HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This Eyewitness Travel Guide helps you get the most from your stay in New York with the minimum of practical difficulty. The opening section, Introducing New York, locates the city geographically, sets modern New York in its historical context and describes the highlights of the year. New York at a Glance is an overview of the city's attractions. Section two, New York Area by Area, guides you through the city's sight-seeing areas. It describes all the main sights with maps, photographs and detailed illustrations. In addition, seven planned walks take you step-by-step through special areas.

Well-researched tips on where to stay, eat, shop, and on sports and entertainment are in section three, Travelers' Needs. Children's New York lists highlights for young visitors, and section four, Survival Guide, shows you how to do everything from mailing a letter to using the subway.

NEW YORK AREA BY AREA

Manhattan has been divided into 15 sightseeing areas, each described separately. Each area opens with a portrait, summing up the area's character and history and listing all the sights to be covered. Sights are numbered and clearly located on an Area Map. After this comes a large-scale Street-by-Street Map focusing on the most interesting part of the area. Finding your way around each area is made simple by the numbering system. This refers to the order in which sights are described on the pages that follow.

Sights at a Glance lists the sights in the area by category, including: Historic Streets and Buildings, Modern Architecture, Museums and Galleries, Churches, Monuments, and Parks and Squares.

The area covered in greater detail on the Street-by-Street Map is shaded red.

Numbered circles pinpoint all the listed sights on the area map. Trump Tower, for example, is 2

1 The Area Map

For easy reference, the sights in each area are numbered and located on an Area Map. To help the visitor, the map also shows subway stations, beliports and ferry embarkation points.

Photographs of facades and distinctive details of buildings help you locate the sights.

Color-coding on each page makes the area easy to find in the book.

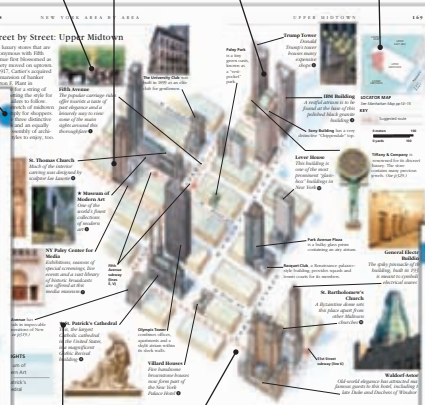

Travel tips help you reach the area quickly by public transportation.

2 The Street-by-Street Map

This gives a bird's-eye view of the heart of each sight-seeing area. The most important buildings are illustrated, to help you spot them easily as you walk around.

A locator map shows you where you are in relation to surrounding areas. The area of the Street-by-Street Map is shown in red.

Trump Tower 2 is also shown on this map.

A suggested route for a walk takes you past some of the area's most interesting sights.

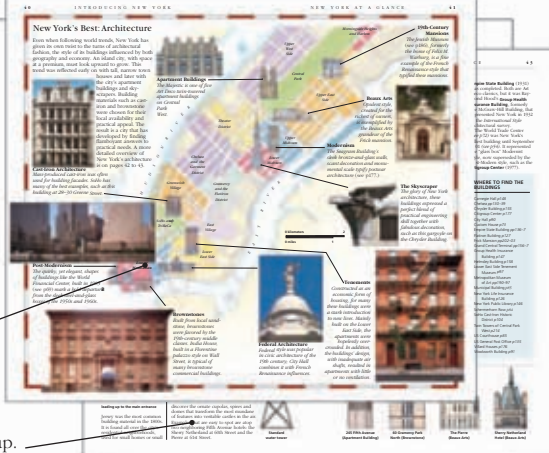

Stars indicate the sights that no visitor should miss.

NEW YORK AT A GLANCE

Each map in this section concentrates on a specific theme: Museums, Architecture, Multicultural New York, and Celebrated New Yorkers. The top sights are shown on the map; other sights are described on the two pages following and cross-referenced to their full entries in the Area by Area section.

Each sightseeing area is color-coded.

The theme is explored in greater detail on the pages following the map.

3 Detailed information on each sight
All important sights in each area are described in depth here. They are listed in order, following the numbering on the opening Area Map. Practical information is also provided.

4 New York's major sights
These are given two or more full pages in the sightseeing area in which they are found. Important buildings are dissected to reveal their interiors; museums have color-coded floor plans to help you find particular exhibits.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

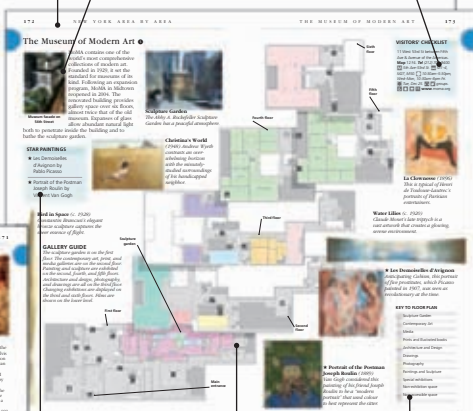

Each entry provides all the information needed to plan a visit to the sight. The key to the symbols is inside the back cover.

FOUR GREAT DAYS IN NEW YORK

At first glance New York may seem a bit overwhelming, but these four great days are planned to give you a taste of the Big Apple, with much of the city's best in architecture, shopping, museums, and fun. Each day offers a mix of things to see and do, and the schedules are not meant to be rigid – you'll find ample time to explore places that catch your fancy. All sights mentioned are cross-referenced so that you can find more information, check what's nearby, and tailor the day. Prices show the cost for two adults or for a family of two adults and two children including lunch.

CITY LANDMARKS

- A tour of the UN
- Modern, Art Deco, and Beaux Arts edifices
- Lights of Times Square
- Empire State Building

TWO ADULTS allow at least $120

Morning

Start at the East River with a guided tour of the United Nations headquarters (see pp160–63), with its striking modern architecture. Then head to 42nd Street, detouring into the unique residential enclave of Tudor City (see p158), and dropping in to admire the Art Deco interior of the Chrysler Building (see p155). Next is Grand Central Terminal, a great Beaux Art landmark (see pp156–7). Admire the Main Concourse and explore the shopping gallery, colorful food market, and a food court with everything from sushi to Southern barbecue to New York cheesecake. Another lunchtime option is chowder or a platter of Long Island oysters at the Grand Central Oyster Bar (see p306).

Afternoon

Back on 42nd Street is another Beaux Arts creation, the New York Public Library (see p146; free one-hour tours at 11am and 2pm Tue–Thu). The marble halls, stairways, Main Reading Room and Periodicals Room are highlights. Check your e-mail for free in the Bill Blass Public Catalog Room. Look out also for current exhibits. Behind the library is Bryant Park (see p145), a welcome oasis of green in midtown. Ahead is New York's most famous crossroads, Times Square (see p147), gateway to the glittering neon of Broadway. Just beyond is 42nd Street, now a bright avenue of restored theaters, giant movie palaces, and Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum, with many true-to-life celebrities. Hail a cab to the Empire State Building (see pp136–7) and end the day with a fine twilight view of the city from the 86th-floor observatory.

Glistening Prometheus Statue and Lower Plaza at Rockefeller Center

ART AND SHOPPING

- A morning of modern art
- Lunch at Rockefeller Center
- Fifth Avenue shopping
- Tea at The Pierre

TWO ADULTS allow at least $135

Morning

The spectacular Museum of Modern Art (MOMA) (see pp172–5) will easily fill your morning with its wonderful art. Allow a couple of hours to enjoy its great works, including Van Gogh's The Starry Night and Claude Monet's Water Lilies, as well as Picasso's Les Femmes d'Alger, to name just a few. Don't miss the design exhibits on floor three; one of MOMA's best-known facets. Leave the museum and stroll over to the Rockefeller Center (see p144) for lunch at the Rock Center Café, where you can watch the ice skaters in winter.

The neon lights of Times Square, the city's famous crossroads

In summer the rink is transformed into a leafy garden, where you can dine at the Rink Bar.

Afternoon

After lunch head for St. Patrick's Cathedral (see pp178–9), the largest Catholic cathedral in the US and one of the city's finest places of worship. Then continue along Fifth Avenue for an afternoon of upscale shopping. Saks Fifth Avenue is just across the street from St. Patrick's at 50th Street. Heading uptown, the temptations include a dizzying variety of glitzy shops, such as Cartier (52nd St), Henri Bendel (55–56th sts), Prada, Tiffany (57th St), and Bergdorf Goodman (57–58 sts). End the day on 61st Street with a final splurge – enjoy a cocktail at The Pierre (see p289).

HISTORIC NEW YORK

- A boat trip to Ellis Island and the Statue of Liberty
- Lunch at Fraunces Tavern
- A tour of Old New York

TWO ADULTS allow at least $120

Morning

At Battery Park, board the ferry to the Statue of Liberty (see pp74–5) and on to Ellis Island (see pp78–9), the point of arrival for many immigrants (round trip includes both stops). On your return, exit the park at Bowling Green, the city's oldest park (see p73). Walk to the Fraunces Tavern Block Historic District (see p76), New York's last block of 18th-century commercial buildings. The recreated Tavern includes a museum of the revolutionary period and a restaurant that is the perfect choice for an atmospheric lunch.

Central Park, a vast area of fun rides, animals, and places to play

Afternoon

A block away is Stone Street Historic District, rebuilt after a fire in 1835. Look for India House (see p56), once the New York Cotton Exchange, now Harry's Café. Take William Street to Wall Street and Federal Hall (see p68), with exhibits on the US Constitution. Nearby is the New York Stock Exchange (see pp70–71) and Trinity Church (see p68), built in 1839. Go up Broadway to St. Paul's Chapel (see p91), miraculously unscathed after the World Trade Center fell behind it. Ahead is City Hall (see p90). Finally, head for the South Street Seaport Historic District, heart of the 19th-century port (see pp82–3), with a view of the awesome Brooklyn Bridge (see pp86–9).

Statue of Liberty

A FAMILY FUN DAY

- A morning in Central Park
- Lunch at the Boathouse
- Dinosaurs at the American Museum of Natural History

FAMILY OF 4 allow at least $175

Morning

Central Park (see pp205–9) was made for family fun. Ride the vintage Carousel, watch model boats in action at Conservatory Pond, visit the Zoo, then watch the animal parade on the Delacorte clock on the half hour. There are themed playgrounds to please all ages: Safari at West 91st Street (2–5 years); Adventure at West 67th Street (6–12 years). The Swedish Cottage Marionette Theater, at West 79th, presents classic fairy tales at 10:30am and noon Tue–Fri (Wed also 2:30pm) and 1pm Sat; book ahead. Rent bikes or take a boat out on the lake, then lunch at the Boat House, which has a view of the lake. In winter, you can ice skate at the Wollman rink.

Afternoon

Depending on ages and interests, choose between the interactive Children's Museum (see p219), or the famous dinosaurs and dioramas at the American Museum of Natural History (see pp216–17). Finish up on West 73rd Street for a “wee tea” at Alice's Tea Cup.

Putting New York on the Map

New York is a city of eight million people, covering 301 sq miles (780 sq km). The city gives its name to the state of New York, the capital of which is Albany, 156 miles (251 km) to the north. New York is also a good base from which to visit the historic towns of Boston and Philadelphia, as well as the nation's capital, Washington, DC.

The glittering Manhattan skyline

North America

Located on the Eastern Seaboard, New York lies 237 miles (380 km) north of America's capital city, Washington, DC, and is on the same latitude as Rome and Istanbul. New York has three international airports and is an average six and a half hours' flying time from Western Europe.

Satellite image of Manhattan from an altitude of 515 miles (830 km)

Greater New York

New York City is made up of five distinct boroughs: Manhattan (where the vast majority of sights are located), the Bronx, Queens, Brooklyn, and Staten Island.

Details of important sights outside central New York but within the city's boundaries can be found on pages 233–55. Day trips in New York State and beyond are suggested on page 393.

Manhattan

This guide divides Manhattan into 15 areas, each with its own chapter. Many of New York's oldest and newest buildings rub shoulders in Lower Manhattan. It is from here, too, that you can take the Staten Island ferry, for breathtaking views of the city's famous skyline and the Statue of Liberty. Midtown includes the Theater District and Fifth Avenue's glittering shops. Museum Mile, alongside Central Park on Upper East Side, is a cultural paradise. To the north lies Harlem, America's most famous black community.

Grand Central Terminal
This Beaux Arts station has been a gateway to the city since 1913. Its concourse is a vast pedestrian area with a high-vaulted roof (see pp156–7).

Morgan Library & Museum

One of the world's finest collections of rare manuscripts, prints, and books is on display in this palazzo-style building (see pp164–5).

Statue of Liberty

Presented as a gift from the French to the American people in 1886, this towering statue has become a symbol of freedom throughout the world (see pp74–5).

Ellis Island

Statue of Liberty

Cathedral of St. John the Divine

When it is finished, at some time after the mid-21st century, this great cathedral will be the largest in the world. It is also a theater and music venue (see pp226–7).

United Nations

New York is the headquarters of the global organization set up to preserve world peace and security (see pp160-63).

Empire State Building

This is the tallest skyscraper in New York and a symbol of the city. Built in the 1930s, it has since attracted more than 110 million visitors (see pp136-7).

Metropolitan Museum of Art

With a stunning collection of artifacts dating from prehistoric times to the present, this is one of the world's greatest museums (see pp190-97).

Brooklyn Bridge

This bridge spans the East River between Manhattan and Brooklyn. Built in 1883, it was the largest suspension bridge and the first to be constructed of steel (see pp86-9).

Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum

A masterpiece of architecture by Frank Lloyd Wright, this unique building contains a fine collection of 19th- and 20th-century painting (see pp188-9).

THE HISTORY OF NEW YORK

From its first sighting almost 500 years ago by Giovanni da Verrazano, New York's harbor was the prize that all of Europe wanted to capture. The Dutch first sent fur traders to the area in 1621, but they lost the colony they called New Amsterdam to the English in 1664. The settlement was rechristened New York and the name stayed, even after the English lost the colony in 1783, at the end of the Revolutionary War.

THE GROWING CITY

In the 19th century, New York grew rapidly and became a major port. Ease of shipping spawned manufacturing, commerce was king and great fortunes were made. In 1898, Manhattan was joined with the four outer boroughs to form the world's second-largest city. From 1800 to 1900, the population grew from

A shell-work cloak worn by an Indian chief 79,000 to 3 million people. New York City became the country's cultural and entertainment mecca as well as its business center.

THE MELTING POT

The city continued to grow as thousands of immigrants came seeking a better life. Overpopulation meant that many at first lived in slums. Today, the mix of cultures has enriched the city and become its defining quality. Its eight million inhabitants speak some 100 languages.

Manhattan's skyline took shape as the city grew skyward to make space for its ever-increasing population. Throughout its history, the city has experienced alternating periods of economic decline and growth, but in both good times and bad, it remains one of the world's most vital cities.

The following pages illustrate significant periods in New York's history.

A deed signed by New Amsterdam's last Dutch governor, Peter Stuyvesant, in 1664

Early New York

Indian husk mask

Manhattan was a forested land populated by Algonquian-speaking Natives when the Dutch West India Company established a fur trading post called New Amsterdam in 1625. The first settlers built houses helter-skelter, so even today the streets of Lower Manhattan still twist. Broadway, then called by the Dutch name Breede Wegh, began as an Indian trail known as the Weekquaesgeek Trail. Harlem has also kept its Dutch name. The town was unruly until Peter Stuyvesant arrived to bring order. But the colony did not produce the expected revenues, and in 1664 the Dutch let it fall to the English, who renamed it New York.

Colonial New York

Colonial gentleman

Under British rule, New York prospered and the population grew rapidly. The bolting of flour (grinding grain) was the main commercial enterprise. Shipbuilding also flourished. As the city prospered, an elite emerged that could afford a more refined way of life, and fine furniture and household silver were made for use in their homes during the Colonial period. During more than a century of governing New York, Britain proved more interested in profit than in the welfare of the colony. The Crown imposed hated taxes, and the spirit of rebellion grew, although especially in New York, loyalties were divided. On the eve of Revolution, New York was the second-largest city in the 13 colonies, with 20,000 citizens.

George Washington, Revolutionary general

Dug up into trenches for defense, heavily shelled by British troops and scarred by recurring fires, New York suffered during the American Revolution. But despite the hardships, many continued to enjoy cricket games, horse races, balls and boxing matches. After the British took the city in 1776, it became their headquarters. The Continental army did not return to Manhattan until November 25, 1783, two years after the fighting ended.

American soldiers in the War of Independence carried their supplies in haversacks.

Washington won this battle on September 16, 1776. But he did not have enough troops to hold New York so retreated, leaving it to the British.

Governor De Witt Clinton

Firmly established as the nation's largest city and preeminent seaport, New York grew increasingly wealthy. Manufacturing increased due to the ease of shipping; tycoons like John Jacob Astor made millions. The rich moved uptown; public transportation followed. With rapid growth came fires, epidemics and financial panics. Immigrants from Ireland, Germany, and other nations arrived. Some found prosperity; others crowded into slums in Lower Manhattan.

GROWTH OF THE METROPOLIS

Sheet Music

The Stephen Foster ballad Jeanie With the Light Brown Hair was popular at this time.

Croton Distributing Reservoir was built in 1842. Until then, New Yorkers had no fresh drinking water – they relied on deliveries of bottled water.

Keeping Fit

Gymnasiums such as Dr. Rich's Institute for Physical Education were established in New York in the 1830s and 1840s.

Omnibus

The horse-drawn omnibus was introduced for public transportation in 1832 and remained on New York streets until World War I.

NEW YORK IN 1855

Looking south from 42nd Street, Crystal Palace and the Croton Distributing Reservoir stood where the main public library and Bryant Park are today.

THE PORT OF NEW YORK

New York's importance as a port city grew by leaps and bounds in the early 19th century. Robert Fulton launched his first steamboat, the Clermont, in 1807. Steamboats made travel much quicker – it now took 72 hours to reach Albany, which was both the state capital and the gateway to the West. Trade with the West by steamboat and canal boat, and with the rest of the world by clipper ship, made the fortunes of many New Yorkers.

Crystal Palace in Flames

On October 5, 1858, New York's Crystal Palace exhibition hall burned to the ground, just as its predecessor in London did.

Grand Canal Celebration

Ships in New York harbor lined up to celebrate the 1825 Erie Canal opening. In connecting the Great Lakes with Albany, the state capital, on the Hudson River, the canal opened a water link between the Midwest and the Port of New York. New York realized huge profits.

Industrialist
Andrew Carnegie

As New York's merchant princes grew ever wealthier, the city entered into a gilded era during which many of its most opulent buildings went up. Millions were lavished on the arts with the founding of the Metropolitan Museum, Public Library and Carnegie Hall. Luxury hotels like the Plaza and the original Waldorf-Astoria were built, and elegant department stores arose to serve the wealthy. Such flamboyant figures as William "Boss" Tweed, political strongman and king of corruption, and circus man Phineas T. Barnum were also larger than life.

The Dakota (1880) was the first grand luxury apartment house on the Upper West Side (see p218).

Palatial Living

Mansions lined Fifth Avenue. When it was built in 1882, W.K. Vanderbilt's Italianate palace at 660 Fifth Avenue, was one of the farthest north.

Fashion City

Lord & Taylor built a new store on Broadway's Ladies' Mile; 6th Avenue between 14th and 23rd streets was known as Fashion Row.

THE ELEVATED RAILROAD

By the mid 1870s, elevated railroads or "Els" ran along 2nd, 3rd, 6th and 9th avenues. They made travel faster, but left noise, grime and pollution in their wake.

Horse-drawn carriage

By 1900, New York was a hub of American industry: 70% of the country's corporations were based there, and the port handled two-thirds of all imported goods. The rich got richer, but in the crowded slums, disease spread. Even so, immigrants kept their rich traditions alive, and political and social reform emerged. In 1900, the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union was founded to battle for the rights of the women and children who toiled in dangerous factories for low wages. The Triangle Shirtwaist Factory fire in 1911 also sped reform.

Almost five times as crowded as the rest of New York, the Lower East Side was the most densely populated place in the world.

Entrance card to the Cotton Club

The 1920s were a time of high living for many New Yorkers. Mayor Jimmy Walker set the pace, whether squiring chorus girls, drinking in speakeasies or watching the Yankees. But the good times ended with the 1929 stock market crash. By 1932, Walker had resigned, charged with corruption, and one-quarter of New Yorkers were unemployed. With Mayor Fiorello La Guardia's 1933 election, New York began to recover and thrive.

Chorus girls were a major Cotton Club attraction.

THE COTTON CLUB

This Harlem nightclub was host to the best jazz in town, as first Duke Ellington and then Cab Calloway led the band. People flocked from all over the city to hear them.

Postwar New York

Since World War II, New York has seen both the best of times and the worst. Although established as the financial capital of the world, the city itself almost went bankrupt in the 1970s. In 2008 the collapse of the Wall Street bank Lehman Brothers precipitated the worst financial crisis since 1929. Since the early 1990s, New York has seen a dramatic drop in the crime rate and an increase in the restoration of such landmarks as Grand Central Terminal and the “new” Times Square. This constant rebuilding is emblematic of the city’s position as the cultural and financial hub of the United States.

NEW YORK AT A GLANCE

There are almost 300 places of interest described in the Area by Area section of this book. They range from the bustling New York Stock Exchange (see pp70–71) to Central Park's peaceful Strawberry Fields (see p208), and from historic synagogues to dazzling skyscrapers. The following 14 pages provide a time-saving guide to New York's most interesting sights. Museums and architecture each have a section, and there are guides to the people and cultures that have given the city its unique character. Each sight is cross-referenced to its own full entry. Below are the top ten tourist attractions to start you off.

New York's Best: Museums

New York's museums range from the vast scope of the Metropolitan Museum to the personal treasures of financier J. Pierpont Morgan's own collection. Several museums celebrate New York's heritage, giving visitors an insight into the people and events that made the city what it is today. This map features some highlights, with a detailed overview on pages 38 and 39.

Museum of Modern Art

Picasso's Goat (1950) is among the impressive collection in the renovated and expanded Museum of Modern Art.

Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum

This naval museum also traces the progress of flight exploration. The large aircraft carrier housing the museum returned to Pier 86 in late 2008 after renovation.

Morgan Library & Museum

One of the world's finest collections of manuscripts, prints and books includes this rare French Bible from 1230.

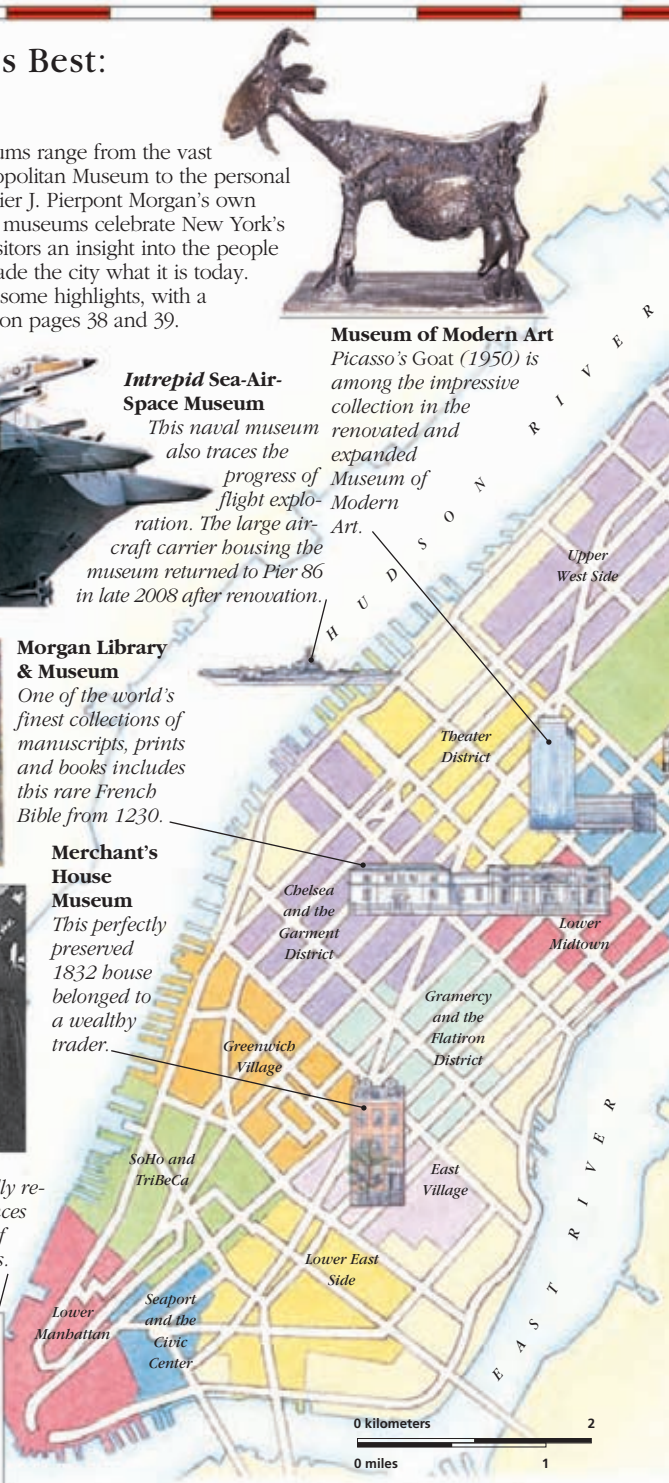

Merchant's House Museum

Whitney Museum of American Art

This exceptional collection includes many views of New York. One of the best is Brooklyn Bridge: Variation on an Old Theme (1939), by Joseph Stella.

Exploring New York's Museums

Richmond Town tobacco tin

You could devote an entire month to visiting New York's museums and still not do them justice. There are more than 60 museums in Manhattan alone, and half that number again in the other boroughs. The wealth of art and the huge variety of offerings – from Old Masters to old fire engines, dinosaurs to dolls, Tibetan tapestries to African masks – is equal to that of any city in the world. Note that some museums close on Monday as well as on another day. Many stay open late one or two evenings a week, and some have one evening when admission is free. Not every museum charges for admission, but donations are always welcome.

PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

New York is best known for its art museums. The Metropolitan Museum of Art houses an extensive collection of American art, as well as world-famous masterpieces. The Cloisters, a branch of the "Met" in Upper Manhattan, is a treasury of medieval art and architecture. The Frick Collection has a superb display of Old Masters. In contrast, the Museum of Modern Art (MoMA) houses Impressionist and modern paintings. The Whitney Museum of American Art and the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum also specialize in modern art, the Whitney's biennial show being the foremost display of work by living artists. Today's cutting-edge art is at the New Museum of Contemporary Art, while the work of craft artists can be seen at the American Folk Art Museum. The National Academy Museum displays a collection of 19th- and 20th-century art, donated by academy members. In Harlem, the Studio Museum shows the work of black artists.

CRAFTS AND DESIGN

If you are interested in textiles, porcelain and glass, embroideries and laces, wallpaper, and prints, visit the Cooper-Hewitt Museum, the decorative arts outpost of Washington's Smithsonian Institution. The design collections at MoMA trace the history of design from clocks to couches. The Museum of Arts and Design offers the finest work of today's skilled artisans in mediums from furniture to pottery, and the American Folk Art Museum presents folk forms, from quilts to canes. Silver collections are notable at the Museum of the City of New York. The fine displays of native art at the National Museum of the American Indian include jewelry, rugs and pottery.

The Peaceable Kingdom (c.1840–45) by Edward Hicks, at the Brooklyn Museum

PRINTS AND PHOTOGRAPHY

The International Center of Photography is the only museum in New York that is totally devoted to this medium. Collections can also be seen at the Metropolitan Museum of Art and MoMA, and there are many examples of early photography at the Museum of the City of New York and Ellis Island.

Prints and drawings by such great book illustrators as Kate Greenaway and Sir John Tenniel are featured at the Morgan Library & Museum. The Cooper-Hewitt Museum has examples of the use of prints in the decorative arts.

FURNITURE AND COSTUMES

The annual exhibition of the Costume Institute at the Metropolitan Museum of Art is always worth a visit. Also impressive is the American Wing, with its 24 rooms of original furnishings tracing life from 1640 to the 20th century. Period rooms depicting New York in various settings, beginning with the 17th-century Dutch, are on display at the Museum of the City of New York.

Corn husk doll, American Museum of Natural History

There are also some house museums that give a realistic picture of life and furnishings in old New York. The Merchant's House Museum, a preserved residence from 1832, was occupied by the same family for 98 years. Gracie Mansion was the residence of mayor Archibald Gracie, who bought it in 1798 from a shipping merchant, and it is open periodically for public tours. The Theodore Roosevelt Birthplace is the brownstone where the 26th president of the United States grew up, and the Mount Vernon Hotel Museum was an early 19th-century resort.

HISTORY

American history unfolds at Federal Hall, the United States' first capitol, where George Washington took his oath as America's first president on the balcony in April 1789.

Visit the Fraunces Tavern Museum for a glimpse of colonial New York. Ellis Island and Lower East Side Tenement Museum re-create the hardships faced by immigrants. The new Museum of Jewish Heritage in Battery City is a living memorial to the Holocaust. The New York City Fire Museum and the New York City Police Museum chronicle heroism and tragedy, while the South Street Seaport Museum re-creates early maritime history.

TECHNOLOGY AND NATURAL HISTORY

Forest-dwelling bongas, American Museum of Natural History

Science museums hold exhibitions from nature to space-age technology. The American Museum of Natural History has vast collections covering flora, fauna and cultures from around the world. Its Rose Center/Hayden Planetarium offers a unique view of space. The Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum is a repository of technology that chronicles military progress. It is based on the decks of an aircraft carrier.

If you missed a classic Lucille Ball sitcom or footage of the first man on the moon, the place to visit is the The Paley Center for Media, which holds these and many other classics of TV and radio.

ART FROM OTHER CULTURES

Egyptian mummy, Brooklyn Museum

Artwork of other nations is the focus of several special collections.

Oriental art is the specialty of the Asia Society and the Japan Society. The Jewish Museum features major collections of Judaica and has changing exhibitions of various aspects of Jewish life. El Museo del Barrio is dedicated to the arts of Puerto Rico, including many Pre-Columbian Taino artifacts. For an impressive review of African-American art and history, visit the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture. Finally, the Metropolitan Museum of Art excels in its multicultural displays, ranging from the art of ancient Egypt to that of contemporary Africa.

LIBRARIES

New York's notable libraries, such as the Morgan Library & Museum, offer superb art collections as well as a chance to view pages from ancient manuscripts and rare books. The New York Public Library's collection includes historic documents and manuscripts of many famous works.

BEYOND MANHATTAN

Other museums worth a visit include the Brooklyn Museum of Art, with a huge collection of artifacts from across the world and over one million paintings. The Museum of the Moving Image in Queens has a unique collection of motion-picture history. The Jacques Marchais Museum of Tibetan Art is a rare find on Staten Island as is Historic Richmond Town, a well-restored village dating from the 1600s.

New York's Best: Architecture

Even when following world trends, New York has given its own twist to the turns of architectural fashion, the style of its buildings influenced by both geography and economy. An island city, with space at a premium, must look upward to grow. This trend was reflected early on with tall, narrow town

Cast-Iron Architecture

Mass-produced cast-iron was often used for building facades. SoHo has many of the best examples, such as this building at 28–30 Greene Street.

houses and later with the city's apartment buildings and skyscrapers. Building materials such as cast-iron and brownstone were chosen for their local availability and practical appeal. The result is a city that has developed by finding flamboyant answers to practical needs. A more detailed overview of New York's architecture is on pages 42 to 43.

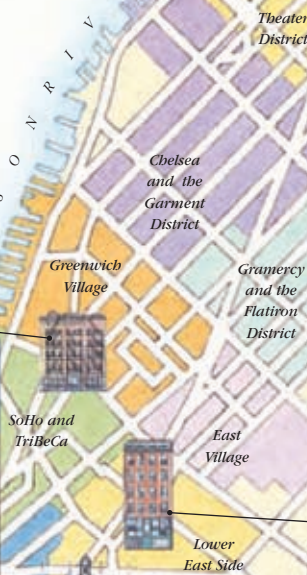

Apartment Buildings

Post-Modernism

The quirky, yet elegant, shapes of buildings like the World Financial Center, built in 1985 (see p69) mark a bold departure from the sleek steel-and-glass boxes of the 1950s and 1960s.

Lower Manhattan

Brownstones

Built from local sandstone, brownstones were favored by the 19th-century middle classes. India House, built in a Florentine palazzo style on Wall Street, is typical of many brownstone commercial buildings.

19th-Century Mansions

The Jewish Museum (see p186), formerly the home of Felix M. Warburg, is a fine example of the French Renaissance style that typified these mansions.

Beaux Arts

Opulent style, created for the richest of owners, is exemplified by the Beaux Arts grandeur of the Frick mansion.

Modernism

The Seagram Building's sleek bronze-and-glass walls, scant decoration and monumental scale typify postwar architecture (see p177).

The Skyscraper

The glory of New York architecture, these buildings expressed a perfect blend of practical engineering skill together with fabulous decoration, such as this gargoyle on the Chrysler Building.

Federal Architecture

Federal style was popular in civic architecture of the 19th century; City Hall combines it with French Renaissance influences.

Tenements

Constructed as an economic form of housing, for many these buildings were a stark introduction to new lives. Mainly built on the Lower East Side, the apartments were hopelessly overcrowded. In addition, the buildings' design, with inadequate air shafts, resulted in apartments with little or no ventilation.

Exploring New York's Architecture

A Federal-style front door

During its first 200 years, New York, like all of America, looked to Europe for architectural inspiration. None of the buildings from the Dutch colonial period survive in Manhattan today; most were lost in the great fire of 1776 or torn down to make way for new developments in the early 1800s. Throughout the 18th and 19th centuries, the city's major architectural trends followed those of Europe. With the advent of cast-iron architecture in the 1850s, the Art Deco period and the ever-higher rise of the skyscraper, New York's architecture came into its own.

FEDERAL ARCHITECTURE

This American adaptation of the Neoclassical Adam style flowered in the early decades of the new nation, featuring square buildings two or three stories tall, with low hipped roofs, balustrades and decorative elements – all carefully balanced. City Hall (1811, John McComb, Jr. and Joseph François Mangin) is a blend of Federal and French Renaissance influences. The restored warehouses of Schermerhorn Row (c. 1812) in the Seaport district are also in Federal style.

BROWNSTONES

Plentiful and cheap, the brown sandstone found in the nearby Connecticut River Valley and along the banks of the Hackensack River in New

A typical brownstone with stoop leading up to the main entrance

Jersey was the most common building material in the 1800s. It is found all over the city's residential neighborhoods, used for small homes or small apartments – some of the best examples of brownstone can be found in Chelsea. Because street space was limited, these buildings were very narrow in width, but also very deep. A typical brownstone has a flight of steps, called a stoop, leading up to the living floors. Separate stairs lead down to the basement, which was originally the servants' quarters.

TENEMENTS

Tenements were built to house the huge influx of immigrants who arrived from the 1840s up to World War I. The six-story blocks, 100 ft (30 m) long and 25 ft (8 m) wide, offered very little light and air except from tiny side-wall air shafts and windows at each end, leaving the middle rooms in darkness. The tiny apartments were called railroad flats after their similarity to railroad cars. Later designs had air shafts between buildings, but these helped the spread of fire. The Lower East Side Tenement Museum has scale models of the old tenements.

ARCHITECTURAL DISGUISES

Some of the most fanciful forms on the New York skyline were devised by clever architects to disguise the city's essential but utilitarian – and rather unattractive – rooftop water tanks. Look skyward to discover the ornate cupolas, spires and domes that transform the most mundane of features into veritable castles in the air. Examples that are easy to spot are atop two neighboring Fifth Avenue hotels: the Sherry Netherland at 60th Street and the Pierre at 61st Street.

CAST-IRON ARCHITECTURE

An American architectural innovation of the 19th century, cast iron was cheaper than stone or brick and allowed ornate features to be prefabricated in foundries from molds and used as building facades. Today, New York has the world's largest concentration of full and partial cast-iron facades. The best, built in the 1870s, are in the SoHo Cast-Iron Historic District.

BEAUX ARTS

This French school of architecture dominated the design of public buildings and wealthy residential properties during New York's gilded age. This era (from 1880 to about 1920) produced many of the city's most prominent architects, including Richard Morris Hunt (Carnegie Hall, 1891; Metropolitan Museum of Art, 1895), who in 1845 was the first American architect to study in Paris; Cass Gilbert (Custom House, 1907; New York Life Insurance Building, 1928; the US Courthouse, 1936); the teams of Warren & Wetmore (Grand Central Terminal, 1913; Helmsley Building, 1929); Carrère & Hastings (New York Public Library, 1911; Frick Mansion, 1914); and McKim, Mead & White, the city's most famous firm of architects (Villard Houses, 1884; United States General Post Office, 1913; Municipal Building, 1914).

APARTMENT BUILDINGS

As the city's population grew and space became ever more precious, family homes in Manhattan became much too expensive for most New Yorkers, and even the wealthy joined the trend toward communal living. In 1884 Henry Hardenbergh's Dakota (see p218), one of the first luxury apartment buildings, started a spate of turn-of-the-century construction on the Upper West Side. Many of the buildings resembled castles and châteaux, and were built around courtyards not visible from the street. Favorite landmarks are the five

Twin Towers on Central Park West, the San Remo, Eldorado, Century, the Beresford, and the Majestic. Built during the peak of Art Deco (1929 to 1931), they create the distinctive skyline seen from the park.

SKYSCRAPERS

Although Chicago gave birth to the skyscraper, New York has seen some of the greatest innovations. In 1902 Daniel Burnham, a Chicago architect, built the Flatiron Building, so tall at 300 ft (91 m) that skeptics said it would collapse. By 1913, the Woolworth Building had risen to 792 ft (241 m). Soon, zoning laws were passed requiring "set-backs" – upper stories were stepped back to allow light to reach street level. This suited the Art Deco style. The Chrysler Building (1930) was the world's tallest until the Art Deco arched pattern on the spire of the Chrysler Building Empire State Building (1931) was completed. Both are Art Deco classics, but it was Raymond Hood's Group Health Insurance Building, formerly the McGraw-Hill Building, that represented New York in 1932 in the International Style architectural survey.

The World Trade Center (see p72) was New York's tallest building until September 2001 (see p54). It represented the "glass box" Modernist style, now superseded by the Post-Modern style, such as the Citigroup Center (1977).

Multicultural New York

Wherever you go in New York, even in pockets of the hectic high-rise city center, you will find evidence of the richly ethnic flavor of the city. A bus ride can take you from Madras to Moscow, Hong Kong to Haiti. Immigrants are still coming to New York, though numbers are fewer than in the peak years from 1880 to 1910, when 17 million people arrived. In the 1980s, a million newcomers, largely from Caribbean countries and Asia, arrived and found their own special corner of the city. Throughout the year you will encounter crowds celebrating one of many festivals. To find out more about national celebrations and parades, see pages 50 to 53.

Little Ukraine

Services are held at T. Shevchenko Place as part of the May 17 festivities to mark the Ukrainians' conversion to Christianity.

Little Italy

For ten days in September, the Italian community gathers around the Mulberry Street area, and the streets are taken over by the celebrations of the Festa di San Gennaro.

Chinatown

Every year, in January or February, Mott Street is packed as residents celebrate the Chinese New Year.

Hell's Kitchen

For a while called "Clinton" to reflect a new neighborhood mix, this was the first home of early Irish immigrants.

Little Korea

Not far from Herald Square is a small Korean enclave with a variety of restaurants.

The Lower East Side

The synagogues around Rivington and Eldridge streets reflect the religious traditions of this old Jewish area.

Harlem

The Sunday morning gospel service at the Abyssinian Baptist Church is one of Harlem's finest.

El Barrio

The vibrant Hispanic community of Harlem's El Barrio district is centered around the street market, La Marqueta.

Yorkville

Only a few cafés and bierkellers remain to keep the flavor of this former uptown German district. The Steuben Day Parade is still held here each September.

Upper East Side

The magnificent St. Nicholas Russian Orthodox Cathedral on East 97th Street is a reminder of the dispersed White Russian community. Mass is held in Russian each Sunday.

Little India

The restaurants of East 6th Street offer Eastern atmosphere at affordable prices.

Exploring New York's Many Cultures

Stained glass at the Cotton Club

Even “native” New Yorkers have ancestral roots in other countries. Throughout the 17th century, the Dutch and English settled here, establishing trade colonies in the New World. Soon America became a symbol of hope for the downtrodden elsewhere in Europe. Many flocked across the ocean, some penniless and with little knowledge of the language.

The potato famine of the 1840s led to the first wave of Irish immigrants, followed by German and other European workers displaced by political unrest and the Industrial Revolution. Immigrants continue to enrich New York in countless ways, and today an estimated 100 languages are spoken.

THE JEWS

There has been a Jewish community in New York since 1654. The city's first synagogue, Shearith Israel, was established by refugees from a Dutch colony in Brazil and is still active today. These first settlers, Sephardic Jews of Spanish descent, included such prominent families as the Baruchs. They were followed by the German Jews, who set up successful retailing enterprises, like the Straus brothers at Macy's. Russian persecution led to the mass immigration that began in the late 1800s. By the start of World War I, 600,000 Jews were living on the Lower East Side. Today, this area is more Hispanic and Asian than Jewish, but it holds reminders of its role as a place of refuge and new beginnings.

THE GERMANS

The Germans began to settle in New York in the 18th century. From John Peter Zenger onward (see p21), the city's German community has championed the freedom to express ideas and opinions. It has also produced giants of industry, such as John Jacob Astor, the city's first millionaire.

THE ITALIANS

Italians first came to New York in the 1830s and 1840s. Many came from northern Italy to escape the failing revolution at home. In the 1870s, poverty in southern Italy drove many more Italians across the ocean. In time, Italians became a potent political force in the city, exemplified by Fiorello La Guardia, one of New York's finest mayors.

THE CHINESE

The Chinese were late arrivals to New York. In 1880, the population of the Mott Street district was a mere 700. By the 1940s, they were the city's fastest-growing and most upwardly mobile ethnic group, extending the old boundaries of Chinatown and establishing new neighborhoods in parts of Brooklyn and Queens. Once a closed community, Chinatown now bustles with tourists exploring the streets and markets, and sampling the creative cuisine.

THE HISPANIC AMERICANS

Hispanic religious carving at El Museo del Barrio (see p231)

Puerto Ricans were in New York as early as 1838, but it was not until after World War II that they arrived in large numbers in search of work. Most live in El Barrio, formerly known as Spanish Harlem. Professionals who fled Fidel Castro's Cuba have moved out of the city itself but are still influential in Hispanic commerce and culture. Parts of Washington Heights have large Dominican and Colombian communities.

THE IRISH

The Irish, who first arrived in New York in the 1840s, had to overcome harsh odds. Starving and with barely a penny to their names, they labored hard to escape the slums of Five Points and Hell's Kitchen, helping to build the modern city in the process. Many joined the police and fire-fighting forces, rising to high rank through dedication to duty. Others set up successful businesses, such as the Irish bars that act as a focus for the now-scattered New York Irish community.

Remarkable New Yorkers

New York has nourished some of the best creative talents since the beginning of the 20th century. Pop Art began here, and Manhattan is still the world center for modern art. The alternative writers of the 1950s and '60s – known as the Beat Generation – took inspiration from the city's jazz clubs. And as it is the financial capital, many leading world financiers have made New York their home.

WRITERS

Novelist James Baldwin

Much great American literature was created in New York. Charlotte Temple, A Tale of Truth, first published in 1791 by Susanna Rowson (c. 1762–1824), was a tale of seduction in the city and a best-seller for 50 years.

America's first professional author was Charles Brockden Brown (1771–1810), who came to New York in 1791. The novels of Edgar Allan Poe (1809–49), the pioneer of the modern detective story, expanded the thriller genre. Henry James (1843–1916) published The Bostonians (1886) and became the master of the psychological novel, and his friend Edith Wharton (1861–1937) became known for her satirical novels about American society.

American literature finally won international recognition with Washington Irving's (1783–1859) satire, A History of New York (1809). It earned him $2,000. Irving coined the names "Gotham" for New York and "Knickerbockers" for New Yorkers. He and James Fenimore Cooper (1789–1851), whose books gave birth to the "Western" novel, formed the Knickerbocker group of US writers. Greenwich Village has always attracted writers, including Herman Melville (1819–91) whose masterpiece, Moby Dick (1851), was very poorly received at first.

Jack Kerouac (1922–69), Allen Ginsberg, and William Burroughs all went to Columbia University and drank at the San Remo Café in Greenwich Village. Dylan Thomas (1914–53) lived at the Chelsea Hotel (see p139). Novelist Nathanael West (1902–40) worked in the Gramercy Park Hotel, and Dashiell Hammett (1894–1961) wrote The Maltese Falcon while living there. James Baldwin (1924–87), born in Harlem, wrote Another Country (1963) on his return to New York from Europe.

ARTISTS

The New York School of Abstract Expressionists founded the first influential American art movement. It was launched by Hans Hofmann (1880–1966) with Franz Kline and Willem de Kooning, whose first job in America was as a house-painter. Adolph Gottlieb, Mark Rothko (1903–70), and Jackson Pollock (1912–56) went on to popularize this style. Pollock, Kline and de Kooning all had their studios on the Lower East Side.

Pop Art began in New York in the 1960s with Roy Lichtenstein and

Pop artist Andy Warhol

Andy Warhol (1926–87), who made some of his cult films at 33 Union Square. Keith Haring (1958–90) was a very prolific graffiti artist who gained fame for his Pop Art murals and sculptures.

Robert Mapplethorpe (1946–89) acquired notoriety for his homoerotic photos of men. Jeff Koons was part of the Neo-Pop or Post-Pop movement of the 80s.

The illusionistic murals by Richard Haas enliven many walls throughout the city.

ACTORS

In 1849 the British actor Charles Macready started a riot by saying Americans were vulgar. A mob stormed the Astor Place Opera House, where Macready was playing Macbeth, police opened fire, and 22 rioters were killed.

In 1927 Mae West (1893–1980) spent 10 days in a workhouse on Roosevelt Island and was fined $500 for giving a lewd performance in her Broadway show Sex. Marc Blitzstein's radical pro-labor opera The Cradle Will Rock produced by Orson Welles (1915–85) and John Houseman (1902–88), was immediately banned and the show had to move to another theater. The actors managed to get around the ban by buying tickets and singing their roles from the audience.

The musical has been New York's special contribution to the theater. Florenz Ziegfeld's (1869–1932) Follies ran from 1907 to 1931. The opening of Oklahoma! on Broadway in 1943 began the age of musicals by the famous duo Richard Rodgers (1902–79) and Oscar Hammerstein, Jr. (1895–1960).

Off Broadway, the Provincetown Players at 33 MacDougal Street were the first to produce Eugene O'Neill's (1888–1953) Beyond the Horizon (1920). His successor as the major innovative force in US theater was Edward Albee, author of Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? (1962).

MUSICIANS AND DANCERS

Leonard Bernstein (1918–90) followed a long line of great conductors at the New York Philharmonic, including Bruno Walter (1876–1962), Arturo Toscanini (1867–1957) and Leopold Stokowski (1882–1977). Maria Callas (1923–77) was born in New York but moved to Europe.

Carnegie Hall (see p148) has featured Enrico Caruso (1873–1921), Bob Dylan and the Beatles. A record concert attendance was set in 1991 when Paul Simon drew a million people for his free concert in Central Park.

The legendary swinging jazz clubs of the 1930s and 1940s are now gone from 52nd Street. Plaques on "Jazz Walk" outside the CBS building honor such famous performers as Charlie Parker (1920–55) and Josephine Baker (1906–75).

Between 1940 and 1965, New York became a world dance capital, with the establishment of George Balanchine's (1904–83) New York City Ballet and the American Ballet Theater. In 1958, choreographer Alvin Ailey (1931–89) set up the American Dance Theater, and Bob Fosse (1927–87) changed the course of musicals.

INDUSTRIALISTS AND ENTREPRENEURS

Tycoon Cornelius Vanderbilt

The rags-to-riches story is an American dream. Andrew Carnegie (1835–1919), "the steel baron with a heart of gold," started with nothing and died having given away $350 million. His beneficiaries included public libraries and universities throughout America. Many other foundations are the legacies of wealthy philanthropists. Some, like Cornelius Vanderbilt (1794–1877), tried to shake off their rough beginnings by patronizing the arts.

In business, New York's "robber barons" did what they liked with apparent impunity. Financiers Jay Gould (1836–92) and James Fisk (1834–72) beat Vanderbilt in the war for the Erie Railroad by manipulating stock. In September 1869 they caused Wall Street's first "Black Friday" when they tried to corner the gold market, but fled when their fraud was discovered. Gould died a happy billionaire, while Fisk was killed in a fight over a woman.

Modern entrepreneurs include Donald Trump (see p33), owner of Trump Tower, and the late Leona and Harry Helmsley. After Leona passed away in August 2007, the bulk of the Helmsley's $4-billion estate was left to a charitable trust.

ARCHITECTS

Cass Gilbert (1858–1934), who built such Neo-Gothic skyscrapers as the Woolworth Building of 1913 (see p91) was one of the men who literally shaped the city. His caricature can be seen in the lobby, clutching a model of his masterpiece. Stanford White (1853–1906) was as well known for his scandalous private life as for his fine Beaux Arts buildings, such as the Players Club (p128). For most of his life, Frank Lloyd Wright (1867–1959) spurned city architecture. When he was persuaded to leave his mark on the city, it was in the form of the Guggenheim Museum (pp188–9). German-born Ludwig Mies van der Rohe (1886–1969), who built the Seagram Building (p177), did not believe in "inventing a new architecture every Monday morning," although some might argue that this is just what New York has always done best.

NEW YORK THROUGH THE YEAR

Springtime in New York sees Park Avenue filled with blooms, while Fifth Avenue goes green for St. Patrick's Day, the first of the year's many big parades. Summer in the city is hot and humid, but it is worth forsaking an air-conditioned interior to step outside, where parks and squares are the setting for free open-air music and theater. The first Monday in September marks Labor Day and the advent of the orange-red colors of autumn. Then, as Christmas nears, the shops and streets begin to sparkle with dazzling window displays.

Dates of the events on the following pages may vary. For details, consult the listings magazines (see p377). NYC & Co., part of the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau (see p371), issues a useful quarterly free calendar of events.

SPRING

Every season in New York brings its own tempo and temptations. In spring, the city shakes off the winter with tulips and cherry blossoms in the parks and spring fashions in the stores. Everyone window shops and gallery hops. The hugely popular St. Patrick's Day Parade draws the crowds, and thousands don their finery for the Easter Parade down Fifth Avenue.

MARCH

St. Patrick's Day Parade (Mar 17), Fifth Ave, from 44th to 86th St. Green clothes, beer and flowers, plus bagpipes.

AVERAGE DAYS OF SUNSHINE PER MONTH

Days of Sunshine

New York enjoys long hours of summer sun from June to August, with July the month of greatest sunshine. The winter days are much shorter, but many are clear and bright. Autumn has more sunshine than spring, although both are sunny.

SUMMER

New Yorkers escape the hot city streets when possible, for picnics, boat rides, and the beaches. Macy's fireworks light up the Fourth of July skies, and more sparks fly when the New York Yankees and Mets baseball teams are in town. Summer also brings street fairs, outdoor concerts, and free Shakespeare and opera in Central Park.

AVERAGE MONTHLY TEMPERATURE

Temperature

The chart shows the average minimum and maximum temperatures for each month in New York. With top temperatures averaging 84° F (29° C), the city can become hot and humid. In contrast, the months of winter, although rarely below freezing, can seem bitterly cold.

AUTUMN

Labor Day marks the end of the summer. The Giants and the Jets kick off the football season, the Broadway season begins and the Festa di San Gennaro in Little Italy is the high point in a succession of colorful neighborhood fairs. Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade is the nation's symbol that the holiday season has arrived.

SEPTEMBER

 The Southern Tip

The Southern Tip of Manhattan

This view of Lower Manhattan, seen from the Hudson River, encompasses some of the most striking modern additions to the city skyline, such as the distinctively topped quartet of the World Financial Center. You will also catch glimpses of earlier Manhattan: Castle Clinton set against the green space of Battery Park and, behind it, the Custom House building. From 1973 until September 2001 the area also boasted the World Trade Center. Its landmark towers were destroyed in a terrorist attack on the city. The 1 World Trade Center building (formerly known as Freedom Tower), on the northwest corner of the WTC site, is due for completion in late 2013.

WORLD TRADE CENTER REDEVELOPMENT SITE

On September 11, 2001, two planes bound for Los Angeles were hijacked and targeted at the World Trade Center. Hundreds of people died in the impact, but thousands more were killed when the twin towers collapsed. Two other planes were also hijacked that morning; the first struck the Pentagon, while the second came to ground near Pittsburgh. The death toll exceeded the number of troops killed in the Revolutionary War (see pp22–3), and comparisons were made with the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Images of the destruction were seen across the world, drawing support for a “war against terrorism.” Currently being constructed on the site is 1 World Trade Center (formerly called Freedom Tower). At 1,776 ft (541 m), its proposed height in feet refers to the year of the Declaration of Independence.

East River View

Lower Manhattan from the East River

At first sight, this stretch of East River shoreline, running up from the tip of Manhattan Island, is a seamless array of 20th-century office buildings. But from sea level, streets and slips are still visible, offering glimpses of old New York and the Financial District to the west. On the skyline itself, a few of the district's early skyscrapers still proudly display their ornate crowns above their more anonymous modern counterparts.

As the Financial District ends, the skyline, as seen from the East River or Brooklyn, changes dramatically. The corporate headquarters are replaced by the piers, low-rise streets and warehouses of the old seaport area, now restored as the South Street Seaport (see pp82–3). The Civic Center lies not far inland, and a few of its monumental buildings can be seen. The Brooklyn Bridge marks the end of this stretch of skyline. Midtown

Midtown Manhattan

The skyline of Midtown Manhattan is graced with some of the city's most spectacular towers and spires – from the familiar beauty of the Empire State Building's Art Deco pinnacle to the dramatic wedge shape of Citicorp's modern headquarters. Street by Street: Wall Street

No intersection has been of greater importance to the city, past or present, than the corners of Wall and Broad streets. Three important sites are located here. Federal Hall National Monument marks the place where, in 1789, George Washington was sworn in as president. Trinity Church is one of the nation's oldest Anglican parishes. The New York Stock Exchange, founded in 1817, is to this day a financial nerve center whose ups and downs cause tremors around the globe. The surrounding buildings are the very heart of New York's famous financial district.

Trinity Building, an early 20th-century Gothic skyscraper, was designed to complement nearby Trinity Church.

The Marine Midland Bank rises straight up 55 stories. This dark, glass tower occupies only 40% of its site. The other 60% is a plaza in which a large red sculpture by Isamu Noguchi, Cube, balances on one of its points.

The Equitable Building (1915) deprived its neighbors of light, prompting a change in the law: skyscrapers had to be set back from the street.

★ Trinity Church
Built in 1846 in a Gothic style, this is the third church on this site. Once the tallest structure in the city, the bell tower is now dwarfed by the skyscrapers that surround it. Many famous early New Yorkers are buried in the churchyard ①

Wall Street subway (lines 4, 5)

The Irving Trust Company, built in 1932, has an outer wall patterned to look like fabric. In the lobby is an Art Deco mosaic in shades of flame and gold.

26 Broadway was built as the home of the Standard Oil Trust. An oil lamp rests on top of it.

★ New York Stock Exchange
The hub of the world's financial markets is housed in a 17-story building constructed in 1903 ②

The Liberty Tower
is clad in white terracotta and is in the Gothic style. It was later turned into apartments.

The present structure, renovated in 2006, was built between 1834 and 1842 as the US Customs House. It is one of the finest Classical designs in the city. Display rooms off the Rotunda include the Bill of Rights Room and an interactive computer exhibit about the Constitution.

This square-towered Episcopal church at the head of Wall Street is the third one on this site. Designed in 1846 by Richard Upjohn, it was among the grandest churches of its day, marking the beginning of the best period of Gothic Revival architecture in America. Richard Morris Hunt's design for the sculpted brass doors was inspired by Lorenzo Ghiberti's Doors of Paradise at the Baptistery in Florence.

Restoration has uncovered the original rosy sandstone, long buried beneath layers of city grime. The 280-ft (86-m) steeple, the tallest structure in New York until the 1860s, still commands respect despite its towering neighbors.

Many prominent early New Yorkers are buried in the graveyard: statesman Alexander Hamilton; steamboat inventor Robert Fulton; and William Bradford, founder of New York's first newspaper in 1725.

A model of urban design by Cesar Pelli & Associates, this development is a vital part of the revival of Lower Manhattan, and its damage in the World Trade Center attack was attended to as a matter of urgency. Four office towers soar skyward, housing the headquarters of some of the world's most important financial companies. At the heart of the complex lies the dazzling Winter Garden, a vast glass-and-steel public space (all 2,000 panes of glass had to be replaced), flanked by 45 restaurants and shops, opening onto a lively piazza and marina on the Hudson River. The sweeping marble staircase leading down to the Winter Garden often doubles as seating for free arts and

In 1790, trading in stocks and shares took place haphazardly on or around Wall Street, but in 1792, 24 brokers who traded at 68 Wall Street signed an agreement to deal only with one another: the basis of the New York Stock Exchange (NYSE) was formed. The NYSE has weathered a succession of alternating slumps (“bear markets”) and booms (“bull markets”), growing from a local marketplace into a financial center of global importance. Membership is strictly limited. In 1817, a “seat” cost $25; in the “bullish” years of the late 1990s, the prices ran as high as $4 million. In 2006, the NYSE became a for-profit public company, and all the seats were exchanged for cash and stock settlements. Traders now buy one-year licenses.

WHAT A TRADING POST DOES

The 17 trading posts each consist of 22 groups, or “sections,” of traders and technology, each trading the stock of up to 10 listed companies. Commission brokers work for brokerage firms, and rush between booth and trading post, buying and selling securities (stocks and bonds) for the public. A specialist trades in just one stock at a time, quoting bids to other brokers, and independent floor brokers handle orders for busy brokerage firms. Clerks process the orders that come into the trading post via SuperDOT computer into the Exchange’s Market Data System. The pages help on the busy exchange floor, bringing orders from the booths to the brokers and specialists. Post display units show stock prices, and flat screens show prices and trades for the specialist. As of January 24, 2007, all NYSE stocks can also be traded via an electronic hybrid market.

Immortalized by film-makers and photographers, the twin towers of the World Trade Center dominated the skyline of Manhattan for 27 years, until September 2001's terrorist attack (see p54). The enormous weight of each building was supported by an inner wire cage, which melted from the heat of the fire caused by the two passenger aircraft that were flown into the towers.

These towers were part of a buildings complex consisting of six office blocks and a hotel, connected by a vast underground concourse lined with shops and restaurants. A bridge linked the complex to the World Financial Center (see p69), which survived the attack. The World Trade Center was home to some 450 companies with 50,000 employees. Large numbers of visitors used to come to see the views from the observation deck or the rooftop promenade at Two World Trade Center. The elevator took 58 seconds to reach the 107th floor. At One World Trade Center, this speedy ascent could be taken to the Windows on the World restaurant on the 107th floor. One memorable day at the Center was on August 7, 1974, when Philippe Petit stepped out to a tightrope between the two towers and entertained crowds of office workers for almost an hour with a high-rise balancing act.

Philippe Petit about to step out between the two towers in 1974

Buildings are beginning to reoccupy "Ground Zero". Plans to erect a skyscraper, designed by architect Daniel Libeskind, have been controversial. Several memorials and a museum are also being worked on and are planned to open in 2013.

The Tribute WTC Visitor Center, on the south side of the site, pays homage to the victims, survivors, and rescue efforts of September 11. They also offer walking tours.

Adjacent to the Ritz Carlton hotel, this museum celebrates New York's architectural heritage and examines the historical forces and individuals that shaped the

At 1am on December 15, 1989, sculptor Arturo Di Modica and 30 friends unloaded his 7,000-lb (3,200-kg) Charging Bull bronze statue in front of the New York Stock Exchange. The group had eight minutes between police patrols to place the sculpture, but they managed to carry out the deed in just five. The bull was later taken away for obstructing traffic and lacking a permit. Due to the large outcry, however, the Parks Department gave it a "temporary" stomping ground on Broadway, just north of Bowling Green, where it remains to this day, the unofficial mascot of Wall Street.

Di Modica created the sculpture after the 1987 stock-market crash, to symbolize the "strength, power, and hope of the American people for the future." It took him two years to complete at a personal cost of $350,000.

Bowling Green 10

Map 1 C4. M Bowling Green.

This triangular plot north of Battery Park was the city's earliest park, used first as a cattle market and later as a bowling ground. A statue of King George III stood here until the signing of the Declaration of Independence, when, as a symbol of British rule, the statue was hacked to pieces and smelted for ammunition (see pp22-3). The wife of the governor of Connecticut is said to have melted down enough pieces to mold 42,000 bullets.

The fence, erected in 1771, is still standing, but minus the royal crowns that once adorned it. They met the same fate as the statue. The Green was once surrounded by elegant homes. Beyond it is the start of Broadway, which runs the length of Manhattan and, under its formal name of Route 9, all the way north to the State capital in Albany.

One of New York's finest Beaux Arts designs, this 1907 granite palace by Cass Gilbert is a fitting monument to the city's role as a great seaport, decorated by the best sculptors and artists of the time. Forty-four Ionic columns stand guard, with an ornate frieze. Heroic sculptures by Daniel Chester French depict four continents as seated women: Asia (contemplative), America (facing optimistically forward), Europe (surrounded by symbols of past glories) and Africa (still sleeping).

Inside, murals by Reginald Marsh decorate the fine marble rotunda, showing the progress of ships into the harbor. Opposite the entrance is a portrait of movie star Greta Garbo giving a press conference on board ship. In 1973 the US Customs Service moved out, leaving the building empty but for a small bankruptcy court.

The Custom House took on a different function in 1994, when the George Gustav Heye Center of the Smithsonian National Museum of the American Indian was unveiled on three floors of the building. The museum's outstanding collection of about a million artifacts along with an archive of many thousands of photographs, spans the breadth of the native cultures of North, Central and South America.

Exhibitions include works by contemporary Native American artists as well as changing displays drawn from the permanent collection.

A gift from the French to the American people, the statue was the brainchild of sculptor Frédéric-Auguste Bartholdi and has become a symbol of freedom throughout the world. In Emma Lazarus's poem, which is engraved on the base, Lady Liberty says: "Give me your tired, your poor, / Your huddled masses yearning to breathe free." Unveiled by President Grover Cleveland on October 28, 1886, the statue was restored in time for its 100th anniversary in 1986. The crown was closed to the public following the events of September 11, but reopened in 2009.

From Her Toes to Her Torch

Three hundred molded copper sheets riveted together make up Lady Liberty.

Posters featuring the statue are among the items on display.

The original torch now stands in the main lobby.

★ Golden Torch

In 1986, a new torch replaced the corroded original. The replica's flame is coated in 24-carat gold leaf.

The crown is the highest level open to visitors.

The frame was designed by Gustave Eiffel, who later built the Eiffel Tower. The copper shell hangs on bars from a central iron pylon.

A central pylon anchors the 200-ton statue to its base.

354 steps lead from the entrance to the crown.

Portrait of Liberty

Bartholdi's mother was the model for Liberty. The seven rays of her crown represent the seven seas and seven continents.

Making the Hand

To mold the copper shell, the hand was made first in plaster, then wood.

A Model Figure

A series of graduated scale models enabled Bartholdi to build the largest metal statue ever constructed.

FREDERIC-AUGUSTE BARTHOLDI

The French sculptor who designed the Statue of Liberty intended it as a monument to the freedom he found lacking in his own country. He said "I will try to glorify the Republic and Liberty over there, in the hope that someday I will find it again here." Bartholdi devoted 21 years of his life to making the statue a reality, even traveling to America in 1871 to talk President Ulysses S. Grant and others into funding it and installing it in New York's harbor.

Restoration Celebration

On July 3, 1986, after a $100-million restoration, the statue was unveiled. The $2-million fireworks display was the largest ever seen in America.

New York's only remaining block of 18th-century commercial buildings contains an exact replica of the 1719 Fraunces Tavern where George Washington said farewell to his officers in 1783.

The tavern had been an early casualty of the Revolution: the British ship Asia shot a cannonball through its roof in August 1775.

The building was bought in 1904 by the Sons of the Revolution. Its restoration in 1907 was one of the first efforts to preserve the nation's heritage.

Castle Clinton was built in 1811 as an artillery defense post 300 ft (91 m) offshore, connected to Battery Park by a causeway; but landfill gradually linked it to the mainland. None of its 28 guns was ever used in battle.

The fort was enclosed in 1824 to become a fashionable theater, where Phineas T. Barnum introduced "Swedish nightingale" Jenny Lind in 1850. In 1855 it preceded Ellis Island as the city's immigration point, processing over 8 million newcomers. In 1896, it became the New York Aquarium, which moved to Coney Island in 1941 (see p249).

Now it is a monument and visitors' center for Manhattan's National Park Service sites, with historical panoramas of the city. The complex is the departure point for the Statue of Liberty-Ellis Island ferry (see p386).

Ellis Island 18

Half of America's population can trace its roots to Ellis Island, which served as the country's immigration depot from 1892 until 1954. Nearly 12 million people passed through its gates and dispersed across the country in the greatest wave of migration the world has ever known.

Centered on the Great Hall or Registry Room, the site today houses the three-story Ellis Island Immigration Museum. Much of this story is told with photos and the voices of actual immigrants, and an electronic database traces ancestors. Outside, the American Immigrant Wall of Honor is the largest wall of names in the world. No other place explains so well the "melting pot" that formed the character of the nation. SEAPORT AND THE CIVIC CENTER

Manhattan's busy Civic Center is the hub of the city and the state, of the federal governments' court systems and the city's police department. In the 1880s it was the heart of the newspaper publishing business as well. The area is still a handsome enclave of imposing architecture with fine landmarks from every period in the city's history, from the 20th-century Woolworth Building to 19th-century City Hall and 18th-century St. Paul's

Part commercial and part historical, the development of South Street Seaport has transformed the former heart of the 19th-century port of New York, which had long been neglected, into a lively and pleasant part of the city. The most notable feature is the top, a fantasy of towers capped by Adolph Wienman's statue Civic Fame.

A railway passage (no longer in use) through the base, and the plaza joining the Municipal Building to the entrance of the IRT subway station were built as concessions to modern transportation needs. Brooklyn Bridge 3

Completed in 1883, the Brooklyn Bridge was the largest suspension bridge and the first to be constructed of steel. Engineer John A. Roebling conceived of a bridge spanning the East River while ice-bound on a ferry to Brooklyn. The bridge took 16 years to build, required 600 workers and claimed over 20 lives, including Roebling's. Most died of caisson disease (known as "the bends") after coming up from the underwater excavation chambers. When finished, the bridge linked Manhattan and Brooklyn, then two separate cities.

This building is best known for the scandal it caused. It is nicknamed the “Tweed Courthouse” for the political boss who spent 20 times the budget for the building and pocketed $9 million of the total $14 million cost. “Boss” Tweed even bought a marble quarry and sold materials to the city at huge profit. Public outrage eventually led to his downfall in 1871 – ironically, he was tried in his own courthouse and died in a New York jail (see p27).

After an $85 million restoration, including the 85-ft (26-m) rotunda and the grand staircase, this vibrant 19th-century landmark became the home of the Department of Education.

I (212) NEW-YORK.

City Hall has been the seat of the New York city government since 1812, and is one of the finest examples of early 19th-century American architecture. A stately Federal-style building (with some influences from the French Renaissance), it was designed by John McComb, Jr., the first prominent American-born architect, and the French emigré Joseph Mangin.

Marble cladding was not used for the building's rear, since it was not expected that the city would ever develop farther to the north. In 1954, a program of restoration remedied this and the interior was refurbished.

Mangin is usually given credit for designing the exterior, and McComb for the beautiful interior with its fine domed rotunda encircled by 10 columns. The space beneath it opens onto an elegant marble stairway, leading to the splendid second-floor City Council chambers and the Governor's Room, which houses a portrait gallery of early New York leaders. This magnificent entrance has welcomed rulers and heroes for nearly 200 years. In 1865 Abraham Lincoln's body lay in state in this hall.

Stand on the steps and look to your right to see a statue of Nathan Hale, a US soldier hanged by the British as a spy in September 1776 during the Revolutionary War. His last words – “My only regret is that I have not more lives than one to offer in the service of my country” – won him a permanent place in the history books and hearts of America.

This was New York's village green 250 years ago, complete with stocks and whipping post. It was the scene of pre-Revolution protests against English rule, and there is a memorial to the “Liberty Poles” (symbols of revolt) on City Hall's west lawn. The Declaration of Independence was read to George Washington and his troops here on July 9, 1776.

Later, Phineas T. Barnum's American Museum at the park's southern tip drew crowds from 1842 until it burned down in 1865. The Park Row building was the site of the Park Theater. From 1798 to 1848, the best actors of the day, such as Edmund Kean and Fanny Kemble, performed there. Park Row runs along the east side of City Hall Park. Once called “Newspaper Row,” it was lined with the lofty offices of the Sun, World, Tribune, and other papers.

Bas-relief caricature of architect Gilbert in the Woolworth lobby

In 1879, salesclerk Frank W. Woolworth opened a new kind of store, where shoppers could see and touch the goods, and everything cost five cents. The chain of stores that followed made him a fortune and changed retailing forever.

The 1913 Gothic headquarters of his empire was New York's tallest building until 1930. It set the standard for the great skyscrapers. Architect Cass Gilbert's soaring two-tiered design, adorned with gargoyles of bats and other wildlife, is topped with a pyramid roof, flying buttresses, pinnacles, and four small towers. The marble interior is rich with filigree, sculptured reliefs, and painted decoration, and has a high glass-tile mosaic ceiling that almost seems to glow. The lobby is one of the city's treasures. Gilbert showed his sense of humor here, in bas-relief caricatures of the founder counting out his fortune in nickels and dimes; of the real-estate broker closing a deal; and of Cass Gilbert himself cradling a large model of the building. Paid for with $13.5 million in cash, the building has never had a mortgage. Woolworth's went out of business in 1997. The building is now owned by the Witkoff Group.

In the churchyard, the Actor's Monument commemorates George F. Cooke, who played many great roles at the Park Theater; he drank himself to death at the Shakespeare Tavern on Fulton Street. The chapel's "Unwavering Spirit" exhibition chronicles the volunteer efforts after September 11.

LOWER EAST SIDE

Nowhere does the strong ethnic flavor of New York come through more tangibly than in Lower Manhattan, where immigrants began to settle in the late 19th century. Here Italians, Chinese and Jews established distinct neighborhoods, preserving their languages, customs, foods and religions in the midst of a strange land. This neighborhood of low-rise buildings is steadily becoming gentrified, but the old flavor remains. The area brims with restaurants, bars, and trendy stores, but still offers some of the city's greatest bargains and has a spirit found nowhere else. The composer Irving Berlin, who grew up here, famously said: "Everybody ought to have a Lower East Side in their life."

GETTING THERE

Chinatown and Little Italy can be reached by subway on the N, R, Q, W, J, M, Z, or 6 trains to Canal St, or on the M1 or M103 bus. The Lower East Side is served by the B and D trains to Grand St, the F to Delancey St, the J, M, or Z to Essex St, or by the M9, M14A, or M15 bus.

Street by Street: Little Italy and Chinatown

New York's largest and most colorful ethnic neighborhood is Chinatown, which is growing so rapidly that it is overrunning nearby Little Italy as well as the Lower East Side. Streets here teem with grocery stores, gift shops and hundreds of Chinese restaurants; even the plainest offer good food. What is left of Little Italy can be found at Mulberry and Grand streets, where old-world flavor abounds.

Imposing inside and out, this Classical Revival building was built for the Bowery Savings Bank in 1894.

Architect Stanford White designed the ornamented limestone facade to wrap around the rival Butchers' and Drovers' Bank, which refused to sell the corner plot. The interior is decorated with marble pillars and a ceiling scattered with gilded rosettes.

By the mid-20th century, the bank was a contrast to the Bowery with its vagrants and flophouses. It is now the site of opulent Capitale, and open only for private functions.

Completed in 1909, this was a fitting home for the city's new professional police force. The main portico and end pavilions have Corinthian columns and the dome dominates the skyline. However, lack of space meant the headquarters had to fit into a wedge-shaped site in the midst of Little Italy.

For nearly three-quarters of a century, this was where "New York's finest" came to work. During Prohibition, Grand Street from here to the Bowery was known as "Bootleggers' Row," and alcohol was easily obtained except when a police raid was due. The liquor merchants paid handsomely for a tip-off from inside police headquarters.

The police moved to different headquarters in 1973, and in 1985 the building was converted into a luxury cooperative apartment project.

The southern Italians who came to New York in the late 19th century found themselves living in the squalor of "dumbbell" apartments. These were built so close together that sunlight never reached the lower windows or backyards. With over 40,000 people living in 17 small, unsanitary blocks, diseases such as tuberculosis were rife.

Despite the privations of life on the Lower East Side, the community that grew up around Mulberry Street was lively with the colors, flavors, and atmosphere of Italy. These have lingered on, though the Italian population has dwindled to 5,000 and Chinatown has encroached on the traditional "Little Italy."

The most exciting time to visit is during the Feast of San Gennaro around September 19 (see p52). For nine days Mulberry Street is renamed Via San Gennaro. On the saint's day, his shrine and relics are paraded through the streets. Throughout the feast there is music, dancing, and sideshows, and stalls selling Italian food and drink, as well as other ethnic cuisines.

Little Italy's restaurants offer simple, rustic food served in friendly surroundings at reasonable prices. NoLiTa, North of Little Italy, is filled with boutiques, shops, and cafés. The fashionable flock here for the coolest small labels.

The Chinatown of the early 20th century was primarily a male community, made up of immigrants who had first gone to California. Wages were sent home to their families in China, who were prevented from joining them by US immigration laws. The men relaxed by gambling at mahjong. The community remained isolated from the rest of the city, financed and controlled by its own secret organizations, the Tongs.

Some of the Tongs were simply family associations who provided loans. Others, such as the On Leong and the Hip Sing, who were at war with one another, were criminal fraternities. Tiny, crooked Doyers Street was called “Bloody Angle”; enemies were lured there and set upon by gang members waiting around the bend.

A truce between the Tongs in 1933 brought peace to Chinatown. By 1940 it was home to many middle-class families. Immigrants and businesses from Hong Kong also brought postwar prosperity to the community. Today over 80,000 Chinese-Americans live here.

Many visit the neighborhood to sample the cuisine, but there is more to do here than eat. There are galleries, antiques and curio shops, and Oriental festivals (see p53). To glimpse another side of Chinatown, step into the incense-scented

Columbus Park 5

Map 4 F5. Canal St.

The tranquility of Columbus Park today could not be further removed from the scene near this site in the early 1800s. The area, known as Mulberry Bend, was a red-light district, part of the infamous Five Points slum. Gangs with names like the Dead Rabbits and the Plug Uglies roamed the streets. A murder a day was commonplace; even the police were afraid to pass through. Partly as a result of the writings of reformer Jacob Riis (see p49), the slum was taken down in 1892. The park is now the only open space in Chinatown.

When this house of worship was built by the Orthodox Ashkenazi from Eastern Europe in 1887, it was the most flamboyant temple in the neighborhood. But many immigrant Jews saw the Lower East Side as just the beginning of a new life, and later moved out of this massive synagogue.

In the 1930s, the huge sanctuary, rich with stained glass, brass chandeliers, marbled wood paneling, and fine carving, was closed. Much later a group of citizens raised funds for preservation, and the main sanctuary was reopened in 2007. The synagogue has become a vibrant cultural center, with concerts and other special programs.

Even after years of neglect, the facade, with touches of Romanesque, Gothic and Moorish designs, is impressive. Inside, the Italian hand-carved ark and sculpted wooden balcony show why this building was the pride of the area.

The interior of this building was restored to re-create apartments as they appeared in the late 1870s, in 1916, 1918, and 1935. There were no regulations on tenement living conditions until 1879. The program includes the exhibit “Piecing It Together,” about the area’s garment history. The museum also offers superb walking tours.

Jewish immigrants founded the New York garment industry on this street, named for the orchards that once stood here on James De Lancey's Colonial estate. For years the street was filled with pushcarts loaded with goods for sale. The pushcarts are long gone, and not all the shopkeepers are Jewish, but the flavor remains. On Sunday there is an outdoor market, and shoppers fill the street from Houston to Canal, looking for clothing bargains.

Orchard Street is also at the heart of the Lower East Side's gentrification. Boutiques and vintage stores nestle alongside bars, clubs, restaurants, and the boutique Blue Moon hotel, formerly a tenement.

Once a majestic boulevard, Delancey Street these days is little more than an obligatory entrance to the Williamsburg Bridge. The street was named for James De Lancey, whose farm was situated here in Colonial days. During the American Revolution (see pp22-3), De Lancey remained loyal to King George III. After the war, he fled to England, and his land was seized.

At 6 Delancey sits the Bowery Ballroom, a three-story theater completed only weeks before the stock market crash of 1929 (see p31). Throughout the Great Depression and World War II, the building was deserted. Later, it served as a retail space, housing a haberdashery, a jeweler's boutique, and Treemark Shoes, until its resurrection as a live-music venue in the late 1990s. Much of the theater's original structure is still in place, including such decorative details as the brass rails, the copper-vaulted plaster ceiling of the mezzanine bar, and the brass and iron exterior metalwork.

The dividing line between the Lower East Side and the East Village, East Houston between Forsyth and Ludlow streets clearly demonstrates the changing mix of old and new in the area. Between Forsyth and Eldridge streets is the Yonah Schimmel Knish Bakery, a fixture for more than 90 years, still with its original showcases. Further down the block is the Sunshine Theater, constructed as a Dutch Church in the 1840s and later used as a boxing arena and a Yiddish vaudeville theater. Today it shows art films.

While much of the Jewish flavor of the Lower East Side has disappeared, there are two survivors farther along East Houston. Russ and Daughters is a culinary landmark, a third-generation family business that began on a pushcart, circa 1900. At this location since 1914, the store has seen its fortunes change with the neighborhood. It is famed for traditional smoked fish and herring, and has an impressive stock of caviar.

At the corner of Ludlow Street is perhaps the best-known survivor, the bustling Katz's Delicatessen (see p297), well past its 100th

From 1887 to 1916 the building housed the satirical magazine Puck, and at the turn of the century it was the largest building in the world devoted to lithography and publishing.

Today it is the site of some of New York's most stylish parties and artist fashion-photography shoots. The only connection remaining to the mythical Puck is the gold-leaf statue on the corner of Mulberry and Houston, and the smaller version over the entrance on Lafayette Street.

The first St. Patrick's was begun in 1809, and it is one of the oldest churches in the city. When fire destroyed the original in the 1860s, it was rebuilt much as it is today. When the archdiocese transferred the see to the new St. Patrick's Cathedral uptown (see pp178–9), Old St. Patrick's became the local parish church, and it has flourished despite a constantly changing ethnic congregation.

Below the church are vaults containing the remains of, among others, one of New York's most famous families of restaurateurs, the Delmonicos. Pierre Toussaint was also buried here, but in 1990 his remains were moved from the old graveyard beside the church to a more prestigious burial place in a crypt in the new St. Patrick's Cathedral. Born as a slave in Haiti in 1766, Toussaint was brought to New York, where he lived as a free man and became a prosperous wig-maker. He later devoted himself to caring for the city's poor, also tending cholera victims and using his money to build an orphanage. The Vatican is now considering the philanthropic Toussaint for sainthood.

Marcia Tucker left her post as the Whitney Museum's Curator of Painting and Sculpture in 1977 to found this museum. Her aim was to exhibit the kind of work she felt was missing from more traditional museums. She created one of New York's most cutting-edge exhibition spaces, which includes an innovative Media Lounge for digital art, video installations, and sound works.

The rotating collection features a wide range of art, from large-scale photographs of 1960s America to geometric abstracts. The museum takes an inclusive approach, showcasing both emerging and established artists, including Mark Rothko and Roy Lichtenstein.

SOHO AND TRIBECA

Art and architecture are the twin lures that have transformed these formerly industrial districts. SoHo (south of Houston) was threatened with demolition in the 1960s until preservationists drew attention to the rare historic cast-iron architecture. The district was saved, and artists began to move into the loft spaces. Galleries, cafés, shops and then boutiques followed. Brunch and gallery hopping in SoHo is now a favorite weekend outing. As rents rose, many artists were priced out of SoHo and moved to TriBeCa (Triangle Below Canal). Now, trendy TriBeCa has galleries, many restaurants, and the Tribeca Film Festival in May.

Street by Street: SoHo Cast-Iron Historic District

The largest concentration of cast-iron architecture in the world (see p42) survives in the area between West Houston and Canal streets. The heart of the district is Greene Street, where 50 buildings erected between 1869 and 1895 are found on five cobbledstoned blocks. Most of their intricately designed cast-iron facades are in the Neo-Classical Revival style, with Corinthian columns and pediments. Mass-produced in a foundry, they were relatively inexpensive to produce and easy to erect and maintain. Now they rare works of industrial art, well suited to the present character of this district.

West Broadway, as it passes through SoHo, combines striking architecture with a string of art galleries, shoe shops, designer boutiques, and small restaurants.

The Broken Kilometer, at 393 West Broadway, is an installation by Walter De Maria (see p107). Its 500 brass rods are arranged to play tricks with perspective. Laid end to end, the rods would measure 1 km.

72-76 Greene Street, the "King of Greene Street," is a splendid Corinthian-columned building. It was the creation of Isaac F. Duckworth, one of the masters of cast-iron design.

Performing Garage is a tiny experimental theater that pioneers the work of avant-garde artists.

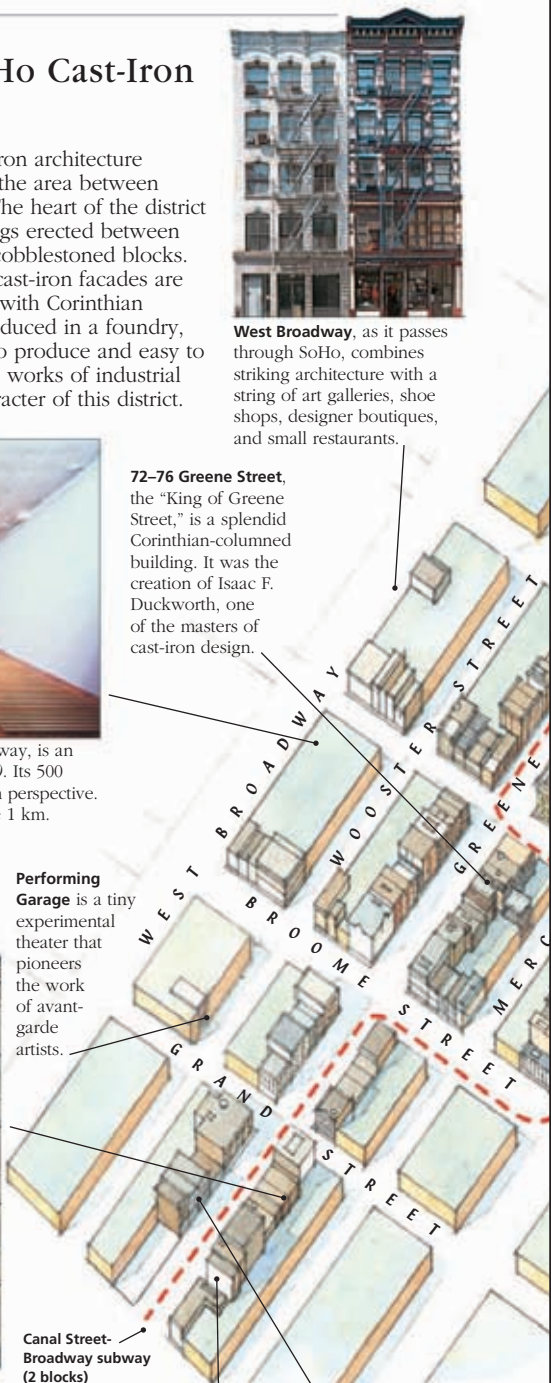

★ Greene Street

Of all Greene Street's fine cast-iron architecture, one of the best is 28-30, the "Queen," which was built by Duckworth in 1872, and has a tall mansard roof ③

10-14 Greene Street dates from 1869. Note the glass circles in the risers of the iron stoop, which allowed daylight to reach the basement.

15-17 Greene Street is a late addition from 1895, in a simple Corinthian style.

Haughwout Building facade

This cast-iron building was erected in 1857 for the E.V. Haughwout china and glassware company, which once supplied the White House. Beneath the grime, the design is superb: rows of windows are framed by arches set on columns flanked by taller columns. Mass-produced sections repeat the pattern over and over. The building was the first to use a steam-driven Otis safety elevator, an innovation that made the skyscraper a possibility.

English parliamentarian W. E. Baxter, visiting New York in 1854, reported of the recently opened St. Nicholas Hotel: "Every carpet is of velvet pile; chair covers and curtains are made of silk or satin damask ... and the embroidery on the mosquito nettings itself might be exhibited to royalty." It is small wonder, then, that it cost over $1 million to build – and with profits of over $50,000 for that year it must have seemed money well spent. Its glory was short-lived, however. In the Civil War it served as a Union Army headquarters. Afterward, the better hotels followed the entertainment district uptown, and by the mid-1870s the St. Nicholas had closed. There is little left on the ground floor to attest to its former opulence, but look up to the remains of its once-stunning marble facade.

Haas mural on Greene Street

This is the heart of SoHo's Cast-Iron District. Along five cobblestoned blocks are 50 cast-iron buildings dating from 1869 to 1895. The block between Broome and Spring streets has 13 full cast-iron facades and from 8–34 is the longest row of cast-iron buildings anywhere. Those at 72–76 are known as the "King of Greene Street," but 28–30, the "Queen," is considered to be the finest. The architecture is best appreciated as a streetscape, with row upon row of columned facades. Walk into any of the galleries housed within to see the spacious interior lofts.

At the corner of Greene and Prince streets, the illusionistic muralist Richard Haas has created an eye-catching work, disguising a plain brick side wall as a cast-iron frontage. Look for the detail of the little gray cat, which sits primly in an "open window."

The "little" Singer Building built by Ernest Flagg in 1904 is the second and smaller Flagg structure by this name, and many critics think it superior to the 41-story tower on lower Broadway that was torn down in 1967. The charmingly ornate building is adorned with wrought-iron balconies and graceful arches painted in striking dark green. The 12-story facade of terracotta, glass and steel was advanced for its day, a forerunner of the metal and glass walls to come in the 1940s and 1950s. The building was an office and warehouse for the Singer sewing machine company, and the original Singer name can be seen cast in iron above the entrance to the store on Prince Street.

Surrounded by modern high-rise blocks, this rare row of eight beautifully restored Federal town houses, with their pitched roofs and distinctive dormer windows, almost seems like a stage set. The houses were constructed in the late 1700s and early 1800s. Two of the buildings were designed by John McComb, Jr., New York's first major native-born architect, and were moved from Washington Street, their original site, for preservation purposes. The houses had previously been used as warehouses and were about to be razed to the ground, when, in 1969, the Landmarks Preservation Commission intervened to secure the necessary funding to enable them to be restored. They are now privately owned.

On the other side of the high-rise complex is Washington Market Park. This area was formerly the site of New York City's wholesale produce center. The market relocated to the Bronx in the 1970s.

Numbers 8 to 10 White, designed by Silesian-born Henry Fernbach, in 1869, have impressive Tuscan columns and arches, with Neo-Renaissance shorter upper stories to give an illusion of height. In contrast, 38 White is the home of neon artist Rudi Stern's gallery, Let There Be Neon.

GREENWICH VILLAGE

New Yorkers call it “the Village,” and it began as a country village, an escape for city dwellers during the yellow fever epidemic of 1822. The crazy-quilt pattern of streets, reflecting early farm boundaries or streams, makes it a natural enclave that has been a bohemian haven and home to many celebrated artists and writers.

A popular gay district is here, but the area has become mainstream and expensive. Near Washington Square, it is dominated by New York University students. Once cheaper, the East Village attracts a trendy crowd from all over the city. The Meatpacking District, which still functions as such, has become overwhelmed with smart boutiques and restaurants.

Street by Street: Greenwich Village

A stroll through historic Greenwich Village is a feast of unexpected small pleasures – charming row houses, hidden alleys, and leafy courtyards. The often quirky architecture suits the bohemian air of the Village. Many famous people, particularly artists and writers, such as playwright Eugene O'Neill and actor Dustin Hoffman, have made their homes in the houses and apartments that line these old-fashioned narrow streets. By night, the Village really comes alive. Late-night coffeehouses and cafés, experimental theaters and music clubs, including some of the best jazz venues, beckon you at every turn.

Christopher Street, a part of New York's gay community, is lined with all kinds of shops, bookstores, and bars.

The Lucille Lortel Theater is at No. 121 Christopher Street; it opened in 1955 with The Threepenny Opera.

Twin Peaks at No. 102 Bedford Street began life in 1830 as an ordinary house. It was rebuilt in 1926 by architect Clifford Daily to house artists, writers, and actors. Daily believed that the quirky house would help their creativity flourish.

Fifteen attractive row houses, dating from the 1850s, line the north side of this street. The park opposite is named for a previous resident of St. Luke's Place, Mayor Jimmy Walker, the popular dandy who ran the city from 1926 until he was forced to resign after a financial scandal in 1932.

In front of the house at No. 6 are the tall lamps that always identify a mayor's home in New York. More recently, the most recognizable house on the block has been No. 10, the home of the Huxtable family in The Cosby Show (although the series sets it in Brooklyn). This is also the block where Wait Until Dark was filmed, starring Audrey Hepburn as a blind woman living at No. 4. Theodore Dreiser was one of several writers, including the poet Marianne Moore, who lived here. Dreiser wrote American Tragedy while living at No. 16. One block north, the corner of Hudson and Morton Streets marked the edge of the Hudson River three centuries ago.

New York's narrowest home, just 9½ ft (2.9 m) wide, was built in 1893 in a former passageway. The poet Edna St. Vincent Millay lived here briefly, followed by the actor John Barrymore, and later Cary Grant. The three-story building, now renovated, is marked by a plaque.

Just around the corner, at 38 Commerce Street, Miss Millay founded the Cherry Lane Theater in 1924 as a site for avant-garde drama. It still premieres new works. Its biggest hit was the 1960s musical Godspell.

Grove Court ③

Map 3 C2. M Christopher St/ Sheridan Sq.

An enterprising grocer named Samuel Cocks built the six town houses here, in an area formed by a bend in the street. (The bends in this part of the Village originally marked divisions between colonial properties.) Cocks reckoned that having residents in the empty passage between 10 and 12 Grove Street would help his business at No. 18.

But residential courts, now highly prized, were not considered respectable in 1854, and the lowbrow residents attracted to the area earned it the nickname "Mixed Ale Alley." O. Henry later chose this block as the setting for his 1902 work The Last Leaf.

Once the domain of butchers in blood-stained aprons, these days (and particularly nights) the Meatpacking District is very different. Squeezed into an area south of 14th Street and west of 9th Avenue, the neighborhood is now dotted with trendy clubs, lounges, and boutique hotels that swell with New Yorkers out for a good time. The area's hipness quotient rose when Soho House, the New York branch of the London private members' club, moved in, followed by the smart Hotel Gansevoort, with rooftop swimming pool. Hip clothiers have outlets here, upscale restaurants have opened, and new nightclubs and bars pop up every month.

This square, where seven streets converge, is the heart of the Village. It was named for the Civil War General Philip Sheridan who became commander in chief of the US Army in 1883. His statue stands in nearby Christopher Park.

The Draft Riots of 1863 took place here. Over a century later, another famous disturbance rocked the square. The Stonewall Inn on Christopher Street was a gay bar that had stayed in business (it was then illegal for gays to gather in bars) by paying off the police. However, on June 28, 1969, the patrons rebelled, and in the pitched battle that ensued police officers were barricaded inside the bar. It was a landmark moral victory for the budding gay rights movement. The inn that stands today is not the original. The Village remains a focus for the city's gay community.

This treasured Village landmark was saved from the wrecking ball and converted into a branch of the New York Public Library through a spirited preservation campaign that began at a Christmas party in the late 1950s.

The site became a market in 1833, named after former president Thomas Jefferson. Its fire lookout tower had a giant bell that was rung to alert the neighborhood's volunteer fire fighters. In 1865, the founding of the municipal fire department made the bell obsolete, and the Third Judicial District, or Jefferson Market, Courthouse was built. With its Venetian Gothic-style spires and turrets, it was named one of the 10 most beautiful buildings in the country when it opened in 1877.

The old fire bell was installed in the tower. Here, in 1906, Harry Thaw was tried for Stanford White's murder (see p126).

By 1945, the market had moved, court sessions had been discontinued, the four-sided clock had stopped and the building was threatened with demolition. In the 1950s, preservationists campaigned first to restore the clock and then the whole building. Its renovation was undertaken by architect Giorgio Cavaglieri, who preserved many of the original details, including the stained glass and a spiral staircase that now leads to the library's dungeonlike reference room.

One of many delightful and unexpected pockets in the Village is this tiny block of small residences. It is lined with ailanthus trees that were planted in order to "absorb the bad air." The houses were built in the mid-19th century for Basque waiters working at the Brevoort Hotel on Fifth Avenue.

Later the houses became fashionable addresses, with many writers living here. The poet E. E. Cummings lived at No. 4 from 1923 until his death in 1962. The English poet laureate John Masefield also lived on the block, as did the playwright Eugene O'Neill and John Reed, whose eyewitness account of the Russian Revolution, Ten Days That Shook The World was made into a film, Reds, directed by Warren Beatty.

Originally called the University of the City of New York, NYU was founded in 1831 as an alternative to Episcopalian Columbia University. It is now the largest private university in the US and extends for blocks around Washington Square.

Construction of the school's first building on Waverly Place sparked the Stonecutters' Guild Riot of 1833: contractors protested the use of inmates from a state prison to cut stone. The National Guard restored order. The original building no longer exists, but a memorial with a piece of the original tower is on a pedestal set into the pavement on Washington Square South. It is the unique spirit of this church, not the architecture, that makes it stand out. This vibrant open space was once marshland through which the quiet Minetta Brook flowed. By the late 1700s, the area had been turned into a public cemetery – when excavation began for the park, some 10,000 skeletal remains were exhumed. The square was used as a dueling ground for a time, then as a site for public hangings until 1819. The “hanging elm” in the northwest corner remains. In 1826 the marsh was filled in and the brook diverted underground, where it still flows; a small sign on a fountain at the entrance to Two Fifth Avenue marks its course.

The magnificent marble arch by Stanford White, was completed in 1895 and replaced an earlier wooden arch that spanned lower Fifth Avenue to mark the centenary of George Washington's inauguration. A stairway is hidden in the right side of the arch. In 1916, a group of artists led by Marcel Duchamp and John Sloan broke in, climbed atop the arch, and declared the “free and independent republic of Washington Square, the state of New Bohemia.”

Across the street is “the Row.” Now part of NYU, this block was once home to New York's most prominent families. The Delano family, writers Edith Wharton, Henry James and John dos Passos, and artist Edward Hopper all lived here. Number 8 was once the mayor's official home.

Today students, families and free spirits mingle and enjoy the park side by side. A few drug dealers frequent the park, but it is safe by day.

At the spot where Tenth and Stuyvesant streets now intersect, Peter Stuyvesant's country house once stood. His grandson, also named Peter, inherited most of the property and had it divided into streets in 1787. Among the prize sites of the St. Mark's Historic District are the St. Mark's-in-the-Bowery Church, the Stuyvesant-Fish house and the 1795 home of Nicholas Stuyvesant, both on Stuyvesant Street. Many other homes in the district were built between 1871 and 1890 and still have their original stoops, lintels and other architectural details.

Astor Place saw rioting in 1849. English actor William Macready, playing Hamlet at the Astor Place Opera House, criticized American actor Edwin Forrest. Forrest's fans revolted and there were 34 deaths.

Peter Cooper, the wealthy industrialist who built the first US steam locomotive, made the first steel rails and was a partner in the first transatlantic cable venture, had no formal schooling. In 1859 he founded New York's first free, non-sectarian coeducational college specializing in design, engineering, and architecture. Still free, the school inspires intense competition for places. The six-story building, renovated in 1973–4, was the first with a steel frame, made of Cooper's own rails. The Great Hall was inaugurated in 1859 by Mark Twain, and Lincoln delivered his "Right Makes Might" speech there in 1860. Cooper Union still sponsors a Public Forum.

When the building was threatened with demolition in 1965, Joseph Papp, founder of the New York Shakespeare Festival, which became The Public Theater, persuaded New York City to buy it as a home for the company. Renovation began in 1967, and much of the handsome interior was preserved during conversion into six theaters. Although much of the work shown is experimental, The Public Theater was the original home of hit musicals Hair and A Chorus Line and hosts the popular Shakespeare in the Park (in Central Park) every summer.

The Corinthian columns across these four buildings are all that remain of a once-magnificent row of nine Greek Revival town houses. They were completed in 1833 by developer Seth Geer and were known as "Geer's Folly" by skeptics who thought no one would live so far east. They were proved wrong when the houses were taken by such eminent citizens as John Jacob Astor and Cornelius Vanderbilt. Washington Irving, author of Rip Van Winkle and other classic American tales, lived here for a time, as did two English novelists, William Makepeace Thackeray and Charles Dickens. Five of the houses were lost when the John Wanamaker Department Store razed them in the early 20th century to make room for a garage. The remaining buildings are falling to ruin.

The original 19th-century iron stove in the kitchen of the Merchant's House Museum

This remarkable Greek Revival brick town house, improbably tucked away on an East Village block, is a time capsule of a vanished way of life. It still has both its original fixtures and its kitchen, and is filled with the actual furniture, ornaments, and utensils of the family that lived here for almost 100 years. Built in 1832, it was bought in 1835 by Seabury Tredwell, a wealthy merchant, and stayed in the family until Gertrude Tredwell, the last member, died in 1933. She had maintained her father's home just as he would have liked it, and a relative opened the house as a museum in 1936. The first-floor parlors are very grand, a sign of how well New York's merchant class lived in the 1800s.

James Renwick, Jr., the architect of St. Patrick's Cathedral, was only 23 when he designed this church, yet many consider it his finest achievement. Its delicate early Gothic lines have a grace befitting the church's name. The interior is just as beautiful, with Pre-Raphaelite stained glass and a handsome mosaic floor.

The church's peace and serenity were briefly shattered in 1863, when Phineas T. Barnum staged the wedding of midget General Tom Thumb here; the crowds turned the event into complete chaos.

The marble spire replaced a wooden steeple in 1888 amid fears that it might prove too heavy for the church — and it has since developed a distinct lean. The church is visible from afar, because it is on a bend on Broadway. Henry Brevoort forced the city to bend Broadway to divert it around his apple orchard.

This English-style park has the makings of a peaceful spot, but its past has more often been dominated by strife. It was the site of America's first organized labor demonstration in 1874, the main gathering place during the neighborhood's hippie era of the 1960s and, in 1991, an arena for violent riots when the police tried to evict homeless people who had taken over the grounds. The square also contains a poignant monument to the neighborhood's greatest tragedy. A small statue of a boy and a girl looking at a steamboat commemorates the deaths of over 1,000 local residents in the General Slocum steamer disaster. On June 15, 1904, the boat caught fire during a pleasure cruise on the East River. The boat was crowded with women and children from this then-German neighborhood. Many local men lost their entire families and moved away, leaving the area and its memories behind.

country's best architects, such as Calvert Vaux and Stanford White, and occupied by some of New York's most prominent citizens. Today, not far away, boutiques, trendy cafés, and high-rise apartments have taken over the stretch of lower Fifth Avenue just south of the famous Flatiron Building.

Street by Street: Gramercy Park

Gramercy Park and nearby Madison Square tell a tale of two cities. Madison Square is ringed by offices and traffic and is used mainly by those who work nearby, but the fine surrounding commercial architecture and statues make it well worth visiting. It was once the home of Stanford White's famous pleasure palace, the old Madison Square Garden, a place where revelers always thronged. Gramercy Park, however, retains the air of dignified tranquility it has become known for. Here, the residences and clubs remain, set around New York's last private park, for which only those who live on the square have a key.

Planned as the center of a fashionable residential district, this square became a popular entertainment center after the Civil War. It was bordered by the elegant Fifth Avenue Hotel, the Madison Square Theater, and Stanford White's Madison Square Garden. The torch-bearing arm of the Statue of Liberty was exhibited here in 1884.

The Shake Shack is a top lunchtime spot for neighborhood office workers, while the surrounding park makes for a leisurely stroll to admire the sculptures. The 1880 statue of Admiral David Farragut is by Augustus Saint-Gaudens, with a pedestal by Stanford White. Farragut was the hero of a Civil War sea battle; figures representing Courage and Loyalty are carved on the base. The statue of Roscoe Conkling commemorates a US senator who died during the great blizzard of 1888. This imposing building was designed in 1928 by Cass Gilbert of Woolworth Building fame. The interior is a masterpiece, adorned with enormous hanging lamps, bronze doors and paneling, and a grand staircase leading, of all places, to the subway station.

Other famous buildings have stood on this site. Barnum's

Hippodrome was here in 1874, then the first Madison Square Garden opened in 1879. A wide range of entertainments were put on, including the prizefights of heavyweight boxing hero John L. Sullivan in the 1880s. The next Madison Square Garden – Stanford White's legendary pleasure palace – opened on the same site in 1890. Lavish musical shows and social events were attended by New York's elite, who paid over $500 for a box at the prestigious annual horse show.

The building had street-level arcades and a tower modeled on the Giralda in Seville. A gold statue of the goddess Diana stood atop the tower. Her nudity was shocking, but far more scandalous was the decadent life and death of White himself. In 1906, while watching a revue in the roof garden, he was shot dead by millionaire Harry K. Thaw, the husband of White's former mistress, showgirl Evelyn Nesbit. The headline in the journal Vanity Fair summed up popular feeling: "Stanford White, Voluptuary and Pervert, Dies the Death of a Dog." The ensuing trial's revelations about decadent Broadway high society leave modern soap operas far behind.

The building is lit up at night, and is a familiar part of the evening skyline. It served as the company symbol “the light that never fails.”

A series of historical murals by N.C. Wyeth, the famed illustrator of such classics as Robin Hood, Treasure Island and Robinson Crusoe (and the father of painter Andrew Wyeth), once graced the walls of the cafeteria. The building now houses First-Boston Cr dit-Suisse.

Originally named the Fuller Building after the construction company that owned it, this building by Chicago architect Daniel Burnham was the tallest in the world when it was completed in 1902.

One of the first buildings to use a steel frame, it heralded the era of the skyscrapers.

It soon became known as the Flatiron for its unusual triangular shape, but some called it “Burnham’s folly,” predicting that the winds created by the building’s shape would knock it down. It has withstood the test of time, but the winds along 23rd Street did have one notable effect. In the building’s early days, they drew crowds of males hoping to get a peek at women’s ankles as their long skirts got blown about. Police officers had to keep people moving along, and their call, “23-skidoo” became slang for “scram.”

The stretch of Fifth Avenue to the south of the building, formerly rather run down, has come to life with chic shops such as Emporio Armani and Paul Smith, giving the area new cachet and a new name, “the Flatiron District.”

Built from 1849 to 1856, the Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration is a tranquil retreat. It has been known by its nickname since 1870 when Joseph Jefferson tried to arrange the funeral of fellow actor George Holland. The pastor at a nearby church refused to bury a person of so lowly a profession. Instead, he suggested "the little church around the corner." The name stuck and the church has had special ties with the theater ever since. Sarah Bernhardt attended services here.

The south transept window, by John La Farge, shows Edwin Booth playing Hamlet. Jefferson's cry of "God bless the little church around the corner" is commemorated in a window in the south aisle.

CHELSEA AND THE GARMENT DISTRICT

This was open farmland in 1750. By the 1830s it was a suburb, and in the 1870s, with the coming of the elevated railroads (see pp26-7), it had become commercial. Music halls and theaters lined 23rd Street. Fashion Row grew in the shadow of the El, with department stores serving middle-class New York. As fashion moved uptown, Chelsea

Statue of garment worker, drifted downhill. It became a warehouse district, until the EIs were removed and New Yorkers rediscovered its town houses. When Macy's arrived at Herald Square to the north, the retailing and garment districts grew around it, along with the flower district. Today Chelsea is filled with art galleries and antique shops and has a large gay community.

Street by Street: Herald Square

Herald Square is named for the New York Herald, which had its office here from 1894 to 1921. Today full of shoppers, the area was once one of the raunchiest parts of New York. During the 1880s and '90s, it was known as the Tenderloin District and was filled with dance halls and bordellos. When Macy's opened in 1901, the focus moved from flesh to fashion. New York's Garment District now fills the streets near Macy's around Seventh Avenue, also known as Fashion Avenue. To the east on Fifth Avenue is the Empire State Building, with the city's best eagle's-eye views from the observation deck.

Fashion Avenue is another name for the stretch of Seventh Avenue around 34th Street. This area is the heart of New York's garment industry. The streets are full of men pushing racks of clothes.

This church is best known for its former pastor Norman Vincent Peale, who wrote The Power of Positive Thinking.

Another positive thinker, future US president Richard M. Nixon, attended services here when he was a lawyer in his pre-White House days.

The church was built in 1854 using the marble blocks that give it its name. Fifth Avenue was then no more than a dusty country road, and the cast-iron fence was there to keep livestock out.

The original white and gold interior walls were replaced with a stenciled gold fleur-de-lis design on a soft rust background. Two stained-glass Tiffany windows, depicting Old Testament scenes, were placed in the south wall in 1893.

Named after the New York Herald, which occupied a fine arcaded, Italianate Stanford White building here from 1893 to 1921, the square was the hub of the rowdy Tenderloin district in the 1870s and 1880s. Theaters, such as the Manhattan Opera House, dance halls, hotels, and restaurants kept the area humming with life until reformers clamped down on sleaze in the 1890s. The ornamental Bennett clock, named for James Gordon Bennett Jr., publisher of the Herald, is now all that is left of the Herald Building.

The Opera House was razed in 1901 to make way for Macy's and, soon after, other department stores followed, making Herald Square a mecca for shoppers. One such store was the now-defunct Gimbel Brothers Department Store, once arch rival to Macy's. (The rivalry was affectionately portrayed in the New York Christmas movie A Miracle on 34th Street.) In 1988 the store was converted into a vertical mall with a glittery neon front. Most of the old names have gone, but Herald Square is still a key shopping district packed with chain stores.

The “world’s largest store” covers a square block, and the merchandise inside covers just about any item you could imagine in every price range.

Macy's was founded by a former whaler named Rowland Hussey Macy, who opened a small store on West 14th Street in 1857. The store's red star logo came from Macy's tattoo, a souvenir of his sailing days.

By the time Macy died in 1877, his little store had grown to a row of 11 buildings. It was to expand further under two brothers, Isidor and Nathan Straus, who had operated Macy's china and glassware department. By 1902 Macy's had outgrown its 14th Street premises, and the firm acquired its present site. The eastern facade has a modern entrance but still bears the bay windows and Corinthian pillars of the 1902 design. The 34th Street facade still has its original caryatids guarding the entrance, along with the clock, canopy, and lettering. Inside, many of the original wooden escalators are still in good working order.

The sea featured again in Macy's history in 1912 – a plaque by the main entrance commemorates the death of Isidor and his wife in the sinking of the Titanic.

Macy's sponsors New York's renowned Thanksgiving Day parade and the Fourth of July fireworks. The store's popular Spring Flower Show draws thousands of visitors.

There's only one good thing to be said for the razing of the extraordinarily lovely McKim, Mead & White Pennsylvania Station building in favor of this undistinguished 1968 complex: it so enraged city preservationists that they formed an alliance to ensure that such a thing would never be allowed to happen again.

Madison Square Garden itself, which sits atop underground Pennsylvania Station, is a cylinder of precast concrete, functional enough as a 20,000-seat, centrally located home for the famous

New York Knickerbockers (the Knicks) basketball, Liberty (women's basketball), and New York Rangers hockey teams. It has a packed calendar of other events: rock concerts, championship tennis and boxing, outrageously staged wrestling, the Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey Circus, an antiques show, a dog show and more. There is also a 5,600-seat theater.

Despite renovation work, Madison Square Garden lacks the panache of its earlier location, which combined a stunning Stanford White building with extravagant entertainment (see p126).

Designed by McKim, Mead & White in 1913, in a style to complement their 1910 Pennsylvania Station across the street, the General Post Office is a perfect example of a public building of the Beaux Arts period. The imposing, two-block-long structure has a broad staircase leading to a facade with 20 Corinthian columns and a pavilion at each end. The 280-ft (85-m) inscription across it is based on a description of the Persian Empire's postal service, from around 520 BC: "Neither snow nor rain nor heat nor gloom of night stays these couriers from the swift completion of their appointed rounds."

Empire State Building

The Empire State Building is the tallest skyscraper in New York. Construction began in March 1930, not long after the Wall Street Crash, and by the time it opened in 1931, space was so difficult to rent that it was nicknamed “the Empty State Building.” Only the immediate popularity of the observatories saved the building from bankruptcy – to date, they have attracted more than 120 million visitors – and the building soon became a symbol of the city the world over.

Symbols of the modern age are depicted on these bronze Art Deco medallions placed throughout the lobby.

CONSTRUCTION

The building was designed for ease and speed of construction. Everything possible was prefabricated and slotted into place at a rate of about four stories per week.

The framework is made from 60,000 tons of steel and was built in 23 weeks.

Aluminum panels were used instead of stone around the 6,500 windows. The steel trim masks rough edges on the facing.

Ten million bricks were used to line the whole building.

Sandwich space between the floors houses the wiring, pipes and cables.

Over 200 steel and concrete piles support the 365,000-ton building.

ENCOUNTERS IN THE SKY

The Empire State Building has been seen in many films. However, the finale from the 1933 classic King Kong is easily its most famous guest appearance, as the giant ape straddles the spire to do battle with army aircraft. In 1945 a real bomber flew too low over Manhattan in fog and struck the building just above the 78th floor. The luckiest escape was that of a young elevator operator whose cabin plunged 79 floors. The emergency brakes saved her life.

Strikingly modernistic in appearance, this glass building facing the Hudson, which opened in 1986, was designed by I.M. Pei to give New York the space for large-scale expositions. Founded in 1817, this block-square campus accepts 150 students at a time to train for the priesthood. Clement Clarke Moore, a professor of Biblical Learning, donated the site, officially known as Chelsea Square. Although he is better-known as the author of the poem "A Visit from St. Nicholas" than as an urban planner, Clement Clarke Moore owned an estate here and divided it into lots in the 1830s, creating handsome rows of town houses. Restoration has since rescued many of the original buildings here.

Of these, the finest are seven houses known as Cushman Row, running from 406–418 West 20th Street, which were built from 1839–40 for Don Alonzo Cushman. He was a merchant who also founded the Greenwich Savings Bank. He joined Moore and James N. Wells in the development of Chelsea. Rich in detail and intricate ironwork, Cushman Row is ranked with Washington Square North as supreme examples of Greek Revival architecture.

Look for cast-iron wreaths around attic windows and the pineapples on the newel posts of two of the houses – old symbols of hospitality.

Farther along West 20th Street, from 446–450, there are fine examples of the Italianate style for which Chelsea is also renowned.

Though the store is long gone, the 1876 cast-iron columned and pilastered facade clearly shows the scale and grandeur of the emporiums that once lined Sixth Avenue from 18th to 23rd streets, the area known as Fashion Row. O'Neill, whose sign can still be seen on the facade, was a showman and super-salesman whose trademark was a fleet of shiny delivery wagons. His customers came in droves via the conveniently close Sixth Avenue El. They were not the "carriage trade" enjoyed by Ladies' Mile (see p127), but their numbers allowed the Row to flourish until the turn of the century, when the retailing district continued its move uptown. Now mostly restored, the buildings have turned into superstores and bargain places like Filene's Basement.

THEATER DISTRICT

It was the move of the Metropolitan Opera House to Broadway at 40th Street in 1883 that first drew lavish theaters and restaurants to this area. In the 1920s, movie palaces added the glamour of neon to Broadway, the signs getting bigger and brighter until eventually the street became known as the “Great White Way.” After World War II,

Street by Street: Times Square

Named for the 25-story New York Times Tower, which opened in 1906, Times Square has been at the heart of the city's theater district since 1899, when Oscar Hammerstein built the Victoria and Republic theaters. Since the 1920s, the glowing neon of theater billboards has combined with the Times' illuminated newswire and other advertising to create a spectacular lightshow. After a period of decline starting in the 1930s, which saw sex shows taking over many of the grand theatres, rejuvenation of the district began in the 1990s. Old-style Broadway glamour again rubs shoulders with modern entertainment in this enticing part of the city.

When the New York City Landmarks Preservation Commission unanimously voted to declare Rockefeller Center a landmark in 1985, they rightly called it “the heart of New York . . . a great unifying presence in the chaotic core of midtown Manhattan.”

It is the largest privately owned complex of its kind. The Art Deco design was by a team of top architects headed by Raymond Hood. Works by 30 artists can be found in foyers, on facades, and in the gardens. The site, once a botanic garden owned by Columbia University, was leased in 1928 by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., as an ideal central home for a new opera house. When the 1929 Depression scuttled these plans, Rockefeller, stuck with a long lease, went ahead with his own development. The 14 buildings erected between 1931 and 1940 provided jobs for as many as 225,000 people during the Depression; by 1973 there were 19 buildings.

In December 1932, Radio City Music Hall opened within the complex. It still hosts its famous Christmas and Easter shows here. Later, NBC opened its TV studios here. Rockefeller Plaza is home to a well-known ice-skating rink in winter; it is also the site of a famous Christmas tree.

Wisdom by Lee Lawrie, on the GE Building

The Top of the Rock, an observatory on the 67th–70th floors of the center, offers a dizzying 360° panoramic view of the city.

No other hotel captures the city's formidable literary history quite like the Algonquin Hotel. For more than a century it has played host to home-grown talent and international luminaries. In the 1920s, the Rose Room was home to America's best-known luncheon club, the Round Table, with literary lights such as Alexander Woollcott, Franklin P. Adams, Dorothy Parker, Robert Benchley, and Harold Ross. All were associated with the New Yorker (Ross was the founding editor), whose 25 West 43rd Street headquarters had a back door opening into the hotel.

Renovations have preserved the old-fashioned, civilized feel of the Rose Room, as well as the cozy, paneled lobby where publishing types and theater-goers still like to gather for drinks, settling into comfortable armchairs and ringing a brass bell in order to summon the waiters.

In 1853, with the New York Public Library site still occupied by Croton Reservoir, Bryant Park (then Reservoir Park) housed a dazzling Crystal Palace, built for the World's Fair of that year (see p25).

In the 1960s the park was a hangout for drug dealers and other undesirables. In 1989 the city renovated the park, reclaiming it for workers and visitors to relax in. In spring and fall, world-famous fashion shows take place here; in the summer, classic movies are screened.

Over seven million books lie in storage stacks beneath the park.

The American Radiator building (now the Bryant Park Hotel) was the first major New York work by Raymond Hood and John Howells, who went on to design the Daily News Building (see p155), the McGraw-Hill building, and Rockefeller Center. The 1924 structure is reminiscent of one of Hood's best-known Gothic buildings, Chicago's Tribune Tower. Here, the design is sleeker, giving the building the illusion of being taller than its actual 23 stories. The black brick facade is set off by gold terracotta trim, evoking images of flaming coals: a comparison that would have suited its original owners well, since they made heating equipment. The building is now a luxury hotel (see p288) across the street from Bryant Park and boasts the New York outpost of trendy LA eatery Koi.

Doorway leading to New York Public Library's Main Reading Room

In 1897 the coveted job of designing New York's main public library was awarded to architects Carrère & Hastings. The library's first director envisaged a light, quiet, airy place for study, where millions of books could be stored and yet be available to readers as promptly as possible. In the hands of Carrère & Hastings, his vision came true, in what is considered the epitome of New York's Beaux Arts period.

Built on the site of the former Croton Reservoir (see p24), it opened in 1911 to immediate acclaim, despite having cost the city $9 million.

One of the library's two stone lions, named Patience and Fortitude by Mayor LaGuardia

The vast, paneled Main Reading Room stretches two full blocks and is suffused with daylight from the two interior courtyards. Below it are 88 miles (140 km) of shelves, holding over seven million volumes. A staff of over 100 and a computerized dumb-waiter can supply any book within 10 minutes.

The Periodicals Room holds 10,000 current periodicals from 128 countries. On its walls are murals by Richard Haas, honoring New York's great publishing houses. The original library combined the collections of John Jacob Astor and James Lenox. Its collections today range from Thomas Jefferson's handwritten copy of the Declaration of Independence to T.S. Eliot's typed copy of "The Waste Land." More than 1,000 queries

This library is the hub of a network of 82 branches, with nearly seven million users. Some branches are very well known, such as the New York Public Library for the Performing Arts at the Lincoln Center (see p212) and the Schomburg Center in Harlem (see p229).

The 1990s saw a transformation in Times Square, reversing a decline that began during the Depression. The square is now a safe and vibrant place where Broadway traditions comfortably coexist with modern innovations.

Although the New York Times has moved on from its original headquarters at the south end of the square, the glistening ball (now of Waterford crystal) still drops at midnight on New Year's Eve, as it has since the building opened with fanfare and fireworks in 1906. New buildings, such as the Bertelsmann and the fashionably minimalist Condé Nast offices, sit comfortably alongside the classic Broadway theaters.

Broadway's fortunes have also revived. Many theaters have been renovated and are again housing new productions; theatergoers through the area's bars and restaurants each evening.

One of the newer landmarks is the 57-story skyscraper designed by Miami architects Arquitectonica, that tops the E Walk entertainment and retail complex at 42nd Street and Eighth Avenue (see p142). Other attractions include an outpost of Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum at 42nd Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues; ESPN Zone, a huge sports bar and video game complex at 1472 Broadway and 42nd Street; and Toys 'R' Us at 1514 Broadway.

This was the most opulent theater in the United States when it opened in 1903, and the first to have an Art Nouveau interior. It was owned for a time by Florenz Ziegfeld, who produced his famous Follies revue here between 1914 and 1918 – with Broadway's first $5 ticket price. He remodeled the roof garden into another theater, the Aerial Gardens. This is one of the fine early theaters on 42nd Street that fell on hard times. With the rehabilitation of Times Square its fortunes rose again and it is once more in Show Business.

This 1931 design by Raymond Hood was the only New York building selected for the influential International Style survey of 1932 (see p43). Its unusual design gives it a stepped profile seen from east and west, but a slab effect viewed from the north or south. The exterior's horizontal bands of blue-green terracotta have earned it the nickname "jolly green giant." Step inside to see the classic Art Deco lobby of opaque glass and stainless steel.

The fabulous ground-floor movie theater where bobbysoxers stood in line in the 1940s to hear Frank Sinatra perform is gone, but there's still a theatrical feel to the massive building designed by Rapp & Rapp in 1927. On each side 14 symmetrical setbacks rise to an Art Deco crown – a tower, clock, and globe. In the heyday of the "Great White Way," the tower was lit, with an observation deck at the top. The Hard Rock Cafe is now here, along with a retail store and a concert area.

The playhouses on the streets west of Broadway are rich in theater lore – and in notable architecture. Two classic theaters built in 1913 are the Booth (222 West 45th Street), named after actor Edwin Booth, and the Shubert (225 West 44th), after theater baron Sam S. Shubert. They form the west wall of Shubert Alley, where aspiring actors lined up, hoping for a casting in a Shubert play.

A Chorus Line ran at the Shubert until 1990, for a record 6,137 performances; Katharine Hepburn starred earlier in The Philadelphia Story. Across from the 44th Street end of the alley is the St. James, where Rodgers and Hammerstein made their debut with Oklahoma! in 1941, followed by The King and I. Nearby is Sardi's, the restaurant where actors waited for opening-night reviews. Irving Berlin staged The Music Box Revue opposite the other end of the alley in 1921. His Music Box Theater has since housed many famous shows.

Financed by millionaire philanthropist Andrew Carnegie, New York's first great concert hall opened in 1891. The terracotta and brick Renaissance-style building has among the best acoustics in the world. On opening night, Tchaikovsky was a guest conductor and New York's finest families attended. For many years Carnegie Hall was home to the New York Philharmonic, under conductors such as Arturo Toscanini, Bruno Walter, and Leonard Bernstein. Playing Carnegie Hall quickly became an international symbol of success for both classical and popular musicians.

In the 1950s, a campaign by violinist Isaac Stern saved the site from redevelopment, and in 1964 it was made a national landmark. Renovation in 1986 brought the bronze balconies and the ornamental plaster back to their original splendor. In 1991, a museum opened next to the first-tier level, telling the story of the first 100 years of "The House that Music Built." In 2003, the Judy and Arthur Zankel Hall re-established the lower level as a performance venue.

Top orchestras and performers from around the world still fill Carnegie Hall, and the corridors are lined with memorabilia of artists who have performed here.

LOWER MIDTOWN

From Beaux Arts to Art Deco, this section of midtown boasts some fine architecture. Quiet, residential Murray Hill was named for a country estate that once occupied the site. By the turn of the century, it was home to many of New York's first families, including the financier J.P. Morgan, whose library, now a museum, reveals the grandeur of the age. The commercial pace quickens at 42nd Street, near Grand Central Terminal, where tall office buildings line the streets. However, few of the newer buildings have equaled the Beaux Arts Terminal itself or such Art Deco beauties as the Chrysler Building.

Once, the sculptures atop the Grand Central Terminal stood out against the sky. Then this colossus, formerly called the Pan Am Building and designed by Walter Gropius, Emery Roth and Sons, and Pietro Belluschi, rose up in 1963 to block the Park Avenue view. It dwarfed the terminal and aroused universal dislike. At the time it was the largest commercial building in the world, and the dismay over its scale helped thwart a later plan to build a tower over the terminal itself.

It is ironic that the New York skies were blocked by Pan Am, a company that had opened up the skies as a means of travel for millions of people. When the company began in 1927, Charles Lindbergh, fresh from his solo transatlantic flight, was one of their pilots and an adviser on new routes. By 1936, Pan Am managed to introduce the first trans-Pacific passenger route, and in 1947 they introduced the first round-the-world route.

The building's famous rooftop heliport was abandoned in 1977 after a freak accident showered debris on to the surrounding streets. Now Pan Am itself has gone, too, and in 1981 the entire building was sold to the Metropolitan Life organization.

Many consider this 1923 building the best work of the best bank architects of the 1920s. York & Sawyer chose the style of a Romanesque basilica for the uptown offices of the venerable Bowery Savings Bank (now Home Savings of America). An arched entry leads into the vast banking room, with a high beamed ceiling, marble mosaic floors, and marble columns that support the stone arches that soar overhead.

Between the columns are unpolished mosaic panels of marble from France and Italy. The rich detailing includes symbolic animal motifs, such as a squirrel representing thrift and a lion for power.

Once the headquarters of Irwin S. Chanin, one of New York's leading real estate developers, the 56-story tower was the first skyscraper in the Grand Central area, a harbinger of things to come. It was designed by Sloan & Robertson in 1929 and is one of the best examples of the Art Deco period. A wide bronze band, patterned with birds and fish, runs the full length of the facade; the terracotta base is decorated with a luxuriant tangle of stylized leaves and flowers. Inside, Radio City's sculptor René Chambellan worked on the reliefs and the bronze grills, elevator doors, mailboxes, clocks, and pattern of waves in the floor. The vestibule reliefs chart the career of Chanin, who was a self-made man.

Stainless-steel gargoyle on the Chrysler Building

Walter P. Chrysler began his career in a Union Pacific Railroad machine shop, but his passion for the motor car helped him rise swiftly to the top of the new industry, to found, in 1925, the corporation bearing his name. His wish for a headquarters in New York that symbolized his company led to a building that will always be linked with the golden age of motoring. Following Chrysler's wishes, the stainless-steel Art Deco spire resembles a car radiator grill; the building's series of stepped setbacks are emblazoned with winged radiator caps, wheels and stylized automobiles; and there are gargoyles modeled on hood ornaments from the 1929 Chrysler Plymouth.

It stands at 1,046ft (320 m) but it lost the title of tallest building in the world to the Empire State Building a few months after its completion in 1930. William Van Alen's 77-story Chrysler Building and its shining crown are still among the city's best-known and most-loved landmarks.

The crowning spire was kept a secret until the last moment, when, having been built in the fire shaft, it was raised into position through the roof, ensuring that the building would be higher than the Bank of Manhattan, then just completed downtown by Van Alen's great rival, H. Craig Severance.

Van Alen was poorly rewarded for his labors.

Chrysler accused him of accepting bribes from contractors and refused to pay him. Van Alen's career never recovered from the slur.

The stunning lobby, once used as a showroom for Chrysler cars, was perfectly restored in 1978. It is lavishly decorated with patterned marbles and granite from around the world and has chromed steel trim. A vast painted ceiling by Edward Trumbull shows transportation scenes of the late 1920s.

Although the Chrysler Corporation never occupied the building as their headquarters, their name remains, as firm a fixture as the gargoyles.

The Daily News was founded in 1919, and by 1925 it was a million-seller. It was known, rather scathingly, as “the servant girl’s bible,” for its concentration on scandals, celebrities, and murders, its readable style and heavy use of illustration. Over the years it has stuck to what it does best, and the formula paid off handsomely. It revealed stories such as the romance of Edward VIII and Mrs. Simpson, and has become renowned for its punchy headlines. Its circulation figures are still among the highest in the United States.

Its headquarters, designed by Raymond Hood in 1930, has rows of brown and black brick alternating with windows to create a vertical striped effect. Hood’s lobby is familiar to many as that of the Daily Planet in the 1980s Superman movies. It includes the world’s largest interior globe, and bronze lines on the floor indicate the direction of world cities and the position of the planets. At night, the intricate detail over the front entrance of the building is lit from within by neon. The newspaper’s offices are now on West 33rd Street, but this building has been designated as a national historic landmark.

In 1871 Cornelius Vanderbilt opened a railway station on 42nd Street. Although often revamped, it was never large enough and was finally demolished. The present station opened in 1913. This Beaux Arts gem has been a gateway to and symbol of the city ever since. Its glory is the soaring main concourse and the way it separates pedestrian and train traffic. The building has a steel frame covered with plaster and marble. Reed & Stern were in charge of the logistical planning; Warren & Wetmore for the overall design. The restoration by architects Beyer Blinder Belle is awesome.

Dating from 1925–8, this early urban renewal effort by the Fred F. French Company was designed as a middle-class city within the city. Rents were modest, thanks to the “large-scale production.” There are 12 buildings containing apartments, a hotel, shops, restaurants, a post office, and two small private parks, all built in the Tudor Gothic style.

In the mid-19th century the area was the haunt of gangs and criminals and was known as Corcoran’s Roost, after Paddy Corcoran, the leader of the notorious “Rag Gang.” The East River shore was lined with glue factories, slaughterhouses, breweries, and a gasworks. Some were still there when Tudor City was planned, so its buildings have only a few outward-facing windows from which residents might enjoy what is now a great view of the river.

Built by Warren & Wetmore in 1929, the Helmsley Building was originally the headquarters of the New York Central Railroad Company. Its namesake, the late Harry Helmsley, was a billionaire who began his career as a New York office boy for $12 per week. His wife Leona, who passed away in 2007, was a prominent feature in all the advertisements for their hotel chain – until her imprisonment in 1989 for tax evasion on a grand scale. Many observers believe that the extravagant glitter of the building’s facade is due to Leona’s overblown taste in decor.

The headquarters of the Japan Society, founded in 1907 to foster understanding and cultural exchange between Japan and the US, was built with the help of John D. Rockefeller III, who underwrote costs of some $4.3 million. The striking black building with its delicate sun grilles was designed by Tokyo architects Junzo Yoshimura and George Shimamoto in 1971. It includes an auditorium, a language center, a research library, a museum gallery, and traditional Oriental gardens.

Changing exhibits include a variety of Japanese arts, from swords to kimonos to scrolls. The society offers programs of Japanese performing arts, lectures, language classes, and many business workshops for American and Japanese executives and managers.

other work included the Chanin Building (see p154). They handsomely blended Near Eastern, ancient Egyptian and Greek styles with early Art Deco forms.

Multicolored faïence ornaments decorate the upper facade, and the water tower is hidden in a false top level of the building. Its disguise is an elaborate one, with reliefs showing a rising sun flanked by griffins and bees and symbols of virtues such as integrity and industry. Winged Assyrian beasts ride on a bronze frieze over the entrance. These exotic themes continue into the vaulted lobby, with its elaborate polychrome ceiling decoration and 25 gilt-bronze doors.

This was the first building project to employ members of the Native Canadian Caughnawaga tribe as construction workers. They did not fear heights and soon became highly sought-after as scaffolders for many of the city's most famous skyscrapers.

Flag of the United Nations

Founded in 1945 with 51 members, the United Nations now numbers 189 nations. Its aims are to preserve world peace, to promote self-determination, and to aid economic and social well-being around the globe. New York was chosen as the UN headquarters, and John D. Rockefeller, Jr. donated $8.5 million for the purchase of the site. The chief architect was American Wallace Harrison, who worked with an international Board of Design Consultants. The 18-acre (7-ha) site is an international zone, with its own stamps and post office. In 2006, the UN's General Assembly approved a $1.6-billion renovation of the complex that will take several years to complete; visitors should phone ahead to check access.

The Conference Building houses meeting rooms for the Security Council, the Trusteeship Council and the Economic and Social Council.

The Work of the United Nations

The goals of the United Nations are pursued by three UN councils and a General Assembly comprising all of its member nations. The Secretariat carries out the administrative work of the organization. Guided tours allow visitors to see the Security Council Chamber. Often there is a chance to briefly observe a meeting.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY

The General Assembly is the governing body of the UN and has regular sessions each year from mid-September to mid-December. Special sessions are also held when the Security Council or a majority of members request one. All member states are represented with an equal vote, regardless of size. The General Assembly may discuss any international problem raised by the members or by other UN bodies. Although it cannot enact laws, recommendations strongly influence world opinion; these require a two-thirds majority vote.

Lots are drawn before each session to determine the seating in the chamber for the delegations. All 1,898 seats in the chamber are equipped with earphones that offer simultaneous translations in several languages. The General Assembly also appoints the Secretary General (on the recommendation of the Security Council), approves the UN budgets and elects the non-permanent members of the Councils. Together with the Security Council, it also appoints the judges of the International Court of Justice, based in the Netherlands.

SECURITY COUNCIL

The most powerful part of the UN is the Security Council. It strives to achieve international peace and security and intervenes in crises such as the fighting in Iraq and Afghanistan. It is the only body whose decisions member states are obliged to obey as well as the only one in continuous session.

Mural symbolizing peace and freedom by Per Krohg (Norway)

Five of its members – China, France, the Russian Federation, the United Kingdom, and the United States – are permanent. The other nations are elected by the General Assembly to serve two-year terms.

When international conflicts arise, the Council first tries to seek agreement by mediation. If fighting breaks out, it may issue cease-fire orders and impose military or economic sanctions. It could also decide to send UN peace-keeping missions into troubled areas to separate opposing factions until issues can be resolved through diplomatic channels.

Military intervention is the Council's last resort. UN forces may be deployed, and peace-keeping forces are resident in such places as Cyprus and the Middle East.

TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL

The smallest of the councils, this is the only UN body whose workload is decreasing. The council was established in 1945 with the goal of fostering peaceful independence for non-self-governing territories or colonies. Since then, more than 80 colonies have gained self-rule, and the number of people living in dependent territories has been reduced from 750 million to about 3 million. The Trusteeship Council currently consists of the five permanent members of the Security Council.

Trusteeship Council Chamber

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

The 54 members of this Council work to improve the standard of living and social welfare around the world, goals that consume 80% of the UN's resources. It makes recommendations to the General Assembly, to each member nation and to the UN's specialized agencies. The Council is assisted by commissions dealing with regional economic problems, human rights abuses, population, narcotics, and women's rights. It also works with the International Labor Organization, the World Health Organization, UNICEF, and other global welfare organizations.

SECRETARIAT

An international staff of 16,000 works for the Secretariat to carry out the day-to-day work of the United Nations. The Secretariat is headed by the Secretary General, who plays a key role as a spokesperson in the organization's peace-keeping efforts. The Secretary

Zanetti mural (Dominican Republic) in the Conference Building depicting the struggle for peace

General is appointed by the General Assembly for a five-year term. On January 1, 2007, Ban Ki-moon of South Korea became the latest Secretary General.

IMPORTANT EVENTS IN UN HISTORY

Soviet premier Krushchev speaking to the General Assembly in 1960

The UN depends on voluntary compliance and military support from its members to keep the peace in the event of disputes. In 1948, the UN declared South Korea the legitimate government of Korea; two years later, it played a major role in defending South Korea against North Korea. In 1949, the UN helped negotiate a cease-fire between Indonesia and the Netherlands and set up a conference that led to the Dutch granting independence to Indonesia.

In 1964 a UN military force was sent to Cyprus to keep peace between the Greeks and Turks, and still remains. Persistent issues in the Middle East have kept UN forces in the area since 1974, the year that China – long refused membership in favor of Taiwan – gained UN membership. In the 1990s, the UN was involved in the break-up of Yugoslavia, and more recently in the conflicts in Afghanistan and Iraq. A 2004 UN mission to Congo was plagued by accusations of sexual abuse by UN peace-keepers. In 2006–7 there were arrests over kickbacks in the UN oil-for-food program to Iraq.

At any given time at least half a dozen missions are active somewhere in the world. The UN was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1988 and 2001.

WORKS OF ART AT THE UN

The UN Building has acquired numerous works of art and reproductions by major artists; many have been gifts from member nations. Most of them have either a peace or international friendship theme. The legend on Norman Rockwell's The Golden Rule reads "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you." Marc Chagall designed a large stained-glass window as a memorial to former Secretary General Dag Hammarskjöld, who was accidentally killed while on a peace mission in 1961. There is a Henry Moore sculpture in the grounds (limited access) and many other sculptures and paintings by the artists of many nations.

Street by Street: Upper Midtown

The luxury stores that are synonymous with Fifth Avenue first blossomed as society moved on uptown. In 1917, Cartier's acquired the mansion of banker Morton F. Plant in exchange for a string of pearls, setting the style for other retailers to follow. But this stretch of midtown is not simply for shoppers. There are three distinctive museums and an equally diverse assembly of architectural styles to enjoy, too.

Fifth Avenue ①

Map 12 F3–F4. M 5th Ave–53rd St, 5th Ave–59th St.

In 1883, when William Henry Vanderbilt built his mansion at Fifth Avenue and 51st Street, he started a trend that resulted in palatial residences stretching as far as Central Park, built for top families such as the Astors, Belmonts, and Goulds. Only a few remain to attest to the grandeur of the era.

One of these is the Cartier store at 651 Fifth Avenue, once the home of Morton F. Plant, millionaire and commodore of the New York Yacht Club. As retailers swept north up the avenue – a trend that began in 1906 – society gradually moved uptown. In 1917, Plant moved to a mansion at 86th Street, and legend has it that he traded his old home to Pierre Cartier for a perfectly matched string of pearls.

Fifth Avenue has been synonymous with luxury goods ever since. From Cartier at 52nd Street to Henri Bendel at 56th and Tiffany and Bergdorf Goodman at 57th, you will find many brands symbolizing wealth and social standing today, just as Astor and Vanderbilt did over a century ago.

This glittering, exorbitantly expensive apartment and office tower rises above a lavish six-story atrium. Designed in 1983 by Der Scutt of Swanke, Hayden, Connell & Partners, the public space has pink marble, mirrors and glitz throughout. There is an impressive 80-ft (24-m) high indoor waterfall, while the exterior is lined with hanging gardens. The tower is a flamboyant monument to affluence by the developer Donald Trump, a symbol of the excesses and grandeur of the 1980s (see p33).

Next door, 727 Fifth Avenue is a complete contrast: the location of Tiffany & Co., the prestigious jewelers founded in 1837. Famed for exquisite window displays, the store uses understated but elegant blue packaging as a status symbol in itself. Tiffany's was immortalized by Truman Capote in his 1958 novel Breakfast at Tiffany's.

The Garden Plaza, with its bamboo trees, is open to the public and has been redubbed “The Sculpture Garden.” Eight new works, which change four times a year, are on view at any one time. Near the atrium is a work by American sculptor Michael Heizer, entitled Levitated Mass. Inside a low, stainless-steel tank is a huge slab of granite that seems to float on air.

This is the fourth home for this parish and the second on this site. Today's church was built between 1909 and 1914 to replace an earlier structure destroyed in a fire in 1905. The previous building had provided the setting for many of the glittering high-society weddings of the late 19th century. The most lavish of these was in 1895 when heiress Consuelo Vanderbilt married the English Duke of Marlborough.

The limestone building, in French-Gothic style, has a single asymmetrical tower and an off-center nave, novel solutions to the architectural problems posed by its corner position. The richly carved, shimmering white screens behind the altar were designed by architect Bertram Goodhue and sculptor Lee Lawrie. Carvings in the choir stalls, dating from the 1920s, include modern inventions such as the telephone, Presidents Roosevelt and Wilson, and Lee Lawrie himself.

Exploring the Collection

The Museum of Modern Art has approximately 150,000 works of art ranging from Post-Impressionist classics to an unrivaled collection of modern and contemporary art, from fine examples of design to early masterpieces of photography and film.

1880S TO 1940S PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

The Persistence of Memory by the Surrealist Salvador Dalí (1931)

Paul Cézanne's monumental The Bather and Vincent Van Gogh's Portrait of the Postman Joseph Roulin are two of the seminal works in the museum's collection of late 19th-century painting. Both Fauvism and Expressionism are well represented with works by Matisse, Derain, Kirchner, and others, while Pablo Picasso's Les Femmes d'Alger (O. J. R. Version O) marks a transition to a new style of painting.

The collection also has an unparalleled number of Cubist paintings, providing an overview of a movement that radically challenged our perception of the world. Among the vast range are Picasso's Girl with a Mandolin, Georges Braque's Man with a Guitar and Soda, and Guitar and Flowers by Juan Gris. Works by the Futurists, who brought color and movement to Cubism to depict the dynamic modern world, include Dynamism of a Soccer Player by Umberto Boccioni, plus works by Balla, Carrà, and Villon. The geometric abstract art of the Constructivists is included in a strong representation of Lissitzky, Malevich, and Rodchenko: De Stijl's influence is seen in paintings by Piet Mondrian, such as Broadway Boogie Woogie. There is a large body of work by Matisse, such as Dance I and The Red Studio. Dalí, Miró, and Ernst feature among the bizarre, strangely beautiful Surrealist works.

POSTWAR PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

The extensive collection of postwar art includes works by Bacon and Dubuffet, and has a particularly strong representation of American artists. The collection of Abstract Expressionist art, for example, includes Jackson Pollock's One (Number 31, 1950), Willem de Kooning's Women, I, Arshile Gorky's Agony, and Red, Brown,

The Bather, an oil painting by French Impressionist artist Paul Cézanne and Black by Mark Rothko. Other notable works include Jasper Johns' Flag, Robert Rauschenberg's First Landing Jump, composed of urban refuse, and Bed, which consists of bed linen. The Pop Art collection includes Roy Lichtenstein's Girl with Ball and Drowning Girl, Andy Warhol's famous Gold Marilyn Monroe, and Claes Oldenburg's Giant Soft Fan.

Works after about 1965 include pieces by Judd, Flavin, Serra, and Beuys, among many others.

DRAWINGS AND OTHER WORKS ON PAPER

Man with a Hat by Pablo Picasso (1912), a collage with charcoal

More than 7,000 artworks ranging in size from tiny preparatory pieces to large mural-sized works are among MoMA's holdings. Many drawings use conventional materials, such as pencil, charcoal, pen and ink, pastel, and watercolor. However, there are also collages and mixed-media works composed of paper ephemera, natural products, and man-made goods.

The collection provides an overview of Modernism, from the late 19th century to the present day, including movements such as Cubism, Dadaism, and Surrealism. Drawings by famous and well-established artists, such as Picasso, Miró, and Johns, are exhibited alongside a growing number of works by talented emerging artists.

PRINTS AND ILLUSTRATED BOOKS

American Indian Theme II by Roy Lichtenstein (1980)

All significant art movements from the 1880s onward are represented in this extensive collection, which provides a fascinating overview of printed art. With more than 50,000 items in the department's holdings, there are wide-ranging examples of historical and contemporary printmaking. Works created in such traditional media as etchings, lithographic prints, screen-prints, and woodcuts are displayed alongside pieces created using more experimental techniques.

There are some particularly fine examples of works by Andy Warhol, who is widely considered to be the most important print-maker of the 20th century. There are also many illustrations and prints by other artists including Redon, Munch, Matisse, Dubuffet, Johns, Lichtenstein, Freud, and Picasso.

PHOTOGRAPHY

The photography collection begins with the invention of the medium around 1840. It includes pictures by fine artists, journalists, scientists, and entrepreneurs, as well as amateur photographers.

Among the highlights of the collection are some of the best-known works by American and European photographers including Atget, Stieglitz, Lange, Arbus, Steichen, Cartier-Bresson, and Kertesz. There is also a range of contemporary practitioners,

FILM DEPARTMENT

With a collection of over 22,000 films and four million stills, the collection can offer a wide range of programs, including retrospectives of individual directors and actors, films in specific genres and experimental work, as well as a broad range of other exhibitions. Film conservation is a key part of the department's work. Today's top directors are donating copies of their films to help fund this expensive but vital work.

The photographers have covered an extensive variety of subject matter in both colour and black and white—delicate landscapes, scenes of urban desolation, abstract imagery, and stylish portraiture, including some beautiful silver-gelatin print nudes by the French Surrealist Man Ray. Together, they form a complete history of photographic art and represent one of the finest collections in existence.

ARCHITECTURE AND DESIGN

The Museum of Modern Art was the first art museum to include utilitarian objects in its collection. These range from household appliances such as stereo equipment, furniture, lighting, textiles, and glassware to industrial ball bearings and silicon chips. Architecture is represented in the collection of photographs, scale models, and drawings of buildings that have been or might have been built.

Graphic design is shown in typography and posters. Larger exhibits that look as if they belong in a museum of transportation include Willys-Overland Jeep and the Bell helicopter.

Henry Villard was a Bavarian immigrant who became publisher of the New York Evening Post and founder of the Northern Pacific Railroad. In 1881, he bought the land opposite St. Patrick's Cathedral and hired McKim, Mead & White to design town houses on the site. The inspired result has six four-story houses set round a central court opening to the street and the church, though financial difficulties forced Villard to sell and ownership passed to the Roman Catholic archdiocese. When the church outgrew its space in the 1970s the houses were saved when the Helmsley chain purchased air rights for the 51-story Helmsley (now New York) Palace Hotel.

The center wing comprises the hotel's formal entrance and the Villard Bar & Lounge. The Municipal Art Society Urban Center occupies the north wing, and its bookshop is the best place in New York for architectural books on the city. The Municipal Art Society also organizes excellent architectural tours, from Harlem to Brooklyn and Staten Island.

Known fondly to New Yorkers as "St. Bart's," this Byzantine structure with its ornate detail, pinkish brick, open terrace and a polychromed gold dome brought color and variety to Park Avenue in 1919.

Architect Bertram Goodhue incorporated into the design the Romanesque entrance portico created by Stanford White for the original 1903 St. Bartholomew's on Madison Avenue, and marble columns from the earlier church were used in the chapel.

St. Bartholomew's program of concerts is well known, as is its theater group, which mounts three productions here each year.

In 1931 architects Cross & Cross were commissioned to design a skyscraper that would be in keeping with its neighbor, St. Bartholomew's Church. Not an easy task, but the result won unanimous acclaim. The colors were chosen to blend and contrast, and the design of the tower complemented the church's polychrome dome.

View the pair from the corner of Park and 50th to see how well it works. However, the General Electric is no mere backdrop but a work of art in its own right and a favorite part of the city skyline. It is an Art Deco gem from its chrome and marble lobby to its spiky "radio waves" crown.

Walk one block north on Lexington Avenue to find a place much cherished by movie fans. It is right at this spot that Marilyn Monroe, in a billowing white frock, stood so memorably in the breeze from the Lexington Avenue subway grating in the movie The Seven-Year Itch.

Still deservedly one of New York's most prestigious hotels, the Waldorf-Astoria serves, too, as a reminder of a more glamorous era in the city's history. The 625-ft (190-m) twin towers, where the Duke and Duchess of Windsor lived, have hosted numerous celebrities, including every US president since 1931. The giant lobby clock, executed for the Chicago World's Fair of 1893, is from the original hotel, and the piano in the Peacock Alley cocktail lounge belonged to Cole Porter when he was a resident of the hotel's exclusive Towers.

Imagine a Park Avenue lined with sturdy, residential buildings – and then imagine the sensation when they were suddenly reflected here in the first of the city's glass-walled skyscrapers, one of the most influential buildings of the modern era. The design, by Skidmore, Owings & Merrill, is simply two rectangular slabs of stainless steel and glass, one laid horizontally, the other stacked to stand tall above it, to allow light in from every side. The crisp and bright design was intended to symbolize many of the Lever Brothers' products – they make soaps and other cleaning products.

Revolutionary though it was in 1952, Lever House is now dwarfed by its many imitators, but its importance as an architectural pacesetter remains undiminished. The Lever House restaurant is a VIP scene.

Samuel Bronfman, the late head of Seagram distillers, was prepared to put up an ordinary commercial building until his architect daughter, Phyllis Lambert, intervened and persuaded him to go to the best – Mies van der Rohe.

The result, which is widely considered the finest of the many Modernist buildings of the 1950s, consists of two rectangles of bronze and glass that let the light pour in.

Within is the exclusive Four Seasons Restaurant (see p307), a landmark in its own right. Designer Philip Johnson has created a remarkable space, with the centerpiece of one room a pool, and another a bar topped by a quivering Richard Lippold sculpture.

An aluminum-clad spire built on ten-story stilts with a sliced-off roof, Citigroup Center is unique; it caused a sensation when it was completed in 1978. The unusual base design had to incorporate St. Peter's Lutheran Church. The church is separate both in space and design, a granite sculpture below a corner of the tower. Step inside to see the striking interior and the Erol Beker Chapel by sculptor Louise Nevelson. The church is well known for its organ concerts, jazz vespers, and theater presentations. Citigroup's slanting top never functioned as a solar panel as intended, but it is an unmistakable landmark on the skyline.

St. Patrick's Cathedral 8

The cathedral's Fifth Avenue facade

The Roman Catholic Church originally intended this site for use as a cemetery, but in 1850 Archbishop John Hughes decided to build a cathedral instead. Many thought that it was foolish to build so far beyond the (then) city limits, but Hughes went ahead anyway. Architect James Renwick built New York's finest Gothic Revival building, the largest Catholic cathedral in the United States. The cathedral, which seats 2,500 people, was completed in 1878, though the spires were added from 1885 to 1888.

This is New York's oldest building in continuous use as a synagogue. It was designed in 1870 by Silesian-born Henry Fernbach, America's first prominent Jewish architect. He also designed some of SoHo's finest cast-iron buildings. Restored after a 1999 fire, the Synagogue is considered the city's best example of Moorish-Islamic Revival architecture. The congregation was founded in 1846 as Ahawath Chesed (Love of Mercy) by 18 new immigrants, most of them from Bohemia, on Ludlow Street on the Lower East Side.

The facade is an understated Moorish design in local brownstone.

The stenciled interior is a colorful mix of red, blue, ochre and gilt and was inspired by Victorian prints of a Moorish Palace in Spain called the Alhambra.

Banded "horseshoe" arches are an Hispano-Moorsque design.

The ark holds the sacred scrolls of the Jewish Holy Book, The Torah.

The twin towers represent the two columns that stood outside Solomon's Temple. The domed minarets, which rise 122 ft (37 m), are onion-shaped and made of green copper.

Sutton Place is a posh and pleasant neighborhood, delightfully devoid of busy traffic, made up of elegant low-rise apartment houses and town houses designed by noted architects. The arrival of New York society in the 1920s transformed an area that had once been the province of factories and tenements. Three Sutton Square is the residence of the secretary-general of the United Nations. Look beyond Sutton Square and 59th Street for a glimpse of Riverview Terrace, a private street of five ivy-covered brownstones fronting on the river. The tiny parks at the end of 55th Street and jutting out at 57th Street offer views of the river and the Queensboro Bridge.

After much neighborhood opposition, Bridgemarket opened in 2000. Located between the huge vaults under the Queensboro Bridge, there is an upscale Terence Conran's for housewares and a Food Emporium supermarket.

Near the tram station are the remains of the Blackwell farmhouse, which stood from 1796 to 1804 and gave the island its name until real estate development began in the 1920s. From then until the 1970s, the island housed a succession of hospitals, an almshouse, a jail, a workhouse and an insane asylum, and became known as Welfare Island. In 1927, Mae West was held in the penitentiary here after a "lewd performance." The ruins of 19th-century hospitals still remain, as does an 1872 lighthouse built by an asylum inmate.

The tram departs from 2nd Avenue at 60th Street and affords a thrilling ride and some fine city views.

For a while in the booming 1980s, "Bloomies" was synonymous with the good life. Founded by Joseph and Lyman Bloomingdale in 1872, this famous department store had a bargain-basement image until the 3rd Avenue El was taken down in the 1960s. Then came the store's transformation to the epitome of trendy, sophisticated shopping. But the late 1980s brought new ownership and eventual bankruptcy. While not as flashy as in the past, Bloomingdale's is open every day and remains one of the city's best-stocked stores. A second store has opened in SoHo at 504 Broadway.

The city's grande dame of hotels was designed by Henry J. Hardenbergh, known for the Dakota (see p218) and the original Waldorf–Astoria. Completed in 1907 at the exorbitant cost of $12.5 million, the Plaza was proclaimed "the best hotel in the world," with 800 rooms, 500 baths, a two-story ballroom, five marble staircases, and 14- to 17-room apartments for such families as the Vanderbilts and the Goulds (see p49).

The 18-story cast-iron structure resembles a French Renaissance chateau. Much of the interior decoration came from Europe. The Palm Court still has mirrored walls and Italian carvings of the four seasons, and is a lovely place for afternoon tea.

Already lavishly restored by its former owner Donald Trump, the building underwent a $400-million conversion into a mix of apartments, hotel condominiums, and a 130-room hotel. There are also six floors of luxury retail and upscale dining, including the famous Oak Room.

UPPER EAST SIDE

At the turn of the century, New York society moved to the Upper East Side – and stayed. Many of the Beaux-Arts mansions in this district are now museums and embassies, but the well-to-do still occupy the grand apartment buildings on Fifth and Park avenues. Chic shops and galleries line

Madison Avenue. Farther east, the area includes what is left of German Yorkville in the East 80s, Hungarian Yorkville to the south, and little Bohemia, with its Czech population, below 78th Street. Although many of these ethnic groups no longer inhabit the area, their churches, restaurants, and shops still remain.

Many of New York's museums are clustered on the Upper East Side, in homes ranging from the former Frick and Carnegie mansions to the modernistic Guggenheim, designed by Frank Lloyd Wright. The displays are as varied as the architecture, running the gamut from Old Masters to photographs to decorative arts. Presiding over the scene is the vast Metropolitan Museum of Art, America's answer to the Louvre. Some of the museums stay open late one day a week.

This museum was founded by art dealer Serge Sabarsky and philanthropist Ronald Lauder. Its objective is to collect, research, and exhibit the fine and decorative arts of Germany and Austria from the early 20th century.

The Louis XIII-style Beaux-Arts structure was completed in 1914 by Carrère & Hastings, who also designed the New York Public Library (see p146). The building, a designated landmark, is considered one of the most distinguished buildings on Fifth Avenue. Once occupied by Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt III, the mansion was purchased by Lauder and Sabarsky in 1994. The ground floor houses the entrance, a bookshop, and the Café Sabarsky, which draws its inspiration from the Viennese cafés of old and also plays host to chamber, cabaret, and classical music concerts. The second floor is devoted to the works of Klimt, Schiele, and Wiener Werkstätte objects. From the War of 1812 through two world wars, the Seventh Regiment, an elite corps of “gentlemen soldiers” from prominent families, has played a vital role. Within the fortress-like exterior of their armory are extraordinary rooms filled with lavish Victorian furnishings, objets d’art, and regimental memorabilia.

The design by Charles W. Clinton, a veteran of the regiment, had offices facing Park Avenue, with a vast drill hall stretching behind to Lexington Ave. The reception rooms include the Veterans’ Room and the Library by Louis Comfort Tiffany. The drill hall is now the site of the Winter Antiques Show (see p53) and a favorite venue for charity balls. A massive renovation is under way, after which the Armory will open its doors as a center for arts and education.

This impressive limestone edifice of 1929 is the largest synagogue in the world, with seating for 2,500 in the main sanctuary alone. It is home to the oldest Reform congregation in New York, and the wealthiest members of Jewish society worship here.

Among the synagogue’s many fine details are the bronze doors of the Ark, which represent an open Torah scroll. The Ark also has stained glass depicting biblical scenes and showing the tribal signs of the houses of Israel. These signs also appear on a great recessed arch that frames a magnificent wheel window, the dominant feature of the Fifth Avenue facade.

The synagogue stands on the site of the palatial home of Mrs. William Astor, the legendary society hostess. Lady Astor moved to the Upper East Side after a feud with her nephew, who lived next door. Her wine cellar and three marble fireplaces still remain at the synagogue.

Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum ⑤

Home to one of the world's finest collections of modern and contemporary art, the building itself is perhaps the museum's greatest masterpiece. The exterior of the museum was beautifully restored in celebration of the 50th anniversary of the building in 2009. Designed by Frank Lloyd Wright, the shell-like facade is a veritable New York landmark. The spiral ramp curves down and inward from the dome, passing works by major 19th-, 20th-, and 21st-century artists along the way.

FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

During his lifetime, Wright was considered the great innovator of American architecture. Characteristic of his work are Prairie-style homes and office buildings of concrete slabs, glass bricks, and tubing. Wright received the Guggenheim commission in 1942 and it was completed after his death in 1959, his only New York building.

Metropolitan Museum of Art 6

Founded in 1870 by a group of artists and philanthropists who dreamed of an American art institution to rival those of Europe, this collection is thought to be the most comprehensive in the Western world. Works date from prehistoric times to the present. The museum opened here in 1880 and houses collections from all continents. The Roman Court and Etruscan gallery on the first floor draws one quarter of the Met's visitors.

GALLERY GUIDE

Most of the collections are housed on the two main floors. Works from 19 curatorial areas are in the permanent galleries, with designated sections for temporary exhibitions. Central on the first and second floors are European painting, sculpture, and decorative art. The Costume Institute is situated on the ground level, directly below the Egyptian galleries on the first floor.

THE ASTOR COURT

In 1979, 27 craftspeople from China, responsible for the care of Souzhou's historic gardens, came to New York to replicate a Ming-style scholar's garden in the Metropolitan Museum. They used centuries-old techniques and hand-made tools that had been passed down for generations. It was the first cultural exchange between the United States and the People's Republic of China. The result is a quiet garden for meditation, a Western parallel to Souzhou's Garden of the Master of the Fishing Nets.

Exploring the Metropolitan

The treasures of "the Met" include a vast collection of American art and more than 2,500 European paintings, including masterpieces by Rembrandt and Vermeer. There are also many Islamic exhibits, plus the greatest collection of Egyptian art outside Cairo.

AFRICA, OCEANIA, AND THE AMERICAS

A painted gold funerary mask (10th–14th century) from the necropolis of Batán Grande, Peru

Nelson Rockefeller built the Michael C. Rockefeller Wing in 1982 in memory of his son, who lost his life on an art-finding expedition in New Guinea. The wing showcases a superb collection of over 1,600 objects from Africa, the islands of the Pacific and the Americas.

Among the African works, the ivory and bronze sculptures from the royal kingdom of Benin (Nigeria) are outstanding, as is the wooden sculpture by the Dogon, Bamana and Senufo peoples of Mali. From the Pacific come carvings by the Asmat people of New Guinea and decorations and masks from the Melanesian and Polynesian islands. From Mexico and Central and South America come pre-Columbian gold, ceramics and stonework. The wing also contains fine Native American artifacts by the Inuit and other groups.

AMERICAN ART

Gilbert Stuart's portrait of George Washington, George Caleb Bingham's Fur Traders Descending the Missouri, John Singer Sargent's notorious portrait of Madame X, and the monumental Washington Crossing the Delaware by Emanuel Leutze are among the icons in the American Wing. It holds not only one of the world's finest collections of American painting and sculpture but also of decorative arts from Colonial times to the beginning of the 20th century. Highlights range from elegant Neo-Classical silver vessels made by Paul Revere to innovative glassware by Tiffany & Co.

In the furniture section are settees, dining chairs, tables, bookcases, and desks from major centers of American cabinetmaking such as Boston, Newport, and Philadelphia.

Period rooms, with their original decorative woodwork and furnishings, range from the saloon hall in which George Washington celebrated his last birthday to the elegant prairie-style living room from the house that Frank Lloyd Wright designed for Francis W. Little in Wayzata, Minnesota, in 1912.

The Charles Engelhard Court is an indoor sculpture garden with large-scale architectural elements, including the lovely stained-glass and mosaic loggia from Louis Comfort Tiffany's Long Island estate and the facade of an 1824 United States Branch Bank that once stood on Wall Street.

Inside is a collection spanning 8,000 years, rich in Iranian bronzes, Anatolian ivories and Sumerian sculptures, and Achaemenian and Sassanian silver and gold. An adjacent area contains Islamic art of the 7th to the 19th centuries; glass and metalwork from Egypt, Syria and Mesopotamia; royal miniatures from Persia and Mughal India; 16th- and 17th-century rugs; and an 18th-century room from Syria.

ARMS AND ARMOR

Mounted knights in full armor charge at each other across the equestrian court here. These galleries are a favorite with children and anyone moved by medieval romance or thrilled by power.

There are suits of armor, rapiers and sabers with hilts of precious stones and gold, firearms inlaid with ivory and mother-of-pearl, plus colorful heraldic banners and shields.

Highlights include the armor of gentleman-pirate Sir George Clifford, a favorite of Queen Elizabeth I. The rainbow-colored armor of a 14th-century Japanese shogun and a collection of Wild West revolvers that once belonged to gunmaker Samuel Colt are also exhibited here.

ASIAN ART

Many outstanding galleries contain masterpieces of Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Indian, and Southeast Asian art, dating from the second millennium BC to the 20th century. A full-scale Ming-style Chinese scholar's garden was built by craftspeople from Suzhou as part of the first cultural exchange between the United States and the People's Republic of China. The museum also has one of the finest collections of Sung and Yuan paintings in the world, Chinese Buddhist monumental sculptures, fine Chinese ceramics and jade, and an important display of the arts of ancient China.

The full range of Japanese arts is represented in a breathtaking suite of 11 galleries featuring chronological and thematic displays of Japanese lacquer, ceramics, painting, sculpture, textiles, and screens. Indian, Southeast Asian, and Korean galleries display superb sculptures and other arts from these regions.

COSTUME INSTITUTE

The 31,000-piece collection of costumes and accessories has expanded by over 23,000 items under an agreement with the Brooklyn Museum (see pp250–53). There is no permanent display due to the fragility of the objects, but there are two special exhibitions a year.

The collection spans five centuries from the 17th century to the present and is a definitive compendium of fashionable dress, from the elaborately embroidered dresses of the late 1600s to gowns from the Napoleonic era. The designs of Elsa Schiaparelli, Worth, and Balenciaga are also included, along with Ballets Russes costumes and even David Bowie's sequined jockstrap.

The Art of Dress audio tour, narrated by actress Sarah Jessica Parker, focuses on how artists have used clothing to express identity and power.

The Institute is sophisticated in its understanding of conservation techniques, with a state-of-the-art laboratory.

DRAWINGS, PRINTS, AND PHOTOGRAPHS

This eclectic gallery regularly displays selections from the museum's incredible holdings of drawings, prints, etchings, and photographs. The drawings collection is especially rich in Italian and French art from the 15th to the 19th century. Specific exhibits of the drawings in this collection are shown on a rotating basis because of the light-sensitive nature of works on paper.

Highlights among the 11,000 drawings include works by Michelangelo, Leonardo da Vinci, Raphael, Ingres, Goya, Rubens, Rembrandt, Tiepolo, and Seurat.

The encyclopedic print collection of nearly 1.5 million images and over 14,000 illustrated books includes major works by virtually every master printmaker, from an early German woodcut called Virgin and Child to some of Dürer's most accomplished works and Goya's The Giant. Influential gallery-owner Alfred Stieglitz's donation of his own extensive collection of photographs brought here such gems as Edward Steichen's The Flatiron. It formed the core of a photography collection that is now also particularly strong in Modernist works dating from between the world wars.

Ephemera such as posters and advertisements form another part of this collection.

EGYPTIAN ART

One of the museum's best-loved areas is the ancient Egyptian wing, which displays every one of its thousands of holdings – from the prehistoric period to the 8th century AD. Objects range from the fragmented jasper lips of a 15th-century BC queen to the massive Temple of Dendur. Other amazing archaeological finds, most of them originating from museum-sponsored expeditions undertaken early in the 20th century, include sculptures of the notorious Queen Hatshepsut, who seized the Theban throne in the 16th century BC; 100 carved reliefs of Amenhotep IV's reign; and tomb figures like the blue faïence hippo that has become the museum's mascot.

EUROPEAN PAINTING, SCULPTURE, AND DECORATIVE ARTS

The heart of the museum is its awe-inspiring collection of over 3,000 European paintings. The Italian works include

Young Woman with a Water Jug (1660) by Johannes Vermeer

Botticelli's Last Communion of Saint Jerome and Bronzino's Portrait of a Young Man. The Dutch and Flemish canvases are among the world's finest, with Brueghel's The Harvesters, several works by Rubens, Van Dyck, and Rembrandt, and more Vermeers than any other museum. The collection also has masterpieces by Spanish artists El Greco, Velázquez, and Goya, and by French artists Poussin and Watteau. Some of the finest Impressionist and Post-Impressionist canvases reside here: 34 Monets, including Terrace at Sainte-Adresse; 18 Cézannes; and several Van Goghs, including Cypresses. In the Kravis wing and adjacent galleries are works from the 60,000-object collection of European sculpture and decorative arts, such as Tullio Lombardo's marble statue of Adam; a bronze statuette of a rearing horse, after a model by Leonardo; and dozens of pieces by Degas and Rodin. Period settings include the patio from a 16th-century

Spanish castle and a series of ornate 18th-century French domestic interiors known as the Wrightsman Rooms. The Petrie European Sculpture Court features French and Italian sculpture in a beautiful garden setting reminiscent of Versailles in France.

GREEK AND ROMAN ART

A Roman sarcophagus from Tarsus, donated in 1870, was the first work of art in the Met's collections. It can still be seen in the museum's Greek and Roman galleries, along with breathtaking wall panels from a villa that was buried under the lava of Vesuvius in AD 79, Etruscan mirrors, Roman portrait busts, exquisite objects in glass and silver, and hundreds of Greek vases. A monumental 7th-century BC statue of a youth shows the movement toward naturalism in sculpture, and the Hellenistic Old Market Woman demonstrates how the Greeks had mastered realism by the 2nd century BC.

An amphora by Exekias, showing a wedding (6th century BC)

EGYPTIAN TOMB MODELS

In 1920, a Met researcher's light illuminated a room, which had been closed for 2,000 years, in the tomb of the nobleman Meketre. Within were 24 tiny, perfect replicas of his daily life: his house and garden, fleet of ships and herd of cattle. Meketre is there, too, on his boat, inhaling a lotus's scent and enjoying the music of his singer and harpist. The museum has 13 of these delightful replicas.

LEHMAN COLLECTION

What had been one of the the finest private art collections in the world, that of investment banker Robert Lehman, came to the museum in 1969. The Lehman Wing is a dramatic glass pyramid housing an extraordinarily varied collection rich in Old Masters and 19th-century French paintings, drawings, bronzes,

A panel from the stained-glass Death of the Virgin window, from the 12th-century cathedral of Saint Pierre in Troyes, France Renaissance majolica, Venetian glass, furniture, and enamels. Among the canvases are works by north-European masters; Dutch and Spanish paintings, French masterworks, Post-Impressionists and Fauves.

MEDIEVAL ART

The Metropolitan's medieval collection includes works dating from the 4th to the 16th century, roughly from the fall of Rome to the beginning of the Renaissance. The collection is split between the main museum and its uptown branch, the Cloisters (see pp236–9). In the main building are a chalice once thought to be the Holy Grail, six silver Byzantine plates showing scenes from the life of David, a 1301 pulpit by Giovanni Pisano in the shape of an eagle, and several monumental sculptures of the Virgin and Child. Other exhibits include Migration jewelry, liturgical vessels, stained glass, ivories, and 14th- and 15th-century tapestries.

Stradivari violin from Cremona, Italy (1691)

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS

The world's oldest piano, Andrés Segovia's guitars and a sitar shaped like a peacock are some of the features of a broad and sometimes quirky collection of musical instruments that spans six continents and dates from prehistory to the present. The instruments illustrate the history of music and performance, and most of them are conserved to remain in playable condition.

Worth particular mention are instruments from the European courts of the Middle Ages and the Renaissance; rare violins; harpsichords; instruments inlaid with precious materials; and a fully equipped traditional violin-maker's workshop; there are also African drums, Asian pi-pas, or lutes; and Native American flutes. Visitors can use audio equipment to hear many of the instruments playing the music of their day.

MODERN ART

Since its foundation in 1870, the museum has been acquiring contemporary art, but it was not until 1987 that a permanent home for 20th-century art was built – the Lila Acheson Wallace Wing. Other museums in New York have larger collections of modern art, but this display space is considered among the finest. European and American works from 1900 onward are featured on three levels, starting with Europeans such as Picasso, Kandinsky, Braque, and Bonnard. The collection's greatest strength lies in its collection of modern American art, with works by New York school "The Eight," including John Sloan; such Modernists as Charles Demuth and Georgia O'Keeffe; American Regionalist Grant Wood; Abstract Expressionists Willem de Kooning; and such Color Field painters as Clyfford Still.

Grant Wood's view of The Midnight Ride of Paul Revere (1931)

Special areas of the wing house Art Nouveau and Art Deco furniture and metalwork; a large collection of works on paper by Paul Klee; and the Sculpture Gallery, with its large-scale sculptures and canvases.

Gems of the collection include Picasso's portrait of Gertrude Stein, Matisse's Nasturtiums and "Dance, I" Demuth's I Saw the Figure 5 in Gold, Jackson Pollock's Autumn Rhythm, and Andy Warhol's last self-portrait.

Arched doorway of the Church of the Holy Trinity Delightfully placed in a serene garden setting, this church was constructed in 1889 of glowing golden brick and terracotta in French Renaissance style. It boasts one of New York's best bell towers, which holds a handsome wrought-iron clock with brass hands. The arched doorway is richly decorated with carved images of the saints and prophets.

The complex was donated by Serena Rhineland in memory of her father and grandfather. The land was part of the Rhineland farm, which the family had owned for 100 years.

Built in Muscovite Baroque style in 1902, this church has five onion domes crowned with crosses, and blue and yellow tiles on a red brick and white stone facade. Among the early worshippers were White Russians who had fled the first uprisings at home, mostly intellectuals and aristocrats who soon became a part of New York society. Later, there were more waves of refugees, dissidents, and defectors.

The cathedral now serves a scattered community, and the congregation is small.

Mass is celebrated in Russian with great pomp and dignity.

The cathedral is filled with the scent of incense. The high central sanctuary has marble columns with blue and white trim above. Ornate wooden screens trimmed with gold enclose the altar. It is unique, an unexpected find on a side street in this staid part of Manhattan.

Founded in 1923 and at first housed in Gracie Mansion, this museum is dedicated to New York's development from its earliest beginnings up to the present and on to the future.

Housed in a handsome Georgian Colonial building since 1932, the museum has expanded its public space, with special exhibitions throughout the year. These cover subjects such as fashion, architecture, theater, social and political history, and photography. In addition there is a collection of toys, including the famed Stettheimer Dollhouse, with original works of art in miniature, painted by such luminaries as Marcel Duchamp and Albert Gleizes.

A core exhibition of the museum is the film Timescape: A Multimedia Portrait of New York (every 30 mins, 10:15am–4:45pm). It uses images from the museum's collection and historic maps to chart the growth of New York, from its early days as a tiny settlement to its current status as one of the largest cities in the world.

Whitney Museum of American Art 7

The Whitney Museum is the foremost showcase for American art of the 20th and 21st centuries. It was founded in 1930 by sculptor Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney after the Metropolitan Museum of Art turned down her collection of works by living artists such as Bellows and Hopper. In 1966 the museum moved to the present inverted-pyramid building designed by Marcel Breuer. The Whitney Biennial, held in even years, is the most significant survey of new trends in American art.

Frick Collection 8

The art collection of steel magnate Henry Clay Frick (1849–1919) is exhibited in a residential setting amid the furnishings of his opulent mansion, which provides a rare glimpse of how the extremely wealthy lived in New York's gilded age. Henry Frick intended the collection to be a memorial to himself, and on his death he bequeathed the entire house to the nation. The collection includes important Old Master paintings, major works of sculpture, French furniture, rare Limoges enamels, and beautiful Oriental rugs.

CENTRAL PARK

The city's "backyard" was created in 1858 by Frederick Law Olmsted and Calvert Vaux on an unpromising site of quarries, pig farms, swampland and shacks. Ten million cartloads of stone and earth turned it into the lush 843-acre (340-ha) park of today. There are scenic hills, lakes and lush meadows, dotted throughout with out-crops of Manhattan bedrock, and planted with more than 500,000 trees and shrubs. Over the years the park has blossomed, with playgrounds and skating rinks, plus ball fields and spaces for every activity from chess and croquet to concerts and events. Cars are banned on weekends, giving bicyclists, in-line skaters and joggers the right-of-way.

The 59th St/Columbus Circle stop is served by the 1; the 2 and 3 stop at 110th Street; the N, R, Q, and W stop at 57th St and 5th Ave at the southern end of the park. Bus routes M1, M2, M3, and M4 run along the eastern edge of the park; M10 to the west, and M5 to the south.

A Tour of Central Park

On a short visit, a walking tour from 59th to 79th streets takes in some of Central Park's loveliest features, from the dense wooded Ramble to the open formal spaces of Bethesda Terrace. Along the way, you will see artificial lakes and some of the 30 graceful bridges and arches that link around 58 miles (93 km) of footpaths, bridle paths, and roads in the park. In summer the park is often several degrees cooler than the city streets around it, and thus is a favorite retreat.

Now used as Central Park's Visitor Center, this charming building of natural stone was planned as part of the "Children's District" of the park, which included a playground, the Carousel, a Children's Cottage, and stable. In 1873, there were cows grazing on the meadows in front of the Dairy, a ewe and her lambs feeding nearby, and chickens, guinea fowl, and peacocks roaming the lawn. City children could get fresh milk and other refreshments here. Over the years, the Dairy deteriorated, being used as a shed until restoration in 1979, done according to original photographs and drawings. The Dairy is the place to begin exploring the lush and leafy park; maps and details of events can be obtained here. The less energetic can rent chess and checkers sets for use on the pretty inlaid boards of the kinderberg, the charming little "children's hill" nearby.

Strawberry Fields ②

Map 12 E1. M 72nd St.

The restoration of this teardrop-shaped section of the park was Yoko Ono's tribute in memory of her slain husband, John Lennon. They lived in the Dakota apartments overlooking this spot (see p218). Gifts for the garden came from all over the world. A mosaic set in the pathway, inscribed with the word Imagine (named for Lennon's famous song), was a gift from the city of Naples in Italy.

This broad expanse of the park's landscape was designed by Vaux and Olmsted. Now it is an international peace garden, with 161 species of plants (one from every country of the world), including jetbead, roses, witch hazel, birches – and strawberries.

Bow Bridge ④

Map 16 E5. M 72nd St.

This is one of the park's seven original cast-iron bridges and is considered one of the finest. It was designed by Vaux as a bow tying together the two large sections of the Lake. In the 19th century, when the Lake was used for ice skating, a red ball was hoisted from a bell tower on Vista Rock to signal that the ice was safe. The bridge offers expansive views of the park and the buildings bordering it on both the east and west sides.

Situated between the Lake and the Mall, this is the architectural heart of the park, a formal element in the naturalistic landscape. The fountain was dedicated in 1873. The statue, Angel of the Waters, marked the opening of the Croton Aqueduct system in 1842, bringing the city its first supply of pure water; its name refers to a biblical account of a healing angel at the pool of Bethesda in Jerusalem. The Spanish-style detailing, such as the sculptured double staircase, tiles, and friezes, is by Jacob Wrey Mould.

The terrace is one of the best spots to relax and take in some people-watching.

Conservatory Water 6

Better known as the Model Boat Pond, this stretch of water is home to model yacht races every weekend.

At the north end of the lake, a sculpture of Alice in Wonderland is a delight for children. It was commissioned by George T. Delacorte in honor of his wife. He himself is immortalized in caricature as the Mad Hatter. On the west bank, free story hours are held at the Hans Christian Andersen statue. The author is portrayed reading from his own story, "The Ugly Duckling," while its hero waddles at his feet. Children like to climb on the statue and snuggle in the author's lap. Conservatory Water's literary links continue into adolescence: it is here that J. D. Salinger's Holden Caulfield comes to tell the ducks his troubles in The Catcher in the Rye.

Each spring, birdwatchers gather at the pond to see the city's most famous red-tailed hawk, Pale Male, nest on the roof of 927 Fifth Avenue.

The Vanderbilt Gate on Fifth Avenue is the entry to a 6-acre (2.4-ha) park containing three formal gardens. Each one represents a different national landscape style. The Central Garden, with a large lawn, yew hedges, crabapple trees, and a wisteria pergola recreates an Italian style. The South Garden, spilling over with perennials, represents an English style, with a bronze statue in the reflecting pool of Mary and Dickon, from Frances Hodgson Burnett's The Secret Garden. Beyond is a slope with thousands of native wildflowers, spreading into the park beyond. The North Garden, in the French style, centers around the bronze Fountain of the Three Dancing Maidens. It puts on a brief but brilliant display of annuals each summer.

UPPER WEST SIDE

This district of New York became residential in the 1870s, when the Ninth Avenue elevated railroad (see pp26-7) made commuting to midtown possible. The Dakota, the city's first luxury apartment house, was built here in 1884, and the streets were graded and leveled. Buildings sprang

Street by Street: Lincoln Center

Lincoln Center was conceived when both the Metropolitan Opera House and the New York Philharmonic required homes, and a large tract on Manhattan's west side was in dire need of revitalization. The notion of a single complex where different performing arts could exist side by side seems natural today, but in the 1950s it was considered both daring and risky. Today Lincoln Center has proved itself by drawing audiences of five million each year. Proximity to its halls prompts both performers and arts lovers to live nearby.

A familiar landmark on the New York skyline, the four twin-towered apartment houses on Central Park West were built between 1929 and 1931, before the Great Depression halted all luxury construction. They are among the most sought-after residences in New York.

Admired today for their grace and architectural detail, they were designed in response to a city planning law allowing taller apartments if setbacks and towers were used.

Emery Roth designed the San Remo (145 CPW), whose tenants have included Dustin Hoffman, Paul Simon, and Diane Keaton. Turned down by the residents' committee, Madonna went to live close by at 1 West 64th Street. The towers of the Eldorado (300 CPW), also by Roth, were home to Groucho Marx, Marilyn Monroe, and Richard Dreyfuss. The Majestic (115 CPW) and the Century (25 CPW) are both sleek classics by Art Deco designer Irwin S. Chanin.

Two theaters make up this innovative complex, where eclectic and often experimental drama is presented.

The theaters are the 1,000-seat Vivian Beaumont and the more intimate 280-seat Mitzi E. Newhouse. Works by some of New York's best modern playwrights have featured at the Beaumont. Among these was Arthur Miller's After the Fall, the theater's inaugural performance in 1962.

The size of the Newhouse suits workshop-style plays, but it can still make the news with theatrical gems such as Robin Williams and Steve Martin in a production

The name and style reflect the fact that this apartment building was truly “way out West” when Henry J. Hardenbergh, the architect responsible for the Plaza Hotel, designed it in 1880–84. It was New York’s first luxury apartment house and was originally surrounded by squatters’ shacks and wandering farm animals. Commissioned by Edward S. Clark, heir to the Singer sewing machine fortune, it is one of the city’s most prestigious addresses.

The Dakota’s 65 luxurious apartments have had many famous owners, including Judy Garland, Lauren Bacall, Leonard Bernstein, and Boris Karloff, whose ghost is said to haunt the place. On the northern side of the American Museum of Natural History (see pp216–17) is the Hayden Planetarium, centerpiece of the spectacular Rose Center for Earth and Space. Housed within an 87-ft (26-m) sphere, the Planetarium contains a technologically advanced Space Theater, the Cosmic Pathway, a 350-ft (107-m) spiral ramp with a timeline chronicling 13 billion years of evolution, and a Big Bang Theater, where the origins of the universe are explained.

The Hall of Planet Earth, centered around rock samples and using state-of-the-art computer and video displays explaining how the Earth works, explores our geologic history. Exhibits in the Hall of Riverside Drive is one of the city’s most attractive streets – broad, with shaded and lovely views of the Hudson River. It is lined with the opulent original town houses as well as newer apartment buildings. At 40–46, 74–77, 81–89, and 105–107 Riverside Drive are houses designed in the late 19th century by local architect Clarence F. True. The curved gables, bays and arched windows seem to suit the curves of the road and the flow of the river.

The bizarrely named Cliff Dwellers' Apartments at 243 (between 96th and 97th streets) is a 1914 building with a frieze showing early Arizona cliff dwellers, complete with masks, buffalo skulls, mountain lions, and rattlesnakes.

Riverside Park was designed by Frederick Law Olmsted in 1880. He also laid out Central Park (see pp204–7).

This particularly imaginative participatory museum was founded in 1973 and is based on the premise that children learn best through play. The exhibit called “Gods, Myths & Mortals” allows children to learn about Ancient Greece, its gods, and its impact on the modern world, while in “Block Party” they can build castles, towns, and bridges out of wooden blocks. Children also delight in the exhibit on Dora the Explorer and her adventurous cousin Diego, where they learn about

This Beaux Arts gem was built in 1899 by William Earl Dodge Stokes, heir to the Phelps Dodge Company fortune, who brought French architect Paul E.M. Duboy to design a building to rival the Dakota. The hotel was converted to a condominium in 1992. The most prominent features are the round corner tower and the two-story mansard roof adorned with single and double dormers. The building had a roof garden (complete with Dodge's menagerie: ducks, chickens, and a tame bear) and two swimming pools.

The hotel's thick, sound-muffling walls soon made it a favorite with the musical stars of yesteryear. Florenz Ziegfeld, Arturo Toscanini, Enrico Caruso, Igor Stravinsky, and Lily Pons were once regular guests there.

Opulent detail and an impressive high mansard roof adorn this apartment house. On the West 71st Street side of the building is a nine-story-high gateway. To the modern eye, the Dorilton is gloriously elaborate, but when it was first built in 1902 it provoked this reaction, reported by the Architectural Record: “The sight of it makes strong men swear and weak women shrink affrighted.”

Balcony on the Dorilton, supported by groaning figures

What would the critics have made of the Alexandria Condominium, at 135 West 70th Street, just a block away? Built in 1927 as the Pythian Temple, its current name stems from the lavish Egyptian-style motifs that adorned this former Masonic lodge. Many were stripped away when the building was converted to a condominium, but you can still see what the polychrome designs were like. There are lotus leaves, hieroglyphics, ornately carved columns, mythical beasts, and, in majestic splendor on the roof, two seated pharaohs.

Morningside Heights, near the Hudson River, is home to Columbia University and two of the city's finest churches. Farther east is Hamilton Heights, situated on the border of Harlem, America's most famous black community. One way to see the district's highlights, which are spread over a large

Many tours start in Hamilton Heights, move east to the St. Nicholas Historic District, stop to enjoy the gospel choir at the Abyssinian Baptist Church, and end with a southern-style brunch at Sylvia's, Harlem's best-known restaurant.

Street by Street: Columbia University

A great university is as much spirit as buildings. After admiring the architecture, linger awhile on Columbia's central quadrangle in front of the Low Library, where you will see the jeans-clad future leaders of America meeting and mingling between classes. Across from the campus on both Broadway and Amsterdam Avenue are the coffee-houses and cafés where students engage in lengthy philosophical arguments, debate the topics of the day or simply unwind.

Alma Mater was sculpted by Daniel Chester French in 1903 and survived a bomb blast in the 1968 student demonstrations.

This is the third location of one of America's oldest universities. Founded in 1754 as King's College, it was first situated close to where the World Trade Center stood.

In 1814, when a move uptown was proposed, the university approached the authorities for funding but was instead given a plot of land valued at $75,000, on which to build a new home. The university never built on the land itself, but leased it out and spent the years from 1857 to 1897 in buildings nearby. It finally sold the plot in 1985 to the leaseholders, Rockefeller Center Inc., for $400 million.

The present campus was begun in 1897 on the site of the Bloomingdale Insane Asylum. Charles McKim, the architect, placed the university on a terrace, serenely above street level. Its spacious lawns and plazas still create a sense of contrast in the busy city.

Columbia is noted for its law, medicine, and journalism schools. Its distinguished faculty and alumni, past and present, include over 50 Nobel laureates. Famous alumni include Isaac Asimov, J.D. Salinger, James Cagney, and Joan Rivers. Across the street is the affiliated Barnard College, a highly selective liberal arts college for women.

The building is now used as offices, and its rotunda for a variety of academic and ceremonial purposes. The books were moved in 1932 to the Butler Library, across the quadrangle. The university's library collections total more than six million volumes.

A 21-story steel frame with a Gothic exterior, the church design was inspired by the cathedral at Chartres. It was lavishly funded by John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in 1930. The Laura Spelman Rockefeller Memorial Carillon (in honor of Rockefeller's mother) is the largest in the world, with 74 bells. The 20-ton Bourdon, or hour bell, is the largest and heaviest tuned carillon bell ever cast. The organ, with its 22,000 pipes, is among the largest in the world.

At the rear of the second gallery is a figure by Jacob Epstein, Christ in Majesty, cast in plaster and covered in gold leaf. Another Epstein statue, Madonna and Child, stands in the court next to the cloister. The panels of the chancel screen honor eight men and women whose lives have exemplified the teachings of Christ. They range from Socrates and Michelangelo to Florence Nightingale and Booker T. Washington.

For quiet reflection, enter the small, secluded Christ Chapel, patterned after an 11th-century Romanesque church in France. For views, take the elevator to the 20th floor and then walk the 140 steps to the top of the 392-ft (120-m) bell tower for a fine panorama of Upper Manhattan from the observation deck.

This grandiose monument honors America's 18th president, Ulysses S. Grant, the commanding general of the Union forces in the Civil War.

The mausoleum contains the coffins of General Grant and his wife, in accordance with the president's last wish that they be buried together. After Grant's death in 1885, more than 90,000 Americans contributed $600,000 to build the sepulcher, which was inspired by Mausoleus's tomb at Halicarnassus, one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World.

General Grant on a Civil War campaign

The tomb was dedicated on what would have been Grant's 75th birthday, April 27, 1897. The parade of 50,000 people, along with a flotilla of 10 American and 5 European warships, took more than seven hours to pass in review.

The interior was inspired by Napoleon's tomb at Les Invalides in Paris. Each sarcophagus weighs 8.5 tons.

Two exhibit rooms feature displays on Grant's personal life and his presidential and military career. Surrounding the north and east sides of the building are 17 sinuously curved mosaic benches that seem totally out of keeping with the formal architecture of the tomb. They were designed in the early 1970s by the Chilean-born Brooklyn artist Pedro Silva and were built by 1,200 local volunteers, who worked under his supervision. The benches were inspired by the work of Spanish architect Antonio Gaudi in Barcelona. The mosaics depict subjects ranging from the Inuit to New York taxis to Donald Duck.

A short walk north of Grant's Tomb is another monument. An unadorned urn on a pedestal marks the resting place of a young child who fell from the riverbank and drowned. His grieving father placed a marker that simply reads: "Erected to the memory of an amiable child, St. Clair Pollock, died 15 July 1797 in his fifth year of his age."

Cram's Gothic West Front

Started in 1892 and still only two-thirds finished, this will be the largest cathedral in the world. The interior is over 600 ft (180 m) long and 146 ft (45 m) wide. It was originally designed in Romanesque style by Heins and LaFarge; Ralph Adams Cram took over the project in 1911, devising a Gothic nave and west front. Medieval construction methods, such as stone on stone supporting buttresses, continue to be used to complete the cathedral, which is also a venue for theater, music, and avant-garde art.

Choir

Each of the choir's columns is 55 ft (17 m) tall and made of polished gray granite.

Nave

Rising to a height of over 100 ft (30 m), the piers of the nave are topped by graceful stone arches.

Rose Window ★

Completed in 1933, the stylized motif of the Great Rose is symbolic of the many facets of the Christian Church.

★ West Front Entrance

The portals of the cathedral's west front are adorned with many fine stone carvings. Some are recreations of medieval religious sculpture, but others have modern themes. This apocalyptic vision of New York's skyline, by local stonemason Joe Kincannon, seems almost to predict the events of September 11, 2001 (see p54).

Set high on a hill adjoining Hamilton Heights, the original Gothic quadrangle of this college, built between 1903 and 1907, is very impressive. The material used for the buildings is Manhattan schist, a stone that had been excavated in building the IRT subway. Later, contemporary buildings were added to the school, which enrolls nearly 15,000 students.

Once free to all residents of New York, City College still offers an education at low tuition rates. Three-quarters of the students are from minority groups, and a large number of them are the first in their families to attend college.

Hamilton lived in The Grange for the last two years of his life. He was killed in a duel with political rival Aaron Burr in 1804.

Originally this was a setting for the impressive country estates of the wealthy. Also known as Harlem Heights, it was developed during the 1880s following the extension of the El line (see p.26) into the neighborhood. The privacy of the enclave, on a high hill above Harlem, made it a very desirable location.

The section of Hamilton Heights known as Sugar Hill was highly favored by Harlem's elite - US Supreme Court Justice Thurgood Marshall, notable jazz musicians Count Basie, Duke Ellington, and Cab Calloway, and world champion boxer Sugar Ray Robinson have all lived there.

The handsome three- and four-story stone row houses were built between 1886 and 1906 mixing Flemish, Romanesque and Tudor influences. In fine condition, many are used as residences by the faculty of City College.

A startling contrast to the rundown surroundings, the two blocks here, known as the King Model Houses, were built in 1891 when Harlem was considered a neighborhood for New York's gentry. They still comprise one of the city's most distinctive examples of row townhouses.

The developer, David King, chose three leading architects, who succeeded in blending their different styles to create a harmonious whole. The most famous of these was the firm of McKim, Mead & White, designers of the Pierpont Morgan Library (see pp164-5) and Villard Houses (see p176), who were responsible for the northernmost row of solid brick Renaissance palaces. Their homes featured ground floor entrances rather than the typical New York brownstone stoops. Also, the elaborate parlor floors have ornate wrought-iron balconies below, as well as carved decorative medallions above their windows.

The Georgian buildings designed by Price and Luce are built of buff brick with white stone trim. James Brown Lord's section of buildings, also Georgian in architectural style, feels much closer to Victorian, with outstanding red-brick facades and bases constructed of brownstone.

Successful blacks were attracted here in the 1920s and 1930s, giving it the nickname Strivers' Row. Among them were celebrated musicians W. C. Handy and Eubie Blake.

Housed in a sleek contemporary complex opened in 1991, this is the largest research center of black and African culture in the United States. The immense collection was assembled by the late Arthur Schomburg, a black man of Puerto Rican descent, who was told by a teacher that there was no such thing as "black history." The Carnegie

Kurt Weill, Elmer Rice, and Langston Hughes at the Schomburg Center

Corporation bought the collection in 1926 and gave it to the New York Public Library; Schomburg was made curator in 1932.

The library was the unofficial meeting place for writers involved in what later became known as the black literary renaissance of the 1920s, including Langston Hughes, W.E.B. Du Bois, Zora Neale Hurston, and many other great writers of the day. It also hosted many literary gatherings and poetry readings.

The Schomburg Library has excellent facilities for conserving and making available the archive's treasures, which include rare books, photos, movies, art, and recordings. The library was planned and designed to double as a cultural center and includes a theater and two art galleries, which feature changing shows of art and photography.

nights launched the careers of Sarah Vaughan, Pearl Bailey, James Brown, and Gladys Knight, among others, and they still attract hopefuls.

The Apollo was the place during the swing band era; following World War II, a new generation of musicians, such as Charlie "Bird" Parker, Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonius Monk, and Aretha Franklin, continued the tradition.

Rescued from decline and refurbished in the 1980s, the Apollo once again features top black entertainers and hosts Amateur Nights.

The museum was founded in 1967 in a loft on upper Fifth Avenue with the mission of becoming the premier center for the collection and exhibition of the art and artifacts of African-Americans.

The present premises, a five-story building on Harlem's main commercial street, was donated to the museum by the New York Bank for Savings in 1979. There are galleries on two levels for changing exhibitions featuring artists and cultural themes, and three galleries are devoted to the permanent collection of works by major black artists.

In addition to its excellent exhibitions, the Studio Museum also maintains a national artist-in-residence program, and offers regular lectures, seminars, children's programs, and film festivals. An excellent shop sells a range of books, unique prints, and various African crafts.

You can plainly see that the late 19th-century Victorian-style town houses near Marcus Garvey Park were once grand. This was a favorite neighborhood of German Jews moving up in the world from the Lower East Side. Time has not been kind, and this district shows how the area has deteriorated.

A few impressive churches, such as St. Martin's Episcopal Church, remain. There are also some interesting juxtapositions of faiths to be seen: the columned Mount Olivet Baptist Church, at 201 Lenox Avenue, was once Temple Israel, one of the most imposing synagogues in the city; and at the Ethiopian Hebrew Congregation, 1 West 123rd Street, housed in a former mansion, the choir sings in Hebrew on Saturdays.

This hilly, rocky, two-block square of green is the site of New York's last fire watch-tower, an open cast-iron structure built in 1856, with spiral stairs leading to the observation deck. The bell below the deck sounded the alarm. It may be best to view it from a distance, however, if you have any doubts about your safety.

Previously known as Mount Morris Park, it was renamed in 1973 in honor of Marcus Garvey. He came to Harlem from Jamaica in 1916 and founded the Universal Negro Improvement Association, which promoted self-help, racial pride and a back-to-Africa movement.

Founded in 1969, this is North America's only museum devoted to Latin American art. It specializes in the culture of Puerto Rico. Exhibitions feature contemporary painting and sculpture, folk art, and historical artifacts. The stars of the permanent collection are about 240 wooden Santos, (carved figures of saints), and a reconstructed bodega, or Latino corner grocery. Exhibits change often, but some of the Santos are often on display. The Pre-Columbian collection contains rare artifacts from the Caribbean. Situated at the far end of Museum Mile, this unusual museum attempts to bridge the gap between the lofty Upper East Side and the cultural heritage of El Barrio (Spanish Harlem).

FARTHER AFIELD

Though officially part of New York City, the boroughs outside Manhattan are quite different in feel and spirit. They are residential and don't have the famous skyscrapers that are associated with New York. The difference is evident even in the way residents describe a trip to Manhattan as "going into the city." Yet the outlying areas boast many attractions, including the city's biggest zoo, botanical gardens, museums, beaches, and sports arenas. For a guided walk around Brooklyn see pages 266–7.

Upper Manhattan

It was in Upper Manhattan that the 18th-century Dutch settlers established their farms. Now a suburban area with little of the bustle of downtown Manhattan, it is a good place to escape the inner city for some relaxed museum and landmark sightseeing. The Cloisters (see pp236–9) displays a magnificent collection of medieval art, housed within original European buildings of the period. A piece of New York history is found at the Morris-Jumel Mansion in north Harlem. From his headquarters here, George Washington mounted the defense of Manhattan in 1776.

This 1908 complex of Classical Revival buildings by Charles Pratt Huntington is named for the great naturalist John James Audubon, whose estate once included this land. Audubon is buried in nearby Trinity Cemetery. His gravestone, a Celtic cross, bears the symbolic images of his adventurous career: the birds he painted, his palette and brushes, and his rifles.

Facade of the American Academy of Arts and Letters

The complex was funded by the architect's cousin, civic benefactor Archer Milton Huntington. His dream was that it should be a center of culture and study. A central plaza contains statues by his wife, sculptress Anna Hyatt Huntington.

Audubon Terrace contains two themed museums that are worth seeking out. The American Academy of Arts and Letters was set up to honor American writers, artists, and composers, and 75 honorary members from overseas. On this illustrious roll are writers John Steinbeck and Mark Twain, painters Andrew Wyeth and Edward Hopper, and composer Aaron Copland. Exhibitions feature members' work. The library (for scholars, by appointment) has old manuscripts and first editions.

The Hispanic Society of America is a public museum and library based upon a personal collection amassed by Archer M. Huntington. The main gallery, in Spanish Renaissance style, holds works by Goya, El Greco, and Velázquez. There are also extensive collections of Spanish sculpture, decorative arts, prints, and photographs, with changing exhibits throughout the year.

Nearby, the Church of Our Lady of Esperanza stands on a knoll at 624 W 156th Street, which was once part of Audubon Park. It was built at the instigation of Señora de Barril, wife of the Spanish Consul-General in New York, as a church for the Spanish-speaking peoples of New York City. Built with funds provided by railroad magnate Archer Milton Huntington, the church was completed in 1912, and enlarged in the 1920s.

This is one of New York's few pre-Revolutionary buildings. Now a museum with nine restored period rooms, it was built in 1765 for Roger Morris. His former military colleague George Washington used it as temporary headquarters while defending Manhattan in 1776. In 1810 it was bought and updated by Stephen Jumel, a merchant of French-Caribbean descent, and his wife Eliza.

The pair furnished the house with souvenirs of their many visits to France. Her boudoir has a "dolphin" chair, reputedly bought from Napoleon. Eliza's social climbing and love affairs scandalized New York society. It was rumored that she let her husband bleed to death in 1832 so she could inherit his fortune. She later married Aaron Burr, aged 77, and divorced him three years later on the day he died.

The exterior of the Palladian-style, wood-sided Georgian house with classical portico and octagonal wing has been restored. The museum exhibits include many original Jumel pieces.

French architect Le Corbusier called this "the only seat of grace in the disordered city." While not as famous a landmark as its Brooklyn equivalent, this bridge by engineer Othmar Ammann and his architect Cass Gilbert has its own character and history. Plans for a bridge linking Manhattan to New Jersey had been in the pipeline for more than 60 years before the Port of New York Authority raised the $59 million to fund the project. It was Ammann who suggested a road bridge rather than the more expensive rail link. Work began in 1927 and the bridge was opened in 1931: first across were two young roller skaters from the Bronx. Today it is a vital link for commuter traffic and is in constant use.

Cass Gilbert had plans to clad the two towers with masonry but funds did not permit it, leaving an elegant skeletal structure 600 ft (183 m) high and 3,500 ft (1,065 m) long.

Ammann had also allowed for a second deck in his plan, and this lower deck was added in 1962, increasing the bridge's capacity enormously. Now the eastbound toll collection shows a traffic level of over 53 million cars per year.

Below the eastern tower is a lighthouse that was saved from possible demolition in 1951 by public pressure. Many thousands of young New Yorkers and children all around the world have loved the bedtime story The Little Red Lighthouse and the Great Gray Bridge, and wrote letters to save the lighthouse. Author Hildegard Hoyt Swift wove the tale around her two favorite New York landmarks.

The bridge is also home to the world's largest free-flying American flag, which is hung out on major federal holidays.

The Cloisters seen from Fort Tryon Park

This world-famous museum of medieval art resides in a building constructed from 1934 to 1938, incorporating medieval cloisters, chapels, and halls. Sculptor George Grey Barnard founded the museum in 1914;

John D. Rockefeller, Jr. funded the Metropolitan Museum of Art's 1925 purchase of the collection and donated the site at Fort Tryon Park and also the land on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, directly across from The Cloisters.

This elaborately carved ivory sculpture was made in England during the late 13th century.

★ Belles Heures

This book of hours, commissioned by Jean, Duc de Berry, is among a rotating installation of exquisite illuminated books and folios.

GALLERY GUIDE

The museum is organized roughly in chronological order. It starts with the Romanesque period (AD 1000) and moves to the Gothic (1150 to 1520). Sculptures, stained glass, paintings, and the gardens are on the lower floor. The Unicorn Tapestries are on the upper floor.

Exploring The Cloisters

Known particularly for its Romanesque and Gothic architectural sculpture, The Cloisters collection also includes illuminated manuscripts, stained glass, metalwork, enamels, ivories, and paintings. Among its tapestries is the renowned Unicorn series. The Cloisters' splendid medieval complex is unrivaled in North America.

ROMANESQUE ART

A lifelized 12th-century Spanish crucifix portraying Christ as the King of Heaven

Fanciful beasts and people, acanthus blossoms and scrollwork top the columns around The Cloisters. Many are in the Romanesque style that flourished in the 11th and 12th centuries. The museum has numerous masterpieces of Romanesque art and architecture, showing the style's powerful rounded arches and intricate details. Highly embellished capitals and warm, pink marble typify the 12th-century Cuxa Cloister from the Pyrenees in France. A griffin, a dragon, a centaur, and a basilisk are among the creatures parading over the Narbonne Arch nearby.

In a more solemn style, the apse from the church of Saint-Martin in Fuentidueña, Spain, is a massive rounded vault constructed from 3,300 blocks of limestone. It is decorated with a 12th-century fresco of the Virgin and Child and has a golden-crowned Christ depicted as triumphant over death.

More than 800 years ago, Benedictine and Cistercian monks sat on the cold stone benches in the Pontaut Chapter House. By the 19th century it had become so neglected that it was used as a stable. Its ribbed vaulting is a foretaste of the Gothic style to come.

GOthic ART

Where Romanesque art was solid, the Gothic style that followed (from 1150 to around 1520) was open, with pointed arches, glowing stained-glass windows, and three-dimensional sculpture. Gothic depictions of the Virgin and Child display exquisite craftsmanship.

The Gothic Chapel's brilliantly colored windows show scenes and figures from biblical stories. Lifesized tomb sculptures include the effigy of the Crusader knight Jean d'Alluye. During the 1790s,

Vaulted ceiling of the Pontaut Chapter House the statue's original home, La Clarté-Dieu Abbey in France, was vandalized, and the statue was used to bridge a stream.

In the Boppard Room, the lives of the saints are told in marvelous late Gothic stained glass from Germany.

Robert Campin's Flemish masterwork, the Annunciation altarpiece, is the focus of the Campin Room. It is an intimate room with furnishings that might have belonged to a wealthy 15th-century family.

THE TAPESTRIES

The Cloisters' tapestries are full of rich imagery and symbolism, and are among the museum's most highly prized treasures. The four Nine Heroes Tapestries bear the coat of arms of Jean, Duc de Berry, who was a brother of the King of France and one of the greatest art patrons of the Middle Ages. These tapestries are one of only two sets that survived from the late 14th century; the other set belonged to Jean's brother, Louis, Duc d'Anjou.

Nine great heroes of the past – three pagan, three Hebrew, three Christian – are shown with members of the medieval court, from cardinals, knights, and damsels to musicians.

In an adjacent room is the magnificent Hunt of the Unicorn, a series of seven tapestries woven in Brussels around 1500. It depicts the symbolic hunt of the mythical unicorn and capture by a maiden.

Although they were misused in the 19th century to protect fruit trees from frost damage,

MEDIEVAL GARDENS

More than 300 varieties of plants grown in the Middle Ages can be found in The Cloisters' gardens. The Bonnefont Cloister has many species of aromatic, magic, medicinal, and culinary herbs. The Trie Cloister features plants shown in the Unicorn Tapestries and reveals the use of flowers in medieval symbolism: roses (for the Virgin Mary), pansies (the Holy Trinity), and daisies (the eye of Christ).

Bonnefont Cloister

the tapestries are remarkably well preserved. They are also astonishing in detail, with

Julius Caesar, entertained by court musicians, in a Nine Heroes tapestry literally hundreds of minutely observed plants and animals. Their story can be read as a tale of courtly love, but the series is also an allegory of the Crucifixion and the Resurrection of Christ.

THE TREASURY

In medieval times, precious objects were stored for safe-keeping in sanctuaries. At The Cloisters, they are found in the Treasury.

The collection includes several Gothic illuminated "books of hours." These were used for the private devotions of the nobility, such as the Limbourg brothers' Belles Heures, made for Jean, Duc de Berry, in 1410, and the tiny, palm-sized version by Gothic master Jean Pucelle for the Queen of France, around 1325.

Other religious artifacts range from a 13th-century English ivory Virgin to the 14th-century silver gilt and enamel reliquary shrine thought to have belonged to Queen Elizabeth of Hungary, along with censers, chalices, candlesticks, and crucifixes.

Curiosities here include the "Monkey Cup," an enameled beaker probably made for the 15th-century Burgundian court, showing mischievous monkeys robbing a sleeping peddler; an intricately carved rosary bead the size of a walnut; a 13th-century boat-shaped, jeweled saltcellar; and a full set of playing cards dating to the 15th century.

Once a prosperous suburb with a famous Grand Concourse lined with apartment buildings for the wealthy, the Bronx has now become an unfortunate symbol of urban decay. Still, diverse ethnic communities, unique resources, and charming areas, such as Riverdale at the northern end, remain.

This 28-acre (11-ha) oasis of beauty boasts fine views over to the New Jersey Palisades across the Hudson River. The former estate of financier and conservationist George W. Perkins, Wave Hill has had many distinguished tenants, including Theodore Roosevelt, Mark Twain, and Arturo Toscanini. Perkins also owned neighboring estates, underneath which he built a recreation center complete with bowling alley, and a tunnel leading into the main building.

The house is frequently used for concerts. They often take place in the grand Armor Hall, designed in 1928 for Bashford Dean, who was then the curator of the collection of arms and armor at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

The gardens were originally designed by Viennese landscape gardener Albert Millard. There are also greenhouses, lawns, an herb garden, and woodlands. Exhibitions range from sculpture to horticulture.

The adjoining Riverdale Park, which is also open to the public, has attractive woodland and paths along the river.

This has been the home of the New York Yankees baseball team since 1923. Among Yankee heroes are two of the greatest players of all time: Babe Ruth and Joe DiMaggio (who was also famous for marrying the actress Marilyn Monroe in 1954). In 1921 left-hander Babe Ruth, wearing the Yankees' distinctive pinstripes, hit the stadium's first home run – against the Boston Red Sox, his former team. The stadium was completed two years later by Jacob Ruppert, the owner of the Yankees, and became known as “the house that Ruth built”.

The stadium had a facelift in the mid-1970s, and now seats up to 54,000 people who come for sports, concerts, and other events. One of the largest annual gatherings has been that of the Jehovah's Witnesses and in 1950, 123,707 people attended in a single day. In 1965 Pope Paul VI celebrated mass before a crowd of more than 80,000. It was the first visit to North America by a pope – the second was made in 1979 when John Paul II also visited the stadium.

The Yankees remain one of the top teams in the American League. There are five Yankee Clubhouse stores in New York where tickets for tours and games can be purchased.

The New York Yankee Stadium is now located parallel to the old stadium at 161st and 164th streets.

Queens

A big, sprawling borough, Queens has a wide variety of attractions and residential and commercial areas, including Long Island City, where exciting museums and restaurants are springing up all over. Development of the borough accelerated after 1909, when the construction of Queensboro Bridge made commuting easier. The city's main airports are here, and there are many different ethnic enclaves including the Greek neighborhood of Astoria and the various Asian communities in Flushing.

The site of New York's two World's Fairs now offers expansive waterside picnic grounds and a multitude of attractions. These include the 50,000-seat Shea Stadium, the home of the New York Mets baseball team and a popular site for rock concerts. Flushing Meadow is also home to the US Tennis Center, where the prestigious United States Open is played. The courts are open for would-be Agassis, Grafts, and Everts for the remainder of the year. In the 1920s this area was known as the Corona Dump, a nightmarish place of salt marshes and great piles of smoldering trash. In The Great Gatsby, author F. Scott Fitzgerald dubbed it the "valley of ashes." It reeked of rotting garbage and glowed red at night.

New York's Parks' Commissioner Robert Moses was the driving force behind its transformation. A whole mountain of rubbish was removed and the river was totally re-channeled. The marsh was drained and sewage works were built, helping to restore the area. This site was to serve as the site for the 1939 World's Fair, at which a world on the brink of war saluted the elusive notion of world peace.

The Unisphere, symbol of the 1964 fair, still dominates the remains of the fairground. This giant hollow ball of green steel, built by the US Steel Corporation, is 12 stories high and weighs a massive 350 tons.

Temporary exhibitions are hosted alongside permanent works and many pieces are interactive. In summer, music is performed in the courtyard.

Brooklyn

The bandstand at Prospect Park (see p248)

If Brooklyn were a separate city, it would be the country's fourth largest. It has a character all of its own. Many entertainment greats – Mel Brooks, Phil Silvers, Woody Allen, and Neil Simon among them – celebrate their birthplace with great affection and humor. Brooklyn is the ultimate melting pot, with West Indians, Hasidic Jews, Russians, Italians, and Arabs living side by side. Among the diverse neighborhoods are the historic residential districts of Park Slope and Brooklyn Heights.

The Brooklyn Children's Museum was the first to be designed especially for children and was founded in 1899. Since then, it has been a model, inspiration, and consultant to the development of more than 250 museums for children across the country and all over the world. Housed in a high-tech, specially designed underground building dating from 1976, it is one of the most imaginative children's museums anywhere.

The layout of the building, which has doubled in size and is a maze of complex interconnected passageways running off the main "people tube" – a huge drainage pipe that connects the four levels. The emphasis here is on involvement and hands-on exhibits and everywhere you look there are curiosities to be discovered, experienced, made, or played with. There is even a walk-on piano like the one in the film Big – children of every age find it quite irresistible.

Special exhibitions and events are designed to help children learn about the planet, resolve their fears or problems, understand other cultures, and discover the past. The squeals of laughter that are always heard are a sign of this

Home to the Brooklyn Philharmonic, the Academy of Music (BAM) is Brooklyn's leading cultural venue and the oldest, founded in 1858. It offers outstanding performances, often tending toward the innovative and avant-garde.

The classic 1908 building, designed by Herts & Tallant, was inaugurated with a production of Gounod's opera Faust featuring the Neapolitan tenor Enrico Caruso. Among the greats who have performed here are actress Sarah Bernhardt, ballerina Anna Pavlova, musicians Pablo Casals and Sergei Rachmaninoff, poets Edna St. Vincent Millay and Carl Sandburg, and statesman Winston Churchill. Many international touring groups have made appearances here, including Britain's Royal Shakespeare Company.

The BAM Next Wave Festival, which usually runs over the last three months of the year, has presented contemporary artists such as musicians

David Byrne and Philip Glass and choreographers Pina Bausch and Mark Morris. The BAM also runs the Harvey Theater nearby, a movie theater now used for dance, drama, and music events. BAM Rose Cinemas show first-run independent films and BAMcinématek has classics, retrospectives, festivals, and sneak previews.

This wonderful enclave of beautiful Victorian town houses was developed on the edge of Prospect Park in the 1880s. It served the upper-middle-class professionals who were able to commute into Manhattan after the Brooklyn Bridge was opened in 1883. The shady streets are lined with two- to five-story houses in every architectural style popular in the late 19th century, some with the towers, turrets, and curlicues so representative of the era. Particularly fine examples are in Romanesque Revival style, with rounded entry arches.

The Montauk Club at 25 Eighth Avenue combines the style of Venice's Ca' d'Oro palazzo with the friezes and gargoyles of the Montauk Indians, for whom this popular 19th-century gathering place was named.

Olmsted and Vaux considered this park, opened in 1867, better than their earlier Central Park (see pp203–09). The Long Meadow, a sweep of broad lawns and grand vistas, is the longest unbroken swath of green space in New York.

Olmsted's belief was that "a feeling of relief is experienced by entering them [the parks] on escaping from the cramped, confining and controlling circumstances of the streets of the town."

Among the many notable features are Stanford White's colonnaded Croquet Shelter, and the pools and weeping willows of the Vale of Cashmere. The Music Grove bandstand shows Japanese influences and hosts both jazz and classical music concerts throughout the summer.

A favorite feature of the park is the Camperdown Elm, an ancient and twisted tree planted in 1872. The Friends of Prospect Park raise money to keep it and all the park trees healthy. This old elm has inspired many poems and paintings. Prospect Park has a wide variety of landscapes, from classical gardens dotted with statues to rocky glens with running brooks. In the mid-19th century, Brooklyn poet Walt Whitman composed many of his works on Coney Island, at that time untamed Atlantic coastline. By the 1920s, Coney Island was billing itself as the "World's Largest Playground." Three huge fairgrounds built by 1904 (Luna Park, Dream-land, and Steeplechase Park) provided a combination of hair-raising rides and nearby beaches. The subway arrived in 1920, and the 1921 boardwalk ensured Coney Island's popularity throughout the Depression.

A main attraction is the New York Aquarium, on 14 acres (6 ha) by the sea, with over 350 species. The Coney Island Museum has memorabilia, relics of old rides, and souvenirs. Coney Island is still exciting: the boardwalk yields ocean views, and the Cyclone roller coaster is an official city landmark. The Mermaid Parade in June is a major annual event.

When it opened in 1897, the Brooklyn Museum building, designed to be the largest cultural edifice in the world, was the greatest achievement of New York architects McKim, Mead & White.

Though only one-sixth completed, the museum is today one of the most impressive cultural institutions in the United States, with a permanent encyclopedic collection of some one million objects, which are housed in a grand structure of 560,000 sq ft (41,805 sq m).

Exploring the Collection

The Brooklyn Museum houses one of the finest art collections in the United States. Its strengths include an outstanding collection of Native American art from the Southwest; American period rooms; exquisite pieces of ancient Egyptian and Islamic art; and important American and European paintings.

ARTS OF AFRICA, THE PACIFIC, AND THE AMERICAS

The Brooklyn Museum set a precedent in the United States in 1923 by exhibiting African objects as works of art rather than artifacts. Since then, the African art collection has grown steadily in both importance and size.

Exhibits include a rare intricately carved ivory gong from the Benin kingdom of 16th-century Nigeria, one of only five in existence.

The museum also has a notable collection of Native American work, including totem poles, textiles, and pottery. A 19th-century deerskin shirt, once worn by a chief of the Blackfoot tribe, depicts his brave and daring exploits in battle.

Blackfoot tribe deerskin shirt, decorated with porcupine quills and glass beads (19th century)

Ancient American artistic traditions are represented by Peruvian textiles, Central American gold, and Mexican sculpture. A beautifully preserved tunic from Peru, dating from AD 600, is so tightly woven that its vibrant symbolic designs appear to have been painted onto the cloth rather than woven in the traditional manner.

The Oceanic collection includes sculpture from the Solomon Islands, Papua New Guinea, and New Zealand.

ASIAN ART

Changing exhibitions from the museum's permanent collection of Chinese, Japanese, Korean, Indian, Southeast Asian, and Islamic art are always on display. Japanese and Chinese paintings, Indian miniatures, and Islamic calligraphy complement the Asian sculpture, textiles, and ceramics. The collections of Japanese folk art, Chinese cloisonné (enamel work), and Oriental carpets are of particular note. Good examples of Buddhist art range from a variety of Chinese, Indian, and Southeast Asian Buddhas to a mandala-patterned temple banner from 14th-century Tibet, painted in rich, luminous watercolors.

Seated Buddha torso in limestone, from India (late 3rd century AD)

DECORATIVE ARTS

The decorative arts collection reflects changes in domestic life and design from the 17th century to the present.

The Moorish Smoking Room, from John D. Rockefeller's brownstone house, embodies elegant New York living in the 1880s. There is also a 1928–30 Art Deco study from a Park Avenue apartment, including a walk-in bar that was hidden behind paneling during the Prohibition era (see pp30–31).

More than 350 items from the museum's collection of silver, furniture, ceramics, and textiles are featured in the Luce Center for American Art. Although centered mostly on American art, the selection also includes pieces of Native American and Spanish colonial art.

Normandie chrome pitcher, by Peter Müller-Munk (1935)

The Luce galleries are arranged thematically and explore crucial moments and ideas in American visual culture over the past 300 years. Among the collection are pieces by John Singer Sargent, Frank Lloyd Wright, and Georgia O'Keeffe.

EGYPTIAN, CLASSICAL, AND ANCIENT MIDDLE EASTERN ART

Recognized as among the world's finest, the Egyptian collection holds many masterpieces. It begins with an early female figure dating from 3500 BC, and encompasses sculptures, statues, tomb paintings, and reliefs as well as funerary paraphernalia. Of the latter, the most unusual is the coffin of an ibis, probably recovered from the vast animal cemetery of Tuna el-Gebel in Middle Egypt. The ibis was a sacred bird representing the god Thoth, and this coffin is made of solid silver and wood overlaid with gold leaf, with rock crystal for the bird's eyes. These galleries have been renovated into a state-of-the-art, high-tech installation.

Among the artifacts from the Greek and Roman civilizations are statuary, pottery, bronzes, jewelry, and mosaics.

Among the Ancient Near and Middle Eastern exhibits are an extensive collection of pottery and 12 alabaster reliefs from the Assyrian palace of King Ashurnasirpal II. These date from around 883-859 BC and depict the king fighting, overseeing his crops, and purifying the "sacred tree," a major icon in Assyrian religion.

Sandstone reliefs from Thebes in Egypt (around 760-656 BC), depicting the great god Amun-Re and his consort Mut

PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

This section contains works from the 14th century to the present, including a well-known and outstanding 19th-century French art collection with works by Degas, Rodin, Monet, Cézanne, Matisse, and Pissarro. It also boasts one of the largest holdings of Spanish

Pierre de Wiessant (about 1886) by Auguste Rodin, from his Burghers of Calais group

Colonial paintings and one of the best collections of North American paintings to be found in the United States.

The museum's 20th-century American collection includes, appropriately, Brooklyn Bridge by Georgia O'Keeffe.

The Sculpture Garden holds architectural ornamentation taken from demolished New York buildings, including statues rescued from the original Penn Station, and a replica of the Statue of Liberty.

PRINTS, DRAWINGS, AND PHOTOGRAPHS

The museum has an important collection of prints, drawings, and photographs that are constantly rotated for conservation purposes. The range includes a rare woodcut print by Dürer entitled The Great Triumphal Chariot and works by Piranesi. The Impressionist and Post-Impressionist collection includes works by Toulouse-Lautrec and Mary Cassatt, the only American woman associated with the Impressionist movement. There are lithographs by James McNeill Whistler, Winslow

Rotherhithe, an etching by James McNeill Whistler (1860)

Homer engravings, and a superb selection of drawings by Fragonard, Paul Klee, Van Gogh, Picasso, and Gorky, among others, many of them in black and white.

The photography collection consists mainly of works by major 20th-century American photographers, including a 1924 portrait of Mary Pickford by Edward Steichen and work by Margaret Bourke-White, Berenice Abbott, and Robert Mapplethorpe.

Staten Island

Apart from the famous ferry ride, Staten Island and its attractions are not well known to New Yorkers in general. Residents feel so ignored, in fact, that they've talked about seceding from the city. Visitors who venture beyond the ferry terminal, however, will be pleasantly surprised to find hills, lakes, and greenery, with expanses of open space, amazing harbor views, and well-preserved early New York buildings. One of the biggest surprises here is a cache of Tibetan art that is hidden away in a replica of a Buddhist temple.

There are now 29 buildings, 14 of which are open to the public, in New York's only restored village and outdoor museum. The village was first named Cockslostown, after the local shellfish, but was soon corrupted to "Cuckoldstow," much to the annoyance of the residents. By the end of the Revolutionary

The complex, set on 100 acres (40 ha), includes wagon sheds, a courthouse built in 1837, houses, several shops, and a tavern. There are also seasonal workshops where traditional rural crafts are demonstrated to visitors.

Founded in 1801 as a haven for aged sailors, Snug Harbor is now an arts center, with a complex of 28 buildings in various stages of restoration. There are five stately Greek Revival gems dating from 1831 to 1880, the finest such collection in the US. The oldest, the Main Hall, is the

Other buildings house the award-winning Staten Island Children's Museum and Veterans Memorial Hall, used for indoor performances. A sculpture festival and summer shows are held on the lawns. The Staten Island Botanical Garden has a noted orchid collection and a beautiful rose garden.

Snug Harbor is the legacy of a Scottish sailor, Robert Richard Randall, who became rich in the Revolutionary War and bequeathed this property to be used by seamen, enabling them to enjoy its harbor views.

lost all her money in the stock market crash of 1929, and her poverty forced her into a public poorhouse at the age of 84. One year later, her photographic talent was finally recognized by Life magazine, which published an article about her, earning her enough money to enter a nursing home. She left 3,500 negatives dating from 1880 to 1930. Today, the Friends of Alice Austen House mounts exhibitions of her best work.

Jones Beach was the creation of Robert Moses, New York's Parks' Commissioner (see p246), who transformed this narrow spit of land into Long Island's most accessible and popular beach in 1929. There are sand dunes, surf on the Atlantic side, and sheltered water in the bay. There is also miniature golf, swimming pools, restaurants, and the Jones Beach Theater, which hosts concerts in the summer.

Robert Moses State Park is on the next island to the east, Fire Island, which is over 30 miles (48 km) long, yet less than 900 yds (800 m) across. Areas of the island are totally unspoiled, with long stretches of white sands, making it a great place for walking and bicycling in peaceful surroundings. Fire Island also has one of the few remaining forests on the Eastern Seaboard.

Fire Island's communities are small and varied. Some are favored by singles looking for the company of the opposite sex, others are sedate and family-orientated, and still others are favorites with New York's large gay community.

SEVEN GUIDED WALKS

Walking in New York is an excellent way to discover the human scale of the city. The following 16 pages explore the unique character and charm of New York through seven thematic walks. These range from an exploration of Greenwich Village and SoHo's literary and artistic connections (see pp260–61) to a trip across the Brooklyn Bridge for spectacular views and a glimpse of 19th-century New York (see pp266–7).

In addition, each of the 15 areas of Manhattan described in the Area by Area section of this book has a short walk on its Street-by-Street map, taking you past many of the interesting sights in that area.

Various organizations run walking tours of the city.

These range from serious appraisals of architectural history to a guide to the ghosts of Broadway. Details of tour organizers are listed on page 387. Although New York's crime rate has dropped to a record low, as in any major city take extra care of your personal belongings while walking (see p372–3). Plan your route ahead and walk only during daylight hours.

A 90-Minute Walk in the Lower East Side

This walk is through old immigrant neighborhoods that have given New York its unique flavor, and illustrates the ever-changing texture of the city as neighborhoods are rediscovered and one set of newcomers replaces another. Along the way you can experience a variety of cultures and cuisines. Sunday is the best day for local color. See more about Lower East Side on pages 92–101.

The Lower East Side

Begin on East Houston Street, the border between the Lower East Side and the East Village, where some of the best traditional Jewish cuisine can be found at Yonah Schimmel Knish Bakery ① (137) and Russ & Daughters ② (179), run by the great-grandson of the founder and famed for smoked fish and caviar. Katz's Delicatessen ③ (205) has been a fixture for over 100 years.

Continue to Norfolk Street and turn right to see the Angel Orensanz Center ④ (172), housed in New York's oldest synagogue building.

Turn right on Rivington for another synagogue survivor, the Shaarei Shomoyim First Romanian-American Congregation ⑤ (89) in a handsome 1890 brick building. The interior, while shabby, is still impressive.

The Lower East Side has been discovered by hip young New Yorkers and is now home to cutting-edge boutiques, trendy clubs, and restaurants. On Rivington cool fashion shops share the blocks with the old. Make a left onto Orchard Street, the traditional center of the Jewish Lower East Side.

Pushcarts that lined the block are gone and the sidewalk stands sell mostly cheap merchandise, but many stores offer discount designer leather and fashion. All are closed on Saturday, so Sunday is the busiest day.

A must stop for historians is the Lower East Side Tenement Museum ⑥ (108 Orchard). An original tenement has been restored to show how three immigrant families lived from 1874 to the 1930s.

A detour across Broome Street on Orchard brings you to Guss' Pickle Company ⑦ (85–7), which was the inspiration for the 1988 film Crossing Delancey.

Customers still line up for the crunchy pickles sold from barrels.

Come back to Broome and turn left for another unique survivor, the Kehila Kedosha Janina Synagogue and Museum ⑧ (280 Broome), a small but fascinating congregation with a little upstairs museum.

Another left along Eldridge will take you, beyond Canal Street, to the grand Eldridge Street Synagogue ⑨ (12), the first Eastern European synagogue in New York, which also houses a museum on the Jewish community.

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Starting point: East Houston St.
Length: 2 miles (3.2 km).

Getting there: Take the subway F or V to Second Avenue; exit East Houston at Eldridge. Other stops: F to Delancey, J, M, Z to Essex. The M15 bus stops on East Houston and on the corner of Delancey and Allen Streets, M14A and M9 run along Essex Street. Returning from Chinatown-Little Italy, Canal Street station is served by the J, M, N, Q, R, W, and 6 trains.

Stopping-off points: Little Italy's cafés are perfect for coffee and cakes. For more substantial fare, Sweet-n-Tart at 20 Mott Street is good for Chinese food, or for Italian on Mulberry Street, Il Cortile (125) or Il Palazzo (151). Il Laboratorio del Gelato, at 95 Orchard Street, is a popular spot in summer, offering dozens of flavors of ice cream and sorbet.

Chinatown

Turn around and return to Canal Street, pausing to admire the spire of the Chrysler Building and the city skyline in view in the distance from Eldridge.

Turn left and cross the Bowery, where many jewelry shops remain, remnants of the city's original Diamond District ⑩ (1). As you continue, the shops give way to stalls selling an exotic array of vegetables, and butcher shops unusual fare. For spiritual sustenance, visit the Eastern States Buddhist Temple ⑩ in Mott Street (64b).

At Bayard Street, turn left to see all the Chinese political posters and messages on the Wall of Democracy, then turn back and walk to Mulberry Street. The curve next to Columbus Park was Mulberry Bend ⑩, once notorious for gang murders and mayhem.

An Italian deli in Little Italy ⑬

Little Italy

Walk up Mulberry Street toward Grand Street and you are suddenly in Little Italy ⑬. Small in area though it is, and encroached on by Chinatown, this is a colorful few blocks of old-world restaurants, coffee shops, and stores selling homemade pasta, sausages, breads, and pastries. The Italian population has dwindled over the years, but a staunch group of merchants remain, determined to retain the area's Italian atmosphere. Their stronghold is Mulberry Street between Broome and Canal streets, with a few shops holding their own on Grand Street near Mulberry. If you continue to walk on Grand, however, you are quickly back into Chinatown. The big event of the year is the Feast of San Gennaro, named for the patron saint of Naples. For 11 nights in September, Mulberry Street is jammed with locals and visitors enjoying the parades and the Italian food, with rows of sizzling sausages stalls.

A 90-Minute Walk in Greenwich Village and SoHo

A stroll through the patchwork quilt of streets in Greenwich Village takes you to where New York's best-known writers and artists have lived, worked, and played. It ends with a tour of SoHo's galleries and museums, where established artists show their work. For more details on sights in Greenwich Village, see pages 108–15, and for SoHo sights, see pages 102–07.

Author Mark Twain, who lived on 10th Street

West 10th Street

The junction of 8th Street and 6th Avenue ① has many book, music, and clothing stores nearby. Walk up Sixth to West Ninth Street to see (on the left at 425) Jefferson Market Courthouse ②.

Turn right at West 10th Street ③ to the Alexander Onassis Center for Hellenic Studies (58). A passageway at the front once led up to the Tile Club, a gathering place for the artists of the Tenth Street Studio, where Augustus Saint-Gaudens, John LaFarge, and Winslow Homer lived. Mark Twain lived at 24 West 10th Street, and Edward Albee at 50 West 10th.

Back across Sixth Avenue is Milligan Place ④, with 19th-century houses, and Patchin Place ⑤, where the poets E. E. Cummings and John Masefield both lived. Farther on is the site of the Ninth Circle bar ⑥ which when it opened in 1898 was known as “Regnaneschi’s.” It was the subject of John Sloan’s painting Regnaneschi’s Saturday Night. Playwright Edward Albee first saw the question “Who’s afraid of Virginia Woolf?” scrawled on a mirror here.

The unusual exterior of Twin Peaks ⑨

Greenwich Village

Turn left at Waverly Place past the Three Lives Bookstore (154 West 10th St), a typical literary gathering spot, to Christopher Street and the Northern Dispensary ⑦.

Follow Grove Street along Christopher Park to Sheridan Square, the busy hub of the Village. The Circle Repertory Theater ⑧, which premiered plays by Pulitzer Prizewinner Lanford Wilson, is now closed.

Cross Seventh Avenue and bear left on to Grove Street. At the corner of Bedford Street, you can’t miss “Twin Peaks” ⑨ (102 Bedford), a home for artists in the 1920s.

Turn back around to look at the northeast corner of Bedford and Grove streets ⑩: the exterior of this edifice had a recurring role in the TV sitcom Friends as the characters’ apartment building. 75½ Bedford is the narrowest house in the Village, and was once the home of feminist poet Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Walk up Carmine to Sixth Avenue and turn right at Waverly Place. At 116 Waverly ⑪, Anne Charlotte Lynch, an English teacher, held weekly gatherings in her town house for such eminent friends as Herman Melville and Edgar Allan Poe, who gave his first reading of The Raven here.

A detour left of just half a block will bring you to MacDougal Alley ⑫, a lane of carriage houses in which Gertrude Vanderbilt Whitney had her studio. She opened the first Whitney Museum here in 1932, just behind the studio.

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Starting point: 8th St/6th Ave.

Length: 2 miles (3.2 km).

Getting there: Take subway train A, B, C, D, E, F or V to West Fourth Street-Washington Square station (Eighth Street exit). Fifth Avenue buses M2 and M3 stop at Eighth Street. From here, walk one block west to Sixth. The M5 bus loops around Washington Square back to Sixth Avenue and Eighth Street.

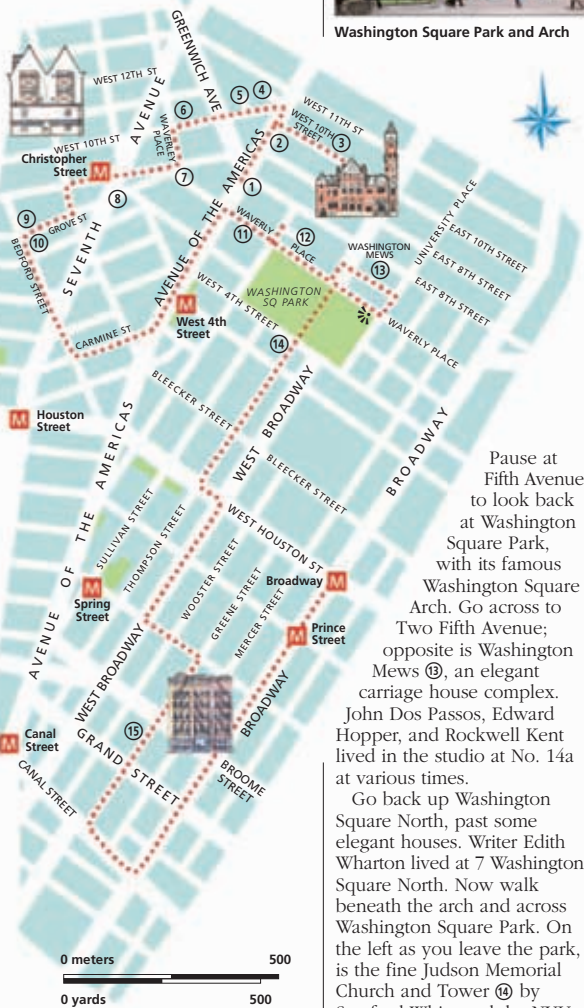

Stopping-off points: The Pink Tea Cup, 42 Grove Street, is good for lunch. Fanelli’s Café, 94 Prince Street, has been serving customers since 1847 and was once a speakeasy.

Washington Square

Back on MacDougal, turn left to Washington Square North, to see the finest Greek Revival houses in the United States. Built of red brick, they have marble balustrades and entrances flanked by columns. Writer Henry James set his Washington Square in No. 18, his grandmother's home.

SoHo

Walk south on Thompson, a typical Village street lined with bars, cafés, and shops. Turn left at Houston, SoHo's northern limit, and right on West Broadway, lined with some of the city's most famous galleries along with a large number of chic and arty boutiques.

Turn left at Spring Street for yet more tempting shops, then right at Greene Street ⑮, which is the heart of the Cast-Iron Historic District. Many of these fine buildings now house art galleries.

Turn left at the end of Greene Street to Canal Street, the end of SoHo, to see how quickly the atmosphere of New York can change. This noisy street is full of hawkers and discount electronics stores. You can explore bargains for the next two blocks and then turn left up Broadway. Keen shoppers can turn right on Spring Street and head for the NoLita district, featuring clothes by trendy, aspiring designers.

Pause at Fifth Avenue to look back at Washington Square Park, with its famous Washington Square Arch. Go across to Two Fifth Avenue; opposite is Washington Mews ⑮, an elegant carriage house complex. John Dos Passos, Edward Hopper, and Rockwell Kent lived in the studio at No. 14a at various times.

Go back up Washington Square North, past some elegant houses. Writer Edith Wharton lived at 7 Washington Square North. Now walk beneath the arch and across Washington Square Park. On the left as you leave the park, is the fine Judson Memorial Church and Tower ⑭ by Stanford White and the NYU Loeb Student Center. The Center was once a boarding house, known as the "house of genius," and is where Theodore Dreiser wrote An American Tragedy.

A Two-Hour Walk in the Upper East Side

A promenade along upper Fifth Avenue and its environs will take you past the best remaining examples of New York's turn-of-the-century gilded age. A detour through the old German district of Yorkville leads to a riverside stroll to Gracie Mansion, official residence of the city's mayor, dating from 1799. For details on Upper East Side sights, see pages 182–203.

From the Frick to the Met

Begin at the Frick mansion ①, built in 1913–14 for coal magnate Henry Clay Frick and home to an exquisite art collection (pp202–3). Many such mansions were built as New York's first families outdid each other with miniature Versailles châteaux and Venetian palazzos. Most of those still standing have now become either institutions or museums. The apartment building opposite the Frick is typical of those where today's affluent New Yorkers live.

East on 70th are two of the city's top art galleries, Knoedler & Co (19) and Hirsch & Adler ② (21). Walk up Madison to the corner of 72nd Street, to the big Polo-Ralph Lauren store ③, the 1898 French Renaissance home of Gertrude Rhinelander Waldo. Wander inside to see the elegant restored interior.

Walk back toward Fifth on the north side of 72nd, past two limestone beauties that once housed the Lycée Français de New York ④. Continue along Fifth Avenue to 73rd Street. Turn east to 11, Joseph Pulitzer's former home ⑤.

A few blocks on, between Lexington and Third, is a fine row of town houses ⑥. Back on Fifth Avenue, walk to

East River and Gracie Mansion Henderson Place (15) at East End Avenue is a cluster of 24 Queen Anne town houses. Carl Schurz

Park opposite was named for the city's most prominent German immigrant, editor of Harper's Weekly and the New York Post. The park promenade atop East River Drive leads to a view of Hell Gate, where the Harlem River, Long Island Sound, and New York harbor meet.

From the walkway you can see the back of Gracie Mansion (16), the mayor's official residence. Walk west on 88th Street past the Church of the Holy Trinity (17) and at Lexington Avenue go to 92nd Street and west past two of the few wooden houses left in Manhattan (18).

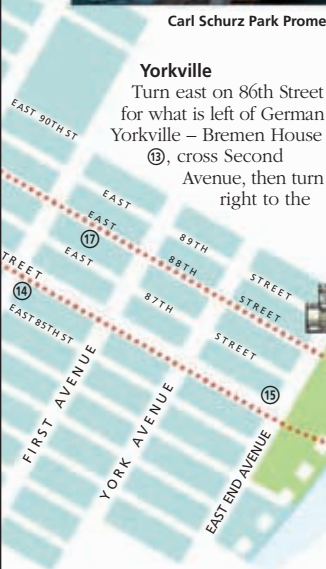

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Starting point: Frick Collection.

Length: 3 miles (4.8 km).

Getting there: Take subway train 6 to 68th Street and Lexington, then walk west (left) three blocks to Fifth Avenue. Or take the M1, M2, M3, or M4 bus up Madison Avenue to 70th Street and walk one block west.

Stopping-off points: Try the cafés at the Whitney and Guggenheim museums. Head to Café Sabarsky at the Neue Galerie (5th Ave/86th St) for Austrian food, or try the Heidelberg Café (2nd Ave off 86th St) for authentic Bavarian. Madison Avenue between 92nd and 93rd has many places to eat, including Sarabeth's Kitchen, with its excellent weekend brunch.

Carnegie Hill

Back on Fifth Avenue, turn downtown past the Felix Warburg Mansion of 1908, now the Jewish Museum (19), and continue to 91st Street and the huge Andrew Carnegie home, now the Cooper-Hewitt Museum (20). Built in 1902 in the style of an English country manor, it gave the area the unofficial name of Carnegie Hill. The James Burden House (21) at 7 East 91st Street, built for Vanderbilt heiress Adele Sloan in 1905, has a spiral staircase under a stained-glass skylight that was known in society as "the stairway to heaven." At 1 East 91st, the financier Otto Kahn's Italian Renaissance-style residence was a showplace with a drive-through porch and interior courtyard. It is now the Convent of the Sacred Heart School.

A Three-Hour Walk in Brooklyn

A trip across New York's most famous crossing leads to Brooklyn Heights, the city's first suburb. This neighborhood has a 19th-century feel, mixed with a hint of Middle Eastern cultures. The riverfront promenade has unrivaled views of Manhattan. For more details on sights in Brooklyn, see pages 247–53.

Fire Station on Old Fulton Street

Fulton Ferry Landing

About 3,580 ft (1 km) long, the Brooklyn Bridge span yields thrilling views of the lower New York skyline and prize photo opportunities. Take a taxi, or if you have time, walk across to Brooklyn.

On the far side, follow the Tillary Street sign to the right, turn right at the bottom of the stairs, then take the first path through the park and walk down Cadman Plaza West ① under the Brooklyn-Queens Expressway; here Cadman becomes Old Fulton Street. You can see the bridge on the right as you head to the river at Water Street and the Fulton Ferry landing ②. During the Revolutionary War, George Washington's troops fled to Manhattan from here. In 1814, this was the depot for the ferry connecting Brooklyn and Manhattan Island. This transformed Brooklyn Heights from a predominantly farming area to a residential district. The area is full of character and is still a very popular place to live. To the right is the River Café ③. This restaurant's fine cuisine and spectacular views of the Manhattan skyline make it one of New York's most exceptional dining spots. Double back past the former Eagle Warehouse ④ of 1893.

Brooklyn Heights

From the landing, turn right to steep Everitt Street up Columbia Heights, on to Middagh Street, and along the streets of Brooklyn Heights. 24 Middagh ⑤ is one of the oldest, built in 1824.

Next turn right on Willow and left on Cranberry; here the town houses range from wooden clapboards to brick Federal-style to brownstones. Except for cars and a few modern buildings, you could be in the 19th century.

Many famous people have lived here. Truman Capote wrote Breakfast at Tiffany's and In Cold Blood in the basement of 70

He set the type for his Leaves of Grass at a print shop near the corner of Cranberry and Fulton. The town houses now on the site are called Whitman Close.

Turn right along Hicks. The Hicks family, local farmers, inspired the name "hick" for a yokel. Turn left on Orange Street to the Plymouth Church ⑥, home of Henry Ward Beecher, an antislavery preacher. His sister, Harriet

At Montague, turn onto the riverfront Promenade ⑧. A tablet at the entrance marks the site of Four Chimneys, the house where George Washington lived during the Battle of Long Island. TIPS FOR WALKERS Starting point: Brooklyn Bridge.

Length: 3½ miles (5.5 km).

Getting there: Take subway train 4, 5, or 6 on the Lexington Ave line to Brooklyn Bridge–City Hall (nearest stop to the bridge). The M15 Second Ave bus also stops at City Hall. Returning to Manhattan, take train 2, 3, 4, 5, M, N, R, or V from Borough Hall, or 2, 3, 4, 5, M, N, R, Q, W from Atlantic Ave.

Stopping-off points: Teresa's at 80 Montague St has Polish dishes at reasonable prices. Try Henry's End, 44 Henry St, for fine dining in Brooklyn Heights, and the Brawta Caribbean Café, at 347 Atlantic Ave, for Caribbean cuisine.

The Damascus Bakery at 195 makes the most delicious filo pastries. Various other shops here sell Arabic books, tapes, DVDs, and CDs.

A 90-Minute Waterfront Walk

From the breezy Battery Park City Esplanade with its sweeping river views and upscale condos to the magnificent schooners moored at South Street Seaport, this waterfront amble introduces you to New York's formidable maritime legacy. The concrete jungle may lie just a few blocks inland, yet it seems worlds away, as the bleating horns and hiss of the crosstown buses are blessedly muffled. Jazz great Charlie Parker lived across the street from the park from 1950–55 ⑯. Walk to the southwestern corner on 7th Street where 7A ⑰ serves breakfast 24 hours a day. Down the block, Turntable Lab 04 ⑱ sells DJ equipment and vinyl. If thirsty, continue west toward Second Avenue to McSorley's Old Ale House ⑲, one of the oldest bars in the city. Then get back onto Second Avenue and turn right to see where the old Fillmore East Auditorium ⑳ used to be (105). This classic rock scene featured such legends as The Doors, Jimi Hendrix, Janis Joplin, and Pink Floyd. The Who even premiered their rock opera Tommy here. Look left at 6th Street – “Indian Restaurant Row” ㉑ – where Bengali curry houses compete for business. Go down Second Avenue to number 80 ㉒; this was the home of Joe “The Boss” Masseria, head of the Italian mob in the 1920s. A 90-Minute Walk in Harlem Few neighborhoods in New York are as rich in cultural history as Harlem, a haven for African-American heritage. This walk starts in Strivers' Row, one of the few areas that provided affordable housing during the 1920s and 1930s when the area flourished with creative and intellectual expression. It takes you past renowned gospel churches, jazz and blues clubs, and ends at the Apollo Theater, Harlem's famous showcase for new artists. For more details on sights in Harlem, see pp220-31.

Strivers' Row

The tree-lined area on 138th Street between Seventh and Eighth avenues is the St. Nicholas Historic District, commonly known as Strivers' Row ①. In the 1920s and 1930s wealthy and influential black professionals aiming for better lives moved into homes designed by such great architects as James Brown Lord and McKim, Mead & White. Signs on some of the gates still read "Private road walk your horses." A short detour left on Seventh Avenue (Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. Boulevard) and right on 139th Street leads to West 139th Street ②, where in 1932 16-year-old Billie Holiday moved into No. 108 shortly before landing her first singing job at a club in nearby "Jungle Alley."

Abyssinian Baptist Church

internationally renowned for its magnificent Sunday gospel service. Founded in 1921 and named for the East African Americans of its first congregation, this church has hosted such notable pastors as Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. A stone's throw away on West 137th Street is the Mother Zion church ④, New York's first black church and one of America's oldest.

While part of the Underground Railroad (an escape route for slaves), it acquired the nickname "Freedom Church." Continue to the Countee Cullen Regional Library where Madam C.J. Walker founded the Walker School of Hair ⑤. With her successful cosmetics line and hair-smoothing system, Walker was one of the first self-made female millionaires in the country. An active philanthropist, she donated to many African-American charities such as the National Association of

Colored People (NAACP) and Tuskegee Institute. After her death in 1919, her daughter A'Leila turned the salon into an intellectual center for artists, scholars, and activists. It was named "The Dark Tower" after Harlem writer Countee Cullen's protest poem. Around the corner on Lenox Avenue is the Schomburg Center for Research into Black Culture ⑥ (see p229), a national research library named for the Puerto Rican-born black scholar who donated his personal collection to the library and served as its curator for six years. Down West 136th Street is Montgomery ⑦, a whimsical women's clothing store with one-of-a-kind designs. Farther down at No. 267 is "Niggerati Manor" ⑧, an artist's rooming house, so-named by Zora Neale Hurston, who lived here while collaborating with Wallace Thurman, Aaron Douglas, and Bruce Nugent on Fire!!, a magazine devoted to young black artists. Get back on Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. Boulevard and follow it down to “Jungle Alley” ⑨, the former highlight of Harlem nightlife, which once contained numerous bars, clubs, cabarets, and speakeasies. A detour across 131st Street will bring you to Marcus Garvey’s house ⑩ (235), a major leader and fierce proponent of black unity, economic independence, and all performed. It is also home to the Zebra Room, a jazz spot that James Baldwin and Malcolm X frequented. In the middle of the next block is The Studio Museum in Harlem ⑬ (see pp230–31), with a variety of contemporary art exhibits, programs, lectures, and performances by artists of African descent. Its store is also worth a browse for its array of posters and books.

Apollo Theater

On West 125th Street is the famous Apollo Theater ⑭ (see p230), where since 1934, “stars are born and legends are made.” These performers have ranged in style from Ella Fitzgerald to James Brown. Since 1987, “Amateur Night at the Apollo” has been

Return to Adam Clayton Powell, Jr. Boulevard and make a left on 127th Street until you reach Sylvia’s Restaurant ⑪ (see p230), the self-proclaimed “Queen of Soul Food.” Family-owned since 1962, Sylvia’s serves authentic southern favorites, such as fried chicken, catfish, and BBQ ribs. WHERE TO STAY

With over 75,000 hotel rooms available, New York offers something for everyone.

The city's top hotels are the most expensive in the US, but the best news for visitors is the increase in budget and mid-priced hotels. While many of these are basic rather than charming, they offer good value. Other budget options are furnished apartments and studios, and bed and breakfasts, as well as youth hostels and YMCAs. From an inspection of over 200 hotels in New York, we have selected the best of their kind. The hotels listed on pp280-91 contain detailed descriptions of facilities, which will help you select the one best suited to your needs. Most hotels have a website address to enable you to book a room online.

WHERE TO LOOK

The East Side, roughly between 59th and 77th streets, is the traditional location for luxury hotels, but the renovation of certain landmark midtown properties, such as the St. Regis, and the arrival of new hotels in famous chains, such as the Peninsula Group and Jumeirah Hotels, have considerably increased the competition in this price range.

Business travelers tend to favor midtown, especially the moderately priced hotels lining Lexington Avenue near Grand Central Terminal.

Those seeking relative quiet should look in the Murray Hill area, while theater-lovers should note the revival of the Times Square area, where there are many hotels within walking distance of the Theater District.

There are a number of good, inexpensive hotels around Herald Square, which is convenient for shopping.

Trendy boutique hotels have flourished in SoHo and the Meatpacking District, where there are also plenty of good bars, restaurants, and upscale shops (see pp320-21) as well as trendy nightclubs.

New York & Co. (the Convention and Visitors Bureau) publishes a free, annually updated leaflet called "The New York Hotel Guide," listing current rates and toll-free numbers. Staff will offer advice about hotels but do not make reservations on your behalf.

HOTEL PRICES

Some hotels offer seasonal promotional rates and other off-peak reductions. For example, business travelers vacate hotels at the end of the working week, and you can take advantage of bargain weekend deals, even in luxury hotels, as prices drop (see Special Rates p278). There are a growing number of good value all-suite hotels available in every price category. Suites offer extra space plus cooking facilities and a refrigerator. Most suites can accommodate up to four people, which makes them popular with families.

HIDDEN EXTRAS

When calculating the cost of hotels in New York, it is not enough simply to take into consideration the quoted room price. Hotel rooms have long been subject to extra taxes, but the former sliding scale, which favored rates under $100, has now given way to a blanket 13.375% hotel tax, plus $3.50 per night per room fee.

Several hotels now include continental breakfast in the room price. This is a big saving, since standard hotel continental breakfast prices, before tax and tip, start at about $5 and soar to around

Antique furnishings, Inn at Irving Place (see p283)

The Tribeca Grand lobby (see p281)

$25 in some of the luxury hotels. To save money, head for the nearest deli or coffee shop and leave the hotel to business people having power breakfasts.

Hotel telephone charges are always high; it is much less expensive to use the pay phone in the lobby, particularly when you are calling overseas.

Tips are expected. Staff who take your luggage to the room are usually tipped a minimum of $1 per bag – more in a luxury hotel. The concierge need not be tipped for normal services such as arranging transportation or making dinner reservations, but should be rewarded for exceptional services. When you order from room service, check the menu to see whether a service charge will also be included in the bill; if not, a 15–20% tip is customary. Solo travelers will find that single room rates are usually at least 80% of the double rate and are sometimes the same as for two people.

FACILITIES

Although you'd expect hotel rooms in New York City to be noisy, most windows are double- or even triple-glazed to keep out the noise. Air-conditioning is a standard feature, so there is no need to open the windows in hot weather. Even so, some rooms are obviously quieter than others, especially if they are at the back of the hotel or overlooking a courtyard – check when reserving. Light sleepers may also want to request a room away from the elevator.

Television, radio, and at least one telephone are usually provided in every room, even in modest lodgings, and most hotel bedrooms have private bathrooms. In budget and mid-priced hotels a shower, rather than a tub, is the norm. Many hotels offer fax outlets and machines in each room, internet access, a business center, and a health club or exercise room. Luxury facilities include minibars in the room, dual phones, private phone message systems, and electronic checkout.

Most of the hotels listed here are within a few minutes' walk of shops and restaurants. Few hotels have their own parking, but valets may park your car in nearby garages. A reduced (but still expensive) daily parking fee is normally offered. If there is no concierge at the hotel, front desk staff will always help to answer any queries.

HOW TO RESERVE

It is advisable to make hotel reservations at least one month in advance, otherwise you may well find that the best rooms and suites have been taken. The busiest periods are at Easter, the New York Marathon week in late October or early November, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Reserve directly with the hotel online, or by telephone, letter, or fax. Internet bookings on Expedia.com and Hotels.com often yield the best deals. Written confirmation of your telephone booking will be required, probably with a deposit as a guarantee of your arrival; any cancellation fees may be deducted from this. You can pay by credit card, international bank draft or money order, or US traveler's check. Advise the staff if you are going to arrive at the hotel after 6pm or you will lose your reservation, unless you have prepaid with a credit card.

You can also book a hotel through your travel agent or airline. Most hotels have a toll-free telephone number for use in the United States, but these numbers do not work from Europe and the UK. If the hotel is part of an international chain, an affiliated hotel in your country should be able to reserve a room for you.

SPECIAL RATES

Hotels are busiest during the week, when business travelers are in the city, so most of them offer budget weekend packages. It's often possible to move from a standard to a luxury room for the weekend at the same rate. A lower corporate rate is usually available to employees of large companies. Quite often, reservation clerks will grant corporate discounts on request without asking for a company affiliation. It is also worth checking a hotel website for special deals and promotions.

Some reservation agencies offer discount rates. A good travel agent should be able to get the best rates, but compare prices by contacting directly a discount reservation service such as Hotel con-x-ions or Quikbook (see p277), which offers discounts of 20–50%, depending on the time of year. You reserve by credit card and receive a voucher, which you present to the hotel. Sites such as www.kayak.com offer "private sales" of discounted hotel rooms.

Package tours can also provide savings. Their rates may not oblige you to stay with a tour group, only to use their air and hotel arrangements. They may also include airport transfers, an additional saving. Airlines frequently have special deals, particularly during slow travel seasons. A knowledgeable travel agent should be able to tell you the current best deals, but newspapers often advertise special, limited offers that can be booked directly. At off-peak times you may net even bigger savings than with the package plans.

DISABLED TRAVELERS

By law, new hotels must provide facilities for disabled visitors. Many older buildings have also been renovated so as to comply with this regulation.

To find out which hotels offer the best facilities, check their websites. These are provided for all the hotels listed on pp280–91. When booking, let the hotel know of any specific needs. Guide dogs are allowed in most hotels, but it is also advisable to check in advance.

The Mayor's Office for People With Disabilities also offers information about hotels.

TRAVELING WITH CHILDREN

American hotels are generally very welcoming toward children. Cots or cribs as well as lists of reliable baby-sitters are usually available, and most hotel restaurants are happy to cater to young guests.

Traveling with children can be cheaper than anticipated. Many hotels do not charge for children if they stay in their parents' room, or make only a small charge for an extra bed. There is usually a limit of one or two children per room in these cases, and most hotels stipulate that the children must be under a certain age, most often 12. Parents of older children are expected to pay the full price, although the age limit is occasionally extended to 18. Ask about family rates when you make your reservation.

BED-AND-BREAKFAST

An increasing number of bed-and-breakfast accommodations in private apartments is available in New York. These can vary from a room in an apartment with an owner-host in residence to an entire self-contained apartment with its own kitchen and bathroom, which you have to yourself while the owner is away.

Staying in a private apartment has certain advantages. It enables you to feel at home in a New York neighborhood and to visit local restaurants, which are usually far more reasonably priced than those in tourist areas.

Entrance to the Peninsula Hotel (see p289)

Bed-and-breakfast lodgings can be found through many free booking services. Some booking agencies have a two-or-more-night minimum.

Rates for unhosted apartments vary from about $100 to $300, and for a double room start at $100 a night, depending on whether you have a private bathroom. There is a wide range of apartments, from spacious and luxurious to cramped and dowdy. Be aware that, if the address is remote or inconveniently far from bus routes or subway stations, your costs will rise, as you will need frequent cabs. Ask about location and amenities when you reserve.

YOUTH AND BUDGET ACCOMMODATIONS

New York's youth hostel and its many YMCA dormitories offer lodgings for those on a tight budget. For the longer-term visitor, the 92nd Street Y, a nonsectarian hostel in the Upper East Side, has good-value rooms, with prices starting from around $35 to $50 a night.

Sky-high swimming pool at a luxury hotel

There are no campsites in Manhattan, and, sadly, youth hostels are not as prevalent in New York as they are in large European cities.

For budget-minded travelers looking for the bare essentials, inexpensive rooms are available in several areas of New York, particularly in Chelsea, the Garment District, and the Upper West Side, and to a lesser extent in such prime neighborhoods as the Upper Midtown. Although some of these budget-price rooms are reasonably comfortable, with private baths or showers, others may be rather small, perhaps with no air conditioning, and you may have to share a bathroom.

Other interesting sources for budget lodgings are websites like www.couchsurfing.com, which has many member-hosts in New York, and www.airbnb.com, where locals offer accommodation in their homes for a very reasonable fee.

Finally, another way to make your budget go further is to avoid having breakfast in your hotel. Even its coffee shop is likely to be more expensive than an outside coffee shop or deli.

BEYOND MANHATTAN

As New York City becomes safer – and Manhattan more expensive – accommodation options are emerging in the outer boroughs for savvy travelers. Indeed, areas such as Williamsburg and Dumbo in Brooklyn have become destinations in their own right over the past few years, thanks to a rising number of cool bars, good restaurants, and trendy stores.

For a little over $300, which buys an average room in Manhattan, you can book a king room at the Marriott Brooklyn Bridge in Brooklyn Heights (see p291), or a room with flat-screen TV and wireless internet access at the four-star boutique hotel Le Bleu, in the up-and-coming area of Gowanus, close to Park Slope (www.hotelbleu.com).

As always, cheaper deals can often be negotiated or found on hotel websites.

Choosing a Hotel

These hotels have been selected across a wide price range for their good value, excellent facilities, and location. This chart lists the hotels by area of the city in the same order as the rest of the guide. Within each area, entries are listed alphabetically within each price category, from the least expensive to the most expensive.

RESTAURANTS AND BARS

New Yorkers love to eat well, and in the five boroughs there are more than 25,000 restaurants catering to their wishes. City dwellers avidly read restaurant reviews in magazines such as New York to ensure that they are seen in the latest fashionable eatery. "In" places and cuisine change with great regularity, while some favorite places simply remain popular.

The classic Manhattan cocktail

The restaurants cited in our listings have been selected as the best that New York can offer across a wide price range. While the information on pages 296–311 will help you to select a suitable restaurant, there are details of lighter refreshments on pages 312–14. New York's Bars on pages 315–17 highlights some of the city's best drinking spots.

RESTAURANT MENUS

Meals in most of the better restaurants consist of three courses: an appetizer (starter), an entrée (the main course), and a dessert. In some fine restaurants you may be offered a complimentary appetizer, such as a small dollop of mousse or a tiny triangle of quiche. Appetizers at the better restaurants are often the chef's most creative dishes – some diners request two appetizers and no entrée. Italian menus offer a pasta dish as a course before the main course, but in many places pasta is seen as a main course. Coffee or tea and a dessert ordinarily conclude the meal in restaurants above the coffee-shop level. Your coffee cup may be refilled until you refuse any more. Some of the better establishments feature a cheeseboard on the menu.

Street-corner hot dog stand

To get a sense of a restaurant's cuisine, visit www.menupages.com, which features the menus of several thousand Manhattan eateries. Other local websites, including the New York Magazine's (www.nymag.com), often have links to restaurant menus.

PRICES

You will always find a restaurant in New York to suit your budget. At inexpensive coffee shops, diners and fast-food chains, $10–$15 will buy you a filling meal. There are also hundreds of acceptable, even first-rate, restaurants where you can eat well at a moderate cost – around $25 per person for a filling and decent meal, not including drinks – in attractive surroundings.

For dinner at a trendy New American venue with a star chef, the bill could be upward of $80 to $100 per person, excluding drinks. Many top restaurants do, however, offer fixed-price (or, as they are known in New York, prix-fixe) meals. This is normally a much cheaper way of enjoying a good meal than choosing dishes from the à la carte menu. Lunch is also less expensive than dinner in such places and, because of the profusion of business diners, lunch is also the busiest period of the day.

TAXES AND TIPPING

New York city sales tax of 8.625% will be added to your bill. Service is not usually included. Tipping can run from 10% at a coffee shop to 20% at the fanciest places, with 15% an average fair tip. Many people just double the sales tax for a tip.

A typical New York deli (see p312)

The bill is known as the "check" in the US. The most commonly accepted credit cards are VISA, MasterCard and American Express. Traveler's checks are taken in many restaurants. Diners and coffee shops may accept cash only. In fast-food chains, you order at the counter and pay cash in advance. Some other types of establishment also take only cash.

DINING ON A BUDGET

Despite the tales of $200 business lunches, there are ways to stretch a meal budget in New York.

Order fewer courses than you would normally. American portions are huge, and an appetizer is often big enough for a light main course. You could share one with your companion or choose two appetizers and no entrée.

Ask your waiter if there is a prix-fixe menu. Many of the more expensive restaurants offer this at lunch and dinner – in the early evening it may often be called the pre-theater menu. Or try a prix-fixe lunch buffet. These are popular in Indian restaurants, and other, places and are very reasonably priced meals.

McSorley's Old Ale House (see p315)

Other options for a quick, tasty, and restorative meal are the less expensive Chinese, Thai, and Mexican restaurants, and some Jewish delis. Italian pizzerias and French bistros, as well as the small eateries that serve hamburgers or sandwiches and desserts also offer good value.

Alternatively, go to bars featuring "happy hours." They often offer a variety of substantial hors d'oeuvres, like Spanish tapas, which can make a meal in themselves.

If you simply want to see inside the restaurants every visitor has heard about, just go to have a drink and soak up the atmosphere. Many restaurants post their menus or will let you see them before you are seated, good for checking prices in advance. During Restaurant Week (usually in January and July), you can dine in some of the city's restaurants for a fraction of the usual cost – visit www.nycgo.com/restaurantweek.

HOURS

Breakfast hours are usually from 7 to 10:30 or 11am. Sunday brunch, a popular meal, is served at most better restaurants between about 11am and 3pm. Lunch runs from 11:30am or noon to 2:30pm at most places, but the busiest time of the day is 1pm. Dinner is usually served from 5:30 to 6pm onward. The most popular time is around 7:30 to 8pm.

Some restaurants stop serving at 10pm during the week, or 11pm on Friday and Saturday. Certain informal restaurants are open from 11:30am to 10pm. Coffee shops are open long hours, from 7am to midnight or even 24 hours.

DRESS CODES

Few restaurants demand that male diners dress formally, though a jacket is required at classy restaurants, and a jacket and tie at the very best. At most restaurants, for both men and women, smart "business casual" suffices.

Women tend to dress up when dining at the more expensive restaurants. If you are unsure, check what the dress code is when you make your reservation.

RESERVATIONS

It is wise to make reservations at any restaurant above the diner/fast-food level, especially on weekends. A few of the trendiest restaurants won't even accept reservations less than two months in advance. Be sure to make reservations for lunch at a midtown restaurant. You may still have to wait at the bar, even if you have booked. Waits of an hour at the most popular spots are not unusual.

SMOKING

Smoking is now illegal in all bars and restaurants in New York. The only exceptions are owner-operated bars that have special smoking rooms.

CHILDREN

When eating out with children, ask if there's a child's menu with half-portions. The prices are reduced, sometimes by half. Children are accepted in most New York restaurants, but if yours are unpredictable stick to casual spots, Chinatown Chinese or family-run Italian restaurants, burger bars, delis, cafés, fast food chains and diners. A few of the better restaurants have facilities for babies or toddlers; others may not be so well equipped. Dining out in the more formal New York restaurants is certainly not a family affair.

WHEELCHAIR ACCESS

While many restaurants may be able to accommodate a wheelchair, always mention your requirements when making your reservation. Many of the smaller places cannot cater to disabled customers because of lack of space.

CELEBRITY CHEFS

New York City attracts top chefs from around the world, all of whom are determined to make their mark and win over the local diners and the New York Times' influential restaurant reviewer.

A meal in a top restaurant will not come cheaply, but it can be worth the splurge. Booking a table can be difficult, and reservations should be made as early as two months in advance. Some reservations can be made online through Opentable (www.opentable.com).

Among the best names and signature venues are Thomas Keller (Per Se), Daniel Bouley (Daniel), Jean-Georges Vongerichten (Jean-Georges), Gordon Ramsay (London NYC), Mario Batali (Babbo), Alain Ducasse (Adour), and Nobu Matsuhisa (Nobu New York).

The Flavors of New York

Few cities can match the diversity of New York's restaurants. Reflecting the city's melting pot of nationalities, foods range from the "haute" of French and continental cuisine to the freshest sushi outside of Tokyo. Caribbean, Mexican, Thai, Vietnamese, Korean, Greek, Indian – all are well represented, and every block seems to have an Italian restaurant. The quality of the city's top restaurants is unsurpassed and their chefs are superstars, as well-known and revered as movie idols. Yet, because so many nationalities are represented in its culinary culture, only a few foods are native to the city itself.

and smoked salmon. The bagel, once synonymous with New York, has become a universal American food, but a true New York bagel is nothing like the bready imitations found in the hinterlands. It is shaped by hand, and the dough is cooked briefly in boiling water before being baked, resulting in a unique firm and chewy texture. A relative, and another New York specialty, is the bialy, a flat, chewy flour-dusted roll with a center indentation filled with toasted onions. The finest examples of each are to be found in the kosher bakeries of the Lower East Side (see pp92-101).

NEW YORK SPECIALTIES

Pretzels

While New York dining may span all nations, a few special dishes are closely associated with the city.

Manhattan Clam Chowder, prepared with tomatoes rather than cream, has been popular ever since it was introduced at Coney Island beach stands in the 1880s. In the city's many steak houses, a prime selection is the "New York strip steak," a boneless sirloin cut from the short loin, the tenderest portion of beef. Italian cuisine has often been given a New York spin. Rich and creamy New York cheesecake is made with cream cheese rather than the Italian ricotta. And, since traditional wood-burning ovens were impractical in New York, the first Italian immigrant chefs used coal ovens. Though these are rare today, purists still insist they are necessary for a true New York pizza.

This is a rich blend of potatoes, onions, tomatoes, oyster crackers crumbs and clams.

Fast food cart on a Manhattan street corner, selling hot dogs and sodas upstate New York sell fresh-picked fruits and vegetables, as well as meat, poultry and dairy products. Over 105 city restaurants patronize the greenmarkets, so you'll find ultra-fresh local produce on many menus in the city. As many as 70 vendors attend the biggest of the markets in Union Square on Monday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday (see p129).

STREET FOOD

Street food is a favorite choice in a fast-moving city. Hot dogs and oversize soft pretzels are classic New York choices, along with some surprisingly good food cart specialties, from falafel to soup to barbecue to Texas chile, all ready to eat on the run. In winter, vendors all over town offer hot roasted chestnuts.

SOUL FOOD

Harlem is America's largest African-American community, and restaurants here are the place to sample specialties from the Deep South, such as fried chicken, ribs, collard greens, yams, flaky biscuits or cornbread. A popular Harlem dish, fried chicken and waffles, is said to have originated to serve musicians leaving jazz clubs in the wee hours.

ASIAN FOOD RIVALS

Chinese restaurants and dim sum parlors have long been found throughout the city, but lately they have been challenged by the arrival of many excellent Thai and Vietnamese restaurants. All these, however, take second place to the multiplying sushi bars and high-profile, highly praised Japanese chefs.

DELICATESSEN CLASSICS

Babkas Slightly sweet, yeasted coffee cakes.

Blintzes Crêpes filled with sweetened soft white cheese and/or fruit and sautéed.

Chopped liver Chicken livers mashed with minced onion, hard-cooked eggs and schmaltz (chicken fat).

Gefilte fish Minced white fish dumplings poached in fish broth. A holiday dish.

Knishes Soft dough shells filled with oniony mashed potatoes.

Latkes Grated potato, onion and matzo-meal pancakes.

Rugelach Rich, cream-cheese-dough pastries filled with jam, chopped nuts and raisins.

New York-style pizza Thick- or thin-crust, a true New York pizza must be baked in a coal-fired oven.

New York Strip Steak Served with creamed spinach, fries or hash-browns, this tender steak is hard to beat.

New York cheesecake This is a dense, rich, baked cake with a crust of pastry or graham crackers (digestives).

Choosing a Restaurant

The restaurants in this section have been selected for their good value and exceptional food. Within each area, entries are listed alphabetically within each price category, from the least to the most expensive. Details of Light Meals and Snacks are on pages 312–14 and for some of New York's best Bars see pages 315–17.

PRICE CATEGORIES

The following price ranges are for a three-course meal for one, including a glass of house wine and all unavoidable charges including sales tax:

- ① under $25
- ②③ $25–$40
- ④⑤⑥ $40–$60
- ⑦⑧⑨ $60–$80
- ⑩⑪⑫ over $80

LOWER MANHATTAN

Adrienne's Pizza Bar

87 Pearl St, 10004 Tel (212) 248-3838

Map 1 C4

The setting on a quaint street straight out of Old New York adds to the appeal of this popular spot, which is known for its thin-crust rectangular pizzas. An ideal stop for a tasty, inexpensive lunch while touring Lower Manhattan, but if you happen to be in the neighborhood at dinner, the mood is more serene.

Les Halles

15 John St between Broadway and Nassau St, 10038 Tel (212) 285-8585

Map 1 C2

The Financial District meets a Parisian-style brasserie at this sister restaurant of the Park Avenue Les Halles, made famous by its celebrity chef Anthony Bourdain. Expect well-executed dishes such as mussels and frites. A heaven for carnivores, with a wide selection of grilled meats.

Battery Gardens

17 State St, Battery Park, 10004 Tel (212) 809-5508

Map 1 C4

It's worth a trip to the tip of Manhattan for the fantastic vistas of the harbor and the Statue of Liberty from this haven in Battery Park. The American-Continental menu is adequate, but the view is the lure. On a balmy day when you can sit on the terrace, there's no place like it.

Fraunces Tavern

54 Pearl St, corner of Broad Street, 10004 Tel (212) 968-1776

Map 1 C4

This historic tavern has been in operation since 1762 and was where George Washington bid a fond farewell to his officers, on the eve of his retirement in 1783. Classic American steak and fish dishes are on offer, along with wholesome pot roasts and soups. In winter warm up in the snug lounge.

Harry's Café

1 Hanover Sq, 10004 Tel (212) 785-9200

Map 1 C3

The former Bayard's has been restyled as a clubby steakhouse offering first-rate food and wine. If you don't have an expense account and your budget is limited, you can still enjoy the atmosphere of this landmark heritage building by choosing from a short and reasonably priced café menu. One of the few Wall Street spots open at the weekend.

Roy's New York

Map 1 B3

Noted Hawaiian chef Roy Yamaguchi brings his winning fusion formula to this New York outpost of a worldwide chain. That means the freshest ingredients flavored with island and Asian spices. Seafood is the specialty, with unusual Pacific fish flown in weekly. Attentive service and interesting dishes.

SEAPORT AND THE CIVIC CENTER

Acqua at Peck Slip

21–23 Peck Slip, 10038 Tel (212) 349-4433

Map 2 D2

Amid the tourist traps of South Street Seaport, this Italian restaurant stands out like a beacon, serving up New American-tinged Italian dishes prepared with organic ingredients. Service can be a little slow, so just sit back and enjoy the vaulted ceilings and warm earthy tones that make this a cozy, romantic spot. The lasagna is fantastic.

Bridge Café

279 Water St at Dover St, 10038 Tel (212) 227-3344

 ②③⑤

Map 2 D2

A charming café located just below the Brooklyn Bridge, this age-old restaurant is worth a visit while in the area. Adventurers should try the specialty – buffalo steak with gnocchi. For the tamer, there are still plenty of options – from lobster pot pie and fresh fish to a grilled vegetables and goats' cheese plate.

Stella Maris213 Front St, 10038 Tel (212) 233-2437Map 2 D2

A welcome find in the Seaport area, Stella Maris is a pleasant bistro with sleek decor. The seasonal modern European menu puts the emphasis on seafood, including a superb black sole, and offers a few pub favorites. The Raw Bar features oysters, clams, and treats such as poached lobster. The outdoor terrace is a great place for brunch.

LOWER EAST SIDEGrand Sichuan125 Canal St at Bowery, 10002 Tel (212) 625-9212Map 4 E5

A never-ending menu with all kinds of Sichuan, Hunang, and "Chinese-food American style," as well as all types of hot (including spicy) and cold noodles and fried rice. It also offers a wide variety of vegetarian dishes. Spotty service and scant decor may be the reason for the quite affordable prices.

Katz Delicatessen205 East Houston St, 10002 Tel (212) 254-2246Map 5 A3

A New York City classic, this Jewish deli continues to serve the best pastrami and corned beef towering sandwiches. Don't expect much from service or decor – it's all in the pastrami and the very affordable prices. Famous for sending salami to the army, way before that scene from When Harry Met Sally (which is commemorated with a sign).

San Loco Mexico11 Stanton St, 10002 Tel (212) 253-7580Map 5 A3

You'll be hard pressed to spend over $10 at this excellent value Mexican restaurant, which is popular with cost-conscious locals. All the Mexican favorites are on offer and come with a choice of four potencies of homemade sauce – mild, hot, serious, and stupid. Save room for the dessert.

Teany Café90 Rivington St, 10002 Tel (212) 475-9190Map 5 A3

Rock star Moby owns this famous café offering all vegan and vegetarian sandwiches, salads, and nibblers. Great desserts, too, such as the chocolate peanut butter bomb and the warm rhubarb pie. The "afternoon tea service" for one or two is worth a try. Service can be patchy.

Il Palazzo151 Mulberry St, 10013 Tel (212) 343-7000Map 4 F4

Il Palazzo ranks among Little Italy's few good Italian restaurants, especially when it comes to service. A glassed-in garden boosts its charm. Homemade pastas and risotti are always good and inexpensive choices. Popular desserts include cannoli and tiramisu.

Joe's Shanghai9 Pell St, 10013 Tel (212) 233-8888Map 4 F5

When visiting this famous local restaurant, don't miss the crab and pork soup dumplings. This dish is the main reason for long lines especially on weekends, but it's worth it. The rest of the menu is hit and miss but it's good value. Other locations may have better decor/service at the expense of food quality.

Sammy's Roumanian157 Chrystie St, 10002 Tel (212) 673-0330Map 5 A4

The Jewish-inspired menu at Sammy's Roumanian offers traditional fare such as latkes, chopped liver, mashed potatoes with schmaltz (chicken fat), and a large selection of meat cuts. Try the garlic sausage with ice-cold vodka. Impromptu entertainment and singalongs add to the fun factor.

The Orchard162 Orchard St, 10002 Tel (212) 353-3570Map 5 A3

Imaginative New American food is served up to a hip and young LES crowd. The decor is stylish, with subdued lighting. Don't miss the steak tartare flatbread. Wines come at a good range of price points, ensuring there is something for every budget.

The Stanton Social99 Stanton St, 10002 Tel (212) 995-0099Map 5 A3

Groovy and gorgeous sums up the scene at this restaurant, where the atmosphere almost overshadows the food. The eclectic tapas menu has many mouthwatering options from French onion soup and dumplings to mini burger "sliders" – but beware: the cost adds up quickly. The cocktails are equally inviting.

wd-5050 Clinton St, 10002 Tel (212) 477-2900Map 5 B3

Wylie Dufresne, a pioneer in the food revolution on the Lower East Side, serves serious food here but in a casual setting that suits the neighborhood. His eclectic modern American cuisine is known for innovative touches, like lamb flavored with banana consommé. If you can't get a reservation, walk-ins are welcome for bar dining.

SOHO AND TRIBECA

Lombardi's32 Spring St, 10012 Tel (212) 941-7994Map 4 F4

Among the top pizzerias of the city, the brick-oven baked pies come thin, charred, and oozing a delectable mozzarella. Lombardi's pays the price for its popularity with big crowds and long lines, but a very welcome expansion now allows you and your friends to share the joy faster.

Peanut Butter & Co.240 Sullivan St, 10012 Tel (212) 677-3995Map 4 D2

A sandwich shop worth the trip to see the unbelievable combinations available with peanut butter. Yes, you can even get the famous Elvis Presley-inspired sandwich. Thankfully, you can get milk too, and plenty of other yummy desserts. Invite friends and bring your kids and your wallet won't even notice it.

Pho Pasteur85 Baxter St, 10013 Tel (212) 608-3656Map 4 F5

A tiny restaurant in the midst of Chinatown, offering a cheap and fast choice of noodles. Try the Vietnamese rolls with lettuce leaves and rice noodles. You can even see yourself sweat in the mirrored walls in case you order any of their spicy dishes. Also try the large variety of Asian beverages.

Aquagrill210 Spring St, 10012 Tel (212) 274-0505Map 4 D4

Aquagrill is a seafood-lovers' paradise with very fresh ingredients. An oyster bar selection to die for, a reliable kitchen, and courteous service are all ingredients for success adding up to a busy dining room. The mussel soup with saffron comes highly recommended.

Balthazar80 Spring St, 10012 Tel (212) 965-1414Map 4 E4

The jewel in restaurateur Keith McNally's crown remains a popular draw, thanks to the Parisian brasserie setting, good-quality food, superb wine selection, and lively bar scene – you'll find SoHo literati, VIPs, and tourists rubbing shoulders here. Balthazar is a good choice for both brunch and late-night dining. There is also an excellent on-site bakery.

The Harrison355 Greenwich St, 10013 Tel (212) 274-9310Map 4 D5

A New England seafarmer house in the midst of TriBeCa offering good "re-engineered" American fare such as biscuits and gravy with chorizo and clams and a crispy chicken with chestnut stuffing. Very popular with the area's 30-somethings, which means long lines at times.

L'Ecole462 Broadway, 10012 Tel (212) 219-3300Map 4 E4

This small and charming SoHo restaurant is used by the students of the French Culinary Institute to do their hands-on training. The place offers different tasting menus at reasonable prices considering the good quality of the food and unfailingly courteous service.

Lupa170 Thompson St, 10012 Tel (212) 982-5089Map 4 F3

An Italian trattoria courtesy of celebrity chef Mario Batali offering a cheaper alternative to its flagship Babbo. Expect a wide variety of dishes such as smoked eggplant, excellent fresh pastas, and accomplished entrées such as pork saltimbocca. Excellent Italian wine list.

Minetta Tavern113 MacDougal St, 10012 Tel (212) 475-3850Map 4 D2

This Italian bistro manages to be both casual and celebrity-friendly. The menu is short but perfectly formed, and each dish is prepared with great flair, from the petite omelette, frog's legs, and tasty bone marrow to the incredible range of steaks. Open only in the evenings (5:30pm–2am). Reservations recommended.

Odeon145 West Broadway, 10013 Tel (212) 233-0507Map 1 B1

One of the first restaurants to open in TriBeCa back in the 1980s, this "faux-bistro" offers good quality French-American fare. Don't miss the steak tartare, but note that the burgers are also top notch. The decor is simple and the place is always packed with a mixed crowd.

Peep177 Prince St, 10012 Tel (212) 254-7337Map 4 D3

A hip SoHo single set descends on this hot-pink restaurant for tasty Thai and exotic cocktails. Be sure to stop by the bathrooms that give the restaurant its name – don't worry, the mirrors are only one-way (looking out). Prix-fixe lunches and dinner specials are a bargain.

Petite Abeille

134 West Broadway, 10013 Tel (212) 791-1360Map 1 B1

European cartoon favorite Tintin lends charm to the decor at this branch of a reasonably priced Belgian mini-chain. The most popular dish is mussels and French fries, especially the all-you-can-eat offerings on Wednesdays. The list of imported beers is impressive. Also open for breakfast and weekend brunch, when Belgian waffles are a favorite.

Public

210 Elizabeth St, 10012 Tel (212) 343-7011Map 4 F3

A taste of modern Down Under food with inventive creations such as Meyer lemon ceviche, and grilled kangaroo on falafel. Try fusion cocktails or the Australian beer on offer and enjoy the industrial-chic, high-ceilinged space that fills nightly with a stylish SoHo crowd.

Kittichai

60 Thompson St, 10012 Tel (212) 219-2000Map 4 D4

A high-end Thai restaurant in a beautifully designed space of the 60 Thompson hotel (see p281), Kittichai is a definite place to be seen. The menu offers an expensive selection, including "Thai tapas," as well as seafood dishes such as monkfish with ginger, and desserts like banana spring rolls drizzled with a burnt honey sauce.

Nobu

105 Hudson St, 10013 Tel (212) 219-0500Map 4 D5

Chef Nobu Matsuhisa offers a menu of fantastic reach for those who can afford it and get a reservation. The menu features items such as tuna toro tartar, Peruvian-influenced ceviches and tempuras, not to mention a lengthy sushi menu. This high-profile spot attracts celebrities and mortals alike.

Bouley

163 Duane St, 10013 Tel (212) 668-5829Map 1 C1

The modern French cuisine of famed chef David Bouley has an impressive TriBeCa home, with vaulted ceilings and elegant decor worthy of the fine fare. For those who cannot manage the hefty tab, the four-course prix-fixe lunch menu is a worthy sampling of the master's talents.

Corton

239 West Broadway, 10013 Tel (212) 219-2777Map 4 E5

After a 20-year reign in TriBeCa, the much-loved Montrachet has been renamed (Corton is a noted wine district in Burgundy) and given a revamped look and menu. The decor is cool and modern, and the chef has introduced modern French cuisine, like the foie gras with beets and blood orange, that has critics singing. A worthwhile splurge.

Megu

62 Thomas St, 10013 Tel (212) 964-7777Map 1 B1

Joining the latest trend in behemoth Japanese restaurants, Megu has an impressively decorated menu offering an outrageous option of dishes to be shared. Prime ingredients can quickly add up in the tab but some consider it the equivalent of dinner and a show. Can be noisy, especially on weekends.

GREENWICH VILLAGEA Salt & Battery

112 Greenwich Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 691-2713Map 3 B1

Come here for the best fish-and-chips this side of the pond at rock-bottom prices. There are many different combinations of fish and platters to choose from. A vast selection of other side dishes as well makes the trip worth it, especially that infamously delicious deep-fried Mars bar.

Corner Bistro

331 West 4th St, 10014 Tel (212) 242-9502Map 3 C1

The line outside indicates this isn't your typical bistro food, but a dive that has developed a cult following for the juiciest and messiest burgers and the cheapest beer in town. Grab a spot in line that sometimes snakes by the bar and outside. Food is served on paper plates with lots of napkins.

Moustache

90 Bedford St, 10014 Tel (212) 229-2220Map 3 C2

Middle-Eastern casual eatery with consistently good and cheap food, including Turkish pizzas, merguez sausages, and lamb. The space may be too small for the crowd and service can be slow. Try the sibling East Village spot at 265 East 19th Street that includes an indoor garden.

Westville

210 West 10th St, 10014 Tel (212) 741-7971Map 3 C2

A no-thrills narrow eatery offering great-value meals of regional American cooking, aka comfort food staples, such as cod po'boys, burgers, mac 'n' cheese, and BLTs. Avoid rush hours since cheap prices can mean long lines. So popular it spawned an East Village sister, cleverly called Westville East.

10 Downing

10 Downing St, 10014 Tel (212) 255-0300Map 4 D3

Dine on nouveau French cuisine at this sleek restaurant that fills with a lively crowd of locals and visitors. Try the hearty cassoulet tossed with mini duck meatballs or agnolotti topped with peekytoe crab. For dessert the rich chocolate cake with a malt-flavored ice cream center is a real treat.

Blue Ribbon Bakery

33 Downing Street, 10014 Tel (212) 337-0404Map 4 D3

An extensive tapas-style menu made out of cheeses and cold cuts with fantastic bread is complemented with soups, salads, and entrées such as filet mignon and burgers. An accessible wine list makes this an ideal place to pass time with friends and family.

Centro Vinoteca

74 Seventh Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 367-7470Map 8 E5

This buzzing, split-level restaurant, with whitewashed brick walls and large picture windows, features creative Italian fare. Ease into the evening with piccolino (small plates), including fried cauliflower in a parmesan crust, followed by meaty main dishes such as lamb bolognese or rabbit stuffed with sausage and pine nuts.

One

1 Little West 12th St, 10014 Tel (212) 255-9717Map 3 B1

The New American menu is designed around plates for one and plates to share, with a large selection of seafood platters as a group option. Most people come here for the hopping, trendy scene rather than the food, however. There are three different lounge areas: choose one according to your mood.

Otto

1 Fifth Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 995-9559Map 4 E1

An upscale and fashionable pizzeria from chef Mario Batali. An amazing wine list and an array of side dishes and antipasti can quickly raise your tab in this usually crowded and upbeat place. Try the famous lardo pizza, which is exactly what it sounds like – pig lard slathered on pizza crust. Don't miss the olive oil ice cream.

Pastis

9 Ninth Ave, 10014 Tel (212) 929-4844Map 3 B1

Among the pioneers in the Meatpacking District, this gorgeous Parisian bistro offers good-quality French fare in large portions. The ambience can be loud on weekends, with plenty of celebrity sightseeing. It also serves a good weekend brunch. If you can't get a reservation, just show up and take your chances.

Pearl Oyster Bar

18 Cornelia St, 10014 Tel (212) 691-8211Map 4 D4

Very successful raw bar in the Village with top-of-the-line fresh ingredients and bold flavors. The lobster roll is a smash hit as are the Prince Edward Island mussels. Unlike other places that use quality ingredients, service is amicable too, but be prepared for long lines at rush hours.

The Spotted Pig

314 West 11th St, 10014 Tel (212) 620-0393Map 3 B2

Londoners will feel at home in Brit chef April Bloomfield's Italian take on gastropub fare. This tiny spot fills up quickly, so get there early during peak times and enjoy drinks at the bar. Hand-cask beer from Brooklyn Brewery is great with the first-rate shepherd's pie – and delicious.

The Waverly Inn and Garden

216 Bank St (Waverly Place), 10014 Tel (212) 243-7900Map 3 C1

The quaint name belies the social scene, which on any given night might include celebrities, fashion editors, and VIPs. The homespun, well-priced menu features a selection of American classic dishes: clam chowder, pork chops with roasted apples, and the much-talked-about mac and cheese with shaved truffles.

Babbo

110 Waverly Place, 10011 Tel (212) 777-0303Map 4 D2

Chef Mario Batali's flagship restaurant is housed in this beautiful Village duplex – paradise for high-quality pasta and offal lovers alike. Hard to get reservations and service could see some improvement given the prices. A winning wine list and trendy crowd add the magic touch to a great dining experience.

Blue Hill

75 Washington Place, 10011 Tel (212) 539-1776Map 4 E4

This New American kitchen is obsessed with the quality of its ingredients, especially with the addition of its own Stone Barns produce from upstate New York. The limited menu is a guarantee of the freshness and liveliness of the seasonal dishes. Taste the poached foie gras or the Berkshire pork with chestnuts.

Da Silvano

260 Sixth Ave, 10014 Tel (212) 982-2343Map 4 D3

This Tuscan restaurant is popular more for the celebrities that dine here than the food itself, which covers a wide range of pastas, some seafood antipasti, salads, and traditional entrées such as lamb chops and stewed rabbit. The coveted outdoor seating is perfect for peoplereading in the summer months.

One if by Land, Two if by Sea

17 Barrow St, 10014 Tel (212) 228-0822Map 3 C3

Aaron Burr's carriage house made famous in the American Revolution is now arguably one of the most romantic and historical spots in town. To some, the decor seems a tad kitsch. The three-course prix-fixe of casual American dining is served right next to the fireplace and candles. Piano music daily.

Spice Market

403 West 13th St, 10014 Tel (212) 675-2322Map 3 B1

A beautiful behemoth of a place featuring Asian-inspired "street food" by chef Jean Georges Vongerichten. With a club-like atmosphere, it is the place for beautiful people (including waiters) to sip fancy cocktails. The menu, however, is a hit-and-miss affair.

Gotham Bar & Grill

12 East 12th Street, 10003 Tel (212) 620-4020Map 4 E1

A New York classic of modern American cuisine showcasing revolutionary chef Alfred Portale's creations such as gingerbread crusted foie gras or roasted pheasant in a ginger and juniper marinade. Some consider the place somewhat past its prime but the bargain $25 prix-fixe lunch is worth a try.

EAST VILLAGEBlue 9 Burger

92 Third Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 979-0053Map 4 F1

Tasty griddle hamburgers in the East Village at very affordable prices for when you get those fast-food cravings without the need to visit a chain. Plus, they offer a mango-chili sauce with your fries. Grab it to go and head to a park nearby for a good people-watching picnic.

Dumpling Man

100 St Mark's Place, 10009 Tel (212) 505-2121Map 5 A1

Tiny yet trendy bar in the East Village, offering a wide variety of dumplings to meet your imagination. You get to watch what goes on behind the bar as the cooks handle the steamed or fried treasures. With rock-bottom prices, it doesn't get better than this dinner and a show.

Minca Ramen Factory

536 East 5th St, 10009 Tel (212) 505-8001Map 5 B2

Minca is a Ramen-style noodle joint that is far away from your memories of microwave noodle cups. You can choose a variety of noodles with beef, pork, vegetarian, and more. Perfect spot for cold weather after a stroll through the East Village hip boutiques.

Caracas Arepa Bar

91 East 7th St, 10009 Tel (212) 228-5062Map 5 A2

A kitschy restaurant with delicious Venezuelan fast food and slow service. Arepas (savory corn cakes with a variety of fillings), sandwiches, and tamales are great fillers at rock-bottom prices. The premises are unbelievably small but the food keeps people coming. They also have a Brooklyn location.

Counter

105 First Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 982-5870Map 5 A2

Inventive vegetarian cuisine worth the trip for non-vegetarians in a sophisticated dining room. An inviting environmentally sound, organic or biodynamic, wine list is also highly recommended. Caring but nevertheless spotty service from time to time.

Great Jones Café

54 Great Jones St, 10012 Tel (212) 674-9304Map 4 F2

Get your fix of New Orleans cooking in this inexpensive, family-friendly, jukebox-equipped hole-in-the-wall. Staples include fried shrimp po'boys, andouille sausages, and jambalaya. Definitely down it all with a beer. Look for the colorful Elvis likeness in the window.

Il Bagatto

192 East 2nd St, 10009 Tel (212) 228-0977Map 5 B2

Trendy and popular Italian eatery with inexpensive and well-executed food that has New Yorkers flocking to the East Village. However, be warned of long lines and rushed service as a consequence. The reservation policy is a bit of mystery, so call ahead and see. If staying locally, order take-away.

La Palapa

77 St. Marks Place, 10003 Tel (212) 777-2537Map 5 A1

Mexico City-style and regional Mexican cooking with authentic ingredients make this a good fiesta destination in the beautifully decorated dining room. It's easy on the wallet and serves great margaritas too. Don't miss the Zihuatanejo-style catfish or the duck in black mole sauce.

Lil' Frankies19–21 First Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 420-4900Map 5 A2

Lil' Frankies is a neighborhood pizzeria with an oven that claims to have lava from Vesuvius! Despite the boasting, cheap and very good pizzas draw a hip young crowd. The place features a backyard garden for alfresco dining, and service is friendly, if a bit on the slow side.

Zum Schneider107 Avenue C, 10009 Tel (212) 598-1098Map 5 B2

Oktoberfest all year round in this neighborhood favorite Bier Garten. Bring your lederhosen and enjoy the relaxed atmosphere and great sausages. Family-friendly, it usually draws big crowds on weekends when the service can be slow. As you might expect, a great selection of beer on tap from all over the world.

Casimir103 Avenue B, 10009 Tel (212) 358-9683Map 5 B2

Packed French bistro in the happening area of Alphabet City. Authentic fare brought by good-looking, not necessarily speedy, waiters includes black pudding sausage and steak frites. Try grabbing a table at the little outside garden for extra charm, and make sure to bring your American Express (the only card accepted).

The Elephant58 East 1st St, 10003 Tel (212) 505-7739Map 5 A3

A Thai-French place that is always happening with cute crowd and waiters alike. Inventive Thai cocktails and well-executed dishes such as sticky rice with chicken and pork, and duck breast with orange confit and cinnamon prepared in a wok. The decor is a mix of funky rattan with French accents.

Jules65 St. Marks Place, 10003 Tel (212) 477-5560Map 5 A2

A candle-lit Parisian brasserie vibe and live jazz nightly with no cover charge (a New York rarity) make this a fine East Village choice. The menu has familiar bistro offerings like steak frites as well as more classic French dishes. The swinging young crowd adds to the ambience. Be prepared; the band will ask for tips.

The Mermaid Inn96 Second Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 674-5870Map 5 A2

This hip seafood restaurant attracts a young foodie crowd delighting in a prime, fresh raw bar and New England-style fare such as lobster sandwiches and chowder. A no-reservation policy usually comes with long lines attached, but stick them out: it is worth it.

Momofuku Noodle Bar171 First Ave, 10003 Tel (212) 475-7899Map 5 A1

Celebrated Korean-American chef David Chang is at the helm of this airy restaurant. The menu changes daily and might include steamed pork buns or duck confit salad. The signature ramen comes soaked in a fragrant stock made from pork bones and chicken legs, and then laden with pork belly, snowpeas, and a poached egg.

Hearth403 East 12th St, 10009 Tel (212) 602-1300Map 5 A1

A Tuscan-American restaurant with high-quality and audacious food in a romantic and chic-rustic setting. Chef Marco Canora (previously from Craft) offers interesting dishes such as ribollita (bean and cabbage soup), New Zealand venison, and olive oil cake. Tasting menu available.

Jewel Bako239 East 5th St, 10003 Tel (212) 979-1012Map 4 F2

The battle for New York's best sushi got more heated with this high-end Japanese restaurant offering fresh-from-the-sea ingredients beautifully prepared. Courteous but erratic service and the extremely tiny premises take some shine out of the expensive experience. A more casual spot just opened around the corner.

GRAMERCY AND THE FLATIRON DISTRICTChat 'n' Chew10 East 16th St, 10003 Tel (212) 243-1616Map 8 F5

Kitschy comfort food destination in the Union Square area that fills the spot and is gentle on the wallet. Staples include mac 'n' cheese, a year-round Thanksgiving roast-turkey dinner, and mama's meatloaf. Don't forget the mashed potatoes, and a changing selection of cakes and pies for dessert. Good brunch spot.

Chennai Garden129 East 27th St, 10016 Tel (212) 689-1997Map 9 A3

The area known as "Curry Hill" has many Indian restaurants but this inviting spot is a bit different, offering well-prepared South Indian fare that also happens to be vegetarian and kosher. Although the decor is nothing special, the bargain-priced all-you-can-eat lunch buffet definitely impresses with its variety and freshness.

Pipa

38 East 19th St, 10003 Tel (212) 677-2233Map 9 A5

Popular Pipa features a spacious dining room with wooden tables, aged mirrors, heavy draperies, and twinkling chandeliers. The zesty Spanish tapas include coca, a Catalan flatbread topped with tart artichokes and sobrasada, a spicy Mallorcan sausage; and sautéed spinach studded with raisins. There are also pitchers of potent sangria.

Tong Thai Brasserie

39 East 13th St, 10003 Tel (212) 253-2696Map 4 F1

A former lumber store transformed into an elegant two-level Thai restaurant, Tong Thai offers an array of creative dishes, including mussels resting on pillows of rice batter, and salt-baked chicken sweetened with strips of mango. For a warm finish, sip aromatic tea served in little iron teapots.

Bamiyan

358 Third Ave, 10016 Tel (212) 481-3232Map 9 B3

This Afghan restaurant offers a pleasant change of pace, with windows featuring tribal rugs and pillow seats around traditional low tables. The authentic menu features tasty curries, charcoal-grilled kebabs and yogurt dishes, along with more unusual dishes for adventurous diners.

Blue Smoke

116 East 27th St, 10016 Tel (212) 447-7733Map 9 A3

Danny Meyer does down south BBQ in this hip joint. Expect luscious heavy-duty pulled pork sandwiches, full racks of ribs, corn muffins, and hushpuppies (deep-fried cornmeal batter). The place features a jazz club downstairs. The large bar offers beer from around the US, and is great for large groups.

Devi

8 East 18th St, 10003 Tel (212) 691-1300Map 8 F5

A trendy newcomer from chefs Suvi Saran and Hemant Mathur, showcasing authentic regional Indian cuisine in a gracious environment full of Indian textiles and woodcarvings. Dishes include tandoori lamb chops with pear chutney and Masala-fried quail, and don't miss the delectable cauliflower!

I Trulli

122 East 27th St, 10010 Tel (212) 481-7372Map 9 A3

An upscale Italian restaurant specializing in Pugliese (Southern Italian) cuisine, I Trulli is the ideal spot for a romantic dinner by the fireplace in winter or in the garden during summer. A great wine list is available both here and at Enoteca I Trulli, its wine next door.

Pure Food and Wine

54 Irving Place, 10003 Tel (212) 477-1010Map 9 A5

New York's first restaurant dedicated to the raw-vegan movement – no food heated above 118°F. Expect produce with pedigree in creative dishes at this smart venue. A few examples include coconut noodles, cauliflower samosas, and an amaranth-crust pizza with hummus.

Tamarind

41–43 East 22nd St, 10010 Tel (212) 674-7400Map 8 F4

A modern Indian restaurant with minimalist decorations, fantastic china, and friendly service. While pricier than your average Indian eatery, the quality of the ingredients and mix of flavors will transport you to India promptly. Ask the waiter to help you pair something from their extensive wine list.

Craft

43 East 19th St, 10003 Tel (212) 780-0880Map 9 A5

Executive chef Tom Colicchio from the acclaimed Gramercy Tavern offers a “deconstructed” menu of vibrant quality in this sleekly decorated venue. Diners have the option to “create” their entrée with a combination of ingredients and sides that can quickly push up the tab. If it seems stressful, just ask the waiter for advice.

Gramercy Tavern

42 East 20th St, 10003 Tel (212) 477-0777Map 9 A5

Acclaimed chef Tom Colicchio prepares outstanding food in a comfortable, always hopping, rustic ambience of a country inn house. An ideal place for a sophisticated dining experience without stuffy pretense. This is consistently one of the best dining experiences in the city.

Mesa Grill

102 Fifth Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 807-7400Map 8 F5

Star chef Bobby Flay's flagship restaurant showcases modern Southwestern cuisine and has pleased crowds since 1991. The creative menu includes cornmeal-crust oysters, a “deconstructed” lamb taco, and chile- and honey-glazed salmon. The special margaritas are quite something, and the bar scene alone can get quite lively.

Tocqueville

1 East 15th St, 10003 Tel (212) 647-1515Map 8 F5

This tucked-away gem in Union Square offers French cuisine with Japanese touches, in a simple yet elegant and intimate room. Husband-and-wife team Marco Moreira and Jo-Ann Makovitsky put out well-executed quality ingredients. Great for a special occasion that does not require a house mortgage.

Union Square Café

21 East 16th Street, 10003 Tel (212) 243-4020Map 9 A5

Among the most popular of New York City restaurants, this Danny Meyer flagship serves modern American cuisine in comfortable surroundings, drawing ingredients from the greenmarket in Union Square. The prices are anything but market level. Courteous service.

11 Madison Park

11 Madison Ave, 10010 Tel (212) 889-0905Map 9 A4

The Art Deco dining room with soaring ceilings and views of historic Madison Square Park make this the most elegant of Danny Meyer's restaurant empire. The chef has brought recent acclaim, with a modern French menu that gets high marks from critics. Note, however, that the haute cuisine comes at a correspondingly high price.

Veritas

43 East 20th St, 10010 Tel (212) 353-3700Map 9 A5

A small sleek restaurant in the Flatiron District dedicated to wine. Wine-lovers may have a coronary when reading the 2,700 plus wine list. However, the food rises to the occasion with jewels such as foie gras with a quince-Armagnac sauce and a fragrant bouillabaisse of monkfish, skate, cauliflower, and saffron. Prix-fixe only.

CHELSEA AND THE GARMENT DISTRICT

Empire Diner

210 Tenth Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 243-2736Map 7 C4

Landmark Chelsea Art Deco diner open 24 hours with standard comfort food. This is the place to have trashy American fare such as pigs in a blanket after 4am for the still-raving club-kids! A sidewalk café in the warm months is also popular for brunch, and checking out the hip Chelsea crowd.

Bottino

246 Tenth Ave, 10001 Tel (212) 206-6766Map 7 C4

A Northern Italian restaurant in a restored 100-year-old hardware shop with minimalist decor. The place attracts a stylish crowd especially to its lovely backyard garden to enjoy traditional salads, pastas, and grilled meats. Try tasty dishes like spinach pasta with ricotta cheese or juicy New York strip steak with cannellini beans.

The Red Cat

227 Tenth Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 242-1122Map 7 C4

Modern American food in a gorgeous barnhouse setting with red- and white-painted wood that will transport you to New England. The menu features some of the best quality dishes in the neighborhood such as crispy fried oysters, wild striped bass in white wine butter, and delicious risotto fritters with blueberries.

Sueños

311 West 17th St, 10011 Tel (212) 243-1333Map 8 D5

Traditional Mexican regional cuisine served in a colorful mid-sized space. Great tequila and margarita bar and inventive food creations, including a chile-tasting menu, provide the necessary ingredients for a pleasant, if slightly above average-priced, dining experience.

Buddakan

75 Ninth Ave, 10011 Tel (212) 989-6699Map 8 D5

Philadelphia restaurateur Stephen Starr is repeating his success with a series of New York establishments. Buddakan is the jewel in his crown, featuring jaw-dropping decor in the main hall and a series of more intimate, smaller spaces. The Asian fusion cuisine is tasty, but not the main draw to this Chelsea restaurant. Hopping bar scene.

Matsuri

369 West 16th St, 10011 Tel (212) 243-6400Map 8 D5

An enormous and noisy dining space in the Maritime Hotel (see p284), Matsuri features high-quality Japanese fare from chef Tadashi Ono. He offers a range of dishes prepared with prime ingredients such as Kobe beef, sweet shrimp, and sake-soaked black cod. There is also a great sake list.

THEATER DISTRICT

Burger Joint at Le Parker Meridien

119 West 57th St, 10019 Tel (212) 708-7414Map 12 E3

This kitsch joint inside the Parker Meridien hotel (see p286) serves freshly cooked, mouthwatering burgers, fries, shakes, beer, and little else at rock-bottom prices. There's nothing uptight about this midtown gem hidden behind curtains in the lobby.

Carnegie Deli

854 Seventh Ave, 10019 Tel (212) 757-2245Map 12 E4

You'll have to wait in long lines to glimpse one of this deli's gargantuan sandwiches and history-making cheesecakes. You'll also have to endure hostile waiters in order to experience this "quintessential" New York experience. While expensive, you probably won't eat for over a week.

Carve Unique Sandwiches

760 Eighth Ave, 10036 Tel (212) 730-4949Map 12 D5

A small shop where you can get all your sandwich cravings fulfilled on the cheap in the Theater District. Hefty sandwiches include grilled lemon chicken, and a tomato, basil, and mozzarella combo. Lines are exasperatingly long at lunchtime, so try it in off hours.

Pam Real Thai Food

404 West 49th St, 10019 Tel (212) 333-7500Map 11 C5

If you are looking for good, inexpensive Thai food in the area, and don't care about decor, then this is the place. The usual assortment of curries, soups, pad Thai and noodle and rice dishes come in a variety of spicy degrees to order. No reservations means long waits at rush hour.

Kodama Sushi

301 West 45th St, 10036 Tel (212) 582-8065Map 12 D5

The convenient location, reliably fresh sushi, and other well-prepared Japanese favorites at good prices make Kodama a popular pre-theater choice. Regulars recommend the menu of rolls, with inventive ingredient combinations. Fast service ensures you will make the show on time, even at busy times.

Norma's

118 West 57th St, 10019 Tel (212) 708-7460Map 12 E3

Brunch reaches its zenith here in Le Parker Meridien hotel (see p286). The elaborate and creative menu, from lobster and asparagus omelette to chocolate French toast, will fulfill all of your desires. Pricey, but you won't eat anything else for the rest of the day, or have brunch anywhere quite like it. Weekends can see long lines. Very family-friendly.

Virgil's Real Barbecue

152 West 44th St, 10036 Tel (212) 921-9494Map 12 E5

Hopping BBQ joint in the heart of Times Square with an always bustling clientele and fast service. Ideal for pre-theater dining, provided that the heavy meal doesn't make you sleepy. Staples include over 10 different meat platters from around America, and tasty side dishes such as biscuits, collard greens, grits, and mac 'n' cheese.

Becco

355 West 46th St, 10036 Tel (212) 397-7597Map 11 D5

Chef Lidia Bastianich is a co-owner of this standard Italian trattoria on restaurant row offering a decent selection of antipasti, salads, pastas, and main courses, as well as pre-theater menus. The $25 wine list is a great deal as well, for those with more to spend, check out the more extensive regular wine list.

Marseille

630 Ninth Ave, 10036 Tel (212) 333-3410Map 12 D5

Good dining in the Theater District is indeed possible at this romantic French-Mediterranean restaurant with modern twists, including roasted monkfish with a cream-and-green-apple purée. The vegetarian-friendly menu is served by a courteous staff. Check out the funky bar, Kemia, downstairs.

Molyvos

871 Seventh Ave, 10019 Tel (212) 582-7500Map 12 E4

An upscale Greek restaurant near Carnegie Hall. The warm Mediterranean decor is the perfect setting for fresh seafood and other Greek specialties justifying the above-average prices. Try the flashy (and flaming) saganaki appetizer for your own pre-theater experience. Prix-fixe available.

Osteria al Doge

142 West 44th St, 10036 Tel (212) 944-3643Map 12 E5

Venetian cuisine in a rustic dining room with a successful power-lunch clientele and popular with early evening theater-goers. Service is expeditious and warm. The menu includes pizza, great salads, and carpaccio as well as fresh pastas at prices and quality better than other venues in the area.

1567 Broadway, 10036 Tel (212) 918-1400Map 12 E5

Among the coolest places in the area, this is dedicated to seafood in a big way, including a raw and sushi bar. The two-story restaurant is always hopping and some may complain about the noise level, not just from the live music. A good place to flex the expense account.

db Bistro Moderne

55 West 44th St, 10036 Tel (212) 391-2400Map 8 F1

Home of the famous $32 burger (filled with foie gras and wine-braised short ribs). This lively midtown restaurant offers another glimpse of Daniel Boulud's fine-dining experience with less damage to the wallet. Popular for power lunches with the publishing executive crowd who can afford it. Nice choice for upscale pre-theater dinner.

Esca402 West 43rd St, 10036 Tel (212) 564-7272Map 8 D1

An upscale Italian seafood restaurant from the Batali-Bastianich partnership. A large variety of appetizers is followed by other dishes that reflect the great quality of its ingredients. Service can be unreliable and some think the atmosphere is a bit stale. A little formal, so not the best place for children.

Gordon Ramsay151 West 54th St, 10019 Tel (212) 468-8888Map 12 E4

Despite UK chef Gordon Ramsay's brash reputation, his first US venture is a subdued affair. The 45-seat restaurant focuses on exquisite French cuisine with Asian accents, including roasted striped bass with bak choy and caramelized sweetbreads. The prix-fixe lunch is a bargain. Book well in advance, especially for the eight-seat kitchen table.

Osteria del Circo120 West 55th St, 10019 Tel (212) 265-3636Map 12 E4

Northern Italian restaurant from the Maccioni family known for Le Cirque. The Adam Tihany-designed dining room is spacious and comfortable and the food is well executed amid very affable service. Save space for desserts, including the Tuscan doughnuts with cappuccino cream.

Triomphe49 West 44th St, 10036 Tel (212) 453-4233Map 12 F5

A charming oasis of quiet from the bustle of Times Square, this French restaurant in the Iroquois Hotel pairs excellent food and wine with impeccable service. Tasting menus are available, as well as quirkier events, such as gathering between 10 and 20 of your friends to enjoy dinner and a movie in the private room.

Le Bernardin155 West 51st St, 10019 Tel (212) 554-1515Map 12 E4

A dream-come-true for seafood- and fish-lovers. This superb and elegant longstanding restaurant offers an outstanding dining experience with French haute cuisine from chef Eric Ripert. Service is flawless, including the sommelier advice. It's the place to propose.

Milos Estiatorio125 West 55th St, 10019 Tel (212) 245-7400Map 12 E4

Formidable Greek food with fresh-out-of-the-water seafood set in a spartan, airy dining room where guests select the fish from a beautifully decorated stand. The catch of the day depends on the luck of the fishermen purveyors for this upscale restaurant. Prices are some of the most expensive in town.

LOWER MIDTOWNAli Baba212 East 34th St, 10016 Tel (212) 683-9206Map 9 B2

Kebabs and lamb dishes are the favorites at this unpretentious Turkish standby offering good food at moderate prices. Pita pizzas are among the house specialties, and all of the meze (appetizers), hot and cold, are tasty, as are the main dishes, such as the lamb kebabs. The outdoor dining area hidden in the back is a welcome oasis in midtown.

Artisanal2 Park Ave, 10016 Tel (212) 725-8585Map 9 A2

Sparkling upscale French bistro where the main topic is cheese, including a large selection to taste either by themselves or in fondues. Non-cheese lovers need not be afraid as there are plenty of non-dairy selections available. Service can be unreliable, and reservations aren't always respected on time.

Grand Central Oyster BarGrand Central, Lower Level, 42nd St, 10017 Tel (212) 490-6650Map 9 A1

Cavernous space inside Grand Central where you'll be transported to the past. The very fresh seafood in simple preparations are not too pricey, and the menu features a long list of over a dozen kinds of oysters. The setting and decor is casual, so leave the fur coats at home and bring your appetite. Waiter service included.

Convivio45 Tudor City Place, 10017 Tel (212) 599-5045Map 9 B1

The admirable L'Impero restaurant has become the more colorful, less formal, Convivio. While the mood is more casual, the excellent southern Italian menu is as good as ever, and the pasta dishes continue to please. The prix-fixe is reasonable for this quality. Still a special occasion choice and a good excuse to discover hidden Tudor City.

Michael Jordan's The Steakhouse NYCGrand Central, North Balcony, 10017 Tel (212) 655-2300Map 9 A1

The celebrity player steakhouse located at the beautifully renovated mezzanine of Grand Central Terminal. Expect high-quality (and high-priced) dry, aged cuts. Avoid a hot summer day because the terminal is not air conditioned. Service is casual but knowledgeable and you can't beat the view of the hectic train passengers below.

UPPER MIDTOWN

La Bonne Soupe48 West 55th St, 10019 Tel (212) 586-7650Map 12 F4

A cozy midtown haven for the thrifty, with a longstanding French bistro menu including quiches, omelettes, soups, steaks, fondues, and crêpes. Service is on the slow side. Features a small terrace for outdoor dining in the warm months. A great low-cost option in this pricey and upscale neighborhood.

BLT Steak106 East 57th St, 10022 Tel (212) 752-7470Map 13 A3

Bistro Laurent Tourondel (BLT) offers fancy steaks with prime ingredients and your choice of sauces, from tangy three-mustard to creamy Béarnaise, for your Angus-certified protein. A stylish room with toffee-colored booths, a zinc bar, and other eye-catching elements draws a hip, fashion-conscious crowd.

Dawat210 East 58th St, 10022 Tel (212) 355-7555Map 13 B3

An attractive Indian restaurant with recipes from none other than famous Indian chef Madhur Jaffrey. Signature dishes include salmon rubbed with a coriander chutney and baked in a banana leaf. The clever touch is a snack cart that parades to your table. If you're not an Indian food expert, ask the helpful staff for advice.

Rue 5760 West 57th St, 10019 Tel (212) 307-5656Map 12 F3

The fusion fever does not stop at Rue 57, which offers a combination of a sushi bar and French cuisine in a popular sophisticated bistro. The succulent duck à l'orange comes highly recommended. It's good value as a breakfast option as well. Sidewalk tables available – a great people-watching spot in warm months.

Shun Lee Palace155 East 55th St, 10022 Tel (212) 371-8844Map 13 A4

Insieme77 Seventh Ave, 10019 Tel (212) 582-1310Map 12 E4

Chef Marco Canova introduces his inventive Italian cuisine to this corner of midtown. The spare, cool-toned restaurant features weathered white-oak tables, raw-silk drapes, and a menu that lists traditional Italian dishes on one side and modern, quirky takes on the other.

Marea240 Central Park South, 10019 Tel (212) 582-5100Map 12 D3

This Italian seafood palace features a superb menu – with a location to match, situated as it is at the crossroads of Central Park South and Columbus Circle. Delicacies include salt-crusted sea bass and razor clams with fennel fronds. There is also a small selection of non-fish dishes. Closed Fri lunch & Sun.

Pampano209 East 49th St, 10017 Tel (212) 751-4545Map 13 B2

A lovely, modern Mexican restaurant from chef Richard Sandoval and opera legend co-owner Plácido Domingo. Inventive and fresh creations in a chic dining room will make you want to sing an aria or two. Don't miss the smoked swordfish appetizer or the halibut Pampano. A beautiful terrace is also available.

Aquavit65 East 55th St, 10022 Tel (212) 307-7311Map 13 A4

The minimalist space for Aquavit serves as the home of inventive Scandinavian creations, including smoked Arctic char, from chefs Nils Noren and Marcus Samuelsson, with prime ingredients and several tasting menus available. The signature Aquavit cocktails are also a must.

Felidia243 East 58th St, 10022 Tel (212) 758-1479Map 13 B3

TV star chef Lidia Bastianich offers upscale Italian fare in this charming, wood-paneled town house with exposed bricks and flower arrangements. Conducive to romance, the seasonal menu is creative and well executed. In line with Lidia's other restaurants, an impressive wine list is also available.

Four Seasons99 East 52nd St, 10022 Tel (212) 754-9494Map 13 A4

Restaurants come and go, but this gracious New York institution with landmark decor by Philip Johnson seems to go on forever, always among the top-rated for American-Continental food. The Grill Room is still the prime place for power lunches, and the Pool Room is a perfect setting for special-occasion dinners.

La Grenouille

3 East 52nd St, 10022 Tel (212) 752-1495Map 12 F4

One of the last remaining classic French restaurants in the city, with outstanding food. The dining room walls are laden with silk and velvet blanquettes, beautiful floral arrangements abound making the eating experience a memorable one. A place for special occasions.

L'Atelier de Joel Robuchon

57 East 57th St, Four Seasons Hotel, 10022 Tel (212) 350-6658Map 13 A3

Chef Joel Robuchon has brought his exquisite Asian-influenced French cuisine to the Four Seasons Hotel (see p289). Just be prepared to pay dearly for these "small plates" of near perfection, from plump scallops in seaweed butter to quail stuffed with foie gras. A seat at the counter gives a view of the culinary team at work in the open kitchen.

The Modern

9 West 53rd St, 10019 Tel (212) 333-1220Map 12 F4

In a clean, modern space at the Museum of Modern Art, overlooking the Sculpture Garden, this restaurant serves an impeccable array of New American and French cuisine, alongside an extensive wine list. Expect a high level of service. The tasting menu is popular and can be enjoyed with a wine pairing if your wallet can take the strain.

Oceana

1221 Sixth Ave, 10020 Tel (212) 759-5941Map 12 E5

Ease into the evening with a crisp white wine and a platter of fresh seafood at this stylish vaulted restaurant. The menu features American cuisine with influences from as far afield as the Mediterranean and Asia. Excellent dishes include branzino (sea bass) stuffed with mushrooms, spinach, and black olives. There is also a Raw Bar.

UPPER EAST SIDEBrother Jimmy's BBQ

1485 Second Ave, 10021 Tel (212) 288-0999Map 17 B5

The original of the Brother Jimmy's chain promises a rowdy evening and some "finger-lickin'" ribs and Southern favorites. All-you-can-eat specials are a popular option. This is a good destination for carnivores, though there are a few options for vegetarians. Some quieter tables can be found at the rear.

Shanghai Pavilion

1378 Third Ave, 10021 Tel (212) 585-3388Map 17 B5

Offering Shanghai cuisine, as authentic as you can get outside of Chinatown, the menu here has plenty of options at reasonable prices, making it a good value in this neighborhood. The service is friendly. Great dim sums, noodle dishes, and specialties such as velvet sea bass or lobster tropicana.

Via Quadronno

25 East 73rd St, 10021 Tel (212) 650-9880Map 12 F1

A cute Italian-style "bar paninoteca" with a rainbow of delicious prime-ingredient sandwiches and salads worth a stop after a Museum Mile extravaganza. The small space inspired by a Milan paninoteca translates into waiting lines at peak hours. Definitely splurge on a glass of wine to go with the meal.

Beyoglu

1431 Second Ave, 10028 Tel (212) 650-0850Map 17 B5

Everyone raves about the meze, delicious Turkish appetizers, at this whimsically decorated, always crowded neighborhood favorite. Regulars make a meal of a selection of small treats like borek (fillo stuffed with feta cheese), stuffed grape leaves, calf's liver, and eggplant salad; the daily seafood specials and lamb are also recommended.

Maya

1191 First Ave, 10021 Tel (212) 585-1818Map 13 C2

Chef Richard Sandoval serves sophisticated and delicate main courses at this upbeat Mexican restaurant in a peach-hued setting. The drawback comes in the sound level; dine early to avoid the din. Many rave about the seafood tacos, margaritas, and guacamole.

Sfoglìa

1402 Lexington Ave, 10128 Tel (212) 831-1402Map 17 A2

This popular restaurant specializes in Italian farmhouse fare. Start out with a bowl of plump, complimentary olives, followed by a pot of wild mussels steeped in garlic or braised duck with dried apricots. Top off the evening with a fine Italian wine, and don't miss the superb desserts, including homemade cookies and tangy gelato.

Café Boulud

20 East 76th St, 10021 Tel (212) 772-2600Map 16 F5

Chef Daniel Boulud creates a less formal dining room with solid creations inside the Surrey hotel. An interesting array of dinner options will keep any diner intrigued – "Le Tradition" (classic French), "Le Voyager" (world cuisines), "Le Potager" (vegetarian), and "La Saison" (seasonal specialties).

Daniel

60 East 65th St, 10021 Tel (212) 288-0033Map 13 A2

Chef Daniel Boulud's flagship restaurant features a Venetian Renaissance-inspired dining room, one of the most luscious settings in town. His highly acclaimed creations celebrate the seasons: summer brings forth corn crêpes stuffed with chanterelles, while in autumn there are mushrooms in a white truffle sauce. Beware of the sky-high prices.

David Burke & Donatella

133 East 61st St, 10021 Tel (212) 813-2121Map 13 A3

Creative New American dishes from chef David Burke and former Bellini hostess Donatella Arpaia. Diners cross a glamorous white gloss and stone bar to proceed to a cool dining area in bold colors and lacquered surfaces. Save room for the signature cheesecake "lollipop" dessert.

UPPER WEST SIDE

Whole Foods Market

Time Warner Center, 10 Columbus Circle, 10019 Tel (212) 823-9600Map 12 D3

An enormous, environment-friendly supermarket with an impressive food hall stocking all sorts of cuisine from sushi to pizzas. The ideal spot to shop for your inexpensive picnic adventures in Central Park or eat in at the booths. A wine shop is available inside too. Beware of crowds at peak times. There are other branches throughout New York.

Gennaro

665 Amsterdam Ave, 10025 Tel (212) 665-5348Map 15 C2

An inexpensive small café serving consistently good Italian food with large servings. With a no-reservation policy, there can be lines at busy times. All the usuals are available here, including daily pasta specials and a wine list that is pretty reasonable. When busy, service can be annoyingly slow.

Olympic Flame Diner

200 West 60th St, 10023 Tel (212) 581-5259Map 11 C3

A classic New York diner, Olympic Flame is a find in the Lincoln Center area, where reasonable prices and tables without reservations are hard to come by. The enormous menu offers everything from omelettes, salads, and burgers to pastas, Greek specialties, and regular entrées. The efficient waiters will get you out in time for the curtain.

BLT Market

Ritz-Carlton Hotel, 1430 Sixth Ave, 10019 Tel (212) 521-6125Map 12 E3

French chef Laurent Tourandel's epicurean empire expands with this venture that pays homage to seasonal produce and local purveyors. The impressive result is rustic fare with a French twist, from stuffed Amish chicken with shoestring potatoes to black cod with butternut squash purée. Daily brunch. Closed lunch; Sun & Mon.

Boathouse Restaurant Central Park

Central Park, East 72nd St & Park Drive North, 10023 Tel (212) 517-2233Map 12 E1

The setting by Central Park's lake could not be any lovelier than this boathouse. An ideal place for brunch or lunch, and a romantic dinner is available April through October. Given the prices, it's unfortunate that the inevitable touristy nature has limited its potential to serve above-average food.

Café Fiorello

1900 Broadway, 10023 Tel (212) 595-5330Map 12 D2

Boasting that it's "the longest running show on Broadway" this noisy Italian place features a bountiful antipasto bar. You can sample enough for a whole meal before crossing the street to the Lincoln Center. The menu also includes pizzas and standard Italian fare. Great for peopewatching in the seasonal outside tables.

Café Luxembourg

200 West 70th St, 10023 Tel (212) 873-7411Map 11 C1

A classic Art Deco Parisian bistro with a zinc-topped bar, antique mirrors, and a loyal, hip clientele with the occasional celebrity sighting. Standard bistro fare with weekly specials available but don't expect flawless service. The crowd and decor make it a good choice for business dinners.

Calle Ocho

446 Columbus Ave, 10024 Tel (212) 873-5025Map 16 D4

It's a never-ending party in this loud and colorful Cuban restaurant filled with beautiful 20-somethings. The menu is an amalgam of Latin American dishes, all with varying degrees of success. A small kids' menu is also available. And since it's close to the American Museum of Natural History, take a break with your family and have a drink.

La Rural

768 Amsterdam Ave, 10025 Tel (212) 749-2929Map 15 C1

Lively Argentine steakhouse La Rural serves a hearty parrillada (mixed grill) for two which includes steak, sweetbreads, ribs, sausage, salad, and one side dish. Meat is definitely the specialty here and you get lots of it, but leave room for dessert if you can.

Pasha

70 West 71st St, 10023 Tel (212) 579-8751Map 12 D1

A serene and spacious, skylit, Turkish restaurant with friendly service ideal for a good conversation amid well-executed food. The lamb dumpling appetizers are delicious as well as the eggplant dishes, in particular the smoky patlican salatasi, mashed with garlic, olive oil, and lemon.

Rosa Mexicano

61 Columbus Ave, 10023 Tel (212) 977-7700Map 12 D2

Popular and trendy upscale Mexican fine dining drawing a crowd of hip diners near Lincoln Center. Awesome pomegranate margaritas and sparkling sangrias, plus guacamole made to order at your table. Try the cochinilla pibil tacos (achiote rubbed pork steamed in banana leaves) or the Veracruz fish in tomato sauce.

Ouest

2315 Broadway, 10024 Tel (212) 580-8700Map 15 C4

Chef Tom Valenti offers his version of New American comfort cuisine – it's an elegant restaurant that still makes you feel comfortable. The menu features nightly specials such as traditional meatloaf and other creative dishes such as poached squab with foie gras agnolotti. An outstanding wine list is available as well.

Asiate

80 Columbus Circle, 35th Floor, 10019 Tel (212) 805-8881Map 12 D3

Stellar views of Central Park are available from this Asian-influenced restaurant at the Mandarin Oriental hotel. Highlights include pan-seared foie gras with steamed sea eel and tamarind sauce and Wagyu beef with oxtail sauce. The bar includes an interesting array of cocktails.

Jean-Georges

1 Central Park West at Columbus Circle and West 60th St, 10023 Tel (212) 299-3900Map 12 D3

Chef Jean-Georges's flagship temple for modern French cuisine with Asian nuances. An austere yet elegant, Adam Tihany-designed room is the stage for an impressive array of delicate dishes. Service is courteous and knowledgeable. One of the most memorable fine dining experiences in New York.

Masa

Time Warner Center, 10 Columbus Circle, 10019 Tel (212) 823-9800Map 12 D3

Chef Masayoshi Takayama, of the famed LA Ginza Sushi-ko, has moved to New York to break the record of most expensive meal ever. It consists of a never-ending kaiseki-style (tasting) menu chosen by Mr Masa using incredibly fresh ingredients. Take a seat by the sushi bar to savor the show in every detail.

Per Se

Time Warner Center, 10 Columbus Circle, 10019 Tel (212) 823-9335Map 12 D3

Call at least two months in advance to score a seat in the critically acclaimed restaurant from Thomas Keller of California's French Laundry fame. The tasting menus change daily, and many think the vegetarian option is the best. Plus, it offers spectacular views of Central Park. Service is impeccable.

Picholine

35 West 64th St, 10023 Tel (212) 724-8585Map 12 D2

Terrace Brennan's elegant French-Mediterranean restaurant a few steps away from the Lincoln Center. Several prix-fixe, à la carte, and even tasting menus available with dishes such as John Dory with grapes, chanterelles, and truffle vinaigrette. Save room for their famous artisanal cheeses.

MORNINGSIDE HEIGHTS AND HARLEMAmy Ruth's

113 West 116th St, 10026 Tel (212) 280-8779Map 21 B3

Soul food at its best can be found at this Harlem classic, named after the owner's grandmother and decorated with portraits of jazz greats. Think fried or smothered chicken with waffles, spare ribs, catfish, collard greens, and sweet potatoes. Be sure to save room for Southern desserts like peach cobbler and "red velvet" chocolate cake.

FARTHER AFIELD: BROOKLYNChip Shop

383 Fifth Ave, 11215 Tel (718) 832-7701

An outpost of British comfort food in New York City, this inexpensive shop offers fish and chips, bangers and mash, and kidney pies in a kitschy dining room. Great to sit back with a group of friends and enjoy a pint of beer. Family-friendly as well. Don't forget to try the yummy fried Mars bar. There are several other locations in Brooklyn.

Grimaldi's

19 Old Fulton St, 11201 Tel (718) 858-4300

Unbelievably good coal-oven pizzas made from the milkiest mozzarella and the freshest sauce. Definitely try the pepperoni. This place is worth the trip to Brooklyn and a walk back across the bridge. Bring your family and wait in line to taste the inexpensive pies at this buzzing pizzeria.

Planet Thailand

133 North 7th St, 11211 Tel (718) 599-5758

A trendy renovated warehouse featuring outstanding Thai specialties – try the beef and broccoli flat noodles – and a less successful sushi bar. A very hip place for large groups. Reserve ahead. Only one stop into Brooklyn on the L-train, this is the place to dine before bar-hopping in Williamsburg.

Ghenet Brooklyn

348 Douglass St, 11217 Tel (718) 230-4475

This Ethiopian restaurant in Park Slope features low, dark-wood tables flanked by caramel-hued banquettes, which invite grazing from circular platters. In place of utensils is spongy injera bread, which arrives like a row of tan, folded napkins. Try dishes such as tender chicken legs enveloped in sweet onions, or rosy chunks of tuna tartar.

Thomas Biesl

25 Lafayette Ave, Fort Greene, 11217 Tel (718) 222-5800

The location directly across from the Brooklyn Academy of Music is only one good reason to discover this touch of Old Europe, a warm café serving schnitzel, goulash, spaetzle, strudel, linzertorte, and other Viennese classics. The patio garden is a nice spot for brunch and on Mondays, when the theater is dark, prix-fixe dinners are a real bargain.

The Grocery

288 Smith St, 11231 Tel (718) 596-3335

A charming 30-seat restaurant in Carroll Gardens, offering a delightful seasonal menu such as whole boneless trout stuffed with spaetzle and asparagus or braised duck breast with bulghur, Swiss chard, and caramelized red wine. The romantic venue also features a lovely summer garden.

Peter Luger Steakhouse

178 Broadway, 11211 Tel (718) 387-7400

A New York institution serving “the discerning steak connoisseur” since 1887. Try their out-of-this-world meat. Just be aware that the décor’s ambience is much like a beer-hall and the waiters can be snippy. Reserve ahead and still expect to wait for a table.

River Café

One Water St, 11201 Tel (718) 522-5200

Unrivaled for its location featuring stunning Manhattan skyline views, this upscale Brooklyn standout offers a New American three-course, prix-fixe menu. A tasting menu is also available. An unbeatable romantic place for special occasions. Save room for their signature chocolate Brooklyn Bridge dessert.

FARTHER AFIELD: QUEENSJackson Diner

37–47 74th St, 11372 Tel (718) 672-1232

This spacious Indian cafeteria-style restaurant pulls out all the stops for well-prepared Northern Indian (spicy) and Southern Indian (less spicy) food at very cheap prices and well worth the visit when you are at Jackson Heights. Magnificent lamb and tandoori chicken and prawn dishes, as well as samosas and great lassi to wash it all down.

Sripraphai

64-13 39th Ave, Woodside, 11377 Tel (718) 899-9599

Many believe the best, most authentic, and least expensive Thai food in New York is found in this plain café, 20 minutes from Manhattan, not far from the Woodside stop on the No.7 subway line. Well worth the trip, especially on a balmy night when you can enjoy the very pretty garden out back.

Elias Corner

24–02 31st St, 11102 Tel (718) 932-1510

Among the more popular Greek restaurants with a huge following and long lines. This no-thrills, expanded restaurant serves some of the freshest fish in town, prepared simply. A large garden also makes this a good place for group gatherings, if you don't mind the wait at rush hours, especially weekends.

S'Agapo

34–21 34th Ave, 11106 Tel (718) 626-0303

The name means “I love you” in Greek, and this taverna has a cheerful atmosphere where grilled fish is the specialty. Live music on weekends and a terrace for summer evenings enliven the inexpensive experience. The restaurant is close to the American Museum of the Moving Image.

Light Meals and Snacks

You can get a snack almost anywhere and anytime in Manhattan. New Yorkers seem to eat endlessly – on street corners, in bars, luncheonettes, delis, before and after work, and long into the night. Casual eating in New York might include soft pretzels or char-roasted chestnuts from a corner stand; a huge sandwich from a deli; a Greek gyro sandwich (roasted lamb in pita bread) from street vendors; a pre-theater snack at a café or coffee bar; or a post-party binge at an all-night diner or bistro. While street fare is generally cheap, the quality and culinary skills vary greatly.

DELIS

Delicatessens are a New York institution, not to mention a great source for a hefty lunchtime sandwich. Any visitor to the city should definitely try a deli's wonderful corned beef and pastrami sandwiches. While Carnegie Delicatessen in the Theater District is perhaps New York's most famous deli, Katz's Deli on the Lower East Side is much more authentic – and cheaper. Also deservedly popular is Second Avenue Deli, with its superb pastrami on rye and oozing blintzes.

Most deli business is takeout, and as a result, delis are bustling places serving huge sandwiches at relatively cheap prices. Counter staff are typically surly and impatient, and rudeness has almost become a trademark of the Stage Deli, which is now more of a tourist stop than the showbiz favorite it used to be.

For New York ethnic Jewish flavor, try Barney Greengrass, on the Upper West Side. In operation since 1929, the "Sturgeon King" serves up lox, salmon, pastrami, and, of course, sturgeon. Zabar's is a takeout heaven for yuppies who put up with the crowds for superb smoked fish, pickles, and salads.

CAFÉS, BISTROS, AND BRASSERIES

Cafés, bistros, and the larger brasseries have become "in" places in New York. Try the upscale Balthazar on Spring Street for "brilliantly faux" everything except the menu, which is stellar. Even more trendy is Balthazar's sister bistro, Pastis, in the Meatpacking District. The Café Centro, above Grand Central, is particularly busy and noisy during lunchtime, and is a favorite with business types. The Centro's Provençal/Mediterranean fare includes fish soups and some succulent desserts. Brasserie on East 53rd, a longtime landmark, has had an elegant remodeling. Bistro du Nord on Madison Avenue has a variety of French/American fare with an inventive flair. Downtown, Odeon is a TriBeCa favorite for its brasserie menu and late hours. Raoul's in SoHo is a French bistro with a relaxed ambience that keeps artists and other habitués coming back for reliable, informal food. Elephant and Castle, a minimally decorated café, is a Greenwich Village standby for soup-salad-omelette lunches and other light snacks. Its real forte is breakfast and brunch, served in ample portions at modest prices. The bar scene is lively too. Tiny Chez Jacqueline is also a favored Village spot. Its French bistro fare and proximity to several off-Broadway theaters make it popular with the young, hip, and international crowd for a moderately priced dinner or late supper.

In the Theater District, try the Cuban Victor's Café. Large, lively, and Latin, it is known for authentic Cuban food served in giant portions at medium prices. Chez Josephine is an exuberant bistro-cabaret with live jazz piano playing. The scene is the main attraction here, and the French food is excellent.

La Boite en Bois, small but delightfully French, serves delicious French bistro food and is conveniently close to Lincoln Center. In the same vicinity is Vince and Eddie's, a tiny gem known for reliable, often superb American food.

Sarabeth's, on the Upper West Side, defies categorizing, but might best be dubbed a café. Breakfast or weekend brunch is the best time to try waffles, French toast, pancakes, and omelettes. There are two other branches, one of which is located in the Whitney Museum of Art.

The Gramercy Park area's Les Halles is about as all-out French bistro as New York gets. At its late-night peak, the decibel level is high, but regulars think the frites and beef dishes are worth the noise and crowds.

PIZZERIAS

Pizza is available all over New York, from street stands and fast-food places that sell it by the slice to a traditional Neapolitan pizzeria.

Some pizzerias offer something more. Arturo's Pizzeria uses a coal oven for crisp, thin-crust bases with the added inducement of live jazz. Mezzogiorno has a Tuscan menu and wonderful pizzas with unusual toppings. Lombardi's oven-baked pizzas are considered among the finest in Manhattan. The crowded Mezzaluna also specializes in brick-oven, thin-crust pizza, as does John's Pizzeria, whose fans, including Woody Allen, consider it Manhattan's best.

Brooklyn boasts a top pizzeria in Coney Island's Totonno Pizzeria, which is well worth the trip for real pizza aficionadas, though it also has a Manhattan branch. Joe's Pizza has made a name for itself in Brooklyn and Manhattan. It's often busy, but the lines move quickly.

Generally, pizza parlors are good places to go for a cheap, simple meal, particularly with children. Most places won't take reservations, so popular ones may have long lines.

HAMBURGER PLACES

Apart from the hot dog stands on the street, New York has many places selling better quality burgers, even though prices for a top grade all-beef burger can go up to $10.

Burgers have even gone "upscale" with famed New York restaurateur Danny Meyer creating the Shake Shack in Madison Square Park. It offers good-value eats from April to November. In Midtown, the stylish Le Parker Meridien Hotel opened the Burger Joint, which looks like a truck-stop, and has some of the best burgers in town.

Bright and basic, the five outlets of Jackson Hole offer fat, juicy, meaty burgers in 28 varieties popular with kids. Adults might prefer less glare and smarter decor, but they will like the low prices. Alternatively, sink your teeth into the juicy burgers on offer at the Five Guys chain.

The Corner Bistro in Greenwich Village offers New York's best burgers, tasty and reasonably priced. The beer selection is good, too, and the 4am closing makes this a great late-night stop.

DINERS AND LUNCHEONETTES

Diners and luncheonettes, also called sandwich or coffee shops, can be found all over New York City. Food is mostly bland but served in huge, cheap platefuls. They are usually open from breakfast until late evening, and you can stop in at almost any hour.

A favorite trend with diners has seen 1990s replicas of the old 1930s cheap-eats places. One such retro-diner is the chic Empire Diner (see p138), which is a popular spot for club kids thanks to its 24-hour opening times. The kitsch 50s-style Comfort Diner serves large portions of comfort food and the best milkshakes in town. Theatergoers love Junior's diner in Brooklyn which is famous for its delicious cheesecake. Big Nick's on Broadway is the best place for a pizza, hamburger, or breakfast on the Upper West Side. The Coffee Shop in Union Square serves Brazilian-American fare and is open all night.

On the Upper East Side, Eli Zabar's E.A.T. sells excellent but pricey Jewish favorites – such as mushroom-barley soup and challah bread, as well as some sinful desserts. Another popular UES spot is EJ's Luncheonette, offering classic kid-friendly meals in a retro 1950s setting.

Devotees swear by Viand, a spic-and-span East Side luncheonette, with cheap, ample American breakfasts, good burgers, egg creams, and the best turkey sandwiches in town. Veselka, not the usual New York sandwich shop, serves Polish/Ukrainian food at rock-bottom prices and also has a second outlet, Little Veselka.

TEA ROOMS

The only place you can be absolutely sure of getting a cup of real, brewed tea is at a formal, prix-fixe afternoon tea in a lounge at one of New York's pricier hotels, from 3pm to 5pm.

For an extra-stylish tea, on Chippendale furniture, visit Carlyle in the Upper East Side. Another good buy in hotel prix-fixe tea is Hotel Pierre. Tea at the Waldorf-Astoria comes with Devonshire cream, while the elegant tea at Stanhope on Fifth Avenue is abundant enough to carry you through to a late dinner.

A variation on tea themes can be found in a chain of teahouses called Saint's Alp. These delightful spots, serving frothy, flavored, colorful tea drinks poured over crushed ice, can be found at 51 Mott Street near Chinatown and in the Times Square area. Teatime, Japanese-style, can also be enjoyed at The Tea Box, in the Takashimaya department store on Fifth Avenue.

COFFEE AND CAKES

You can get a decent cup of coffee for as little as 75 cents, with endless free refills, at most diners, luncheonettes, and coffee shops. There is a popular trend for coffee bars that serve a variety of specialty coffees, such as cappuccino, espresso, and caffè latte. Ice-cream parlors and patisseries also serve good coffee, along with sinfully luscious pastries.

People wait in line at Magnolia Bakery to sample the decadent cakes. Magnolia has now opened a second spot on the Upper West Side. Joe boasts the world's best espresso machine, while Caffè Ferrara, going strong since 1892, has moderately priced Italian pastries, good coffee, and outdoor seating.

The Hungarian Pastry Shop has a range of Austro-Hungarian delights and views of St. John the Divine. Located in the Hotel Edison, Café Edison offers reasonably priced food in an Art Nouveau setting. Sant Ambroeus is a luxurious outpost of the Milanese pasticceria selling sumptuous desserts. In addition to home delivery of pies or cakes, Dessert Delivery has a nifty café for tasting the pastries and coffee. Try Serendipity 3, famous for its Victoriana, ice-cream creations – if you're an ice-cream aficionado don't miss the frozen hot chocolate – as well as coffee, and mid-afternoon snacks.

Barnes & Noble Café is a happy refuge for coffee and a pastry while browsing the bookstore. Mudspot is the permanent counterpart to the mobile, bright orange "Mudtrack" van that sells potent coffee. And, like them or not, you can't ignore Starbucks, which has dozens of locations around town.

New York Bars

New York bars play a huge role in the life and culture of the city. Many New Yorkers spend the evening in a succession of bars, because each usually offers something more than just alcohol. There may be additional inducements, like excellent food, live music, dancing, or a particularly large selection of beers. Brew pubs, which serve meals and brew beer on the premises, are also popular. Bars suiting every taste and budget are to be found in every corner.

RULES AND CONVENTIONS

Bars generally remain open from around 11am to midnight. Some stay open to 2 or 4am, when they must close by law. Many bars have a "happy hour" between 5pm and 7pm, when they offer twofers (two drinks for the price of one) and free snacks. Bartenders can refuse to serve anyone they consider having had too much to drink. Smoking is banned and is only allowed outside or in specially ventilated rooms.

The legal minimum drinking age is 21; if the bartender suspects you are younger, you'll be "carded," or asked for identification. Children aren't usually allowed in.

It is common to "run a tab" by giving the bartender a credit card and paying your bill just before you leave. Tipping the bartender is expected – 15 percent of the bill or about $1 per drink. Shots are not pre-measured, so if you want a bigger drink, it can help to "belly up" to the bar and tip the bartender accordingly for his or her generosity. If you sit at a table, you'll be served there and be charged more. A round of drinks can be expensive. Save money by buying a quart (95 cl) or a half gallon (190 cl) pitcher of beer.

Many bars have obtained liquor licenses under an obscure cabaret law that prohibits dancing. Bars are regularly closed down for ignoring this rule, so if staff ask you to refrain from dancing to music, they are serious and should be obeyed.

WHAT TO DRINK

Mainstream bars serve standard beers from big producers, such as Budweiser, Coors, and Miller, as well as high-profile imports including Becks, Heineken, and draft Guinness. Old pubs and chic bars have a much wider variety of beers, imported and small domestics. These include flavorful beers, usually based on traditional European styles, made by some of New York's microbreweries. The locally brewed Brooklyn Lager is highly rated.

Other popular drinks include "designer," or "fusion," cocktails, rum and coke, vodka-and- tonic, gin-and- tonic, dry Martinis, and Scotch or bourbon – either "straight up" (without ice) or "on the rocks" (with ice). The "Cosmopolitan" is very New York: vodka, cranberry juice, triple sec, and lime. Most of the bars serve a range of Martinis made with vodka.

Wine is widely available at bars, and the "wine bar" concept is making a comeback with options all over the city.

FOOD

Some bars serve food such as burgers, fries, salads, sandwiches, and spicy chicken wings throughout the day. If you are visiting the bar of a popular restaurant, you can often order bar snacks. Most bar kitchens stop serving food just before midnight.

FASHIONABLE BARS

To get into a hip bar, you will need to look glamorous and be prepared to wait in line, unless you arrive early. The Meatpacking District is lined with lively bars, including Cielo, a strobe-lit bar and club with potent cocktails and a soundtrack with everything from 1980s pop to hip-hop. Within stumbling distance is Buddha Bar NYC, a spinoff of the Paris original. The enormous restaurant has a bar that draws a hip crowd. The only serene elements are the massive Buddha and the jellyfish-stocked aquariums. Also incorporating a giant Buddha is Tao Bar, located in a former theater next to the Four Seasons Hotel. The venue is spread over three floors: the top two are devoted to pan-Asian cuisine and overlook the bar below.

The nightlife in the Lower East Side (LES) is growing in leaps and bounds, with numerous bars and clubs opening their doors. Enjoy cocktails and conversation at the lively Schiller's Liquor Bar. Formerly the Bowery Bar, the B-Bar still attracts a stylish crowd, though some claim its glory days are over. In the summer, the enormous outdoor space can't be beaten. Pravda is another favorite in nearby NoLIta. Subdued lighting creates a degree of calm in this subterranean spot decorated in Soviet chic. The Odeon on Broadway captures the lively SoHo-TriBeCa scene.

BARS WITH VIEWS

Top of the Tower, on the 26th floor of the Art Deco Beekman Tower, offers unsurpassed views of the city and great piano music. Also with great views are the Rooftop Bar and Lounge at the Empire Hotel, Stone Rose Lounge in the Time Warner Center, and Rise at the Ritz-Carlton in Battery Park. In warm weather, Bryant Park Café is a popular midtown scene, or you can sip cocktails and soak up the dazzling skyline views on 230 Fifth's vast wrap-around terrace.

HISTORIC AND LITERARY BARS

If you sample only one New York bar, it should probably be McSorley's Old Ale House, an Irish saloon often dubbed "McSurly's" because of its staff. It opened in 1854, and is one of the city's oldest bars.

The Ear Inn dates from 1812 when the first tavern opened on this SoHo site. Its cramped interior and long wooden bar ooze authenticity. Another SoHo favorite is Fanelli's Café, a former speakeasy that opened its doors in 1922 (though locals have been visiting the watering hole on this site since 1847).

Greenwich Village has some of the city's oldest bars, such as Dylan Thomas's favorite, the White Horse Tavern, an unpretentious 1880s landmark still crowded with literary and collegiate types. It also has an outdoor café for warm weather. Peculier Pub is a beer-lover's paradise, with over 360 varieties of beer.

A good, if touristy, place for a drink in the financial district is Fraunces Tavern, first built in 1719 (see p76).

Pete's Tavern in the Gramercy Park area dates to 1864. Busy until 2am, it is known for Victoriana and the house brew called Pete's Ale. The typical Irish pub Old Town Bar has been serving stout since 1892, and is now favored largely by advertising types. No longer the celebrity scene it once was, Sardi's still appeals to New York Times reporters, and serves generous portions.

Hidden away in the balcony of Grand Central Terminal is The Campbell Apartment, the former private office of 1920s tycoon John W. Campbell. The spectacular space resembles a 13th-century Florentine palace. On the Upper East Side, the Uptown Lounge draws large crowds with its potent cocktails, tasty nibbles, and lively dance tunes.

A bustling saloon with Irish bartenders, P. J. Clarke's has been New York's favorite since the 1890s. Elaine's, also on the East Side, remains a haunt of mainly visiting literary types, though the food is so-so.

Near Carnegie Hall is P. J. Carney's, a watering hole for musicians and artists since 1927. It serves Irish ales and a good shepherd's pie.

YOUNG HANGOUTS

Brew pubs, where the house beer is brewed on the premises, are all the rage with the 20- and 30-somethings, as are bars that stock a variety of microbrews and imported beers. The Chelsea Brewing Company is a large, fun-filled brew pub in the Chelsea Piers sports complex. In the Gramercy neighborhood, you will find the Heartland Brewery, a bustling brew pub with five beers, including the outstanding India Pale Ale, and many seasonals, such as pumpkin ale. The cozy bar at The Room, in SoHo, has a good selection of beers and wine.

Serious beer drinkers will enjoy the 170 draft and bottled Belgian beers on offer at Burp Castle, while homesick Brits will likely head to Manchester. In a cozy, publike setting, you'll find Watneys or Newcastle Brown Ale on tap, just two of the 18 draft beers, and 40 bottled ones not widely available in New York.

In the East Village is bustling d.b.a., which has 14 draft beers on tap, along with scores of microbrews and 50 single-malt whiskeys to choose from.

A popular beer stop uptown for the college-age crowd is the loud and noisy Brother Jimmy's BBQ, where you can snack on old-fashioned southern barbecued ribs.

Park Slope Ale House in Brooklyn is another brew pub favored by the young for its home brews and seasonal beers, as well as its decent pub grub and lively ambience.

GAY AND LESBIAN BARS

Gay bars can be found in Greenwich Village, Chelsea, and the East Village with a few on the Upper East and West Sides. Lesbian bars are mostly in Greenwich Village and East Village. For current listings, check the free weekly gay publication Next (www.nextmagazine.com).

HOTEL BARS

Centrally located, the Algonquin Hotel (see p145) was a famous literary haunt in the 1920s and early 1930s. Its Lobby Bar and Blue Bar are good places for a quiet pre-dinner or pre-theater drink.

The minimalist Bar 44 in the lobby lounge of the Royalton Hotel is a perfect spot for a drink while watching the theatrical crowds drifting in and out. Also in the Theater District, the Paramount Bar has floor-to-ceiling windows and is usually frequented by fashion and theater types. In Upper Midtown there's the Gilt Bar, where you can recline on soft, plush red velvet seats.

The Bull and Bear in the Waldorf-Astoria, dating back to the Prohibition era, exudes comfort, charm, and a sense of history.

The stylish King Cole Room at St. Regis Hotel is named after a colorful mural behind the bar, by Maxfield Parrish.

Relax to downtempo tunes at the Grand Bar. One of New York's trendier nightspots, the Soho Grand's bar is a good place to people-watch. Its sister hotel, the Tribeca Grand, also draws a crowd to its Church Lounge.

With dark-wood panels, navy-blue color scheme, and a kitschy seafaring theme, the Maritime Hotel's Lobby Bar draws a young, trendy crowd. Special attractions include a roaring fire in winter and an outdoor terrace in summer.

The glass-floored Hudson Bar at Ian Schrager's trendy Hudson Hotel is a regular hotspot. The Rose and Jade bars, in Schrager's Gramercy Park Hotel, are filled with fashionistas drinking in the "eclectic-Bohemian" vibe. Equally popular are Thom Bar at the 60 Thompson Hotel and Bookmarks at the Library Hotel; both attract a sophisticated scene. For those interested in joining the Sex and the City crowd, there's Rande Gerber's Whiskey Blue Bar in one of the boutique W Hotels.

SHOPPING

Visitors to New York will inevitably include shopping in their action plan. The city is the consumer capital of the world: a shopper's paradise and a constant source of entertainment, with dazzling window displays and a staggering variety of goods for sale. Everything is found here, from high fashion to rare children's books, state-of-the-art electronics and a mouthwatering array of exotic food. Whether you are looking for a personal Hovercraft, read-in-the-dark eyeglass attachments, a designer bed for your pet gerbil or a Wurlitzer jukebox, this is the city of your dreams. Whether you have $50,000 or $5, New York is the place to spend it.

Tiffany's clock

BEST BUYS

New York is a bargain hunter's dream, with huge discounts on anything from household goods to designer clothes. Some of the best shops are on Orchard Street and Grand Street on the Lower East Side, where designer goods are sold at considerably lower time to visit them is just before one of the major gift-giving holidays. Top Button (www.topbutton.com) has comprehensive sales listings.

SALES

One word you'll come across all over the city, anytime of the year, is "sale." So check the sale goods before you pay full price for any purchase. The best sales are during New York's sale seasons, which generally run from June until end-July and from December 26 until February. Look up the local papers for ads. Along midtown Fifth Avenue you'll see signs announcing "Lost Our Lease" sales. Avoid them, as these signs have been up for years at many shops. Also keep your eyes peeled for "Sample Sales," where the top designers sell to the public the sample outfits they have created to show store buyers. Sample sales occur at different locations throughout the city, and are generally not advertised, so your best bet is to keep a lookout for signs announcing sample sales, particularly on Fifth Avenue and on Broadway.

The 1920s-style Henri Bendel store (see p319) than the retail price. You can find just about every imaginable item of clothing here, in addition to tableware, shoes, home furnishings, and electronics. Some shops in this area are closed on Saturday – the Jewish Sabbath – but are usually open all day Sunday.

Another great area for fashion bargain hunters is the Garment District, roughly between Sixth and Eighth avenues from 30th to 40th Street. The main hub, Seventh Avenue, was renamed Fashion Avenue in the early 1970s. Several designers and manufacturers have showrooms here, some of which are open to the public. Many of their samples are put up for sales, announced on notices posted around the area. The best

HOW TO PAY

Most shops accept major credit cards, although there will often be a minimum purchase price. If you want to use your traveler's checks, identification is needed. Personal checks drawn in another currency will be refused. Some stores only take cash, especially during sales.

OPENING HOURS

Most shops are open from 10am to 6pm, Monday to Saturday. Many department stores are open through Sunday and until 9pm, at least two nights a week. Lunch hours (noon to 2:30pm), Saturdays, sales, and holidays will be the most crowded times.

TAXES

The New York City sales tax is 8.625 percent, although clothing and shoes under $110 are exempt. However, sales tax will be waived if the goods are shipped home.

SHOPPING TOURS

If you dread braving the stores alone, shopping tours are a good option. Apart from the main department stores, you could visit private designer showrooms, auction houses, and fashion shows. Some operators will customize tours to suit your requirements.

DEPARTMENT STORES AND MALLS

Most of the large department stores are in midtown Manhattan. Explore at leisure the ones you are interested in, since all these stores tend to be enormous, with a great range of goods. If possible, avoid weekends and vacation times when the crowds can be overwhelming. Prices are often high, but you may find some bargains during sales.

Window displays at Bloomingdale's (see p181)

Stores such as Saks Fifth Avenue, Bloomingdale's, and Macy's provide a diverse and extraordinary range of shopping services, including actually shopping for you.

One of the biggest malls to open in Manhattan is the Shops at Columbus Circle in the Time Warner Center. Its stores include Williams-Sonoma, Coach, and men's clothier Hugo Boss.

Barney's New York, favored by young professionals, specializes in excellent, though expensive, designer clothes.

Luxurious, elegant, and understated, Bergdorf Goodman sells contemporary clothes by European designers at high prices. The men's store is across the street.

A visit to New York isn't complete without Bloomingdale's (see p181), the Hollywood film star of the department stores, with many eye-catching displays and seductive goods. New Yorkers young and old come here to seek out the newest in fashion. The linen and fine china departments have an undisputed reputation for quality. Check out the gourmet food section, which features a shop devoted entirely to caviar.

Extensive shopping services and amenities include a noted restaurant, Le Train Bleu, with its view of the Queensboro Bridge. There is also a SoHo branch of Bloomingdale's on Broadway. Though much smaller than the main store, it stocks a similar selection of luxury goods.

At the exclusive Henri Bendel, everything from the Art Deco jewels to beautiful handmade shoes is displayed as a priceless work of art. The store, laid out in a series of 1920s-style boutiques, sells an excellent range of innovative women's fashions.

Lord & Taylor is renowned for its classic and much more conservative fashions for men and women, with an emphasis on US designers. You'll need comfortable shoes and plenty of time for browsing.

Macy's, the self-proclaimed largest store in the world (see p134-5), has ten floors selling everything imaginable from can openers to antiques.

A magnificent display offering household goods

Saks Fifth Avenue, known for style and elegance, has long been considered one of the city's best department stores, with service to match. It sells stunning designerwear for adults as well as children.

New York's Best: Shopping

Designer shoes from Madison Avenue

In a city where you can literally shop 24 hours a day, the best plan is to shop the way New Yorkers do, by neighborhood.

Each has its own character and specialties. Here are highlights of the best shopping districts – where they are and what you will find in each. If time is very tight, head for one of the huge department stores (see p319), or if window shopping is your preference, stroll along Fifth Avenue, home to Manhattan's most glittering stores (see opposite). For great bargains in a truly ethnic area, try the Lower East Side.

SoHo

The area bordered by Sixth Avenue, Lafayette, Houston, and Canal streets is bustling with antiques, crafts, and clothes from designer flagships. Weekend brunchtime gallery-hopping is very popular. Cross Broadway to NoLiTa for even trendier, cutting-edge fashion (see pp104–5).

East Village and Lower East Side

Explore around St Mark's Place for shoes, avant-garde fashions, and ethnic goods (see pp118–19).

Bargains are becoming harder to find in the Lower East Side, but trendy options are increasing (see pp94–5).

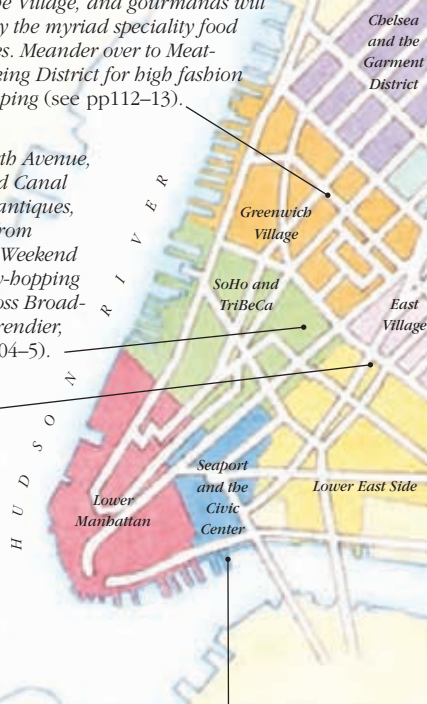

South Street Seaport

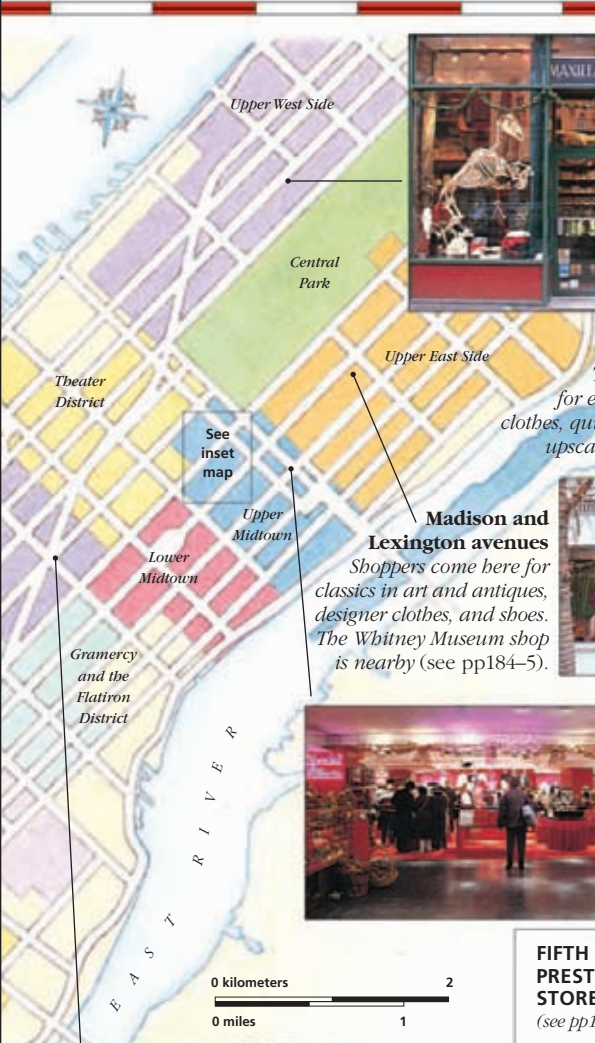

This is a browser's paradise of crafts, gifts, souvenirs, books, and antiques with a seafaring connection (see pp82–3).

Greenwich Village and the Meatpacking District

Quaint, eclectic, and antique choices in the Village, and gourmands will enjoy the myriad speciality food stores. Meander over to Meatpacking District for high fashion shopping (see pp112–13).

Columbus and Amsterdam avenues

These are New York hot spots for exclusive but trendy designer clothes, quirky antiques, esoterica, and upscale gift shops (see pp212-13).

Madison and Lexington avenues
Shoppers come here for classics in art and antiques, designer clothes, and shoes. The Whitney Museum shop is nearby (see pp184-5).

East 57th and 59th streets

Exclusive antiques and high fashion are found on 57th Street – and be sure not to miss Bloomingdale’s (see p181).

Herald Square and the Garment District

Here you will find Macy’s, a store that occupies an entire block. The surrounding area (especially Seventh Avenue) is the fashion wholesale center with major discounts during sales – but some stores accept only cash (see pp132-3).

New York Originals

New York is a city where just about any kind of shop, no matter how esoteric, will always attract customers. Dozens of tiny shops scattered around the city specialize in unusual merchandise, from butterflies and bones to traditional Tibetan treasures and Shamrock sprigs from Ireland. Coming across these in some tucked-away corner is what makes shopping in New York such an entertaining and invigorating experience.

SPECIALTY SHOPS

For beautiful brass, onyx, and pewter chess sets, and the opportunity to play a decent game, make a move to the Chess Shop. For every type of pen Arthur Brown & Bros. stocks an enormous range, including such names as Mont Blanc and Schaeffer. For those with a bit more energy, Blades Board & Skate sells and rents out skates and also the trendiest skateboards plus all the safety equipment.

If you're looking for different or unusual buttons, a visit to Tender Buttons, which stocks millions, is a must. Whether you want enamel, wood, or Navajo silver buttons – or perhaps want your own buttons made into cuff links or earrings – here you'll find just what you want – and more. Trash & Vaudeville has been supplying punk and goth gear to New Yorkers for decades and is the HQ of Astor Place fashion.

Leo Kaplan Ltd. is the place to go if you are a keen collector of paperweights, while Rita Ford's Music Boxes, a 19th-century style shop, stocks a tuneful and extensive range of music boxes.

The New York Firefighter's Friend sells an intriguing range of items related to fire-fighting, including toy fire engines, firemen's jackets, badges, stuffed toy dalmatians and a wide selection of T-shirts, including a popular one with FDNY (Fire Department New York) on one side and "Keep back 200 feet" on the other.

Spies and conspiracy theorists will be enthralled with the extensive offering at Quark Spy, where you can simple choose from survival kits and camera pens up to audio intelligence rooms.

For the true romantic who wants to impress, everything sold by Only Hearts is heart-shaped, including pillows, soap, and jewelry. If you are artistic, or if you wish to buy a present for someone who is, visit Pearl Paint, which stocks everything you could need, from easels and brushes to modeling clay.

Forbidden Planet is a science-fiction megastore with everything from comics to models for the true fan.

Cologne made especially for George Washington and the official soap of the White House during the Eisenhower era are just some of the many fascinating items for sale at Caswell-Massey Ltd., which is the oldest pharmacy in the city.

Guitar gurus will want to visit Rudy's, Manny's, or Sam Ash's guitar shop. Not only is there a chance you'll bump into Eric Clapton or Lou Reed – both have their guitars made in this area – but you'll find the widest and best choice of instruments in the city.

Bibliophiles will find a range of gifts in both the New York Public Library Shop (see p146) (such as bookends of the lions guarding the main entrance) and the Morgan Library Shop (see pp164-5), including bookmarks and writing paper.

University logos and college colors dominate the many knickknacks and accessories at The Yale Club gift shop and The Princeton Club.

Weisburg Religious Articles carries one of the largest selections of Jewish religious items in the city.

The Cathedral Shop at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Amsterdam Avenue is a large store selling books, artworks, herbs, jewelry, and religious items made locally.

MEMORABILIA

At Lincoln Center, the Metropolitan Opera Shop has records, cards, librettos, small binoculars, and many other opera-related items. For theater fans, everything from scripts and vocal scores to CDs can be found at One Shubert Alley. For thousands of rare and classic film stills and posters visit Jerry Olinger's Movie Material Store on 242 W 14th Street.

The Carnegie Hall Shop carries musically themed cards, T-shirts, games, posters, tote bags, and much more. For something truly original and very American, be sure to visit Lost City Arts and Urban Archaeology in SoHo. Between these two shops, you'll unearth all sorts of relics from America's past, from Barbie Doll lunch boxes to salvaged furniture, including antique, claw footed bath tubs.

TOYS, GAMES, AND GADGETS

For children's gifts, don't miss the legendary F.A.O. Schwarz. This is a massive store crammed with luxury toy cars, enormous stuffed animals and every kind of electronic toy imaginable. There are shoulder-to-shoulder crowds at Christmas, when you might have to line up to get in.

The Children's General Store is one of the city's smarter toy stores, with a focus on educational and classic goods, while a trip to the American Girl Place doll store could entertain a young girl all day, with options such as a café, photo studio, and hair salon.

Penny Whistle Toys sells a huge selection of quality toys, games, and all kinds of dolls. Red Caboose is for fans of model railways. On three floors, the Toys 'R' Us flagship glass building on Broadway is the largest toy store in the world, with a 60-ft (20-m) ferris wheel.

Dinosaur Hill on Second Avenue offers handmade puppets and toys, mobiles, and beautifully made children's clothes. It's expensive but worth it. Since 1848, Hammacher Schlemmer have been encouraging shoppers to buy gadgets for home, office, and recreation that they didn't know they wanted. The quirky Kidrobot in SoHo draws both kids and collectors for its urban, cartoony action figures and memorabilia.

MUSEUM SHOPS

Some of New York's best souvenirs can be found in the city's many museum shops. In addition to the usual range of books, posters, and cards, there are reproductions of the exhibits on display, including jewelry and sculpture. The Museum of Arts & Design (see p149) has an excellent selection of American crafts as well as original works for sale. In addition to realistic model dinosaurs, rubber animals, minerals, and rocks, the American Museum of Natural History (see pp216-17) has a variety of recycled products and earth-awareness gifts, which include posters, bags, and T-shirts with environmental messages, and a large selection of Native American handicrafts. There is also a kids' shop with reasonably priced items such as shell sets, magnets, and toys.

The Asia Society Bookstore and Gift Shop (see p187) has a striking selection of Oriental prints, posters, art books, toys, and jewelry. Items related to interior design are offered at the Cooper-Hewitt (see p186). One of New York's largest collections of Jewish ceremonial objects, including menorahs and Kiddush cups, books, and jewelry, is found in the small shop at the Jewish Museum (see p186).

For reproduction prints of famous paintings and other exquisite gifts a visit to the Metropolitan Museum of Art (see pp190-97) gift shop is a must. There is also an enormous book department and a children's gift shop. The traditional American Folk Art Museum (see p171) prides itself on its American country crafts, including wooden toys, quilts, and weathervanes, which are mostly original. Works by craftspeople who currently have pieces on display in the museum are also sold.

The Museum of the City of New York (see p199), specializes in pictures of old New York as well as books and unique prints and posters. The Museum of Modern Art/MOMA Design Store (see pp172-75) has a highly praised selection of innovative home furnishings, toys, and kitchenware inspired by international designers such as Frank Lloyd Wright and Le Corbusier.

For a selection of nautical items, including charts, maps, model ships, and scrimshaw, go to the South Street Seaport Museum Shops (see pp82-85). The Whitney Museum's Shop (see pp200-201) stocks American-made items, including jewelry, wooden toys, books, and posters complementing current exhibitions. The Museum of Jewish Heritage (see p77) has a gift shop with an unusual array of gifts, souvenirs, and educational material about Jewish life. Open to ticketed visitors only.

THE BEST OF THE IMPORTS

New York is a massive melting pot of ethnic groups, nationalities, and cultures. Many ethnic shops specialize in food or goods of a particular group. Alaska on Madison has a collection of Eskimo art and Northwest prints and hangings, as does Alaska House in SoHo. The Chinese Porcelain Company sells exquisite Chinese decorative arts and furniture. Pearl River Mart has been a staple for Asian goods for thirty years, from novelty items to tea and tote-bags, and Himalayan Crafts and Tours stocks everything from paintings to Tibetan rugs. Sweet Life, on the Lower East Side, is a tiny, old-fashioned candy shop with delicacies from around the world. Things Japanese has beautifully made crafts and unusual books. Surma is a Ukrainian general store that sells hand-painted eggs and linens. Common Ground sells Native American arts, and Astro Gems has a large collection of jewelry and mineral specimens from Africa and Asia. Nearby, Chinatown is packed with shops selling everything from souvenirs to leather goods, all at low prices.

Fashion

Whether you're looking for a secondhand pair of 501s or the kind of ballgown Ivana Trump would be proud to wear, you're sure to find it in New York. The city is the fashion capital of America and an important center of clothing manufacture and design. New York's clothing stores, like its restaurants, reflect the city's dramatically different styles and cultures. To save time it's probably best to visit one area at a time and wander from store to store. Alternatively, visit one of the major department stores for an excellent selection of fashion for everyone.

AMERICAN DESIGNERS

Many American designers sell their creations in boutiques within the large department stores, or have exclusive shops of their own. One of the most famous is Michael Kors, known for sophisticated looks that are classic and comfortable.

Bill Blass is the king of American fashion whose clothes feature loads of different colors, wild patterns, innovative shapes, and a lot of wit. Liz Claiborne's designs are always elegantly simple, casual, and reasonably priced, including everything you could possibly need from tennis whites to casual professional wear for women.

Marc Jacobs, known for his sportswear, has his own label and store in Greenwich Village. James Galanos is an exclusive designer for the rich and famous, making one-of-a-kind couture clothes, and Betsey Johnson is popular with women able to wear figure-hugging fashions in fabulous fabrics.

In the last decade, Donna Karan has become a name that appears everywhere. Her simple, stylish, and great-looking designs work for everything from work-out clothes to black tie wear. Calvin Klein now has his name on place settings and sunglasses in addition to underwear, jeans, and a whole range of clothes. He is renowned for comfortable, sensuous, and well-fitting — as well as very hip — looks. Ralph Lauren is very well known for his aristocratic and expensive clothes, a "look" favored by the exclusive and posh Ivy League, horsey set. For those with a taste for more experimental designs, Joan Vass specializes in moderately priced but exciting, colorful, and innovative knitwear.

DISCOUNT DESIGNER CLOTHES

If you're on the lookout for discount designer clothes, Designer Resale, Encore, and Michael's sell a wide range. Oscar de la Renta, Ungaro, and Armani are just some of the leading labels available. Clothes are either new or worn but near-perfect.

The designer discount emporium Century 21 in Lower Manhattan sells European and American designer fashions discounted up to an amazing 75 percent off regular retail prices. Filene's Basement, one of Manhattan's longest-running discount department stores, offers designer clothes, shoes, and accessories at bargain prices. Loehmann's offers discounted fashion clothes, and it's the place to shop if you want top-of-the-line fashions at unbelievable discounts.

MEN'S CLOTHES

In the center of midtown, you'll find two of the city's most highly regarded menswear stores: Brooks Brothers and Paul Stuart. Brooks Brothers is something of a New York institution, famous for its traditional, conservative clothing such as smart button-down shirts and Chinos. There's an ultra-conservative woman's line too. Paul Stuart prides itself on its very British look and offers a stylish array of superbly tailored fashions. Go to the high-quality department store Bergdorf Goodman Men to find beautifully made Turnbull & Asser shirts and marvelous suits by Gianfranco Ferré or Hugo Boss.

Barney's New York has one of the most comprehensive men's departments in America, with a truly massive range of clothes and accessories.

The Custom Shop Shirt-makers specializes in custom-made suits and shirts in beautiful materials. Go to Burberry Limited if you are looking for classic British trenchcoats and traditional outdoor wear.

J. Press sells classic, conservative yet elegant clothes while John Varvatos is famous for luxurious, sporty designs with superb detail. Uptown designer menswear boutiques include the renowned Beau Brummel with a selection of very stylish European clothes and Thomas Pink whose bright colors and fine fabrics make this store a celebrity favorite. Many of these men's stores also carry striking women's fashions. The Hickey Freeman store on Fifth Avenue sells a wide range of men's traditional clothing.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES

In addition to an excellent selection within the large department stores, there are several shops around the city that sell children's clothing exclusively. A good example is Bonpoint, which has a world of French-style charm. Also stocked with delightful outfits is Bundle, in SoHo.

GapKids and BabyGap shops, often in the Gap shops, have comfortable, long-lasting cotton overalls, sweat pants, denim jackets, sweatshirts, and leggings. Actress Phoebe Cates has opened a hip kids' clothing store on Madison Avenue called Blue Tree. Space Kiddets has everything from booties to Western wear.

WOMEN'S CLOTHES

Women's fashion is subject to design trends, and New York stores keep pace with them all. Most of the city's most fashionable shops are found in the midtown area around Madison and Fifth Avenues. These include some of the major department stores (see p319), which stock a range of American designers, including Donna Karan, Ralph Lauren and Bill Blass.

Leading international names such as Chanel and Valentino also have shops here, as does one of the outstanding American designers, Michael Kors. There is also a handful of popular ready-to-wear stores, including Ann Taylor, which is much favored by young, busy professionals looking for stylish, comfortable clothing.

Right at the heart of this area stands the pink-marbled Trump Tower, which houses a selection of exclusive shops.

Madison Avenue is packed with designers for the smart set, who have everything you could ever need, including Givenchy, who sells show-stopping formal gowns at phenomenal prices; Valentino, who has classic Italian clothes; and Emanuel Ungaro, who generally has something to suit most tastes and physiques from beautifully tailored jackets to more matronly full-figured and boldly patterned print dresses. Missoni is famous for richly textured sweaters in sumptuous wools and colorful patterns. Yves St Laurent Rive Gauche has evening gowns, one-of-a-kind jackets, silks and extravagant blouses, and beautifully cut pants suits.

Sophisticated Italian looks are also available from Italian style kings Giorgio Armani and Gianni Versace. Dolce & Gabbana sells unique, one-of-a-kind Italian clothing. Gucci, one of the oldest Italian shops in America, is only for the wealthy and status-conscious.

The Upper West Side has many shops competing for attention with contemporary fashions, including Betsey Johnson's shop, with her whimsical, relatively inexpensive designs. Calvin Klein now has a store on the East Side, specializing in ultra-hip, casual fashions. French Connection is known for its affordable separates, both casual and for the office. Scoop is the place to get a little black dress.

The villages – the East Village in particular – are the best places to go for secondhand clothing and 1950s rock 'n' roll gear, with ever-changing interesting shops run by new and young designers and art school graduates. For a range of affordable, well-cut clothes from classic to casual, try APC.

Cheap Jack's carries a huge selection of secondhand Levi's as well as hundreds of denim and leather jackets. Screaming Mimi's is where you could unearth that pair of velvet bell-bottoms or go-go boots you've always dreamed of having. A more mainstream shop is The Gap, a chain store selling lots of moderately-priced, casual and comfortable clothes for men, women, and children.

Sotto and Notto/Nolita rival Madison Avenue for designer boutiques specializing in expensive but interesting clothes – the fashions here are far more avant-garde. The playful boutique Kirna Zabete, for example, features a unique range of clothes as well as accessories. You'll also find Yohji Yamamoto in this area, among other exclusive stores. Comme des Garçons in the Garment District sells minimalist Japanese chic.

Cynthia Rowley is a prominent New York designer who sells flirty fashions for women and What Comes Around Goes Around on West Broadway is the place to go for vintage jeans.

Accessories

In addition to the following shops, all of the major Manhattan department stores have extensive accessory departments stocking a range of hats, gloves, bags, jewelry, watches, scarves, shoes, and umbrellas.

JEWELRY

Midtown Fifth Avenue is where to find the most dazzling jewelers. By day, windows glisten with gems from around the world; by night they are empty – the jewels safely locked away. The most sensational shops are all within a couple of blocks of one another and include the museum-like Harry Winston, which showcases its coveted jewels from around the world. Buccellati is well respected for its innovative Italian creations and excellent workmanship. Bulgari has an impressive collection that ranges in price from a couple of hundred to over a million dollars.

Housed in a Renaissance-style palazzo, Cartier is a jewel in itself and sells its beautiful baubles at unthinkable prices. Tiffany & Co. has ten floors of glittering crystal, diamonds, and other jewels just waiting to be packed up for you and taken away in the store's signature sky blue boxes.

Diamond Row, a one-block area on 47th Street (between Fifth and Sixth Avenues), is lined with shops displaying hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of diamonds, gold, pearls, and other exotic jewels from around the world. Try not to miss the Jewelry Exchange, a complex where 60 different crafts-people sell their ware direct to the public. Boisterous bargaining is very much alive here, so be prepared to play the game.

New York's oldest hat shop is Worth & Worth, which also has the largest collection of hats in the city. You can get anything here, from original Australian bush hats to silk toppers, to slouch hats and boaters. Suzanne Millinery is the hat-maker to the stars, as she has proved very popular with celebrities such as Ivana Trump and Whoopi Goldberg. Lids sells baseball caps in dozens of varieties, with logos ranging from sports teams to the evergreen "I HEART NY". For a wide range of fabulous headgear, stop by The Hat Shop, where you can find everything from classic to contemporary styles.

UMBRELLAS

The minute it starts to rain in New York, hundreds of street vendors selling umbrellas seem to sprout like mushrooms. Their umbrellas, which sell at just a few dollars, are without doubt the cheapest in the city, but unlikely to last much longer than the downpour itself.

For good-quality umbrellas, you'll find a fine selection of Briggs of London at Worth & Worth. There is a wide range of different sizes, trendy patterns, and traditional tartans and stripes at Barney's New York, and there's always Macy's (see p319) for the usual sizes and styles. World-famous Gucci has umbrellas to match its ties. Subway-themed ones can be found at the NY Transit Museum Store.

HANDBAGS AND BRIEFCASES

Twice a year, during the January and August sales, a serpentine line of buyers wraps around the corner of 48th Street and Madison Avenue waiting to get into Crouch & Fitzgerald, an old New York institution, selling handbags, briefcases, and luggage. All the well-known brands are sold here, including Judith Leiber, Ghurka, Dooney & Bourke, and Louis Vuitton, as well as the firm's own line. Elsewhere in the city are such exclusive shops as Bottega Veneta, and Prada, where handbags are displayed like precious art, with prices to match. Younger and trendier places include Furla, well-respected for its Italian designs, and the stylish Il Bisonte. Current must-have designer Rafé Totchenco's soft suede pastel pouches are found at TG-170. The Coach Store is known for its simple, classic leather handbags. Designer Kate Spade's stylish yet practical rectangular handbags, in a plethora of prints and colors, have become modern classics, and add a chic touch to any woman's wardrobe. Jack Spade designs similarly unique bags for men.

For discount designer handbags try the legendary Fine & Klein, and for bargain briefcases from slim envelopes to thick lawyer's bags, a visit to the Altman Luggage Company is a must.

SHOES AND BOOTS

Manhattan shoe stores are famous for their extensive selections of shoes and boots, and if you shop around, you are sure to find what you want at a reasonable price.

Most of the large department stores in New York also have shoe departments where you can find designer-label shoes in addition to other brands. Bloomingdale's (see p181) has a huge women's footwear department, and Brooks Brothers has one of the best selections of traditional men's shoes in the city.

For both men's and women's shoes, the most exclusive shops are around the midtown area. Ferragamo sells classic styles crafted in Florence. Go to Botticelli for whimsical shoe fashions. For stylish shoes at decent prices, head for Sigerson Morrison in Little Italy.

For cowboy boots, head for Billy Martin's. There's a huge selection of handmade boots, from basic, no-frills "ropers," which real American cowboys wear, to crocodile leather boots that sell for thousands of dollars. Billy Martin's stocks western garb and accessories, so you can dress in western gear from head to toe. For beautiful custom-made boots, try Buffalo Chips Bootery.

Sneaker collectors should make a stop at Alife Rivington Club on the Lower East Side, which stocks several hard-to-find styles.

For the best in children's shoes, East Side Kids stocks the trendiest fashions for kids, while Shoofly has imported shoes in all styles.

The Jimmy Choo boutique offers a plethora of sexy, stylish heels. Popular among Manhattan's chic set are the beautiful women's shoes, particularly the flattering heels, at Manolo Blahnik.

Christian Louboutin rounds out the stiletto heavyweights. Spain's most popular brand, Camper, has an airy SoHo store featuring their signature comfy, funky, and colorful shoes for women and men.

For discounted shoes, go to West 34th Street and West Eight Street between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, and Orchard Street on the Lower East Side. The DSW store, on the third floor of 40 E 14th Street, sells brand-name shoes and boots at a fraction of the regular price. There's also a branch near Battery Park.

LINGERIE

Expensive imports from Europe, which are sexy yet elegant, can be found at La Petite Coquette.

More affordable is Victoria's Secret on 57th Street or SoHo, which offers beautifully made lingerie in satin, silk, and many other fine fabrics. Henri Bendel's lingerie department offers a sumptuous array of lingerie, from naughty to nice. The Italian La Perla features seductive lingerie and undergarments in sensual fabrics from tulle and chiffon to satin.

Beauty, Manicures and Pedicures, and Hair Salons

You can shop 'til you drop in New York City – and when you do, rest assured that rejuvenation (and a heavenly foot massage) is just around the corner. There are plenty of well-stocked beauty stores, manicure and pedicure specialists, and sleek hair salons. Many of the manicurists and salons cater to New Yorkers and their hectic schedules, so they often accept same-day appointments that can easily fitted in between rounds of sightseeing and shopping. After a pamper session or two (or three...), you'll be ready to hit the shops again, this time with the prettiest toes and silkiest hair around.

BEAUTY STORES

The French-owned Sephora is a cosmetics megastore that offers its shoppers row upon row of beauty products, from skin cleansers to cosmetics and fragrances, and, thankfully, a no-pressure sales staff. For all-natural essences and products, try Erbe ("herbs" in Italian), a soothing sanctuary with a plethora of hypo-allergenic products, all made with fresh herbs and free from mineral oils, animal products, waxes, synthetic fragrances, or dyes. The royal jelly nutrient moisturizer and Pennywort exfoliating cream are popular choices.

The high-ceilinged MAC Cosmetics store is always busy. Their face powders, particularly the Studio Fix line, are unsurpassed. The promise of creamy Swedish skin (at a reasonable price) lures shoppers to FACE Stockholm, where they stock natural, botanical skin products plus lipstick and nail polish in a rainbow of colors. Since 1851, Kiehl's has been creating cleansers, toners, balms, and masques "in purposefully utilitarian" packaging as the natural ingredients speak for themselves.

The nature-friendly Fresh sells fragrant body creams and fruity perfume. Sabon sells a luxurious range of bath and beauty products that are 100 percent natural and irresistibly scented. Soaps can be bought by the pound here, and they are gift-wrapped for free.

For good quality makeup that stands the test of time, visit SoHo's stylish Make Up for Ever, which stocks everything from liquid face foundations and creamy lipsticks, to sparkling body powders. Head to earthy Origins and select from their plethora of plant-based lotions, an antioxidant moisturizer made with white tea, and body creams sensitive enough for a baby's skin. British beauty maven Nicky Kinnaid has opened her first outlet of Space.NK in SoHo. The shop also offers beauty services.

Most of New York's large department stores, including Bloomingdale's, Lord & Taylor, Saks Fifth Avenue, Barney's New York, and Macy's offer well-stocked makeup counters.

MANICURES AND PEDICURES

Young Korean entrepreneur Ji Baek's Rescue Beauty Lounge started out as a cozy SoHo salon, but it proved so popular that she had to open a second outpost. As well as manicures and pedicures, you can have waxing and browse hard-to-find makeup lines. Eve's may look somewhat bland and institutional, but appearances can be deceiving. Their long-lasting manicures and pedicures are top-notch. Dashing Diva not only offers excellent manicures and pedicures at a bargain price (starting at $10). The whole experience is made all the more alluring, however, as they offer treats with their treatments. On Thursdays and Fridays, they serve Cosmopolitans and turn up the music.

Experience the ultimate in hand and nail care at Sweet Lily Natural Nail Spa & Boutique. The range includes an intoxicating blend of warm milk and almond oil for your hands, and a moisturizing honey walnut mask with a honey walnut manicure ($40). The hot lavender cream manicure includes a wonderful conditioning treatment for cuticles that contains tea tree and citrus oil. The boutique is not just for adults, as there is also a manicure for little girls: the Little Miss Mani includes a choice of nail art.

HAIR SALONS

If you're in the mood for a new hair do, or just want to refresh your current cut, try one of New York City's cutting-edge hair salons.

The stylists at the downtown Arrojo Studio will update your style, so that you walk out of the salon looking as hip as they do. Arrojo colorists are also top-notch, and the salon offers a wide range of excellent color treatments. Follow the celebrities, and get your hair cut, styled, and/or colored by stylist Frederic Fekkai or one of his associates at the chic Frederic Fekkai Beaute de Provence. This top salon is very much a cut above the rest.

Korean stylist Younghee Kim, formerly of Vidal Sassoon, offers hip cuts and colors, as well as "hair spa treatments" and thermal conditioning, starting at $110 at her eponymous hair salon, Younghee Salon in TriBeCa. The stylists at the Rumor Salon are well-known to be czars with scissors, creating simple yet fashionable and flattering cuts amid a spare salon awash in warm lighting. Set in a classy, sun-flooded loft, the Aveda Institute offers superb cuts, colors, and scalp massages. Pick up one of their plant-based beauty and bath products. The institute also offers the opportunity to receive a discount haircut by one of the trainee hairdressers. A great choice for men is La Boîte a Coupe, whose clientele includes many advertising and media personalities. Moroccan-French stylist Laurent De Louya has been cutting hair here since 1972. The upscale, Asian-accented Le Salon Chinois, never fails to create a sleek cut that will turn heads.

They also offer excellent scalp treatments, hair aromatherapy, and effective "Japanese straightening." Head to the lovely TwoDo Salon, where you can get an expert cut and color amid a rustic, colorful decor of fresh flowers and brick walls hung with paintings by local artists.

Styling stalwart Vidal Sassoon is still going strong. Visit the elegant downtown salon on Fifth Avenue where accomplished stylists and colorists – all of whom have gone through the company's rigorous training – turn out impeccable, eye-catching cuts and colors. Toni & Guy, a premiere hair salon from the UK, is renowned for its consistently good cuts. The NYC salon is the US training headquarters, where creative stylists offer the boldest cuts around. Toni & Guy colorists have also been lauded for their tinting and high-lighting skill.

For more great cuts and colors, try the hip favorites Antonio Prieto and Bumble & Bumble, the refined John Masters Organics, and the elite Oscar Blandi.

Books and Music

As the publishing capital of America, it's not surprising that New York has the country's best selection of bookstores. These range from vast general interest stores to hundreds of esoteric bookstores specializing in everything from sci-fi to suspense, selling new books and old. Music lovers will also find sounds for all tastes at reasonable prices, plus thousands of rare recordings.

GENERAL INTEREST BOOKSTORES

One of the most well-known of New York's bookstores – for best prices as well as selection of titles – is Barnes & Noble on Fifth Avenue, reputedly the world's largest bookstore and packed high with over three million books on every imaginable subject. There are branches all over the City, plus the sales annex across the street, with amazing bargains.

Several blocks away is the main branch of New York's famous Strand Book Store, with an astonishing two million copies of new and secondhand books. There is also a large rare book room for first editions.

Westsider Bookshop is as comprehensive as its music counterpart, as it stocks an enormous collection of used books and country/bluegrass LPs. 12th Street Books has a good selection of new and used books, and art books. Borders Books & Music offers a choice of CDs and books of all genres. Housing Works Bookstore Café is a lovely, high-ceilinged bookstore-café with a wide range of gently used books. The friendly McNally Jackson stocks classics and contemporary fiction, and also has a café.

Rizzoli has a big selection of photography, foreign language, music, and art books, plus children's books and videos. Shakespeare & Co. offers a sensational selection of titles and is open late every night.

SPECIALTY BOOKSTORES

For the best selection of art books in the city, visit Hacker-Strand Art Books. Urban Center Books has titles on urban planning and other conservation issues. The city's largest selection of theatrical books and publications is found at Drama Book Shop. Jewish books and music abound at J. Levine Judaica. Rare books, books out-of-print, and old books about New York are the raison d'être of JN Bartfield Books. The Biography Bookshop is the only midtown store specializing in diaries, letters, biographies, and autobiographies. Theater buffs should try Applause Theater & Cinema Books.

Books on murder and suspense are the focus of Mysterious Bookshop.

Try Forbidden Planet for old and new science-fiction books and comics. Midtown Comics has two spacious locations and offers a good range of comics at affordable prices, mostly from the late 1980s to the present. Vintage collectors might prefer Jim Hanley's Universe, across from the Empire State Building. Collectible merchandise here ranges from reasonable to "ask Santa" in price.

Bank Street Book Store has one of the best selections of current children's books; they also host storytime and other engaging events for kids. Visit Books of Wonder for a variety of hardcover and rare children's books.

The Complete Traveler stocks a wide selection of brand-new and antique travel books and guides for your trip. The staff is very knowledgeable and more than helpful.

For an excellent range of maps visit the Hagstrom Map & Travel Store. Cookbooks are on the menu at Kitchen Arts & Letters, with many out-of-print books and first editions. Radicals should head for Revolution Books or St. Mark's Bookstore, which also has an excellent selection of literary and art titles. The Oscar Wilde Memorial Bookshop has a wide selection of gay and lesbian texts.

Lots of educational toys and their book tie-ins can be found in the airy and bright Scholastic Store, downstairs from the publisher's SoHo offices.

RECORDS, TAPES, AND COMPACT DISCS

J&R Music World is a complete home-entertainment store with one of the best CD selections in the city.

For out-of-print records, go to Westsider Records, a treasure trove for collectors, with an excellent choice of classical, jazz, and opera recordings. House of Oldies has a massive stock of deleted and rare records to suit all tastes. Bleeker Bob's Golden Oldies record shop has everything from imports, rock, and punk to rare jazz. Try Midnight Records for imports, reissues, American garage rock, and psychedelia.

DJs and vinyl lovers still have options for deep house, breakbeat, and electronica. Check out Turntable Lab in Manhattan, while in Brooklyn there is Earwax or the lively Halcyon. True music enthusiasts should head to Other Music, which stocks obscure gems, from hot electronica to 1970s free jazz. Disc-O-Rama has some of the cheapest CD prices around.

SHEET MUSIC

Just behind Carnegie Hall is one of the best stores for classical sheet music, Joseph Patelson Music House. The Frank Music Company has a huge collection of classical music scores. Charles Colin Publications specializes in jazz. For chart music and pop tunes try Colony Music Center in the Brill Building on Broadway.

Art and Antiques

Any art-loving visitor to New York could easily spend several days gallery-hopping around the several hundred galleries found throughout New York. Antique lovers can find an exciting variety of goods, including Americana and many bargains, at the many flea markets; or they can browse through European and American fine antiques in one of the more exclusive antiques centers. To find out what's happening, pick up the free monthly Art Now Gallery Guide, available at most galleries, or check the local papers.

ART GALLERIES

One of the city's best-known galleries is Leo Castelli, an important showcase for Pop Art during the early 1960s and now spotlighting new artists. Mary Boone Gallery features Neo-Expressionist artists such as Julian Schnabel. Pace Wildenstein Gallery exhibits current stars, especially well-known painter-photographers. Postmasters features impressive changing shows of emerging artists. Marian Goodman Gallery focuses on the European avant-garde.

In Chelsea, the Mathew Marks Gallery and Marianne Boesky Gallery are usually worth a visit. Paula Cooper often hosts controversial shows in her beautiful loft space. The Gagosian Gallery exhibits paintings by modern masters, with great works by Lichtenstein and Johns. It also has an outlet in the Upper East Side where you can find Knoedler & Company, and the Hirschl & Adler Galleries with a good selection of European and American fine art. Max Protech is very architecture-friendly, while Esso displays Pop Art. Barbara Gladstone is another heavy hitter in the art scene, and Exit Art is famed for its multimedia exhibitions. The airy Agora Gallery shows memorable local and international works, including Art Nouveau pieces.

AMERICAN FOLK ART

If you're in the market for American folk art, Susan Parrish Antiques has a wide selection of hooked rugs and other Americana, but is open only by appointment. Similar goods are at Laura Fisher Quilts in Manhattan Art & Antiques Center, who sells everything from decoys to hooked rugs.

ANTIQUES CENTERS AND SECONDHAND ANTIQUES

In addition to hundreds of small shops selling everything from tiger teeth to multimillion-dollar paintings, Manhattan is home to The Manhattan Art & Antiques Center, which has dozens of dealers under one roof. The Showplace Antique and Design Center in Chelsea, featuring four floors of antiques, retro furnishings, and memorabilia, is also well worth a visit.

AMERICAN FURNITURE

For furniture from the 17th-, 18th-, and 19th-centuries, try Bernard & S. Dean Levy, or Leigh Keno American Furniture. Judith & James Milne sell early American country furniture as well as a splendid collection of quilts. Alternatively, go to Woodard & Greenstein American Antiques & Quilts for a truly wonderful selection of Shaker pieces.

Collectors of Art Deco or Art Nouveau furniture should pay a visit to Alan Moss, which is full of furniture and decorative items of all kinds. Macklowe Gallery on Madison Avenue has a massive collection of fine Art Nouveau furniture. Just a few blocks away, Lillian Nassau has Tiffany lamps and many Art Nouveau and Art Deco pieces.

New York has a handful of retro shops, including Depression Modern, which has treasures from the 1930s and 1940s.

INTERNATIONAL ANTIQUES

If you're looking for English antiques, try Florian Papp and Kentshire Galleries. For European pieces, you'll have plenty of choices; try Betty Jane Bart Antiques, Kurt Gluckselig Antiques, Linda Horn Antiques, and Les Pierres. La Belle Epoque stocks antique posters. Oriental dealers include luxury Doris Leslie Blau, E. & J. Frankel, and Flying Cranes Antiques.

FLEA MARKETS

New York has a number of year-round weekend markets. Most flea markets officially open at 9 or 10am. If you arrive early, you could unearth some valuable piece of cultural Americana like a Barbie lunch box or a Soupy Sales record.

Visit the Annex Antiques Fair and Flea Market for everything from secondhand clothing to antique furniture. The Columbus Avenue Flea Market has new and second-hand clothing and furniture. For information on all street fairs and flea markets, check Friday's The New York Times or The Village Voice.

AUCTION HOUSES

Manhattan's two most celebrated auction houses are Christie's and Sotheby's, selling collectibles ranging from coins, jewels, and vintage wines to fine and decorative arts. Also worth a try are Doyle New York and Phillips de Pury & Co. both well-respected names for fine art, jewelry, and antiques. Bear in mind that items for sale are previewed several days before the auctions, so check the Friday and Sunday Times beforehand to see what's coming up. The venerable Swann Galleries auctions prints, books, maps, posters, autographs, and photographs.

Gourmet Groceries, Specialty Food, and Wine Shops

New York's striking cultural and ethnic diversity is celebrated in its food – the city's food shops provide a truly international feast. There is also a dazzling array of coffee stores and wine shops available almost everywhere you turn.

GOURMET GROCERIES

Scattered around town are several famous food emporiums that are tourist attractions in themselves. Remember, too, to visit the department stores, which often rival the specialty food stores.

At Dean & DeLuca on Broadway, a chic delicatessen, food has been elevated to an art form – don't miss the huge selection of take-out food.

Russ & Daughters on Houston Street, one of the oldest gourmet shops, is known as an "appetizing" store, full of ethnic food and famous for smoked fish, cream cheese, chocolates, and bagels. The Gourmet Garage on Broome Street sells all kinds of delicious fresh food, in particular organic produce. Zabar's on Broadway is perhaps the finest food store in the world, with huge crowds jostling for the excellent smoked salmon, bagels, caviar, nuts and candies, cheese, and coffee.

William Poll on Lexington Avenue offers picnic hampers as well as a great variety of prepared dishes. For pâté de foie gras, Scottish smoked salmon, beluga, and caviar, go to Caviarteria.

Whole Foods, famed for their superb selection of natural, organic, wholesome foods, draws devoted shoppers throughout the city. The Whole Foods in Columbus Circle is now the largest supermarket in Manhattan, with row upon gleaming row of quality food "in its purest state" with no artificial additives. There's also a popular central Whole Foods on Union Square. Fairway Market on Broadway offers premium groceries from fresh produce to smoked fish and baked goods.

SPECIALTY FOOD

Fabulous bread and cake shops abound but one of the best is Poseidon Greek Bakery, renowned for its filo pastry.

H & H Bagels bakes 60,000 of the finest bagels every day. Try the delicious Chinese pastries at Fung Wong, or the pretzel croissants and great tarts at City Bakery. Instantly recognizable by the line of happy customers at the door, Magnolia Bakery is famed for its beautifully decorated and superb-tasting cupcakes. It has three locations in Manhattan.

Great confectionery shops include Li-Lac for handmade chocolates and Mondel Chocolates for chocolate animals. Economy Candy has a huge range of dried fruit but for a real treat go to Teuscher Chocolates, which has fresh champagne truffles flown in direct from Switzerland.

Myers of Keswick imports English food. For something more exotic, Kam Man Market is an Oriental grocery selling Chinese, Thai, and other oriental products. The Italian Food Center has great olive oils, dried pastas, and sausages. Go to Jefferson Market for meat and fish, and Citarella for its fine seafood. Angelica's Herbs and Spices has a selection of 2,000 varieties of herbs and spices.

For a wide choice of cheese, as well as olives and charcuterie, visit Murray's Cheese Shop. The intoxicating wafts that greet you at the front door are sure to lure you in. Named New York's Best Cheese Shop by many of the city's newspapers, it is heaven for cheese-lovers, with over 250 types of cheese from around the world, from bloomy rinds like Camembert to moist Ricotta. Feel free to sample; the friendly staff happily offers tastings from the mind-boggling selection. Make a picnic out of it, and pick up some of their fresh breads and olives to accompany your pungent purchases.

If you are looking for true old Eastern European pickle recipes then The Pickle Guys is the right place. In addition to pickles, they also store pickled tomatoes, mushrooms, olives, hot peppers, sweet kraut, sauerkraut, herring, and sun-dried tomatoes.

For fruit and vegetables at reasonable prices, visit a farmers' green market, but get there early if you want the pick of the crop. Among the most popular are Upper West Side, St. Mark's in-the-Bowery, and Union Square. For information on the city's markets, phone: (212) 788-7476.

COFFEE STORES

New York also has many fine coffee stores. Among the best are Oren's Daily Roast and Porto Rico Importing Company, each with a mouth-watering selection. The Sensuous Bean features a superb range of gourmet coffees and teas, as does the cozy McNulty's Tea & Coffee Company, one of the nation's oldest coffee stores.

WINE SHOPS

Acker, Merrall & Condit have been selling wines since 1820 and have an excellent selection. Go to Garnet Liquors for fine wines and champagnes at bargain prices. Spring Street Wine Shop, in the heart of SoHo, is a convenient, well-stocked spot to pop in for a bottle of fine wine. Sherry-Lehmann is New York's leading wine merchant. Astor Wines & Spirits, New York's largest wine store, features a massive selection of premium and discount wines and spirits. Every month they highlight their Top 10 choices under $10 – great for superb bargains. Union Square Wines and Spirits offers terrific a variety of wines, and features tastings every week.

Electronics and Housewares

From flat-screen TVs and top-of-the-line sound systems to swanky designer home furnishings, New York City abounds with electronics and housewares stores. Perhaps the most competitive retailers in New York are the ones that sell electronics, so it pays to shop around. Be particularly careful with electronics stores on the heavily touristed streets and those around the major tourist sights, such as Fifth Avenue near the Empire State Building. Many of these stores sell mediocre, sometimes faulty equipment at inflated prices, and it's a hassle or near impossible to get a refund once you've returned home. If you're buying electronic goods to take to Europe, make sure they have compatible voltages and formats (many in the US are made to different standards).

SOUND SYSTEMS AND EQUIPMENT

For the latest in cutting-edge stereo equipment, head to Sound by Singer. J&R Music World sells competitively priced equipment and has the best jazz CD collection in the city. The Danish Bang & Olufsen showcases a range of sleek, minimalist sound systems that can dress up even the humblest flat. Harvey Electronics sells top-notch stereos and electronics with the bonus of a friendly, informative staff. Browse the quality systems at Lyric Hi-Fi, a longtime favorite that's been around since 1959. The perennially jam-packed Sony Style delivers on its wide assortment of top-shelf sound systems and plenty of impulse-buy gizmos. True to its name, the chain store Best Buy does offer some of the best buys on an enormous range of stereo systems and home-entertainment products. For high-end stereo equipment and components, check out Innovative Audio Video Showrooms. Also stop to look around at the wide range of both used and new stereos at the friendly Stereo Exchange.

PHOTOGRAPHY

B & H Photo is where amateur and professional photographers can find everything they need. Willoughby's has decent sales on photographic equipment and supplies. The appropriately named Olden Camera on Broadway eschews anything digital offering instead quality, old-school cameras and gear. Head to Chelsea's Foto Care for a wide range of cameras and accoutrements. Alkit Pro Camera offers a large assortment of cameras, components, and lighting equipment plus rentals and film developing and processing. Make for Adorama in the Flatiron District, and browse the spectacular displays of digital cameras and accessories, point-and-shoots, and disposables, and also affordable prices on film developing and processing. Don't miss the quality, high-end cameras and equipment at the elegant The Photo Village.

COMPUTERS

There are several Macintosh meccas in Manhattan, including the immense, airy Apple Store SoHo and the new, gleaming cube of a store on Fifth Avenue. Mac-philes flock to both to peruse and test-drive the latest models, plug in to iPods, and attend seminars geared to both novices and experts.

If you brought your computer from home and find that you need a repair, head to Amnet PC Solutions, where a tech whiz will – keep your fingers crossed – be able to fix whatever ails your computer. If you'd rather not haul your computer across town in a cab, they also do house calls starting at $125 an hour. The specialty at Tekserve is Mac repairs, where you can get a free estimate and also browse for upgrades.

KITCHENWARE

Most of the department stores offer a wide range of household goods. For a specialized shop, try Broadway Pan-handlers on Broome Street, a cook's heaven with outstanding baking and pastry-making equipment. Bridge Kitchenware is a household name among most restaurateurs. Williams-Sonoma has a wide range of kitchenware, utensils, and cookbooks. The East Village, particularly on and around Bowery Street, has long been the nucleus for restaurant supply stores, where you can find top-quality kitchenware at bargain prices. Leader Restaurant Equipment & Supplies sells all the kitchenware you can think of, from heavy cutlery to sushi platters and chopsticks.

HOUSEWARES AND FURNISHINGS

Baccarat, Lalique, and Villeroy & Boch are where you'll find the finest crystal, china, and silverware. Orrefors Kosta Boda has beautiful glassware, from vases to candlesticks, and Tiffany & Co. is also a fashionable spot. Go to Avventura for crystal and china and, for the best of inexpensive, utilitarian china, visit Fish Eddy. Try Ceramica, which stocks lovely handmade Italian pottery, and La Terrine and Stuben Glass for hand-painted ceramics. Browse the hip SoHo showcase of designer Jonathan Adler, whose eye-catching pottery of natural shades and primitive and organic shapes will stand out from everything else in your living room. His collection includes a "family" of playful decanters in the shapes of man, woman, and child, plump vases of smiling suns and fish plates, and a menagerie of pottery animals, including bookends shaped like the front and back of a charging bull. ABC Carpet & Home on Broadway has an enviable reputation for home furnishings. For low prices on housewares, shop on Grand Street on the Lower East Side.

For elegant furniture, from soft leather sofas to luxurious beds, and sleek tableware, try Giorgio Armani's posh Armani Casa. Dune on Franklin Street in TriBeCa offers chic furniture by contemporary designers, including wool sofas and convertible lounges. Design Within Reach is the source for fully licensed classics, such as Saarinen, Eames, and Bertoia. If you lean toward retro, make a beeline for Restoration Hardware on Broadway, where you can choose from updated Art Deco furnishings, lighting fixtures, and patinated bronze accessories.

LINENS

Linens can be found in most department stores, but for silk sheets and luxurious linens, visit Porthault and Pratesi. The Italian Frette, on Madison Avenue, sells thick towels and robes and wonderfully soft cotton sheets and bedding. Bed, Bath & Beyond offers a varied selection of bed linens, kitchen, and bath accessories.

ENTERTAINMENT IN NEW YORK

New York City is a non-stop entertainment extravaganza, every day, all year round. Whatever your taste, you can be sure the city will satisfy it on both a grand and an intimate scale. The challenge is to take advantage of as many of the entertainments as possible. If it's theater, you can enjoy a mainstream success on Broadway or take a chance on an experimental production in a loft. If it's music, there's the magnificence of opera at the Met or a jazz group blowing in a club in the Village. You can catch a spectacle of avant-garde dance in a café or try your own avant-garde dancing in one of the city's warehouse-sized clubs. Movie theaters abound. But perhaps best of all is wandering and watching the vast show that is New York.

Performance by the New York City Ballet

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Find out what events there are to choose from in the arts and leisure listings of The New York Times and the Village Voice newspapers and in Time Out New York, New York, and

TKTS discount ticket booth

The New Yorker magazines. Listings are updated on the websites of these magazines, such as www.nymag.com and <http://newyork.timeout.com>. At your hotel ask for Where, a free weekly magazine with maps and information on the many attractions.

Hotel staff may be able to answer some of your questions and should also carry a wide selection of brochures and leaflets. In addition, they may be willing to reserve tickets for you. Some hotel TVs have a New York visitor information channel.

At NYC & Company, touch-screen kiosks provide information and sell tickets to the city's top attractions. Multi-lingual counselors, discount coupons, free maps, brochures, tour information, and ATMs are available. Broadway Inner Circle gives brief descriptions of current shows, schedules, and prices; MovieFone gives online information on all the films; and ClubFone has up-to-date information on nightlife.

BOOKING TICKETS

Popular shows may be sold out for weeks ahead, so book early. Box offices are open daily, except Sundays, from 10am until one hour after the performance begins. Call in person, or phone the box office or a ticket agency and order your seats by credit card. The biggest agencies are Telecharge, Ticketmaster, and Ticket Central; they charge a small fee. An independent ticket agent may also be able to find seats for you – try Prestige Entertainment; others are listed in the Yellow Pages. Fees vary according to demand. Broadway Ticket Center in the Times Square Information Center (see p371) sells full-price tickets.

DISCOUNT TICKETS

Established in 1973 to the advantage of theatergoers and theatergoers alike, the non-profit TKTS company sells unsold tickets on the day of the performance for all Broadway shows. Discounts range from 25 to 50 percent, but the price will include a small handling fee and must be paid for in cash or by traveler's check.

The TKTS booth in Times Square (at Duffy Square under the red steps) sells matinee tickets from 10am to 2pm every Wednesday and Saturday, and from 11am to 3pm on Sundays; evening tickets are sold from 3pm to 8pm, and Sunday tickets from 11am until closing. The booths at Front and John streets, where lines are often shorter, sell evening tickets from 11am to 6pm Monday to Saturday. All matinee tickets and Sunday performances are sold the day before. There is also a TKTS booth in downtown Brooklyn.

The Broadway Ticket Center in Times Square offers same-day and advance tickets for both Broadway and Off-Broadway shows. They also have seating charts and, occasionally, video previews to help you choose a show.

You can purchase day-of-performance tickets from Ticketmaster at

A band playing at a cozy New York jazz club

The Booth Theater on Broadway (see p345)

discounts of 10 to 25 percent (with a small commission fee) by telephone. The Hit Show Club sells vouchers to its members (it's free to join) that can be exchanged at box offices for discounted tickets. Some shows offer standing-room tickets on the day at a bargain price. It's often the only way to catch a sold-out show on short notice, but you might not get the best view. You can also get discount tickets for shows at Broadway Bucks. StubHub! is the largest ticket resale site. Tickets for sports, music, and Broadway events are FedExed to you.

"SCALPERS" AND TOUTS

If you buy from a "scalper" (a ticket tout), you risk getting tickets for the wrong day, counterfeit tickets, and paying outrageous prices. The police often monitor sports and theater venues for scalpers and their customers.

FREE TICKETS

Free tickets to TV shows, concerts, and special events are sometimes offered at NYC & Co. (New York Convention & Visitors Bureau), which is open from 8:30am to 6pm Monday to Friday and 9am to 5pm on weekends. Free or deeply discounted tickets to film or theater premieres are often advertised in The New York Times, Daily News, or

Time Out New York. The "Cheap Thrills" section in the Village Voice lists poetry readings, recitals, and experimental films. The Shakespeare Festival at the Delacorte Theater in Central Park offers free tickets – one per person – on a first-come, first-served basis (be prepared to queue).

Neon lights of theaters in the heart of Broadway

DISABLED ACCESS

Broadway theaters reserve a few spaces and cut-price tickets for the disabled. Call Ticketmaster or Telecharge well in advance for information and to reserve your tickets. For Off-Broadway theaters, call their box offices. Some theaters offer special equipment for their hearing-impaired patrons. Tap can arrange sign language for Broadway theaters.

New York's Best: Entertainment

Greenwich Village jazz club

New York is one of the great entertainment capitals of the world. Top names in every branch of the arts are drawn here to perform and often to live and work. Major sports events are a huge attraction and live music, theater, and comedy can be found throughout the year. In terms of nightlife, New York truly lives up to its reputation as "the city that never sleeps." From the huge choice offered, there are some venues and events that stand out as classics of their kind; this selection has been chosen from the listings on pages 344 to 363 as among those not to be missed. Even if you experience only one of them, you will have been part of something as essentially New York as the Empire State Building or the Brooklyn Bridge.

Madison Square Garden

Top sporting action is found at "the Garden," including home games for basketball's New York Knicks and ice hockey's Rangers, plus the Golden Gloves boxing tournament (see p360).

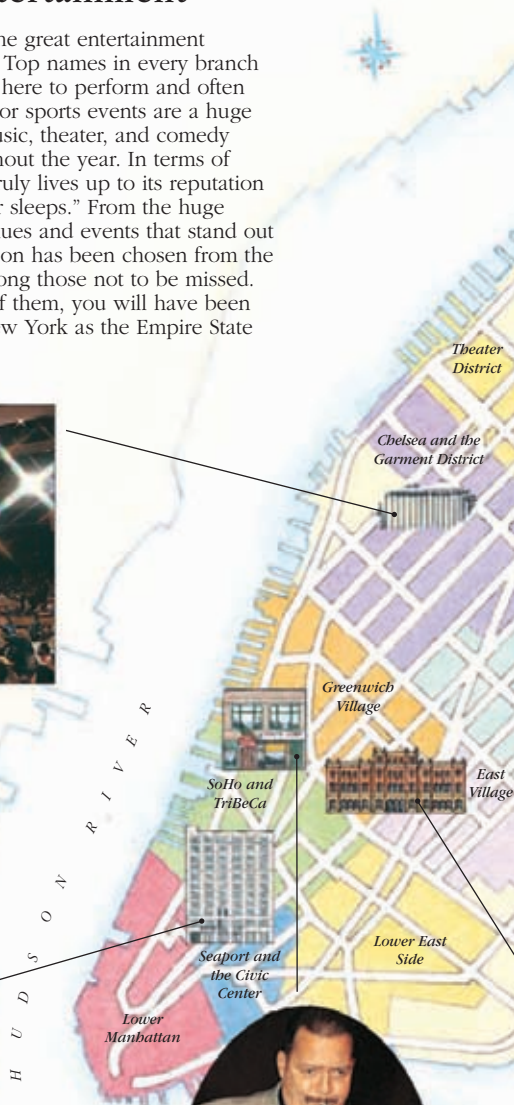

Film Forum

At New York's most stylish arts movie theater you can see the latest foreign and American independent releases or catch up with a classic in a wide range of retrospectives (see p349).

Village Vanguard

The jazz clubs of Greenwich Village have played host to all the great names in jazz. Fans can catch the stars of today and tomorrow at the world-famous Village Vanguard and the Blue Note (see p352).

Philharmonic Rehearsals

The Wednesday- and Thursday-morning rehearsals at Avery Fisher Hall are often open to the public at a fraction of the normal ticket price (see p350).

Metropolitan Opera House

Reserve well ahead and prepare to pay high prices to see the giants of the opera world (see p350).

The Nutcracker

The Christmas event for children of every age is performed each year at Lincoln Center by the New York City Ballet (see p346).

Shakespeare in Central Park

If you are a summer visitor, set aside a time to get one of the rare free tickets for the Delacorte

Theater's open-air Shakespeare featuring top Hollywood and Broadway names (see p344).

Public Theater

Founded in 1954, the Public has a mandate to create theater for all New Yorkers. Its year-round Shakespeare Festival is part of a commitment to classical works, but new plays are also developed here (see p120).

Carnegie Hall

Conveniently situated in the Theater District, Carnegie Hall is famous the world over as a showcase for the best in the musical arts. A backstage tour gives a fascinating insight into "the house that music built" (see p350).

Theater and Dance

New York is famous for its extravagant musicals and its ferocious critics. It is one of the world's greatest theater and dance centers, featuring every kind of production imaginable. Whether your preference is for the glitz and glamour of a Broadway blockbuster or something truly experimental, you'll find it here.

BROADWAY

Broadway has long been synonymous with New York's Theater District, but the majority of Broadway theaters are actually scattered between 41st and 53rd streets and from Sixth to Ninth Avenues, with a few around the much-improved Times Square. Most were built between 1910 and 1930, during the heyday of vaudeville and the famous Ziegfeld Follies. The Lyceum (see p144) is the oldest theater still in operation (1903), the American Airlines Theater, permanent home of the Roundabout Theater Co., is the newest, and the historic Biltmore Theater opened in 2003 after a 14-year closure.

Many Broadway theaters went through a slump in the 1980s but are now enjoying a revival, using big names to draw in the crowds. This is where you will find the "power productions" – the big, highly publicized dramas, musicals and revivals starring Hollywood luminaries in (it is hoped) sure-fire earners. Hits have included imports such as Les Misérables; New York originals such as Cats and The Producers; the popular children's favorite The Lion King; and great revivals like 42nd Street. There have also been glitzy adaptations from popular movies, such as Hairspray; shows celebrating 60s and 70s pop favorites, such as ABBA in Mamma Mia! and Monty Python's Spamalot.

OFF-BROADWAY AND OFF-OFF-BROADWAY

There are about 20 Off-Broadway stages and 300 Off-Off-Broadway stages whose works will sometimes transfer to Broadway. Off-Broadway theaters have from 100 to 499 seats, and Off-Off-Broadway showplaces have fewer than 100. Both range from the well-appointed to the improvised, sited in lofts, churches, and even garages. Off-Broadway became very popular during the 1950s as a reaction to the commercialism of Broadway. It was also an ideal place for cautious producers to try out works considered too avant-garde for Broadway at lower operating costs. During the past two decades, Off-Off-Broadway theaters have staged more experimental pieces by these same producers.

Off-Broadway theaters are found all over Manhattan – from the Douglas Fairbanks Theater, where the irreverent Forbidden Broadway plays, to Central Park's open-air Delacorte Theater. Some are even in the Broadway district, such as the Manhattan Theater Club. Farther afield are the Brooklyn Academy of Music (BAM) (see p248), and the 92nd Street Y. In these venues you will find lively, unusual, and experimental showcases for new talent as well as lots of uninhibited productions.

The Off-Broadway theaters mounted the first productions in New York of the works of playwrights Sean O'Casey, Tennessee Williams, Eugene O'Neill, Jean Genet, Eugene Ionesco, and David Mamet. Samuel Beckett's Happy Days premiered at the Cherry Lane Theatre in 1961, a venue that still promotes cutting-edge writing. Off-Broadway theaters host new and very often irreverent treatments of the classics.

Sometimes a more intimate, smaller Off-Broadway stage suits a production better than a larger more established theater would, as proved by such long-running successes as The Fantasticks along with the Threepenny Opera, which has been shown at the Lucille Lortel Theater since 1955.

PERFORMANCE THEATERS

This extremely avant-garde art form can be found in several Off- and Off-Off-Broadway locations. Accurate descriptions and categorizations are almost impossible, but expect the bizarre and outlandish. The most likely venues to find this are La MaMa Experimental Theatre Club, P.S. 122, HERE, Baruch Performing Arts Center, 92nd Street Y, Symphony Space, and the Joseph Papp Public Theater (see p120). The latter is perhaps the most influential theater in New York. It was founded in the 1950s by the late director Joseph Papp, who introduced neighborhood tours to bring theater to people who had never seen it before.

The Public Theater created hits such as A Chorus Line; and Hair; it is most famous for its free summer performances of Shakespeare at the Delacorte Theater in Central Park (see p208). It usually has several productions running, and at 6pm on the day of performance, "Quixtix" tickets (limited to two per person) are sold in the Public Theater lobby.

THEATER SCHOOLS

New York is the best place in the country to see actors learning their trade. Foremost among the acting schools is The Actors' Studio. The late Lee Strasberg, the advocate of method acting – in which the actor aims for complete identification with the character being played – was its guru. His students included Dustin Hoffman, Al Pacino, and Marilyn Monroe. "In progress" productions feature trainees and are open to the public and free. Sandy Meisner trained many actors, including the late Lee Remick, at the Neighborhood Playhouse School of the Theater. Its plays are not open to the public. The New Dramatists began in 1949 to develop new playwrights, helping the careers of the likes of William Inge. Play readings are open to the public and free.

BALLET

At the heart of the dance world is Lincoln Center (see p214), where the New York City Ballet performs pieces in the New York State Theater. This company was created by the legendary brilliant choreographer George Balanchine (see p49) and is probably still the best in the world. The current director, Peter Martins, was one of Balanchine's best dancers and continues the strict policy of ensemble dancing rather than "star turns." The season runs from November to February and late April to early June. The ballet school at the Juilliard Dance Theater also presents a spring workshop every year, and this is a good chance to see budding stars.

The American Ballet Theater appears at the Metropolitan Opera House, which also hosts many visiting foreign companies, such as the Kirov, Bolshoi, and Royal ballets. Its repertoire includes 19th-century classics, such as Swan Lake, and works by modern choreographers such as Twyla Tharp and Paul Taylor.

CONTEMPORARY DANCE

New York is the center of many of the most important movements in modern dance. The Dance Theater of Harlem is world famous for its modern, traditional, and ethnic productions. Other havens of experimental dance include the 92nd Street Y and the Merce Cunningham Studio in Greenwich Village. The unique Dance Theater Workshop features contemporary dance and performance from around the world. The Kitchen, La MaMa, Symphony Space, and P.S. 122 are all multimedia venues with the latest in contemporary dance, performance art and avant-garde music. Choreographer Mark Morris's company performs at the brand new Mark Morris Dance Center in Brooklyn; City Center (see p148) is a favorite spot for dance fans. It used to house the New York City Ballet and the American Ballet Theater before Lincoln Center was built. As well as featuring the Joffrey Ballet, City Center has held performances by all the great contemporary artists, including Alvin Ailey's blend of modern, jazz, and blues and the companies of modern dance masters Merce Cunningham and Paul Taylor. Avoid the mezzanine as the view is restricted.

The city's single most active venue for dance is probably the Joyce Theater, where such well-established companies as the Feld Ballet, along with bold newcomers and visiting troupes, perform.

Each spring the Festival of Black Dance at the Brooklyn Academy of Music (BAM) (see p248) features everything from ethnic dance to hip-hop. During autumn the "Next Wave" festival of music and dance is held, celebrating international and American avant-garde dance and music. During winter, the American Ballet Festival is held here.

During June, New York University (see p115) holds a Summer Residency Festival with lecture-demonstrations, rehearsals, and performances, and Dancing in the Streets organizes summertime dance performances all over the city.

Throughout the month of August, Lincoln Center Out of Doors has a program of free dance events on the plaza, with such experimental groups as the American Tap Dance Orchestra.

The Duke Theater presents many contemporary dance companies and participates in events such as the New York Tap Festival.

At different times of the year, Radio City Music Hall holds several spectacular shows, with different companies from all over the world. At Christmas and Easter, it features the famously precise Rockettes dance troupe.

Choreographers and dance companies frequently present works-in-progress and recitals to the public. Among the most interesting venues for these is Alvin Ailey's Repertory Ensemble, famous for promoting black cultural expression, which opened one of the country's largest dance facilities in 2004. The Hunter College Dance Company performs new works by its student choreographers, and the Isadora Duncan Dance Foundation recreates Duncan's original dances. To see contemporary choreographers the best place to go is Juilliard Dance Theater.

PRICES

Theater is extremely expensive to produce, and ticket prices tend to reflect this. Even Off- and Off-Off-Broadway tickets are not cheap anymore. Preview tickets are easier to get hold of, though, and it's fun to see a show before the reviews are in so you're able to make up your own mind.

For a Broadway theater ticket you can expect to pay $80 or more; for musicals, up to $100; Off-Broadway, $25 to $60. For dance, $20 to $50 is the usual range, with up to $115 for the American Ballet Theater.

TIMES OF PERFORMANCE

The general rules for theater-hours are: closed on Mondays (except for most musicals), with matinees on Wednesdays, Saturdays, and sometimes Sundays. Matinees usually begin at 2pm, with evening performances at 8pm. Be sure to check the correct dates and times of the performance beforehand, as tickets are usually non-refundable if you fail to turn up at the correct time.

BACKSTAGE TOURS AND LECTURES

For those interested in the mechanics and anecdotes of the theater, your best bet is to go on one of the theater tours. The 92nd Street Y organizes insider's views of the theater, with famous directors, actors, and choreographers taking part. Writers are invited along to read or discuss their current works. Radio City Music Hall also holds tours.

Movies

New York is a film buff's paradise. Apart from new US releases, which show months in advance of other countries, many classic and foreign films are screened here.

The city has always been the testing ground for new developments in films, and it continues to be a hotbed of new and innovative talent. Many of the movies' most famous directors – Spike Lee, Martin Scorsese, and Woody Allen – were born and raised in New York, and the city's influence can be seen in many of their films. They, and others, can often be seen filming on the streets of the city; many of New York's landmarks have become famous after appearing in films. Most of the TV networks based in New York offer free tickets to the taping of their shows. Watching a show, such as The David Letterman Show, is popular with visitors.

FIRST-RUN MOVIES

New York reviews and box office returns are so vital to a film's success that most major American films have their premieres in Manhattan's theaters. First-run films are shown mainly at the City Cinema chains, Loews, United Artists and Cineplex Odeon, which are scattered around the city. Some theaters have recorded information giving the names and duration of the different films showing, with starting times and ticket prices.

Programs start at 10am or 11am and are repeated every two to three hours until midnight. You should expect to line up for most evening and weekend performances of the more popular films. Making reservations using a credit card is possible at some theaters for an additional charge

FILM RATINGS

Films in the United States are graded as follows:

G General audiences; all ages admitted.

PG Parental guidance suggested; some material unsuitable for children.

PG-13 Parents strongly cautioned; some material inappropriate for children under age 13.

R Restricted. Children under 17 need to be accompanied by a parent or an adult guardian.

NC-17 No children under 17 admitted.

of about $1 per ticket. Matinees (usually before 4pm) are easier to get into. Senior citizens pay a reduced price for tickets: the required age may be over 60, 62, or 65 depending on the policy of the theater.

NEW YORK FILM FESTIVAL

A high point of the year for film buffs is the New York Film Festival, now in its third decade. Organized by the Film Society of Lincoln Center, the festival starts in late September and continues for two weeks at the many Lincoln Center theaters. Outstanding new films from the US and abroad are entered in a competition for the huge prestige of winning an award. Many of the films shown during the festival are later released and can usually be seen only in art houses.

The TriBeCa Film Festival, created in part by director and actor Robert De Niro, was launched in 2002 to celebrate New York City as a filmmaking capital and to contribute to the long-term recovery of Lower Manhattan. The festival showcases a wide range of films, including classics, documentaries, and premieres, and usually takes place in late April and early May. Every spring, Docfest (the New York International Documentary Festival) presents five days of film and video documentaries from around the world, followed by panel discussions with the filmmaker.

ON LOCATION

Many New York locations have played starring roles in films. Here are a few:

The Brill Building (141 Broadway) contained Burt Lancaster's penthouse in Sweet Smell of Success.

The Brooklyn Bridge was a great backdrop in Spike Lee's Mo' Better Blues.

Brooklyn Heights and the Metropolitan Opera appeared in Moonstruck.

Central Park has shown up in countless films, including Love Story and Marathon Man.

55 Central Park West will be remembered as Sigourney Weaver's home in Ghostbusters.

Chinatown played a major role in Year of the Dragon.

The Dakota was where Mia Farrow lived in the classic Rosemary's Baby.

The Empire State Building is still standing after King Kong's last battle.

The observation deck is where Cary Grant waited in vain in An Affair to Remember; here Meg Ryan finally met Tom Hanks in Sleepless in Seattle.

Grand Central Station is famous for Robert Walker's meeting with Judy Garland in Under the Clock and for the magical ballroom sequence in The Fisher King.

Harlem hosted the jazz musicians and dancers in The Cotton Club.

Katz's Deli was the setting for the café scene between Billy Crystal and Meg Ryan in When Harry Met Sally...

Little Italy appeared in The Godfather I and II.

Madison Square Garden was the setting for the dramatic climax of The Manchurian Candidate.

Tiffany & Co. was Audrey Hepburn's favorite shop in Breakfast at Tiffany's.

The United Nations Building featured in North by Northwest and The Interpreter.

Washington Square Park was where Robert Redford and Jane Fonda walked Barefoot in the Park.

FOREIGN FILMS AND ART HOUSES

For the latest foreign and independent films, go to the Angelika Film Center, which also has an upscale coffee bar. Other good places are the Rose Cinemas at the BAM, the Film Forum, and Lincoln Plaza Cinema. The Plaza has a busy program of art and foreign films. For Asian, Indian, and Chinese films, you should visit the Asia Society. The French Institute screens many French films with English subtitles on Tuesdays. The Quad Cinema shows a wide selection of foreign films, often quite rare. Cinema Village runs special film events, such as the Festival of Animation.

The Walter Reade Theater houses the Film Society of the Lincoln Center, offering retrospectives of international movies as well as celebrations of contemporary works, such as the popular annual Spanish Cinema Now festival.

CLASSIC FILMS AND MUSEUMS

Retrospectives of films by particular directors or featuring specific actors are shown at the Public Theater and the Whitney Museum of American Art (see pp200–201). The Museum of the Moving Image (see p246) screens old films and also has many exhibits of memorabilia from the film industry. The Paley Center for Media (see p171) has regular screenings of classic films; you can also see or hear specific television or radio programs. Students interested in classic, new and experimental movies will appreciate the collection of the Anthology Film Archives.

The shows at the Rose Center for Earth and Space at the American Museum of Natural History are well worth a whole day's visit.

On summer evenings in Bryant Park, you can watch free classic movies, and on Saturday mornings, the Film Society of Lincoln Center, where special children's shows are held.

TELEVISION SHOWS

A number of TV programs originate in New York. The popular David Letterman and Saturday Night Live shows are almost impossible to get tickets for, but tickets for many other shows can be obtained online, by calling the networks such as NBC, ABC, and CBS, or sometimes on standby.

Another good source of free tickets is the Times Square Information Bureau (see p368). On weekday mornings on Fifth Avenue around Rockefeller Plaza, free tickets for a number of TV programs are sometimes distributed by the program's production staff. There's absolutely no way that you can plan for this. It's simply a matter of good luck and being in the right place at the right time.

For those who want to get a glimpse behind the scenes of TV, NBC organizes tours of the studios, from 8:30am to 4:30pm Mon–Thu (depart every 30 mins), 9:30am to 5:30pm Fri–Sat, and 9:30am to 4:30pm on Sunday (depart every 15 mins).

CHOOSING WHAT TO SEE

If you feel bewildered by the huge range of films offered in New York, check the listings in New York magazine, the New York Times, the Village Voice and The New Yorker. The following Internet guides give show times and locations: www.moviefone.com www.movietickets.com

Classical and Contemporary Music

New Yorkers have a voracious appetite for music. Live concerts by the world's most celebrated musical performers may be enjoyed at famous halls throughout the year, and younger, newer artists, and exotic imports always find receptive audiences.

TICKETS

Find out what you can choose from in New York by checking out the listings in the New York Times and the Village Voice and in Time Out New York and The New Yorker magazines.

CLASSICAL MUSIC

The orchestra in residence at Avery Fisher Hall in Lincoln Center (see p215) is the New York Philharmonic. It is also the annual site for the popular "Mostly Mozart" series and Young People's Concerts. Alice Tully Hall, in Lincoln Center, is an acoustic gem and home to the Chamber Music Society.

One of the world's premier concert halls is the revamped Carnegie Hall (see p148). Upstairs in the Weill Recital Hall there are quality performances for reasonable prices.

The Brooklyn Academy of Music (BAM) (see p248) is the home of the Brooklyn Philharmonic. Classical music, dance, opera, jazz, and world music all find an audience at the New Jersey Performance Arts Center in Newark.

The Merkin Concert Hall is host to some top chamber ensembles and soloists. For really excellent acoustics, go to the Town Hall. The 92nd Street Y's Kaufmann Concert Hall also offers a lively menu of music and dance. There's also the Frick Collection and Symphony Space, both of which offer a varied program ranging from gospel to Gershwin, classical to ethnic. The beautiful Grace Rainey Rogers Auditorium in the Metropolitan Museum of Art is for chamber music and soloists, while the well-equipped Florence Gould Hall, at the Alliance Française, presents a varied program of chamber music, orchestral pieces, concerts, and even classic French films.

CLASSICAL RADIO

The Juilliard School of Music and the Mannes College of Music are both considered excellent. Their students and faculties give free recitals, and there are shows by leading orchestras, chamber music groups, and opera companies. The Manhattan School of Music offers an excellent program of over 400 events per year, from classical to jazz.

At 9:45am on the Thursdays of the New York Philharmonic concerts, the evening show is rehearsed at Avery Fisher Hall in Lincoln Center. Audiences are often admitted to listen, and rehearsal tickets are available at low prices. The Kosciuszko Foundation hosts the annual Chopin Competition. Corpus Christi Church has an active concert schedule, presenting such groups as the Tallis Scholars.

OPERA

Dominating the city's operatic scene is Lincoln Center (see p212), home to the New York City Opera, and the Metropolitan Opera House, which has its own opera company. The Met is the jewel in the crown, offering top international performers. More accessible and dynamic is the New York City Opera. Its performances range from Madame Butterfly to South Pacific, with subtitles above the stage to help the audience understand the plot. Lower-priced quality performances are staged by the up-and-coming singers at the Village Light Opera Group, the Amato Opera Theater, the Kaye Playhouse at Hunter College, and the students at the Juilliard Opera Center in Lincoln Center.

CONTEMPORARY MUSIC

New York is one of the most important places in the world for contemporary music. Exotic, ethnic, and experimental music is played in many first-rate venues. The Brooklyn Academy of Music (BAM) is the standard-bearer of the avant-garde. Each autumn the Academy holds a festival of music and dance called "Next Wave," which has helped launch many musical careers.

An annual festival of serious modern music called "Bang on a Can" is performed at the Ethical Culture Society Hall and features works by Steve Reich, Pierre Boulez, and John Cage. Experimentalists, such as Davie Weinstein with his "audio-visual acid test" music – a mix of CD players, amplified instruments, keyboards, and sound effects – perform at the Dance Theater Workshop.

Other venues include the Asia Society (see p187), with its jewel of a theater for many visiting Asian performers, and St. Peter's Church.

BACKSTAGE TOURS

Behind-the-scenes tours are offered by Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall.

RELIGIOUS MUSIC

Few experiences are more moving than an Easter concert in the vast Cathedral of St. John the Divine (see pp226–7). Seasonal music is also offered at many of the city's museums and in almost every other available space – from Grand Central Terminal's main concourse (see pp156–7) to bank and hotel lobbies. For jazz vespers in a stunning modern building, visit St. Peter's Church (see p177).

Most of these concerts are free, but you are encouraged to contribute.

ALFRESCO

Free outdoor summer concerts occur in Bryant Park, Washington Square, and Lincoln Center's Damrosch Park. The annual concerts on Central Park's Great Lawn and in Brooklyn's Prospect Park are performed by the New York Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera. In good weather, strolling musicians perform at South Street Seaport, on the steps of the Metropolitan Museum of Art (see pp190-97), and in the area around Washington Square.

MUSIC FOR FREE

Free musical performances are given at The Cloisters (see pp236-9) and the Whitney Museum's Philip Morris Building (see p152). Sunday-afternoon recitals are held at Rumsey Playfield and the Naumburg Bandshell in Central Park (see p208), as well as the Summerstage. Call The Dairy for more information. You will also find music in the Federal Hall (see p68), while at Lincoln Center, don't miss the exciting free performances held in the Juilliard School of Music. Other popular venues include the Greenwich House Music School (free student recitals) and the Winter Garden at the World Financial Center (see p69). Numerous free concerts and talks take place in the city's churches, including St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Church (see p68), and St. Thomas Church (see p171).

Rock, Jazz, and World Music

There's every imaginable form of music in New York, from international stadium rock to the sounds of the 1960s, from Dixieland jazz or country blues, soul, and world music to talented street musicians. The city's music scene changes at a dizzying pace, with many new arrivals (and departures) almost daily, so there's no way to predict what you may find when you arrive. Musical standards also vary.

PRICES AND PLACES

At clubs, expect to pay a cover charge and possibly a one- or two-drink minimum (at $7 or more) requirement. The prices for concerts range from $50 to $150 for the major venues. Many of the smaller concert venues are arranged for seating in certain areas and dancing in others – often with different prices for each.

The top international bands are usually to be found in the huge arenas at the Meadowlands or Madison Square Garden (see p135). Here the likes of Elton John, Bruce Springsteen, and the Stones perform. Tickets for these events sell out very fast, so buy as many as you need as soon as you hear of a concert, unless you don't mind paying a lot for them through an agent or a scalper (see p341). During the summer, big outdoor concerts are held at Jones Beach (see p255) and Central Park SummerStage.

Medium-sized venues for mainstream bands include the Art Deco palace of Radio City Music Hall, the Manhattan Center (formerly the Hammerstein Ballroom), and the Beacon Theater. Booking an impressive lineup of acts is the Nokia Theater in Times Square. This state-of-the-art venue is known for its top-notch acoustics. The most popular live-music venues are in the Upper West Side area.

Many leading rock venues are basically bars with music. They will often book different bands every night, so check the listings in the New York Times, Village Voice, or Time Out New York or phone the place to find out what's happening and at what time during that particular week.

ROCK MUSIC

Rock comes in many forms: gothic, industrial, techno, psychedelic, post-punk funk, indie, and alternative music are among the latest crazes. If you prefer to see more of a band than a giant video screen, the following venues have a much more intimate, friendly atmosphere.

The Knitting Factory has live jazz and new music, while the Mercury Lounge is one of the most happening music spots, featuring hot new bands being groomed for MTV. Irving Plaza is where relatively unknown and sometimes known rock groups play, as do the occasional famous country and blues musicians.

The Bowery Ballroom, in the Lower East Side, boasts superior acoustics and sightlines and usually books well-known touring acts and local bands.

A converted bodega, Arlene's Grocery has been attracting a loyal crowd since 1995, thanks to acts ranging from rock to country and comedy. Joe's Pub draws those who appreciate the eclectic roster of rock, jazz, hip-hop, and lounge music. A more upscale venue Crash Mansion showcases up-and-coming talents of any musical persuasion, from rock and punk to Brazilian and jazz, as well as featuring established performers such as Norah Jones.

JAZZ

The original Cotton Club and Connie's Inn, which were once crucibles of jazz, are long gone, as are the former speakeasies of West 52nd Street. However, many talented performers carry on the old traditions of Dave Brubeck, Les Paul, Duke Ellington, Count Basie, and other big bands. In Harlem, the stylish yet informal Lenox Lounge features contemporary jazz on the weekends.

In Greenwich Village, jazz temples from the 1930s survive and continue to foster great music. Foremost among them is the Village Vanguard, where some of the most highly revered jazz memories linger and newer ones are being fashioned by such groups as the McCoy Tyner and Branford Marsalis trios. Blue Note hosts big bands at high prices but has a great atmosphere. Smalls offers cutting-edge jazz, with four sets a night from two different bands (Mon-Sat). The Knitting Factory features contemporary and avant-garde jazz.

Smoke is an intimate nightspot offering a divergent roster of musicians, and Birdland features ex-Mingus alumni and musicians such as Bud Shank.

Café Carlyle, an East Side spot once famed for late jazz pianist and singer Bobby Short, now sometimes features clarinetist-filmmaker Woody Allen playing with Eddy Davis and his New Orleans Jazz Band. Jazz Standard, with an ample underground performance space, showcases top-notch jazz performers most nights of the week.

A sophisticated club and restaurant, Iridium features progressive jazz. If you're in New York in June, don't miss the annual JVC Jazz Festival, where famous jazz and blues icons play at various clubs all around Manhattan.

Jazz at Lincoln Center events are scheduled throughout the year, including concerts by the renowned Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra under the direction of Wynton Marsalis. The music ranges from Duke Ellington's New York sounds to Johnny Dodds' traditional New Orleans-style jazz. Jazz at Lincoln Center now has its own home since it moved into the world's first performing arts center specifically for jazz. It is housed in the Time Warner Center – a multiroom facility on Columbus Circle, perched above Central Park, with bandstands posed against sparing walls of glass and a dance floor beneath the moon and stars (see p215). Finally, Friday night at the Rose Center (at AMNH) offers live jazz concerts.

FOLK AND COUNTRY MUSIC

Folk, rock music, and R&B (rhythm and blues) can be found at the rather faded Bitter End, which once showcased James Taylor and Joni Mitchell but now specializes in promising new talent, as does Kenny's Castaways. Also worth checking out is the Sidewalk Café, with its wide range of emerging performers.

BLUES, SOUL, AND WORLD MUSIC

For blues, soul, and world music, options include the Apollo Theater in Harlem (see p230). For more than 60 years the near-legendary Wednesday Amateur Nights have been responsible for discovering and launching stars, including James Brown and Dionne Warwick.

The Cotton Club is no longer located in its original spot, but the modern venue offers good blues, jazz, and a Sunday real Gospel brunch on Harlem's main street. The B.B. King's Blues Club lineup often features legendary jazz and gospel performers. Food is also served, but can be pricy. Don't miss "Mambo Mondays" with Nestor Torres at SOB's (Sounds of Brazil), a world music club specializing in Afro-Latin rhythms.

Terra Blues's bar doubles as an interesting music venue. The blues artists that appear here range from authentic Chicago acoustic players to modern blues acts. In the East Village, The Stone showcases an eclectic range of artsy acts. Part community center and café, part jazz and experimental music space, the 5C Café is a throwback to old New York and has a laidback vibe.

Clubs, Dance Halls, and Gay and Lesbian Venues

New York's nightlife and club scene is legendary, and deservedly so. Whatever your preference – be it for a noisy disco, stand-up comedy, or the soothing melodies of a Harry Connick, Jr., sound-alike in a piano bar – you'll be really amazed at the choice. There was a rash of big discos in the 1980s, but relatively few of these have survived the more recent trend toward the comfort and style of supper clubs.

WHEN AND WHERE

The best and hippest time for clubbing is during the week – it's also a lot cheaper. Take a fair amount of money and some ID to prove that you're old enough to drink (which is over 21) – but beware, all the drinks are very expensive.

The trendiest clubs roll on until 4am or later. Fashions and club nights change all the time, so go to Tower Records on Broadway for all the latest leaflets, check club details in the listings magazines (see p340) and read the Village Voice. The most interesting places nowadays are often popularized by word of mouth. Your best bet is to go somewhere like Pacha and hope someone will tell you where to go on to. It's a well-known spot and often invitations to other clubs are given out there.

DANCING

New Yorkers thrive on music and dancing. The dance floors available all around the city range from the ever-popular SOB's – for jungle, reggae, soul, jazz, and salsa – to a few huge basketball-court-sized places, such as Roseland. This has ballroom dancing every Thursday and Sunday and is New York's classic Broadway ballroom, revealing a tantalizing glimpse of older Broadway culture. It also has a good megasize, 700-seater, restaurant with a fully stocked bar.

The legendary club Pacha, which started out in Ibiza, has opened a swanky four-floor venue in the heart of Times Square and is consistently booking top international DJs to make the most of the colossal sound system installed here. This is the place for those who enjoy pounding music, sweaty dance floors, and a lively crowd. Marquee is another A-list spot in Chelsea, with a glass-enclosed VIP mezzanine that draws Hollywood starlets. Bring some models if you want to be sure of getting in.

Those who prefer a more underground house scene should head to Apt for top DJ tunes. In Chelsea, Home buzzes with dance tunes and has plenty of VIP seating. The Plumm fills with trendy clubbers, celebrities, and those who have come to spot them. Join the crowd cutting moves on the dance floor to hip-hop, funk, rock, and classics. The door policy can be strict, so dress up in your hippest duds.

Also attracting a try-hard crowd is The Pink Elephant, with its swanky decor (a lot of pink lights, of course). Many of the girls here are on the lookout for a hedge-fund husband, so guys might be expected to pay for drinks. The tables all require bottle service, and house music is the mainstay. Even more elite is the Hiro Ballroom at the Maritime Hotel, a Sunday night must for the beautiful set. There are two levels to this Japanese-themed restaurant, with ample seating for poseurs who wish to see and be seen.

For those who are more interested in music and dancing, rather than decor, head to Club Shelter, New York's longest-running deep-house club, and The Sullivan Room, which draws the cream of techno talent and boasts a top-notch sound system and plenty of seating.

NIGHTCLUBS

Nightclubs are the places to see a show. NY shows are less flashy than in the 1940s and 1950s but they still boast a wide variety of acts. Expect to pay a cover charge; many of the clubs also require that you have at least two drinks.

The Rainbow Grill on the 65th floor of the RCA Building has a fine piano bar. The chic Supper Club surrounds you with gold lamé draperies and features big band music downstairs. Cabaret singers perform upstairs in their intimate Blue Room. Joe's Pub at the Public Theater has decent food and a wonderful array of performances and musical acts. Feinstein's at the Regency is the epitome of classic cabaret. Come here to enjoy everything from tinkling live piano shows to Broadway tributes and jazz trios.

GAY AND LESBIAN VENUES

The past two decades have seen the arrival of clubs and restaurants specifically geared to gay and lesbian clientele. Popular gay cabarets include the Duplex, which has a mix of stand-up comics, comedy sketches and singers. Often adorned with year-round Christmas lights, the long-running Pieces heats up most nights of the week with everything from drag shows to karaoke.

The very fashionable nightclubs and bars for men include the trendy uptown Town House, a piano bar with restaurant, and Don't Tell Mama, a long-established gay bar that presents good musical revues and spoofs. Henrietta Hudson caters solely to women, as does Grolier.

Magazines such as the Village Voice, HX, and Next have good listings of what's happening in the gay communities, and the Gay Yellow Pages covers the gay scene. If you need more information, phone the Gay and Lesbian Switchboard.

The Chelsea neighborhood, particularly around Eighth Avenue, is the bustling heart of New York's gay life. The Hell's Kitchen area, around the mid 40s between Eighth and 10th avenues, also thrums with gay nightlife –

Barrage is a hopping bar featuring a popular Friday happy hour. The inviting and stylish G Lounge serves a potent selection of cocktails and flavored coffees, and is the perfect spot for a drink before hitting the clubs.

Lively Barracuda features drag shows and draws a diverse crowd of regulars and newcomers. Rawhide stays hopping throughout the evening, with a popular happy hour every night until 10pm. Stonewall Inn, the famed site of the Stonewall riots and birth of the modern gay movement, has undergone a multimillion-dollar refurbishment. The comfy neighborhood lounge Posh pulls in a friendly crowd for the popular happy hour 4–8pm.

Casual, friendly Rubyfruit Bar and Grill on Hudson Street fills with women who are out for cocktails and conversation. The imaginatively decorated Cubby Hole is a cozy lesbian bar where regulars often sing along to the jukebox.

Comedy, Cabaret, and Literary Events

From Jack Benny and Rodney Dangerfield to Woody Allen and Jerry Seinfeld, New York has spawned almost as many comics as it has jokes about itself, including the requisite quips: on crime – “In New York crime is getting worse. When I was there the other day, the Statue of Liberty had both hands up”; and on driving – “Always look both ways when running a red light.” Comedy is a cut-throat business here. This is good news for punters, because it means that no matter what comedy club you walk into, you’ll be howling after just a few sets. NYC is also a consummate romancer, judging by its plethora of cabarets and lounges. An unforgettable New York experience is to be serenaded by a lounge singer in a dusky piano bar. New York also boasts a booming literary scene, with superb weekly readings and lectures.

COMEDY SHOWCASES

Many of New York’s best current comedy clubs or showcases have evolved from earlier “improvisational” comedy. Part of the allure of New York comedy clubs is that you never know who might get behind the mic to deliver their spiel. Anyone from Dennis Miller and Roseanne Barr to Robin Williams could show up. A word of caution: if you don’t want to be singled out and made fun of, sit away from the stage. Many of the larger comedy clubs offer meals, and at the more popular clubs, it’s always a good idea to make reservations to ensure admission.

Leading the comedy club pack is the Broadway Comedy Club in the Theater District, which has formed from a merger of Chicago City Limits and NY Improv. As the city’s largest club, it draws big names nightly. Caroline’s also has big-name comics perform in elegant surroundings. The famous catchphrase of the bug-eyed New York comedian Roger Dangerfield was “I get no respect,” but judging from the lasting fame of his Dangerfield’s Comedy Club, which draws top acts from around the country, he seems to have gotten respect after all. The Upright Citizens Brigade Theatre has sassy, Chicago-style improvisation on various days of the week.

Many of the UCB’s weekly late shows are free. The Gotham Comedy Club in the Flatiron District, presents a wide range of comics in a sophisticated setting. Comic Strip Live, on the East Side, has hosted a slew of top comics, including Eddie Murphy, and continues to introduce many new comics to the scene. The basement-level Comedy Cellar in Greenwich Village presents a nightly lineup of new and established comics. Also good are Stand-Up New York, NY Comedy Club, and Laugh Lounge NYC, which showcases two comedy shows a night, as well as offering nicely priced cocktails. Underground Lounge and The Laugh Factory are also good value.

CABARETS AND PIANO BARS

Cabarets have become a New York institution. Such cozy, just-for-listening places are often called “rooms” and are located in hotels. Most operate from Tuesday to Saturday (usually with a cover charge or a drink minimum), and most take credit cards.

The Algonquin’s Oak Room has song stylists. For a classic piano lounge with a panoramic Manhattan view, visit the Top of the Tower at the Beekman Tower Hotel. The “long-distance hummer” award goes to the late Bobby Short, who played his piano for over 25 years at the Café Carlyle in the Carlyle Hotel. Now Woody Allen plays there on Mondays with Eddy Davis’s New Orleans Jazz Band.

Also in the Carlyle is Bemelman’s Bar, with its whimsical murals; it attracts a relaxed crowd who enjoy first-class crooners. A jacket is required if you visit the 5757 Bar at the Four Seasons Hotel, but the opulence of the place makes it worth dressing up.

The spirited cabaret Don’t Tell Mama showcases emerging and established performers who belt out their songs with equal gusto. Ars Nova in Hell’s Kitchen is an informal, anything-goes cabaret where you may see show tunes and experimental comedy, and has attracted the likes of Liza Minnelli and Tony Kushner.

For Manhattan’s choicest cabaret, kick back and enjoy the show at lively Duplex, the longest-running cabaret venue in New York City. Relax to the tinkling of keys at the downstairs piano bar, or head upstairs for superlative classic cabaret shows, one-act plays, and top-notch comedy. A mixed crowd, including the talented staff, croons along at Brandy’s Piano Bar. For a memorable evening of song and music, head to Feinstein’s at the Regency Hotel, where top-of-the-line performers entertain an appreciative crowd. Enjoy sultry cabaret, theater, and musical ensembles at the plush showroom in Dillon’s Restaurant and Lounge, nestled in the heart of the Theater District.

LITERARY EVENTS AND POETRY SLAMS

As the birthplace of some of the greatest American writers, from Herman Melville to Henry James, and the adopted home of countless others, New York has long been a writer’s city. The literary tradition is celebrated often and throughout the year, with readings and talks that take place at bookstores, libraries, cafés, and community centers across the city. Readings are usually free, but expect long lines for the better known names. The 92nd Street Y hosts readings by some of the greatest writers to pass through New York, including many Nobel- and Pulitzer-prize winning authors. Most NYC bookstores present a weekly or monthly reading series, including Barnes & Noble (the Fifth Avenue and Union Square branches usually attract the highest profile authors) and Borders Books and Music. The Mid-Manhattan Library also presents readings, as does Strand Bookstore. Enjoy spirited readings by playwrights at the Drama Book Shop. Check out The New Yorker magazine, available in bookstores and at many newsstands, for current listings of readings and talks.

Poetry slams (sometimes called Spoken Word), are just what the name implies, an evening of freeform poems, raps, and storytelling, usually raucous and entertaining, often unpredictable, and never boring. The Nuyorican Poets Café in Alphabet City, often heralded as the progenitor of spoken word in New York, serves up a nightly mix of poetry slams, readings, and performances. The Bowery Poetry Club, established as a performance space for spoken word in all its incarnations, presents an eclectic range of performances, from poetry jams to various performance arts. The Poetry Project at St. Mark's Church also hosts contemporary poetry readings, events, and workshops.

Late-Night New York

New York is indeed a city that never sleeps. If you wake up in the middle of the night – with a craving for fresh bread, a need to be entertained, or an urge to watch the sun rise over the Manhattan skyline – there are always plenty of options to choose from.

BARS

The best and friendliest bars are often the Irish ones. O'Flanagan's or Scruffy Duffy's are both loud, have late-night dancing, and cater to regulars. Go for a late-night dry martini at the Temple Bar. The best piano bars are in the hotels: try the Café Carlyle in the Carlyle Hotel, Feinstein's at Loews Regency (see p357), or the Oak Room in the Algonquin Hotel.

For hot American jazz until 4am, go to Joe's Pub or the Blue Note. Cornelia Street Café is a lively nook for prose, poetry, theater, and Latin music can be found at the Nuyorican Poets Café. If you're in the Village, stop in at Rose's Turn for open mike, piano bar, and late-night ambience.

MIDNIGHT MOVIES

Special midnight showings and a youthful crowd can be found at the Angelika Film Center and the Film Forum (see p349). New multi-plexes often show movies at midnight on weekends.

SHOPS

Shakespeare & Company Booksellers on Broadway and the St. Mark's Bookshop are open until late. The Apple Store on Fifth Ave is open 24 hours and well worth a visit at any time of the day. In the evening, DJs bring the store to life, while during the day, more than 300 Mac specialists are available for training and consultations. In SoHo, H&M sells affordable fashion until 9pm Monday to Saturday and until 8pm on Sundays.

Among the many Village clothing stores that stay open late is Trash and Vaudeville (open till 8pm Mon-Sat); Macy's at Herald Square is open daily until 9:30pm. For health essentials, numerous Duane Reade, CVS, and Rite Aid pharmacies are open 24 hours.

TAKE-OUT FOOD AND GROCERIES

A few take-out food stores are open 24 hours a day, including numerous Gristedes emporiums and the West Side Supermarket. Many Korean greengrocers also stay open all night. The Food Emporium is a supermarket chain usually open until midnight. Liquor stores are usually open until 10pm and many deliver.

For the best in bagels, go to H & H Bagels, Bagels On The Square, and Jumbo Bagels and Bialys. Many pizzerias and Chinese restaurants stay open late.

DINING

The trendy set often frequent Balthazar, and Les Halles for good French dishes. Twentysomethings will seek out the Coffee Shop for late-night beer and Brazilian food. You'll find delicious and legendary sandwiches at the Carnegie Deli. Caffè Reggio in Greenwich Village has been a favorite for late-night coffee and desserts since 1927. Other good options include Blue Ribbon and Odeon. The Dead Poet is a real Upper West Side neighborhood hangout, with a jukebox, a lively bar, and late-night bar food. Downtown, the party crowds flock to Bereket Turkish Kebab House for excellent kebabs, or to the Empire Diner in Chelsea. Both are open 24 hours a day.

SPORTS

There is late-night play at Slate Billiards until 4am on weekends. Have late-night beers and burgers with the New York University crowd at Bowlmor Lanes bowling alley. Also popular is the Lucky Strike Lanes and Lounge, featuring cocktails, bowling, and music in a retro atmosphere. 24-7 Fitness Club offers a no-frill gym around the clock.

SERVICES

Midnight Express Cleaners picks up garments in Manhattan until midnight and has them ready the next day. Note that this service does not pick up or deliver to major hotels. On Thursdays hairdresser George Michael of Madison Avenue/Madora is open until 9pm and will also make house calls. Primarily for women, the no-nonsense Korean spa Juvenex provides massages and saunas at any time. If you are locked out, try Mr Locks Inc. For stamps, head to the General Post Office, open 24 hours. Upscale grocer Dean & DeLuca's Kip's Bay branch is open till 10pm.

TOURS AND VIEWS

One of New York's most enjoyable walks is along the Hudson River at the World Financial Center's Battery Park City, open (and safe) at all hours. Piers 16 and 17 at South Street Seaport attract strollers and revelers all night long and the Harbour Lights restaurant on Pier 17 is often open until 2am for a middle of the night pick-me-up. Enjoy the city lights by taking a Circle Line two-hour tour of the nighttime harbor.

Try the Riverview Terrace at Sutton Place: the benches offer a peaceful place to watch the sun rise over the East River, Roosevelt Island, and Queens. Two of the most sensational views with the Manhattan backdrop are (looking west) from the River Café and (looking east) from Arthur's Landing restaurant.

Take a trip on the Staten Island Ferry (see p76) to see the Statue of Liberty and the Manhattan skyline in the dawn light, or take a taxi across Brooklyn Bridge (see pp86-9) to watch the sun rise over New York Harbor. Go to the Beekman Tower Hotel's Top of the Tower for some panoramas of the city's East Side up to 1am. The ultimate view is from the Empire State Building: its observation decks (see pp136-7) stay open until 2am. Top of the Rock's observation decks (see p144) are open until midnight. Rise, the 14th-floor bar of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel in Battery Park has great views of the harbor and Statue of Liberty.

Château Stables has rides in horse-drawn carriages and Liberty Helicopters run flights over the city at sunset. If you want something a little bit different, try Marvelous Manhattan Tours' escorted evening barhopping walks. And if you still can't sleep, stroll along the Upper West Side and grab a couple of hot dogs at the famous Gray's Papaya.

Sports

Many New Yorkers are ardent sports fans, and you'll find a range of sports events, both to watch and participate in, going on throughout the year. The city boasts two professional baseball teams, two hockey teams, a basketball team, and two football teams. Madison Square Garden plays host to an extraordinary variety of spectator sports, including basketball, hockey, boxing, and track and field events. Tennis fans can take in the US Open and Virginia Slims tournaments, and those who follow track and field events swarm to the Millrose Games, where top runners and other athletes compete.

TICKETS

The easiest way to get hold of tickets is through Ticketron or Ticketmaster. For the big games, you may need a ticket agent. You can also buy tickets at the stadium box office itself, though these tickets often sell out quickly, so you'll have to call or stop by far in advance. Keep your eyes peeled for ticket offers in the free entertainment weeklies that are distributed throughout town, and check the local newspapers for upcoming sporting events.

FOOTBALL

The city's two professional football teams are the New York Giants and the New York Jets. They both play their home games across the river at the Giants Stadium in New Jersey, though there are plans in the works for the construction of a new Giants Stadium on the West Side of Manhattan. Tickets for the Giants, a popular team with an impressive number of NFL and Super Bowl championships under their belt, are near impossible to obtain, but they may be available for the Jets.

BASEBALL

To capture the essence of this American institution, baseball fans should try to see the famed New York Yankees, who moved to the new Yankee Stadium in 2009. The team's legendary accomplishments are manifold, and include winning the most World Series titles and boasting such celebrated players as Joe DiMaggio and Jackie Robinson. The New York Mets, the other major baseball team, plays at Shea Stadium in Queens. Catching a game of "America's favorite pastime" on a crisp summer day is a memorable event, from the crack of the bat and the baseball soaring into the clear blue sky to the seemingly effortless slides into base and the roar of the crowd. If you can, try and catch a game when the Yankees are playing the Boston Red Sox. The baseball season runs from April to October.

BASKETBALL

The New York Knicks play their home games at Madison Square Garden; tickets are pricey and difficult to attain, so you'll need to reserve far in advance through Ticketron or Ticketmaster. The ever-popular Harlem Globetrotters also play their games at The Garden.

BOXING

Professional boxing matches are more often seen on Paramount's wide TV screen than in the flesh at Madison Square Garden. Also at the Garden are the Daily News Golden Gloves in mid-April, the largest and oldest amateur boxing tournament in the US, with boxers from New York's five boroughs competing. Past Golden Glove winners, many of whom have gone on to become Olympic gold medalists and world champions, have included Sugar Ray Robinson and Floyd Patterson.

HORSE RACES

A day at the races may not be quite the lavish affair it once was, but the high-stakes races still draw the society crowd — hats, summer dresses and all — along with lively crowds who have come to cheer, jeer, and bet on their lucky horse. Harness racing, in which horses pull sulkies (small carts), takes place year-round at the Yonkers Raceway. Flat races are held daily, except Tuesday, October to May, at the Aqueduct Race Track in Queens, and May to October at the Belmont Park Race Track in Long Island.

ICE HOCKEY

Fists and ice fly when the New York Rangers meet their competition at Madison Square Garden. The New York Islanders are also fierce hockey contenders, with exciting matches at the Nassau Coliseum in Long Island. The hockey season runs from October to April.

ICE-SKATING

There are a variety of good places to go ice skating out of doors. One is the Rockefeller Plaza Rink, which looks beautiful at Christmas. The others are in Central Park: Wollman Memorial Rink and Lasker Ice Rink. For indoor sites, try the Sky Rink at Chelsea Piers.

MARATHON

To be one of the 30,000 who enter the New York Marathon, you have to sign up six months in advance. The race is held on the first Sunday in November. Phone (212) 423-2249 for information.

TENNIS

The top tennis tournament in New York is the US Open, played each August at the National Tennis Center. Also good is the women's Virginia Slims Championships in November at Madison Square Garden (see p135). If you want to play tennis rather than watch it, look in the telephone directory under "Tennis Courts: Public and Private." For private courts, you can expect to pay about $50–70 an hour. The Manhattan Plaza Racquet Club offers both courts and lessons by the hour. For public courts, you will need a $50 permit, available from the NY City Parks & Recreation Department. You will also need an identity card and a reservation coupon.

TRACK AND FIELD

The Millrose Games, which draws top athletes from around the world, are normally held in early February at Madison Square Garden. The 100-meter sprint, pole vault, and high jump competitions are particularly exciting. The Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) championships, where many renowned student athletes compete, are held in late February at the Garden. Chelsea Piers also has a complete track and field complex.

SPORTS BARS

New York City is crammed with sports bars, often unmissable for their big screens, sports banners, and cheering (or booing), beer-guzzling patrons. For a slice of American sports life, step into a sports bar when a big game is on, and you'll soon be whooping it up with the rest of them. Try Mickey Mantle's, which has a giant scoreboard. ESPN Zone, in Times Square, offers a plethora of screens so that you can follow the action no matter where you are. Bounce, on the Upper East Side, is a boisterous sports lounge with drinks specials through the week. Bar None and the friendly, Irish Pioneer Bar are also favorites, and for soccer, try the amiable Nevada Smith's in the East Village, with friendly, Guinness-fueled crowds.

OTHER ACTIVITIES

In Central Park, options include renting rowboats from Loeb Boathouse or playing chess – pick up the pieces from The Dairy (see p208). Rent rollerblades at Blades Board & Skate and have a free lesson on stopping at Central Park before making a circuit. Bowling is available at Chelsea Piers and a few other lanes throughout the city. Slate Billiards and many bars offer pool and darts.

Fitness and Wellbeing

New York City may be (in)famous for its concrete, crowds, and cacophony, but the urban jungle is a boon for sports and fitness aficionados. A host of possibilities beckon, from pedaling on the sun-washed riverfront and jogging under the shadow of Manhattan's signature skyline at the Central Park Reservoir to scaling a soaring climbing wall at one of the city's many upscale gyms, indulging in a massage at gorgeous spa strewn with rose petals and finding your inner Om in the lotus position at a yoga class.

CYCLING

There's nothing like being stuck in midtown traffic to make you long for pedaling the open road. While Manhattan may be one of the most crowded islands on the planet, it offers a surprising 120 km (75 miles) of bike trails. At the last count, Manhattan boasted more than 110,000 everyday cyclists. One of the most pleasant places to cycle is in Central Park during the weekend, when it's closed to cars. Bikes may be rented from Central Park Bike Rentals on Columbus Circle. If you would like to feel the river breeze in your hair, pedal the well-maintained bike path along the West Side Highway that runs parallel to the Hudson River, or hit the bike trails in Riverside Park. On summer weekends, the paths can get exasperatingly congested, but if you go early or late in the day, or in the winter months, you can often coast solo.

The friendly folks at Bicycle Habitat on Lafayette Street rent bikes and dole out tips on getting around New York by bike.

FITNESS CENTERS, GYMS, AND HEALTH CLUBS

In New York, a weekly workout has become almost de rigueur for even the most extreme workaholics. Gyms and health clubs have sprouted across the city to accommodate the demand, and serious sweating goes on at all hours, day and night. The options are endless: Get your aggression out with a punch bag, increase your heart rate on the stairmaster, or pump iron. Most major hotels have fitness centers. Many commercial gyms and health clubs are open only to members, but an increasing number of gyms now offer day passes. Check out the Chelsea Piers Sports & Entertainment Complex on Piers 59–62 near Hudson River; there's something for everyone at this enormous facility. It's one-stop shopping at the multilevel May Center for Health, Fitness, and Sport at the 92nd Street Y, with exercise studios, weight-training, racquetball courts, a boxing room, and an indoor track. Day passes start at around $35. With its well-maintained gym along with an array of personal diet and exercise programs, the Casa Spa & Fitness at the Regency Hotel on Park Avenue lives up to its promise to be "your health and fitness oasis when you're away from home".

You can enjoy a wide range of activities at YMCA (one in West Side and the other on 47th Street) fitness centers. The state-of-the-art training equipment, a number of gymnasiums, swimming pools, aerobics studios, running/walking tracks, and various courts for different games, add to your enthusiasm of working out. The center also has special programs for elderly people designed to suit their physical stature for a healthy life.

GOLF

Practice your swing at Randalls Island Golf Center on Randalls Island, Chelsea Golf Club, or play mini-golf at the Wollman Memorial Rink in Central Park. The city owns several courses in the boroughs, such as Pelham Bay Park in the Bronx and Silver Lake on Staten Island.

JOGGING

Some parks are safe for joggers, others are not, so be guided by your concierge. None is safe after dark, at dusk or before dawn. The most popular and beautiful route is around the reservoir in Central Park. The NY Road Runners on 89th Street have weekly running clinics and races, as does Chelsea Piers Sports & Entertainment Complex.

PILATES

All you have to lose are your love handles. Work your abs and torso for lean, toned muscles at a Pilates class. The philosophy behind Pilates is based on the premise that the body's core is the "powerhouse" for the peripheral parts of the body. Challenge your muscles at a Grasshopper Pilates class, which is taught by a professionally trained dancer in a TriBeCa loft. Power Pilates also hold strengthening classes throughout the city.

YOGA

It's easier to get in touch your spiritual center when you can do it in a place like the airy Exhale Mind Body Spa on Madison Avenue, with its high ceilings and hard-wood floors. "Journey into the Core", "Ride the Vinyasa Wave", and "Dance into Trance" at a variety of yoga sessions, the ideal antidote to the city's madness. And, lest you should think yoga isn't enough of a workout, then you haven't tried the core fusion power pack abs session. YogaMoves on Sixth Avenue also offers a wide range of yoga classes, from beginner to advanced.

SPAS

Pamper yourself at one of New York City's choice spas and you'll emerge fresh as a daisy – and ready to take on the urban jungle once again. Most spas offer packages where you can enjoy several treatments at a lower price. If you're travelling with your significant other, bond over a couples' massage. The intoxicating wafts of incense that greet you at the front door of the fragrant, low-lit Clay are just a hint of the luxurious massage that awaits within.

At the comfy, casual Oasis Day Spa at Union Square, select from six aromatherapy massages ($100) in aromas of uplift, refresh, balance, passion, calm, or relief. Men's specials include a Dead Sea salt scrub, an algae facial, or a muscle meltdown massage ($100 for an hour). For a slice of heaven, Bali style, disappear into the Acqua Beauty Bar on 14th Street and enjoy a botanical purifying facial ($115), orchid pedicure ($45), or Indonesian ritual of beauty ($170), where your skin is scrubbed with ground rice and kneaded with fragrant oils. Enter Bliss on 57th Street and you'll soon discover that there's nothing a carrot and sesame body buff ($195) or fully loaded facial ($195) can't cure. Top it off with a decadent double chocolate pedicure, accompanied by a cup of creamy cocoa. Pure bliss.

Celebrities including Antonio Banderas and Kate Moss swear by Mario Badescu on 52nd Street whose facials and body scrubs, including the fresh fruit body scrub, with plump raspberries and strawberries, are as legendary as the beauty products, which are perfect to bring home as gifts.

SWIMMING

Many Manhattan hotels have pools with free access during your stay. It is also possible to purchase a day pass to use a hotel swimming pool and facilities – for example, at Le Parker Meridien (see p286).

You can also swim and surf at the Surfside 3 Maritime Center at Chelsea Piers. For a day trip, go to Jones Beach State Park (see p255) along Long Island's shoreline.

INDOOR SPORTS

Chelsea Piers has it all: roller rinks, bowling, indoor soccer, basketball, rock-climbing walls, fitness centers, golf, a field house for gymnastics, sports medicine, spa centers, and of course, swimming pools. This huge complex, which is spread over four old West Side piers, is open to everyone.

Apart from providing fitness centers, gymnasium facilities, and indoor sports activities YMCA also offers exercise, balance, and flexibility classes; organizes day trips; special events; and sports and volunteer opportunities. If you are planning an adventurous day out for your children with fitness on the agenda or for burning extra calories then the club is worth a visit.

CHILDREN'S NEW YORK

Young visitors soon catch the contagious excitement in the air in New York. Attractions for all ages abound, and plenty are designed especially for children. More than a dozen theater companies, two zoos, and plenty of imaginative museums are for just the young, backed up with special events at many museums and parks. The chance to visit a TV studio is a treat, and New York's own Big Apple Circus is a perennial delight. With more to do than can ever be squeezed into a single visit, you'll never hear the cry "I'm bored!" Best of all, there's no need to spend a fortune to have fun.

A young visitor making New York his very own playground

PRACTICAL ADVICE

New York is family-friendly. Many of its hotels allow children in parents' rooms free, and will supply cots or cribs if needed. Most museums charge half price or less for children, while others are free. Children under 112 cm (44 in) also ride free on subways and buses when accompanied by an adult. Travel between 9am and 4pm to avoid rush hours.

Supplies such as diapers and medicines are readily available, and the Rite Aid Pharmacy (see p373) is open 24 hours a day. Finding changing tables in public toilets is less easy, but no one objects if a counter is used. Best bets are the facilities in libraries, hotels, and department stores. Most hotels will arrange babysitters; try Baby Sitters' Guild or Pinch Sitters.

To find out more about the range of current activities for children, get a copy of the free quarterly calendar of events, available from the New York Convention and Visitors Bureau (see p368). Weekly listings can be found in New York magazine or Time Out New York.

NEW YORK ADVENTURES

The city can seem like a giant amusement park for youngsters. Elevators whisk you sky-high for bird's-eye views from atop the world's highest buildings. You can set sail on the classic Circle Line tour around Manhattan; the sailboat Pioneer (see p84), or charter your own paddle-wheeler from the marina at E. 23rd St; or the free round-trip on the Staten Island Ferry (see p76). The Roosevelt Island Tram (see p181) is a Swiss cable car offering an airborne ride over the East River. Central Park (see pp204-9) is a source of rides of every kind – from the old-fashioned charm of the carousel to real horseback and ponycart rides. Children who prefer a faster pace can join the skateboarders and in-line skaters who cruise around the traffic-free park every weekend.

Cooling off in a playground in Central Park

MUSEUMS

While many of New York's museums appeal to all ages, some are designed just for the young. High on the list are the Children's Museum of Art (see p107), where kids can paint and sculpt, and the Children's Museum of Manhattan (see p219), a multimedia world in which children produce their own videos and newscasts.

Further afield are the Staten Island Children's Museum, where a huge climb-through anthill is one of the favorite items, and the Brooklyn Children's Museum (see p247). The Intrepid Sea-Air-Space Museum (see p149) is a real aircraft carrier. Finally, don't miss the dinosaur display at the American Museum of Natural History (see pp216-17).

OUTDOOR FUN

In summer, all of New York comes out to play. Central Park is a child's wonderland, from skating rinks to boating lakes, bicycle paths to miniature golf. The park offers free entertainment – such as guided walks by park rangers on Saturdays, toy sailboat races and summer storytelling. The Central Park Wildlife Center and the Tisch Children's Zoo are favorites.

Children of all ages will be fascinated by the Bronx Zoo/Wildlife Conservation Park which is home to over 500 species (see pp244–5).

Coney Island (see p249) is just a subway ride away. Winter brings the chance to skate at Rockefeller Center (see p144) or in Central Park on a rink fringed with views of skyscrapers.

INDOOR FUN

New York children's theater is of a quality and variety matching that for adults. Some favorite companies are the Paper Bag Players and Theaterworks USA, whose shows sell out fast; get schedules and reserve seats early.

The Swedish Marionette Theater in Central Park has shows at 10:30am and noon Tuesdays through Fridays, and Saturdays until 1pm.

The New York City Ballet's annual Christmas production of The Nutcracker at Lincoln Center (see p212) opens at the same time that the Big Apple Circus sets up its tent nearby. Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus is in action at Madison Square Garden (see p135) each spring.

Opportunities for youngsters to work off energy in winter are many, from indoor skating rinks to mini-golf and bowling alleys at Chelsea Piers. Kids can create video games, movies, and music for free at Sony Wonder Technology Lab.

Centerpiece clock at toy store

SHOPPING

There will be no complaints about shopping trips if they include the huge F.A.O. Schwarz or Toys 'R' Us for a vast range of wonderful toys and other items. For more information on other toy stores see New York Originals on pages 322–4. Youngsters are welcomed for storytelling sessions at Books of Wonder.

EATING OUT

Hamburger-and-pasta joint Ottomanelli's Café is very popular with children, and even adults find it hard to finish their huge burgers. The colorful S'Mac, where the specialty is creamy macaroni and cheese, is also a hit with youngsters. The lively Hard Rock Café is also popular, and most children enjoy the foods sold around Chinatown and Little Italy. Drop into the Chinatown Ice Cream Factory for some strange and wonderful flavors. For a quick hot snack, try pizza-by-the-slice or pretzels and hot dogs from street vendors.

GETTING TO NEW YORK 378-383
GETTING AROUND NEW YORK 384-393

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

New York is one of the most diverse and exciting cities in the world. The fast pace of Manhattan may seem daunting at first, but there are many services to help tourists, and you will find the city is safe and easy to explore. Midtown streets are straight and mostly laid out in an easy-to-follow grid pattern. Buses and subway trains (see pp388–91) are reliable and cheap; there are plenty of cash machines (see p374), and money can be easily exchanged at banks and hotels. The wide range of prices offered by the many hotels (see pp280–91), restaurants (see pp296–311), and entertainment venues (see pp340–65) in the city means that your New York trip can be both fun and affordable.

Skaters at an ice rink in Central Park

WHEN TO GO

September and October are the prize months in New York, offering warm days, cool nights, and colorful leaves in the city parks. Late spring is also appealing, when the city is less crowded and humid. Summers can be unpleasantly hot, but there are attractions such as outdoor concerts, plays, and sporting events to keep visitors busy. Christmas in the city is wonderful, although you will have to share your experience with hundreds of other tourists. Weather-wise, any season can be unpredictable; always pack layers and be prepared for changes.

VISAS AND PASSPORTS

All visitors to the United States require passports valid for at least six months after the dates of travel. Citizens of Great Britain, Australia, New Zealand, and 32 other countries, including most EU countries, do not need visas if they are staying in the US for 90 days or less. However, they must apply and pay for entry online via the Electronic System for Travel Authorization (ESTA). The ESTA is valid for up to two years and can be used for multiple entries into the US (<https://esta.cbp.dhs.gov/>).

Canadians must show their passports when entering the US by air, and a passport or an enhanced driver's license proving citizenship when arriving by land or sea.

Those requiring a visa should apply in person at the nearest US embassy or consulate in their own country. It is vital to begin the process early, allowing sufficient time for processing the application. Some services will expedite the process for a fee. Visit <http://travel.state.gov> for more details.

CUSTOMS INFORMATION

Customs allowances per person when you enter the US are 200 cigarettes, 100 cigars, or 4.4 lb (2 kg) of tobacco; no more than 2 pints (1 liter) of alcohol; and gifts worth no more than $100. Many foods, including fruits and vegetables, are prohibited from entering the United States. Baked items, candy, chocolate, and cured cheese are exceptions, as are canned goods (other than those containing meat or poultry products) if being imported for personal use.

Upon arrival at one of New York's airports, follow signs stating "other than American passports" to immigration counters, where your passport will be stamped. Next, reclaim your bags from the appropriate area and proceed to a customs officer, who will examine the customs declaration that you should have received and filled in on your flight.

TOURIST INFORMATION

Advice on any aspect of life in New York City is available from the New York Convention & Visitors Bureau, known as NYC & Co. Its 24-hour touch-tone phone service (see p371) offers help outside office hours. New York City has another free phone and Internet service, 311, which provides government information and non-emergency general assistance. Calls are answered by a team 24 hours a day, with a translation service.

New York tourist information office

SMOKING AND ETIQUETTE

It is illegal to smoke in any public place or building in New York, including restaurants, and this law is taken very seriously.

When boarding buses, New Yorkers generally form a line rather than pushing to enter. Subway boarders are not so polite at rush hours, but do stand aside to let passengers exit before rushing in. Turning off cell phones in theaters, cinemas and museums is expected. Casual wear is accepted in many places in New York City, but some establishments may require formal dress, check when you make a reservation.

ADMISSION PRICES

New York can be expensive for visitors, though you can often find a way to avoid high charges. Museum prices can run from $12 to $20, but some galleries, such as the Metropolitan Museum, call their charge a "suggested donation," leaving it to the visitor to decide what to pay. On Friday evenings, the Museum of Modern Art, Whitney Museum, Folk Art Museum, and Guggenheim Museum are open late and are free or have a "pay what you wish" policy. The Jewish Museum is free all day Saturday, while the Brooklyn Museum offers free art and entertainment on the first Saturday of the month (5–11pm). Consult local listings for museums of interest to you. The New York Pass and CityPass (see p370), offer discounted entry to some 50 attractions.

OPENING HOURS

Business hours are generally from 9am to 5pm, with no lunchtime closing. Many midtown stores stay open until 7pm to accommodate people in full-time jobs, and they may close even later on Thursdays, at 8:30 or 9pm. Most stores are also open from noon to 6pm on Sundays.

Typical banking hours run from 9am to 6pm, Monday to Friday; some banks also open on Saturdays from 9am to 3pm. ATM machines are available 24 hours for credit and debit card cash withdrawals (see p374).

Closing days vary for the major museums, as do the evenings they are open late, although most tend to be closed on a Monday. The Museum of Modern Art is closed on Tuesdays however, while the Guggenheim closes on Thursdays. Phone ahead of your visit, or check the website, before planning your itinerary.

New York's traffic rush hours extend roughly from 8 to 10am and 4:30 to 6:30pm, Monday to Friday. During these times, every form of public transportation will be crowded, as will pedestrian streets.

PUBLIC CONVENIENCES

New York City does not provide public bathrooms. City information centers, department stores, large bookstores (Barnes & Noble, Borders), and big restaurant chains (Starbucks, McDonald's) offer free restrooms, as do most hotels. Bathrooms are also available in train and bus stations, but these are not always the most pleasant options.

The entrance to the Guggenheim Museum (see pp188–9)

TAXES AND TIPPING

Sales tax in New York is 8.875%, and it is added to all purchases (including meals), except for clothing under $100. Tipping is an integral part of New York life: taxi drivers expect 10–15%; cocktail waiters 15%; hotel room service 10% (when not added to the bill); coat check $1; hotel maids $1 or $2 per day after the first day; hotel bellhops about $1 per bag; hairstylists 15–20%, and barbers 10–20%. Waiters generally receive 15–20% of the bill, not including tax. A quick way to calculate restaurant tips is simply to double the tax, adding up to about 18%.

The New York Pass and CityPass

Many stores have late opening hours to accommodate workers

City bus with access ramp lowered for a disabled passenger

TRAVELERS WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

All city buses have ramps for easy access. Subways, however, are a challenge for the disabled, as most stations are accessed via steps from the street. Only the busiest stops and stations, such as Grand Central and Penn stations and the Port Authority Bus Terminal, have elevators. A list of accessible stations is available on the Metropolitan Transit Authority website (www.mta.info).

Most hotels, restaurants, and attractions are equipped for disabled visitors, but do check in advance. It is also wise to ask about accessibility to the restrooms.

Some museums offer tours for deaf, blind, or disabled visitors, and all Broadway theaters have devices for the hearing-impaired. The Official Accessibility Guide, available free from the Mayor's Office for People with Disabilities, is a great resource, as is Access for All, published by Hospital Audiences. Both detail disabled access at public places such as museums, landmarks, theaters, and stadiums.

SENIOR TRAVELERS

Seniors are welcomed in New York, and they are eligible for many offers. They travel half-fare on all subways and buses and get discounted prices at museums, movie theaters, and many sightseeing attractions. City buses can lower the entry steps to make it easier for older passengers to board.

GAY AND LESBIAN TRAVELERS

New York has a large gay and lesbian population. Gay Pride Week in June brings celebrants from around the world for parties and a big parade, the annual Halloween parade in Greenwich Village has a large gay following. The Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual & Transgender Community Center is a good first stop for general information. Christopher Street in Greenwich Village is the epicenter of New York's gay scene. Eighth Avenue around Chelsea is an increasingly popular neighborhood, and Park Slope in Brooklyn is a hotspot for the lesbian community. Next (www.nextmagazine.com) is a free weekly publication that can be found in these areas. The monthly GO Magazine (www.gomag.com) covers the lesbian scene, and both Time Out New York (see p377) and the New York Magazine website (www.nymag.com) have gay and lesbian listings for venues.

STUDENT TRAVELERS

Many museums and theaters in New York offer discounted admission for students. To receive this, however, you will need to show proof of your student status. An International Student Identity Card (ISIC) can be purchased quite cheaply, provided you have the right credentials, from STA Travel, which has two branches in New York. At the same time, ask for a copy of the ISIC Student Handbook, which lists places and services that offer discounts to cardholders, including selected accommodations, various museums, tours, theaters, attractions, nightclubs, and restaurants.

Although it is very difficult to obtain permission to work in the US, students are eligible to work as part of exchange programs or as interns. Again, STA Travel can provide you with further details.

Note that the minimum age for drinking in New York is 21, and patrons may be asked for proof of age.

TRAVELING ON A BUDGET

There are many ways to take advantage of the best of New York while on a budget. The TKTs booth (see p341), near Times Square, offers half-price admission to same-day Broadway shows, while pre-theater prix-fixe meals save on dining. The David Rubenstein Atrium, across from the Lincoln Center (see p214), offers discount tickets for same-day performances, in addition to a free concert in the Atrium itself on Thursdays at 8:30pm. The New York Philharmonic invites visitors to rehearsals for just $16, and the Juilliard School (see p214) also presents free concerts. In summer, free Shakespeare plays and music by the Philharmonic and the Metropolitan Opera are performed in Central Park. Many TV shows produced in the city are free if you request tickets in advance. The New York CityPass, while not cheap, is good value for those who plan to do a lot of sightseeing. It offers free entry to over 50 attractions, from museums to the Empire State Building and river cruises. It also offers a 15% discount on one- or two-day NBC studio tours.

TIME

New York is on Eastern Standard Time from early November to mid-March.

Eastern Daylight Time moves the American clock forward 1 hour the rest of the year.

Add 5 hours for the time in London, 8 hours for Moscow, 14 hours for Tokyo, and 16 hours for Sydney.

ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES

All American electric current flows at a standardized 110 to 120 volts AC (alternating current). You will need to bring an adapter plug and a voltage converter that fits standard US electrical outlets. US plugs have two flat prongs.

Most New York hotels provide wall-mounted electric hair dryers in bathrooms. In addition, some hotels have wall plugs capable of powering both 110- and 220-volt electric shavers, but little else – not even radios. It can, in fact, be dangerous to connect anything more powerful.

Few New York hotel rooms provide coffee-makers; however, most have radios and clocks, and a large number have iPod docking stations. If you require an iron and ironing board but they are not in the room, ask room service.

Bear in mind that 1 US pint (0.5 liter) is a smaller measure than 1 UK pint (0.6 liter).

RESPONSIBLE TOURISM

New York is increasingly aware of “green issues.” Proper recycling bins, with separate areas for paper and plastic, are widely available. Most hotels encourage guests to be ecologically aware and not request fresh towels every day. Shoppers tend to carry reusable cloth shopping bags, which are sold in almost every department store and supermarket. Most markets carry organic foods, and the city's many neighborhood Greenmarkets are popular sources of locally grown produce. The Greenmarket at Union Square (Mon, Wed, Fri, and Sat) is one of the best. Opening times vary.

You can contribute to these green efforts by patronizing restaurants that use locally grown produce. 5 Points and Gramercy Tavern are two popular restaurants that have been given the Slow Food NYC seal of approval.

Personal Security and Health

Police badge

New York is one of the US's safest large cities. There is a good level of security in midtown, the transportation system, and at airports, and the city's police force is very much in evidence around Manhattan. As in any major metropolis, there are places where travelers would be foolish to venture after dark alone, such as city parks and quiet streets. But if you keep your wits about you and stick to the following guidelines, you should enjoy a trouble-free and pleasant visit to New York City.

New York City police officers patrolling the streets

POLICE

The New York Police Department has around-the-clock foot, horse, bike, and car patrols. These are concentrated in specific areas at critical times – for instance, the Theater District after show times. There is also a police presence on the subways and buses, and this is reflected in the dramatic drop in crime statistics.

LOST AND STOLEN PROPERTY

There is no city-wide lost-and-found service, but the Metropolitan Transit Authority (MTA) (see p391) has a lost-and-found department for city buses and subways, and the Taxi Commission (see p387) will help passengers who have left their belongings in a cab. The lost-and-found rooms at Grand Central and Penn stations are well run, with helpful staff. If you don't know who to contact, phone 311 for guidance.

In the event of loss or theft of valuables, report all missing items to the police, or Crime Victims Hot Line and make sure you get a copy of the police report for your insurance claim. It is wise to keep the receipts of expensive items as proof of possession.

If your passport is stolen, report the theft immediately to your consulate (see p371). Lost or stolen credit cards should also be reported promptly so that your account can be blocked. American Express (see p375) has offices in the city where new cards can be processed quickly, and other card companies can often provide replacements. It is always a good idea to separate your credit and debit cards so that if a wallet is lost, you have a backup card.

WHAT TO BE AWARE OF

Manhattan has become quite a safe place to roam, but pickpockets do operate and common sense still rules, as in any big city. Be alert, and walk as if you know where you're going. Avoid eye contact and confrontations with down-and-outs. If someone asks you for money, be careful and do not be drawn into conversation.

It is better to avoid deserted locations late at night. Even if there is no actual danger, empty streets may make you feel uneasy. Neighborhoods such as parts of the Lower East Side, Chinatown, or midtown west of Broadway bustle through dinner hours but feel empty after 10pm or so. The Financial District (except for the World Financial Center) is deserted after business hours, and even the very trendy TriBeCa and SoHo areas are empty late at night. Subways stay crowded until around 11pm but may not be advisable later. If you can't find or afford a taxi, try to travel with a group and keep to the main streets.

Parks are not recommended after dark, unless there is a concert or other event. If you want to go for a jog, ask your hotel concierge for a map of safe routes. In crowds, take precautions to avoid being pickpocketed.

When walking in the street, keep your wallet in an inconspicuous place, never in a back pocket, and have your MetroCard or change handy for bus fares – it's best not to have to dig into your purse or wallet while standing in line. Never stop to count your money on the street, and be Directory box). If your travel medical insurance is in order, you won't have to worry about costs, but remember that national insurance in other countries is not valid in the US.

If the situation is not urgent, ask your hotel to call a doctor or dentist to visit you in your room or to recommend one. You can find one yourself through the NY Hotel Urgent Medical Services or NYU Dental Care. The Beth Israel Medical Center has an excellent walk-in clinic, DOCS. For more general advice and information, call Travelers' Aid, a national organization geared to helping travelers. Note that the cost of prescriptions may be higher than in your home country.

aware of strangers watching at bank ATMs. Defeat purse snatchers by carrying your bag with the clasp facing toward you and the shoulder strap across your body.

Wise travelers always leave valuable jewelry at home or stored at the hotel. Do not allow anyone except hotel and airport personnel to carry your luggage or parcels, and stow your valuables and camera in a locked suitcase or a closet safe when you leave your hotel room.

IN AN EMERGENCY

If you should be involved in a medical emergency, proceed at once to a hospital emergency room. Dial 411, and ask the operator to give you the number of the nearest hospital. Should you need an ambulance, telephone 911, and one will be sent. If you have time and a choice, avoid the crowded city-owned hospitals listed in the Blue Pages telephone book. Instead, choose one of the many private hospitals listed in the Yellow Pages (see also

HOSPITALS AND PHARMACIES

If you must visit a doctor or hospital, be prepared to undergo an expensive experience: some of the city's practitioners and facilities are among the best in the country, and they charge accordingly. The best way to protect yourself against large medical costs is with comprehensive travel insurance. Note that you will have to pay and then reclaim the money. Hospitals accept most credit cards, but physicians and dentists are more likely to want payment in cash. The city has many 24-hour pharmacies, some will often fill a prescription while you wait.

TRAVEL INSURANCE

Travel insurance is highly recommended, mainly because of the high cost of medical care. There are many types and levels of coverage, with prices dependent on the length of your trip and the number of people covered.

Among the most important features are emergency medical and dental care, trip cancellation, baggage and travel-document loss, and accidental dismemberment or death. Many policies will cover all of these items.

Banks and Currency

New York is the nation's banking center. It has a wealth of local, regional, and major national banks, plus some retail branches of the leading foreign banks. HSBC and Barclays are well represented in the city; the banks of Australia, Canada, Ireland, Scotland, Japan, and Turkey also all have offices or branches. Exchange bureaus are located in airports, the major train stations, and in various locations throughout the city, though you will probably get a better rate of exchange from a bank.

BANKING

New York banks are generally open weekdays from 9am to 6pm. Several banks open earlier or close later in the evening to suit commuters' needs, and many now stay open on Saturday 9am–3pm. Tellers are available to help customers inside the bank, or you can use a cash withdrawal machine (ATM). At most banks, all the tellers will cash traveler's checks and exchange your currency.

ATM (machine) for cash withdrawal

ATMS

Automated teller machines (ATMs) can be found in most bank lobbies. They enable you to obtain American currency 24 hours a day from your bank account using a debit card. ATMs usually issue American banknotes in $20 denominations. Among the many advantages of ATMs is the swift, secure exchange of your money at the wholesale rate used between the banks. Bank fees are generally much lower than those charged by money-exchange offices. Before you leave for New York, ask your bank which New York City banks and ATM systems will accept your bank card and what fees and commissions will be charged on each transaction. Most ATMs are part of either the Cirrus or the Plus network. They accept various US bank cards, MasterCard and Visa cards, and certain others.

On a more cautionary note, always be aware of your surroundings when using an ATM. Make sure you shield your PIN, and, if available, use a machine located within the bank. Be careful when removing your card at the machine.

CREDIT CARDS AND TRAVELER'S CHECKS

MasterCard, American Express, Visa, and Diners Club cards are widely accepted throughout the United States, regardless of which company or bank issued them. These cards can also be used for purchases, as well as to obtain cash advances from ATMs. Before you travel, it is a good idea to phone your card provider and inform them that you will be abroad, or you may find that your card gets blocked when you start using it in New York. Charges may be higher when using a credit card – check with your bank before you leave.

In the United States, you can use a credit card to pay for most purchases in store and online. Major expenses such as tours, travel packages, and expensive rentals are all best paid for by credit card. Using a card also means that you can avoid carrying large sums of money around with you.

American Express charge cards

Traveler's checks issued in dollars by American Express and Thomas Cook are widely accepted without a fee by most department stores, shops, hotels, and restaurants in New York. Traveler's checks in other currencies, including sterling, are not universally accepted. Major hotels may have cashiers that will exchange traveler's checks, but more often than not you will need to visit a bank. Exchange rates for foreign currency are printed daily in The New York Times and Wall Street Journal and may be posted in bank windows. American Express checks may also be exchanged without a fee at American Express offices.

Among the most well-established foreign-exchange brokers are Travelex Currency Services Inc. and American Express. All brokers are listed in the Yellow Pages under "Foreign Money Brokers." When you use the services of a foreign-exchange broker, you will have to pay a fee, which will vary widely from one place to the next. There will also be a commission.

Banking company Chase has over 400 locations where you can exchange money, and there are scores of hole-in-the-wall check-cashing shops in Manhattan. TD Bank also has branches throughout Manhattan, many of which are open on Saturdays and until 8pm on weekdays. Both Chase and TD Bank are listed in the Yellow Pages.

WIRING MONEY

In emergencies, you can arrange to have money wired to you through MoneyGram or Western Union, though there is a considerable fee.

Coins

American coins come in 1-, 5-, 10-, 25- and 50-cent pieces. A gold-tone $1 coin is also in circulation, as are the State quarters, which feature a historical scene on one side. One-dollar coins are not popular, however, and you will receive them mainly as change from vending machines. Each value of coin has a popular name: 25-cent pieces are called quarters, 10-cent pieces are called dimes, 5-cent pieces are called nickels, and 1-cent pieces are called pennies.

Bank Notes (Bills)

The units of currency in the United States are dollars and cents. There are 100 cents to a dollar. Bank notes come in the following denominations: $1, $5, $10, $20, $50, and $100. Security features include subtle color cues and improved color-shifting ink in the lower right hand corner of the face of each note.

Communications and Media

Sign for public payphones

The wide use of cellular telephones and the Internet has changed the communications picture in most of the world, and New York is no exception. Though some public telephones may still be found in hotel lobbies, they have disappeared from city streets. Visitors will find the city is well supplied with mobile telephone stores, Internet cafés, and public access to computers and Wi-Fi. The variety of readily available local newspapers and magazines makes it easy for visitors to keep up with world news as well as the latest dining and entertainment options in the city. New York 1, the all-local TV outlet found at Channel 1, is a quick source for up-to-the minute weather reports and news.

Using a laptop in the New York Public Library

CELL PHONES

Visitors who wish to use their own cell phone in the US will need a tri-band phone and a SIM card that has been set up for "roaming." Ask your cell-phone provider if you are unsure whether your phone is ready to be used abroad.

Note that you are charged for the calls you receive as well as for the calls you make. However, some cell-phone companies offer "bundles" of calls to save costs while you are away.

If you are going to be in New York for some time, buy a sim card for better rates on local calls or rent a telephone. Cellhire offers rentals for $19 per week, with charges of 20 cents per minute and overseas rates from 49 cents.

PUBLIC TELEPHONES

If you can find a public telephone, you will see that the setup is standard. Few use credit cards, but you can buy prepaid phone cards from newsstands for long-distance calls; they can be bought in $5, $10, and $25 amounts. The cards offer good savings compared to standard rates. Most phones are coin-operated and take 5-, 10-, and 25-cent coins. In some locations the pay phone may belong to an independent company. The independents are often more expensive and less reliable. Regulations require each public pay phone to post information about charges, toll-free numbers, and how to make calls using other carriers. Look for the Verizon logo on the box to be sure the phone will reach all numbers at standard rates. Within all boroughs of New York City, the standard charge, around 25 cents, buys 3 minutes' talking time. International rates for calls dialed from a land line vary.

US Postal Service logo

REACHING THE RIGHT NUMBER

- Five area codes are used in New York: 212, 646, 917 (cell phones) are for Manhattan; the other boroughs use 718 and 347. Calls to 800, 888, 866, and 877 numbers are free.
- To call any number in Manhattan, even in your same area code, you must first dial 1.
- To make an international direct call, dial 011 followed by the country code (Australia: 61; New Zealand: 64; UK: 44), then the city or area code (minus the first 0) and the local number.
- International Directory Inquiries are on 00. International operator assistance is on 01.

INTERNET

Visitors will find many ways to access the Internet in New York. The Times Square Information Center provides free use, as does the New York Public Library at its main facilities and all 85 branches. Almost all hotels offer the use of computers, but some hotel business centers can be expensive. Most hotels also have Wi-Fi, though you may be charged to use it. (In hotels' public areas, however, Wi-Fi is often complimentary.) FedEx Office Center locations around town have computer rentals at 30 cents per minute.

Rates are better at Internet cafés, which abound. Some, such as the easyInternet café, are huge; others, including Cyber Café, give more emphasis to the snacks and coffee available. Expect to pay about $6 for 30 minutes. Web2Zone offers cheap rates at quiet times.

There is free Wi-Fi at all libraries, Barnes & Noble stores, and in most city parks and plazas below 59th Street, including Bryant Park and Union Square. Cafés such as Starbucks has Wi-Fi for around 10 cents per minute.

POSTAL SERVICES

The city's main General Post Office is open 24 hours a day. Stamps can be bought here, from branch offices, and from some drugstores and newsstands. As well as at post offices, letters can be mailed at your hotel's concierge desk (which usually sells stamps too); in letter slots in office-building lobbies; and in street mailboxes. These are usually painted blue, or red, white, and blue. The mail is generally not picked up on Sundays. Post offices are shown on the Street Finder maps (see pp394-5).

All letters are sent first class. The post office also offers several special-delivery services: Express Mail service, for next-day delivery; Global Express Guaranteed, which delivers overseas in one-three days; and Express Mail International, with delivery in three-five days. Private express services such as FedEx, UPS, or DHL can be arranged through hotels. Online services are available.

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

New York has one major daily newspaper, The New York Times, and two colorful tabloids, The Daily News and The New York Post. Two free morning tabloids are also available, AM New York and Metro. Both are useful for local events and a brief rundown of the news. The best entertainment listings are found in the Friday and Sunday editions of The New York Times and in weekly magazines such as Time Out New York, New York, and The New Yorker. The Village Voice, a free weekly newspaper, also has entertainment listings, geared largely to a younger audience.

The free weekly Where, distributed through hotel concierges, lists major museums, their opening hours, locations, and any exhibitions. Art Now/ New York Gallery Guide, also free, is released in art galleries monthly. It lists current exhibitions and has maps showing where they are located.

You can buy foreign newspapers at Universal News & Magazine, Hotalings, Barnes & Noble bookstores, airports, and some hotels.

TELEVISION AND RADIO

TV program schedules for each day can be found in the local dailies. The Daily News on Sunday has a useful pull-out section of the next week's programs. The choice of TV stations in New York is vast. Major networks include CBS on channel 2, NBC on channel 4, ABC on channel 7, and WNYW (Fox) on channel 5. PBS offers cultural and educational fare on channel 13. Cable TV offers everything from the Arts & Entertainment Network (channel 46) to sports on ESPN (channel 28) and public-access programs.

AM radio stations include WCBS News (880AM), WINS News (1010AM), and WFAN Sports (660AM). Some FM stations are WWFS—contemporary (102.7FM), WBGO—jazz (88.3FM), and WQXR—classical (105.9FM).

GETTING TO NEW YORK

A lot of global airlines run direct flights to New York. The city is also very well served by charter and domestic services. Price wars between airlines have reduced fares, and domestic flights are an affordable form of national travel. Early reservation and seat selection are good ways to ensure a more comfortable flight. New York City is also a regular docking point for many cruise ships.

Delta Airlines flight arriving in New York

The train network across the United States is not as extensive as that found in Europe, but Amtrak, the national carrier, has several comfortable and clean long-distance trains that run from New York. Interstate and long-distance buses are a cheaper way to travel and usually have air-conditioning and on-board toilets. For information on arriving in New York, see the map on pages 382-3.

Taxis heading into LaGuardia airport

14 days in advance and are valid for a stay of 7-30 days. The least expensive international air fares to and from Europe are found from November to March, excluding holiday periods. Budget airlines flying within the US – such as Southwest

Airlines, JetBlue, and AirTran – often have better fares than the major airlines.

Booking online can help save money. Websites such as www.lastminute.com, www.priceline.com, and www.expedia.com have flight-and-hotel deals that tend to be cheaper than booking the two separately. Search engines like www.kayak.com are useful for comparing the costs of all the different airlines and online travel stores.

ON ARRIVAL

Be prepared for extra security precautions when you visit the United States. Make sure that you leave ample time for checking in – ask your flight carrier what time you need to arrive at the airport for your flight. They can also give you details about any restrictions on hand luggage.

The airline you are flying with will give you an I-94 form to fill out before you land. It asks simple questions such as your name, birth date, country of citizenship, passport number, and current address.

Have this form and your passport ready for the Customs and Border Protection officer who will inspect your documents (get in the line that says “non-US passports”). The officer may ask you questions such as why you are visiting and how long and where you will stay. Your fingerprints will be taken, and you will be photographed with a digital camera. The I-94 is in two parts; one part will be for you to keep. This part must be returned on departing.

AirTrain en route to JFK

JOHN F. KENNEDY AIRPORT (JFK)

Every year, some 41 million passengers pass through New York's main airport, JFK. It serves over 100 airlines in nine terminals and is the main New York entry for international flights. JFK lies 15 miles (24 km) southeast of Manhattan, in the borough of Queens, about 45-60 minutes from midtown. However, airport traffic is often heavy, so the trip can take longer.

Larger carriers like American Airlines, British Airways, Delta, and United Airlines

AIR TRAVEL

New York can be reached by air direct from most major cities. The flight from London takes about 8 hours, however, there are no direct flights from Australia or New Zealand. Instead, the airlines fly to the West Coast or Asia, which takes around 10-14 hours, land, refuel, and then continue on to New York.

Allow extra time at the airport, for both arriving and departing, and for the careful passport and security checks in the United States.

Among the main airline carriers to New York are Air Canada, Delta, British Airways, American Airlines, Virgin Atlantic, and United Airlines. All international flights arrive at either JFK Newark airports.

TICKETS AND FARES

APEX (Advance Purchase Excursion) tickets for the scheduled airlines are usually the cheapest return fares apart from package tours. They must be bought at least have their own arrivals and departure terminals, which they may share with some of their partners. Terminal 4 is the main arrival area for over 50 international airlines, and Terminal 1 serves many foreign carriers, including Air China, Air France, Alitalia, and Japan Airlines.

Foreign-exchange offices and ATMs are located in all terminals, and each terminal has a service desk to help book hotels and answer any transportation questions. Courtesy phones are also provided by car-rental companies.

Dispatchers regulate the line for the yellow taxis waiting outside each terminal. There is a flat fee of $45, plus tolls and tip. New York Airport Service buses go to Grand Central, Penn Station, and the Port Authority; tickets start at $13. The Express Shuttle Service ($14) stops at many midtown hotels. SuperShuttle runs shared vans that will go to specific addresses for about $23 for the first guest and $10 for each additional passenger. Advance reservations are needed for the trip back to the airport. Air-Link has a similar service for $19. Round-trip fares are cheaper.

A light-rail system, AirTrain JFK connects to the A train at Howard Beach, and to the E, J, and Z trains and Long Island Rail Road (for Penn Station) at Jamaica. The AirTrain costs $5, the subway $2.25.

If you are feeling rich Helicopter Flight Services offer a 10-minute helicopter ride for $850 to East 34th Street.

NEWARK LIBERTY AIRPORT (EWR)

Newark, New York's second-largest international airport, is about 16 miles (26 km) southwest of Manhattan, in New Jersey.

Most international flights into Newark arrive at Terminal B. Baggage trolleys are free for passengers arriving on international flights. Foreign-exchange desks and ATMs can also be found in the terminal, but there is no left-luggage room.

The Ground Transportation Services desk can help arrange private onward travel. Courtesy phones are provided by limousine and car-rental firms. Many of these have a free shuttle service to their rental offices.

As with JFK, there are taxi stands located outside most arrival areas, and uniformed taxi dispatchers will help you hail a cab. The taxi ride into Manhattan takes about 40–60 minutes and will cost you up to $50, plus tolls and tip.

Olympia Airport Express buses to Manhattan stop at the Port Authority Bus Terminal, 42nd Street near 5th Avenue, and Grand Central Station. The journey time is no longer than a cab, but the fare is only $15. Round-trip fares are cheaper.

AirTrain Newark links to NJ Transit and Amtrak trains; it then continues on to Penn station. The 25-minute journey costs about $12, as does the NJ Transit, while Amtrak costs $32.

Hotels can be booked on arrival through courtesy phones in all terminals at Newark that link directly to various Manhattan hotels. Knowledgeable staff are on hand to help you make the best choice.

LAGUARDIA AIRPORT (LGA)

LaGuardia is a busy airport serving domestic carriers from all over the US. It lies 8 miles (13 km) east of Manhattan, on the north side of Long Island, in Queens. The trip to Manhattan averages 30 minutes.

Upon arrival, you can rent luggage trolleys from the baggage-claim area next to the luggage carousels. Sky-caps, people who check in your luggage for you, are on hand to assist you. Baggage can also be left in the Tele-Trip business center on the departure level. A foreign-currency exchange desk and ATMs are located in the Central Terminal. A free bus service runs between each of the terminals and parking areas from 5am to 2am.

Buses and taxis into the city and its suburbs depart from the front of the terminal buildings. If you are approached by other taxis offering you transportation, do not accept. These drivers have no insurance, and you will be overcharged. A taxi fare starts at $3 and increases by $0.40 every fifth of a mile. A single bus ride is $2.25. The cost of tolls, plus a peak-hour surcharge of $1 (4–8pm) weekdays or a night surcharge of 50 cents (8pm–6am), will be added to the taxi fare shown on the meter.

ARRIVING BY SEA

Cruising past the Statue of Liberty into New York Harbor is a thrilling experience. The city's three cruise ports are popular stopping-off points for many major cruise lines sailing to the Caribbean, Bermuda, Canada, and Europe.

The main New York Cruise Terminal, on 12th Avenue between 46th and 54th streets, serves Carnival, Silversea, Holland America, MSC, and NCL lines. Taxis are available at the vehicle entrance, located at 55th Street and 12th Avenue. The M57 and M31 crosstown buses provide convenient, inexpensive access to midtown, and it is only a 15–20-minute walk to the heart of Manhattan.

The state-of-the-art Brooklyn Cruise Terminal was opened in 2006 in Red Hook. It is the port of choice for Cunard and Princess Cruise lines and the home port of the QM2, which sails to New York from Southampton several times a year. You can also take the QM2 from New York to Australia and New Zealand. Taxis from the terminal can drop you in Manhattan or at convenient subway stops into the city.

Royal Caribbean and Celebrity cruise ships use the Cape Liberty Cruise Port in Bayonne, on the New Jersey side of New York Harbor. It is 7 miles (11 km) from New York City and about 15 minutes from Newark International Airport. The Hudson–Bergen Light Rail station at 34th Street, an easy taxi ride just 2 miles (3 km) from the port, connects to PATH trains, New Jersey Transit at Hoboken, and ferry services to and from New York. Visit www.njtransit.com for more information.

Passengers arriving by ship who remain in New York receive the same I-94 form as air passengers and go through the same procedures; see p378 for more details.

ARRIVING BY LONG-DISTANCE BUS

Long-distance buses from all over the US arrive at the Port Authority Bus Terminal, on Eighth Avenue, between 40th and 42nd streets. The location is convenient to midtown, and many hotels are within walking distance. Taxis can be found on the Eighth Avenue side of the terminal; the A and C subway stops are located on the lower floors in the terminal; and a one-block-long tunnel leads to Times Square station and other subway connections. The M42 crosstown bus stops at the corner of Eighth Avenue and 42nd Street, and uptown buses are available on Eighth Avenue. Buses from the Port Authority connect with all three airports, and the terminal also serves many busy commuter bus lines to New Jersey. With over 6,000 buses arriving and departing daily, the atmosphere can be hectic at rush hour.

Buses can be an economical way to see the US. Greyhound Lines offer a Discovery Pass priced at $199 for seven days ($299 for 15 days). No advance reservations are necessary. Buses are comfortable and air-conditioned, and they have reclining seats, ample legroom, and usually bathrooms. Greyhound NeOn buses, available from New York to Boston, Toronto, and Montreal, are equipped with free Wi-Fi and plug-ins for devices such as iPods. The trip to Boston takes 4½ hours, to Montreal 8½ hours, and to Toronto 11½ hours.

Greyhound has a ticket office in the Port Authority Bus Terminal, but it is cheaper to buy tickets over the phone or online. APEX tickets save 25% off the regular price on shorter trips purchased at least 14 days in advance, and 10% (or more) for tickets bought seven days in advance. “Friends and family” rates offer savings of 50% for up to three companions with the purchase of a regular adult fare. Seniors, students, and military personnel have special discounts.

ARRIVING BY TRAIN

Amtrak, the US passenger rail service, connects New York with the rest of the country and Canada. Amtrak trains use Penn Station as their New York headquarters (see p392). The Metro-North train service and the daily commuter service from upstate New York and Connecticut arrive at Grand Central Terminal (see p392).

Amtrak has its own section in Penn Station for ticket sales and separate waiting rooms for coach and high-speed passengers. Tickets can be purchased in advance by phone or online and picked up at the station at the ticket window or at automated kiosks. If you pick up tickets at the window, a photo ID will be requested.

Taxis are available from the station, and buses run downtown on Seventh Avenue and uptown on Eighth. The Lexington and Broadway lines also serve the station.

Amtrak trains are very comfortable, with ample legroom and snack-bar services, as well as dining cars on longer routes. Sleeping compartments are available on long-distance trips, some with showers and toilets ensuite.

Amtrak's USA Rail Pass allows unlimited travel for 15 days for $389; children pay half-fare. The most used train service from New York is Amtrak's Northeast Corridor route between Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, DC. Most of the trains on this route have unreserved seating, but high-speed Acela Express trains offer an hourly service with reserved first-class and business-class seating and electrical outlets for laptops.

ARRIVING BY CAR

Manhattan is an island, so it must be approached via bridge or tunnel. From the south, the entries are from New Jersey via the Holland Tunnel to the Financial District, or the Lincoln Tunnel to midtown. A more scenic approach is the George Washington Bridge, which arrives at 178th Street to the north of the city.

The Robert Kennedy Bridge (formerly known as the Triborough Bridge) has branches from two boroughs connecting to Manhattan. The bridge from Queens, east of the city, is used by those arriving at LaGuardia or JFK airports. The second branch, from the Bronx, approaches Manhattan from the north. The two bridges merge into one and offer a striking view of the city skyline on the approach.

Those driving in from Queens can avoid tolls by taking the 59th Street Bridge. Queens is also connected to Manhattan by the Midtown Tunnel, which feeds into the Long Island Expressway.

The most famous approach to New York is via the Brooklyn Bridge, with its vistas of the skyscrapers of the downtown Financial District. Brooklyn is also connected to the city by the Brooklyn Battery tunnel.

BRIDGE AND TUNNEL TOLLS

Most of the major access routes in and out of New York City levy tolls. Tolls for the tunnels to and from Long Island and Brooklyn cost $5.50 each way, as does the Robert Kennedy Bridge. The Lincoln Tunnel, Holland Tunnel, and the George Washington Bridge between New York and New Jersey are free for those leaving New York, but they charge $8 coming into the city. Tolls must be paid in cash. Avoid E-Z Pass lanes, marked with purple signs, which are only for holders of pre-paid passes.

Arriving in New York

This map shows the links between New York's three airports and the center of Manhattan. It also illustrates rail connections linking New York to the rest of the United States and Canada. Travel information, including times for bus, rail, and helicopter services, and connections to subway lines, is listed in each information box. The passenger ship terminal, New York's key point of arrival for the flood of post-war immigrants, is located on 55th Street. Port Authority Bus Terminal, on the West Side, provides services across the city.

GETTING AROUND NEW YORK

With more than 6,000 miles (9,650 km) of streets, getting around New York might seem a problem, but the city is actually a network of small neighborhoods that are connected via subway or bus. Each one is also quite walkable or easy to get around on public transportation. Midtown Manhattan, for example, with many of the major sights, runs 25 blocks from 34th to 59th streets, and if you should tire, you can hop on a bus that goes down Fifth

Signs on a street corner

Avenue or up Sixth. Subways are the quickest way to get around. Service is frequent, they are inexpensive and reliable, and they make stops throughout Manhattan. The city's bus service is also reliable and convenient but can be slow in traffic. Weekly or unlimited MetroCards, valid for all public transportation, provide excellent value. Taxis are the best option for door-to-door transit, but they can be expensive if you are held up by traffic.

GREEN TRAVEL

New York is working hard to be more energy-efficient for those traveling around town. Back in the 1990s, the city was a pioneer in launching an alternative-fuel vehicle program aimed at cutting emissions and making its bus fleet one of the cleanest in the world. It was the first in the US to switch all diesel buses to ultra-low sulfur fuel. Cleaner-burning engines have been installed, and buses have been equipped with filters, cutting emissions by as much as 95 per cent. The MTA currently has around 2,000 hybrid-electric buses in operation. Numerous bicycle lanes have also been added around town for those brave enough to use them amid the heavy city traffic.

When it comes to leaving the city, the US train system is quite limited, but New York has some of the better connections, especially Amtrak's East Coast Metroliner and Acela trains (see pp381 and 393).

FINDING YOUR WAY AROUND NEW YORK

Manhattan's avenues run north to south; New Yorkers say "uptown" and "downtown." Streets (except in the older areas) run east to west, and are referred to as "crosstown." Fifth Avenue is the divider between East and West street addresses.

Most streets in midtown are one-way. In general, traffic is eastbound on even-numbered streets and westbound on odd-numbered streets. Avenues also tend to be one-way. First, Third (above 23rd Street), Madison, Avenue of the Americas (Sixth), Eighth, and Tenth avenues are northbound, while Second,

FINDING AN ADDRESS

A useful formula has been devised to help pinpoint any avenue address. By dropping the last digit of the address, dividing the remainder by 2, then adding or subtracting the key number given here, you will discover the nearest cross street. For example: to find No. 826 Lexington Avenue, you have to drop the 6; divide 82 by 2, which is 41; then add 22 (the key number). Therefore, the nearest cross street is 63rd Street.

Walking through Chelsea

Lexington, Fifth, Seventh, and Ninth avenues and Broadway below 59th Street are south-bound. There is two-way traffic on York, Park, 11th, and 12th avenues and on Broadway above 60th Street.

The grid of streets is rectangular rather than square, so crosstown blocks are longer than north-south avenue blocks. To gauge distances, 20 north-south city blocks equal about 1 mile (1.6 km); it takes only about six to ten crosstown (east-west) blocks to make up that distance.

Some streets have more than one name – for example, Avenue of the Americas is better known as Sixth Avenue. Park Avenue is called Park Avenue South below 34th Street and Fourth Avenue below 14th Street. The maps in this guide give the names most often used.

PLANNING YOUR JOURNEY

Buses and subways are busiest during the rush hours: 8–10am and 4:30–6:30pm, Monday to Friday. Throughout these periods, it may be easier to face the crowds on foot than attempt any journey by bus, taxi, or subway. At other times of day and during certain holiday periods (see p53), the traffic is often much lighter, and you should reach your destination quickly.

There are, of course, a few exceptions. When the president or other political celebrities visit, security measures can cause major disruption to the traffic. The area around Seventh Avenue, south of 42nd Street, is likely to be busy during the day with the truck and handcart traffic of New York's garment industry.

Avoid Fifth Avenue on parade days, which often take place in spring and fall. On these days, and during the New York Marathon, it is difficult to get across town as bus services are disrupted. If such events are scheduled during your visit, plan to see other areas of the city on that day. Subway traffic will not be affected, though trains may be more crowded than usual.

DRIVING IN NEW YORK

Heavy traffic, lack of parking, and expensive rental cars make driving in New York a frustrating experience. If you decide to drive, you must wear a seat belt by law. Driving is on the right, and the speed limit is usually 30 mph (48 kmh) in midtown. Most streets are one-way, and there are traffic lights at almost every corner. Unlike the rest of New York State, you can never turn right on a red light unless there is a sign indicating otherwise.

To rent a car, you must be at least 25 years old. You will need a valid driver's license (foreign visitors need an International Driver's License), a passport, and a credit card.

CAR INSURANCE

Unless you are adequately covered by your own insurance policy, you should take out damage and liability protection when renting a car. Check with your insurance company before you travel.

Your car-rental agency will be able to provide you with a policy if necessary.

PARKING

Parking in Manhattan is costly and difficult. You can use parking garages, or see if your hotel includes overnight parking, but both options are very expensive.

The busiest streets in midtown do not allow parking. Other streets may have curbside meters for short-term (20–60 minutes) parking. Yellow street and curb markings mean no parking.

“Alternate-side” parking applies on most of the city's side streets. Cars may usually be left all day and night, but they must be moved to the other side of the street before 8am the next day. For specific information, call 311.

Car-rental logos

PENALTIES

If you receive a parking ticket, you have seven days to pay the fine or to appeal. If you have any queries about your ticket, call the Parking Violations Bureau.

If you cannot find your car, call 311 to find out if it has been towed. The Traffic Department Tow Pound is open 24 hours a day, Monday to Saturday. Redeeming your car will cost $185 towing fee, $70 execution fee, and $10–15 per day storage fee. Traveler's checks, certified checks, money orders, and cash are accepted. If you have rented the car, the contract must be produced, and only the authorized driver may redeem the vehicle.

Traffic passing through Times Square at night

Taxis driving through an intersection in SoHo

TAXIS

There are more than 12,000 yellow cabs in New York, easily identified by their color, the distinctive logo on the door, and the light on top. A taxi can carry up to four passengers, with a single fare covering everyone on board. All taxis are metered and can issue printed receipts. Taxis can be hailed anywhere on the street, but taxi stands are scarce. The best places to find waiting cabs are outside Penn and Grand Central stations. Cabs indicate that they are available by turning on the top light. This goes off if the cab is occupied or if the side lights indicate "off duty."

Licensed taxis undergo periodic inspections and are insured against accidents and losses. Non-licensed, or "gypsy," cabs are unlikely to have these safeguards. They will have no meters and charge what they please.

Once the cab driver accepts a passenger, the meter starts ticking at $2.50, plus a state tax surcharge of 50 cents. The fare increases 40 cents after each additional one-fifth of a mile (292 yards/267 meters) or every 60 seconds of waiting time. There is an additional 50-cent charge from 8pm to 6am, and a $1 extra charge from 4 to 8pm on weekdays. It is customary to tip the driver about 15%. Taxi drivers will accept credit cards.

Make sure your driver understands where you want to go before you start your ride. If you have a map of the area, mark the locations you want. A driver should not ask you your destination until after you've sat down, and by law, they must take you anywhere in the city. They must follow your requests not to smoke or talk on a cell phone, to open or close a window, and to pick up or drop off passengers as you direct. Each yellow cab displays the driver's photograph and registered number next to the meter. If drivers don't comply with your requests, you can report them to the Taxi & Limousine Commission.

As an expensive alternative, radio-dispatched sedans can be hired for $40 per hour with a two hour minimum.

WALKING

All intersections have lamp-posts with clearly marked street names; most have electric traffic signals. The lights show red (stop) and green (go) for vehicles, and "Walk/Don't Walk" signals for pedestrians. Crossing while the "Don't Walk" sign is showing is not recommended, nor is crossing mid-block, referred to in the US as "jay-walking."

Vehicles in the US drive on the right, and there are no markings on the road for pedestrians indicating the direction of traffic. It is best to look both ways before you cross, and beware of cars, trucks, and taxis turning the corner behind you as you start to cross the street.

Midtown has several small parks and plazas where visitors can rest. In the Broadway area you can have a rest with a Times Square view on the high tier of steps behind the TKTS booth (Broadway and 47th St). Some of the surrounding blocks are traffic-free and furnished with chairs. The traffic islands around the Lincoln Center also offer seating (as on p370).

FERRIES

The Circle Line runs several ferry services a day to the Statue of Liberty and Ellis Island from Battery Park, at the southern tip of Manhattan. The 24-hour Staten Island Ferry, also from Battery Park, travels the channel and offers splendid views of lower Manhattan, the Statue of Liberty, Ellis Island, the bridges, and Governors Island. The round trip is the best bargain in New York; it's free.

WATER TAXIS

The New York Water Taxi is mainly a commuter service, but it also offers various tours and a weekend hop-on/hop-off sightseeing boat (mid-Apr–mid-Oct). The route is around New York Harbor, between West 44th and East 34th streets, with stops including Chelsea Pier, World Financial Center, Battery Park, South Street Seaport, the Brooklyn riverfront, and Long Island City. In summer, water taxis provide a service to a couple of man-made beaches in Long Island City and on Governors Island.

Signs in midtown

A water taxi crossing New York Harbor

GUIDED TOURS

Whichever way you choose to see New York – with the help of a knowledgeable guide, a photographer, a pre-recorded walk, or an exciting trip in a helicopter, boat, or horse-drawn carriage – organized sightseeing trips can save a lot of time and effort. Walking tours give in-depth background information about specific neighborhoods and the city's history and architecture that you might not get on your own. The Municipal Art Society is renowned for its knowledgeable guides. Fascinating behind-the-scenes tours are available for the New York Public Library, Metropolitan Opera, and Radio City Music Hall. Bus tours are also a great way to see the city, as you can hop on/hop off as you please (see also p391).

CYCLING

Hoping to cut down on auto traffic, the city is making a real effort to create bike paths, which cover over 90 miles (145 km) in Manhattan. It takes courage to travel beside heavy traffic on busy midtown streets; however, trails along the East River and far west side are pleasant and very popular, as are the many roads for bikers in Central Park, where auto traffic is banned on weekends. Visit www.nycbike.com for maps of bike routes. You can rent bikes at Columbus Circle or the Loeb Boathouse in Central Park (see p362).

Traveling by Subway

New York subway logo

(unless you are riding at rush hour) more comfortable. Since the 1980s, a portion of all station-improvement funds has gone to the Arts for Transit project, with some notable results. Keep an eye out for the mosaics, sculptures, and art that decorate many stations.

The subway is the quickest and most reliable way to travel in the city. The vast system extends over 233 route miles (375 km) and has 468 stations. Most routes operate 24 hours a day throughout the year. In the past few years, the subway system has been upgraded, and the trains are now air-conditioned, well lit, safer, and at all stations, while faster express trains make fewer stops. Express lines have different letters or numbers than local ones; both types of stops are distinguished on every subway map.

SUBWAY STATIONS

Many subway entrances are marked by illuminated spheres: green where the station booth is manned around the clock, red where there is restricted entry. Others are marked simply by a sign bearing the name of the station and the numbers or letters of the routes passing through it. Although the subway system runs 24 hours a day, not all routes operate at all times. The basic service is between 6am and midnight. The most crowded periods are the weekday rush hours (6–8:30am and 4:30–6:30pm); it is best to avoid these times if you can. If not, during

Passengers exiting from South Ferry Subway Station

TICKETS AND FARES

A MetroCard must be purchased in order to enter the subway. The fare is $2.25 no matter how far you travel. A 1-day FunPass ($8.25) offers all-day unlimited travel to visitors. Other money-saving tickets are the 7-day ($27) or 14-day ($51.50) Unlimited Ride MetroCard. If you purchase a Pay-Per-Ride MetroCard and put $8 or more on it, you will receive a 15 per cent bonus credit. MetroCards, which can also be used on buses (see pp390–91), are sold at newsstands, drugstores, and other locations around the city, as well as at all subway stations, where you can pay with cash. The machines take cash and debit and credit cards. One transfer per ride is allowed between the subway and bus; it must be used within 2 hours.

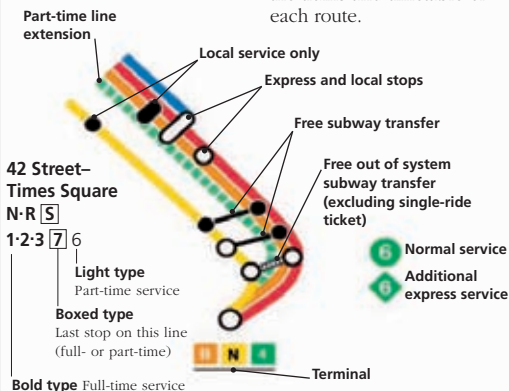

USING THE SUBWAY

Enter the subway by swiping your MetroCard at the turnstiles; the card is not needed to exit. Look for signs for uptown (northbound) and downtown (southbound) trains. Note that there are two types of trains: local trains stop

READING THE SUBWAY MAP

Each route is identified on the subway map (see inside back cover) by color, by the names of the stations at each end of the line, and by a letter or number. Local and express stops are also identified. The letters and numbers below the station names indicate which routes serve that particular station. A letter or number in heavy type indicates that trains on that route stop there between 6am and midnight; letters in lighter type mean that the route is served by a part-time service only; a boxed letter or number shows the last stop on the line. Express trains are indicated on subway maps with a white (rather than solid) circle. The maps posted in all the subway stations have a comprehensive guide that explains the trains and timetable of each route.

TRAVELING BY SUBWAY

Subways run north-south up and down the city; the N, R, E, F, V, and W trains run east-west from Midtown to Queens. See "Subway Lines" for the most useful routes.

1 There is a map of the subway system on the back inside cover of this book. Large-scale maps are also positioned in prominent areas in every station. Maps are also available at www.mta.info and at subway stations.

3 Use MetroCard to pass through the turnstile onto the platform.

6 On every platform, you will find a line map, while on each train there is a system map next to the door on both sides of the car. Newer trains have electronic route maps for that line that light up overhead. Stops are announced on the public address system, and you will see station names at each platform. The doors are operated by the conductor.

2 Buy a MetroCard from a station subway booth or MetroCard vending machine. The machines accept most credit and debit cards and bills up to $50, but no pennies. Vending machines can also be used to refill MetroCards.

4 Follow the directions for the train you want. For safety, stay in sight of the booth as you wait for your train; at night, stay in one of the yellow off-hours waiting areas.

5 Each train displays its route number or letter in the appropriate color and the names of the terminal stations.

7 After leaving the train, look for signs giving directions to the exit. If you need to change trains, just follow the signs to the connecting platforms.

crowded times the first and last cars are usually less busy.

The subway is generally quite safe, but visitors may feel more secure riding during the day and until around 10pm, when there are many other passengers around. If you feel unsure, stand in the "Off-Hours Waiting Area" on the platforms. Avoid traveling alone late at night, but if you must ride when traffic is light, use the central cars. In an emergency, contact either the station agent in the station booth or a member of the train crew, who are located in the first car and in the middle of the train.

SUBWAY LINES

Subways run north-south up and down the city on Lexington Avenue, Sixth Avenue, Seventh Avenue/Broadway, and Eighth Avenue. The N, R, E, F, V, and 7 trains to Queens run east-west in Manhattan. A shuttle train connects Grand Central, East 42nd Street to Times Square, West 42nd Street. Trains mostly run along one avenue, but some stations, such as Times Square, Union Square, and Columbus Circle, are convenient transfer points where several lines converge.

Each subway line has a distinct color, while the routes on each line are identified either by letter or number. For example, the Lexington Avenue line is green and the #6 is a local train, while #4 and #5 run express. The Eighth Avenue line is blue, and the A train is the express, while C and E are local trains. First and last stops are posted on track signs and on each car. Large system maps are posted in all stations. Free individual subway maps are usually available from booth attendants.

Some lines are especially useful for visitors. The Lexington Line is the only one serving the East Side and its many museums. The #6 train stops near the Guggenheim, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the Frick Collection. The red #1 Broadway/Seventh Avenue line on the West Side takes you to Lincoln Center, MOMA, Times Square,

Number 6 train at Brooklyn Bridge-City Hall station

Greenwich Village, SoHo, the Financial District, and South Ferry, where you can catch a ferry to the Statue of Liberty.

Note that track work on weekends can cause changes to the schedule. When you enter, ask the booth attendant about changes that may affect your journey.

Traveling by Bus

Traveling by bus is a good way to take in many of New York's sights. The city's 4,000-plus blue-and-white buses cover more than 200 routes in the five boroughs. Many run 24 hours a day, every day. The buses are modern, clean, air-conditioned, and energy-efficient. They are also quite safe and tend not to get crowded, except during rush hours. Smoking and eating are forbidden on all public buses, and only service animals (guide dogs) are allowed on board.

TICKETS AND FARES

You can pay the $2.25 fare on a bus using a MetroCard (see p388) or exact change in coins. Bus drivers cannot make change, and fare boxes do not accept dollar bills, half-dollars, or pennies. You can buy a MetroCard at any subway station booth or machine and at many other outlets around the city.

If you need to take more than one bus to reach your destination, you are eligible for a free transfer. If you pay your fare with a MetroCard, transfers to bus or subway are automatically electronically placed on the card. If you use cash, ask the driver for a transfer ticket when you pay. Transfers are good for 2 hours.

Senior citizens with proof of age and the disabled pay half-fare. All buses can "kneel," lowering the steps to help elderly people to board (see p370). They are also accessible to wheelchairs via a lift with ramp, at the rear or front depending on the bus design.

BUS STOPS

Buses will stop only at designated bus stops. They follow north-south routes on the major avenues, stopping every two or three blocks. Crosstown buses run east-west and usually stop at every block, with the exception of Park Avenue, which is skipped by some lines. Many routes run a 24-hour daily service.

Bus stops are marked by red, white, and blue signs and yellow paint along the curb. Most also have bus shelters; newer shelters provide seating and helpful signs giving the location. A route map and schedule is posted at each stop. Buses use letters to indicate the boroughs they serve: M for Manhattan, B for Brooklyn, Bx for the Bronx, and Q for Queens. Bus stops often serve several routes, so check the maps at the stop for your route, then look for that route number posted on the lighted strip above the windshield on the front of the bus.

Some buses will be marked "Limited," indicated by a flashing sign in the route number space and by a card in the front window. These buses are faster since they make fewer stops, but be sure the stops they do make are near your destination. Limited buses do stop at streets connecting to crosstown buses.

Free city bus maps are often available on board; ask the driver for a copy.

Bus stop in midtown Manhattan

USING BUSES

Most buses run every 3-5 minutes during the morning and evening rush hours, and every 7-15 minutes from noon to 4:30pm and from 7 to 10pm. Bad traffic or adverse weather conditions can cause delays. Service is reduced on weekends and holidays.

Enter the bus at the front door. If you are unsure of your route, ask the driver if they will be stopping at your destination or close to it. The majority of New York's bus drivers are helpful and will call out your stop if you ask when you board. Put your MetroCard in the slot or drop the correct coins in the fare box, then look for a seat.

To request a stop when traveling on the bus, press the yellow vertical call strip between the windows. Some newer buses also have stop buttons on center poles. A "Stop Requested" sign near the driver will then light up. If the bus is crowded, it is wise to start moving toward the exit door when you are a few blocks from your stop.

Leave through the double door located toward the rear of the bus. The driver will activate the door release as soon as the bus has stopped, and a green light will go on above the door. You then push the yellow stripe on the door, and the doors will open automatically; they will stay open long enough for everyone to leave. If the strip does not work properly, just push the door and then hold it open for the passenger behind you as you leave.

The M86 crosstown bus traveling through Central Park

NIGHT BUSES

Most lines run 24 hours, but be sure to check the schedule posted at your stop. After 10pm, many buses run every 20 minutes or so. From midnight to 6am, expect to wait 30–60 minutes for a bus.

BUS TOURS

One of the most popular ways to see the sights is aboard a hop-on/hop-off bus tour that allows you to get off wherever you like, stay as long as you want, and catch another bus when you are ready. Gray Line (see p387) is the best-known company offering these tours aboard double-decker buses. Routes include a Downtown Loop, Uptown Loop, Brooklyn Loop, and Night/Holiday Lights Tour (not hop-on/hop-off). Buy a 48- or 72-hour pass, and you can see a great deal of New York. While you ride, narration is available in several languages through rented headsets.

MTA TRIP PLANNER

The MTA website has a useful feature known as the Trip Planner, which provides a map and directions by bus and/or subway between any two points in New York. Enter your starting and ending points, the time you expect to travel, preferred mode of transportation, how far you are willing to walk, and whether you need accessible vehicles, and you will get clear directions. Visit www.travel.mtanyct.info to access the planner; www.hopstop.com offers a similar service.

SIGHTSEEING BUSES

For a pleasant and cheap alternative to a tour bus, hop on a city bus and see New York with the New Yorkers. Recommended bus routes include routes 1 and 2, which run down Fifth Avenue alongside Central Park. Route 1 then continues south to SoHo and Greenwich Village, while route 2 returns north on Madison Avenue via the Empire State Building and the Rockefeller Center. From Broad Street, head north on route 15 to visit Brooklyn Bridge and the United Nations, or take routes 6 and 7 along Eighth Avenue for Times Square and Madison Square Garden.

Day Trips from New York

For a change of pace and some beautiful scenery, it is worth taking a day trip from New York City to the surrounding areas. Public transport links are excellent, and there are many convenient and easy ways to travel to nearby destinations (see pp232–55).

Departure board at Penn Station

MAIN TRAIN STATIONS

New York has two main train stations, serving commuters as well as long-distance travelers.

Grand Central Terminal (see pp156–7), on Park Avenue at 42nd Street, is the main terminal for Metro-North Railroad trains (Hudson, New Haven, and Harlem lines), which run north and east of New York and serve southwest Connecticut and Westchester, Dutchess, and Putnam counties (see pp380–81). From Grand Central, you can travel by train to the Bronx Zoo (see pp244–5), the New York Botanical Garden, President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Hyde Park estate, and other mansions and towns overlooking the Hudson River.

The 4, 5, and 6 trains on the Lexington line and number 7 on the Flushing line serve Grand Central subway station. A shuttle train service links Grand Central to Times Square. Many bus lines stop near Grand Central, and taxis can usually be found in front of the station on 42nd Street or across from the side entrance on Vanderbilt Avenue at 43rd Street.

Penn Station, between Seventh and Eighth avenues and from 31st to 33rd streets, is a somewhat cramped underground terminal that was rebuilt in 1963 underneath the Madison Square Garden complex (see p135). Long Island Rail Road (LIRR) and New Jersey Transit commuter trains, plus Amtrak trains from Canada and other parts of the US, terminate at this station. There are no luggage trolleys, but redcap porters will help.

Taxis can be found at street level. Buses run downtown on Seventh Avenue and uptown on Eighth Avenue. The Eighth Avenue subway lines A, C, and E run on the Eighth Avenue side of the station; the Broadway lines 1, 2, and 3 run on the Seventh Avenue side of the station.

COMMUTER RAIL LINES

Metro-North lines to upstate New York and Connecticut depart from Grand Central Station. These are mostly commuter trains but may be useful for trips to New Haven or Hartford, Connecticut, or to destinations along the Hudson River.

Long Island Rail Road and New Jersey Transit commuter rail lines depart from Penn Station. They can take you to New Jersey or Long Island beach resorts, or to the casinos at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

PATH trains are used mainly by commuters. They operate around the clock between

New Jersey stations and Penn Station. From Penn Station they make stops at Christopher Street; the World Trade Center; Ninth, 14th, 23rd, and 33rd streets; and Avenue of the Americas.

TICKETS AND FARES

Train tickets are based on a one-way fare; a return fare is twice the single fare. Peak commuter fares are for trains arriving in New York weekdays between 6 and 10am or departing between 4 and 8pm. All other hours and weekend days are considered off peak and cost much less.

The Long Island Rail Road has many One-Day Getaway packages, with discounted rail fares and admissions to places such as the Hamptons, vineyards, historic sites, and New York Mets baseball games.

Metro-North and LIRR cars are all one class and have no reserved seating, while Amtrak trains offer both services. The conductor will ask to see your ticket after the train has left the station.

Long Island Rail Road train

BOOKING TICKETS

Ticketing offices at all train stations will accept most credit and debit cards, as well as cash. When there are lines for tickets, you can use the automated machines, which accept credit cards. Tickets can be purchased online by credit card. Savings are offered for those who buy in advance. Note that there is a surcharge for buying tickets after you board the train.

Yale University in New Haven, Connecticut

DAY TRIPS BY TRAIN

Many destinations near New York are well worth a visit and easily reached by train. Below is a list of some recommended sights; for further details, call NYC & Co. (see p371).

Stony Brook is a peaceful North Shore village and the entrance to the Three Villages historic district. The journey takes 2 hours from Penn Station on a LIRR train.

The chic bars, clubs, and boutiques of the Hamptons are just under 3 hours from New York. Take a LIRR train from Penn Station.

Westbury House, John Phipps's 1906 re-creation of a Charles II mansion with English formal gardens, is 40 minutes from Manhattan. Take a LIRR train from Penn Station to Old Westbury.

Kykuit, the Rockefeller mansion; Washington Irving's home "Sunnyside;" and Jay Gould's mansion, "Lyndhurst," are all in Tarrytown. Take a Metro-North train from Grand Central Station, then a taxi. The journey should take 40–50 minutes.

Two hours outside of Manhattan is Hyde Park, where you can visit Franklin D. Roosevelt's Springwood estate and the Vanderbilt mansion. Take a Metro-North train from Grand Central to Poughkeepsie, then a bus.

Cold Spring, New York, is an antiquing mecca on the Hudson. The scenic riverside journey takes 70 minutes from Grand Central on the Metro-North Hudson Line.

New Haven, Connecticut, is home to the world-famous Yale University. The journey takes 1 hour and 45 minutes, again on a Metro-North train from Grand Central.

DAY TRIPS BY BUS

Many appealing destinations can be reached by bus from the Port Authority Bus Terminal (see p381) on Eighth Avenue.

Short Line Bus offers popular day-out packages to the US Military Academy at West Point, Franklin D. Roosevelt's home at Hyde Park, and the Storm King Art Center. Also on offer is shopping at the Woodbury Common Outlet Center. Rates include round-trip bus fare and any admissions.

New Jersey Transit buses go to the casinos at Atlantic City; they also have stops on the Jersey shore. Trans-Bridge Lines has services to charming antiquing meccas such as Lambertville, New Jersey, and New Hope, Pennsylvania.

A number of budget bus lines have inexpensive fares to Philadelphia, a historic city with many attractions that is only 100 miles (160 km) from New York. Among the most reliable and comfortable of these are Megabus and Bolt Bus, both of which offer free Wi-Fi on board. For those with time to travel farther afield, these companies also serve Boston and Washington, DC.

Bus tickets are on sale in the main concourse of the Port Authority. The long-distance bus companies Greyhound (see p381), Peter Pan, and Adirondacks and the Short Line, Trans-Bridge, and New Jersey Transit commuter lines have their own ticket counters. No reservations are taken on any of these bus lines.

DAY TRIPS BY SUBWAY OR CITY BUS

The outer boroughs, served by New York's subway and bus system, are also worth exploring. Head for the Coney Island beaches (see p249) and the New York Aquarium on the D train, or take the M4 bus to the last stop and visit The Cloisters (see pp236–9), high above the Hudson River.

New York's fascinating ethnic neighborhoods are also easily reached by subway. At Grand Central Station, take the 7 Queens train to 74th Street in Jackson Heights, where you'll find a slice of India. Nearby, 37th Avenue is home to New York's Latin-American community. If you stay on the 7 train to the end of the line, you can explore a Chinatown that some say rivals the one in Manhattan, as well as the city's largest Korean neighbourhood.

In Brooklyn, the D train will take you to the Russian enclave of Brighton Beach, while the G train will let you sample a bit of Poland in Greenpoint. Take the N train to go Greek or Egyptian in Astoria, or the M train to the city's largest Orthodox Jewish community in Borough Park.
