowned. They are wonderfully vivid experiences too, since Italian stallholders have raised the display of even the humblest vegetable to an art form.

The city is dotted with small local food markets, and there are several fascinating well-established markets near the center. These include Campo de' Fiori for foodstuffs, the Mercato delle Stampe for old prints, books, and magazines, and the Nuovo Mercato Esquilino for international foods.

Trastevere's famous flea market, Porta Portese, was established shortly after the end of World War II and is said to have grown out of the thriving black market that operated at Tor di Nona, opposite Castel Sant'Angelo, during those lean years. Anything and everything seems to be for sale, piled high on stalls in carefully arranged disorder – clothes, shoes, bags, linen, luggage, camping equipment, towels, pots, pans, kitchen utensils, plants, pets, cassettes and CDs, old LPs and 78s.

If you are looking for a traditional food market in the heart of the old city, Rome's most picturesque market is also its most historical. Its name, Campo de' Fiori (see p401), which translates as "field of flowers," sometimes misleads people into expecting a flower market. In fact, the name is said to derive from Campus Florae (Flora's square) – Flora being the lover of the great Roman general Pompey. A market has been held in this beautiful central piazza for many centuries. Every morning, except Sunday, the piazza is transformed by an array of stalls selling fruit and vegetables, meat, poultry, and fish. One or two stalls also specialize in legumes, rice, and dried fruits and nuts.

Throughout the year Rome also plays host to many street fairs. If they coincide with your visit, these are fun to go to, because they normally sell a good variety of local produce, handicrafts, and clothes. Seasonal fairs also occur, especially around Christmas; among them is Natale Oggi, in the Fiera di Roma, where you can stock up on Italian specialities.

Be sure to keep your wits about you at markets: pickpockets work with lightning speed in the bustling crowds.

Entertainment in Rome

There's a particular excitement attached to entertainment in Rome. Soccer and opera, for example, are worth experiencing for sheer atmosphere alone, whether or not you are a fan. There is also a good jazz scene, with international stars appearing alongside local talent. Unexpectedly, given the general shutdown among shops and restaurants, the summer is Rome's liveliest time in terms of entertainment and cultural events, with the city's Renaissance squares, vast parks, villa gardens, Classical ruins, and other open spaces hosting various arts festivals. Concerts and movies take on an added dimension when performances take place beneath the stars in the many open-air arenas across the city. Rome also has plenty of nightclubs to choose from.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Good sources of information about what's on are the listings magazines Roma c'è and Trovataroma, the weekly Thursday supplement to La Repubblica newspaper. Also worth getting hold of is L'Evento, available from the Rome Tourist Office (see p665), which gives details in English of cultural events in the city.

BOOKING TICKETS

Among the ticket agencies that will book seats for some performances for you (for a small fee) are Orbis and Box Office. Many theaters do not accept telephone bookings – you have to visit the box office in person. They will charge you a preveduta supplement (about 10 percent of the normal price) for any tickets sold in advance. The Teatro dell'Opera box office handles sales for both summer and winter seasons. Tickets for most big rock and jazz events can be bought at Orbis and at larger record shops, such as Ricordi Media Store. Look out for due per uno coupons in local bars – these allow two people entrance for the price of one.

OPEN-AIR ENTERTAINMENT

Open-air opera, movies, classical music, and jazz concerts fill the Roman calendar from late June until the end of September. Both the Cineporto, a festival held along the Tiber, at the Ponte Milvio, and the Festival di Massenzio, at the Forum, offer movies, live music, food, and small exhibitions in July and August. The summer months also bring excellent open-air rock, jazz, and world-music festivals, while Rome's main fall performing-arts festival, RomaEuropa, has occasional performances in the grounds of the Villa Medici. Theater also moves outside in the summer months, and some movie theaters roll back their ceilings for open-air screenings.

More traditional is Trastevere's community festival, the Festa de Noiantri (see p67), with music, processions, and fireworks. This religious festival begins on the Saturday after July 16, and celebrations continue until the end of the month.

CLASSICAL MUSIC AND DANCE

Classical concerts take place in a surprising number of venues. Tickets for opera premieres may be hard to find, but soloists, groups, or orchestras playing in gardens, churches, villas, or ancient ruins are more accessible.

World-renowned soloists and orchestras make appearances throughout the year in venues such as the Renzo Piano-designed Parco della Musica and the Accademia Filaronica Romana. Past visitors have included Luciano Pavarotti and Plácido Domingo, the Berlin Philharmonic, and prima ballerina Sylvie Guillem. One of the most innovative programs of classical and contemporary music is provided by the Aula Magna dell'Università La Sapienza. The opera season starts late at the Teatro dell'Opera, between November and January. The great ballet classics are also staged at this venue. The Equilibrio Festival in February brings contemporary dance to the city (performances take place mainly at the Parco della Musica).

ROCK, JAZZ, AND WORLD MUSIC

Rome's nonclassical music scene is unpredictable and subject to vast seasonal changes. However, there is a huge variety of music at the many clubs and stadiums, such as the Palalottomatica and the Stadio Olimpico, which attract foreign and homegrown stars. The best jazz musicians play at the splendid Casa del Jazz and the friendly Alexanderplatz. Trastevere's Big Mama is one of the city's legendary addresses for important jazz names, while world music is well served at the aptly named Villaggio Globale.

For smaller venues you might need to buy a monthly or annual membership card (between €2 and €11), which often includes the entrance fee for smaller bands.

MOVIES AND THEATER

Moviegoing is a popular pastime in Rome, with around 40 movies on show on an average weekday. Most Roman theaters are prima visione (first run) and show the latest international movies in dubbed versions. The best theaters for decor and comfort are the Fiamma (two screens) and the Barberini (three screens). Movies in their original language are shown at the Metropolitan (daily) and at the Nuovo Olimpia (Mondays). Smaller art movie theaters, such as the Azzurro Scipioni, are more likely to show subtitled versions of foreign movies.

Theater productions are performed in Italian whether the plays are national classics or by foreign playwrights. The main theaters – Teatro Argentina, Teatro Quirino and Teatro Valle – offer a selection by great Italian playwrights. There are also performances of traditional cabaret, dance, and avant-garde theater at the Teatro India. Theater tickets cost between €8 and €50 and can generally be booked only in advance by visiting the theater box office in person or through agencies such as Box Office.

NIGHTLIFE

Rome's nightlife has never been as vibrant as it is today. Recent years have witnessed a sharp rise in the number of bars and clubs, all catering for an ever more demanding clientele. Once the choice was limited to a few well-established bars in the center and the hugely popular clubs in Testaccio, such as the unashamedly commercial Akab Cave or the more cutting-edge Locanda Atlantide, which hosts a whole range of DJs from funk to reggae. Now, though, the capital offers a wide range of options designed to satisfy all tastes and budgets.

Head first to a stylish pre-clubbing venue such as 'Gusto, where you can rub shoulders with out-on-the-town locals, taking advantage of the range of facilities – on three sites there is a restaurant, a pizzeria, a wine bar, and occasional live music. Alternatively, for a more leisurely start to your evening simply relax in a wine bar in one of the historic center's breathtaking squares.

If you are looking for a gay venue, Coming Out, near the Colosseum, attracts both gay and straight drinkers, and Alpheus just off Via Ostiense regularly hosts gay nights.

For an alternative edge to Rome's vivacious nightlife, try out the centri sociali, illegally occupied buildings that have been converted into arts and entertainment centers. Top billing goes to Brancaleone, which features Italian and international DJs for the best in electronic and house tunes.

A night out in Rome can be expensive – you can be charged as much as €10 for a cocktail. For a cheaper alternative, visit one of the many bars in the area around San Lorenzo.

ROME STREET FINDER

Map references given with sights described in the Rome chapters relate to the maps on the following pages. Map references are also given for hotels (see pp587-92) and restaurant listings (see pp636-41) and for useful addresses in the Travelers' Needs and Survival Guide sections at the back of the book. The first figure in the map reference tells you which Street Finder map to turn to, and the letter and number which follow refer to the grid reference on that map. The small map below shows the area of Rome covered by each of the eight maps and the corresponding map number is given in black. All the major sights are sketched out on the maps, and symbols, listed in the key below, are used to indicate the location of other important buildings.

LAZIO

Lying between the Apennines and the Tyrrhenian Sea, Lazio is a varied region of volcanic lakes, mountains, ravines, vineyards, and olive groves. Before the rise of Rome, it was populated by the Etruscans and various Italic tribes, including the Latins, after whom the region is named. Besides rich archaeological sites, Lazio also offers skiing and swimming and water sports in the lakes and sea.

Lazio was inhabited at least 60,000 years ago, although the first signs of a substantial civilization date back to the 10th century BC. By the 7th century BC a flourishing Etruscan and Sabine civilization based on trade and agriculture existed in the north, while the region's southern margins were colonized by the Latins, Volsci, and Hernici. History mingles with myth in the writings of Virgil, who describes how Aeneas landed in Lazio and married the daughter of the king of the Latins. Romulus and Remus (legendary founders of Rome) were descendants of this alliance.

With the rise of Rome as a power, the Etruscan and Latin peoples were, in time, overwhelmed and the focus of the region turned to the city of Rome. Great roads and aqueducts extended out of the city like spokes of a wheel, and wealthy patricians built lavish villas in the surrounding countryside.

The early Middle Ages saw the rise of the Church's temporal power and, with the foundation of monasteries at Subiaco and Montecassino, Lazio became the cradle of western monasticism, and eventually part of the Papal States. In the 16th and 17th centuries, wealthy papal families competed with one another to build luxurious villas and gardens, hiring some of the best architects of the Renaissance and Baroque.

Throughout its history, however, Lazio has been eclipsed and neglected by Rome. The Pontine marshes were a malaria-ridden swamp until the 1920s, when Mussolini had them drained and brought new roads and agricultural improvements to the area.

Exploring Lazio

Much of Lazio's landscape was formed by the eruption of four volcanoes which showered the area with lava. Lakes formed in the craters, and the soil, rendered fertile by the lava, nourished vines, olives, fruit, and nut trees. The volcanic activity also left Lazio with hot springs, notably around Tivoli, Viterbo, and Fuggi. Rome dominates the area, dividing the wooded hills of the north from the reclaimed Pontine marshes in the south. Swimming and sailing are possible in lakes Bracciano, Bolsena, and Albano, while Lazio's best beaches lie between Gaeta and Sabaudia in the Parco Nazionale del Circeo.

GETTING AROUND

Rome's two international airports at Fiumicino and Ciampino serve the region. The main freeways are the Autostrada del Sole Firenze–Roma (A1) and Roma–Napoli (A1–E45), and the Roma–L'Aquila (A24–E80). Rome's beltway (raccordo anulare) connects the freeways and major roads.

The Lazio bus service, COTRAL, serves all the main towns with changeover points for the smaller locations in Rome and at Latina, Frosinone, Viterbo, and Rieti. Train routes into the region from other Italian cities are efficient, although within Lazio the services are slower and less frequent.

Tuscania's trim walls and towers are visible from afar on the empty low-lying plains between Viterbo and Tarquinia. Although shaken by an earthquake in 1971, its medieval and Renaissance buildings have since been carefully reconstructed. Just outside the city walls, on the rocky Colle San Pietro, two remarkable churches dating from the Lombard-Romanesque period occupy the site of Tuscania, a major Etruscan center conquered by Rome in 300 BC.

Santa Maria Maggiore, at the foot of the hill, has a typically Lombard-Romanesque asymmetric facade with blind arcades and a bold rose window. Over the central door lies a simple marble Madonna and Child, framed by abstract motifs and biblical scenes. Inside, a rare 12th-century full-immersion baptism font stands in the aisle.

The Lombard-Romanesque church of San Pietro, on top of the hill, is a striking building of ocher-hued tufa and white marble details. It stands on a grassy piazza, along with two medieval towers and a bishop's palace. The facade features an intricately inlaid rose window flanked by strange reliefs, including three-headed bearded demons. The interior is true to its 8th-century form, with squat columns, toothed arches, capitals carved with stylized plants, and a Cosmati floor. Below the church lies a strange mosquelike crypt.

Viterbo ②

Viterbo was an important Etruscan center before falling to the Romans in the 4th century BC. Its heyday, however, came in the 13th century when it briefly became the papal seat (1257–81). During World War II it was devastated, but the austere gray stone medieval core, still encircled by walls, and many of the town's churches, have been carefully restored.

In San Pellegrino, Viterbo's oldest and best preserved quarter, medieval houses with towers, arches, and external staircases line narrow streets running between little piazzas decorated with fountains.

On Piazza San Lorenzo the 12th-century Duomo boasts an elegant black and white striped bell tower, a solemn 16th-century facade, and a stark Romanesque interior. The adjacent 13th-century Palazzo Papale, with a finely carved loggia, was built for popes on their visits to the city.

The town's civic buildings border the main square, Piazza del Plebiscito. The most interesting is the 15th-century Palazzo dei Priori, frescoed inside by Baldassare Croce with scenes from the town's history and mythological past.

Outside the city walls, on Viale Capocci, the Romanesque Santa Maria della Verità has wonderful 15th-century frescoes by Lorenzo da Viterbo.

This pretty town is perched on the edge of a defunct volcanic crater between the shores of Lake Bolsena, over which there are splendid views, and the Via Cassia. It is dominated by the octagonal bulk of its cathedral, Santa Margherita, whose dome, created in the 1670s by Carlo Fontana, is second only in size to St. Peter's.

On the town's outskirts, along the Via Cassia towards Orvieto, lies San Flaviano, a lovely double-decker building with a 12th-century church oriented east over an 11th-century church pointing west. Inside are some fine 14th-century frescoes and freely carved capitals, thought to have been inspired by the traditions of Etruscan art.

The Sacro Bosco beneath the town of Bomarzo was created between 1522 and 1580 by Duke Vicino Orsini as a bizarre memorial to his late wife. Far from designing a meticulous Renaissance garden, Orsini embraced the artificiality and distortion of the Mannerist period by creating lop-sided buildings and sculpting huge boulders of stone into fantastic creatures and vast allegorical monsters.

Perhaps the grandest of the country villas created during the 17th century by the wealthy families of Rome, Palazzo Farnese (see p380) is the focal point of the medieval village of Caprarola. Designed by Vignola, it was built between 1559 and 1575 and takes its star-shape from the foundations of a large pentagonal fortress designed by Antonio da Sangallo the Younger half a century earlier. On the main floor, reached by an elaborately stuccoed spiral staircase, the rooms were frescoed, largely by the Zuccari brothers in 1560, with scenes depicting heroic episodes from the life of Hercules and the Farnese family.

Environs: Created, according to legend, by the god Hercules ramming his club into the ground, Lago di Vico, 3 miles (4 km) west of Caprarola, in fact occupies the remnants of a volcanic crater. An idyllic enclave, the lake is encircled by the wooded slopes of the Cimino Hills (much of which is a nature reserve). ## Tarquinia 6

Viterbo. 15,000. Piazza Cavour 23 (0766 84 92 82). Wed.

Ancient Tarquinia (Tarxuna) was one of Etruria's most important centers. It occupied a strategic position to the northeast of the present town, on a ridge dominating the coastal plain, until the 4th century BC when it fell to Rome.

Tarquinia itself is worth a wander for its crumbling medieval churches and spacious main square, though the main reason to visit is the Museo Archeologico e Necropoli, which has one of Italy's better collections of Etruscan finds. Relaxed, reclining statues of the deceased adorn the sarcophagi on the ground floor, but the star attraction, on the mezzanine, is a group of terracotta winged horses dating from the 4th century BC.

On a hilltop 1 mile (2 km) southeast of town are the frescoed tombs of the necropolis dug into the soft volcanic tufa. There are almost 6,000 tombs but only about 15 can be visited at a time. The frescoes that decorate them, designed to remind the dead of life, range from frenetic dancing figures in the Tomba delle Leonesse to the diners reclining in the Tomba dei Leopardi.

In the 6th century BC Cerveteri (ancient Kysry) was one of the most populated and culturally rich towns of the Mediterranean, trading with Greece and controlling a large area along the coast. The necropolis, a city of the dead 1 mile (2 km) out of town, is a network of streets lined with tombs dating from the 7th to the 1st century BC. Some of the larger tumulus tombs, like the Tomba degli Scudi e delle Sedie, are arranged like houses with rooms, doors, and corridors. The Tomba dei Rilievi is decorated with plaster reliefs of tools, pets, and mythological figures. Although the

For over 600 years Ostia was Rome's main port and a busy trading center, until the 5th century AD when a disastrous combination of malaria and commercial competition brought the town into decline. Silt preserved its buildings and it now lies 3 miles (5 km) inland.

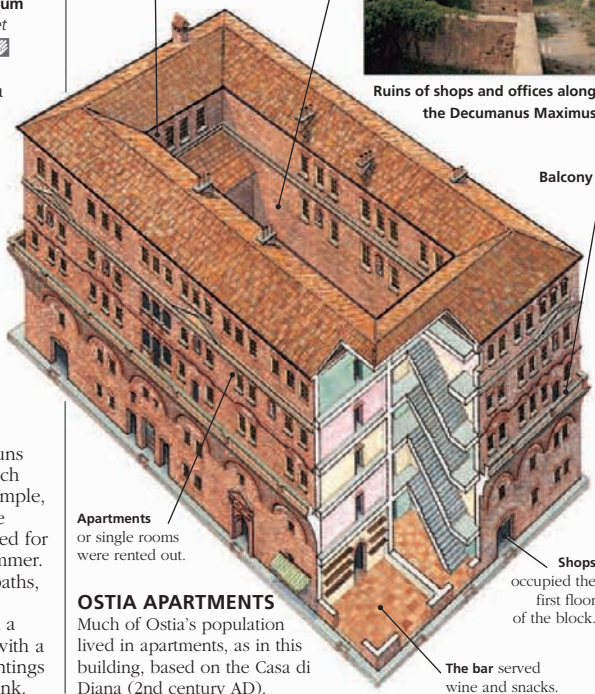

The ruins of Ostia give a vivid idea of life in Classical times. The main thoroughfare, the Decumanus Maximus, runs through the Forum, which houses Ostia's largest temple, the Capitol, and past the restored theater, still used for open air concerts in summer. The road is lined with baths, shops, and multistory buildings. There is even a Thermopolium, or bar, with a marble counter and paintings advertising food and drink.

The building material for the houses was brick, left plain or covered in mural decoration.

The internal courtyard has remained a feature of Italian housing.

The Alban hills have long been a country retreat for Romans. In Classical times they were scattered with villas; in the Middle Ages with fortified castles (hence the name); and in the 16th and 17th centuries with luxurious residences and their spectacular parks. During World War II German defenses were based in the Alban hills and many Castelli towns were damaged by Allied bombs. Although partly protected by a nature reserve, the hilltop towns are popular day-trip destinations as well as being famous for their white wine.

Frascati's central piazza is a belvedere overlooked by the Villa Aldobrandini, a majestic 17th-century building set in a splendid park of secret grottoes, fountains, and statues.

The fortified Abbazia di San Nilo in Grottaferrata, 2 miles (3 km) south, was founded in 1004 and contains some lovely 17th-century frescoes by Domenichino in the chapel.

Tivoli, a favorite place to escape the heat of the Roman summer

Tivoli 11

Roma. 57,000. 0774 45 35 62). Wed.

Hill-town Tivoli, now probably the most popular excursion from Rome, was once a favored resort of the ancient Romans, attracted by its fresh water and sulfur springs, and beautiful countryside. The temples that once covered Tivoli's hilltop are still visible in places. Some are half buried in medieval buildings, others, such as the temples of Sibyl and Vesta, inside the gardens of the Sibilla restaurant (on Via Sibilla), are relatively intact.

Splendors from around the world reproduced in Hadrian's Villa

The town's most famous sight is the Villa d'Este, a sumptuous country residence created in the 16th century by Pirro Ligorio for Cardinal Ippolito d'Este from the shell of a Benedictine monastery. It is known primarily for its gardens, steeply raked on terraces, and studded with spectacular, if somewhat faded and moss-hung, fountains. Although suffering from reduced water-pressure and polluted water due to centuries of neglect, the gardens give a vivid impression of the frivolous luxury enjoyed by the papal families. Highlights include the Viale delle Cento Fontane and the Fontana dell'Organo Idraulico, which, thanks to a hydraulic system, can play music. At the other end of town, the Villa Gregoriana, now a hotel, is set in a lush wooded valley where paths wind down into a deep ravine.

Environs: About 3 miles (5 km) west of Tivoli are the ruins of Hadrian's Villa. Easily seen in conjunction with a visit to the town, this is one of the largest and most spectacular villas ever built in the Roman Empire (it once covered an area greater than the center of Imperial Rome).

Hadrian was an inveterate traveler and his aim in creating the villa was to reproduce some of the wonders he had seen around the world. The Stoa Poikile, for example, a walkway around a rectangular pool and garden, recalls the painted colonnade of the Stoic philosophers in Athens, while the Canopus evokes the grand sanctuary of Serapis in Alexandria. There are also ruins of two bath complexes, a Latin and a Greek library, a Greek theater, and a private study on a little island known as the Teatro Marittimo.

Today the rambling ruins, full of shady nooks and hidden corners, make a lovely place to relax, picnic or explore.

Medieval Palestrina grew up over the terraces of a huge temple dedicated to the goddess Fortuna Primigenia, the mother of all gods. The temple, founded in the 8th century BC and rebuilt in the 2nd century BC by Sulla, housed one of the most important oracles of ancient times. The terraces of the sanctuary, littered with fragments of columns and porticoes, lead up to the curved Palazzo Barberini. In the 6th century, weary of the decadence of Rome, St. Benedict left the city to become a hermit in a cave above Subiaco. Others joined him, and eventually there were 12 monasteries in the area.

Only two now survive: Santa Scolastica, dedicated to Benedict's sister, is organized around three cloisters, one Renaissance, one early Gothic, and the third Cosmatesque. Higher up, the 12th-century San Benedetto is a more rewarding destination. Overhanging a deep gorge, it comprises two churches built on top of each other. The upper is decorated with 14th-century Sienese frescoes; the lower, built over several levels, incorporates the original cave where Benedict spent three years after fleeing Rome.

The abbey of Montecassino, mother church of the Benedictine order and a centre of medieval art, was founded in 529 by St. Benedict. By the 8th century it was an important center of learning, and by the 11th century had become one of the richest monasteries in Europe.

In 1944 it was a German stronghold and a target for Allied bombs. Most of the complex was devastated, including the lavish Baroque church, but the walls remained intact and the abbey withstood for three months before falling to the Allies. The adjoining war cemeteries commemorate the 30,000 soldiers killed.

THE MONASTERIES OF LAZIO

St. Benedict founded the abbey of Montecassino around 529 and there wrote his famous Rule. Based on the principles of prayer, study, and manual labor, this became the fundamental monastic code of western Europe. The Cistercian order, an offshoot of the Benedictines, came to Italy from Burgundy in the 12th century. The Cistercians were followers of St. Bernard, whose creed was based on austerity and self-sufficiency, qualities which were reflected in the simple, early Gothic architecture of their monasteries. Their first abbey was at Fossanova. Other Cistercian abbeys in Lazio include Valvisciolo (northeast of Sermoneta) and San Martino in Cimino (near Lago di Vico).

The Abbey of Montecassino, destroyed during World War II, was rebuilt as a replica of its 17th-century predecessor.

The Abbey of San Benedetto, Subiaco, was founded in the 11th century over St. Benedict's cave. A staircase carved in the rock leads to the grotto where he preached to shepherds.

The Abbey of Casamari, 8 miles (14 km) east of Frosinone, was founded by Benedictine monks in 1035 and handed over to the Cistercians who rebuilt it in 1203.

According to legend Saturn founded five towns in southeast Lazio, including Anagni, Alatri, and Arpino. This area is now known as La Ciociaria, from ciocie, the bark clogs once commonly worn in the area.

Before the Romans conquered this part of Lazio it was inhabited by several different tribes: the Volsci, the Sanniti, and the Hernici. Little is known of them, apart from the extraordinary walls with which they protected their settlements. In later years these were believed to have been built by the Cyclops, a mythical giant, which gave them their present name of Cyclopean walls.

Anagni was the most sacred Hernician center until its destruction by the Romans in 306 BC. In the Middle Ages it was the birthplace and family seat of several popes, an era from which many buildings survive, most notably Boniface VIII's 13th-century mullion-windowed palace.

The beautiful Romanesque Duomo, Santa Maria, built over the ancient Hernician acropolis, boasts a fine Cosmati mosaic floor from the 13th century as well as 14th-century Sienese frescoes. The crypt of San Magno is frescoed with one of the most complete surviving cycles of the 12th and 13th centuries.

Environs: Alatri, perched on an olive-covered slope 17 miles (28 km) east of Anagni, was an important Hernician town. It preserves an impressive double set of Cyclopean walls, 1 mile (2 km) long and 10 ft (3 m) high, from its 7th-century BC acropolis. In the medieval town below the walls is the Romanesque church of Santa Maria Maggiore, greatly restored in the 13th-century.

Arpino, 25 miles (40 km) east of Alatri, is a bustling town with a medieval core, and was the birthplace of the Roman orator Cicero. About 2 miles (3 km) above Arpino, at the site of the ancient town of Civitavecchia, is a tremendous stretch of Cyclopean walls which includes a rare gateway with a pointed arch.

Sermoneta is a lovely hilltop town overlooking the Pontine Plains, with narrow cobbled streets winding around medieval houses, palaces, and churches. The Duomo has a fine 15th-century panel by Benozzo Gozzoli showing the Virgin cradling Sermoneta in her hands. At the top of the town rises the moated fairy-tale Castello Caetani, frescoed with mythological scenes by a pupil of Pinturicchio.

In the valley below lies the abandoned medieval village of Ninfa, converted into lush gardens by the Caetani family in 1921. Streams and waterfalls punctuate the picturesque garden laid out among the crumbling buildings.

Terracina 17

Latina. 40,000. FS Via Leopardi (0773 72 77 59). Thu.

Roman Terracina was an important commercial center on the Via Appia (the Appian Way). Today it is a popular seaside resort, with a fascinating collage of medieval buildings and Roman ruins in its historic center, perched on the slopes of the Ausonian Hills. The more modern part of town by the sea is full of restaurants, bars, and hotels.

Bombing during World War II uncovered many of the town's ancient structures, notably a stretch of the Appian Way and the original paving of the Roman Forum in Piazza del Municipio. The 11th-century Duomo was built in the shell of a Roman temple, and is still entered by the temple's steps. The medieval portico is adorned with a lovely 12th-century mosaic and the interior preserves the 13th-century mosaic pavement. Next door, the modern town hall houses the Museo Archeologico, devoted to local Greek and Roman finds.

About 2 miles (3 km) above the town are the podium and foundations that once supported the temple of Jove Anxur, dating back to the 1st century BC. This huge arcaded platform is illuminated at night and offers vertiginous views of Terracina and its bay.

Sperlonga 18

Latina. 4,000. Corso San Leone 22 (0771 55 70 00). Sat.

Sperlonga is a popular seaside resort surrounded by sandy beaches. The old town sits on a rocky promontory, a picturesque labyrinth of whitewashed buildings, narrow alleyways, piazzettas, and balconies offering an occasional glimpse of the sea below. It is now full of bars, restaurants, and boutiques. The modern part of town lies down on the seafront.

The area around Sperlonga was a favorite retreat for the ancient Romans during the hot summer months. They built villas along the coast, and converted the natural caves in the nearby cliffs into places to dine and relax.

In 1957 archaeologists excavating the huge complex of Tiberius's luxury villa, half a mile (1 km) on the southern outskirts of town, found some marvelous 2nd-century BC Hellenistic sculptures in a large cave open to the sea. These sculptures, representing incidents from Homer's Odyssey, are thought to be by the same artists from Rhodes (where the Emperor Tiberius once lived) who were responsible for the Laocoön (see p417). They are displayed, along with other local finds, in the Museo Archeologico Nazionale which is part of the archaeological zone.

Latina. 22,000. Via Emanuele Filiberto 5 (0771 46 11 65). Wed.

According to Virgil, Gaeta was named after Aeneas's wetnurse Caieta, who was allegedly buried here. The town sits on the southern headland of the gulf of Gaeta, under Monte Orlando. The historic center is dominated by a mighty Aragonese castle and the pinnacles of mock-Gothic San Francesco. To the north, the modern quarter links Gaeta to the bay of Serapo, a picturesque beach resort.

Gaeta's most beautiful feature is its elegant late Romanesque bell tower, its lofty summit topped by a roof of colored ceramic tiles. On the seafront lies the tiny 10th-century church of San Giovanni a Mare, with faded frescoes, a hemispherical dome, and sloping floor to let the sea flow out after flooding.

Southern Italy at a Glance

Visitors to southern Italy find a rich array of archaeological remains. Although those of the Romans at Pompeii are high on everyone's list, Greek ruins are found in Sicily and the southern coast and there are mysterious ancient structures, called nuraghe, in Sardinia. Campania, Puglia, and Sicily are admired for their architecture, while across the south there are magnificent landscapes, abundant wildlife, and endless opportunities for outdoor activities. The cuisine alone, with its eclectic heritage and diversity of tastes, provides the excuse to dawdle on the coast or in the mountain villages.

The Parco Nazionale d'Abruzzo, a vast unspoiled wilderness, is home to wolves, bears, and many species of birds (see pp506–7).

Su Nuraxi at Barumini, built around 1500 BC, is the most celebrated of Sardinia's mysterious stone nuraghe sites (see p549).

The cloister decoration at Monreale cathedral is a legacy of Sicily's Arabic past, with elaborate columns adorned with fine mosaics and splendid sculpted capitals (see pp530–31).

Sicily's Valley of the Temples at Agrigento contains some of the best-preserved Greek ruins outside Greece. Mostly Doric in style, they date from the 5th and 6th centuries BC (see p536).

The Flavors of Southern Italy

The “land of the midday sun,” the Mezzogiorno is majestic and fertile, yet in places barren and achingly poor. This is the land of the Mediterranean diet, which relies heavily on bright vegetables, fresh seafood, aromatic herbs, and fruity olive oil. Puglia produces more grapes and olives than any other region in Italy, while the fertile volcanic soil around Vesuvius and Etna is ideal for growing plump vegetables, juicy fruits, and vines. Naples is the birthplace of the pizza, and the region of Campania also produces the best buffalo mozzarella in the country.

CAMPANIA

Naples is famous for pizza, but it's also the home of the tomato-based pasta sauce. Especially prized are the distinctive long, tapered tomatoes from San Marzano in Salerno. The tradition of combining mozzarella and tomato originates here. Pasta is generally tubular (in the north it tends to be ribbonlike). Other staple Campanian ingredients are olive oil, garlic, basil, chilies, and lemons. Excellent seafood includes octopus and squid, anchovies, mussels, and clams, most of which are simply prepared using lemon, garlic, and pepper. Lamb, kid, and buffalo are the most popular meats. There is also a long tradition of making pastries and ice cream.

PUGLIA

This region is responsible for producing 80 percent of Italy's pasta, as well as being the source of most of the country's fish. As in the rest of Southern Italy, meats such as poultry, pork, and kid are often roasted over aromatic herbs. The distinctive local ear-shaped pasta, orecchiette, is popular, and fruits and vegetables,

Display of the superb seafood caught along the coastline of the south

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALTIES

Some of Italy's classic sauces originated in the south, such as the powerful puttanesca with tomatoes, anchovies, chili, capers, and olives. Along the Campanian coast, zuppa di cozze (mussels in hot pepper sauce) is a specialty. Octopus is particularly good served in dishes such as polpo alla luciana where it is gently cooked in tomatoes and olive oil with parsley and garlic. Orecchiette con cime di rapa (ear-shaped pasta with turnip tops) is a signature dish from Puglia, as is agnello allo squero – lamb, spit-roasted over a fire scented with thyme and herbs. For those with a sweet tooth, mouthwatering cassata Siciliana is a rich sponge cake layered with ricotta cheese, liqueur, candied fruits, and pistachio nuts.

Figs

Maccheroncini con le sarde
Sicilian macaroni with sardines, fennel, pine nuts, raisins, breadcrumbs, and saffron.

Tresses of vine-ripened tomatoes hanging on a southern market stall especially figs and quinces, are abundant.

A bounty of fish and shellfish is caught along the 250-mile (400-km) coastline. As well as mozzarella, other good cheeses include ricotta, goat's, and smoked cheeses.

SICILY

The island's long list of invasions is reflected in its cuisine. Greek colonists in the 8th century BC were amazed at the fertility of the volcanic soil. Rice was introduced to the area by the Arabs, while the influence of North African cuisine is shown in cuscusu (couscous) and other Arab flavors that appear in sweet and spicy dishes.

The lamb and pork raised in mountain pastures and oak forests is exceptional.

Fish is excellent, especially sardines, tuna, anchovies, and swordfish. Vegetables are plump and delicious and eggplants (aubergines) are a firm favorite. Sheep's milk ricotta cheese features in many delicious pastries

Newly harvested olives, ready to be pressed into superb olive oil and puddings, such as the sinfully rich Sicilian cassata.

OTHER REGIONS

Mountainous Abruzzo and Molise are good sheep-rearing territory, so lamb is a specialty here, as is guitar-shaped pasta (maccheroni alla chitarra). Food in Calabria and Basilicata is strong on spices, especially chili peppers, which are considered a cure-all. Sardinia bakes wafer-thin unleavened bread – carta da musica (music paper). Honey, wild boar ham, and thrushes are popular, as is torrone, a delicious almond nougat.

ON THE MENU

Arancini Sicilian rice balls, usually stuffed with a meat, cheese, or vegetable filling.

Caciocavallo Spun cow's milk cheese, especially good from Avellino in Campania.

Insalata caprese Salad from Campania with mozzarella, tomato, basil, olives, and oregano.

Maccheroni di fuoco Pasta dish from Basilicata with large quantities of garlic and chili.

Seadas A kind of doughnut from Sardinia, fried and covered with honey.

Soppressata A spicy, dry-cured salami from Calabria.

Pizza Napoletana This thin-crust pizza is topped simply with tomato, garlic, oregano, basil, and anchovies.

Pesce spada In Campania, Puglia, Calabria, and Sicily, swordfish steak is grilled with lemon and oregano.

Sfogliatella Paper-thin layers of pastry ooze with butter, sugar, cinnamon, orange peel, and ricotta.

Understanding the Architecture of Southern Italy

The Romanesque style of southern Italy owes much to the Normans, who in the 11th century brought from France both form and style in architecture and sculpture. In the southeast, the style has hefty Byzantine overtones; in Sicily it is characterized by strong traditional Islamic motifs and a love of rich color, pattern, and ornamentation. These elements surface later in Sicily's Baroque style and are allied to a dynamism that originates in the Baroque of Rome – though in Sicily it is more vivacious. Neapolitan Baroque is more sophisticated and displays a greater interest in the creative use of space.

BYZANTINE AND ROMANESQUE FEATURES

Cefalù, begun in 1131 by Roger II, is one of Sicily's great Norman cathedrals (see p535). Its west front exhibits many northern Romanesque features, such as the massive towers.

Christ Pantocrator, a Byzantine apse mosaic (c.1132), adorns the Cappella Palatina (see p526).

The east end of the Norman cathedral of Monreale, founded in 1172 by William II, is built of multicolored materials with interlacing arches (see pp530–31).

BAROQUE FEATURES

Caserta's Palazzo Reale, a sumptuous royal palace begun by Charles III in 1752, is characterized by its monumental scale (see p496). The richly decorated interior is prefaced by several huge entrances and impressive staircases offering views. The enormous building was designed by Luigi Vanvitelli.

Giacomo Serpotta's stucco reliefs (c.1690) in Palermo's Oratorio di Santa Zita illustrate Sicilians' love of exuberant decoration (see p529).

WHERE TO SEE THE ARCHITECTURE

The best places to see Romanesque architecture are Puglia and the cathedral cities of northwestern Sicily. Puglia's best churches are those at Trani (see p509) and nearby Canosa, Molfetta, and Bitonto; Ruvo di Puglia (p510), San Leonardo di Siponto on the Gargano Peninsula, and Martina Franca, near Alberobello. The Baroque style of the south is epitomized by the villas, palaces,

The Duomo portal in Ruvo di Puglia and churches of Naples and Sicily, and by the deeply encrusted ornamentation found on church facades in Lecce (pp512–13), in Puglia. In Sicily, the Baroque of Palermo (pp526–7), Bagheria (p532), Noto, Modica, Ragusa (p543), and Siracusa (pp542–3) is well known. Less so are churches at Piazza Armerina (p537), Trapani (p532), Palazzolo Acreide, close to Siracusa, and Acireale, near Catania.

Bari's Basilica di San Nicola (founded 1087) was the model for subsequent churches in Puglia (see p510). Based on Norman architecture, its facade is flanked by towers and divided vertically into three, reflecting the tripartite nature of its plan.

The facade of Troia cathedral (1093–1125) owes its design to Pisan architecture and its rich ornamentation to Byzantine and Arab models (see pp508–9).

The facade of Siracusa's Duomo, begun in 1728 by Andrea Palma, is animated by broken or curved elements (see pp542–3).

San Giorgio in Ragusa (1744) has a facade by Gagliardi with layers of ornamentation culminating in the tower (see p543).

Lecce's Chiesa del Rosario (begun 1691) was built by Lo Zingarello of soft local sandstone in the Lecce Baroque style of profuse carving (see pp512–13).

The Ancient Greeks in Southern Italy

Some of the best ruins of the ancient Greek world are in Southern Italy. Syracuse, Selinunte, Segesta, and Gela are among the better known Sicilian sites while those on the mainland include Crotone, Locri, and Paestum. Magna Graecia is the collective name given to these scattered colonies of ancient Greece, the earliest of which were founded in the Naples area in the 11th century BC. Many great figures of the age – including Pythagoras, Archimedes, and Aeschylus – lived in these far-flung settlements, and it was here that the ancient winemaker's art flourished. Artifacts from this age are exhibited in the excellent archaeological museums of Naples, Syracuse, and Taranto.

Ancient Herakleia (Herculaneum) was named after its patron deity, the mighty Hercules. It was buried by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius in AD 79 (see p495).

Poseidonia (today's Paestum), was the city of Poseidon, god of the sea. Its ruins, dating from the 6th century BC, include the bulks of two of the finest Doric temples in Europe (see pp498-9).

Mount Etna was believed to be the forge of Hephaistos (Vulcan) – god of fire – and the Cyclops, the one-eyed giant (see p539).

Eryx, founder of the town, was the son of Aphrodite and Poseidon.

Egesta (built 426–416 BC) was colonized by the Elymians, who may have originated at Troy. Among the ruins of this town are a half-completed temple and a theater (see p534). Ancient Greeks used theatres for plays and cultural entertainment rather than combat.

Tyndaris was one of the last Greek cities founded on Sicily.

The legendary founder of Agrigento was Daedalus, who created wings for himself and his son Icarus so they could fly.

Gela was prosperous under the rule of Hippocrates in the 5th century BC.

Aeschylus, the dramatist, died in Gela in 456. Considered the father of Greek tragedy, his plays include Seven Against Thebes, Women of Aetna, and Prometheus Bound.

Metapontion (Metapontum) was home to Pythagoras after his expulsion from Crotone. Its ruins include Doric temples, the Tavole Palatine, and a theater (see p519).

Taras was home to the philosopher and scientist Archytas and to Aristoxenes, author of the earliest treatise on music.

Another threat were the Sirens, who lured voyagers onto rocks with their singing. Odysseus is seen here tied to a mast, so he can bear their song, but resist its call.

DEMETER AND PERSEPHONE

The complex web of Greek mythology was part of the daily life of the ancients. Enna was once the seat of the cult of Demeter, the earth goddess, and in 480 BC a temple was erected there in her honor. According to the legend, Persephone, the daughter of Demeter and Zeus, was abducted in the nearby fields by Hades who carried her off into the Underworld. Demeter then left Olympus and wandered the world searching in vain for her daughter. Discovering that Zeus had allowed the abduction to happen, Demeter put a blight on Sicily: it would remain barren until Persephone returned. Finally Hades allowed her return from the Underworld, but only for a few months of each year – from spring to fall. Demeter, satisfied with the result, ensured that Sicily became the most fertile place on earth.

NAPLES AND CAMPANIA

The capital of Campania, Naples is one of the few European cities of the ancient world that has never been completely extinguished. Founded by Greeks, it was embellished and enlarged by the Romans and in subsequent centuries was the much-prized booty of foreign invaders and imperialists – most prominently the Normans, the Hohenstaufen, the French, and the Spanish.

Naples today is a chaotic yet spectacular metropolis sprawling noisily and dirtily around the edge of the Bay of Naples. To one side is Mount Vesuvius; facing from the sea are the islands of Capri, Ischia, and Procida. Pompeii and Herculaneum, lying in the shadow of the volcano that destroyed them, contain the most revealing Roman ruins in Italy.

For centuries Naples dominated the Italian south, or Mezzogiorno (land of the midday sun). Unemployment, poverty, and crime are a problem – the Camorra is as deep-seated here as the Mafia is in Sicily – but there is also an attractive, rude ebullience to the city.

The ancient history of Campania is linked to the Etruscans and the Greeks, whose massive ruins can be seen at Paestum. Next came a time of great prosperity under the Romans; archaeological evidence of this still exists at Benevento, Santa Maria Capua Vetere, and Pozzuoli.

The hinterland, with its rich, well-cultivated plains, is eclipsed by the Amalfi coastline with its breathtaking views and the dramatic seaboard of the Cilento. The mountainous interior, remote and unvisited, contains small towns that were settled by the Greeks, developed by the Romans and often abandoned in the wake of malaria and Saracen attacks.

Exploring Naples and Campania

The main center from which to explore Campania is the city of Naples (Napoli). To the north, verdant plains sweep down to Santa Maria Capua Vetere. To the east, the mountainous province of Benevento overlooks the valley, while earthquake-ravaged Avellino and its province lurk on a plain beyond Vesuvius. The Campi Flegrei area, west of Naples, is famous for the Roman ruins at Cuma. Farther south is the splendid, rugged Amalfi Coast. Clean, sandy beaches lie beyond the tip of the Sorrentine Peninsula and along the Cilento coast as well as on Capri, Ischia, and Procida in the Gulf of Naples.

GETTING AROUND

Northern Campania is easily accessible from Naples on the A1. The A16 heads east toward Puglia. Salerno and the Cilento can be reached on the A3. Branching off the A3, the S18 heads deep into the Cilento. To reach its coast, take the S267. The villages of the Amalfi coast (Costiera Amalfitana) lie along the scenic S163, accessed via the S145. The islands of Capri, Ischia, and Procida are accessible by boat from Mergellina and the Porto di Massa in Naples, Sorrento, Positano, Amalfi, and Salerno. Campania's main towns and sights are linked by rail. The bus service is comprehensive but infrequent in the interior of the Cilento.

Much of the city's most interesting art and architecture can be found here, including the Museo Archeologico Nazionale and its Roman treasures from Herculaneum and Pompeii.  Built between 1294 and 1323, the Cattedrale di Santa Maria Assunta, or Duomo, lies behind a mostly 19th-century facade. The nave is lined with ancient columns, and there is an array of monuments to past rulers, along with paintings by Lanfranco and Domenichino.

The Duomo houses the relics of San Gennaro, Naples' patron saint (martyred AD 305). The Cappella San Gennaro holds phials of his congealed blood, which miraculously liquefies three times a year (the Saturday before the first Sunday in May, Sep 19, and Dec 16). The Cappella Carafa, a Renaissance masterwork built from 1497 to 1506, contains the saint's tomb.

Accessible from the Duomo's north aisle is the Cappella di Santa Restituta, founded in the 4th century on the site of a former temple of Apollo and rebuilt in the 1300s. It has ceiling paintings by Luca Giordano (1632-1705) and a 5th-century baptistry. The nearby Museo del Tesoro di San Gennaro (Tel: 081 29 49 80) exhibits a fine range of gold, silverware, jewels, statues, and art.

This tiny 16th-century chapel is the burial sepulcher of the princes of Sangro di Sansevero. Featuring both Christian and Masonic symbolism, the chapel has an unusual character.

Remarkable 18th-century sculpture fills the chapel. Antonio Corradini's ironic Modesty is a voluptuous female, carefully veiled. The Resurrection of the Prince, by an unknown artist, is mirrored by that of Christ, above the altar. Giuseppe Sammartino's The Dead Christ is an alabaster figure beneath a marble veil, and is a work of breathtaking technical virtuosity.

Prince Raimondo, an 18th-century alchemist, is associated with the chapel. He performed gruesome experiments on human bodies, for which he was excommunicated. The results of some of his experiments can be seen in the crypt.

Exploring Central Naples

The part of Santa Lucia bordered by Via Duomo to the east, Via Tribunali to the north, Via Toledo (Roma) to the west, and the water to the south, is the old heart of Naples. Especially rich in 14th- and 15th-century churches, the area offers visitors an abundance of sights.

This mainly 14th-century Franciscan church (with an 18th-century facade) was built during the reign of Robert the Wise of Anjou. The storyteller Giovanni Boccaccio (1313–75) reputedly based the character Fiammetta on King Robert's daughter Maria, whom he saw here on Easter Eve, 1334. For Naples, San Lorenzo Maggiore is a rare Gothic edifice. Its nave and the apse ambulatory have a magnificent period simplicity. The church houses medieval tombs including the Gothic tomb of Catherine of Austria, who died in 1323, by a pupil of Giovanni Pisano. Excavations in the monastic cloister, where the lyric poet and scholar Petrarch (see p159) once stayed, have found the remains of a Roman basilica. There are also important Greek and medieval excavations.

Benedictine nuns still preside over this church. The convent attached to it earned a reputation for luxury since the nuns, traditionally from noble families, were accustomed to lavish living, which continued here.

The sumptuous Baroque interior of the church sports frescoes by Luca Giordano. The

This 14th-century church contains a fine work of Renaissance sculpture: the tomb of Cardinal Rinaldo Brancaccio. Designed by Michelozzo, it was sculpted in Pisa, and then shipped to Naples upon completion in 1428. Donatello reputedly carved the right-hand angel drawing back the curtain, the shallow relief Assumption, and the cardinal's head.

This Gothic church (1289–1324) contains some of the finest Renaissance monuments and sculpture in Naples. The tomb slab of John of Durazzo (died 1335), by Tino da Camaino, is in the south transept. In the sacristy are the Apotheosis of Faith ceiling frescoes by Solimena (18th-century). The choir features a paschal candlestick (1585) supported by figures by da Camaino. The Cappellone del Crocifisso contains a medieval painting of the Crucifixion, which supposedly spoke to St. Thomas Aquinas. The grand Brancaccio tomb by Jacopo della Pila (1492) is in the Chiesa Antica.

Calabria (died 1328), is by Tino da Camaino, and the tomb of Charles' wife, Mary of Valois (died 1331) is by da Camaino and his followers. The Cappella Mastrogiudice contains an Annunciation panel by Florentine sculptor Benedetto da Maiano (1489) and the Cappella Piccolomini contains Antonio Rossellino's monument (c.1475) to Maria d'Aragona (completed by da Maiano). The Cappella del Santo Sepolcro houses a Pietà by Guido Mazzoni (1492). Its eight terracotta figures are considered life-size portraits of the artist's contemporaries. The old Sacristy, frescoed by Vasari (1544), has inlaid stalls by Giovanni da Verona (1510).

Naples: Museo Archeologico Nazionale

This building, housing one of the world's most important archaeological museums, started life in the late 1500s as the home of the royal cavalry and was rebuilt in the early 17th century as the seat of Naples university. In 1777, when Ferdinand IV transferred the university to the former monastery of Gesù Vecchio, the building was again adapted to house the Real Museo Borbonico and library. In 1860 it became public property. The 1980 earthquake caused much damage to the collections. Major restoration and reorganization of exhibits continue but most areas of the museum are open on Sundays.

Museo Civico ☐ Mon–Sat. 🗺️ Also known as the Maschio Angioino, this Angevin fortress was built for Charles of Anjou in 1279–82. However, apart from the squat towers and the Cappella Palatina (with Francesco Laurana's Madonna of 1474 above the portal), most of the structure is Aragonese.

The castle was the main royal residence. In the Sala dei Baroni, Ferdinand I of Aragon brutally suppressed the ring-leaders of the Barons' Revolt of 1486. The Aragonese were capable of violence, but they were also patrons of the arts.

The triumphal arch of the castle's entrance (begun 1454) is theirs. Commemorating Alfonso of Aragon's entry to Naples in 1443, this ingenious application of the ancient triumphal arch design was worked on, at least in part, by Laurana. The original bronze doors by Guillaume le Moine (1468) are kept in the Palazzo Reale. Part of the building houses the Museo Civico.

Pompeii 2

An earthquake in AD 62, which shook Pompeii and damaged many buildings, was merely a prelude to the tragic day in AD 79 when Mount Vesuvius erupted, burying the town in 20 ft (6 m) of pumice and ash. Although it was discovered in the 16th century, serious excavation began only in 1748, revealing a city petrified in time. In some buildings paintings and sculpture have survived, and graffiti is still visible on street walls.

VESUVIUS AND THE CAMPANIAN TOWNS

Nearly 2,000 years after the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, the Roman towns in its shadow are still being released from the petrification that engulfed them. Both Pompeii and Stabiae (Castellammare di Stabia), to the southeast of Naples and the volcano, were smothered by hot ash and pumice-stone blown there by the wind. The roofs of the buildings collapsed under the weight of the volcanic debris. To the west, Herculaneum (Ercolano) vanished under a sea of mud.

A large number of its buildings have survived, their roofs intact, and many domestic items were preserved by the mud. In all, about 2,000 Pompeians perished but few, if any, of the residents of Herculaneum died.

In AD 79 Pliny the Elder, the Roman soldier, writer and naturalist, was the commander of a fleet stationed off Misenum (present-day Miseno, west of Naples) and with his nephew Pliny the Younger observed the impending eruption from afar. Eager to see this natural catastrophe closer to hand, Pliny the Elder proceeded to Stabiae, but was overcome by fumes and died. Based on reports by survivors, Pliny the Younger related the first hours of the eruption and his uncle's death in detail in two letters to the Roman historian Tacitus.

Much of our knowledge of the daily lives of the ancient Romans derives from the excavations of Pompeii and Herculaneum. Most of the artifacts from them as well as Stabiae are now in Naples' Museo Archeologico Nazionale (see pp490-91),

This town boasts a 1st-century AD Roman amphitheater, once Italy's largest after the Colosseum, with well-preserved tunnels beneath it. The town occupies the site of ancient Capua, an Etruscan city and then a flourishing center during the Roman Empire. It was the scene of the revolt of the gladiators, led by Spartacus in 73 BC. The on-site Gladiator Museum recreates the history of the gladiators. Nearby is a Mithraeum (2nd–3rd century) with well-preserved frescoes. Benevento, set in a lonely, mountainous province, is home to one of southern Italy's most interesting ancient Roman monuments: the Arch of Trajan on Via Traiano. The Roman city, Beneventum, was an important center. It stood at the end of the first extension of the Via Appia from Capua, and the Arch was erected across the old road in honor of Trajan. Built from AD 114–166 of marble, it is extremely well preserved. The relief sculpture adorning it – scenes from the life of Trajan and mythological subjects – is in excellent condition.

Elsewhere, evidence of the Romans is to be found in the ruined Roman theater, built during Hadrian's reign, and in the Museo del Sannio, which contains artifacts from the region, from ancient Greek finds to modern art.

During World War II, the city stood directly in the way of the Allied advance from the south. It was heavily bombed, hence its largely modern appearance today. The Duomo, a 13th-century building reconstructed after the war, has a sculpted facade that, though badly damaged, has since been restored. The remains of its Byzantine bronze doors are within. The most enchanting route in Campania is that skirting the southern flank of Sorrento's peninsula: the Amalfi Coast (Costiera Amalfitana). Popular pleasures here include dining on grilled fish and sipping Lacrima Christi from the vineyards on the slopes of Vesuvius, beach-hopping, and trips to coastal summits to admire the breathtaking views.

From Sorrento, a well-developed holiday resort, the road winds down to Positano, a village clambering down a vertiginous slope to the sea.

The small town of Atrani on the Amalfi Coast

A top spot for the jet set, it is nonetheless a good place to swim, or to catch the hydrofoils or ferry to Capri. Farther on, Praiano is just as fashionable.

Amalfi is the coast's largest town and a popular resort. It was a maritime power before being subdued in 1131 by King Roger of Naples. The world's oldest maritime code, the Tavole Amalfitane, originated here. The 13th-century Chiostro del Paradiso flanks the Duomo, a magnificent 9th-century structure fronted by a rich 13th-century facade, and facing the town from the top of a long flight of steps. The style is Lombard-Norman, though the cloisters have a Saracenic-inspired appearance.

Ravello has the best views on this coast, the prime vantage points being the gardens of Villa Cimbrone and Villa Rufolo. Views from the latter provided inspiration for Wagner's Parsifal. The 11th-century Duomo has entrance doors by Barisano da Trani (1179) and an ornate 13th-century ambo (pulpit) held aloft by six spiral columns. The chapel of San Pantaleone contains the blood of its 4th-century namesake, which liquefies annually in May and August.

Beyond Atrani, the ruins of a Roman villa at Minori show that this coastline has always been a popular vacation spot.

Salerno is a big, busy port. The Allies landed here in 1943, leaving in their wake a much-damaged city. Once famous for its School of Medicine (12th century), it is visited today for its Duomo, an 11th-century structure built on an earlier foundation. Its best feature is the Atrium, whose columns came from nearby Paestum. In the crypt is the tomb of St. Matthew, brought here in 954.

The Museo Diocesano is home to most of the cathedral treasures, including an 11th-century ivory altar-front called the Paliotto. Before wandering off down the bustling Corso Vittorio Emanuele, visit the Museo Provinciale for local archaeological finds.

Environ: The Cilento is a mountainous region south of Salerno with a remote interior and a lovely, quiet coastline that is only slightly more populous. Among the towns along the coast, Agropoli is a busy little seaside resort 25 miles (42 km) south of Salerno. Outside Castellammare di Stabia, a farther 17 miles (28 km) to the southeast, are the ruins of the Greek town of Elea (founded 6th century BC), once famous for its school of philosophy. It was much visited by the Romans – Cicero was here and Horace came on his doctor's orders to undergo a treatment of sea

Capri's reputation as a sybaritic paradise is nearly eclipsed by its notoriety as a tourist trap. However, the views are unmarred by the throng.

The home of emperors, seat of monasteries, and place of exile, its fortunes changed during the 19th century when English and German expatriates discovered its charms. Today it barely has an "off season"; farmers run little hotels, and fishermen rent pleasure boats. Capri enjoys its well-deserved reputation as a Garden of Eden.

Paestum has three massive Doric temples in an excellent state of repair: the Basilica or Temple of Hera I (mid-6th century BC); the Temple of Neptune (5th century BC), the largest and most complete at Paestum; and the Temple of Ceres, thought to date between its two neighbors.

Ischia is the biggest island in the Bay of Naples and, with its beach resorts, thermal springs, and therapeutic mud baths, it is nearly as popular as Capri. Ferries dock at Ischia Porto, the harbor and modern part of the main town, Ischia. Ischia Ponte, the older part, is a short walk away. The northern and western shores are developed; the southern flank of the island is the quietest. Here, the village of Sant'Angelo is dominated by a long-extinct volcano, Monte Epomeo, whose summit of 2,585 ft (788 m) offers terrific views across the bay. Also worth a visit are the gardens of La Mortella in Forio.

The tiny, picturesque island of Procida is less visited and very tranquil. The swimming is good at Chiaiolella and, as at Ischia, there are inexpensive places to stay. The main town, also called Procida, is home to the main ferry port – the Marina Grande.

ABRUZZO, MOLISE, AND PUGLIA

Puglia is the “heel” of the Italian boot, the Gargano Peninsula is its “spur,” and Abruzzo and Molise together form the “ankle.” Hugging the southeastern seaboard of Italy and looking toward the Balkans, the mountainous regions of Abruzzo and Molise, united until 1963, differ considerably from Puglia, the richest of the three.

Abruzzo and Molise are sparsely populated, quiet places where the wild landscape exerts a strong influence. Settled by various Apennine tribes in the Middle Bronze Age, the areas were later subdued by the Romans, united under the Normans in the 12th century and, thereafter, ruled by a succession of dynasties based in Naples. Abruzzo, dominated by the Apennines, is a brooding, introspective land of shepherds. Vertiginous drops preface the ascent to ramshackle hilltowns clinging to the sides of high mountains, semi-abandoned and poor. Molise's landscape is less dramatic. Legends of witches persist in both regions, as do strange fertility rites and rituals celebrating the changing seasons.

Puglia's advantage over its poverty stricken neighbors is that it is nearly all flat and highly fertile. It produces the largest amount of olive oil in Italy, and its big cities – Lecce, Bari, and Taranto – are lively commercial centers. The region experienced a long-lasting Greek influence, though the golden age of Puglia's past was under the rule of the Normans, followed by Frederick II who, between his return from Germany as emperor in 1220 and his death 30 years later, only spent four years away from here.

Puglia has glorious architecture, particularly in the churches and castles of the north. The curious trulli houses in central Puglia, the florid Baroque of Lecce, and the Levantine atmosphere of its merchant cities complete the picture of an ancient land subject to more influences from outside the Italian peninsula than from within it.

Exploring Abruzzo, Molise, and Puglia

Dominated by the Apennine mountain range, the hinterland of Abruzzo and Molise forms one of Italy's last wildernesses. At 9,554 ft (2,912 m), the highest peak is the Gran Sasso. Parts of Abruzzo are covered in tracts of forest, while Molise features high plains, gentle valleys, and lonely peaks. The coastline of the Gargano Peninsula in Puglia (Apulia) is packed with cliffs, caves, and islets. Reaching south is the fertile Tavoliere plain, and farther south a series of upland plateaus (the Murge) descends toward the dry Salentine Peninsula and the Adriatic.

GETTING AROUND

Northern Abruzzo is well served by the A24 and A25–E80, and the S17 traverses the interior of Abruzzo and Molise. The coastal highway (A14–E55) heads south through Abruzzo and Molise into Puglia. Beyond Foggia, it joins the S16 to Taranto. Brindisi, the main port for Greece, is accessible from Bari or Taranto. The roads throughout are good. Train and bus services go to the major centers, with buses only to more remote parts.

Abruzzo's capital lies at the foot of the Gran Sasso, at 9,554 ft (2,912 m) the highest point of the Italian mainland south of the Alps. Its ancient streets are peppered with churches. In April 2009 an earthquake, measuring 6.3 in magnitude, struck central Italy with the epicenter close to L'Aquila. Many of the historical churches and buildings described below have been seriously damaged by the quake. Restoration work is being carried out on many buildings so do check with the tourist office before visiting.

The domed Santa Giusta (1257), off Via Santa Giusta, has a rose window and a Martyrdom of St. Stephen (1615) by Cavalier d'Arpino. Santa Maria di Paganica, off Via Paganica, has a 14th-century facade and a carved portal. The Duomo (1257) in Piazza del Duomo was rebuilt in the 18th century. The massive church of Santa Maria di Collemaggio, on Piazza di Collemaggio, has a facade of pink and white stone. It was built in the 13th century by Pietro dal Morrone, who later became Pope Celestine V.

San Bernardino, on Via di San Bernardino, houses the tomb (1505) of San Bernardino of Siena. The church (built 1454–1472), has a facade (1527) by Cola dell'Amatrice and an 18th-century carved ceiling by Ferdinando Mosca. The bell tower collapsed in the 2009 earthquake. The second chapel in the south aisle has an altarpiece by Andrea della Robbia, the Renaissance artist.

The medieval Fontanelle delle Novantanove Cannelle at the end of Via San Iacopo is a fountain commemorating the 99 villages that Frederick II supposedly united when he founded L'Aquila in 1240.

The prettiest in a series of small hill-towns in Abruzzo, Atri is a warren of stepped streets, alleys, and passages bounded by mostly brick and stone churches and houses. The 13th-century Duomo occupies the site of a Roman bath; the crypt was once a swimming pool, and fragments of the original mosaic floor are visible in the apse. Also in the apse is Andrea Delitio's beautiful 15th-century fresco cycle, in which he combined landscape and architecture in a variety of scenes from the Old and New Testaments. The cloister has views of the 15th-century brick campanile.

Environs: South of Atri is the hilltown of Penne. Street by street it is remarkably homogeneous with its buildings of reddish brick, which give the town a wonderful, warm glow. East of Atri, Loreto Aprutino is known for the Last Judgment fresco (14th-century) in Santa Maria in Piano.

This town is famous as the home of both Ovid and confetti (sugared almonds). After a wedding celebration, guests are given confetti as a good luck token. Sulmona is filled with ancient buildings, especially along medieval Via dell'Ospedale. The Palazzo dell'Annunziata was founded in 1320 and combines Gothic and Renaissance styles. The Museo Civico holds a collection of local antiquities, costumes, paintings, and the work of goldsmiths formerly housed in the palace. The adjacent church of the Annunziata, with a Baroque facade, was rebuilt in the 18th century. Behind the church are 1 BC–AD 2 ruins of a Roman wall.

At the end of Viale Matteotti is the cathedral of San Panfilo, built over a Roman temple.

San Francesco della Scarpa, in Piazza del Carmine, has a 13th-century portal. Winding past it to the Fontana del Vecchio (1474) is an aqueduct that once fueled local industry.

Environ: East of Sulmona is the Maiella National Park, a massif of 61 peaks and heavily forested valleys offering walking, birdwatching, climbing, and skiing. To the west, Cocullo hosts the May Processione dei Serpari (Festival of Snakes) in which a statue of the patron saint, Domenico Abate, is draped with snakes and carried through the town. In the 11th century he is said to have rid the area of venomous snakes.

OVID, THE LATIN POET

Born in 43 BC, Ovid (Publius Ovidius Naso) was Sulmona's most illustrious son. Not much survives here to remind you of his presence, however, apart from a Corso Ovidio, a 20th-century statue of him in Piazza XX Settembre, and, just outside the town, a ruin traditionally known as Ovid's Villa.

Known as one of the greatest poets of Classical Rome, his subjects included love (Ars Amatoria) and mythology (Metamorphoses). In AD 8 he was banished into exile on the Black Sea, the far edge of the Roman Empire, after being implicated in a scandal of adultery with Julia, the granddaughter of Emperor Augustus (see pp48–9). Ovid continued to write of his hardships, and died in exile in AD 17.

Wonderfully well preserved, this medieval hill-town set in beautiful, wild countryside is one of Abruzzo's most popular attractions. This vast park, inaugurated in 1922, has a rich landscape of high peaks, rivers, lakes and forests, and is one of Europe's most important nature reserves. Part of a royal hunting reserve until 1877, today it provides refuge for 66 species of mammal, 52 types of reptile, amphibian, and fish, and 230 species of bird, including the golden eagle and white-backed woodpecker, as well as over 2,000 varieties of flora. The park offers an extensive network of paths, and there are opportunities for riding, trekking, and climbing.

Young Chamois

Dense forests of beech and maple hide the Apennine chamois. There are also red and roe deer in the park.

Forests of beech and black pine provide beautiful scenery.

Pescasseroli

This town is a major center for information on the area. It has good tourist facilities and a small zoological garden with animals living in the region, such as bears and wolves.

Apennine Wolves

The park guarantees protection for the Apennine wolf, and about 60 wolves survive here. The chances of seeing one, however, are fairly remote.

Marsican Brown Bear

Once hunted almost to extinction, between 80 and 100 brown bears now roam in the park.

Golden eagles may be seen near the Sangro River.

Large parts of Lanciano's old nucleus remain from the Middle Ages. In the crumbling Civitanova quarter is the 13th-century church of Santa Maria Maggiore, with a magnificent 14th-century portal and a silver processional cross (1422). Also in this area is the now disused San Biagio (begun c.1059), near the 11th-century Porta San Biagio – a rare surviving town gate. The Duomo stands on the remains of a Roman bridge dating from the time of Diocletian. An underground passage links the bridge to the Sanctuary of the Eucharistic Miracle, where a host and wine that turned into live flesh and blood in the 8th century are kept. The Ripa Sacca (Jewish ghetto) was a busy commercial center in the Middle Ages – the period of Lanciano's greatest prosperity. Off the Gargano coast, the Tremiti are the Italian islands least visited by foreigners. San Domino is the largest, with a sandy beach and coves. Julia, granddaughter of Augustus, was exiled here for adultery from AD 8 until her death in AD 28. The poet Ovid was allegedly involved (see p505). Santa Maria a Mare, in San Nicola, the administrative center of the islands, is an abbey-fortress founded in the 8th century. On the northeast edge of town, once a prosperous Roman colony, are the ruins of a Roman amphitheater (closed for renovation). Lucera was rebuilt in the 13th century by Frederick II, who peopled it with 20,000 Sicilian Muslims. It became one of the strongest fortresses in southern Italy, and its castle is one of Puglia's most magnificent. Built in 1233 by Frederick II, and enlarged after 1269, its fortified wall of 2,953 ft (900 m) is interspersed with 24 towers. Of Frederick's original palace, only the base and some vaulting remains.

In 1300 Charles II, who killed most of Lucera's Muslim population, began the Duomo on the site of their main mosque. The high, soaring nave is filled with 15th- and 16th-century frescoes and carvings.

Founded in 1017 as a Byzantine fortress against the Lombards, Troia fell to the Normans in 1066. Until Frederick II destroyed it in 1229, the town had been ruled by a succession of powerful bishops who were responsible for producing many remarkable buildings, including Troia's Duomo (see pp478–9).

Begun in 1093 and constructed over the following 30 years, it exhibits an extraordinary diversity of styles. It successfully blends elements of Lombard, Saracenic, and Byzantine style with that of the Pisan-Romanesque.

Elegant blind arcading distinguishes the Duomo's lower story. The upper sections are characterized by powerfully carved sculpture – projecting lions and bulls. The upper facade displays a rose window with Saracenic-style detailing.

The main entrance, with bronze doors by Oderisio da Beneventano (1119), is dominated by carved capitals and an architrave, both Byzantine in style. Within the Duomo is a Romanesque pulpit (1169).

During the Middle Ages this small, lively whitewashed port of Jewish origin bustled with mercantile activity and was filled with merchants and traders from Genoa, Amalfi, and Pisa. It reached its peak of prosperity under Frederick II.

Today it is visited for its Norman Duomo in Piazza Duomo, built mainly from

The facade of Trani's Duomo

1159 to 1186 over an earlier church whose predecessor, the Ipogei di San Leucio, dates from the 7th century. It is dedicated to St. Nicholas the Pilgrim, a little-remembered miracle worker (died 1094) who was canonized as an act of rivalry against the town of Bari, which possessed the bones of another, more memorable St. Nicholas. The Duomo's most notable external features are its sculptures, particularly surrounding the rose window and the arched window below it, and the entrance portal with bronze doors (1175–9) by Barisano da Trani. The vigor of the interior has been revealed following restoration.

Next to the Duomo is the castle (1233–49) founded by Frederick II. Rebuilt in the 14th and 15th centuries, it is a well-preserved edifice with one wall dropping sheer into the sea.

The 15th-century Gothic-Renaissance Palazzo Caccetta, in Piazza Trieste, is a rare survival. Nearby, on Via Ognissanti, the 12th-century Romanesque church of the Ognissanti, the chapel of the Knights Templar erected in the courtyard of their hospital, is notable for its original portico. Other churches worth a visit are Santa Teresa and the monastery of La Colonna.

Remote in the endless plains near Ruvo di Puglia, Castel del Monte, built in the mid-13th century, out-classes every other castle associated with Frederick II. It is also one of the most sophisticated secular buildings of the Middle Ages. The emperor had broad intellectual interests, and he used his castles as hunting lodges where he could retire from court life with his falcons and books. Inside there are two floors, each with eight rib-vaulted rooms, some still lined with marble. This, and the marble moldings on the entrance and the upper floor, as well as sophisticated lavatory arrangements, mark the castle as a palace.

Roman Barium was simply a commercial center, but the city became the regional capital under the Saracens in 847, and was later the seat of the catapan, the Byzantine governor of southern Italy. Under the Normans, to whom it fell in 1071, Bari became a center of maritime significance. Today it is Puglia's lively capital and an important port with ferries to and from Croatia and Greece.

The Basilica di San Nicola, one of Puglia's first great Norman churches (begun 1087), has a plain exterior with a tall gabled section flanked by towers. The Apulian-Romanesque portal has carving on the door jambs and arch in Arabic, Byzantine, and Classical styles. Beyond the choir screen is a fine 12th-century altar canopy and an episcopal throne (c.11th century). The relics of St. Nicholas – patron saint of the city (and also of Russia and Greece) – are buried in the crypt.

The late 12th-century Apulian-Romanesque Cattedrale is based on San Nicola, with a dome and one surviving tower (the other one collapsed in 1613). The Baroque portals on the facade incorporate 12th-century doorways. The interior has been restored to its medieval simplicity. The canopy over the high altar, the pulpit and the episcopal throne are reconstructions from fragments of the originals. The sacristy, built as a baptistry, is known as the Trulla. The crypt houses the remains of San Sabino, Bari's original patron saint.

The city's castle, founded by Roger II, was adapted by Frederick II in 1233–9. In the vaulted hall is a collection of plaster casts of sculpture and architectural fragments from various Romanesque monuments in the region.

Alberobello 15

Bari. 11,000. to Alberobello & Ostuni. Piazza Ferdinando IV (080 432 51 71). in English, French, and German offered by Trulli e Natura (080 432 38 29). Oct/Nov: Frantoi Aperti (visits to the major olive-pressing factories). www.alberobello.net

The parched landscape of the Murge dei Trulli features olive groves, vineyards, and trulli. Strange circular buildings with conical roofs and domed within, trulli are built from local limestone stacked without using mortar. The walls and openings are generally white-washed, while the stone roof tiles often have religious, pagan, or magical symbols painted on them. The origins of trulli are obscure, though the name is traditionally applied to ancient round tombs found in the Roman countryside. Most trulli are souvenir shops.

Alberobello is a UNESCO World Heritage site and the trulli capital. Here the strange white buildings crowd the narrow streets, and there are trulli restaurants, shops, and even a trulli cathedral.

Environs: The pretty white-washed hilltown of Locorotondo is an important wine center. The elegant streets of Martina Franca are enlivened by Rococo balconies. The spectacular Grotte di Castellana are caves estimated to be 50 million years old.

Little remains of the old city of Taras, founded by Spartans in 708 BC and at its most prosperous in the mid-300s BC. The Museo Archeologico Nazionale, founded in 1887, has artifacts that shed light on the region's history. The museum has since been expanded to allow for a growing collection of historically significant pieces.

Whitewashed and sunbaked trulli in Alberobello

Taranto was heavily bombed in World War II and is garlanded by factories. The picturesque Città Vecchia, an island dividing the Mare Grande from the Mare Piccolo, was the site of the Roman citadel of Tarentum. A lively fish market offering the shellfish for which the city is famous, is housed in an Art Nouveau building. Here, too, is the Duomo. Founded in 1071, it has been the object of subsequent rebuilding. The most interesting features include the catacomb-like crypt, with its sarcophagi and fragmented frescoes, and the antique marble columns of the nave. Behind it is the 11th-century San Domenico Maggiore, which later gained a high double-approach Baroque staircase. The huge castle built by Frederick of Aragon (15th-century) covers the eastern corner of the Città Vecchia. Now a military area, the castle is strictly off limits.

THE TARANTELLA

Italy's lively and graceful folk dance, the Tarantella, grew out of tarantism – the hysteria that appeared in 15th- to 17th-century Italy, and was prevalent in Galatina (see p513). Alleged victims of the tarantula spider's bite could supposedly cure themselves through frenzied dancing which sweated out the poison. The dance is characterized by light, quick steps and a "teasing" flirt. The strange, private ritual takes place annually on June 29 at 6am at the celebrations for the Feast of Saints Peter and Paul in Galatina, the only place on the Salentine Peninsula where tarantism has survived.

Street by Street: Lecce 17

Facade detail,
Santa Croce

Lecce was the site of the Greek Messapi settlement. It became an important center of the Roman Empire, and in the Middle Ages developed a strong tradition of scholarship. Much of the architecture is in the highly decorative Lecce Baroque style, which flourished in the 1600s and earned the city the name of Florence of the South. This style was possible due to the pietra di Lecce, an easily carved stone. Giuseppe Zimbalo (Lo Zingarello) was its greatest master. Lecce is also famed for its papier-mâché workshops.

Chiesa del Rosario

Said to be the finest work by Lo Zingarello (begun 1691), the exterior is ornate and idiosyncratic in its detail.

Porta Rudiae

This 18th-century city gate leads to the suburbs and to the ruins of Roman Rudiae.

★ Palazzo Vescovile and Duomo

The bishop's palace (rebuilt in 1632), the adjoining Duomo by Lo Zingarello (after 1659) and a seminary (1709) enclose the Piazza Duomo.

The Seminary once supplied the Vatican with castrato singers – eunuchs noted for their high voices.

Otranto was one of Republican Rome's leading ports for trade with Asia Minor and Greece, and under the Byzantines was an important foothold of the Eastern Empire in Italy. In 1070 it fell to the Normans. Turks attacked in

The Norman Duomo (founded 1080) on Via Duomo houses the bones of the martyrs. There is a 12th-century mosaic floor and a fine crypt. A castle (1485–

BASILICATA AND CALABRIA

Remote and wild, Basilicata is one of the poorest regions in Italy. It is underdeveloped and undervisited, and rural areas remain unspoiled. Neighboring Calabria has been immortalized in the drawings of Edward Lear who, traveling through on a donkey in 1847, was transfixed by the "horror and magnificence" of its savage landscape.

Today these regions are distinctly separate, but they share a common history and, along with Sicily and Puglia, were part of Magna Graecia. Ancient Metaponto in Basilicata was an important center, as were Crotona and Locri Epizephiri in Calabria. Their ruins evoke an illustrious past.

After the Greeks came the Romans, followed by Basilian monks. These were members of the Greek-Byzantine church who were fleeing their territories which had been invaded by Muslims. Their religious establishments make up a core of interesting monuments, such as the Cattolica at Stilo and Matera, where the monks took refuge in caves.

Many of the historic remains are Norman, but sporadic evidence of Swabian, Angevin, Aragonese, and Spanish occupation still exists.

Centuries of rule by Naples led to the marginalization of Basilicata and Calabria. Nowadays Calabria has an infamous reputation due to the 'ndrangheta, the ferocious first cousin to the Mafia, whose activities are a constant menace. Banditry exists, but the sensible traveler should have little to fear.

Due to emigration, Basilicata and Calabria are sparsely populated and have as much to offer in unspoiled countryside as in historic centers. The vast coastline boasts fine beaches, while the interior features the rugged Aspromonte and Sila mountain ranges.

The remote landscape has kept change at bay. Isolated Pentedattilo, for example, preserves customs of Byzantine origin while around San Giorgio Albanese there live close-knit communities of Albanians, descended from 15th-century refugees.

Exploring Basilicata and Calabria

Mostly upland country, Basilicata (or Lucania, as it is also known) is scattered with Greek ruins (like those at Metaponto), medieval abbeys, and Norman castles (such as Melfi's). Matera, its most interesting city, stands amid an arid lunar landscape of denuded valleys. Calabria is often described as the land between two seas. The lovely beaches and virgin landscape between Tropea and Maratea attract many visitors. The Ionian coast's chief attractions are its Greek ruins, such as Locri Epizephiri, and the hill-towns, such as Stilo and Gerace.

GETTING AROUND

Calabria's Tyrrhenian coast is well served by the A3-E45, a spur of which extends to Potenza in Basilicata. To reach the Ionian coast, it is best to skirt the Aspromonte via the S106-E90 from Reggio to Basilicata. Although the mountains can be crossed, namely on the S280-E848 to Catanzaro, the roads are narrow and pass through isolated countryside. Much of Basilicata is even less accessible, and Matera is more easily reached from Puglia. There are airports at Reggio di Calabria, Lamezia Terme (west of Catanzaro), Crotone, Bari, and Brindisi (Puglia). Trains connect the bigger centers and country buses serve the small towns.

A brooding and now almost deserted medieval town, Melfi (Malfi) is crowned by the castle where Pope Nicholas II conducted Robert Guiscard's investiture in 1059, thus legitimizing the Normans in the south. Melfi later became the Norman capital. Here Frederick II proclaimed his Constitutiones Augustales (1231), which unified his kingdom as a state. In the castle is the Museo Nazionale del Melfese, with its collection of Byzantine jewelry. The Duomo, off Via Vittorio Emanuele, was begun in 1155 by William the Bad but rebuilt in the 18th century. Only the campanile survives.

Venosa was one of the most important Roman colonies around 290 BC, and remains of baths and an amphitheater survive in the archaeological zone along Via Vittorio Emanuele. It was also the birthplace of the Latin poet Horace (65–8 BC) and the site where the Roman general Marcellus died at the hands of Hannibal in 208 BC. Marcellus' reputed tomb is in Via Melfi. For more treasures, visit the Museo Archeologico Nazionale.

The Duomo, also on Via Vittorio Emanuele, and the huge castle in Piazza Umberto I date from the 16th century.

An abbey complex formed by an older, possibly early Christian (5th–6th century) church, La Trinità is backed by an unfinished 11th-century construction, in which Robert Guiscard (died 1085) was buried with his halfbrothers and Alberada, his first wife. Only her tomb has survived.

The Sassi district of Matera

Perched on the edge of a deep ravine, this town consists of the bustling upper district and the silent lower Sassi (caves) district, divided into the Sasso Barisano and the more picturesque Sasso Caveoso. The people of Matera once lived here in dwellings scooped out of the rock. The two parts are odd neighbors, making Matera a truly fascinating city.

For the best overview, walk along the Strada Panoramica dei Sassi and look down into the caves. From the 8th to the 13th centuries, such caves probably provided refuge for monks from the Byzantine Empire. Many chapels, gouged out of the rock, were taken over in the 15th century by peasants. Later, a cave-dwelling Matera evolved and by the 18th century some buildings fronting the caves had become fairly grand mansions and convents. By the 1950s and '60s the Sassi were overtaken by squalor and poverty, and the inhabitants forcibly rehoused. Carlo Levi (1912–75) drew attention to their living conditions in his book Christ Stopped at Eboli, comparing the Sassi to Dante's Inferno. The area was made a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1993.

Of the 120 chiese rupestri (rock-cut churches, www.parcormurgia.it) in the Sassi and the Agri district outside the town, Santa Maria di Idris in the Monte Errone area and Santa Lucia alle Malve in the Albanian quarter both contain 13th-century frescoes.

The Museo della Tortura (torture), in Via San Biagio, has exhibits dating back to the time of the Inquisition, while the Museo Nazionale Ridola provides a background to Matera and the Sassi. On display are artifacts from many Neolithic trench villages, necropolises, and other ancient sites.

The Apulian-Romanesque Duomo (13th century) in Piazza Duomo has interesting sculpture and a 12th-century painting of the Madonna della Bruna, the patroness of Matera. Via Duomo leads toward San Francesco d'Assisi (13th century with Baroque overlay). Other churches to visit are San Domenico and San Giovanni Battista on Via San Biagio (both 13th century), and the Purgatorio (1770) on Via Ridola. Matera is where Mel Gibson's The Passion of the Christ (2004) was largely filmed.

Founded in the 7th century BC, ancient Metapontum was once the center of a wealthy city-state with a philosophical tradition expounded by Pythagoras, who settled here after his expulsion from Croton. Its ruins include the Tavole Palatine (6th century BC) at the Bradano River bridge, 15 columns that are part of a Doric temple, probably dedicated to Hera. The Museo Nazionale di Metaponto displays artifacts from the site. The ruins of a theater and the Doric Temple of Apollo Lycius

This pretty hill-town was one of the main centers of Byzantine civilization in Calabria. It assumed power when Reggio di Calabria fell to the Saracens (9th–11th centuries). The Museo Diocesano houses the Codex Purpureus Rossanensis, a rare 6th-century Greek Gospel with silver lettering and splendidly detailed miniatures.

The Baroque cathedral contains the Madonna Acheropita fresco, a much venerated Byzantine relic of the 8th or 9th century.

Environs: On a hilltop to the southeast is the five-domed Greek church of San Marco (10th century). The 12th-century Panaghia, another Greek church, lies off Via Archivescovado. Both contain fragments of early frescoes.

Santa Maria del Patirion, on a hilltop 11 miles (18 km) to the west, is magnificently adorned with colored brickwork, tile, and stone. It offers great views over the Piana di Sibari (Plain of Sibari), the alleged location of the fabled city of Sybaris, destroyed in 510 BC. The church has remained virtually unaltered since it was built around 1095.

Tropea 8

Vibo Valentia. 7,000. Piazza Ercole (0963 614 75). Sat. www.tropea.biz

One of the most picturesque towns on Calabria's largely built-up Tyrrhenian coast, Tropea offers superb views of the sea and beaches. The old town hangs on to a cliffside facing a large rock, formerly an island. The rock is topped by Santa Maria dell'Isola, a former medieval Benedictine sanctuary. The cathedral at the end of Via Roma is of Norman origin, although it has been rebuilt several times. Inside is a 14th-century painting, the Madonna di Romanina, by an unknown artist.

Casa Trampo (14th century) and Palazzo Cesareo (early 20th century) in Vicolo Manco are the most interesting of the small palaces in Tropea. The latter has a splendid balcony adorned with carvings.

Below the town are pretty beaches and a good choice of places to eat. Other seaside towns to visit are Scilla to the south, and Pizzo to the north.

Stilo 9

Reggio di Calabria. 3,000. Town hall (0964 77 60 06). Tue.

A short distance from the coast, Stilo is an earthquake-damaged town clamped to the side of Monte Consolino.

Standing on a ledge looking out over the olive trees is the Cattolica, which has made Stilo a focus of pilgrimage for lovers of Byzantine architecture. Built in the 10th century by Basilian monks, the brick building with its terra cotta-tiled roof is based on a Greek cross-in-a-square plan. Four antique, mismatched marble columns divide the interior into nine quadrants. The capitals are placed at the base of the columns, instead of on top, to indicate the triumph of Christianity over paganism. The frescoes within, discovered and restored in 1927, date from the 11th century.

The Cattolica dominates the town, but on Via Tommaso Campanella there is a medieval Duomo as well as the 17th-century ruins of the Convent of San Domenico, where the philosopher and Dominican friar Tommaso Campanella (1568–1639) lived. The church of San Francesco, built around 1400, has an ornate carved wooden altar and a lovely 16th-century painting of the Madonna del Borgo (unknown origin). Bivongi, northwest of Stilo, has two churches dedicated to St. John: the Byzantine-Norman San Giovanni Teresiti, and the Norman San Giovanni Vecchio.

Occupying an impregnable crag on the northeastern flank of the Aspromonte, this ancient place was founded by refugees from Locri Epizephiri who fled in the 9th century to escape Saracen attack. Its defensive character is reinforced by the medieval town walls and the remains of the castle.

Apart from the slow pace of life here – where you are as likely to meet a flock of sheep in an alley as a Fiat 500 – the main attraction is Calabria's grandest Duomo. This large structure indicates the significance of Gerace at least up to the time of the Normans. Constructed around the early 12th century, rebuilt in the 13th century and restored in the 18th century, the crypt is its chief treasure. Both crypt and church are simple, adorned by a series of antique colored marble and granite columns probably stolen from the site of ancient Locri Epizephiri. At the end of Via Cavour is 12th-century San Giovannello, part Byzantine and part Norman. Nearby is the Gothic church of San Francesco d'Assisi which contains a Baroque marble altar (1615) and the Pisan-style tomb of Niccolò Ruffo (died 1372), a member of a prominent Calabrian family.

Environs: The vast site of Locri Epizephiri, the first Greek city to have a written code of law (660 BC), was a famous center of the cult of Persephone. There are remains of temples, a theater, and Greek and Roman tombs. The Museo displays a ground plan of the site as well as Greek and Roman votive statues, coins, and sculptural fragments.

One reason to visit Reggio di Calabria, which was heavily rebuilt after a major earthquake in 1908, is the Museo Nazionale della Magna Grecia. It houses a fine collection of artifacts from ancient Rhegion – a Greek city on the site of the present town – and from other Greek sites.

Chief among its treasures are the Greek bronzes, larger-than-life statues of warriors dredged from the sea off Riace Marina in 1972. Statue A (460 BC) is thought to be by Phidias, the Athenian sculptor and chief exponent of the idealizing, Classical style. If true, it is a rare survivor because his works, praised in the highest terms by ancient writers, were hitherto only known to us from Roman copies. Statue B (430 BC) has been attributed to Polyclitus. It is possible that the statues originated from an Athenian shrine at Delphi built as a monument to the victory of Marathon.

SICILY

On a crossroads in the Mediterranean, part of Europe and Africa, yet belonging to neither, Sicily was tramped across by half the ancient civilized world. As conquerors came and went, they left behind a rich and varied cultural deposit. This has resulted in a quirky mixture in almost every aspect of the local vernacular from language, customs, and cooking to art and, most notably, the architecture of the island.

During the 6th and 5th centuries BC, there cannot have been much difference between Athens and the Greek cities of Sicily. Their ruins are among the most spectacular of the ancient Greek world. The Romans took over in the 3rd century BC, followed by Vandals, Ostrogoths, and Byzantines. Not much that is tangible has survived from the days of the Arabs, who ruled from the 9th to 11th centuries, though Palermo's Vucciria is more souk than market. The Norman era, beginning in 1061, spawned brilliant artistic achievements, such as the cathedrals of Monreale and Cefalù, while the eclecticism of that period's architecture is best seen at Santi Pietro e Paolo outside Taormina.

The Sicilian Baroque of the 17th and 18th centuries is just as individual. The palaces and churches of Palermo, reflecting the elaborate ritual of the Spanish Viceregal court, tend towards extravagant display. At Noto, Ragusa, Modica, Siracusa, and Catania the buildings are a useful vehicle for the Sicilians' love of ornamentation, itself a remnant from the island's early fling with the Arab world. The style is an expression of the nature of Sicilians, whose sense of pomp and pageantry is both magnificent and extreme.

Sicily is a curiosity, and the legacy of the past is redolent everywhere. The fact that it is an island has intensified the cultural impact of each successive occupier. They say that today there's less Italian blood in Sicilian veins than there is Phoenician, Greek, Arabic, Norman, Spanish, or French. The resulting mixture – exotic, spicy and highly inflammable – has created a separate nation at the foot of Italy.

Exploring Sicily

The vast coastline of Sicily (Sicilia) provides hundreds of long, sandy beaches, particularly at Taormina and the Golfo di Castellammare by San Vito Lo Capo – part of a large nature reserve. Sicily's varied interior is characterized by remote hill towns and plains punctuated by mountain ranges known for spring flowers and wildlife. Among the most famous sights is Mount Etna, an active volcano whose lava flows over the centuries have fertilized the land, which supports an abundance of walnut trees, citrus groves, and vineyards.

GETTING AROUND

The A19–E932 links Palermo and Catania, the A18–E45 Catania and Messina, and the A20–E90 Palermo and Messina. The west is accessible from Palermo on the A29–E90. Ferry routes run from Messina to Reggio di Calabria, and from Palermo to Genoa or Naples. Between the larger towns, train services are efficient, but for smaller towns the buses are better. Catania, Palermo, and Trapani have international airports.

Palatina

Nestling on the protective flank of Monte Pellegrino with Monte Alfano to the east, Palermo lies in a natural amphitheater called the Conca d'Oro (Golden Shell). The city is an eclectic mix of Oriental and old European influences, and it features architectural styles that range from Arabic to Norman, Baroque, and Art Nouveau. This cultural infusion is unmatched in Italy, making this exotic city an exciting place to explore.

Also called the Palazzo dei Normanni, this site has been the focus of power since the days of Byzantine rule and is now home to Sicily's regional government. The nucleus of the present building was constructed by the Arabs, but after the Norman conquest of the city in 1072, it was enlarged for the Norman court. See the luxurious royal apartments, especially the Sala di Ruggero, and the splendid Cappella Palatina. Built by Roger II (1132–40), this dazzling chapel blends Byzantine, Islamic, and Norman styles. Although begun in 1566, most of the internal decoration of this unique church dates from the 17th and 18th centuries. A powerful example of the Palermitan Baroque, it boasts sculpture, marble inlay, and illusionistic ceiling frescoes (18th century) – by Filippo Randazzo in the nave and by Vito d'Anna in the dome.

The church is flanked by Piazza Pretorio, which is dominated by the huge Mannerist Fontana Pretoria (1544).

Founded in 1184, the Duomo displays many architectural styles. The exterior shows the development of the Gothic style from the 13th-14th centuries. The south porch (1453) is a masterwork of the Catalan style, and at the apse end, sturdy Norman work can be seen through an Islamic-inspired overlay. The dome is 18th century. Within the much-altered interior are the tombs of Sicily's kings. Squeezed into an enclosure by the south porch are the remains of Emperor Frederick II; his wife, Constance of Aragon; his mother, Constance, daughter of Roger II (also entombed here); and his father, Henry VI. The Treasury houses the 12th-century Imperial Diadem of Constance of Aragon, which was removed from her tomb in the 18th century.

Also called Santa Maria dell'Ammiraglio, this church was built around 1140 by George of Antioch, Roger II's admiral. The design derives from Norman and Islamic traditions with mosaics possibly by Greek artisans. In the right aisle, King Roger receives the imperial diadem from Christ; in the left aisle, George of Antioch is portrayed.

A nearby convent, founded by Eloisa Martorana in 1193, was the site where the Sicilian Parliament met in 1295 and decided to hand the crown of Sicily to Frederick of Aragon. The church was presented to the convent in 1433.

Vucciria

Via Roma. ☐ daily.

Nowhere is Palermo's Arabic past more apparent than in this medieval casbah-style market which burrows through the ruinous Loggia district below Via Roma. Merchants, hawkers, shoppers, and pick-pockets crowd an area once the haunt of artisans. The alleys all around are named after their professions, such as silver-smiths, dyers, and keymakers. This busy market, the largest in Palermo, offers the usual market ware from daily objects to junk, as well as a wide selection of fresh fruit, vegetables, fish, and meat.

The interior of this tiny 16th-century chapel displays elegant Baroque decoration by the master of stucco, Giacomo Serpotta. Created around 1720–30, this was his latest and possibly his finest work. Serpotta's technical virtuosity, not to mention the sensory indulgence and whimsical fantasy in evidence here, is remarkable. The altarpiece is the famous Madonna of the

Within, the most interesting feature is Antonello Gagini's bas-relief of Santa Caterina (1528) in the third chapel on the left. Next to the church is a 14th-century cloister that gives access to the Museo del Risorgimento.

Housed in a former monastery of the Filippini, Sicily's most important museum contains sculpture, architectural fragments, and ceramics, bronzes, glassware, jewelry, weapons, and terracottas. The collection is taken from the island's Phoenician, Greek, and Roman sites of antiquity – Tindari, Termini Imerese, Agrigento, Siracusa, Selinunte, and Mozia. The highlights are sculptures from the friezes of the ancient Greek temples at Selinunte.

This small chapel is dedicated to the Virgin of the Rosary invention after her miraculous intervention at the Battle of Lepanto (see pp58–9). The stucco relief decoration is the work of Giacomo Serpotta (after 1688): the panel on the rear wall depicts the battle, and other reliefs show scenes from the New Testament. The neighboring 16th-century church of Santa Zita, from which the oratory takes its name, is filled with sculptures (1517–27) by Antonello Gagini.

Magnificently adorned, and with a splendid view of the Conca d'Oro, the Duomo at Monreale is one of the great sights of Norman Sicily. Founded in 1172 by the Norman King William II, it flanks a monastery of the Benedictine order. The interior of the cathedral glitters with mosaics carried out by Sicilian and Byzantine artists – the inspiration of a king who wanted to rival the power of the archbishop of Palermo. Like Cefalù, and later Palermo, it was to serve as a royal sepulcher.

Today Bagheria is almost a suburb of Palermo, though open countryside with olive and orange groves once separated them. In the 17th-century Giuseppe Branciforte, prince of Butera, built a summer retreat here, starting a fashion that was quickly followed by other Palermitan aristocrats. The town's core is sprinkled with their Baroque and Neoclassical villas.

The Villa Palagonia was designed in 1705 by the architect Tommaso Maria Napoli for Ferdinando Gravina, the prince of Palagonia. It has remarkable architectural qualities: a complex open-air staircase leads to the second floor, and the principal rooms, all with unusual shapes, are arranged around a curved axis. A later prince adorned the perimeter wall with the grotesque stone monsters which amused the 18th-century traveler Patrick Old Trapani occupies a narrow peninsula. The best buildings in this lively quarter are the churches, such as the Cathedral of San Lorenzo (1635) and the Chiesa del Collegio dei Gesuiti (c.1614–40). The facades of both, and that of the Palazzo d'Ali (17th-century) on Via Garibaldi, display magnificently the ebullience of west Sicilian Baroque architecture.

The 17th-century Purgatorio on Via San Francesco d'Assisi contains 18th-century Misteri – realistic, lifesized wooden statues used annually in the Good Friday procession. Santa Maria del Gesù on Via Sant'Agostino should be visited for the Madonna degli Angeli by Andrea della Robbia (1435–1525) and Antonello Gagini's canopy (1521). In the Jewish quarter, west of Via XXX Gennaio, the Palazzo della Giudecca (16th-century) has a strangely textured facade.

The Museo Pepoli has a collection of local antiquities. Of interest are the coral objects and the Christmas crib figures (presepi), modern versions of which are made here. Next to the museum, the Santuario di Maria Santissima Annunziata contains the Madonna di Trapani, a statue revered by fishermen and sailors for its legendary miraculous powers.

Poised on a crag overlooking Trapani, the medieval town of Erice was once the seat of the cult of the fertility goddess Venus Erycina. Her temple stood on the present site of the Norman castle (Castello di Venere), beyond the Villa Balio public gardens. On a clear day, you can see all the way to Tunisia from the castle. The ancient town of Eryx was renamed Gebel-Hamed by the Arabs, Monte San Giuliano by the Normans, and finally Erice in 1934 by Mussolini.

The Duomo (14th-century) has a battlemented campanile and a 15th-century porch.

Inside is a Madonna and Child (c.1469), attributed to either Francesco Laurana or Domenico Gagini. The deconsecrated 13th-century San Giovanni Battista on Viale Nunzio Nasi (now a hotel) contains Antonello Gagini's St. John the Evangelist (1531) and Antonino Gagini's St. John the Baptist (1539).

San Cataldo, a plain 14th-century building on Via San Cataldo, houses a holy water stoup (c.1474) from Domenico Gagini's workshop. In the Museo Cordici are Antonello Gagini's Annunciation (1525), a variety of Classical remains, and an old library.

SICILIAN ISLANDS

Surrounding Sicily are several island groups. The Isole Eolie (Aeolian Islands), to which Panarea, Lipari, Vulcano, and Stromboli belong, are a mass of volcanoes (most of them nearly extinct) poking out of the sea off the coast of Milazzo. The Isole Egadi (Egadi Islands), off the coast of Trapani, have a distinctly Arabic flavor. They include Favignana, Levanzo (which has Paleolithic and Neolithic paintings and drawings), and Marettimo – the smallest and most unspoilt. Ustica, renowned for its marine life and popular among divers, lies north of Palermo. To the south are the remarkably tourist-free Isole Pelagie (Pelagic Islands) – Lampedusa and Linosa, which are North African in character. Remote Pantelleria lies closer to Tunisia than to Sicily.

Favignana, the largest and most populous of the Isole Egadi, is the scene of the traditional tuna slaughter – la mattanza. This takes place, as it has for centuries, in May. These fishermen are bringing in the nets following the slaughter.

The biggest and most popular of the Isole Eolie is Lipari, with a pretty port and a good range of bars, restaurants, and hotels. Nearby sulfur-smelling Vulcano offers hot mudbaths and black beaches.

One of the Isole Pelagie, Lampedusa was once owned by the family of Giuseppe Tomasi di Lampedusa, author of The Leopard, Sicily's most famous novel. The island is nearer to Malta than Sicily and has limpid water and white beaches.

Marsala 6

Via XI Maggio 100 (0923 71 40 97).
Tue. www.conorziovinomarsala.it

The port of Marsala is the home of a thick, strong, sweet wine that has been in production here since the 18th century. In 1798 Admiral Nelson ordered vast quantities of it following the Battle of the Nile. Its early manufacture was presided over by three British families living in Sicily. One of the old warehouses where the wine was produced is now the Museo Archeologico di Baglio Anselmi, housing important Phoenician artifacts.

The ruins of Lilybaeum are another attraction. Founded in 397 BC, this outpost of the Phoenician Empire was peopled by the survivors of the massacre by Dionysius I of Siracusa at Mozia (ancient Motya) – the island used by the Phoenicians as a commercial center. Best of all are the reconstructed remains of a Punic ship thought to have been active in the First Punic War (263–241 BC). The Museo di Mozia in the Whitaker villa contains a remarkable early 5th-century BC statue of a Greek youth.

The excavations here are important; what we know of the Phoenicians today comes mostly from the Bible, and from Mozia. The Duomo, begun in the 17th-century, was built on the site of an earlier church; both were dedicated to Marsala's patron saint, Thomas Becket of Canterbury. Its interior is full of sculptural works by members of the Gagini family. The small Museo degli Arazzi, behind the Duomo, contains several magnificent 16th-century Brussels tapestries.

According to legend, the ancient town of Segesta – still largely unexcavated – was founded by Trojan followers of Aeneas. It presents one of the most spectacular sights on the island: a massive unfinished temple stranded on a remote hillside. Its construction was started between 426 and 416 BC, and it was left incomplete following the devastation of Selinunte by the Carthaginians in 409 BC. Archaeologists regard the temple as a good example of “work in progress.” Nearby, close to the summit of Monte Barbaro, the ruins of an ancient theater (3rd-century BC) can be visited. Summer concerts are now held here.

Selinunte 8

Trapani. Tel 0924 462 77. Castelvetrano then bus. 9am–6pm daily (to 4pm in winter).

Founded in 651 BC, Selinunte became one of the great cities of Magna Graecia – the part of southern Italy that was colonized by ancient Greece – and its toppled ruins are among Sicily's most important historic sites. Its ancient name, Selinus, derives from the wild celery that still grows here. The city was an important port, and its wall defenses can still be seen around the Acropolis. The Carthaginians under Hannibal completely destroyed the city in 409 BC in a famously epic and savage battle.

While the city itself has virtually disappeared, eight of its temples are distinguishable, particularly the so-called Eastern Temples (E, F and G). Of these, the columns of huge Doric Temple E (490–480 BC) have been partially re-erected. Temple F (c.560–540 BC) is in ruins. Temple G (late 6th century BC), which had 17 massive side columns, was one of the greatest Greek temples ever built.

Higher on the Acropolis lie the remains of Temples A, B, C, D, and O. Metope sculpture from Temple C (early 6th century), originally located on the frieze between the triglyphs, can be seen in the Museo Archeologico Regionale in Palermo (see p528), along with ceramics, jewelry, and other artifacts excavated here. A small museum on site houses less important finds, as does one in Castelvetrano, 8.5 miles (14 km) north of Selinunte. The ancient city is still being excavated; its North Gate entrance is well preserved and farther north there is also a necropolis.

This pretty seaside town, with sandy beaches, restaurants, and hotels, is dominated by a huge rock known as La Rocca – once the site of a temple of Diana – and by one of the finest Norman cathedrals in Sicily. Begun in 1131 by Roger II, the Duomo was intended as the main religious seat in Sicily. Though it failed to fulfill this function, the building's magnificence has never been eclipsed. Its splendid mosaics (1148), which feature an image of Christ Pantocrator in the apse, are remarkable and often celebrated as purely Byzantine works of art on Sicilian soil.

Modern Agrigento occupies the site of Akragas, an important city of the ancient Greek world. Founded by Daedalus, according to legend, it was famed for the luxurious lifestyle of its inhabitants, and was a great power and rival to Siracusa. In 406 BC it fell to the Carthaginians, who sacked and burned it.

The historic core of the city, with its medieval streets, focuses on the Via Atenea. Santo Spirito (13th century) houses stuccoes by Giacomo Serpotta (1695). Santa Maria dei Greci was built on the remains of a 5th-century BC temple – see the flattened columns in the nave. The Duomo, founded in the 14th century and altered in the 16th and 17th centuries, exhibits a unique mixture of Arab, Norman, and Catalan detailing.

Environs: The chief reason to visit Agrigento is to see the archaeological zone known as the Valley of the Temples (see p536). The Museo Regionale Archeologico houses an interesting display of artifacts from the temples and the city, including a collection of vases, coins, and Greek and Roman sculpture.

THE MAFIA

An international organization founded in Sicily, the Mafia developed as a result of the cruel State and severe poverty. By the late 19th century it had become a criminal organization thriving on property speculation and drug trafficking. Since the “singing” of Tommaso Buscetta and the capture of Toto Riina, the Mafia has been on the defensive against a State that has doubled its efforts against it. The “Boss of Bosses,” Bernardo Provenzano, was arrested in 2006 after 43 years on the run. Violence is common in Sicily but it is not directed at tourists.

Valley of the Temples

Straddling a low ridge to the south of Agrigento, the Valley of the Temples (Valle dei Templi) is one of the most impressive complexes of ancient Greek buildings outside Greece. Its Doric temples, dating from the 5th century BC, were destroyed in part by the Carthaginians in 406 BC, and in part by Christians, who believed the temples to be pagan, in the 6th century. Earthquakes wreaked further havoc. Nine of the original ten temples are still visible, and the whole area can be covered in a day. To avoid crowds, visit early in the morning (some temples open as early as 8:30am) or late afternoon.

Piazza Armerina 11

Enna. 🏠 21,000. 📞 Via Generale Muscara (0935 68 02 01). 🕒 Thu. www.piazzaarmerina.org

This active town is half medieval and half Baroque. The 17th-century Duomo, at its highest point, is the most interesting of the Baroque buildings.

In August, the lively Palio dei Normanni festival attracts many visitors, but the real draw are the mosaics in the UNESCO-listed Villa Romana del Casale, 3 miles (5 km) southwest of the town. The mosaics were only excavated in the 20th century.

It is thought that this huge, once sumptuous villa with its public halls, private quarters, baths, and courtyards, belonged to Maximianus Herculeus, Diocletian's co-emperor from AD 286 to 305. His son and successor, Maxentius, probably continued its decoration, with Constantine I taking over on Maxentius's death in 312.

Although little remains of the building fabric, the floors have some of the finest surviving mosaics from Roman antiquity. The hunting, mythological, and domestic scenes, and exotic landscapes, all exhibit realistic attention to detail.

Impregnable on a crag above a fertile landscape where Persephone, mythological daughter of Demeter, once played, Sicily's highest town (3,090 ft/942 m) has been coveted by successive invaders since its earliest days. The venerated seat of the cult of Demeter (the goddess of fertility) was at Enna. Her temple stood on the Rocca Cerere, not far from the huge Castello di Lombardia (13th century) built by Frederick II.

Most of Enna's sights are clustered in the old town, among the ancient streets that open out of the Via Roma. The church of San Francesco has a 16th-century tower. Piazza Crispi, with its fine views to nearby Calascibetta, is dominated by a copy of Bernini's Rape of Persephone. The 14th-century Duomo, altered in later centuries, contains parts of Demeter's temple.

The Museo Alessi houses the Cathedral Treasury and an interesting coin collection. The Museo Varisano has exhibits on the area's history, from Neolithic to Roman. Away from the center, the octagonal Torre di Federico II (13th century) is a former watchtower.

Environs: The ancient hill-town of Nicosia, northeast of Enna, was damaged in the 1967 earthquake, but still contains a smattering of churches. San Nicola, built in the 14th century, has a magnificent, carved entrance portal. Inside there is a much venerated wooden crucifix (17th century) by Fra Umile di Petralia. Santa Maria Maggiore houses a 16th-century marble polyptych by Antonello Gagini and a throne reputedly used by Charles V in 1535. Further east is Troina. It was captured in 1062 by the Normans, whose work survives in the Chiesa Matrice. Southeast of Enna, Vizzini commands fine views of the countryside.

Splendidly situated, Taormina is Sicily's best-known resort. It retains an air of exclusivity while being on the tourist trail, with sandy beaches and a wide range of restaurants and hotels.

The most illustrious relic of the past is the theater. Begun in the 3rd century BC by the Greeks, it was subsequently rebuilt by the Romans. Among other Classical remains are the ruins of the odeon (for musical performances) and the naumachia (an artificial lake for mock-battles). On Piazza Vittorio Emanuele (site of the Roman Forum), Palazzo Corvaia (14th century) was built using stone from a temple that once stood here. The 13th-century Duomo (renovated in 1636) is a fortress-like building.

Environ: Taormina's main beach, Mazzarò, boasts clear waters and is easily reached from the town. South of Taormina at Capo Schisò are the ruins of ancient Naxos. To the west is Gole dell' Alcantara, a 66-ft (20-m) deep gorge of basalt rock, a river, and waterfalls.

Having been decimated by the earthquake of 1693, Catania was comprehensively rebuilt. While it is not immediately beautiful, it contains some of the most imaginative lava-built Baroque buildings in Sicily. Piazza del Duomo, featuring a lava elephant (Catania's symbol) carrying an Egyptian obelisk, offers a dramatic vista to Mount Etna. In 1736 the Norman Duomo was given a new facade by Vaccarini, who also worked on the Municipio (finished 1741), on the facade of Sant'Agata (1748), on the designs of Collegio Cutelli, built around 1779, and on Palazzo Valle (c.1740–50).

Carrying on the Vaccarini tradition is Stefano Ittar's San Placido (around 1768). The frenzied stone carving on the Palazzo Biscari (early 18th century) is exceeded by Antonino Amato's unrestrained decoration of the vast Benedictine convent (1704) and the adjacent huge church of San Nicolò (1730)

On Via Vittorio Emanuele is the Museo Belliniano, birthplace of composer Vincenzo Bellini (1801–35). The lava ruins of the Teatro Romano (21 BC) are at Piazza Stesicono. Verga's House, home of the great Sicilian novelist Giovanni Verga (1840–1922), is on Via Sant' Anna. Via Crociferi is home to 18th-century churches San Francesco Borgia, San Benedetto, and San Giuliano, whose interior is Vaccarini's masterpiece (1760). Farther along Via Crociferi, the church of Santo Carcere contains the prison of St. Agatha, who was martyred in AD 253.

INFLUENCES ON TRADITIONAL SICILIAN CUISINE

Sicily has one of Italy's most varied cuisines. The island's unique location – marooned between North Africa, Europe, and the eastern Mediterranean – and the invaders it attracted are responsible for this culinary diversity. The earliest Western cookbook, the now lost Art of Cooking (5th century BC), was written by Mithaecus, a Siracusan Greek. Sicily's fertility attracted Greek colonists, who exported oil, wheat, honey, cheese, fruit, and vegetables to their homeland. The Arabs introduced oranges, lemons, eggplant, and sugar cane. Their love of sweet confections inspired granita, a form of flavored ice, and

A colorful selection of vegetables at a Sicilian market stall

cassata, an elaborate sponge cake with ricotta and candied fruit. The Sicilians love to claim an Arabic origin for their ice cream, but the Greeks and

Romans had created an earlier version by chilling their wine with snow from Mount Etna. Traditionally, the peasants existed on a subsistence diet while the aristocracy enjoyed extravagant fare, and one of the peculiarities of Sicilian food today is that it can be both frugal and handsomely ornate. All of the usual Italian dishes are available, but more interesting are the variations using local ingredients such as swordfish, sardines, ricotta cheese, red chillies, eggplant, capers, olives, and almond paste.

Remote in the desolate Monti Iblei and overlooking the River Anapo is the prehistoric necropolis of Pantalica – a pleasant place to walk and picnic. The dead of a large, unexcavated village (occupied from 13th–8th century BC) were buried here in cavelike tombs cut into the rock. More than 5,000 of these tombs were arranged in tiers with a single flat stone sealing each opening.

The inhabitants of Pantalica are thought to have come from coastal Thapsos, which was abandoned after raids by warlike tribes from mainland Italy. The site was reoccupied in the Byzantine period when some tombs were made into cave

Interior of Duomo in Siracusa

Siracusa (Syracuse) was the most important and powerful Greek city from the 5th to the 3rd centuries BC, and, according to the Roman consul Cicero, the most beautiful. The peninsula Ortigia is the hub of the old city. On the mainland, Achradina, Tyche, and Neapolis have been occupied almost without a break since the expansion of the city in 480 BC. These were the years of Gelon, tyrant of Gela, when Siracusa was enriched with new temples, theaters, and dockyards. The city was a powerful force until 211 BC, when it fell to the Romans in a battle that also killed the mathematician Archimedes, its most famous inhabitant.

The highlight of Ortigia is the extraordinary Duomo, begun in 1728 by architect Andrea Palma. Its Baroque facade masks the Temple of Athena (5th century BC), which has been absorbed into the Duomo. Facing the Ponte Nuovo are the ruins of Sicily's earliest Doric temple, the Temple of Apollo, which had monolithic columns.

Across from the Duomo is the Palazzo Beneventano del Bosco (1778–88), a bold example of Siracusan Baroque, as is Santa Lucia alla Badia (1695–1703). In the Municipio a small museum records the history of Ionic temples, and the coin collection of the Galleria Numismatica records Siracusa's past wealth. The delightful Fonte Aretusa is frequently referred to by Classical writers as the point where Aretusa emerged from the ground, having been changed into a spring by Artemis to help her escape her lover Alpheus.

At Ortigia's farthest point is the Castello Maniace, built by Frederick II around 1239. Here too is the Gallerie Regionale di Palazzo Bellomo, with sculpture and paintings including the Burial of St. Lucy (1608) by Caravaggio.

The painting comes from the church of Santa Lucia in the Achradina quarter. This area was flattened during World War II, but the church survived.

It is mostly 17th century with a Norman campanile, and occupies the site where St. Lucy, patron saint of Siracusa, was martyred in AD 304. Achradina is now the center of modern Siracusa.

To the north, in Tyche, is the Museo Archeologico Regionale Paolo Orsi, with its important collection of artifacts from the Palaeolithic to the Byzantine era, taken from southeastern sites in Sicily. Included are vases, coins, bronzes, votive objects, busts, sculpture, and fragments from Siracusan temples.

The Neapolis quarter and its Parco Archeologico feature the Teatro Romano, the Altar of Hieron II, and the spectacular Teatro Greco, carved from the hillside. Beyond the Nymphaeum is the 2nd-century AD Roman amphitheater and the stone quarries – the Latomia del Paradiso featuring the Ear of Dionysius. It is thought that 7,000 Athenians were incarcerated here and left to die after their calamitous defeat in 413 BC, in a battle described by Thucydides as “the greatest action in Hellenic history.”

Environ: At Epipolae, 5 miles (8 km) north of Neapolis is the Castle of Euryalus – the most important ancient Greek fortification to have survived.

Noto was built from scratch in the early 18th century to replace Noto Antica, which was devastated by an earthquake in 1693. The town was comprehensively designed in Baroque style, using the local white tufa, a limestone that has turned a honey-brown color from the sun. Noto is a UNESCO World Heritage site, but unfortunately much of its beauty is behind scaffolding due to ongoing restoration.

The twin-towered Duomo (completed 1770s) that dominates Noto is by architect Rosario Gagliardi, who also designed the eccentric tower facade of the seminary of San Salvatore (18th century) in Piazza Municipio, the convex facade of San Domenico (1730s) in Piazza XVI Maggio, and the oval interior of Santa Chiara (1730) on Corso Vittorio Emanuele. The magnificent Palazzo Trigona (1781) stands on Via Cavour behind the Duomo. On Via Nicolaci, the Palazzo Villadorata (1730s) features a splendid facade adorned with elaborate stone carvings. At the north end of Via Nicolaci, the Monastery of Montevergine has a striking curved facade. In mid-May, Via Nicolaci is the site of the Infiorata flower festival. Gagliardi's church of the Crocifisso (1728) stands on the town's summit. It contains a sculpture of the Madonna by Francesco Laurana (1471). The Municipio (1740s), facing the Duomo, has a fine “billowing” ground floor design.

Environ: The earthquake of 1693 also devastated the towns of Modica, around 19 miles (30 km) to the west, and Ragusa, a short distance farther. Like Noto, they were rebuilt in the region's rich Baroque style. Gagliardi worked on Modica's San Giorgio (early 18th century), on Ragusa's San Giorgio (begun around 1746, and one of his masterpieces), and San Giuseppe (mid-18th century).

SARDINIA

In his travelogue, Sea and Sardinia, D. H. Lawrence wrote that Sardinia was “left outside of time and history.” Indeed, the march of time has been slow here, and traditions from ancient Europe have survived – the legacy of invasion by Phoenicians, Carthaginians, Romans, Arabs, Byzantines, Spaniards, and Savoyards.

These traditions are displayed in Sardinia’s many festivals – some soberly Christian, others with pagan roots. Several different dialects and languages are spoken in Sardinia. Catalan can be heard in Alghero, and on the island of San Pietro, there is a Ligurian dialect. Even remnants of Phoenician survive. In the south, the traditional influences are Spanish, while pure native strains of people and language survive in the Gennargentu mountains. Peopled by shepherds in isolated communities, this region is so impenetrable that invaders have never bothered it.

Of particular interest are the prehistoric nuraghe castles, villages, temples, and tombs dotted around the countryside – most notably around Barumini, north of Cagliari, and in the Valle dei Nuraghe, south of Sassari. The nuraghe were built by a people whose origins constitute one of the Mediterranean’s great mysteries. In Cagliari, the capital of Sardinia, there is a museum with an excellent archaeological collection that offers insight into this enigmatic people.

Sassari, Oristano, Alghero, and Olbia are all centers of areas marked by their individuality. Some remarkable Pisan-Romanesque churches are located around Sassari and here too dialects reveal close links with the languages of Tuscany. Olbia is a boom town made rich by tourism and the proximity of the jet-setting Costa Smeralda. Sober Nuoro with its province in the shadow of the Gennargentu mountains, by contrast, has little in common with the Sardinia of tourist brochures.

Exploring Sardinia

This island, named Sardegna in Italian, is characterized by an interior of dramatic, rolling uplands covered in macchia – grassland mingled with myrtle, wild thyme, prickly pears, and dwarf oaks – and a coastline of beguiling, translucent sea, isolated coves, long sandy beaches, and caves.

The Gennargentu mountains, with the highest peak at 6,017 ft (1,834 m), shield a nearly impenetrable area of rural villages. In the northeast, mountains fall away dramatically to the Costa Smeralda, Sardinia's most exclusive coastal area. Farther south, the shoreline around the Golfo di Orosei is fairly unspoiled.

Around Oristano in the west the land is flat, leading to the plain of Campidano where the island's corn, fruit, and vegetables grow.

GETTING AROUND

Ferries from a wide range of ports on the Italian mainland dock at Cagliari, Olbia, and Porto Torres. International and domestic flights use the airports at Cagliari, Olbia, and Alghero. The island is neatly cut by the S131. It skirts the Gennargentu mountains, which are accessible only by tortuously winding passes. Branches of the S131 reach Olbia and Nuoro. Express bus services connect the major cities, while the smaller towns are linked by slow and infrequent public transportation.

Founded on a peninsula facing the Bay of Alghero early in the 12th century, and taken from the Genoese Dorias by the Aragonese in 1353, Alghero was peopled by settlers from Barcelona and Valencia. Its original occupants – Ligurians and Sardinians – were expelled with such thoroughness that today the Catalan language and culture is enjoying a revival and the look of old Alghero is consistently Spanish.

Filled with labyrinthine alleys and cobbled streets, the lively port of old Alghero is flanked by battlemented walls and defensive towers on all but the landward section. Facing the Giardino Pubblico is the massive 16th-century Torre di Porta Terra, also known as the Jewish Tower after its builders. Around the periphery of the old town are more towers, including Torre dell'Espero Reial and Torre San Giacomo on Lungomare Colombo, and Torre della Maddalena on Piazza Porta Terra.

NURAGHE IN SARDINIA

The dominant feature of Sardinia is the 7,000 or so nuraghe dotted around the island. Dating from 1800 to 300 BC, these strange, truncated cone structures were built without any bonding from huge basalt blocks taken from extinct volcanoes. To this day, little is known about the identity of the nuragic people. They must have been well organized and possessed remarkable engineering skills, judging by their buildings, but appear to have left no written word. The mystery of these enigmatic people has intrigued Sardinians for years.

The individual nuraghe are fairly small. A few were fortresses, equipped with wells and other defensive features.

Su Nuraxi at Barumini (above), Serra Orrios, near Dorgali, and Santu Antine at Torralba are among the most important nuraghe complexes. Houses, temples, tombs, and even a theater have been identified.

This bronze figure of a hero with four eyes and four arms is among the many objects and statues discovered on nuragic sites and associated with the nuragic people.

This town, in a spectacular setting beneath Monte Ortobene and the dramatic Supramonte, was the home of Grazia Deledda, who won the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1926 for her portrayal of the power and passions in the primitive communities around her. A comprehensive collection of ethnic items, such as traditional Sardinian costumes and jewelry, can be seen in the excellent Museo della Vita e delle Tradizioni Popolari Sarde. Attending the Sagra del Redentore festival is the best way to witness the region's dancing and dialects.

Environ: Nuoro is on the edge of the Barbagia region, which has isolated villages of shepherds who have never experienced the hand of any overlord, so impenetrable are the Gennargentu mountains. This region was known to the Romans as Barbaria, an area they were never able to subdue. Traces of the traditional lawlessness of the Barbagia can be seen in Orgosolo, with its wall murals calling for Sardinia's independence. Rival clans were locked in bloody vendetta for almost 50 years, and the deeds of native bandits form part of local folklore.

In Mamoiada's Feast of the Mamutbones, men in sinister masks and traditional costume perform a ritual dance ending with a symbolic "killing" of a scapegoat. The fervour of the event is indicative of the fierce folkloric tradition and deep resistance to change.

Ruins of Tharros near Oristano

The province of Oristano corresponds roughly with historical Arborea, over which Eleonora ruled (see opposite). She is commemorated by an 18th-century statue in Piazza Eleonora. On Corso Vittorio Emanuele is the 16th-century Casa di Eleonora, and nearby the Antiquarium Arborense, which has Neolithic, nuraghic, Punic, and Roman artifacts. The Torre di San Cristoforo (1291) in Piazza Roma once formed part of Oristano's fortifications. The Duomo (13th century) was later rebuilt in the Baroque style. More interesting are the churches of Santa Chiara (1343) on Via Garibaldi and 14th-century San Martino on Via Cagliari.

The Museo Archeologico contains Phoenician artifacts. The Punic Tophet (sanctuary of the goddess Tanit) and the necropolis are nearby. The capital of Sardinia, this site was occupied by the Phoenicians, Carthaginians, and Romans, and extensive ruins of the Phoenician city of Nora lie to the southwest of Cagliari. A 2nd-century amphitheater survives from the Roman era, cut from rock. Discover the town's earlier history in the Cittadella dei Musei, the former royal arsenal. It houses several museums, including the Museo Archeologico Nazionale. The nuragic items are the most interesting in the collection, especially the bronze votive statuettes. Also in the Cittadella dei Musei is the Pinacoteca, an art gallery. The old core of Cagliari has an appealing North African character. In the high Castello district, the Romans and, later, Pisans built defenses. The gracious Bastione San Remy on Piazza Costituzione offers magnificent views over the city and surrounding countryside. The Duomo is a 20th-century rehash of a Romanesque building. Flanking the entrance are two 12th-century pulpits originally destined for the cathedral in Pisa.

Nearby is the Pisan tower Torre San Pancrazio (14th century). From the partially ruined Torre dell'Elefante on Via dell'Università to the port lies the Marina quarter, which expanded from the old town in the 16th to 17th centuries. In Piazza San Cosimo, the 6th-century church of San Saturnino is a rare monument to Byzantine occupation.

ELEONORA OF ARBOREA

A champion against rule from abroad, Eleonora was governing giudicessa (judge) of Arborea, one of four administrative divisions of Sardinia, from 1383–1404. Her marriage to Brancaleone Doria consolidated Genoese interests in Sardinia. She rallied the island to keep out Spanish invaders who tried to claim land that had been given to the Aragonese King James II. Her greatest legacy was the completion of the codifying of laws begun by her father. Written in Sardinian, they called for community of property in marriage and the right of women to seek redress from rape.

TRAVELERS' NEEDS

WHERE TO STAY 554-603

WHERE TO STAY

People come from all over the world to visit Italy and most Italians spend their vacations here as well, particularly in the mountains or by the sea. This means that there is a dazzling range of accommodation options, from splendid hotels in old palazzi and historic residences, to simple family-run pensioni and hostels. Most major cities also offer upscale B&Bs. Those who want efficiency accommodations are also well served with everything from stately villas in Tuscany to vacation apartments in, or near, seaside resorts. Italian hotels are notorious for being expensive and short of services but you can still find excellent value in all price ranges. The hotels listed on pages 558–603 have been selected from every price category as among the best value in each area for style, comfort, or location.

Sign for a 3-star hotel

The Gritti Palace, one of Venice's historic palazzi (see p91)

GRADINGS

Hotels in Italy are graded with one to five stars. Grading depends on facilities offered rather than atmosphere and each region awards stars according to slightly different criteria.

Sometimes a hotel has a lower rating than it deserves. This may be because the local tourist office has not upgraded it yet or the hotel itself has opted to stay in a lower category to avoid higher taxes.

ALBERGHI

Albergo is Italian for hotel but the term tends to refer to the upper categories. Room sizes vary considerably: in city centers even expensive hotels can have far smaller rooms than their counterparts in other countries, whereas outside the city your room may be more like a small suite. Alberghi will have private baths or showers in all rooms.

Many top-range and boutique establishments also offer spa and fitness facilities.

PENSIONI

Although the term pensione is no longer in official use, it still describes one- and two-star hotels, most of which are small and family run. On the whole you will meet immaculate standards of cleanliness and friendly, helpful service with basic, although perfectly functional, rooms. However, as pensioni are often in old buildings, historic charm may be paid for with noisy, erratic

Street sign showing the direction and location of hotels plumbing and dark rooms. Many do not have public rooms other than a sparsely furnished breakfast room. Most will offer at least some rooms with a private shower although rarely a bath. If you intend being out late, check that you'll be able to get back into the pensione. Not all of them have night porters after midnight or 1am, but most will at least be able to provide a key to the main door.

A locanda was traditionally an inn, offering cheap food and a place to sleep for the traveler. The word is still in use, particularly in central and northern Italy, but is now synonymous with pensione and may be more of an affectation for the benefit of the tourist.

CHAIN HOTELS

There are various Italian chain hotels at the upper end of the market, as well as the usual big internationals. NH Hoteles hotels appeal to the business traveler and there are one or two in most large cities; Starwood Westin and Best Western are more akin to international luxury chains, while Notturmo Italia cater for the more modest budget. Relais et Châteaux run charming hotels in historic castles, villas, and monasteries with facilities to match.

MEALS AND FACILITIES

Italian hotels tend to offer fewer special facilities than those in many other countries. In spite of the hot summers, for example, air-conditioning is not always available and neither is 24-hour room service.

Some hotels may insist on full board (pensione completa) or half board (mezza pensione) in peak season. Avoid this if you can: unless the hotel is very isolated, there will almost certainly be a good range of places to eat nearby. Most hotel rates include breakfast, which in four- and five-star hotels will consist of a large buffet; the pensiononi breakfast will probably consist of coffee and cookies or brioches with butter and jelly. A good alternative is to have breakfast at a local bar and take part in an enjoyable Italian institution.

For a double room, state if you want twin beds (letti sin-goli) or a double bed (matrimoniale). Bathrooms in all but the most expensive hotels will have showers rather than baths.

CHILDREN

Italians accept children as an ordinary part of life and, although there may not be many special facilities, they are always welcome.

Some of the cheaper hotels may not be able to provide cribs. However, virtually all hotels, from the simplest to the grandest, will be happy to put a small bed or two into a double room for families traveling together. The price of this is usually an extra 30–40 percent of the double room rate per bed. Note that most of the large hotels will also offer a babysitting service.

PRICES

As a rule hotels in Italy are not cheap, although prices vary considerably between places and seasons. Increasingly, reserving online secures a better rate, and hotel websites may offer special deals.

Prices, which include tax and service and are quoted per room, start from around €60 for a double room without a bathroom, and can rise to at least €80 with a bath, even for a very basic hotel. A single room will cost about two-thirds of a double. Outside the big cities, €100 should get you something comfortable and often picturesque, although not particularly luxurious. For €210 and upward you can expect a good range of facilities, a pleasant or central location, and often a lot of local or historic charm. Hotels in the major cities and resorts are likely to be more expensive.

In larger hotels there is often a considerable difference in quality between standard and more luxurious rooms, and this is reflected in the price. Rooms with a view or a terrace are also more likely to command higher rates, though for those who prefer peaceful nights, it is generally best to avoid rooms facing the street in busy city centers.

By law hotels have to display their rates in every bedroom. Variation between high and low season can be as much as 100 percent or more in resorts.

Also, beware of extra charges: the minibar can be very expensive, as can charges for parking facilities, laundry, or for making telephone calls directly from your hotel bedroom.

BOOKING

Book as soon as possible, particularly if you have special requests such as a room with a view, off the street, or with a bath. Two months should be ample, but be aware that, during the high season, popular hotels can be fully booked as early as six months in advance. August tends to be very busy at beach resorts and February at mountain resorts. The same goes for cities and towns depending on their particular cultural calendars (see pp66–9).

You will be asked for a deposit when you book; this can usually be paid for by credit card (even in hotels that do not accept credit cards for final payment); otherwise by international money order, or via PayPal for online transactions.

Under Italian law the hotel must issue you with a receipt (ricevuta fiscale) for final payment which you must keep until you leave Italy.

Vaulted Art Nouveau entrance of a hotel in Florence

CHECKING IN AND OUT

On arrival the management will take your passport to register you with the police. This is a mere formality and it should be returned within an hour or two.

Checking-out time is usually before noon and may be earlier in small hotels. The room must be vacated but most hotels will allow you to leave luggage in a safe place to be collected later in the day.

APARTMENTS AND AGRITURISMO

If you intend to be based in one area, efficiency accommodations often enjoy a marvelous location and is generally of a high standard.

Across rural Italy there are more than 2,000 farms, villas, and mountain chalets offering reasonably priced apartments or hotel-style accommodations as part of the Agriturismo scheme. Facilities range from those of a first-class hotel in beautifully kept villas or ancient castles to basic rooms with the family on a working farm. Some have excellent restaurants which serve farm and local produce, others can arrange riding, fishing, or other activity holidays (see p658). There may be a minimum stay requirement, especially in peak season. The booklet Agriturist can be found in the central office in Rome, in the regional offices, and in bookstores. Other efficiency options can be arranged through specialized agencies such as Italy Weekly Rentals or Grand Luxe International before you leave for Italy, but again, make sure you call in advance; they can be booked up for months.

There are also so-called residence, found in the ENIT accommodations lists. Midway between a hotel and efficiency apartments, these often offer cooking facilities and some sort of restaurant service.

For stays of several months or more, accommodations agencies for apartments in the city center as well as the nearby countryside can be found under Immobiliari in the Pagine Gialle (Yellow Pages).

BUDGET ACCOMMODATIONS

As well as the International Youth Hostels Association (AIH in Italy), tourist offices in the major cities have lists of hostels. Prices, starting at around €12 per person per night, are much lower than even the cheapest pensioni. Accommodations may be in single- or mixed-sex dormitories, though many hostels also offer small private rooms. A room in a private house is another cheap option, offering often small but clean rooms. Bed-and-breakfast accommodations are increasing rapidly but are of variable quality, so only rely on trustworthy recommendation.

The Centro Turistico Studentesco can help students find rooms in university dormitories across Italy. This is not limited to students taking courses, particularly in the summer when resident students are on holiday.

A peaceful alternative is to stay in a convent or monastery with guest accommodations. The rooms are clean, if a little spartan, and they are usually in a secluded area or behind cloister walls. However, strict rules may be a price to pay: most have early curfews and many will not admit members of the opposite sex even when with their spouses. There is no central agency dealing with these but they are included in the ENIT accommodation lists for each region.

MOUNTAIN REFUGES AND CAMPSITES

Basic accommodations in huts and refuges is available in mountainous areas where there is hill-walking and hiking. Most of these huts are owned and run by the Club Alpino Italiano whose headquarters are in Milan.

Campsites abound in the mountains and around the coastal regions. Many of them offer basic accommodations in family-sized cabins (bungalow) as well as spaces for tents, campers, and trailers, with basic facilities such as water, electricity, and washing. There is usually a restaurant and, especially in campsites by the sea, there may also be sports facilities such as swimming pools, boat and water sports equipment rental, and tennis courts. The Touring Club Italiano publishes a good list of campsites with details of facilities for each one, as does Federcampeggio.

A high-altitude refuge in the Valsesia Alps

DISABLED TRAVELERS

Few hotels in Italy have special facilities for disabled travelers. Those that do are indicated with the appropriate symbol in the hotels listings on pages 558–603. In many cases, however, hotels without special facilities will do all they can to accommodate people in wheelchairs by giving them downstairs rooms (when available) and help with elevators or stairs.

FURTHER INFORMATION

The Italian state tourist office (ENIT) has accommodation lists for every region. They are reprinted annually but may not be updated and prices may have changed. Rooms can also be booked at the local APT (Azienda Provinciale per il Turismo).

WHERE TO EAT

Food is a serious subject in Italy. The Italians are justly proud of their fine cuisine and wines and many sociable hours are spent around the table. One of the great pleasures of traveling in Italy is exploring regional variations in pasta, breads, and cheeses. Whether it is spinach-filled tortelloni from the north or stuffed sweet red peppers from the south, restaurants will rarely serve anything other than

Roman waiter with regional fare

Italian specialities. You don't have to head to the most expensive places for good food; a simple trattoria, which has to answer to the local clientele, will often serve much better fare than the nearby international restaurant. However, whether it is a crowded osteria or a terrace with sea views, this introduction gives a few practical tips on types of restaurants, ordering and service to help you enjoy eating out in Italy.

TYPES OF RESTAURANTS AND SNACK BARS

Traditionally a trattoria and an osteria are cheaper and more casual alternatives to the smarter ristorante.

A pizzeria is usually a cheap place to eat (as little as €12 with beer) and many serve pasta, meat, and fish dishes as well as pizzas.

Pizzerie are often open in the evening only, especially those with wood-fired ovens (forno a legna).

A birreria is another cheap option, serving pasta and snacks such as sausages and hamburgers. An enoteca, or vineria, is in fact a place to taste wine; however, as Italians will rarely drink without eating, there will normally be a range of light dishes on offer as well as a superb selection of wines. Prices vary and tend not to be cheap for the quantities served.

At lunch time and in the early evening rosticcerie sell

A restaurant offering a cozy environment in a vaulted room roast chicken, slices of pizza (pizza al taglio), and other snacks to take out. Pizza al taglio, with various different toppings, can also be bought straight from the baker. Bars have filled rolls (panini) and sandwiches (tramezzini) and some have a tavola calda counter with hot dishes for under €6.

Stop at a gelateria for ice cream, with a sometimes mesmerizing choice of different flavors, or a pasticciera for one of a dazzling variety of sweet and savory pastries, cakes, and cookies.

EATING HOURS

Lunch is generally served between 12:30pm and 2:30pm and, particularly in the south, all other activity stops between these hours. Dinner is at about 7:30pm and goes on until 11pm or later (in the south eating hours tend to be later). It is not unusual to see tables still full from lunch at 4pm or diners sipping digestivi well after midnight.

RESERVATIONS

Good restaurants in Italy are likely to be popular, so reserve a table if you can. Otherwise, get there early to avoid having to wait in line. Many restaurants close one day a week and for a few weeks in either winter or the summer vacation season so phone first if in doubt.

THE MENU

Italian meals consist of three or four courses and restaurants generally expect you to eat at least two, though you should not feel obliged to do so. The antipasto (appetizer), is followed by the primo, of pasta, rice, or soup. The secondo is the main meat or fish course with vegetables or salad (as contorni). Fruit, cheese, or dessert follow, with coffee and a digestivo such as grappa or a bitter amaro to finish the meal.

Menus usually change with the season to make use of the freshest local produce and the day's specials may be recited to you by the waiter rather than written down. Persevere, if you don't immediately understand, using the menu information at the beginning of each section (see p720). Try to avoid restaurants that do not state prices on their menus.

VEGETARIANS

While few places advertise specifically vegetarian meals, you are unlikely to have much trouble choosing from an Italian menu. Many pasta and antipasto dishes use no meat at all and for a main course you can ask for a selection of vegetables from the contorni. Vegetarians eat particularly well in spring when the first new vegetables come into the markets, and in fall when wild mushrooms abound.

WINE AND DRINKS

Many regions have their own aperitivo for before the meal and a digestivo for afterward. Universal alternatives are prosecco (dry fizzy white wine) or an analcolico (nonalcoholic) aperitif and grappa as a digestive. House wine (red or white) will be a simple local wine served by the litre or fraction thereof and will generally be perfectly palatable. In addition, all but the cheapest places have a range of other local and regional wines specially selected to accompany the food on the menu. For this reason, it is unusual to come across many non-Italian wines.

Tap water (acqua del rubinetto) is always drinkable and often very good, but Italy has a massive range of mineral waters. Fizzy ones (frizzante) may contain carbon dioxide while naturale can mean still or naturally sparkling. If you particularly want a still water ask for non gassata. Espresso bars usually charge more for table service.

PAYING

Tax and service are usually included in the menu prices but it is normal to leave a small tip (€1 to €3). Note that, though no longer legal, many restaurants still charge for the coperto, an extra that covers bread (whether you eat it or not) and is charged per person.

Credit cards are not always accepted in Italy, particularly in smaller towns, and it is wise to check before you eat.

DRESS

Italians generally tend to look smart but don't necessarily expect visitors to do the same. However, very scruffy or dirty clothes are unlikely to get you good or particularly friendly service.

CHILDREN

Children are welcome in all but the smartest establishments and throughout Italy restaurants are likely to be filled with extensive Italian families for Sunday lunch. Facilities such as highchairs or special menus are rare, but most places will provide cushions and small portions.

SMOKING

Smoking is still a popular habit in Italy. However, smoking laws now mean that all restaurants in the country are nonsmoking establishments. Unless a smokers' room is provided, you should step outside if you want to light up.

WHEELCHAIR ACCESS

Few restaurants have special facilities for people in wheelchairs, but let them know you are coming in advance so they can reserve a suitable table and be ready to help if necessary when you arrive.

Housed in an Art Nouveau-style villa, this restaurant has a winter garden veranda and a summer terrace with views across the bay and of the old fishing harbor of Camogli. Typical seafood and pasta specials include tuna in a sweet and sour sauce, pasta in red mullet (triglia) sauce, and stewed cuttlefish. Closed Tue, Wed lunch; Jan, last 2 wks Nov.

CERVO San Giorgio

Via Volta 19, 18010 Tel 0183 40 01 75

The owner of this charming place, nestled in a square in the city center, blends local flavors and fresh, seasonal food. The results are creative simple dishes such as shrimp with baby artichokes, and fish of the day with tiny olives and fresh marjoram. A tasting menu is available for €55. It is very popular, so reserve ahead. Closed Tue.

GENOVA Da Genio

Salita San Leonardo 61r, 16128 Tel 010 58 84 63

One of Genoa's best-loved trattorias, with a loyal clientele, situated in the old quarter. The menu includes well-prepared fish dishes, such as fresh swordfish stuffed with anchovies and capers, but the famous first course is the traditional Ligurian dish trenette al pesto (pasta with pesto sauce). Closed Sun; 3 wks Aug.

GENOVA Da O'Colla

Via alla Chiesa di Murta 10, Località Bolzaneto, 16162 Tel 010 740 85 79

Simple but excellent home-cooked Ligurian cuisine such as lasagne with a pesto sauce (instead of the more traditional meat sauce) and minestrone genovese (vegetable soup with pasta or rice and pesto). This trattoria is located 8 miles (13 km) from the city, but it is definitely worth the taxi fare. Closed Mon, Sun; 3 wks Jan, Aug.

GENOVA Pintori

Via San Bernardo 68r, 16123 Tel 010 275 75 07

Loved by the locals for its affordable prices and stylish ambience, Pintori is run by a Sardinian family. The menu has both fish and meat dishes: try the feather-light fritto misto (fried seafood platter) or the grilled lamb. Two days' notice are required for the maialino sardo (Sardinian suckling pig). The desserts are also fine. Closed Mon, Sun.

GENOVA Cantine Squarciafico

Piazza Invrea 3, 16123 Tel 010 247 08 23

Located just behind the cathedral, in a former patrician villa with frescoes on the facade and ancient pillars inside, this is a traditional Ligurian wine bar serving local specialties including stracçì, a kind of lasagne, and a delicious chocolate tart. Wine bottles line the walls of the ancient vaulted dining room. Reservations are advisable. Closed late Jul–early Aug.

LEVANTO Due Lune

Corso Roma 2, 19015 Tel 0187 80 87 67

Located just behind the seafont, this pizzeria and restaurant is enormously popular with the locals for its good-quality fresh fish – it is particularly well regarded for its seafood dishes, and locals rave about the mussels and clams. Good value for money and friendly service, though it does get crowded. Reservations advisable.

LEVANTO Cavour

Piazza Cavour 1, 19015 Tel 0187 80 84 97

Located between the station and the seafont, this typical trattoria with local cuisine specializes in fish. The original restaurant dates back to 1800. Dishes on the menu include gattafin (large fried ravioli filled with herbs, eggs, onion, and cheese), anchovies in lemon, and the local trofiette pasta with pesto sauce. Closed Mon; Dec–mid-Jan.

MANAROLA La Scogliera

Via Birolli 101, 19017 Tel 0187 92 07 47

A pretty family-run restaurant with exposed stone walls and country-style furniture, La Scogliera specializes in Ligurian cuisine, and it is particularly renowned for its fish and seafood specialties. The atmosphere is relaxed, though this is a very popular place in a busy village. It is wise to reserve ahead.

NERVI Astor

Via delle Palme 16–18, 16167 Tel 010 32 90 11

This bright and unpretentious 41-room hotel/restaurant is just 50 yards from the seashore. It offers fine Ligurian cuisine and good wines in a simple, elegant setting. A house special is pansotti al sugo di noci (fresh pasta filled with ricotta cheese, served in a walnut sauce).

PORTOFINO Da Puny

Piazza Martiri dell'Olivetta 5, 16034 Tel 0185 26 90 37

Da Puny is one of the best restaurants lining Portofino's tiny harbor square. Among the house specialties are fresh fish, pasta in pesto corto (the rich basil, cheese, and pine-nut sauce lifted with a dash of tomato) and antipasti – all are excellent. Reservations are advisable. Closed Thu; mid-Dec–mid-Feb.

PORTOFINO Da U Batti

Vico Nuovo 17, 16034 Tel 0185 26 93 79

One of the finest fish restaurants in one of Liguria's most elegant spots. Set in a tiny square in the heart of the village, Da U Batti is a chic and intimate restaurant with exceptional fish cuisine and attentive service. It is popular with celebrities and foodies alike. Reservations are highly recommended. Closed Mon.

PORTOVENERE Da Iseo

Calata Doria 9, 19025 Tel 0187 79 06 10

A lovely little panoramic trattoria run by the eight-room Locanda Lorena hotel on Palmaria Island and located on the waterfront with views over the harbor and the Gulf of Poets. Typical fish dishes include Ligurian mussels stuffed with meat, anchovies in lemon sauce, and seafood antipasti. Closed Wed; Nov.

PORTOVENERE Le Bocche

Calata Doria 102, 19025 Tel 0187 79 06 22

Perched on the promontory overlooking Portovenere, this restaurant is located below the church of St. Peter, with great views. The minimalist design and wonderful shaded tables outdoors create the ideal background for the delicate flavors of the Ligurian fish dishes. Fine wine list, too. Closed Mon; mid-Dec–mid-Feb.

RAPALLO U' Giancu

Via San Massimo 28, Località San Massimo, 16035 Tel 0185 26 05 05

In the hills northwest of Rapallo, among olive trees, this restaurant is the perfect destination for people who love both great food and cartoons. The owner is a prime mover of the annual Rapallo International Cartoon Festival. Vegetables from the garden complement typical Ligurian specialties. Closed lunch; Wed; mid-Dec–mid-Jan.

SAN REMO Da Vittorio

Piazza Bresca 16, 18038 Tel 0184 50 19 24

A short distance from the shore, Da Vittorio is a traditional favorite specializing in fish. Try the homemade tagliolini pasta served with gallinella, a local sea fish, or the burrida, a fish soup with cuttlefish, served with artichokes when in season, or with peas. Closed 1 wk early Mar, 2 wks Nov.

SAN REMO Da Paolo e Barbara

Via Roma 47, 18038 Tel 0184 53 16 53

An exceptional restaurant with an international reputation. The menu mixes wonderful vegetables – zucchini, herbs, and beans – with local fresh fish – mackerel tartar, San Remo shrimp. Barbara's expertise in patisserie is revealed with her ricotta-cheese cassata. Closed Wed, Thu; 1 wk Jan, 2 wks Jul, 2 wks Dec.

VERNAZZA Gambero Rosso

Piazza Marconi 7, 19018 Tel 0187 81 22 65

Creative modern interpretations of Ligurian seafood dishes are the specialties at the harborside Gambero Rosso. The fish ravioli and the lemon risotto are particularly delicious, as are the original desserts. Diners can choose a tasting menu or from the à la carte selection. Closed Mon; Dec–Feb.

EMILIA-ROMAGNA

BOLOGNA Trattoria Fantoni

Via del Pratello 11/A, 40122 Tel 051 23 63 58

One of the most popular simple trattorie on a street lined with eateries. The menu is very traditional, which means plenty of cavallo (horse meat) served as a steak, along with grilled sausages and delectable vegetable dishes, such as melanzane al forno (baked eggplant).

BOLOGNA Antica Trattoria del Cacciatore

Via Caduti di Casteldebole 25, 40132 Tel 051 56 42 03 Fax 051 56 71 28

The “old hunter’s trattoria” has for more than 200 years served traditional dishes in an old country inn, now by a park near the airport. As well as homemade pastas and breads, specialties include tortellini in broth, capriolo alla boscaiola (goat stewed with porcini), and ravioli in a cheese fondue with truffles.

BOLOGNA Olindo Faccioli

Via Altabella 15/B, 40126 Tel 051 22 31 71 Fax 051 44 09 68

This tiny trattoria is justifiably proud of its wine list (more than 400 bottles line the two rooms); the daily menu is posted on a chalkboard. The cuisine is Bolognese, but with a light touch and lots of vegetarian options, including cresepellini (cheese-filled pasta crêpes) and tagliatelle with homemade pesto.

BOLOGNA Gigina

Via Stendhal 1, 40128 Tel 051 32 23 00

Since opening in 1956, this place has become a firm favorite for a special dinner in a city renowned for the quality of its food. Fanatically local primi always include hand-crafted pasta dishes, such as tortellini in brodo (stuffed pasta in broth) and tagliatelle in the famous house ragù. Closed Aug.

BOLOGNA Pappagalò

Piazza Mercanzia 3c, 40125 Tel 051 23 28 07 Fax 051 23 28 07

Since 1919, princes, artists, and actors have left signed photos to line the walls of this elegant restaurant housed in a 14th-century palazzo practically underneath Bologna’s twin towers. The cuisine is traditional Bolognese, including tortellini (in broth or meat ragout), lasagne, and veal.

CASTELL'ARQUATO Da Faccini

Località Sant'Antonio, 29014 Tel 0523 89 63 40 Fax 0523 89 64 70

This trattoria has been in the same family since 1932. There’s no fixed menu; the chef just follows the seasons. You may find gnocchi with carrots, ravioli of duck and truffles, agnellotti al culatello (pasta stuffed with a typical local salami), or faraona alla creta (guinea fowl cooked in a terra cotta container).

CASTELL'ARQUATO Maps

Piazza Europa 3, 29014 Tel 0523 80 44 11

This restructured medieval mill in the historic center of town focuses on creative cuisine with international flair based on local ingredients. The menu changes daily, according to what is fresh at the market, and focuses around fish specialties (though the chef also works wonders with meat).

FAENZA La Pavona

Via Santa Lucia 45, 48018 Tel 0546 310 75 Fax 0546 636 419

Situated just outside Faenza in a very peaceful area, this rustic but elegant restaurant has a welcoming atmosphere and a multitude of traditional regional dishes to choose from. Recommended is coniglio arrosto (roast rabbit cooked in the wood-fired oven). Closed Tue, Sat lunch; Oct.

FERRARA Antica Trattoria Il Cucco

Via Voltacasotto 3, 44100 Tel 0532 76 00 26 Fax 0532 76 00 26

In the historic center near the cathedral, this lively restaurant has existed since the early 1800s. Try Al burro di di salvia (pasta hats stuffed with pumpkin in a butter and sage sauce), complemented by a regional wine. There is a lovely garden where you can dine under a pergola in summer.

FERRARA La Sgarbata

Via Sgarbata 84, 44046 Tel 0532 71 21 10 Fax 0532 71 21 10

This countryside trattoria on the outskirts of the city serves up tasty local dishes such as cappellacci di zucca alla ferrarese (Ferrara’s signature pumpkin-stuffed pasta), as well as specialty fish dishes based on the catch of the day. Locals often make plans to meet here just for the tasty pizzas. Occasional live music in summer.

FERRARA Quel Fantastico Giovedì

Via Castelnovo 9, 44100 Tel 0532 76 05 70 Fax 0532 76 05 70

This bright restaurant specializing in seafood dishes features a varied and creative menu that runs the gamut from the more traditional – such as the risotto con vongole veraci (rice with tiny clams) and braised anguilla (eel) – to the creative, including Japanese-style sushi of salmon. Reserve ahead.

FERRARA L'Oca Giuliva

Via Boccacanal di Santo Stefano 38–40, 44100 Tel 0532 20 76 28

In a town center packed with budget eateries, this small, serene restaurant is the best place to sample refined local cooking. The daily changing menu might feature faraoana (guinea hen), anguilla arrostita (roasted eel), or fillet of beef. The wine list is excellent. Closed Mon, Tue lunch.

FIDENZA Il Duomo

Via Micheli 27, 43036 Tel 0524 52 42 68

This restaurant serves a menu that includes such regional specialties as tortelli alla ricotta (cheese-stuffed pasta), tagliatelle all'uovo con ragù (egg noodles in meat sauce), cappelletti in brodo (pasta soup), and trippa alla parmigiana (tripe smothered in tomato sauce and grated cheese). Closed Wed.

GORO Ferrari

Via Antonio Brugnoli 244, 44020 Tel 0533 99 64 48 Fax 0533 99 65 46

A short stroll from the port and fish market, this restaurant has been family-run for 60 years. The market determines the daily menu at this purveyor of Po Delta specialties, though you can't go wrong with the risotto di pesce (fish risotto). There's also pizza on Fridays, Saturdays, and Sundays at dinner. Closed Wed.

MODENA Al Boschetto da Loris

Via Due Canali Nord 202, 41100 Tel 059 25 17 59

Set in a vast park of century-old trees, Da Loris is installed in the Duke of Este's ancient hunting cabin. The menu is brief, but stuffed with the best of Modenese home-cooking, including tortellini in capon broth, tagliatelle al ragù (in a meat sauce), and meats, both spit-roasted and grilled. Summer seating in the garden. Closed Sun dinner; Wed.

MODENA Fini

Rua Frati Minori 54, 41100 Tel 059 22 33 14 Fax 059 22 02 47

A mainstay of local cuisine since 1912. Among the kitchen's exquisite dishes are such traditional specialties as tortellini di cappone in brodo (a soup of capon-stuffed pasta), pasticcio di maccheroni (a veal-based ragout folded in pasta crêpes), and an English-style carrello (cart) of boiled meats.

MODENA Giusti

Vicolo Squallore 46/Via Farini 75, 41100 Tel 059 22 25 33 Fax 059 22 25 33

Reserve ahead for one of the five tables at this bastion of Modenese cooking attached to a fine foods shop. The Galli (husband and wife proprietors) are fond of using capons in everything, from the tortellini soup to the crunchy salads, and the stinco (roasted joint) of veal or pork is excellent. Open lunch only (except Mon, Sun).

PARMA Aldo

Piazzale Inzani 15, 43100 Tel 0521 20 60 01 Fax 0521 20 60 01

This trattoria in the city the very name of which makes up the foundation of Italian cuisine (this is the Parma of Parmesan cheese and Parma ham) serves up the classics with interesting touches: smoked roast beef, tortellini al prosciutto (ham-stuffed pasta), and guinea fowl with orange sauce. Closed Sun dinner, Mon.

PARMA Le Viole

Strada Nuova 60a, Località Castelnovo Golese, 43100 Tel 0521 60 10 00 Fax 0521 60 16 73

A delightful place in the suburbs of Parma run by two sisters from the Friuli/Slovenia border town of Gorizia. Their innovative touches and modern twists on local recipes result in such tasty tidbits as fagottini (parcels) of turkey with vegetables. Excellent homemade desserts.

PARMA La Greppia

Strada Garibaldi 39A, 43100 Tel 0521 23 36 86 Fax 0521 22 13 15

Top choice for a top-class meal in a city renowned for its cooking. Traditional choices abound – they make the best stracotto (braised beef) in Parma – as do innovative dishes. Try the veal kidneys with shaved truffles, the prosciutto-topped asparagus with herb-stuffed tortelli, and the veal scaloppine (escalope).

PIACENZA Antica Osteria del Teatro

Via Verdi 16, 29100 Tel 0523 32 37 77 Fax 0523 30 49 34

Set among the brick and plaster walls of a 15th-century palazzo, this elegant restaurant has an excellent wine list accompanying a seasonal menu of imaginative dishes prepared with the best of local produce. Look for tortelli dei Farnesi (ricotta and spinach pasta parcels in a butter and sage sauce). Closed Mon, Sun.

RAVENNA Ca de Ven

Via C. Ricci 24, 48100 Tel/Fax 0544 301 63

They say Dante lived in a boarding house on this site, now occupied by a 16th-century palazzo next to the poet's tomb. Its brick vaulted cellars are lined with wine bottles and host one of Ravenna's best trattorie. The specialty is piadine, the local flatbread, topped with meat, cheeses, or vegetables. Closed Mon.

RAVENNA Villa AnticaVia Faentina 136, 48100 Tel 0544 50 05 22

Set in a 19th-century villa with a tent-link gazebo in the back garden. The menu changes seasonally and includes pastas, grilled or roasted meats and fish, as well as some unusual preparations like garganelli all'indiana (curried pasta). There is also game in season and pizza.

RAVENNA Bella VeneziaVia IV Novembre 16, 48100 Tel 0544 21 27 46

A varied menu with something to suit everyone is available at this well-established central restaurant. Dishes are largely from the local Romagna tradition or Italian classics, and they include the house risotto or a choice of hand-made pastas, pork, veal, and a selection of other grilled meats. Closed Sun; Jan.

RIMINI EuropaVia Roma 51, 47900 Tel/Fax 0541 287 61

The Albani family's been serving some of Rimini's finest cooking for 70 years. Fish forms the basis of the menu here, with dishes including a salad of warm fish with radicchio, seafood spaghetti, and strozzapreti ai crostaci (pasta dumplings in a sauce of crustaceans). Closed Sun.

RIMINI Osteria dè BörgVia Forzieri 12, 47921 Tel 0541 560 74

Two successful decades have established Börg's reputation as the best place to eat meat in this fish-obsessed seaside town. A landlubber's menu could take in cured meats or pecorino cheese to start, followed by home-made pasta served any number of ways, and beef or lamb cooked on the open grill.

FLORENCE*AngiolinoVia Santo Spirito 36r, 50125 Tel 055 239 89 76

Map 3 B1

Modernization has compromised the old-world atmosphere that used to prevail at this Oltrarno trattoria. Nonetheless, it retains a certain neighborhood bustle, even if standards are not always consistent. Specialties on the menu include penne with porcini mushrooms and roast pork with garlicky spinach.

BaldovinoVia San Giuseppe 22r, 50122 Tel 055 24 17 73

Map 4 E1

Big, noisy, and lively, Baldovino is one of those places where you can eat anything, from a salad or a plate of cheese to a full meal. In between there are excellent pizzas, good pasta dishes, a choice of fish or meat main courses, and a number of vegetarian options. Desserts are particularly good and there's a long wine list.

BoccadamaPiazza Santa Croce 25-26r, 50122 Tel 055 24 36 40

Map 6 F4

This wine bar/restaurant enjoys a superb position on Piazza Santa Croce with a handful of outside tables; shelves of wine line the walls of the cozy interior. Wine can be ordered by the glass or the bottle from a long list. You can either nibble on a selection of cheese or cold meats or go for a full meal; the food is good and quite imaginative.

Da MarioVia Rosina 2r, 50123 Tel 055 21 85 50

Map 1 C4

This lively trattoria is always packed with a mix of stall owners, business people, and tourists who come here for the good, traditional food at very reasonable prices. The daily handwritten menu is posted on the wall near the kitchen and features hearty soups, simple pasta, and a number of meat and side dishes. Closed dinner; Sun.

Da SergioPiazza San Lorenzo 8r, 50129 Tel 055 28 19 41 Fax 055 28 19 41

Map 1 C4

A popular, family-run eatery, Sergio's trattoria is hidden behind the market stalls. Big tables (you may end up sharing) are laid with white cloths in two airy rooms. The food is Tuscan cucina casalinga (traditional cooking) and very good; there's always tripe on Mondays and Thursdays and fresh fish on Fridays. Closed Sun.

Fuori PortaVia Monte alle Croci 10r, 50125 Tel 055 234 24 83 Fax 055 234 14 08

Map 4 E3

One of Florence's classic enoteche, this is a popular place where you can go for a glass of wine or something more substantial. Choose a wine from a list featuring over 600 labels. The crostini (toasted open sandwiches) make a particularly good accompaniment, but there are also good pastas and salads.

Il PizzaiuoloVia de' Macci 113r, 50122 Tel 055 24 11 71

Map 4 E1

Be sure to reserve a table: this lively pizzeria/restaurant is on the small side and it's always full. The pizzas come Neapolitan-style, with puffy bases and buffalo mozzarella. There's also a great selection of antipasti (grilled vegetables and seafood salad) and excellent pasta dishes from southern Italy.

Il Santo BevitoreVia Santo Spirito 64/66r, 50125 Tel 055 21 12 64Map 5 A4

Housed in an ex-stable, this relaxed restaurant/wine bar features delicately flavored innovative dishes. The menu changes seasonally, but there is always a selection of soups and homemade pastas, fish and grilled meat. Or you can choose from a selection of well-sourced cheese and cured meats. The wine list is interesting, too.

Il VegetarianoVia delle Ruote 30r, 50129 Tel 055 47 50 30Map 2 D3

One of Florence's few vegetarian restaurants, this place has been around for a long time, but continues to be popular. The decor is rustic and the food wholesome and cheap; choose from the menu written on a blackboard, pay at the desk, and take your receipt to the counter to collect your food. There's also a great salad bar.

La CasalingaVia del Michelozzo 9r, 50125 Tel 055 21 86 24Map 5 B5

In spite of the numbers of tourists who flock to this no-frills trattoria, it is still very much a neighborhood affair, where the food is wholesome and plentiful. Go for the local dishes – ribollita (bread and vegetable soup), arista (roast pork), or bollito misto (mixed, boiled meats). For dessert, try the homemade tiramisù.

Le MossacceVia del Proconsolo 55r, 50122 Tel 055 29 43 61Map 4 D1

It's not easy to find a genuine Florentine trattoria in the middle of town, but this place near the Bargello is as authentic as it gets. Cheap, top-quality Florentine dishes such as ribollita (bread and vegetable soup) and spezzatino (veal stew) are served in busy, noisy surrounds. Closed Sat, Sun; Aug.

Nerbone

Stand 292, Mercato Centrale, Via dell'Ariento, 50123

Map 1 C4

Don't be fooled by first impressions: insalubrious Nerbone's boiled-beef sandwich has made it into the world's finest food guides. This quintessential working lunch is supplemented by a value menu that includes Florentine classics like pappa al pomodoro (tomato and bread soup) and, of course, tripe. Lunch only; closed Sun.

4 LeoniVia dei Vellutini 1r, 50125 Tel 055 21 85 62 Fax 055 267 88 70Map 5 B4

This restaurant is conveniently situated five minutes from the city center, near the Ponte Vecchio. In warm weather, tables are set out on the pretty Piazza della Passera, but the ambience inside is pleasant, too. Though no longer the simple, traditional place it once was, the service is always friendly and the setting charming. Closed Wed lunch.

Antico FattoreVia Lambertesca 1/3r, 50123 Tel 055 28 89 75 Fax 055 28 33 41Map 6 D4

This trattoria, a favored haunt of the Florentine literati, was founded in 1908. Though it has lost some of its old charm, the food and service are still of a refreshingly old-fashioned kind. Try the pasta with wild boar and the involtini (meat wraps) with artichoke hearts. Closed Sun.

Buca MarioPiazza degli Ottaviani 16r, 50123 Tel 055 21 41 79 Fax 055 264 73 36Map 5 B2

One of Florence's traditional cellar restaurants, Buca Mario is a staple among tourists. In spite of its popularity, it maintains its genuinely unpretentious Florentine atmosphere and offers local standards such as ribollita (vegetable soup), osso buco (veal shank), grilled meats, and arista (roast pork).

Cavolo NeroVia dell'Ardiglione 22, 50125 Tel/Fax 055 29 47 44Map 3 B1

This smart little Oltrarno restaurant, with elegant decor, is popular with an arty crowd that comes for the sunny Tuscan cooking with the odd twist. Specialties include spaghetti with clams, roasted sea bass with eggplant and cherry tomatoes, and, for meat-eaters, pigeon stuffed with foie gras.

CoquinarosVia delle Oche 15r, 50122 Tel 055 230 21 53Map 6 E2

A convenient, cozy little place, just behind the Duomo, where you can eat at almost any time of the day or evening. There are some delicious pasta dishes (try the ravioli with pecorino and pears). You can also order a salad, a plate of cheese or cured meats, or a toasted open sandwich. There are good wines by the glass and bottle, too.

Frescobaldi Wine BarVia dei Magazzini 2/4r, 50122 Tel 055 28 47 24 Fax 055 265 65 35Map 6 E3

This wine bar and restaurant is owned by one of Tuscany's foremost wine producers. Lunch is a casual affair, while dinner is more formal, with white tablecloths and gleaming crystal. Creative, elegant food is accompanied by some fine in-house wines; if you just want a snack and a glass, pop into Frescobaldino next door. Closed Sun, Mon lunch.

Il GuscioVia dell'Orto 49, 50125 Tel/Fax 055 22 44 21Map 3 A1

This lively San Frediano restaurant is often full. The food is based on Tuscan traditions but is a little more refined than in your average trattoria and there is a good wine list, too. First courses might include gnocchi with asparagus, and crepelle (thin pancakes), while the delicious mixed seafood al guazzetto (in tomato sauce) is a fixture.

Ristorante Ricchi

Piazza Santo Spirito 8r, 50125 Tel 055 21 58 64 Fax 055 28 08 30

Map 3 B2

With elegant, modern decor and a lovely terrace, this small fish restaurant is situated on one of Florence's most beautiful squares. Oriental influences are evident in dishes such as pasta with shrimp and mint, swordfish with Sichuan pepper, and salt cod in a spice crust. There's a limited choice for carnivores, too.

I Latini

Via dei Palchetti 6r, 50123 Tel 055 21 09 16

Map 5 B3

There is always a crowd of both foreigners and locals clamoring for a table outside this large, noisy trattoria where huge hams hang from the ceiling. The food is traditional and the portions are enormous. Try the succulent grilled and roasted meats; bistecca alla fiorentina (broiled T-bone steak) is an experience.

La Giostra

Via Borgo Pinti 12r, 50122 Tel 055 24 13 41

Map 2 E5, 6 F2

A vaulted cellar-style dining area and traditional decor make this one of Florence's best spots for a romantic dinner. The quirky, Austrian-influenced menu includes dishes such as fillet of capon, roast pigeon, Chianina beef, and Wienerschnitzel. Reserve ahead in summer if you want to claim one of the few street tables. Excellent fine wine list.

Osteria del Caffè Italiano

V Isola delle Stinche 11/13r, 50122 Tel 055 28 93 68 Fax 055 28 89 50

Map 6 F3

You can eat at any time of the day in this beautifully appointed restaurant; at mealtimes there is a full menu of mainly Tuscan dishes, but in between you can snack on excellent cheeses or cured meats and choose from a selection of Tuscan wines. The next-door pizzeria is under the same ownership.

Osteria Santo Spirito

Piazza Santo Spirito 16r, 50125 Tel 055 238 23 83

Map 3 B2

Attention to detail in both preparation and presentation is what places this stylish Oltrarno place a notch above its rivals in this square. Seafood, meat, and vegetarian pasta dishes are prepared from scratch, and mains often include traditional ingredients such as baccalà (salt cod). The terrace is especially atmospheric on summer evenings.

Cantinetta Antinori

Piazza Antinori 3, 50123 Tel 055 235 98 27 Fax 055 235 98 77

Map 5 C2

More than just a wine bar, yet not a full-blown restaurant, this room on the ground floor of one of Florence's finest Renaissance palaces makes a lovely place to eat. There are traditional Florentine dishes such as tripe and pasta with duck sauce and a fine selection of Antinori wines. Closed Sat, Sun.

Garga

Via del Moro 48r, 50123 Tel 055 239 88 98

Map 5 B2

A Florentine classic presided over by Giuliano, one of the city's great characters, Garga is fun and often full. The walls are daubed in garish frescoes and you eat in one of a series of cozy rooms. Some dishes are better than others, but the taglierini del Magnifico (pasta with a creamy orange-and-mint flavored sauce) is superb.

Cibreo

V Andrea del Verrocchio 8r, 50122 Tel 055 234 11 00 Fax 055 24 49 66

Map 4 F1

This restaurant offers superbly prepared traditional Tuscan dishes in an elegant and airy setting. There is no pasta, but an array of sublime soups and thoroughly Florentine dishes such as tripe, cockscomb, and kidneys. Safer options include lamb with artichokes or stuffed pigeon. Fabulous desserts. Closed Mon, Sun.

Enoteca Pinchiorri

Via Ghibellina 87, 50122 Tel 055 24 27 77 Fax 055 24 49 83

Map 4 E1

Pinchiorri is frequently described as Italy's finest restaurant and it has one of Europe's best-stocked cellars, boasting over 80,000 bottles. On the ground floor of a 15th-century palazzo, the ambience is very special, too, but the food (ultra-refined Tuscan/French) and the fussy service will not please all. Closed Mon, Sun.

Fuor d'Acqua

Via Pisana 37r, 50143 (west of city center) Tel 055 22 22 99

Many locals say that this is the best fish restaurant in Florence; it is also one of the most expensive. The fish is very fresh, indeed, coming straight off the boats in Versilia and cooked with the minimum of fuss. Some crustaceans are served raw. Try the black thin pasta ribbons with calamari and sage. Closed Sun.

Oliviero

Via delle Terme 51r, 50123 Tel 055 21 24 21

Map 5 C3

A vaguely retro atmosphere prevails at this elegant restaurant in the center of town, but the food is up-to-the-minute creative Tuscan, and delicious, too. Choose between interesting fish and meat dishes – try galantine of rabbit or seared tuna steak with ginger and white beans. Service is professional and there's an excellent wine list. Closed Sun.

Onice

Viale Michelangelo 78, 50125 Tel 055 68 16 31 Fax 055 658 25 44

Map 4 F3

This award-winning and Michelin-starred restaurant is part of the chic Villa La Vedetta hotel, which overlooks the city from near Piazzale Michelangelo. The ambience is elegant and contemporary, while the food is superb and simply prepared. The menu changes with the season. Closed Mon.

Ora d'AriaVia dei Georgofili 9–11/r, 50125 Tel 055 200 16 99

Map 6 D4

Come to Ora d'Aria for modern Tuscan cuisine with Californian and French influences, served in stylish, design-savvy environs. The five-course seasonal tasting menu (€60) gives the best overview of celebrated local chef Marco Santib's modern use of traditional local ingredients. Reservations are essential. Closed Sun; Aug.

San JacopoBorgo San Jacopo 62r, 50125 Tel 055 28 16 61 Fax 055 29 11 14

Map 5 C4

One of the city's newer restaurants, San Jacopo enjoys a fabulous setting on the south bank of the Arno. Reserve ahead and ask for one of the tables on the tiny terrace. The chic and breezy atmosphere suits the unpretentious but beautifully served food very well. Fish fans should try the brodetto (fish soup), an Adriatic specialty. Closed Tue dinner.

TUSCANY*AREZZO Buca di San FrancescoVia San Francesco 1, 52100 Tel 0575 232 71

Set alongside the church of San Francesco, in the historic center, the Buca is ideal for those who have been sightseeing in the frescoes church. The restaurant is located in the basement of a 14th-century building. Here, you can sample the famous Tuscan ribollita (cabbage and bread soup), or try the Chianti beef stew.

AREZZO Miseria e NobiltàPiaggia San Bartolomeo 2, 52100 Tel 0575 212 45

Sleek exposed brickwork and a soft jazz soundtrack signal right away that this establishment is a little different from the usual fare in this pretty hill town. The modern design is complemented by a menu of innovative flavor combinations. After dinner, the place turns into a cellar bar with late opening hours. Closed Mon, Tue lunch.

ARTIMINO Da DelfinaVia della Chiesa 1, 59015 Tel 055 871 80 74 Fax 055 871 81 75

Surrounded by vineyards and some interesting historic villas, this delightful restaurant is situated in a walled medieval village just 14 miles (22 km) from Florence. Owner Carlo Cioni renews the culinary traditions of his mother, Delfina. The rabbit galantine and macaroni with duck sauce are simply exquisite. Closed Tue lunch, Sun dinner; Mon.

CAMALDOLI Il CedroVia di Camaldoli 20, Località Moggiona, 52010 Tel/Fax 0575 55 60 80

One of the most popular restaurants in the region, Camaldoli is known for its finely cooked specialties such as venison and boar, no doubt hunted in the thickly forested Casentino Mountains, which also provide breathtaking views. In spring and summer, go for delicate fried vegetables. Reservations advised. Closed dinner (in winter); Mon.

CASTELNUOVO BERARDENGA La Bottega del 30Via Santa Caterina 2, Località Villa a Sesta, 53019 Tel/Fax 0577 35 92 26

This is a serious, award-winning restaurant run by Franco Camelia and his French wife Hélène. The menu includes a renowned petto di anatra con il finocchio selvatico (breast of duck with wild fennel). Pasta dishes are cooked with a difference. There's also superb homemade spaghetti with nettles, wild mint, and porcini. Fine wine list.

COLLE VAL D'ELSA ArnolfoVia XX Settembre 50/52A, 53034 Tel 0577 92 05 49

French-trained chefs have earned this intimate restaurant one of Tuscany's few Michelin stars. The wines, food, and service are all impeccable, though the reverential hush feels a bit odd for Italy. Typical dishes include a sublime ribollita (Tuscan bread soup with cabbage), and pigeon cooked with wine, prunes, and pine nuts. Closed Tue, Wed.

CORTONA Osteria del TeatroVia Maffei 2, 52044 Tel 0575 63 05 56

This classic trattoria serves well-prepared traditional dishes. Apart from the excellent soups, try the risotto with porcini and saffron, or the caramelle al radicchio rosso (pasta stuffed with red chicory and ricotta). The guinea fowl with mushrooms is also good. There are some nice wines to wash it all down. Closed Wed.

CORTONA PreludioVia Guelfa 11, 52044 Tel 0575 63 01 04 Fax 0575 63 16 82

Cheese soufflé with pears and truffles: this unusual combination of flavors is typical of a restaurant that creatively mixes local ingredients to gratify the taste buds. Succulent meat dishes are based on Chianina beef, the renowned local breed. The menu also offers child-friendly dishes. Closed Mon (in winter).

ELBA Osteria LibertariaCalata Matteotti 12, Portoferraio, 57037 Tel 0565 91 49 78

At this informal eatery at the quiet end of Portoferraio's quayside the menu changes daily depending on the catch. Simple seafood, grilled over an open flame, is offered alongside traditional Elban stews. Crisp, local white wines make a fine accompaniment. Tables at the front have fine views over the harbor. Closed Dec–Mar.

ELBA Publius

Piazza del Castagneto, Località Poggio Marciana, 57030 Tel 0565 992 08 Fax 0565 90 41 74

Food with a view. Not only does this historic trattoria have perhaps the best cellar on the island, but it also provides an alternative to the seafood that prevails elsewhere. In addition to fish, you can eat poultry, game, lamb roasted in herbs, and a wide choice of cheeses. Closed Mon (in low season).

GAIOLE IN CHIANTI Il Carlino D'Oro

Via Brolio, località San Regolo, 53013 Tel 0577 74 71 36 Fax 0577 35 70 77

Eating here is a bit like being invited to Sunday lunch at the home of your Tuscan neighbors. Crostini neri (toast with black olive paste) will be followed by panzanella (bread salad) in summer, or a bean soup in winter. The ribbon pasta with hare sauce is also delicious. Leave room for fried chicken and rabbit, or calves' liver with sage.

GAIOLE IN CHIANTI Castello di Spaltenna

Località Pieve di Spaltenna, 53013 Tel 0577 74 94 83 Fax 0577 74 92 69

This lovely stone-walled, flower-filled restaurant forms part of a peaceful hotel in a castle just outside Gaiole in Chianti. Popular with expatriates, it offers refined versions of Tuscan classics such as pigeon cooked in Chianti, fresh porcini mushrooms, garbanzo soup, and, occasionally, more offbeat innovations.

LIVORNO Da Galileo

Via della Campana 20, 57122 Tel 0586 88 90 09

For two generations, the Piagneri family has been delighting diners with authentic local cuisine in this reassuringly simple restaurant. Even after five decades, Da Galileo's passion for gastronomy has not waned. Fish prevails, including various soups, seafood fettuccine, and salt cod cooked with onions, Livorno-style. Closed Sun dinner; Wed.

LUCCA Da Giulio in Pelleria

Via delle Conce 47, 55100 Tel 0583 559 48

You must reserve ahead and enter into the spirit of this bright, boisterous, and extremely busy neighborhood restaurant. This is the reign of hearty local dishes such as zuppa di farro (Tuscan white bean and spelt soup) and polenta, so expect no gastronomic surprises. The prices are remarkably reasonable.

LUCCA Vecchia Trattoria Buralli

Piazza Sant'Agostino 10, 55100 Tel 0583 95 06 11

This trattoria provides a complete vegetarian menu on Friday evenings. Try the vegetable-based zuppa alla frantoiana. For dessert, go for buccellato di Lucca, a warm dessert of fried bread, anise, and raisins soaked in Vin Santo. The wine list features Luccan recipes and wines. Closed Wed.

LUCCA Buca di Sant'Antonio

Via della Cervia 3, 55100 Tel 0583 558 81 Fax 0583 31 21 99

This duly restored 19th-century tavern, with an excellent location, serves classic local fare with the occasional innovative touch. The stuffed rabbit en crouste with mushrooms is excellent. In winter, several dishes feature locally grown chestnuts. Try buccellato, the tasty local dessert. Interesting wines. Closed Sun dinner; Mon.

MASSA MARITTIMA Taverna Vecchio Borgo

Via Norma Parenti 12, 58024 Tel/Fax 0566 90 39 50

Ancient barrel-vaulted rooms with an enticingly well-stocked wine cellar. The menu usually features pasta stuffed with ricotta and dressed with a sauce of nuts and herbs, as well as acquacotta (bread soup). The wild boar cooked with olives and the pheasant breast cooked in Vin Santo are also recommended. Closed Mon.

MONTALCINO Il Boccon Divino

Via Traversa dei Monti 202, 53024 Tel 0577 84 82 33

Perfect for summer dining al fresco, this restaurant offers some interesting dishes and a magnificent view. The carabaccia (onion soup) is a must, and the scottiglia di cinghiale (wild boar stew) excellent. Not exclusively local, the cheese board is also interesting. Excellent wine list. Closed Tue.

MONTECATINI TERME Ristorante Montacolle

Via Marlianesa 27, 50016 Tel 0572 724 80

Overlooking Montecatini and the valley below, this restaurant is a wonderful place to relax and enjoy a meal – the views are particularly wonderful from the outside tables, weather permitting. Exceptional hospitality and traditional Tuscan dishes, such as spaghetti al Chianti, are the specialty here. Closed Mon, lunch Tue–Sat, Sun, 10 days in Jul & Nov.

MONTECATINI TERME Enoteca Giovanni

Via Garibaldi 27, 51016 Tel 0572 716 95

Chef Giovanni Rotti's approach to local cuisine is both innovative and in keeping with the fine collection of wines in his cellar. This memorable dining experience is further enhanced by superb service. Try the pigeon with grapes and pine nuts, and seek Rotti's assistance in choosing what to drink with it. Closed Mon.

MONTEPULCIANO Osteria Acquacheta

Via del Teatro 22, 53045 Tel 0578 71 70 86

This rustic Tuscan grill in the heart of Montepulciano is a meat lover's haven. As well as the famous bistecca alla fiorentina (T-bone steak), there's staples of local provenance, including hand-rolled pici pasta and pecorino cheese. It's small and always busy, so it is wise to reserve ahead. Closed Tue; mid-Jan–mid-Mar.

MONTEPULCIANO La Grotta

Località San Biagio 15, 53045 Tel/Fax 0578 75 76 07

A restaurant for discerning diners, La Grotta is located opposite one of the foremost expressions of Renaissance architecture in Tuscany: Sangallo the Elder's Church of San Biagio. Specialties include pici (local pasta strings) with duck and saffron sauce. The fillet of Chianina beef with asparagus and truffles is also good. Closed Wed.

MONTERIGGIONI Il Pozzo

Piazza Roma 20, 53035 Tel 0577 30 41 27

Occupying 13th-century stables, Il Pozzo is an ideal place for lunch. The food is rigorously Tuscan, essentially simple, but never banal. Try the truffle-fragrant tortelli al cartoccio (cooked in foil), which comes wrapped up like a packet to conserve the aromas. Equally delicious is the stuffed pigeon. Closed Sun dinner, Mon.

ORBETELLO Osteria del Lupacante

Corso Italia 103, 58015 Tel 0564 86 76 18 Fax 0564 86 05 85

This pleasant osteria sticks to old ways in a place increasingly overrun by affluent out-of-towners. Based on seafood, the cooking is light in touch and quite adventurous. The zuppa di pesce (fish soup) is excellent. Also good are the risotto with shrimp and pine nuts, and the sole with almonds and onions. Closed Wed.

PESCIA Cecco

Via Francesco Forti 96/98, 51017 Tel 0572 47 79 55

This quiet, easy-going restaurant is the best place to sample Pescia's famous asparagus. Other examples of traditional fare include pollo al mattone (chicken cooked under a brick) and fagioli al fiasco (beans cooked in a flask). On cold days, try the dessert cioncia, a delicious house specialty.

PIENZA Latte di Luna

Via San Carlo 2-4, 53026 Tel 0578 74 86 06

A cute trattoria by Pienza's eastern gate, Latte di Luna offers reliable cooking in family-friendly environs. The menu generally sticks to Tuscan staples, like pici al cinghiale (rolled pasta with wild boar), and executes them well. For a local flavor, order pecorino di Pienza, the town's famed ewe's milk cheese. Closed Tue; Feb, Jul.

PISA Osteria dei Cavalieri

Via San Frediano 16, 56126 Tel 050 58 08 58

This friendly tavern occupies the ground floor of a medieval tower-house halfway between Pisa's two most prestigious centers of higher education. It's common to find a scholarly looking crowd enjoying the special all-in-one lunch dishes. The menu expands in the evening. Try the beef with beans and mushrooms. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

PISA Porton Rosso

Vicolo del Porton Rosso 11, 56126 Tel 050 58 05 66

This restaurant in the warren of streets near Pisa's market has an enviable reputation for fish. A typical meal might include a mixed antipasto di mare (seafood appetizer) followed by gnocchi al branzino (dumplings with sea bass), then grilled baccalà (salt cod). There are many options for carnivores, too. Closed Sun; Aug.

PISA Ristorante V. Beni

Piazza Gambacorti Chiara 22, 56125 Tel 050 25 06 7

In a building dating back to the 14th century, this restaurant is situated a 15-minute walk from the Leaning Tower of Pisa, meaning that it is relatively off the tourist trail. Even so, it is enormously popular with the locals, and it is best to reserve in advance. Fish-based dishes are a specialty. Closed Sun.

PISTOIA La Bottegaia

Via del Lastrone 17, 51100 Tel 0573 36 56 02 Fax 0573 35 84 50

Looking onto the old market square to one side and the cathedral to the other, this cheerful, unpretentious wine bar boasts 300 of Italy's best wines. The food menu features cheeses, cold cuts, and other toothsome delicacies to go with the wines. Superb desserts. The service is friendly. Closed Sun lunch; Mon.

PORTO ERCOLE Osteria dei Nobili Santi

Via dell'Ospizio 8, 58018 Tel/Fax 0564 83 30 15

There aren't many bargains to be had in Porto Ercole. Nonetheless, this little fish restaurant offers value for money and the food is delicious. The amazing antipasti della casa (the house appetizers) will leave you almost satiated. It's worth making an effort to leave some room for some of the delectable dishes and main courses. Closed lunch; Mon.

PRATO Osteria Cibbè

Piazza Mercatale 49, 59100 Tel 0574 60 75 09

Housed in a medieval building in the city center, this cozy little family-run eatery serves good local cold cuts and crostini for antipasto, followed by classic Tuscan fare such as pappardelle with game sauce. The desserts are home-made, too: try the apple and spelt tart. Interesting wine list. Closed Sun.

SAN GIMIGNANO Osteria delle Catene

Via Mainardi 18, 53037 Tel/Fax 0577 94 19 66

This small restaurant specializes in regional cooking enhanced with its own special touch. You could start off with cold cuts made from wild boar, then continue with a saffron soup made according to a medieval recipe. The hare cooked in local wine is also good, and the homemade desserts are worth leaving room for.

SAN GIMIGNANO Dorandò

Vicolo dell'Oro 2, 53037 Tel/Fax 0577 94 18 62

This restaurant is small and very select, so reservations are advised. Impressive wine list, and dishes to go with it. The pasta with pigeon sauce on a bed of creamed mushrooms is delicious. There are various fish specialties, including angler fish in a nutty crust served with leeks. Take your time to enjoy it all. Closed Mon (in winter).

SANSEPOLCRO Ristorante da Ventura

Via Aggiunti 30, 52037 Tel/Fax 0575 74 25 60

Run by the same family for over 50 years, this charming restaurant serves delectable agnolotti al tartufo (stuffed pasta with truffles). Another of their classic dishes is the veal cooked slowly in Chianti. Mushrooms often feature too. Even the cantucci biscuits for dipping in Vin Santo are homemade. Closed Sun dinner; Mon.

SATURNIA Bacco e Cerere

Via Mazzini 4, 58050 Tel/Fax 0564 60 12 35

The wide range of appetizers at this small, friendly place is a great introduction to traditional Maremma cuisine. The zuppa di ricotta makes a delectable change from the traditional acquacotta (vegetable soup served over toast). The enoteca (wine bar) of the same name offers interesting bottles. Closed Wed.

SIENA Enoteca I Terzi

Via dei Termini 7, 53100 Tel/Fax 0577 443 29

This restaurant has a nice vaulted space and a friendly atmosphere in which to enjoy a good bottle of wine accompanied by a wide range of premium cold cuts, carpaccio, smoked meats, steak tartare, and cheeses from all over Italy. In addition, each day there are three cooked dishes, which change with the seasons. Closed Sun.

SIENA La Compagnia dei Vinattieri

Via delle Terme 79, 53100 Tel 0577 23 65 68 Fax 0577 20 55 39

An impressive underground, vaulted space with a magnificent wine cellar and some interesting food to go with it. You can sip by the glass, with a platter of cheese and salami, or enjoy a bottle with a hot meal featuring dishes such as a salt cod soup. Good desserts and unusual sweet wines. Only one table outside.

SIENA La Taverna del Capitano

Via del Capitano 6/8, 53100 Tel/Fax 0577 28 80 94

Located up near the Duomo, this restaurant with vaulted ceilings and dark wood furnishings is quintessentially Senese. The ribollita (vegetable soup), pici (traditional pasta) with pecorino and pepper, stewed rabbit, and tasty beef platter all speak for unbroken traditions. The house wine is good, too. Closed Tue (in winter).

SIENA Osterie Le Logge

Via del Porzione 33, 53100 Tel 0577 480 13 Fax 0577 22 47 97

Siena's prettiest, and often full, restaurant has a dark wood and marble interior. The tables are laid with crisp linen cloths and decorated with plants. Home-produced oils and Montalcino wines accompany dishes that wander slightly from mainstream Tuscan cooking. The stuffed guinea fowl is delicious. Closed Sun.

SIENA Cane e Gatto

Via Pagliaresi 6, 53100 Tel 0577 28 75 45

Traditional Senese cooking features highly on the agenda at this intimate, family-run restaurant en route to the Porta Romana. There's no menu, just a fixed-price deal for antipasto, primo, secondo, and dessert, all made with whatever ingredients are available at the morning market. Not a place to dine in a hurry. Closed lunch, Thu.

VIAREGGIO Cabreo

Via Firenze 14, 55049 Tel 0584 546 43

The main focus of this pleasant restaurant, located in a little side street, is seafood simply cooked and served in a way that best enhances its natural aromas. Specialties include spaghetti with clams, gnocchi with lobster sauce, and baked fish. It is advisable to leave enough room for the delicious homemade desserts. Closed Mon.

VOLTERRA Etruria

Piazza dei Priory 6-8, 56048 Tel/Fax 0588 860 64

Situated on Volterra's main square, Etruria has an interior decorated in a 19th-century style. In summer there are plenty of tables outside to dine al fresco and soak up the ambience of this ancient town. Try the Etruria antipasti, truffles, or their specialty – sweet and sour wild boar. Closed Wed.

VOLTERRA Osteria dei Poeti

Via Matteotti 54, 56048 Tel 0588 860 29

Located on one of the town's main thoroughfares, Poeti is a great place to sample quality local cooking. Dishes like zuppa Volterrana (bread and vegetable soup) and pasta with wild boar ragout arrive briskly. This is also a good choice for younger eaters: Poeti opens an hour earlier in the evening than most other establishments. Closed Thu.

VOLTERRA Del Duca

Via di Castello 2, 56048 Tel 0588 815 10 Fax 0588 929 57

A charming 16th-century palazzo houses this small restaurant with its ancient wine cellar and secret garden. Try the fried pumpkin flowers stuffed with ricotta and tomato. The pigeon breast cooked with locally grown saffron and olives is another specialty. There is also a good cheese platter. Closed Tue.

UMBRIA

AMELIA Anita

Via Roma 31, 05022 Tel 0744 98 21 46 Fax 0744 98 30 79

This simple restaurant and hotel just outside the city center has been run by the Pernazza family since 1938. They offer no-frills Umbrian fare, such as crostini (toasted bread with various toppings), roasted meats, pasta with porcini mushrooms, and wild boar. The sweets are made in-house. Closed Mon.

ASSISI La Fortezza

Vicolo della Fortezza/Piazza del Comune, 06081 Tel 075 81 29 93 Fax 075 819 80 35

Family-run for more than 45 years, this restaurant is located halfway up a staircase-cum-street off the main piazza. Creative regional cooking at this level normally costs twice as much. Try the cannelloni all'assisiana (pasta sheets wrapped around a ragout of veal and baked under tomatoes and Parmesan).

ASSISI Trattoria Pallotta

Vicolo della Volta Pinta 3, 06081 Tel 075 81 26 49 Fax 075 81 23 07

A humble, homely place and one of the least expensive trattorie in the center of town. The mixed antipasto platter is massive. Dine on such Assisian specialties as torta al testo (flatbread stuffed with a variety of vegetable or meat goodies) and strangozzi (hand-rolled spaghetti in an olive and mushroom pesto). Closed Tue.

ASSISI Medioevo

Via Arco dei Priori 4B, 06081 Tel & Fax 075 81 30 68

An elegant restaurant set under the medieval stone vaults of an ancient palazzo in the center of Assisi. Try the homemade pastas (featuring black truffles in season). Meat, such as agnello al tartufo (lamb with truffles), is cooked to traditional recipes and they work wonders with steak. Great homemade desserts.

ASSISI Il Frantoio

Vicolo Illuminati 12, 06081 Tel 075 81 29 77 Fax 075 81 29 41

A 17th-century olive press is the setting of this refined Umbrian restaurant, with a lovely garden terrace and a wine steward who is head of the Italian sommelier association. Sample the stringozzi paesani (thick ropes of hand-rolled spaghetti tossed with tomatoes, artichokes, and hot chili flakes).

BASCHI Vissani

Strada Statale 448, km. 606, Todi-Baschi, 05020 Tel 0744 95 02 06 Fax 0744 95 01 86

Gianfranco Vissani is famous throughout Italy for his balanced flavors and haute cuisine of game and meat, served in elegant surroundings. The recipes are inventive and original, but based around regional ingredients. For dessert, you move to a separate room as in an old-fashioned household.

CAMPIELLO SUL CLITUNNO Trattoria Pettino

Frazione Pettino 31, 06042 Tel/Fax 0743 27 60 21

Occupying an old restored house in the middle of the mountains. The bruschetta (toasted bread with various toppings) is delicious as is, in season, the plethora of dishes made with truffles. Try the stringozzi al tartufo (thick, hand-rolled ropes of pasta dressed in black truffles) and the agnello al tartufo (lamb with truffles). Closed Tue.

CITTÀ DEL CASTELLO Amici Miei

Via del Monte 2, 06012 Tel/Fax 075 85 59 904

Set in the brick-vaulted storerooms of a 16th-century palazzo in the historic center, this restaurant offers a menu based on regional cuisine. Sample the stringozzi con baccalà (hand-rolled spaghetti with salt cod) and the cinghiale in umido con fagioli (a stew of wild boar chunks served with beans). Closed Wed.

CITTÀ DEL CASTELLO Il Bersaglio

Via Vittorio Emanuele Orlando 14, 06012 Tel 075 85 55 534 Fax 075 85 82 07 66

A traditional Umbrian restaurant with specialties that vary seasonally. The chef is fond of using mushrooms and truffles as well as game. Sample the gnocchetti (little gnocchi) with truffles, or try a degustazione (tasting menu) of several different preparations of porcini.

GUBBIO Locanda del Cantiniere

Via Dante 30, 06024 Tel 075 927 59 99

Exposed brick and original wooden beams add to the rustic charm of this central Gubbio eatery. Ingredients for the classic Umbrian cuisine, including all the meats, are sourced locally. The bread is baked in their own oven, and pasta is handmade each morning. Great value for money. Closed Tue.

MAGIONE Al Coccio

Via del Quadrifoglio 12a, 06063 Tel 075 84 18 29

This established restaurant in the backstreets of Magione displays a near-fanatical devotion to local ingredients and recipes – even the chocolate is by Perugia, a well-known brand from the nearby Umbrian capital. Pasta is hand-made and homemade, and mains always include traditional Umbrian meats like wild boar, rabbit, and beef. Closed Mon.

MONTEFALCO Coccorone

Largo Tempestivi, 06036 Tel 0742 37 95 35

Impeccable service and a commitment to traditional ingredients are the hallmarks of this rustic restaurant in the "balcony of Umbria." Elegantly presented local specialties often include beef cooked in Sagrantino wine, pasta with porcini mushrooms (in season), and truffles with just about anything. Closed Wed (except in summer).

NARNI Cavallino

Via Flaminia Romana 220, Località Testaccio, 05035 Tel/Fax 0744 76 10 20

Family atmosphere and home cooking in the Umbrian tradition, including interesting pastas such as manfricoli and cirirole (both of which are eggless pastas) served with tomato sauce, wild boar, or porcini. They also serve nice scaloppine al limone (veal escalope in lemon sauce), grilled meats, and pigeon. Closed Tue.

NORCIA Dal Francese

Via Riguardati 16, 06046 Tel/Fax 0743 81 62 90

This country-style trattoria in the center of Norcia offers a truffle-based menù degustazione (tasting menu) in season, as well as pappardelle alla norcina (wide noodles in a cream sauce with sausage) and agnello scottadito (lamb so succulent, the name says, that you'll "burn your fingers" in haste to eat it). Closed Fri.

ORVIETO La Volpe e l'Uva

Via Ripa Corsica 1, 05018 Tel/Fax 0763 34 16 12

A popular and friendly trattoria in the center of Orvieto, offering a variety of regional dishes at reasonable prices. Dishes change with the season, and the meat and game recipes are joined by a good selection of lake fish as well as lots of egg-based dishes (they make an effort to cater to vegetarians). Closed Mon, Tue.

ORVIETO I Sette Consoli

Piazza Sant'Angelo 1A, 05018 Tel/Fax 0763 34 39 11

A comfortable, friendly restaurant installed in the sacristy of an old church, with a garden for summer dining. Try the bacalà (salt cod) marinated in apple vinegar with potato salad, stuffed rabbit, ravioli di anatra (duck-filled ravioli), and zuppa di fave con finocchio (bean soup with fennel). Closed Sun dinner; Wed.

Via Ripa Serancia 41, 05018 Tel 0763 34 32 76 Fax 0763 34 28 98

Atmospheric series of cave-rooms carved from the tufa at the cliff's edge, once the workshop of a funaro (rope-maker) in the 12th century. The ombrechelli del Funaro are handmade spaghetti with tomatoes, sausage, artichokes, and mushrooms. The mixed platter of grilled meats is tasty. Closed Mon.

PASSIGNANO SUL TRASIMENO Cacciatori da Luciano

Via Lungolago 3, 06065 Tel 075 82 72 10

The menu is based on both lake and sea fish – the restaurant is on the lake, and they make the trip from landlocked Umbria to a seaside seafood market three times a week – including a mixed-fish carpaccio (raw, thinly sliced fish), a risotto studded with different types of shrimp, and grilled sole. Closed Wed.

PERUGIA Il Falchetto

Via Bartolo 20, 06100 Tel 075 573 17 75 Fax 075 572 90 57

Brilliantly prepared Perugino cooking in a 14th-century palazzo a few steps off the main square, with tables out on the piazza in summer. Whatever else you order, start with the falchetti verdi (a casserole of rich spinach and ricotta gnocchi baked in tomato sauce and cheese), followed by veal or lamb. Closed Mon.

PERUGIA Giò Arte e Vini

Via Ruggero d'Andreotto 19, 06124 Tel/Fax 075 573 11 00

This modern hotel and restaurant on the outskirts of town is famous for its spectacular selection of wines (some 1,200 choices), modern art on the walls, and well-chosen regional dishes prepared with special touches. The pumpkin ravioli and the treccia di agnello (lamb) are particularly good. Closed Sun dinner.

PERUGIA La Taverna

Via delle Streghe 8, 06123 Tel 075 572 41 28 Fax 075 573 25 36

The place in Perugia to go for a candlelit dinner with romantic music. First courses are classic Umbrian – tagliatelle in duck ragout, ravioli, fava-bean soup – while the chef gets more inventive with main courses. Try the bacalà (salt cod) with prunes, pine nuts, and raisins. Excellent desserts.

PERUGIA Osteria del Gambero

Via Baldeschi 8a, 01623 Tel 075 573 54 61

Advanced reservations are recommended at this highly regarded restaurant that spins innovative touches on traditional Umbrian dishes. For example, try the pappardelle di crusca con lardo di colonnata (wide noodles with salt-cured lard, garbanzos, cantaloupe, and mint). Closed Mon.

SPOLETO Il Panciollo

Vicolo degli Eroi 1, 06049 Tel 0743 22 12 41 Fax 0743 22 42 89

A large terrace shaded by a spreading pine for summer dining, and a stone-walled inside room where the meat for main courses is grilled over an large open fire are the highlights of this restaurant. Try the strangozzi alla montanara (hand-rolled pasta strands with chopped vegetables and chili peppers). Closed Wed (usually).

SPOLETO Il Tartufo

Piazza Garibaldi 24, 06049 Tel 0743 402 36

The floor of the basement dining room of this restaurant specializing in truffles dates back to ancient Rome. The well-tried regional specialties include such delights as zuppa di farro (spelt soup), zucchini flowers stuffed with cheese, eggplant, and truffles, and duck in Sagrantino wine sauce. Closed Mon.

Località Poretta di Spoleto, Frazione Casaline, 06042 Tel 0743 52 11 13 Fax 0743 27 50 99

An oasis of calm in a restored 18th-century mill. Try the gnocchi stuffed with mushrooms, rigatoni alla norcina (pasta tubes with mushrooms, peas, truffles, and sausage), or cinghiale alla cacciatora (wild boar in a wine and tomato sauce). Also, many peasant-inspired goose dishes. Closed Mon.

TERNI Da Carlino

Via Piemonte 1, 05100 Tel 0744 42 01 63

Robust, rustic food in a historic building in town. Start off with the crostini (toasts) served alongside local salami, followed perhaps by tagliatelle with truffles, lamb, or a fish dish. The house specialty is stracci (homemade pasta tossed in a sauce of veal and fresh mozzarella). Closed Wed.

TODI La Mulinella

Località Pontenaia 29, 06059 Tel 075 894 47 79 Fax 075 894 82 35

In the countryside about 1 mile (2 km) from Todi, this eatery serves simple, reliable dishes. The wood-fired breads and homemade pastas and desserts are excellent. Recommended are the carni alle brace (grilled meats) with seasonal vegetables, and the pasta in ragù di anatra (duck) or oca (goose). Closed Wed.

TODI La Torre

Via Cortesi 57, 06059 Tel/Fax 075 894 26 94

In the picture-perfect hilltown of Todi, this restaurant serves up regional dishes of fish, meat, and game (including hare, duck, and lamb), often lacing dishes with truffles in season. The desserts, such as a crema (cream) topped with warm chocolate, are exquisite. Closed Sun.

TREVI La Taverna del Pescatore

Via Flaminia Vecchia 50, 06039 Tel/Fax 0742 78 09 20

The freshest of local produce is combined and cooked in simple yet exquisite recipes based on Umbrian traditions and using fresh river fish. Try the gamberi di fiume alle brace or all'arrabiata (crayfish grilled or served spicy hot). The atmosphere is relaxed with attentive service. Closed Sun dinner; Mon.

LE MARCHE*LORETO Andreina

Via Buffolareccia 14, 60025 Tel 071 97 01 24 Fax 071 750 10 51

A grandmother-and-grandson team prepares traditional cuisine. Homemade pastas include tagliatelle con ragù (noodles in meat sauce), and, among the game dishes like quail, wild boar, and thrushes, piccione allo spiedo (spit-roasted pigeon), followed by tempting desserts. Closed Tue.

MACERATA Osteria dei Fiori

Via Lauro Rossi 61, 62100 Tel 0733 26 01 42 Fax 0733 24 09 37

The cooking at this popular place is regional and hearty – witness coniglio in porchetta (pork stuffed with rabbit) – and based on peasant traditions, none more so than the poverty-inspired tagliuoli pelusi al sugo finto (noodles in a “fake sauce” that tastes like ragout but is made without costly meat). Closed Sun.

MACERATA Da Secondo

Via Pescheria Vecchia 26–28, 62100 Tel/Fax 0733 26 09 12

An elegant atmosphere and well-prepared regional specialties contribute to this restaurant's popularity. Some of the dishes to try include vincigrassi alla Macerata (the local lasagne), frittura mista (batter-fried fish or meat and vegetables), and maialino da latte allo spiedo (spit-roasted suckling pig). Closed Mon.

NUMANA La CostarellaVia IV Novembre 35, 60026 Tel/Fax 071 736 02 97

This specialist fish restaurant is named after the stairlike street on which it sits, made of 150 steps. Try the tagliatelle fatte a mano alle seppie (homemade noodles, stained black with squid ink, in a cuttlefish-and-squidling ragout) and the fried fish with zucchini flowers. Reservations are advisable. Closed Tue (in winter).

PESARO Da GennaroVia Santa Marina Alta 30, Località Santa Marina Alta, 61100 Tel 0721 273 21

A bright spot of genuine cooking among the often banal eateries of this resort-filled coast. Located 4 miles (7 km) from the city center, along a panoramic road up into the mountains, with great views of the coastline, Da Gennaro has for 40 years served rigorously traditional fish and fresh seafood dishes. Closed Mon.

PESARO Da AlceoVia Panoramica Ardizio 121, 61100 Tel 0721 39 03 18 Fax 0721 39 17 82

A famous fish restaurant with a spectacular panoramic terrace. Some dishes to sample include gnocchi or tagliolini (noodles) with shellfish, a fishy risotto, as well as simple scampi del Conero al vapore (steamed locally caught shrimp). Desserts are homemade and tasty. Closed Mon.

SENIGALLIA UliassiVia Banchina di Levante 6, 60019 Tel 071 654 63 Fax 071 65 93 27

This friendly restaurant run by the brother-and-sister team of Mauro and Catia Uliassi offers a high standard of cuisine. Try the specialty pasta with shrimp and asparagus, the roasted sea bass with artichokes braised in soy sauce, and the stoccafisso mantecato (salt cod) served with a purée of leeks. Closed Mon.

URBANIA Big BenCorso Vittorio Emanuele 61, 61049 Tel/Fax 0722 31 97 95

Big Ben is an intimate restaurant set in a 17th-century palazzo in the city center, with a lovely garden for dining. Among the regional Marchigiano specialties are tagliolini (thin noodles) with truffles, lumache (snails) with wild fennel and tomatoes, grilled lamb, good cheeses, and homemade desserts. Closed Wed.

URBINO Taverna degli ArtistiVia Bramante 52, 61029 Tel/Fax 0722 26 76

The dining room, with its Renaissance-era frescoed ceiling and terra cotta floor tiles, is as stupendous as the cooking is simple and good. The menu is based around hearty regional traditions, including homemade pastas, porcini mushrooms, grilled meats, and delectable pizzas. Closed Tue.

URBINO L'Angolo DivinoVia S. Andrea 14, 61029 Tel/Fax 0722 32 75 59

A rustic basement joint of brick walls and wood beams in the heart of the historic center, serving hearty regional cooking – half the menu is written in local dialect. Try pasta nel sacco (baked pasta casserole with cheese, eggs, and bread), and costarelle alla gradella (grilled pork chops). Closed Sun dinner; Mon.

URBINO Cà AndreanaVia Cà Andreana 2, 61029 Tel 0722 32 78 45

For a taste of authentic local cooking, drive the short distance to this farmhouse 3 miles (5 km) from Urbino's walls. Many of the ingredients, including several cheeses and salami, are home-produced and organic. Pastas are handmade from scratch. Reservations essential. Dinner only Tue–Sat; lunch only Sun. Closed Jan, Feb.

URBINO Vecchia UrbinoVia dei Vasari 3–5, 61029 Tel/Fax 0722 44 47

An elegantly rustic restaurant in a 16th-century structure serving simply prepared traditional dishes, including vincigrassi (the local lasagne of chicken, ham, and veal), raviolone al tartufo (a giant pasta parcel stuffed with ricotta and dressed in black truffles), rabbit, and polenta with mushrooms. Closed Tue.

ROME*AVENTINE FeliceVia Mastro Giorgio 29, 00153 Tel 06 574 68 00

Map 5 C3

A deservedly popular restaurant serving traditional Roman cuisine. The spaghetti alla carbonara or cacio e pepe (with cheese and pepper) make for excellent first courses, while the abbacchio arrosto (roast lamb) and torta di ricotta (ricotta and candied peel cake) complete the feast. Advance reservations are always advisable. Closed Sun dinner.

AVENTINE Checchino dal 1887Via di Monte Testaccio 30, 00153 Tel 06 574 38 16

Map 6 D4

Checchino dal 1887 specializes in traditional cucina romana, using the quinto quarto (offal). Originally discarded in the slaughterhouses opposite, offal became a delicacy in working-class cuisine. The menu includes rigatoni alla pajata (calf intestines) and coda alla vaccinara (oxtail). Some good value set menus are also available.

CAMPO DE' FIORI Ar Galletto

Vicolo del Gallo, 00186 Tel 06 686 1714

Map 9 C4

This popular trattoria serves straightforward Italian fare, though their penne all'arrabbiata (pasta with a spicy tomato sauce) deserves a special mention. However, Ar Galletto's main attraction is its location. In warmer months, dine out in a corner of the Piazza Farnese overlooking the fountains and the vast Farnese Palace. Closed Sun; 1 wk Aug.

CAMPO DE' FIORI Ditirambo

Piazza della Cancelleria 75, 00186 Tel 06 687 16 26

Map 2 E4

This small restaurant, a cross between a French bistro and a Roman osteria, specializes in homemade bread, pasta dishes, and desserts. It also offers one of the widest selections of wines and cheeses in the entire city. The cuisine is strictly Italian, but the inventive menu changes frequently. Service is friendly and relatively quick.

Bustling and friendly by day and mesmerizing by night, Porto Maltese has a ramp entrance curving round a huge aquarium filled with lobster, jumbo shrimp, and fish. Dishes include strozzapreti all'amatriciana di mare (pasta with smoked fish and tomato), and prices are calculated according to portion weight.

PIAZZA NAVONA Da Baffetto

Via del Governo Vecchio 114, 00186 Tel 06 686 16 17Map 9 B3

The most popular pizzeria in town. They don't accept reservations, the line is always long, and getting a table can be a challenge – when you do, expect to be seated right next to diners you don't know. The atmosphere is loud and lively, and the pizza is thin and light – the way the Romans like it.

PIAZZA NAVONA Cul de Sac

Piazza Pasquino 73, 00186 Tel 06 68 80 10 94Map 2 E4, 9 C3

With 30 years of experience, Cul de Sac is Rome's oldest wine bar. While the wine list offers thousands of wines from Italy and beyond, the food menu has an equally wide choice. The smoked swordfish, creamed red lentils, sundried tomatoes, garbanzo sausages, cheese, salumi, and patés make for a substantial meal.

FRASCATI Nuova Enoteca Frascati

Via Diaz 42, 00044 Tel 06 941 74 49

More than 400 wines accompany an excellent range of seafood dishes at this wine bar/restaurant. The kitchen produces what it calls "new country," a mix of tradition and innovation resulting in an antipasto of assorted raw fish, and boiled astice (lobster) with tomatoes, potatoes, and zucchini.

GAETA Antico Vico

Vico del Cavallo 2, 04024 Tel 0771 46 51 16

What used to be a stable is now a fine fish restaurant serving classic dishes and inventive creations like the squid carpaccio or the ravioli filled with crustacean meat. The garden is perfect for hot summer nights, and the location is picturesque and convenient.

NETTUNO Cacciatori dal 1896

Via Matteotti 27, 00048 Tel 06 988 03 30

This large, rustically furnished restaurant is set in the storerooms of the 17th-century Colonna family palazzo, with a veranda overlooking the port and the sea. Fish is caught daily, and the dishes are taken from regional recipes of the early 1900s. Their signature dish is minestra di pesce (fish soup).

OSTIA ANTICA Il Monumento

Piazza Umberto I, 00119 Tel 06 565 00 21

This restaurant at Rome's main beach resort, near its ancient port, features a fish-based menu. The house specialty, spaghetti al Monumento, is served in a seafood sauce. For a second course, the most popular dish is their patented manzanolle al cocco, a local type of shrimp cooked in cognac.

SPERLONGA Gli Archi

Via Ottaviano 17, 04029 Tel 0771 54 83 00

In a picturesque street in the heart of Sperlonga, this restaurant offers a romantic setting, especially when dining alfresco, with tables in a little square surrounded by arches. Gli Archi is a must for seafood lovers, with fresh fish specialties like homemade fusilli with zucchini and mixed seafood, or the classic spaghetti with clams.

TIVOLI Villa Esedra

Via di Villa Adriana 51, 00010 Tel 0774 53 47 16

The menu at this fish specialist is typical of the region, featuring fresh antipasti such as insalata ai frutti di mare (seafood salad), followed by linguine all'astice vivo (noodles with local lobster) or gnocchi with radicchio and walnuts, and grilled catch of the day. In the evening, and all day Sunday, they fire up a pizza oven.

TIVOLI Adriano

Largo Yourcenar 2, 00010 Tel 0774 38 22 35 Fax 0774 53 51 22

A charming restaurant set in a garden, perfectly placed for visits to the Villa Adriana and other Tivoli delights. The cuisine is traditional and wines are from local vineyards. Fettucine with aromatic herbs, scigno di venere (oven-baked pasta with mushrooms and ragù), and filleted rabbit casserole are typical dishes. Reservations are recommended.

TIVOLI Avec 55

Via D Giuliani 55, 00019 Tel 0774 31 72 43

Tradition revisited and modern interiors define this pleasant restaurant hidden away in Tivoli's historic center. The menu features ethnic fusion dishes and a number of classics with creative twists. Careful ingredient selection is one of the main priorities. Desserts include a hot chocolate soufflé with vanilla from Madagascar. Superb wine list.

TREVIGNANO La Grotta Azzurra

Piazza Vittorio Emanuele 18, 00069 Tel 069 99 94 20

Located in the central square of Trevignano, with spectacular views of the lake, this family-run restaurant serves delectable regional cuisine, featuring in particular freshwater fish prepared in a variety of ways. Outdoor tables in the garden make alfresco dining especially pleasant during the warm months.

TUSCANIA Palazzo Ranucci

Via della Torretta 8, 01017 Tel 0761 44 50 67

Housed in a 15th-century building, this restaurant is renowned for its creative take on regional dishes. Try the cardone (a type of thistle), the pampanelle alla Gino e Pina (asparagus and shellfish pasta), filetto di maiale con patate (pork fillet with potatoes), zuppa di pesce (fish soup), or a classic pizza. Excellent wine list.

CAPRI La Savardina da EduardoVia Lo Capo 8, 80073 Tel 081 837 63 00

This is one of the most traditional restaurants on Capri, with an outdoor pergola, orange trees, sea views, and tasty regional specialties such as ravioli alla caprese (cheese ravioli in a tomato and mozzarella sauce), linguini all'Eduardo (noodles with anchovies and capers), and stewed rabbit.

CAPRI Da GioiaMarina Piccola, 80073 Tel 081 837 7702

This magical restaurant on a platform with lots of boardwalk tables over the lapping waves of Marina Piccola is perfect for a fishy lunch of the freshest linguine ai frutti di mare (thin pasta ribbons with shellfish and tomatoes) or risotto alla pescatora (seafood risotto). Check for the latest opening times – Da Gioia is often closed in winter.

CAPRI La PergolaTraversa Lo Palazzo 2, 80073 Tel 081 837 74 14

A pleasant family atmosphere, large terrace with sweeping sea views, and delicious food bring many regular customers here. Lemons figure prominently, including in the ravioli al limone (pasta parcels stuffed with cheese, lemon, and lemon-cream sauce) and the homemade lemon tart. Good fresh fish, too.

CAPRI Quisi del Grand Hotel QuisisanaVia Camerelle 2, 80073 Tel 081 83 70 788 Fax 081 837 60 80

The atmosphere is elegant at this restaurant ensconced in Capri's premiere hotel, and the seasonally changing menu is delightful. Try the succulent roast duck with peaches, the homemade pastas like spaghetti with seafood, turbot with lemongrass and dates, quail with peas and pistachios, or the fritto misto (mixed fried seafood platter).

CAPRI (ANACAPRI) Il SolitarioVia G Orlandi 96, 80071 Tel 081 837 13 82

Laid-back charm can be enjoyed in this old tavern-turned-restaurant, with its rustic rooms and leafy pergola-covered garden strewn with colorful statues depicting the seasons. Simple delights like pizza bianca (white pizza) and ravioli capresi (cheesy pasta pockets) go down well with an international clientele. Closed Wed and in winter.

CASERTA Le ColonneViale G Douhet 7, 81100 Tel 0823 46 74 94

In an elegant house with gardens near the royal palace, this family-run restaurant serves typical regional cuisine with innovative touches. The meat, which is used for the tender-grilled steaks, comes not from cows, but from the local buffalo (which normally is reserved for making mozzarella milk). The best of Campania's produce is used.

ISCHIA Da Peppina di RenatoVia Montecorvo 42, Località Forio, 80075 Tel 081 99 83 12

A simple, rustic trattoria on a hillside, with a large terrace offering candlelit panoramas of Citara Bay, serving simple fare such as coniglio alla cacciatora (hunters' style rabbit), pasta e fagioli (pasta and bean soup with sausage and lemon), grilled meats and fish, and pizzas cooked in a wood-burning oven.

ISCHIA La ConchigliaVia N. Sauro 6/Via Chiaia delle Rose 3, Località Sant'Angelo, 80070 Tel 081 99 92 70

A big, old pink building in the heart of a fishing village, with fresh seafood served under a barrel vault or out on a skinny patio six feet above the waves, with vistas down the coastline. The house specialties are linguine ai frutti di mare (noodles with seafood) and the frittura (fry-up) of squid and jumbo shrimp.

ISCHIA MiramareVia Pontano 5, 80077 Tel 081 99 13 33

A swanky hotel restaurant with outside terrace tables by the shore giving dramatic views of the Castello Aragonese. The cooking shows a lightness of touch and imaginative combinations of Ischian staples, including rabbit served al pistacchio con polenta e patè di fegatini (with a pistachio sauce, polenta, and liver pâté). Closed Nov–Mar.

ISCHIA Umberto a MareVia Soccorso 2, Forio d'Ischia, 80075 Tel 081 99 71 71

A historic restaurant on Forio's Soccorso promontory, affording stupendous sea views from the picture windows of the elegant dining room and the small terrace. Sophisticated creations include ricciola (amberjack) fish served with basil, artichokes, and lemon. It's a wonderful dining spot at sunset – reserve early for the best table. Closed Nov–Mar.

MONTEPERTUSO (NEAR POSITANO) La TagliataVia Tagliata 22, 84017 Tel 089 87 58 72

True Amalfitan hospitality and a hearty menu can be found here. Picture windows are swung open in summer, with breathtaking views towards the Li Galli. Choose a tasting menu for lots of tapas-like plates of vegetables and meat, but be sure to save room for their semifreddi (creamy cakes). Phone in advance, and they'll pick you up from Positano.

NAPLES Da EttoreVia Santa Lucia 56, 80132 Tel 081 76 404 98

Unpretentious popular neighborhood trattoria and pizzeria serving typical Neapolitan cuisine. Good pizzas and excellent seafood pasta with mussels or clams. Also sample the parmigiana di melanzane (a baked casserole of eggplant, mozzarella, and tomatoes). Excellent buffalo mozzarella antipasto.

NAPLES Pizzeria BrandiSalita S. Anna di Palazzo 1–2/Via Chiaia, 80132 Tel 081 41 69 28

This historic pizzeria (established 1780) lays claim to having invented the classic pizza Margherita in 1889 to honor a visit by Queen Margherita (the red tomatoes, white mozzarella, and green basil representing the colors of the then-new Italian flag). Good pasta dishes as well.

NAPLES SorbilloVia dei Tribunali 32, 80138 Tel 081 44 66 43

Opened in 1935, this family-run pizzeria does a brisk trade with groups, students, and tourists. Disco lights spin around the walls – it can get raucous, but it is fun nevertheless. The superb pizzas are named after family members and spill over the large plates. Decent house wine and bottled beer are served in plastic cups. Closed Sun.

NAPLES Amici MieiVia Monte di Dio 78, 80132 Tel 081 764 60 63

A classic menu, though it concentrates mainly on meat dishes (a rarity in fish-oriented Naples). Excellent pasta with vegetables and legumes and main courses, especially the char-grilled meats and the braciola di maiale al ragu (pork chop smothered in sauce with pine nuts). Cozy atmosphere and an excellent wine list.

NAPLES Hosteria ToledoVico Giardinetti a Toledo 78A, 80133 Tel 081 42 12 57

This traditional Slow Food osteria in the heart of the downtown Quartieri Spagnoli district has been turning out classic Neapolitan meat and fish specialties since 1951. Try the maccheroni al ragù, frittura di paranza (fried seafood), and zucchine alla scapece (similar to gazpacho, but made with zucchini).

NAPLES UmbertoVia Alabardieri 30–31, 80121 Tel 081 41 85 55

This venerable pizzeria-ristorante was opened in 1916 by the Di Porzio family; it is now run by the charming English-speaking descendant Massimo, president of the Associazione Verace Pizza Napoletana, which promotes the Neapolitan pizza. Delicious pizzas are served alongside classic pasta, meat and fish dishes, and salads. Closed Mon.

NAPLES La CantinellaVia Cuma 42, 80132 Tel 081 764 86 84 Fax 081 764 87 69

One of Naples's most famous restaurants, this place has a distinctly colonial feel. Diners are attracted by the sea views, the carefully prepared service, and a reputation for carefully and successfully prepared regional and international cuisine based around seafood and traditional dishes.

NAPLES RosielloVia Santo Strato 10, 80123 Tel 081 769 12 88

Reserve a table on the terrace at this lofty perch in the leafy Posillipo district. Rosiello offers a special dining experience with views of the bay and Vesuvius. Classic Neapolitan fare includes frittura di paranza (fried seafood medley) and salsiccia con friarelli (sausage with tasty local brassica). Closed 2 wks Aug.

NERANO Taverna del CapitanoPiazza delle Sirene 10, Località Marina del Cantone 10, 80061 Tel 081 808 10 28

In an old fisherman's house on the beach – with an outdoor terrace for better sea views – this restaurant serves excellent regional food with some creative touches. Sample the cornetti di pasta con gamberi (pasta filled with shrimp and covered in seafood sauce) and millefeuille di San Pietro (John Dory in filo). Closed early Jan–early Mar.

PAESTUM La PergolaVia Magna Grecia 51, Capaccio Scalo, 84047 Tel 0828 72 33 77

Innovative regional cuisine that uses seasonal produce in a rustic restaurant 2 miles (3 km) from the ruins of Paestum. The house specialty is sciucello, a soup of wild asparagus, wild onions, scrambled egg, and aromatic herbs. Afterwards, try the fried fish with artichokes. Serves wonderful local buffalo mozzarella. Closed Mon (not in summer).

POMPEII Il PrincipePiazza B. Longo 1, 80045 Tel 081 850 55 66

This airy, refined and elegant restaurant with a seasonally changing menu is close to the excavations. The cuisine is based on fish, including fish-filled ravioli and turbot with vegetables. Dishes may be inspired by 17th-century Neapolitan recipes, ancient Roman spices, or desserts pictured in Pompeii frescoes.

POSITANO Lo GuarracinoVia Positanesi d'America 12, 84017 Tel 089 87 59 74

A five-minute walk along a pathway hung off the cliffside leads to this restaurant's panoramic terrace overlooking a quiet bay and outlying islands. They bake excellent pizzas. Also try: linguine ai ricci di mare (noodles with sea urchin), grilled pesce spada (swordfish), and veal escalopes with lemon.

POSITANO La SpondaVia Cristoforo Colombo 30, 84017 Tel 089 87 50 66

A sumptuous restaurant in one of Italy's most elegant hotels, where guests are treated like wealthy family friends. A tempting range of modern and traditional dishes based on fresh fish and seasonal ingredients is on offer. Try gagnano paccheri (large pasta tubes with anchovies, roasted peppers, and basil).

PROCIDA CaracalèVia Marina Corricella 62, 80079 Tel 081 896 91 92

The name of this seafood restaurant on the quayside of Procida's picturesque Corricella harbor derives from the Greek for "beautiful spot." Lots of fresh fish and vegetables are washed down with quality Campanian wines. Open weekends only in low season. Closed Tue; Nov–Christmas Day.

RAVELLO Villa MariaVia Santa Chiara 2, 84010 Tel 089 85 72 55

An elegant house converted into a hotel/restaurant. Reserve a table on the terrace overlooking the Dragon Valley and order the trittico, a sampler trio of the chef's daily specials, perhaps including soffatini (crêpes with cheese and spinach) or seafood-stuffed ravioli in a red clam sauce. Fresh fish and local game.

SALERNO Pizzeria Vicolo della NeveVicolo della Neve 24, 84121 Tel 089 22 57 05

A pizzeria in the historic center that – in addition to excellent pizzas and calzoni (folded pizzas) – also serves a range of dishes such as pasta e fagioli (pasta with beans), baccalà (salt cod) casserole, and sausages with broccoli. Like most traditional pizzerias, it's open for dinner only.

P ☰ 🍷 🍴 🍷 €€€€€

Corso Sant'Agata 11-13, 80064 Tel 081 87 80 026 Fax 081 53 30 226

One of Italy's top Michelin-starred restaurants, set in elegant gardens. The modern Mediterranean dishes include seafood and fish specialties and delicious desserts. This place is so devoted to creating the best cuisine possible that the family bought a farm so they could grow their own fresh ingredients. Formal dress at dinner.

SORRENTO Ristorante della Favorita O'Parrucchiano

Corso Italia 71-73, 80067 Tel 081 878 13 21 Fax 081 532 40 35

This century-old restaurant features an open-air terrace under a mass of vines, lemon, and orange trees. It is popular with locals, tourists, and celebrities alike, largely thanks to the excellent Sorrentino cooking: scialatielli ai frutti di mare (pasta with seafood) and steak with peppercorns are two of the highlights.

SORRENTO Il Buco

Il Rampa Marina Piccola 5 (Piazza Sant'Antonino), 80067 Tel 081 878 23 54

Pressed cotton tablecloths, fresh flowers, and vaulted stone ceilings of the old cantine (cellars) make this a refined and atmospheric place. Alongside pescato del giorno (catch of the day), there are plates of lamb flavored with thyme, and braised beef with tomatoes and oregano salsa. Closed Wed; Jan-mid-Feb.

ABRUZZO, MOLISE, AND PUGLIA*ALBEROBELLO La Cantina

Vico Lippolis 9/Corso Vittorio Emanuele, 70011 Tel 080 432 34 73

This small trattoria of just 32 place settings under stony vaults has occupied a basement room just off the main street since 1958. The dishes are rigorously traditional Apulian cuisine, such as the orecchiette ("little ear" pasta discs) served in a tomato sauce spiked with salty ricotta cheese and turnip greens.

ALBEROBELLO Trullo d'Oro

Via Felice Cavallotti 27, 70011 Tel 080 432 18 20

Dine inside a trullo (the typical pointy house of this area) on excellent regional cuisine. Sample three main courses with the assaggi dello chef, small servings of spaghetti with arugula and fresh tomatoes, orecchiette in ragù (pasta in a meat sauce topped with herbed bread balls), and fava bean purée with endive.

ALBEROBELLO Il Poeta Contadino

P ☰ 🍷 €€€€

Via Indipendenza 21, 70011 Tel 080 432 19 17

An elegant restaurant with stony walls and a piano in the corner. The excellent service matches the high standard of both food and wine. The cuisine makes imaginative use of fresh local ingredients, offering both fish and meat dishes on a menu that refers to the poetry of each course.

BARI Terranima

Via Putignani 213-215, 70123 Tel 080 521 97 25

Popular trattoria serving a seasonal menu of typical Apulian fare that changes every two weeks and balances seafood and meat dishes. Try the orecchiette (pasta discs) with monkfish, or an arista di maiale in salsa di agrumi (roast pork flavored with citrus). Friendly staff and pleasant setting.

BARI Perbacco

Via Francesco Saverio Abbrescia 99, 70121 Tel 080 558 01 79

Dark wood furniture and exposed stone walls lend this place a relaxed, rustic feel. Over 1,000 different wines are stacked in the cellar. Creative regional cooking includes ravioli filled with a tangy combo of baccalà (salt cod) and pink grapefruit, and an oh-so-sweet torrone (nougat) cake. Closed Sat lunch, Sun; between Jul-Aug.

BARI Bacco

Corso Vittorio Emanuele II 126, 70122 Tel 080 527 58 71

Bacco has a nationwide reputation for its modern twists on Puglian classics. Designer lighting, colorful artworks, and an impressive wine cellar lend it an air of sophistication. Standouts include orecchiette con cime di rapa (pasta with brassica shoots), seafood stuzzichini (tapas bites), and Bari-style tiella (deep dish pie). Closed Sun dinner, Mon; Aug.

GALLIPOLI Il Bastione

Via Sauro Nazario, 28, 73014 Tel 0833 26 38 36

Twinkling lights from the lighthouse make this terrace restaurant on Gallipoli's fortifications an evocative dining venue. Large picture windows offer dramatic sea views. Well-crafted, traditional Gallipoli seafood dishes like tubettini al sugo di pescatrice (tube pasta with fishy sauce) can be found on the menu. Closed Mon; Jan.

ISOLE TREMITI Al Gabbiano

Piazza Belvedere San Domino, 71040 Tel 0882 46 34 10

The food at this island terrace restaurant is based on the best fish from the sea, just a few yards away. Try the traditional fish soup and fresh fish roasted in a case of salt. Also good are the troccoli gabbiano al mare (home-made pasta with mussels, shrimp, clams, and calamari).

L'AQUILA ErnestoPiazza Palazzo 22, 67100 Tel 0862 210 94

A peaceful, sophisticated place with a courtyard for summer dinners. The menu is a tasty, creative mix based on typical Abruzzese mountain cuisine. Try the sagnarelle alla pastora (ricotta gnocchi tossed with ham, mushrooms, ricotta, truffles, and pecorino cheese).

LECCE Guido e FigliVia XXV Luglio 14, 73100 Tel 0832 30 58 68

There are two choices for dining at this place just off Lecce's main square: in the restaurant, under stone vaults, or – paying half the price for the same Apulian dishes – at the tavola calda (self-service) branch in the back. You can take your food to an outdoor table and watch the evening parade of pedestrians stroll by.

LECCE Alle Due CortiCorte dei Giugni 1/Via Leonardo Prato 42, 73100 Tel 0832 24 22 23 Fax 0832 39 78 65

The elegance of the dining rooms and service belie the low prices and excellent, traditional Salentino dishes. Try the turcnieddhi (toasted baby goat's heart, liver, and lungs), ciceri e tria (flat pasta, half-fried/half-boiled, with garbanzos), and pezzetti te cavallu (chunks of horse meat in a spicy tomato sauce). Great for those with an adventurous palate.

LOCOROTONDO Trattoria Centro StoricoVia Eroi di Dogali 6, 70010 Tel 080 431 54 73

Friendly restaurant in the center of this whitewashed village. Their own-label wine goes well with the traditional Apulian dishes such as pennette della casa (pasta quills in a tomato sauce with spicy chili peppers, onion, and ham), and the portafoglio (lamb chop stuffed with cheese, parsley, and herbs). Closed Wed.

MANFREDONIA CoppolarossaVia dei Celestini 13, 71043 Tel 0884 58 25 22

Youthful atmosphere and old-fashioned decor (painted ceramic plates on stuccoed walls) at this restaurant serving traditional seafood dishes. Try the house specialty, troccoli ai frutti di mare (hand-rolled macaroni with seafood), or the grigliata di pesce (mixed grill of jumbo shrimp, fish and squid).

MARTINA FRANCA Ritrovo degli AmiciCorso Messapia 8, 74015 Tel 080 483 92 49

Understated, elegant decor is matched by expertly crafted dishes at this excellent restaurant. Locals and visitors often plump for the famous crespelle (savory folded pancakes) served with tomatoes and eggplant. There's roast lamb for carnivores and delicious dolci, such as chocolate and orange cake. Closed Sun dinner, Mon; Jan–Feb.

OSTUNI Osteria del Tempo PersoVia Gateano Tanzarella Vitale 47, 72017 Tel 0831 30 48 19

In the heart of a stunningly whitewashed hilltown, this osteria has farm implements scattered over the walls of one room, while the other cavelike room is roughly carved from the bare rock. The cooking is regional, using the freshest of local ingredients, and the service is impeccable. Good local wine list.

OTRANTO Vecchia OtrantoCorso Garibaldi 96, 73028 Tel 0836 80 15 75

Good marine and other regional specialties in this traditional trattoria in the stony heart of town include pasta with ricci di mare (with sea urchin) and zuppa di pesce all'otrantina (a rich fish soup). Also try the rice with potatoes, the cozze gratinate (mussels au gratin), and the anguilla allo spiedo (spit-roasted eels).

OVINDOLI Il PozzoVia Monumento dell'Alpino 5, 67046 Tel 0863 71 01 91

Wonderful mountain setting for this atmospheric restaurant in the historic center of town. The food is traditional and robust – though with a lighter, modern touch – and the dishes are made using local products, especially zafferano (saffron) and wild mushrooms. Closed Wed.

POLIGNANO AL MARE Grotta PalazzeseVia Narciso 59, 70044 Tel 080 424 06 77 Fax 080 424 07 67

A massive cliffside cavern above the crashing waters of the Adriatic was turned into a formal dining room for tourists on the Grand Tour in the 1700s. It is a spectacular location. Although the menu concentrates on fish, there are plenty of meat choices available as well. Closed Nov–Apr.

SULMONA RigolettoVia Stazione Introdacqua 46/Strada dei Confetti Pellino, 67039 Tel 0864 555 29

A short walk from the center of town. Homemade pastas are served with beans, scamorza (soft smoked cheese), rabbit, and truffles. Particularly good are the ravioli ripieni di scamorza e zafferano (pasta parcels stuffed with cheese and saffron) and agnello al forno (oven-roasted lamb).

TARANTO Da MimmoVia C. Giovinnazzi 18, 74100 Tel 099 459 37 33

Locals have been known to wait patiently for an outdoor table at Mimmo's place. The pizza chef is given to singing Elvis and Neapolitan folk songs while he works and his pizzas are small enough to leave room for a second course of fried seafood or meatballs or a veal roll stewed in tomato sauce.

TARANTO CanaleDiscesa Vasto, 74100 Tel 099 476 42 01

Housed in bright modern rooms near the old fish market, Canale offers classic appetizers that include raw seafood salad and fried seasonal vegetables. Hop to the entrées for the most satisfying briny bites, such as the catch of the day, which is often served with potatoes and artichokes. Small, excellent wine list. Closed Tue; 2 wks Nov.

TARANTO Al Faro Masseria SaracenaVia della Pineta 315, Strada Vicinale Fonte delle Citrezze 4000, 74100 Tel 099 471 44 44

A whitewashed 18th-century farmhouse in the suburbs, with a grassy garden filled with tables and a view across the water to the city on the far side of the bay. The menu is fish-based, using locally caught fish and seafood for antipasti, soups, risotto, and grills.

TERMOLI Z' BassVia Oberdan 8, 86039 Tel 0875 70 67 03

This friendly, welcoming trattoria offers a high level of cuisine featuring fresh, seasonal ingredients and bread and desserts made on the premises. House specialties include a succulent zuppa di pesce (fish soup). There is an extensive wine list.

TRANI Torrente AnticoVia Fusco 3, 70059 Tel 0883 48 79 11

Exquisite, lightly prepared dishes based on traditional regional cuisine with modern touches. Try the raviolo di pesce (a giant pasta parcel stuffed with chopped sea bass and dressed with a mix of seafood and crustaceans). The wine list is also impressive.

VIESTE Il Trabucco dell'Hotel PizzomunnoLungomare Enrico Mattei, Km. 1, 71019 Tel 0884 70 87 41

Surrounded by gardens and very close to the sea, this resort hotel has outside dining under bougainvillea by the pool and fine regional and Italian cuisine with some creative touches. The dishes are light and tasty. Try the troccoli alla garganica (pasta with shrimp, ricotta, and zucchini).

VILLETTA BARREA Trattoria del PescatoreVia B. Virgilio 175, 67030 Tel 0864 891 52 Fax 0864 892 55

A simple, family-run riverside trattoria in the Abruzzo National Park. Regional dishes include trota al vino bianco (trout in white wine), homemade chitarrini ai gamberi di fiume ("guitar string" pasta with crayfish), and zuppa di orati e fagioli (bean soup with a wild mountain green similar to spinach).

BASILICATA & CALABRIA*ACQUAFREDDA, MARATEA, BASILICATA Villa Cheta EliteVia Timpone 46, località Acquafredda, 85046 Tel 0973 87 81 34 Fax 0973 87 81 35

A romantic hotel/restaurant in an Art Nouveau-style villa on a sea-facing cliff-top, with summer dining on a terrace. Fish dishes predominate, accompanied by excellent local wines from up-and-coming producers. Involtini di sogliola (stuffed rolled-up lemon sole) and spaghetti with sardines are some of the highlights. Delicious desserts.

BIVONGI, CALABRIA La Vecchia MinieraContrada Perrocchi, 89040 Tel 0964 73 18 69 Fax 0964 73 18 69

Just outside Bivongi, near the beautiful Cascate di Marmorico, this trattoria offers excellent local cuisine in a timeless setting. Specialties include local salumi (cured meats), handmade pasta with kid sauce or sardines, mountain trout or grilled pork, chicken, and rabbit. Good house wine and tiramisù.

CASTROVILLARI (PARCO POLLINO), CALABRIA La Locanda di AliaContrada Letticelle 55, 87012 Tel/Fax 0981 463 70

One of Calabria's finest restaurants, combining traditional recipes, creative flair, and seasonal ingredients. Among the best dishes are the panzerotti (pastry parcels) with herbs, ricotta, and aniseed, carne n' cartate (meat with honey and chili peppers), swordfish with red onions, and potato tart. Excellent wine list and locally brewed beer.

COSENZA, CALABRIA L'Arco VecchioPiazza Archi di Ciccio 21, 87100 Tel/Fax 0984 725 64

Regional cuisine inside an elegant old palazzo with a beautiful pergola terrace. Try the fiore di zucca (fried zucchini flowers), the parmigiana di melanzane (eggplant flan), or the local lagane (pasta with garbanzos). Follow with pork chop with apple or roast kid with fried potatoes. Excellent wine list.

GERACE, CALABRIA La TavernettaStrada Provinciale Locri-Antonimina 112, 89040 Tel 0964 35 60 20

Located near the Terme di Antonimina, 2.5 miles (4 km) from the historic center of Gerace, this restaurant has a cozy, pleasant interior, full of old-fashioned charm. Among the specialties are the strozzapreti (pasta) with sausage and wild fennel, and grilled lamb or boar meats. It is a popular place, so it is wise to reserve in advance.

MARATEA, BASILICATA Taverna Rovita

Via Rovita 13, 85046 Tel/Fax 0973 876 588

Down a pretty alley, this old-fashioned place with white walls and tiled floors serves homemade pastas, fresh fish, seafood, and local meat dishes, prepared with seasonal vegetables and herbs. Try the pasta with garbanzos and mussels or the bocconotto Rovita (shortcrust pastry with sausage).

MARINA DI GIOIOSA JONICA, CALABRIA Gambero Rosso

Specialties include marinated fish antipasti, ricotta and vegetable or swordfish parcels, seafood pasta or risotto, orecchiette pasta baked in paper, and fried mixed fish, cod, and langoustine. Set menus are also available.

MATERA, BASILICATA Il Terrazzino sui Sassi

Vicolo San Giuseppe 7, 75100 Tel/Fax 0835 33 25 03

In the heart of the Sassi, with a wonderful panoramic terrace, this restaurant serves local cuisine, such as garbanzo soup, grilled lamb, roast meat, lamb stew, and orecchiette al tegamino (pasta with sausage, mozzarella, and tomato baked in a terra cotta dish). Try the strazzate for dessert. Good local wines.

MATERA, BASILICATA Don Matteo

Via San Biagio 12, 75100 Tel 0835 34 41 45

Don Matteo is housed in atmospherically lit cave surroundings, with views of the Sassi, deep in the heart of Matera. Expect fancy creations like millefoglie di melanzane (eggplant and crunchy filo pastry) and pork with rich Malvasia wine and ginger salsa. The excellent menu di degustazione (tasting menu) is well worth considering. Closed Mon.

MELFI, BASILICATA Novecento

Via Pertini, 85025 Tel/Fax 0972 23 74 70

An old-fashioned restaurant serving well-prepared regional cuisine, using the finest of local ingredients. Classic fare includes agnello a cutturidde (a local lamb dish), grilled meats, and a tegami (terra cotta dish) of baked vegetables and mushrooms. Delicious chocolate and chestnut mousse to finish. Superior wine list.

REGGIO DI CALABRIA, CALABRIA Baylik

Vico Leone 1, 89100 Tel 0965 486 24 Fax 0965 455 25

Turkish for "house of fish," the popular Baylik was established in 1950. The modern, minimalist decor is offset by the traditional hand in the kitchen. On the menu is a choice of seasonal appetizers and fresh fish. In season try the carbonara di pesce (fish carbonara) or swordfish and melon. Panoramic views over the Straits of Messina.

ROSSANO, CALABRIA Paridò

Via Cristoforo Colombo, 89058 Tel 0965 75 48 89 Fax 0965 70 42 98

A wonderful setting on the beach where, according to legend, Ulysses came ashore. The freshest of fish and seafood is on offer here, cooked simply and to perfection. Pasta with shellfish or sea urchins; grilled swordfish, fillet of aguglia imperiale (a local fish), and fish rissoles in a tomato sauce. For dessert, try the lemon sorbet in prosecco.

TROPEA, CALABRIA Pimm's

Corso Vittorio Emanuele 60, 88038 Tel 0963 66 61 05

An elegant choice in the heart of the historic center. Start with seafood crostini (toasted bread) or smoked swordfish; then move onto pasta with sea urchins or sardines, or the house specialty: shrimp, tuna roe, and Tropea's famous red onions. There is also delicious squid or swordfish with capers from Lipari.

VENOSA, BASILICATA Il Grifo

Via Fornaci 21, 85029 Tel/Fax 0972 353 46

This charming trattoria beside the castle was established by a locally born chef after many years working in Rome. The decor is cool and romantic, with ancient stone walls, and there's a pleasant summer terrace. Traditional Lucanian cuisine includes fish and meat dishes, as well as pizzas, accompanied by an excellent Aglianico del Vulture wine.

SICILY*AEOLIAN ISLANDS – LIPARI Filipino

Piazza del Municipio, 98055 Tel 090 981 10 02

Some of the best dining on Lipari since 1910. An essentially Sicilian, sea-based menu includes swordfish, home-made macaroni, and some excellent cassata Siciliana. Specialties include trecette delle Eolie (pasta with capers, tomatoes, basil, almonds, garlic, mint, anchovies, and pecorino).

AEOLIAN ISLANDS – LIPARI La Ginestra

Via Stradale Pianoconte 10, Pianoconte, 98055 Tel 090 982 22 85

Located on a hillside just outside town on the road from Lipari, this restaurant offers garden-terrace seating. It's wonderfully empty during lunch, when most people are in town or at the beach, but reserve ahead for dinner. Try the tagliolini with swordfish roe, lobster-stuffed ravioli, sweet-and-sour wild rabbit, or the grilled lamb.

AEOLIAN ISLANDS – PANAREA Pina

Via San Pietro 3, 98050 Tel 090 98 30 32

Popular with visiting VIPs, Pina has white columns and exposed stone walls in the large dining rooms. Reserve a table near the large windows or on the leafy, covered terrace, and expect fresh seafood creations like fritto misto di mare (fried fishy bites) and delicious desserts like cassata Siciliana. Closed at various times during the winter months.

AGRIGENTO Al Porticcio

Lungomare Falcone Borsellino 28, 92100 Tel 0922 42 36 31

A popular seafood restaurant with a covered terrace along the seaside promenade. Traditional plates include spaghetti bottarga e tonno (with roe and tuna), scampi grigliati (grilled langoustine), and risotto ai gamberoni e asparagi (with shrimp and asparagus). The superb wine list includes several regional favorites. Closed Tue.

AGRIGENTO Kókalos

Via Cavalieri Magazzeni 3, 92100 Tel 0922 60 64 27

A friendly rustic trattoria with an extensive terrace facing the Temple of Juno. Try the fettuccine in orange sauce, fresh grilled fish, the involtini valle dei templi (thin sheets of veal wrapped around a mix of eggplant, cheese, and sundried tomatoes), and the almond parfait; Sicily is famous for its almonds.

BAGHERIA Don Ciccio

Via del Cavaliere 87c, 90011 Tel 091 93 24 42

This town-center trattoria concentrates on regional specialties and traditional Bagherese cooking. Look out for pasta served with sardines or in a ragù di pesce spada (swordfish sauce), grilled fish, gamberi ripieni (roasted stuffed shrimp), and involtini di pesce spada (swordfish rolls).

CATANIA Osteria Antica Marina

Via Pardo 29, 95121 Tel 095 34 81 97

Very popular trattoria in a corner of the daily fish market. Service is fast and furious, and the cooking – based on seafood, of course – is exquisite. Try the classic spaghetti coi ricci (with sea urchin) or al nero di seppia (stained black with cuttlefish ink). Reservations are advisable.

CATANIA Ambasciata del Mare

Piazza Duomo 6, 92121 Tel 095 34 10 03

Near the Duomo, in the heart of the centro storico, is this restaurant with uncluttered, elegant interiors, warm walls and immaculately made tables. Classic dishes with a dash of creativity include frittura di paranza (medley of lightly fried seafood with a wonderfully crispy batter) and linguine ai ricci di mare (with sea urchins). Closed Mon; Sep.

CEFALÙ L'Antica Corte

Ct Pepe 7, 90015 Tel 0921 42 32 28

A trattoria-pizzeria in an old courtyard in the historic center of town. The cuisine is local with influences from almost-forgotten Sicilian recipes. Try the cous cous di pesce (fish cous cous), involtini di pesce spada (swordfish rolls), and homemade pasta con le sarde (with sardines). Pizza is available at dinner only.

CEFALÙ La Brace

Via 25 Novembre 10, 90015 Tel 0921 42 35 70

The current owner of Cefalù's oldest restaurant is Dutch, which may explain the creative spin on Sicilian cuisine, including involtini di melanzane (eggplant wrapped around tagliatelle and ricotta then baked in tomato sauce). Long waits (for a table and for service) are worth it for the wonderful desserts. Closed Mon dinner.

ENNA Ariston

Via Roma 353, 94100 Tel 0935 260 38

In the heart of Enna, this restaurant offers a selection of seafood dishes as well as nonfish specialties such as cavatiti (a fresh, homemade pasta) tossed with tomatoes and hot chili flakes, stuffed lamb, a soup of fava beans and peas, and fried stuffed olives, as well as pizzas. Closed Sun dinner.

ERICE Monte San Giuliano

Vicolo San Rocco 7, 91016 Tel 0923 86 95 95

Located on a quiet courtyard beyond a medieval gate in the center of town. The menu is based on Sicilian traditions and includes busati di San Giuliano (a local specialty of fresh pasta with tomatoes, garlic, basil, almonds, and olive oil), pasta with sardines, and cous cous with fish.

ERICE Osteria di Venere

Via Roma 6, 91016 Tel 0923 86 93 62

A delightful and refined restaurant in an attractive 17th-century building. The menu is basically Sicilian and Mediterranean, and standouts include casarecce alla Venere (fresh homemade pasta tossed with swordfish, tomatoes, eggplant, and mint), as well as grilled catch of the day.

MARSALA MothiaContrada Ettore Inversa 13, 91025 Tel 0923 74 52 55 Fax 3487 22 05 39*

Near the salt pans north of Marsala. The simple, delicious cooking balances fish and meat on set-price menus with homemade bread, pastas, pizzas, desserts, and cakes. The tagliatelle with lobster sauce is particularly good, as is la busiata alla trapanese (pasta tossed with raw tomatoes and basil).

MARSALA GaribaldiPiazza Addolorata 36, 91025 Tel 0923 95 30 06*

Garibaldi offers four intimate color-themed dining rooms with interesting prints and artworks, as well as alfresco dining. The menu has seafood staples (roasted, fried, and grilled mullet and swordfish) and meaty options like veal cooked in Marsala wine. Seasonal fruits and cassata for dessert. Closed Sat lunch, Sun dinner; 2 wks in winter.

MESSINA PieroVia Ghibellina 121, 98123 Tel 090 640 93 54*

An old rustic trattoria turned elegant restaurant in central Messina. Check the display of the day's fresh pescato (catch) at the front to see what seafood delights are available. The frittura di paranza (crispy fried seafood with a wedge of lemon) is popular with the locals. Closed Sun; 1 wk Aug.

PALERMO Trattoria TemptationVia Torretta 94, Località Sferracavallo, 90148 Tel 091 691 11 04*

This trattoria with a sea view near one of Palermo's major beach resort areas (around the headland just north of the city), offers an all-inclusive menu of seafood, including a succulent array of first courses. The pasta with eggplant and fried fish is particularly recommended.

PALERMO Antica Focacceria San FrancescoVia Alessandro Paternostro 58/Piazza San Francesco d'Assisi, 90133 Tel 091 32 02 64*

The most historic, atmospheric, and inexpensive spot in the city center for a quick lunch. It has been open since 1834 and features an airy interior furnished in Art Nouveau style. Pastas and pizzas are available, but stick with the classic split focaccia flatbread stuffed with cheese, meat, and vegetables, and have the classic cannoli for dessert.

PALERMO SantandreaPiazza Sant'Andrea 4, 90133 Tel 091 33 49 99*

Elegant family-run restaurant of candlelit tables on a quiet little piazza in the heart of the city. The waiter recites whatever innovative Sicilian dishes the chef has come up with based on the morning market's bounty, perhaps spaghetti with lobster and fish roe, or sweet-and-sour tuna with mint and onions. Dinner only, closed Sun.

PALERMO Trattoria SympatyVia Piano Gallo 18, Località Mondello, 90151 Tel 091 45 44 70*

The dining room has good views over the bay of Mondello – Palermo's most popular beach resort – and the menu is, appropriately, almost exclusively fish-based. Try the fettuccini all'aragosta (noodles with lobster), spaghetti alle sarde (with sardines), ricci (sea urchins), octopus or squid.

PALERMO La ScuderiaViale del Fante 9, 90146 Tel 091 52 03 23 Fax 091 52 04 67*

This elegant restaurant set in the Parco della Favorita, on the north edge of Palermo, sticks to traditional Sicilian cuisine, carefully and deliciously prepared. Do not miss the merluzzetti alla ghiotta (whiting stewed with capers, potatoes, saffron, and cherry tomatoes).

RAGUSA La CiotolaVia Archimede 23, 97100 Tel 0932 22 89 44*

This elegant, modern restaurant in the city center serves well-prepared Sicilian specialties like maccheroni alla ciotola (homemade pasta served with a sauce of eggplant, mushrooms, and tomatoes). The chef is often invited to prepare local dishes at national culinary events.

SCIACCA Hostaria del VicoloVicolo Sammartino 10, 92019 Tel 0925 230 71*

In the center of town. The menu is Sicilian with dishes such as spaghetti alla bottarga (with fish roe, mint, and pine nuts), casarecce con cacio, gamberi e ciliegino (homemade pasta with sheep's cheese, shrimp, and cherry tomatoes), and coda di rospo con patate (angler fish tail with potatoes).

SIRACUSA Don CamilloVia della Maestranza 96, 96100 Tel 0931 671 33*

Located in a 19th-century palazzo in picturesque Ortigia (the historic island center of Siracusa), this seafood restaurant features swordfish in many of the specials, as well as simple tuna steaks. For a first course, try the spaghetti della sirena (spaghetti tossed with shrimp and fresh sea urchin).

SIRACUSA Des Etrangers Et MiramarePasseggio Adorno 10-12, 96100 Tel 0931 31 91 00*

This swanky hotel restaurant has a large rooftop garden offering stunning views of Siracusa's port and beyond. Elaborate dishes combine fresh seafood and Sicilian produce with innovative twists. The quality wine list and refined atmosphere come at a price, though – this is the place for a special occasion or credit-card splurge.

TAORMINA Al Duomo

Via degli Ebrei 11, 98039 Tel 0942 62 56 56

A typical Sicilian restaurant with an outdoor terrace. Dishes make good use of Sicily's twin fish specialties: tuna and swordfish. But the chef's signature dish is pasta ca 'nocca (homemade macaroni with fresh anchovies, breadcrumbs, and wild fennel), followed by grilled agnello (lamb).

TAORMINA La Giara

Via La Floresta Livia 1, 98039 Tel 0942 233 60

A pretty restaurant of columns and arches with beautiful views over the bay from tables out on the terrace. Try the lobster cocktail, the petto d'oca affumicato (smoked goose breast), ravioli with eggplant, and pesce alla eoliana (baked grouper with potatoes, tomatoes, and capers). It also has a piano bar/club. Closed lunch.

TRAPANI Tra... Pani & Vini

Via Carolina 42, 91100 Tel 0923 276 25

No-nonsense trattoria in a characterful area near Trapani's seafont. The amiable service and great-value food make it a real find. Start with a selection of Sicilian cheeses and cured meats, and perhaps the hearty zuppa del giorno (soup of the day). There is also a good choice of honestly priced wines and homemade desserts.

TRAPANI Cantina Siciliana

Via Giudecca, 32, 91100 Tel 0923 286 73

In the bustling port area and old Jewish ghetto, this place attracts with the finest ucina marinara (seafood cooking). The menu depends on the day's catch, but expect crustaceans of various sizes, anchovies, red mullet, mackerel, and swordfish, all served with seasonal vegetables, pasta, and cous cous side dishes.

SARDINIA*ALGHERO Al Tuguri

Via Maiorca 113, 07041 Tel 079 97 67 72

A little gem of a restaurant with unpretentious decor and a cozy atmosphere. Excellent Mediterranean nouvelle cuisine combining Catalan and Sardinian recipes, like crème catalan. Recommended is the spaghetti with saffron and pecorino. Advance reservations are a must, since the dining room is very small. Closed Dec-Feb.

ALGHERO Il Pavone

Piazza Sulis 3-4, 07041 Tel 079 97 95 84

A smart restaurant on the edge of the old town, overlooking the lively Piazza Sulis. Seasonal Mediterranean and innovative Sardinian cuisine: fresh figs with anchovies and chili, squid ink pasta with smoked ricotta, lemon sorbet with spicy chocolate. Fish dishes are the specialty. Service is good.

ALGHERO/FERTILIA Sa Mandra

Strada Aeroporto Civile 21-22, 07041 Tel 079 99 91 50

A classic Sardinian agriturismo. The setting is rustic but the food is fit for a king. The fixed menu of traditional pastoral fare includes a selection of pecorino cheeses, hams and salamis, a variety of homemade pastas, roast suckling pig and lamb with fresh vegetables, followed by home-baked Sardinian sweets. The value is amazing.

BOSA Mannu da Giancarlo e Rita

Viale Alghero 28, 08013 Tel 0785 375 07 Fax 0785 37 53 08

A smart, modern restaurant in a family-run hotel, offering good local fish specialties. Bosa is famous for fresh lobster, which they serve here in a variety of sauces and styles. They also offer meat dishes, roast suckling pig, and gnocchi with lamb. The restaurant prides itself on the freshness of the produce it uses.

CAGLIARI Lillicu

Via Sardegna 78, 09214 Tel 070 65 29 70

Opened in the 1940s, this family-run restaurant is a Cagliari institution. Sit at one of the long refectory tables and let the amiable waiters bring heaped seafood plates of frittura (fried seafood) and arselle (tiny, sweet clams). Lillicu is a magical spot for chatting to locals and sharing a glass of superb house wine. Closed Sun.

CAGLIARI Antica Hostaria

Via Cavour 60, 09124 Tel 070 66 58 70

A comfortable, atmospheric restaurant in an old building on the back streets of the Marina district. The cuisine is good, based on traditional and local produce. Seasonal specialties include risotto with radicchio and pappardelle Antica Hostaria (homemade pasta ribbons with shrimp and pesto). They have a good wine list.

CAGLIARI Luigi Pomata

Viale Regina Margherita 18, 9214 Tel 070 67 20 58

Sardinian chef Luigi brings Genoese influences to this sophisticated venture near the port. Enjoy fresh sushi as an appetizer, followed by handmade pasta dishes, and grilled meat and fish for secondi. Inventive twists include red tuna tartare with green apple, celery, and lemon purée. There is a great-value two-course business lunch deal. Closed Sun.

Excellent wine list.

SHOPPING IN ITALY

Italy is known for its quality designer goods, ranging from chic clothing and sleek cars to stylish household items. There is a strong tradition of craftsmanship, often from family-run businesses, and there are numerous markets selling regional specialities. Apart from the town markets, it is not a country for bargains, but the joys of window shopping will offer plenty of compensation. If you come from outside the European Union, you may be able to claim back the 10 percent IVA tax (VAT). Make sure you leave time at your departure airport to fulfill all administrative requirements.

OPENING HOURS

Shop opening times are usually 9:30am–1pm and around 3:30–8pm, Tuesday through Saturday and Monday afternoons. However, shopkeepers are increasingly using more flexible hours. There are few department stores, but most large towns will have a Standa, Upim, Coin, or Rinascente. These stores are often open nonstop from 9am–8pm, Monday through Saturday. Music and bookstores sometimes stay open after 8pm and on Sundays.

FOOD SHOPS

Even though there are supermarkets throughout Italy, the specialist shops, although more expensive, are still the most interesting way to shop. A forno has the best bread and a macellaio has the finest meat (go to a norcineria for pork products). Vegetables are freshest from market stalls or the fruttivendolo. You can buy cakes at the pasticceria, milk at the latteria, and pasta, ham, cheese, and general foods at the often impressively stocked alimentari. Here you can also buy wine, but for a wider choice, head for the enoteca, vineria, or vinaio, where you can sometimes taste the wine before purchasing.

MARKETS

All towns have regional weekly markets. Large towns will have several small daily markets followed by a weekly flea market, usually on Sunday. In this guide the main market days are listed under each town. Traders set up at 5am and start to clear away at about 1:30pm. Food is sold by the etto (100 grams) and the chilo (kilo) (see p665), or in numbers (two onions, etc). Food stalls selling seasonal products generally have fresher and cheaper produce than the shops. Bargaining is not usual when buying food, but it is worth asking for a discount (sconto) for clothes.

SEASONAL PRODUCE

To make the most of Italian food, try to buy and eat what is in season. Grapes and mushrooms are best in fall, whereas spring is the season for asparagus and strawberries. In winter, vegetables such as Roman artichokes, cauliflower, and broccoli are at their best, as are lemons from Amalfi and Sicilian blood oranges. Summer is the time for plums, pears, and cherries, as well as zucchini, eggplant, tomatoes, and melon.

CLOTHES AND DESIGNER SHOPS

Italy is renowned worldwide for its fashion industry. Milan is the fashion capital and Via Monte Napoleone, in the city center, is lined with designer boutiques. All large towns will have a selection of designer shops, usually situated near each other. Less expensive clothes are available in markets and many department stores, where the styles tend to be more conventional. Italy is also famous for leather shoes and bags, the prices of which tend to be reasonable.

Sales (saldi) are held in summer and winter. Second-hand shops can be expensive, but the quality and condition of the clothes are usually very good. Larger markets have stalls piled high with used clothes. Rummage through and you will often find bargains.

JEWELRY AND ANTIQUE SHOPS

Glitzy gold jewelry is very popular in Italy and every gioielleria (jewelry shop) will have a wide selection. For more unusual items, try the bigiotteria or artisan shops (oreficeria). Antiques stores like Anticbità and Antiquariato to sell furniture and ornaments of varying quality and prices. You will rarely find bargains in Italy, except perhaps at the fiere dell'antiquariato (antique fairs), held throughout the year all over the country.

INTERIOR DESIGN AND HOUSEHOLD WARES

Interior design is another Italian sector where top names demand extravagant prices, with many shops concentrating on modern, high-tech

An elegant designer clothes boutique in Treviso styles. There are household shops in cities and towns throughout the country. Italian kitchenware is particularly striking, with its stainless steel and copper pots, pans, and utensils. For the lowest prices, avoid the tourist shops and, if possible, buy directly from the manufacturer. Less expensive items include the characteristic brown espresso and cappuccino cups sold in all markets.

REGIONAL SPECIALTIES

Many of Italy's regional specialties are world famous: Parma ham, Chianti wine, olive oil, and grappa. Regional sweets, including the Sienese panforte and Sicilian marzipan, are also well-known, as are cheeses such as Gorgonzola from Lombardy and Parmesan from Emilia-Romagna. Traditional crafts are still practiced in Italy and range from delicate lacework and glassware in the Veneto to leatherwork, jewelry, and marbled paper in Florence. Italian ceramics include elaborate Tuscan pottery, hand-painted dishes around Amalfi, and De Simone's stylized designer plates from Sicily.

ENTERTAINMENT IN ITALY

Italians exude strong national pride and passion about every aspect of their cultural heritage. One of Europe's key centers of culture since Roman times, Italy was the cradle of the Renaissance, and it is known today as the home of opera and a mixed bag of regional styles of folk music. The country holds one of the most acclaimed international film festivals and every town boasts a teatro, an elaborate classical venue with mixed programs incorporating every aspect of classic and traditional culture. Add to this the many street festivals and fairs, often in celebration of food, wine, and the dolce vita, and you will never have a dull moment.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Most venues have booking facilities online or a booking line to call. However, major events and most opera performances tend to sell out well in advance, it is wise to book through specialist ticket companies such as Liaisons Abroad that may still have availability when the venue itself has sold out.

To find out what's on in Italy during your visit, check the Italian tourism website (www.italiantourism.com) or a copy of Dove, a monthly publication about culture, travel, and food that also highlights the month's events in Rome and Milan.

Il Corriere della Sera, Italy's oldest daily, contains sections on events and culture; its Vivimilano website (www.corriere.it/vivimilano) is a mine of information on events taking place in the fashion capital. Another website (www.romaturismo.it) offers an excellent service for Rome.

Tourist information offices (see p665) will also provide information on programs, events, and venues, as will the Italian Government Tourist Board.

Few Italian venues provide easy access for people with restricted mobility. The situation improves a little in the summer months, however, when many events are held outside.

OPERA AND CLASSICAL MUSIC

Italy has some of the world's most beautiful and historic opera houses. Venice's La Fenice, destroyed by fire in 1996, has been restored to its former splendor, and Teatro alla Scala (see p193) in Milan also underwent a major renovation. In addition to the original building, there is now an extra theater, Teatro degli Arcimboldi, allowing the Scala to host more performances.

Verona hosts a summer season of opera and classical music in the outdoor Arena di Verona (see p147), while Rome's venues include the open-air Baths of Caracalla (see p437), the breathtaking Renzo Piano-designed auditorium Parco della Musica, and the Teatro dell'Opera.

In May and June, Florence's Maggio Musicale (see p66) is packed with opera, ballet, and classical performances.

Poster advertising the Venice Film Festival

ROCK, JAZZ, AND CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

Large concerts tend to be held in classic theaters or in sports stadiums. The Arena di Verona hosts big names in summer, as does the Stadio Olimpico in Rome. In Milan, the Forum di Assago sports stadium is a popular venue. Tickets for concerts are sometimes sold in record shops.

World-class jazz performers gather annually in Perugia for the Umbria Jazz festival in July. The website provides booking details and information.

THEATER AND BALLET

Italy has the highest concentration of traditional theaters in Europe, offering a mixture of theater, ballet, and classical music all under one roof. All theaters also hold ballet performances, mainly by international touring troupes. The Scala's ballet company has gained international renown. Both tradition and innovation can be seen at the international festival of ballet that takes place at Genoa's Teatro Carlo Felice in July.

The opera festival in Verona attracts huge crowds to the Roman arena

MOVIES

A highlight of the cinema year is the Venice Film Festival (see p67) in August to September. The Rome International Festival of Cinema (see p68) also draws major stars. A smaller International Film Festival (see p67) is held in Taormina, Sicily, while Florence has the Festa dei Popoli (see p68) in winter.

REGIONAL DANCE, MUSIC, AND FESTIVALS

Seasonal festivals are either religious, relating to patron saints, or food-orientated. The best known is Carnevale (literally "farewell to meat") (see p69), which celebrates the end of winter and introduces Lent. Venice holds the most opulent and the oldest masquerade party, while Viareggio, in Tuscany, is famous for its lively themed floats.

Another festival highlight is the Sieneese Palio (see p67), a bareback horserace that takes place twice a year in one of Italy's most beautiful squares.

For further details on festivals throughout Italy, see pp66–69.

Every region in Italy has its own ancient music and dance, but the best known is the tarantella, a lively dance and rhythmic song from Puglia (see p511). Legends trace the origins of the name to the tarantula spider, since victims of a tarantula bite would perform a frenzied dance to sweat out the poison.

A thrilling moment in the Sieneese Palio race held in Piazza del Campo

CULTURE

Spectating, whether at sporting events, rural festivals or even grand events, is what entertainment is all about. And part of this, of course, involves that very Italian pastime – seeing and being seen.

You can witness this in daily life in the café culture – visit any of the large cities' popular squares, such as Piazza di Spagna or Piazza Navona in Rome, Piazza del Duomo in Milan or Piazza San Marco in Venice, and you will see people of all ages parading around in their best clothes. This is referred to as la passeggiata, a walk around that becomes a ritual on weekends, along the seafront and lakeside promenades in summer and in city and town centers.

Another aspect of daily life is l'aperitivo. This ritual of joining friends for an early evening drink after work or before going on to dinner or to a nightclub is back in fashion. Bars provide abundant finger-food buffets to accompany the drinks, which are generally priced higher than at other times of day. This trend has spawned new lounge clubs in the major cities.

Specialist Vacations and Outdoor Activities

Exploring the countryside on horseback

Italy offers an amazing variety of cultural, sporting, and leisure activities. However, many schools and groups require annual membership and short-term activities are often expensive and difficult to find.

Information on current leisure and sporting events in a specific region is available from the tourist office listed for each town in this guide. For details on annual festivals, see Italy Through the Year on pages 66–9. The following suggestions include some of the most popular as well as some more unusual pursuits.

Cycling on the tree-lined flatlands of the Po Delta

WALKING, CYCLING, AND HORSERIDING

Some Italian branches of the World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF) organize walks and treks. Club Alpino Italiano (CAI) runs trekking and climbing excursions and the Italian Birds Protection League (LIPU) arranges nature walks and birdwatching trips. The military IGM maps are the most detailed but unfortunately are only available from specialist map shops.

Cycling is popular despite Italy's mountainous landscape. Travel bookshops stock publications with suggested routes, such as the Po Delta, which has miles of scenic flatlands.

Many riding schools organize trips and outings, which are also advertised in the local press. For general information, contact the Federazione Italiana Sport Equestri.

MOUNTAIN SPORTS

The most well-equipped and famous ski resorts are in the Dolomites, in the Italian Alps, and around Turin, the city which will host the 2006 Winter Olympics. There are also smaller and less expensive resorts in the Apennines and in Sicily. Package ski holidays, arranged from outside Italy, offer the best deals. The Federazione Arrampicata Sportiva Italiana has a list of mountain climbing schools that arrange climbs for all levels.

Ski lift near the desolate Falzarego Pass, in the heart of the Dolomites

ARCHAEOLOGICAL DIGS

The British monthly magazine Archaeology Abroad, available in the UK, gives a comprehensive list of archaeology groups and digs worldwide. In Italy, the Gruppo Archeologico Romano runs two-week digs in various regions. There are summer and winter digs, for both adults and children. The group has contacts with local archaeological organizations as well.

ITALIAN LANGUAGE AND CULTURE

For a wide selection of material on courses and schools in Italy, contact the Italian consulate in your home country. The Società Dante Alighieri provides courses in the Italian language, history of art, literature, and culture. There are both full- and part-time courses available, for every level. Language schools abound in Italy's main cities and are advertised in the Yellow Pages (Pagine Gialle) or foreign language bookstores, and newspapers. For young students, Intercultura will organize weekly, monthly, and year-long exchanges including language courses, accommodations with Italian families, and enrollment in Italian schools.

Group hiking tour in the Dolomites of Trentino-Alto Adige (see p78)

A lesson in Italian cookery in Sicily

Cooking vacations run by English-speaking experts in Italian cooking have become very popular. Tasting Places, for example, does wine tours and week-long courses in Italian cuisine, and provides beautiful private accommodations. The course locations include the Veneto, Sicily, Tuscany, and Umbria. Wine-tasting tours are organized by local tourist boards. The Università per Stranieri in Perugia runs courses on Italian culture, history, and cooking.

WATER SPORTS

Most lakes and many sea-side resorts rent out sailing boats, canoes, and windsurfing equipment. Lessons and courses are organized by clubs, which usually require membership. For a list of authorized associations contact the Federazione Italiana Canoa Kayak and the Federazione Italiana Vela. Weekend and weekly sailing holidays and courses are featured in the magazine Avventura nel Mondo and most travel agents have a selection of sailing holidays.

Swimming pools are expensive in Italy and many do not accept people on a daily basis. You often have to pay a membership fee and a monthly tariff. Some of the luxurious hotels open their pools to the public in summer, but at pricy rates. Water parks are popular and provide pools, slides, wave machines, and games. Before diving into any lakes or rivers (and even the sea near main towns) it is best to check that the water is not polluted. The Federazione Italiana di

Attività Subacquee runs underwater diving courses, and can give information on all local centers.

AIR SPORTS

There are schools nationwide that offer hanggliding and flying courses, but the minimum duration of each course is one month. For information and a list of schools contact the AeroClub Italia. You must be licensed before you can fly and all crafts must be registered with AeroClub.

OTHER SPORTS

Golf is a popular sport in Italy and there are plenty of courses to choose from.

Home membership and handicap are often required for daily access to a club.

Italian tennis clubs usually operate on a membership basis, unless you are invited as a member's guest. The national Federazione Italiana di Tennis has a list of all the tennis clubs in Italy. The opportunity to watch a professional football game should not be missed. Seats can be scarce, so book tickets in advance from the stadium. Most Serie A matches are played on Sundays, with international games taking place on Tuesdays and Wednesdays.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 662-671

TRAVEL INFORMATION 672-683

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Ask any Italian and they will almost certainly tell you that Italy is the most beautiful country in the world. They may not be far wrong. However, the charm and allure of Italy may help to veil some of its numerous practical problems. Getting information is rarely straightforward; public offices and banks are nearly always crippled by long lines and bureaucracy, and the postal service is renowned for its inefficiency. This section, together with some forward planning and a little patience, should help you cope with some of Italy's idiosyncrasies.

Tourist board logo

Tourists crossing the Ponte della Paglia in Venice (see p109)

WHEN TO VISIT

The northern part of Italy is generally more temperate than the south, which has a Mediterranean climate. From June to September the weather is hot throughout the country and, in peak summer, also humid. Seaside resorts tend to get very busy. Spring and fall are ideal for visiting cities as temperatures are milder, making sightseeing much more comfortable, although you should be prepared for the odd downpour.

Italy's towns and historic sites are extremely popular attractions and it is worth considering this when planning your trip. Most sights are open all year, except on some public holidays (see p69), and most close one day a week. Rome, Florence, and Venice are all crowded from spring to October and it is advisable to book a hotel well in advance. In August the cities are generally slightly less busy, abandoned by their inhabitants for the summer holidays.

In February, Venice triples its population during Carnevale (see p69) and at Easter, Rome is overrun by pilgrims and tourists. Winter can be bitterly cold, especially in the north, and December to March is the time of year for skiing in the high altitude resorts of the Italian Alps. The Climate of Italy on pages 72–3 takes a detailed look at the country's regional weather.

VISAS AND PERMESSO DI SOGGIORNO

Like European Union nationals, citizens of the US, Canada, Australia, and New Zealand do not need visas for stays of up to three months. Most European Union (EU) visitors need only a valid identity document including a photograph, but visitors from the UK, Ireland, Denmark, and Sweden must have a passport.

All visitors should check requirements with the Italian embassy before traveling and, officially, declare themselves to the Italian police within eight days of arrival. If you are staying in a hotel or campsite, this will be done for you by the staff, otherwise contact the local Questura (police station).

Anyone wishing to stay in Italy for more than three months (or eight days for non-EU citizens) will have to obtain a permesso di soggiorno (permit to stay, or residence permit). You can apply for a residence permit at any main police station, Questura di Provincia. In some cases you can obtain a kit containing the necessary application form from main post offices. You must apply for the correct permit, either a permit to work (lavoro) or a permit to study (studio). The necessary documentation is listed on the Questura website (see p665).

To apply for a study permit, it is necessary to get a letter from the relevant school or university at which you intend to study, giving details of your course. This then has to be sent to the Italian consulate in your own country of origin to obtain an official covering letter, or declaration.

You will also need some form of guarantee that your medical bills will be paid should you become ill or have an accident where you require medical treatment. A comprehensive insurance policy for the length of your stay (see p667) will usually be sufficient.

CUSTOMS

On June 30, 1999, the intra-EU Duty and Tax Free Allowances, better known as duty-free and mainly affecting such high-tax items as alcohol, perfumes, and tobacco, were abolished. However, for EU residents the amount of these goods that can be imported for personal use has increased.

Consulates can generally provide up-to-date information on particular customs regulations. To find out what you can take back from Italy to non-EU countries, contact that particular country's customs department, which will be able to advise you.

TAX EXEMPTION

Value Added Tax (IVA in Italy) ranges from about 20 percent, with a reduced rate of 4–10 percent on some items. Non-European Union citizens making purchases in Italy can claim an IVA rebate, provided the total expenditure in the one store is over €155. It is a long process, and it is easier to get a refund if you shop where you see the "Euro Free Tax" sign, rather than from a market stall. In this instance, show your passport to the shop assistant, complete a form, and the IVA will be deducted from your bill. Alternatively, present a customs officer with your purchases and their receipts on your departure from Italy. He or she will stamp the receipts, which you then send to the vendor. A refund should eventually be sent to you.

TOURIST INFORMATION

The national tourist board, ENIT, has a good website as well as branches in capital cities worldwide, and offers general information on Italy. For specific requests, contact the local tourist offices. The addresses and telephone numbers are listed under each town or city, directly under the title, and they are plotted on the town and city maps. An EPT (Ente Provinciale di Turismo) has information on its town and surrounding province, while an APT (Azienda di Promozione Turistica) deals exclusively with individual towns. Both offices help with practical information such as hotel bookings and tours. They also provide free maps and guidebooks in various languages. The EPT and APT can refer you to local tour guides and advise on trips and excursions.

Small towns will have a Pro Loco, a tourist office run by the local administration, which is sometimes open only during the tourist season. It is usually located in the town hall.

TOURS

Many tour companies organize bus trips, with English-speaking guides, that include all the main tourist attractions in Italy. Companies such as the UK-based Leger Holidays offer bus tours that go all over the country. If you are looking for something a little more personal and off the beaten track, check the local pages of national newspapers for tour groups or organizations. Local tourist boards will also be able to advise you. Always employ official guides and be sure to establish the fee in advance. For information on specialist holidays, such as sporting or cultural activities, turn to pages 658–9.

SIGHTSEEING OPENING HOURS

Italian museums are gradually conforming to regulations, particularly in the northern and central regions of the country, opening from 9am–7pm daily, except for Mondays. In winter, however, many museums revert to slightly earlier closing times, particularly on Sundays, but it is best to check.

Privately run and smaller museums set their own opening times, so it is advisable to phone in advance to avoid disappointment. Archaeological sites are generally open from 9am to one hour before sunset, Tuesday to Sunday. Churches are usually open from about 7am–12:30pm and 4–7pm. However, they often prefer not to let tourists in during services, so Sunday is not the best day to visit.

ADMISSION CHARGES

Sightseeing fees range from €2 to €9. Churches are usually free, but some expect a donation, and you will need coins to illuminate works of art. Reductions for students are not always offered but many state-run museums and archaeological sites allow free entry for EU residents under 18 and over 60 years of age. Large groups are often entitled to a discount as well. If reductions are available, you will need to show a valid form of identification.

ETIQUETTE AND TIPPING

People in Italy are friendly toward foreign visitors. On entering a shop or bar it is customary to greet people with a general buon giorno (good morning) or buona sera (good evening), and the same applies when leaving. They will also try to be helpful when asked directions in the street. If your Italian is slight, simply saying susi, followed by the name of the place you wish to go to, will often suffice. Grazie (thank you) is replied to with prego (you're welcome).

Tipping in restaurants is expected when the 10–15 percent service is not included. However, as much as 10 percent would be considered generous and a tip is often not expected at all in family-run restaurants. Taxi drivers and hotel porters expect a few euros if they have been helpful. You could simply round the bill up to the nearest €2.

Italians are very dress-conscious and unusual clothes do get noticed. Be aware that in places of worship you should cover your torso and upper arms; shorts and skirts must reach below the knee.

Smoking is forbidden in all buildings open to the public (including offices, shops, bars and restaurants). However, it is tolerated in outdoor public places, whereas drunkenness is definitely frowned upon.

Unacceptable dress in church: both sexes are required to cover torsos and upper arms

A student relaxing in the sun in Gaiole in Chianti

RELIGIOUS SERVICES

Around 35 percent of the population is practicing Catholic. Sunday mass is celebrated throughout the country, while in the principal churches, services are also held during the week. In major cities some churches, such as the church of Santa Susanna (Via XX Settembre 14) in Rome, offer services and confession in English. For some visitors, a trip to Rome will include an audience with the pope (see p419).

With increasing numbers of foreigners making their home in Italy, all the main religious beliefs are also represented. For details contact the main centers in Rome.

STUDENT INFORMATION

The national student travel organization, CTS (Centro Turistico Studentesco), has branches throughout Italy and Europe. They issue the International Student Identity Card (ISIC) and the Youth International Educational Exchange Card (YIEE). Both can be used, along with a passport, for discounts at museums and other tourist attractions. The ISIC card also gives access to a 24-hour telephone helpline that provides general advice and information. As well as issuing youth cards, CTS offers cut-price car rental and will organize holidays and courses. For details about youth hostels, contact the Associazione Italiana Alberghi per la Gioventù (the Italian YHA), providing that you are a current member.

TRAVELING WITH CHILDREN

On the whole, Italians love children, to an extent that sometimes seems over-indulgent. Most trattorias and pizzerias welcome them and there are no rules excluding children from bars; however, high chairs are unusual. Hotels also welcome children, but smaller establishments may have limited facilities. Some of the more upscale hotels offer a babysitting service. Very few museums, on the other hand, provide special child-orientated activities. It is common to see children playing outside fairly late at night, especially in summer. Most towns have city parks with playgrounds and many have summer funfairs. Regular stops for gelato are guaranteed to go down well with youngsters. For young swimmers, the calm Mediterranean is ideal, though care should always be taken.

DISABLED TRAVELERS

Awareness of the needs of the disabled is improving in Italy, especially in major cities, with ramps being added to museums and some churches.

Trains and buses are also becoming more disabled-friendly. In Milan AIAS (Associazione Italiana Assistenza Spastici) and in Rome CO.IN. Sociale and Roma per Tutti provide information and general assistance. Train travelers with Trenitalia on both international and domestic routes receive help with special reservations and assistance at stations.

ISIC card

PUBLIC RESTROOMS

Gabinetto means public restroom, though signs often say WC. Tourist cities have well-signed public restrooms that charge around €1. Some have cleaning staff on hand and a tip may be left. Italian cafés usually have a restroom for customers, though it is worth checking. Old-style “crouch” toilets are still common.

ELECTRICAL ADAPTORS

The voltage in Italy is 220 volts, with two-pin round-pronged plugs, so it is advisable to bring a universal adaptor with you or buy one in the country. Most hotels with three or more stars have hairdryers and shaving points in all bedrooms, but check the voltage first, to be safe.

ITALIAN TIME

Italy is six hours ahead of Eastern Standard Time (EST). The clocks are put forward one hour in March and back in October, like Daylight Saving Time. New York and Ottawa are 6 hours behind Italy; London is 1 hour behind; and Sydney is 9 hours ahead.

The clock of San Giacomo di Rialto in Venice (see p97)

RESPONSIBLE TRAVEL

Local attitudes toward environmental issues are developing rather slowly in Italy, despite the efforts of many concerned groups such as the Verdi (Greens) political party. However, there are opportunities for low impact travel and alternative green options available.

Staying at family run guesthouses instead of international hotel chains helps support local economies. National and regional parks award eco labels to hotels and guesthouses that adhere to EU rules governing sustainable tourism, which cover issues such as energy and water saving, waste disposal, and use of local products. The National Association for Agritourism and Agriturismo (see p556) offers countrywide farm stays. These are a great way of enjoying the countryside and experiencing local traditions, as well as helping supplement the income of small farm owners. Facilities vary and some farms offer visitors the opportunity to help out.

Farmers' markets and growers who sell their produce direct to the public are now more common, guaranteeing fresh, seasonal produce. Look for the label biologico when searching for organic produce.

Personal Security and Health

Although Italy is generally a safe place for visitors, it is wise to keep a watchful eye on your personal belongings, especially in the larger towns and cities. There is a conspicuous police presence throughout the country, and in the event of an emergency or crime, any of the police officers described in this section will be able to assist you and tell you where to go to report an incident. If you fall ill, pharmacies are a good first stop where medically trained staff can give advice or tell you where to find further help. In an emergency, the Casualty Department (Pronto Soccorso) of any hospital will treat you and it is likely that you will encounter English-speaking staff, especially in large towns.

PERSONAL PROPERTY

Petty theft such as pickpocketing, purse snatching, and car theft is common in Italian cities. In the event of a theft you must report it within 24 hours to the nearest questura or commissariato di polizia (police station). If possible, show them some ID.

Avoid leaving anything visible in an unattended car, including a car radio. If you have to leave baggage in a car, find a hotel that has private parking. When making a purchase, always check your change and do not keep wallets in back pockets, especially on buses or in other crowded places. "Fanny packs" and money belts are a favorite target for pickpockets, so try to keep them hidden. When walking, hold bags and cameras in front of you and on the inside of the sidewalk so as not to tempt motorized snatchers, and do not show expensive cameras and video equipment in areas off tourist routes.

If attacked, never attempt to hang on to your things as you could be seriously injured and dragged along the street.

Avoid carrying large sums of money – take out only what you need for the day. It is advisable to get comprehensive travel insurance that covers theft of personal possessions in addition to covering cancellation/delay of flights, loss/damage of baggage, money, and other valuables, as well as personal liability and accidents. It should include cover for legal assistance and advice.

If you do need to make an insurance claim for stolen or lost property, you must get a copy of the report (denuncia) from the police station when you report the incident. In case of lost passports, go to your embassy or consulate; for lost credit cards or travelers' checks, contact the issuing company's nearest office.

If you do not have insurance cover, contact your embassy as soon as possible

Commissariato di Polizia – a police station after an incident, such as an accident, occurs. The embassy can offer advice and should provide you with a list of English- and Italian-speaking lawyers who are knowledgeable about both the Italian and other legal systems.

PERSONAL SECURITY

Although petty crime in cities is frequent, violent crime in Italy is rare. However, it is common for people to raise their voices aggressively during an argument. Usually, remaining calm and being polite will help to defuse the situation.

Always be wary of unofficial tour guides, taxi drivers, or strangers who wish to assist you or advise you on accommodations, restaurants, or shops as they may expect something in return. Decline their offers politely but firmly.

WOMEN TRAVELERS

Women traveling on their own in Italy are likely to meet with a lot of attention. This is often more of an irritation than a danger, but it is best to keep away from lonely, unlit streets and areas near railroad stations at night, to carry an alarm or whistle, and to be equipped with the telephone numbers of your hotel and a local taxi service. Walking quickly and purposefully is a good way to avoid any unwanted attention. The staff at hotels and restaurants generally treat their single female guests and customers with extra care and attention.

THE POLICE

There are several different police forces in Italy and each one fulfills a particular role. The state police, la polizia, wear blue uniforms and drive blue cars. They deal with most crimes.

The carabinieri are militarily trained and wear dark blue and black uniforms with red striped trousers. These officers deal with a variety of offenses from organized crime to speeding and can also conduct random security checks.

The guardia di finanza are the financial police force (fraud unit), and wear gray uniforms with yellow-striped trousers. The vigili urbani, or the municipal traffic police, wear blue and white uniforms in winter and white during the summer.

Even though they are not official police officers, the vigili urbani can issue heavy fines for traffic and parking offenses. They can usually be spotted patrolling the streets, enforcing laws, or directing traffic. Officers from any of the forces will be able to help in an emergency.

MEDICAL TREATMENT

Emergency medical care in Italy is free for all EU and Australian citizens. Non-EU citizens should try to arrive with comprehensive private medical insurance to cover all eventualities. Australians need to apply to Medicare. Visitors from the US should check with their insurance companies before leaving home that they are covered if medical care is needed. Many medical facilities will require you to pay for treatment in full at the time of service. Be sure to get an itemized bill to submit to your insurance company. Insurance companies may require an official translation before they will reimburse you. Travelers may wish to take out additional, private travel insurance against the cost of any emergency hospital care, doctors' fees, and repatriation.

If you do need emergency treatment, go to the Pronto Soccorso (emergency room) of the nearest hospital. If necessary, you will be referred to the appropriate specialist or department within the same structure. As an alternative, ask your hotel to call the night doctor – guardia medica – who can be consulted on the phone.

No inoculations are needed for Italy, but mosquito repellent is advisable in summer. Repellent creams and sprays are found in pharmacies, as are electrical repellers that burn pellets to deter the bugs.

PHARMACIES

Various medical products, including homeopathic medicines, are available in any pharmacy (farmacia), but a prescription is often required. Qualified staff will offer advice for minor ailments and common illnesses and provide appropriate medicines. Thanks to a night rota (servizio notturno), there is always a pharmacy open in all cities and most towns. Those that are open at night are listed in the local pages of daily newspapers and on all pharmacy doors.

Pharmacies also sell toiletries and beauty items. Common non-prescription pharmaceutical products such as aspirin are also sold at lower prices in many large supermarkets.

Banking and Local Currency

Virtually all Italian hotels, many shops, large restaurants, and gas stations accept major credit cards. Only in the more off-the-beaten-track locations will you have difficulties without euros, and some establishments will offer a discount for payments made in cash, especially in low season. When you pay with a credit card, you might be asked to show identification, such as your passport. Foreign currency can be changed in banks, although these are often crowded and service tends to be slow. All banks will cash travelers' checks, and ATMs (bancomat) will accept cards with a PIN number. Most machines also accept MasterCard, VISA, and American Express cards. Although banks often have the best exchange rates, bureaux de change and foreign exchange machines can be more convenient.

ATM which also accepts VISA and MasterCard (Access)

CHANGING MONEY

Banking hours are somewhat restrictive and can also be slightly erratic so it is safest to acquire a small amount of local currency before you arrive in Italy. Exchange rates will vary from place to place.

Travelers' checks are still a safe way to carry money, though commission charges can be hefty. Choose a well known name such as Thomas Cook or American Express. Once you arrive, the most convenient way to change money is to use the electronic exchange machines, which are located at all major airports, train stations, and some banks. The machines have multilingual instructions and the exchange rate is clearly displayed on the screen. Simply feed in notes of the same foreign currency and you will receive euros in return.

Bureaux de change can be found in all main towns. Although they are easier to use, they usually have worse exchange rates and charge more commission than banks.

REGIONAL DIFFERENCES IN COST OF LIVING

The north is generally more expensive than the south, but there are many exceptions. Restaurants and hotels off the beaten track are usually better value, and buying locally made produce is cost effective if you avoid obvious tourist traps.

BANKING HOURS

Banks are usually open between 8:30am and 1:30pm, Monday to Friday. Most also open for an hour in the afternoon, from about 2:15pm to 3pm or 2:30pm until 3:30pm, depending on the bank. All banks close on weekends and public holidays, and they also close early the day before a major holiday. Bureaux de change, however, are often open all day, and in some places they also stay open until late at night.

Metal-detecting security doors found at most banks

USING BANKS

For security purposes, most banks have electronic double doors with metal detectors, allowing one person in at a time. Metal objects and bags should first be deposited in lockers situated in the foyer. Press the button to open the outer door, then wait for it to close behind you. The inner door then opens automatically. Do not be alarmed by the heavily armed guards that patrol most banks in Italy.

Changing money at a bank can be a frustrating process involving endless form-filling and waiting in line. First you have to go to the window that displays the cambio sign and then to the cassa to obtain your money. If in doubt, ask someone in order to avoid waiting in the wrong line.

If you need to have money sent to you in Italy, banks at home can transfer money to an Italian bank, but it can take up to a week. American Express, Thomas Cook, and Western Union all provide swifter money transfer services, with a charge to the sender.

CASH MACHINES

Withdrawing cash from an ATM (automatic teller machine) with a credit card is a straightforward process. Choose your language on the screen and follow the instructions. You will need to type in your PIN number, so have it handy. Should your card be swallowed up by a cash machine for some reason (for example if you used an incorrect PIN number), it may be sent back to the issuing bank. However, if the bank is open do ask inside. Costs for cash withdrawals are set by your bank so check before you travel. It may be advisable to take out a largish amount of money in one go, but bear in mind that ATMs may run out of bills during weekends.

THE EURO

The euro (€) is the common currency of the European Union. It came into general circulation on January 1, 2002, initially for twelve participating countries. Italy was one of those twelve countries taking the euro and the lira was phased out by March 2002.

EU members using the euro as sole official currency are known as the Eurozone. Several EU members have opted out of joining this common currency. Euro notes are identical throughout the Eurozone countries, each one including designs of fictional architectural structures. The coins, however, have one side identical (the value side) and one side with an image unique to each country. All bills and coins can be used in any country of the Eurozone.

Euro Bills

Euro bills have seven denominations. The €5 bill (gray in color) is the smallest, followed by the €10 bill (pink), €20 bill (blue), €50 bill (orange), €100 bill (green), €200 bill (yellow), and €500 bill (purple). All bills show the 12 stars of the European Union.

Coins

The euro has eight coin denominations: €1 and €2; 50 cents, 20 cents, 10 cents, 5 cents, 2 cents, and 1 cent. The 2- and 1-euro coins are both silver and gold in color. The 50-, 20-, and 10-cent coins are gold. The 5-, 2-, and 1-cent coins are bronze.

Communications and Media

Although the Italian postal service is known for being very slow, Italy's other forms of communication, at least in the cities, are more efficient. Fax machines, courier services, and telephones are all widespread, and Internet points are available throughout Italy. Foreign-language newspapers and magazines are on sale in all cities and most large towns. Both state-run and privately owned television stations exist, but only satellite television and radio stations broadcast foreign-language programs.

PUBLIC TELEPHONES

The Italian national telephone company is Telecom Italia. Coin-operated telephones have been phased out and replaced by card-operated machines. Most public telephones have instructions in five languages (Italian, English, French, Spanish, and German). To select a language, push the top right-hand button. To use a public telephone you will need a Telecom Italia phone card. Phone cards (carta or scheda telefonica) can be purchased from bars, newspaper kiosks, post offices, and tabacchi displaying the black-and-white T sign.

International phone cards, on sale at tabacchi and newsstands, are still a very cheap way to call abroad. Some cards offer as many as 3 hours of calls for about €10, depending on the country being called. Dial the toll-free number on the card and then enter the secret code found by scratching off the silver strip on the back of the card. You will be told the amount of credit available and then asked to dial the number you wish to call. Rates are slightly higher when calling from a cell or public phone. Check with your hotel before using a card from your room as extra charges may be applied.

Telephone sign

EMAIL AND INTERNET

Internet and email services are widely available throughout Italy, particularly in urban areas, so it should not be difficult to access email accounts or connect to the web. Telecom Italia, the Italian national phone company, has set up Internet services in the country's major train stations and public phone centers. Internet time can be purchased using a regular phone card.

Some major chains of Internet points sell magnetic cards with credit that can be used in any of their stores throughout Italy. Internet Train, with branches in almost 90 towns, is the most visible. Visit its website for a full list of stores. In addition, small Internet points are very common.

Telephone company logo

These are usually clustered around train stations, cheap hotels, and university areas and can range from the back room of a local grocery store to a corner in a café or bar. Users can buy computer time in blocks as short as 15 minutes. There are usually student discounts available, and cost per minute decreases as the amount of time purchased increases.

Many hotels have Wi-Fi so travelers with their own laptop can have easy access. You'll probably need a plug adaptor too. Remember that with Skype or Voip Stunt installed it's possible to make phone calls over the Internet with the help of a small microphone. Calls are free between Skype users.

CELL PHONES

There are four main GSM frequencies (Global System for Mobile Communications) in use around the world, so to guarantee that your phone will work, make sure you have a quad-band phone. Tri-band phones from outside the US are also usually compatible but, because the US uses two frequency bands itself, a US tri-band phone may only have limited global coverage. Contact your service provider for clarification.

To use your cell phone abroad you may need to get "permission" from your network operator, as often they need to enable "roaming" for your phone. At the moment, you are charged for the calls you receive as well as the calls you make, and you have to pay a substantial premium for the international leg of the call.

One popular option is to purchase a local SIM card – the electronic chip that links your phone to a particular

Using a public Telecom Italia telephone network – that can be topped up with credit and uses the local mobile phone networks. You can only do this if your handset is “unlocked” – some operators lock their phones to specific networks.

It is worth checking your insurance policy in case your phone gets stolen. You should also keep your network operator’s helpline number handy for emergencies.

TV AND RADIO

Television channels in Italy include the state-owned RAI (Uno, Due, and Tre) and Mediaset (Retequattro, Canale Cinque, and Italia Uno). There are also many local channels. Most foreign programs are dubbed into Italian, although satellite channels, such as CNN, Sky, and BBC World News, show news and sports programs in English. There are three national radio stations and hundreds of local stations.

A selection of newspapers available at a newsstand

NEWSPAPERS

There are several national daily newspapers, including La Stampa, Il Corriere della Sera, and La Repubblica. Papers with the most detailed news of Italy’s major cities include Il Mattino for Naples, Il Messaggero for Rome, La Nazione for Florence, and Il Giornale for Milan.

All newspapers will have local pages and listings for movies, theaters, main concerts, and other cultural events. In Rome and Milan, La Repubblica also publishes regular “what’s on and where to go” supplements called Trova-

Roma and ViviMilano respectively. Florence’s Firenze Spettacolo and Rome’s Roma C’è are weekly entertainment listings magazines. The latter also has a useful restaurant section and a summary of listings in English at the back.

American and British papers, such as the International Herald Tribune, USA Today, and International Guardian, are readily available and tend to arrive in the main cities at around midday on the day of issue.

POST OFFICE

Local post offices open from 8:25am–1:50pm weekdays, and from 8:25am–noon on Saturday. Main city post offices are open from 8:25am–7pm nonstop. Many tobacconists also sell stamps.

The Vatican City and the state of San Marino have their own postal systems and stamps. Bear in mind that letters bearing San Marino or Vatican stamps can only be posted in San Marino and Vatican mailboxes.

The red mailboxes (blue in the Vatican) usually have two slots labeled per la città (for the city only) and tutte le altre destinazioni (for all other destinations).

Italian post is notorious for its unreliability and letters can take between four days and two weeks to arrive.

For a faster service it is best to send letters by express post (posta prioritaria). A more reliable option is recorded delivery (raccomandata). Anything of value should be sent by insured post (assicurata).

For urgent communications, try state couriers Postacelere and Paccocelere, which are based at all main post offices. They guarantee delivery within 24–72 hours and are far cheaper than private couriers.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Italy has transport systems of varying efficiency, from the modern road, bus, and rail networks of the north to the slower systems of the south. Numerous airlines operate flights to several of the country's major airports, while within Italy itself the national carrier Alitalia, and several smaller companies, provide an extensive network of internal flights. Connections by road to the rest of Europe are good, though Alpine roads can be adversely affected by the weather in winter. Freeways and other roads within the country are generally good, but can be busy on weekends and peak periods. Italy also has an efficient system of ferries connecting Sicily, Sardinia, and many of the smaller offshore islands. Many of these are car ferries, and are busy in summer.

GREEN TRAVEL

Traveling in Italy without using high-impact flights or long car drives is straightforward, thanks to the excellent public transportation network. Rail and bus systems both offer regular and reliable services and are reasonably priced. Connections with major European cities are good and travelers can often choose between day services on the Eurocity trains and overnight services on the EuroNight trains. There are also high speed trains, known as the Alta Velocità (see pp676-7).

Where only a few people use a service (such as to outlying hamlets in the Alps and Apennines), some authorities have set up a servizio a chiamata (demand-responsive service), whereby passengers phone a toll-free number to book a vehicle. This results in cost savings for the council and a reduction in carbon emissions, plus passengers get a personalized taxi for the price of a single bus ticket. Within cities, less polluting vehicles such as battery- or methane-powered buses and vaporetti have been introduced.

Bicycle tracks and cycle rental points are increasing in number, and many cities such as Milan and Rome have plenty of rental points and marked safe tracks. The Trentino-Alto Adige regions are especially well organized with long-distance cycle routes. For a small charge bicycles can be transported on many regional and international trains.

Arriving by Air

Rome's Leonardo da Vinci (Fiumicino) and Milan's Malpensa are the key airports for long-haul flights into Italy. Milan's Linate airport handles some European flights, and most European airlines also fly to Venice, Turin, Naples, and Pisa (for Florence). Many airlines are now flying regularly to smaller cities such as Florence, Genoa, Bologna, Verona, and Bergamo, while charter flights serve summer destinations in peak season such as Catania, Olbia, and Rimini.

Part of the extension to Fiumicino airport, Rome

LONG-HAUL FLIGHTS

If you are flying from the United States, Continental, Delta, and United Airlines operate regular direct scheduled flights to Rome and Milan, with services from New York, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Boston, and Chicago. Air Canada flies from Montreal and Toronto, and Qantas flies from Sydney and Melbourne.

A regular service between Rome and Milan and New York, Boston, Chicago, Miami, and Toronto is also offered by the Italian state airline, Alitalia.

It may, however, be more convenient and cheaper for long-haul passengers to take a budget flight to London, Frankfurt, Paris, Athens, or Amsterdam and then continue to Italy from there.

EUROPEAN LOW-COST FLIGHTS

It has never been so easy to get to Italy by air. British Airways and Alitalia and its partners fly to major destinations in Italy from large European cities. However, low-cost, "no-frills" airlines offer many more destinations. Ryanair flies to more than 20 airports (including Genoa, Rome-Ciampino, Turin, and Venice-Treviso) from London Stansted; while easyJet, from London Gatwick or Stansted, serves Rome-Ciampino, Milan, Venice, Pisa, Palermo, and Naples, and also Rome, Venice, and Pisa from Bristol. BMI British Midland flies to Milan and Venice from London Heathrow; Meridiana serves multiple destinations in Italy from Gatwick.

The entrance hall at Pisa airport

TICKETS AND FARES

Fares vary enormously according to season and supply and demand. You can usually get the best deals by booking online well in advance.

Consult a good travel agent or check availability on the Internet. If you are based in the UK, it may be worthwhile to scour the small ads of newspapers for charter and discounted scheduled flights on major routes. Most charters leave from Gatwick or Luton, and may land at a city's second (and often less convenient) airport. Fares tend to vary greatly during the year, but the most expensive periods are during the summer months and over the Christmas and Easter holidays. Where possible, ask for available student discounts.

PACKAGE HOLIDAYS

Package holidays to Italy are usually cheaper than traveling independently, unless you are on a tight budget and are prepared to make use of youth hostels and campsites. Rome, Florence, and Venice are often offered as separate or linked package deals, and many operators have packages to the Tuscan and Umbrian countryside, Sicily, the Italian Lakes, the Italian Riviera, Naples, and the Amalfi coast. In winter, ski packages are available to many Alpine resorts. Specialist packages, such as cooking, walking, and art tours are common.

In cities, different tour operators may use different hotels, so it is worth researching the most pleasant (and centrally located) accommodations options. Many operators include transfers from the airport to your hotel. Some include tour guides.

Arriving by Sea, Rail, and Road

Orient-Express logo

Italy is served by an extensive network of roads, railroads, and international ferry lines. Road and rail links cross into the country from France, Switzerland, Austria, and Slovenia, and there are through train services from as far afield as Budapest, London, and Barcelona. Road connections into the country are generally of freeway standard, though delays can occur at some of the many Alpine passes and tunnels during bad weather or peak summer holiday periods.

Ticket windows at Florence's Santa Maria Novella station

ARRIVING BY CAR

Most roads into Italy from the rest of Europe involve Alpine crossings by tunnel or mountain passes. The notable exceptions are the approach from Slovenia in the northeast (on the A4 freeway) and the route along the French Riviera that enters Italy as the A10 freeway at Ventimiglia.

The most popular route from Geneva and southeast France is via the Mont Blanc tunnel and A5 freeway, entering Italy close to Aosta and Turin. Another busy approach (from Switzerland) uses the St. Bernard Pass and tunnel.

Further east, the main route from Austria and southern Germany crosses the Brenner Pass and goes down to Verona on the A22 freeway via Trento and the Adige valley. Weather conditions rarely close the passes, but snow and fog can make progress slow on the winding roads through the mountains. Most freeways are toll-roads; you pay as you exit the freeway.

ARRIVING BY TRAIN

After air travel, arriving by train is the least painful way to reach Italy.

Countless through services (including many sleepers) link Italian towns and cities with places as far afield as Brussels, Budapest, and Barcelona. Connections from Paris (and London, via Eurostar) run to Turin, Milan, Venice, Bologna, and Florence or along Italy's west coast, via Genoa and Pisa, to Rome and Naples. Services also operate from German, Swiss, and other northern European

The sleeping car on an international Eurocity train

Do-it-yourself help points with train information on screens cities to Milan, Turin, Venice, and Verona. There are also direct services from Vienna, Spain, and the south of France. Car-rail connections exist from several centers in northern Europe and the Channel ports.

The popularity of low-cost airlines has forced international train travel to be a little more competitive – if booked online. Special discount fares, however, are often available for senior travelers and for people under 26.

Trains can be extremely busy during peak periods, particularly on Friday and Sunday evenings, and during the Christmas and Easter holiday periods. July and August can also be frantically busy, especially on routes from Germany and ports connecting with Greek ferries in the south. Reservations on most services are advisable.

ARRIVING BY BOAT

Most people arriving in Italy by boat do so from Greece, using services from Corfu and Patras to Brindisi and other southeastern ports. Boats are crowded in summer, as are connecting train services from Brindisi to the rest of Italy.

Other international connections include ferries from Malta and North African ports to Palermo, Naples, and various southern Italian ports. Boats also run from towns in the south of France to Genoa, Livorno and ports on the Italian Riviera, and from the Croatian coast across the Adriatic to Venice.

ARRIVING BY BUS

Bus travel to Italy is relatively cheap, but long journey times make it one of the least comfortable ways to travel. The journey time from London to Milan is about 24 hours, and about 33 hours to Rome. A night on the road is thus unavoidable.

Eurolines runs buses from London's Victoria Coach Station to all of Italy's major cities as far as Rome and Naples. Buses travel via Dover, Calais, Paris, and Dijon and it is useful to take some euros with you for the probable stops en route. Travel around Italy by long-distance coach is feasible with SITA.

SITA bus arriving at the station in Florence

Traveling Around by Ferry

Italy's large number of offshore islands mean that it has a large and well-developed network of ferries, as well as services to the rest of Europe and North Africa.

One of the Moby Lines car ferries that sail the Mediterranean

FERRIES

Car ferries are a convenient link with the beautiful islands scattered off the Italian mainland. Boats for Sardinia leave from Civitavecchia (north of Rome), Livorno, and Genoa, and depart for Sicily from Naples and Reggio di Calabria.

Ferries run from the major Sicilian ports to the Egadi and the Aeolian archipelagos, as well as to countless other small islands around Sicily (although be aware that ferries to the smaller islands do not always carry cars).

Boats also ply between Elba and Piombino, as well as the smaller islands of the Tuscan archipelago such as Capraia. Ferries run from ports close to Rome to Ponza and its surrounding islands, and from Naples to Capri and Ischia. On the east coast the Tremiti islands are linked to ports on the Gargano peninsula.

Hydrofoils are increasingly complementing conventional ferries, particularly on busy routes to Capri and Ischia. Hydrofoils, and ferries, also run on some of Italy's lakes, such as Como and Garda.

Lines for ferries are common in summer, so book well ahead if you wish to travel in July or August, especially if taking a vehicle. Ferry services are more frequent and reliable in summer than in winter.

Bookings can be made online, through travel agents, or at a ferry line's agents in your own country. Ticket prices can vary according to the time of year but are generally reasonable. To check schedules and fares, visit the relevant website.

Traveling Around by Train

Trenitalia logo

Train travel is one of the best ways to explore Italy. Tickets are inexpensive, services frequent, and rolling stock some of the most modern in Europe.

Services can be busy, but the days of rampant overcrowding are mostly over. Lines often run through lovely countryside, from mountain lakes to rolling plateaux, and they provide more convenient links between cities than roads or air travel. Only in the south, or deeply rural areas, are services slow and infrequent.

The concourse at Stazione Termini, Rome

THE NETWORK

The bulk of Italy's rail network is an integrated state-run system operated by Trenitalia of the Ferrovie dello Stato (FS), though the NTV consortium promises to introduce rival super-fast services in 2011. Smaller, privately run lines also fill crucial gaps left by the FS, but through-tickets are generally available where travel involves both networks. State and private lines often (not always) share the same main station (stazione), and also charge similar fares.

TRAINS

Trenitalia is in the process of changing the categories of trains, and has already constructed an Alta Velocità (AV) network between major cities in the north and southward as far as Naples. These, the fast Eurostar (ES), and a handful of other special high-speed trains always require pre-booking of seats. Intercity (IC) trains and Eurocity (EC) trains only stop at major stations and require the payment of a supplement (un supplemento) on top of the standard ticket (supplements can be bought on the train, but are more expensive). Regionali and Interregionali trains make more stops and require no supplement.

All AV, ES, EC, and Intercity trains are usually air-conditioned. Branchline carriages can still be ancient.

Facilities for the disabled, including assistance at stations, exist on all fast trains and international services. For assistance ask at the special Sale Blu (Blue Halls) in mainline stations.

TICKETS AND FARES

Tickets (biglietti) are available as single (andata) or round-trip (andata e ritorno) in first (prima) or second class (seconda classe). They can be bought at some travel agents or at any station ticket office (biglietteria).

Major stations have automatic ticket machines and you can also buy tickets for journeys of up to 250 km (155 miles) from newsstands or station tobacconists (such a ticket is called biglietto a fascia chilometrica). Be sure to validate all tickets on both outbound and return journeys, or you will be fined. A ticket's validity usually starts on the day of purchase, so be sure to specify the day of travel when buying tickets in advance. Booking and purchasing tickets online is handy and will often entail a discount.

Fares are calculated on a kilometeric basis and are among the cheapest in western Europe. Many discounted fares are offered, including special family tickets.

Refunds involve a complicated process – inquire at the Assistenza counter at major stations. It is important, therefore, to buy the correct ticket before traveling.

PASSES

The most useful pass for visitors is the Interrail Pass, which gives unlimited travel for consecutive or non-consecutive days over varying periods, with special rates for those under 26. It can be purchased online or at most mainline stations and various agencies outside Italy.

TIMETABLES

If you plan to use trains often, it is a good idea to pick up an official Trenitalia timetable (un orario) at the rail station or newsstands. It is updated yearly.

Alternatively, you can visit www.trenitalia.com for the online timetable.

VALIDITY AND RESERVATIONS

Single or round-trip tickets are valid for up to two months from the date of purchase. If a seat reservation is made with the ticket, however, the date you wish to travel will be stamped automatically on the ticket. Reservations are automatic on AV and Eurostar services, and they are a good idea on all trains on and around public holidays. Reservations can be made at most main stations or online.

REDUCTIONS

The Smart Price deal offers discounts on international trains between Italy and various European countries. Single prices range from €15 to €49, though there are additions for couchettes and wagon-lits. Tickets can be bought at mainline stations or on the Trenitalia website, though only a fixed number are available so book ahead.

BAGGAGE STORAGE

Main city stations usually have baggage storage facilities. Most are manned (but the smaller stations have self-service lockers), and you may need to present a passport or other form of identification when depositing or collecting bags. Fees are calculated per bag.

SCENIC RAIL ROUTES

Italy's varied geography makes for some memorable train trips across the length and breadth of the country. The glacially shaped Adige valley between Bolzano and Verona in the north is thick with apple orchards and surrounded by soaring alpine peaks, with the pretty Trento-Male line branching off it. The Tuscan countryside south of Florence boasts views of hill towns and rolling wheat fields, while close by in Lazio the Roma Nord-Viterbo line winds its way through beautiful rural scenery. Farther south, trains cross the Straits of Messina to Sicily on a special ferry, while a narrow gauge line circles Mount Etna.

For steam train enthusiasts there are trips run by the FTI (Ferrovie Turistiche Italiane) groups in the north through alpine foothills and past picturesque lakes, as well as in the countryside outside Siena.

MACHINES FOR TRENITALIA RAIL TICKETS

These machines are easy to use, and most have instructions on screen in a choice of six languages. They accept coins, bills, and credit cards.

- 1 Select your destination.
- 2 The price is shown on the display.
- 3 Insert VISA, American Express, or Diners Card.
- 4 Take your ticket.
- 5 You must insert your ticket here to validate it for your journey, if you are traveling immediately.

Traveling Around by Car

The classic Fiat 500

A motoring tour is a practical way of exploring the country, though you should take into account high gas prices, parking difficulties, driving restrictions in cities, and the Italians' occasionally erratic approach to driving. A car is invaluable in the countryside and for extensive touring, but less useful in major towns and cities, due to congestion and the fact that most city centres are off-limits to nonresidents' cars.

Automatic tollbooths on the freeway outside Florence

WHAT TO TAKE

Drivers from outside Italy bringing their own foreign-registered cars into the country must carry a Green Card (for insurance purposes), all the vehicle's registration documents, and a full, valid driver's license (patente in Italian). Any EU nationals who do not have the standard EU "pink" license and are planning to stay for more than six months will need an Italian translation of their license, obtainable from most motoring organizations or from the Italian state tourist office in your home country. A red warning triangle and fluorescent vests must also be carried at all times, for use in the event of a breakdown.

GAS

Gas (benzina) in Italy is some of the most expensive in Europe (diesel, or gasolio, is a little cheaper). Although many gas stations are now self-service, it is still common to be served by an attendant. Most gas stations follow normal shop hours so make sure you have a full tank before lunchtime or public holidays.

On freeways gas stations tend to be open 24 hours a day. Credit cards are usually accepted.

ROADS

Italy has a good network of freeways (autostrade), though many have a total of only four lanes, often leading to congestion. Busy routes include the A1 from Bologna to Florence and between Bologna, Parma, and Milan. Tolls are payable on most freeways, again leading to

Rules and Regulations

Drive on the right and yield to traffic from the right. Seat belts are compulsory for all passengers. Heavy fines are levied for using a cell phone while driving. Headlights must be turned on even during the day on freeways and outside built-up areas. The speed limit in urban areas is 50 km/h (30 mph); outside urban areas it is 110 km/h (70 mph) on divided highways and 90 km/h on other secondary roads. On freeways the limit is 130 km/h (80 mph) for vehicles over 1100cc, 110 km/h (70 mph) for those under 1100cc.

congestion at tollbooths (Alt Stazione) at busy periods. Payment is made at the end of the journey in cash or by credit card, or prepaid magnetic VIA cards, available from tobacconists and the ACI. There is a congestion charge in Milan (7:30am–7:30pm Mon–Fri): call 800 437 437 or visit www.comunemilano.it/ecopass before entering the city.

Secondary roads are known as Nazionali (N) or as Strade Statali (SS), and vary enormously in quality. Mountain roads are usually good, but distances can be deceptive. In winter, snow chains are obligatory on many higher routes. Some back roads (known as strade bianche, or "white roads") have only a gravel surface. These are slow, but usually passable to cars.

No stopping

End of speed restriction

CAR RENTAL

Car rental (autonoleggio) is expensive in Italy, and should be organized beforehand through fly-drive deals or pre-booked with firms who have branches in Italy. For on the spot rental, Italian firms may be cheaper than big international names. Agencies are listed in Yellow Pages (Pagine Gialle) under Autonoleggio. Most airports conveniently have car rental offices on site.

To rent a car in Italy you must be over 21 (and sometimes older) and have held a valid driver's license for at least a year. Visitors from outside the EU require an international license, though in practice not all rental firms insist on this. Check the small print of the agreement for insurance cover.

ACCIDENTS AND BREAKDOWNS

If you have an accident or a breakdown, switch on your hazard warning lights and place a warning triangle 50 m (164 ft) behind your car. Then (for breakdowns) call the ACI emergency number (803 116) or the emergency services (112 or 113). The ACI will tow any foreign-registered car free to the nearest ACI-affiliated garage. They also do free repairs for members of affiliated associations, such as the AA or RAC in Britain.

If you have an accident keep calm, and do not admit liability or make any statements that might incriminate you later. Simply swap car and insurance details, names, and addresses.

PARKING

Parking in most Italian cities and large towns is a problem. Many historic centers have restricted daytime access and baffling one-way systems.

Other areas may be reserved for residents' parking (marked riservato ai residenti). Most towns have metered parking areas that charge an hourly fee paid with coins, cards, or coupons bought from tabacchi. Cars can be towed or booted, especially in areas marked zona rimozione, particularly on street-cleaning days. Call the Municipal Police (Vigili) to retrieve your car.

Official parking area patrolled by attendant

SAFETY

Car theft is rife in Italy. Never leave anything in your car, and (if possible) always remove radio-CD players. Leave your car in guarded parking whenever you can. Be especially careful driving at night, when Italian driving is more cavalier than usual, and when many traffic lights switch to flashing amber. Hitching (autostop) is not a good idea (and is not common), certainly never for women on their own.

Traveling within Cities

Pedestrian zone sign

The best ways of getting around Italian cities differ from place to place. In Rome buses are most useful, in Milan the metro is more efficient, and in Venice you will need to take a boat to get about. Streetcars still run in some cities, such as Milan and Rome. Cars are a liability almost everywhere, unlike walking, which in many cases is the easiest way to negotiate the tight historic cores of Italian towns and cities. Florence has a large limited-traffic zone, and most towns now have a pedestrian area in the center.

BUSES AND STREETCARS

Virtually every Italian city and large town has a bus system. Most are cheap, comprehensive, and as efficient as traffic and narrow streets will allow and vary only slightly from city to city. Bus stops are known as fermate, and increasingly (notably in Rome) list full details of the routes they serve. Buses (autobus) usually run from about 6am to midnight, and there are night buses (servizio notturno) in larger cities. If you arrive in a town by train, stations are invariably linked to the center by shuttle buses from the station forecourt (tickets are usually available from the station bar or tobacconist).

TICKETS

Tickets (biglietti) must be bought before boarding the bus from kiosks belonging to the bus company (ATAF in Florence, ATAC in Rome), bars, newsstands, or tobacconists displaying the bus company's sticker. A few cities also have on-street vending machines around the main transportation hubs. It is worth buying more than one ticket at a time, as outlets often close in the afternoon or early evening. Discounted tickets (un bloccetto), or day- or week-long visitors' tickets and passes (una tessera or tesserino) are also available. In some cities tickets are valid for any number of journeys within a given time. The ATAC website has more details on buses in Rome.

ATAC

www.atac.roma.it

USING BUSES AND STREETCARS

Board buses via the front and rear doors, and exit via the central doors. Buses usually only have a driver and no conductor (though night buses may have a conductor from whom tickets can be bought). Tickets must be validated by punching them in machines at the front or rear of the bus. There are large on-the-spot fines if you are caught without a properly validated ticket. The front, low seats on buses are for people with children, the elderly, and the disabled.

Bus stop displaying the route

Most larger cities have transportation information offices at the main train station or piazza which provide free maps, timetables, and tickets.

The majority of city buses are painted bright orange and display the final destination (capolinea) on the front.

METROPOLITANA

Subway systems, known as metropolitana (la metro for short), are found in Rome and Milan. Rome's network amounts to just two lines, A and B, which converge at Stazione Termini, the city's central railroad station. Several stations are useful for key sights, and at peak times the lines provide the best way of crossing the city quickly. Stations are fairly dingy – though rarely dangerous – and train carriages can be stiflingly hot in summer. In Milan the network is more extensive, with three principal lines – MM1 (the red line), MM2 (green), and MM3 (yellow) – that meet at the hub stations of Stazione Centrale, Duomo, Cadorna, and Lima. These three lines give easy access to the majority of the city's main sights.

Metro tickets in both cities are available from the same sources as bus and streetcar tickets, and from machines and ticket offices in subway stations. Tickets in Rome are valid for one journey only, though the special BIG ticket offers a day's travel on bus, streetcar, and metro. In Milan, by contrast, ordinary metro tickets are valid for 75 minutes for any number of journeys and can also be used on the buses and streetcars.

It is unwise to buy tickets from people outside stations, as they are invariably already used or otherwise invalid.

WALKING

Walking can be a wonderful way to explore Italy's historic towns and cities, most of whose historic centers are smaller than you might expect. Traffic can be a curse, however, especially in narrow streets (Rome is worst in this respect), but many cities are introducing pedestrianized areas or cutting down on car access around key tourist sights. On certain Sundays (Domenica a Piedi), entire town centers may be designated traffic-free zones.

Italian towns have plenty of shady squares and cafés to escape the heat of the summer sun, and churches and cathedrals also provide cool retreats from the rigors of sightseeing. Most sights are well signposted (churches,

Stay on the sidewalk at all costs

Marginally less dangerous to cross museums, and other places of interest are often indicated by yellow signs). Always carry your valuables well out of sight. The best times to walk are in the cool of the morning, or in the early evening, when you can join in the predinner stroll known as the passeggiata.

TAXIS

Only accept rides in official-taxis. Most drivers are honest, but there are many supplements that can be legitimately levied. Generally an extra charge is made for each piece of baggage placed in the trunk, for rides between 10pm and 7am, on Sundays and public holidays, and for journeys to and from airports.

In theory, taxis cannot be hailed. Take one at an official taxi stand (usually found at the station, main piazza, or close to key tourist sights) or reserve one by phone. When you order a taxi by phone, take the driver's code name, eg Napoli 18. If you call a cab, the meter will run from your call.

BICYCLE RENTAL

Many towns and cities, especially those popular with visitors, have stands and shops offering bicycles and scooters for rent. You can usually rent hourly or by the day, and you may have to leave your passport with the shop as a deposit. Be very careful, however, if riding a bike in the busy traffic of the larger towns and cities.

Roma Bikesharing (www.atac-bikesharing.it, tel 06 570 03), in the capital, gives access to bikes at various places in the city center. You pay a €10 deposit to enroll (this includes €5 for initial rides). You can top up your electronic "smart-card" while using the bikes. The current rate is €0.50 for every half hour of use.

INTER-CITY TRANSPORTATION: BUSES

Long-haul buses (pullman or corriere) between towns operate in a similar way to local buses, though you can usually buy tickets on board, and services are often run by different companies in different-colored buses (blue is the most common color for pullman, orange for city buses). Buses in some areas may be run by several companies (notably around Florence and in Tuscany), and not all operate from the same terminals. Services often depart from outside railroad stations, or from a town's main piazza. If in doubt, ask at local tourist offices. There may be a reduced service on weekends, when offices are shut.

Rome-Gubbio bus

Traveling Around Venice

For visitors to Venice, the vaporetti or waterbuses (see pp136–7) provide an entertaining form of public transportation, although most journeys within the city can usually be covered more quickly on foot. The main route through the city for the vaporetti is the Grand Canal. Waterbuses also supply a useful service connecting outlying points on the periphery of Venice, and linking the city to the islands in the lagoon. The most important service from a visitor's point of view is the No. 1. This operates from one end of the Grand Canal to the other and travels slowly enough for you to admire the parade of palaces at the waterside (see pp88–91).

A vaporetto or waterbus

The smaller, sleeker motoscafo

THE BOATS

The original vaporetti were steam-powered (vaporetto means little steamer); today they are mostly diesel-run motor boats, with a handful of electric, battery-powered prototypes. Although all the boats tend to be called vaporetti, the word only really applies to the large, wide boats used on slow routes, such as No. 1. These boats provide the best views. Motoscafi are the slimmer, smaller boats that look old but go at a fair pace, while moto-navi are two-tier boats that run to the islands. To visit the islands of Murano, Burano, or Torcello, take the LN Line, which departs from San Zaccaria and Fondamente Nuove.

TYPES OF TICKET

If booths at landing stages are closed, single tickets can be purchased on board at no extra charge – the tickets are valid for 1 hour from purchase. A good way to save money, however, is by buying a travel card, available for 12, 24, 36, 48, or 72 hours. Such a card entitles the holder to unlimited travel on most lines. The Venice Card is a handy pass covering entry to the main sights as well as boats. It can be purchased in advance online (www.hellovenezia.com). Discounts on advance tickets are also available (www.veniceconnected.com).

If you are staying more than a few days, it is worth buying a weekly season ticket (abbonamento), available from ticket offices, though nonresidents are charged €50 for the privilege. Holders of Rolling Venice cards (with information packs and discounts for 14–29-year-olds) can buy a three-day youth pass. Tickets include transportation for one piece of luggage, so be prepared to buy another ticket for extra items.

A two-tier motonave boat

HOURS OF SERVICE

The main routes run every 10 to 20 minutes until the early evening. Services are reduced after midnight, but they run all night. From June to September the services are more frequent and certain routes are extended. Timetables are available at main landing stages. Be warned: from May to September the main routes and island boats are very crowded.

TRAGHETTI

Tragbetti are gondola ferries that cross the Grand Canal at seven different points, providing a useful service for pedestrians. Few tourists make use of this cheap (about 50 cents per trip), constant service. Points where tragbetti cross the Grand Canal are marked on the Street Finder maps (see pp126–35). A gondola on yellow street signs points to tragbetti stops.

GONDOLAS

Gondolas are a luxury form of transportation used only by visitors and Venetians at weddings. Before boarding, check the official tariffs and agree a price with the gondolier. Official costs are around €80 for 40 minutes, rising to €100 after 7pm. During the low season, you may also be able to negotiate a lower fee, and a journey shorter than the usual 40 minutes.

WATER TAXIS

For those with little time and sufficient funds, the fastest and most practical means of getting from A to B in Venice is by water taxi. The craft are sleek, white or polished wood motorboats, and all are equipped with a cabin.

They zip efficiently to and from the airport in only 20 minutes. There are 16 water taxi stands, including one at the airport and one at the Lido. Beware of extra charges for transporting luggage, waiting, night service, and for calling out a taxi. When the vaporetti go on strike, taxis are scarce.

THE MAIN ROUTES

① This is the slow boat down the Grand Canal, stopping at every landing stage. The route starts at Piazzale Roma, travels the length of the Grand Canal, then from San Marco it heads east to the Lido.

② The 2 is the faster route down the Grand Canal. With an extension to the Lido during the summer months, the route serves San Zaccaria, continuing westward along the Giudecca Canal to Tronchetto and Piazzale Roma, then down the Grand Canal back to San Zaccaria.

④④⑤②⑥② These lines all extend as far as the Lido. The circular Giracittà routes 41-42 provide a scenic tour of Venice and Murano, while lines 51-52 and 61-62 also extend to the Lido.

⑩ This line departs from the Fondamente Nuove and runs to the main islands in the northern lagoon – Murano, Mazzorbo, and Burano (with a connection to Torcello) – then loops via Punta Sabbioni and the Lido, before concluding at San Zaccaria.

USING THE VAPORETTI

1 Tickets are available at most landing stages, some bars, stores, and tobacconists displaying the ACTV sign. It is also possible to buy them on board. The price of a ticket remains the same whether you are going one stop or traveling the whole line.

2 Signs on the landing stage tell you the direction of the boats stopping there.

3 Imob electronic chip tickets are in use and should be validated before each journey at the electronic machines on the landing stages. Inspectors rarely board the boats and this makes it surprisingly easy to hop on and off the boats without a validated ticket. However, there are steep fines for any passengers caught without tickets.

4 An indicator board at the front of each boat gives the line number and main stops. (Ignore the black numbers on the boat's side.)

5 Each landing stage has its name clearly marked on a board. Most stops have two landing stages and it is quite easy, particularly if it is crowded and you can't see which way the boat is facing, to board a boat traveling in the wrong direction. It is helpful to watch which direction the boat is approaching from; if in doubt, check with the boatman.
