HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide helps you get the most from a visit to Portugal, providing expert recommendations as well as detailed practical information. The opening chapter Introducing Portugal maps the country and sets it in its historical and cultural context. Each of the nine regional chapters, plus Lisbon, describe important sights, using maps, pictures and illustrations. Features cover topics ranging from architecture and festivals to beaches and food. Hotel and restaurant recommendations can be found in Travellers' Needs. The Survival Guide contains practical information on everything from transport to personal safety.

LISBON

Lisbon has been divided into five main sightseeing areas. Each of these areas has its own chapter, which opens with a list of the major sights described. All sights are numbered and plotted on an Area Map. Information on the sights is easy to locate as the order in which they appear in the chapter follows the numerical order used on the map.

Sights at a Glance

lists the chapter's sights by category: Churches, Museums and Galleries, Historic Buildings, Parks and Gardens.

2 Street-by-Street Map

This gives a bird's-eye view of the heart of each of the sightseeing areas.

1 Area Map

For easy reference, the sights covered in the chapter are numbered and located on a map. The sights are also marked on the Street Finder maps on pages 128–41.

A locator map shows clearly where the area is in relation to other parts of the city.

All the pages relating to Lisbon have red thumb tabs.

Stars indicate the sights that no visitor should miss.

3 Detailed Information
All the sights in Lisbon are described individually. Addresses and practical information are provided. The key to the symbols used in the information block is shown on the back flap.

THE LISBON COAST

Within an hour's drive southwest of Lisbon you can reach the lovely Atlantic coast, the wooded slopes of Sintra or countryside dotted with villas and rural palaces. South of Lisbon you can enjoy the sandy beaches and fishing piers along the coast or explore the legends of the Algarve and visit the interior.

Explore the region's rich heritage in the beautiful, wooded hills and valleys of Sintra, or enjoy the views of the Atlantic coast from the sandy beaches and fishing piers along the coast. In the Algarve, visit the interior and explore the legends of the Algarve and visit the interior.

1 Introduction

A general account of the landscape, history and character of each region is given here, explaining both how the area has developed over the centuries and what attractions it has to offer the visitor today.

PORTUGAL REGION BY REGION

Outside Lisbon, the rest of Portugal has been divided into nine regions, each of which has a separate chapter. The most interesting cities, towns and sights to visit are located and numbered on a Regional Map.

2 Regional Map

This shows the main road network and gives an illustrated overview of the region. All entries are numbered and there are also useful tips on getting around the region.

Each area of Portugal can be identified quickly by its colour coding, shown on the inside front cover.

3 Detailed Information

All the important towns and other places to visit are described individually. They are listed in order, following the numbering given on the Regional Map. Within each entry, there is further detailed information on important buildings and other sights.

1174 Alfama
This is the oldest district of Lisbon, built on a steep, rocky hillside overlooking the Tagus river. It is characterized by narrow, winding streets and traditional buildings with tiled roofs.

1175 Castelo de São Jorge
A large Moorish castle on a hill overlooking the city of Lisbon. It is a UNESCO World Heritage site and offers panoramic views of the city and the river.

1176 Belem Tower
A 16th-century tower built to mark the spot where Vasco da Gama sailed for India. It is a UNESCO World Heritage site and is a symbol of Portugal's maritime history.

1177 Jerónimos Monastery
A masterpiece of Manueline architecture, a style that combines Gothic and Renaissance elements with local motifs. It is a UNESCO World Heritage site.

1178 National Tile Museum
A museum dedicated to the art of Portuguese tiles, known as azulejos. It features a collection of tiles from various periods and styles.

1179 Belem
A district in Lisbon, known for its historical and cultural heritage. It features several important buildings and landmarks, including the Jerónimos Monastery and the National Tile Museum.

1180 Belém Tower
A 16th-century tower built to mark the spot where Vasco da Gama sailed for India. It is a UNESCO World Heritage site and is a symbol of Portugal's maritime history.

1181 Belém Lighthouse
A lighthouse located in Belem, Lisbon. It is one of the tallest lighthouses in the world and is a UNESCO World Heritage site.

1182 SEVERA

Palacio Nacional de Sevilha
The largest palace in the world, built for King John III of Portugal. It is a masterpiece of Manueline architecture and is a UNESCO World Heritage site.

1183 Palacio de Braganca
A 16th-century palace in Sevilha, Portugal. It is a UNESCO World Heritage site and is known for its Manueline architecture.

DISCOVERING PORTUGAL

Portugal offers a remarkable variety of landscapes and experiences for all visitors. Within a short distance, the scenery can change completely. It is possible to go from high northern pastures to rolling southern plains in a day and visitors will never be more than a couple of hours from sun-soaked shores on the mainland. Madeira and the Azores are subtropical paradise islands for lovers of nature and tranquility. These pages give a quick taste of each region, with descriptions, highlights and pointers on how to get the most out of a visit.

LISBON

- Historic bairros
- Magnificent Manueline architecture in Belém
- Traditional fado music
- Electric nightlife

Portugal's capital offers an irresistible combination of ancient and modern sights. Lisbon extends from Belém with its exuberant 16th-century Manueline architecture, including the grand Mosteiro dos Jeronimos (see pp104–5), to the 21st-century urban landscape of Parque das Nações (see p119). In between, the city extends across a series of hills characterized by different districts. The historic bairros of Castelo and Alfama have been peopled since Phoenician times. Traditional fado music originated in the backstreet cafés here and can still be enjoyed in several venues (see pp64–5). The Bairro Alto district is home to Lisbon's thriving nightlife scene.

THE LISBON COAST

- Cosmopolitan coast resorts
- Fairy-tale Sintra
- Ostentatious palace at Mafra
- Caparica beaches and Arrábida scenery

Estoril (see pp164–5) and Cascais (see p164), on the coastline to the west of Lisbon, were built as resorts for the wealthy a century ago and are now dynamic suburban centres that retain a relaxed holiday atmosphere. Beyond Cascais, the dramatic rocky coastal landscape of Europe's westernmost point climbs to the fairytale woods of the Sintra hills and to the historic town of Sintra (see pp158–63), with architectural highlights such as the Palácio da Pena (see pp162–3). Further north lies the enormous 18th-century Palácio da Mafra (see p154), testament to the ostentation of King João V and containing an exquisite, rococo-style library. The beach at Ericeira (see p155) is good for surfing, as are several other beaches along the Sintra coast. The best beaches, though, are on the other side of the Tejo. The Caparica coast is one long beach that stretches from Costa da Caparica (see p165) to the hills of the Serra da Arrábida (see p169), passing some of Portugal's most beautiful coastal scenery as well as some of the most protected beaches on the west coast.

ESTREMADURA AND RIBATEJO

- Magnificent medieval monasteries
- Sweeping Lezíria plain
- Enchanting Óbidos
- Fine Ribatejan wines

Estremadura is a rolling landscape of vineyards, wheatfields, woodland, industries and busy small towns. Scattered across this region are some of the country's greatest monuments: the abbey at Batalha (see pp184–5); the sumptuous Cistercian church at Alcobaca (see pp180–81); and Tomar's Convento de Cristo (see pp188–9), a feast of architectural styles. Along the coast, the fishing ports of Peniche (see p176) and Nazaré (see p182) are full of character. The 14th-century walled town of Óbidos (see pp176–7) is incredibly picturesque. Across the Tejo, the Lezíria plain of the Ribatejo region includes some of Europe's most important wetlands for migrating birds. This landscape is well suited to breeding horses, and the town of Golegã (see p192) hosts a colourful horse fair in November. Portuguese bullfighting has deep roots in Ribatejo; Vila Franca de Xira (see p194) and Santarém (see p193) are both good places to catch a bullfight. The wines of both regions are very good, particularly the Ribatejan reds from around Almeirim.

THE BEIRAS

- Remote fortified towns
- Soaring granite peaks of the Serra da Estrela
- Charming Coimbra

The three Beiras – Litoral, Alta and Baixa – offer a wide variety of rewarding sights and activities. The interior, Beira Baixa, is famous for the historic, now idyllic villages of Monsanto (see pp222–3) and Idanha-a-Velha (see p223). Remote fortified towns such as Almeida (see p217) and Sabugal (see p222) are also worth seeking out. In Beira Alta, the granite peaks of Serra da Estrela (see pp220–21), the country's highest mountain range is great walking country and winter snowfall attracts skiers to the slopes. Coimbra (see pp204–9), Portugal's third largest city, is full of charm and historic importance. North of Coimbra is the forest reserve of Buçaco (see pp212–13). Partly planted by monks, it is now the site of a unique hotel, the Palace Hotel Bussaco (see p391), housed in an extravagant palace built for Portugal's second last king. Nearby is the relaxed spa town of Luso (see p211). Also in Beira Litoral, the coastal town of Aveiro (see pp202–3) has an impressive maritime heritage which is most clearly visible in the colourful moliceiro boats that sail on its lagoon.

DOURO AND TRÁS-OS-MONTES

- Scenic Douro valley vineyards
- Historic Oporto
- Isolated Serra do Barroso
- Medieval Bragança

The Douro valley is famous as the birthplace of port and now deserves recognition for its very distinctive table wines, too. The steep river valley, particularly in the upper reaches beyond Peso da Régua (see p252), has been shaped by the cultivation of the vine, and is an area of breathtaking natural beauty. Oporto (see pp238–49), at the mouth of the Douro, is an old city of immense character. Portugal's second city boasts two of the country's foremost cultural institutions: the Serralves Museum of Modern Art and the Casa da Música concert hall. Trás-os-Montes is a remote region of extreme climates, little development, and much untamed beauty. Highlights include the wild, boulder-strewn landscapes of Serra do Barroso (see p258), the attractive spa town of Chaves (see pp258–9), the medieval outpost of the region's capital Bragança (see pp260–61), and the serene and spectacular scenery and walks of the Parque Natural de Montesinho (see p262).

Vine-clad hills, typical of the Douro valley

MINHO

- Verdant landscapes
- Remarkable Parque Nacional da Peneda-Gerês
- Splendid Baroque Bom Jesus do Monte

The Minho region is Portugal's greenest thanks to high rainfall. The name for the local wine, vinho verde (green wine), reflects this. The intensely cultivated and densely populated Minho countryside offers dramatic landscapes. To the east lies the rocky terrain of the Serra do Gerês and the spectacular scenery of the Parque Nacional da Peneda-Gerês (see pp272–3). Braga (see pp278–9) is the region's main city. Nearby is the magnificent religious sanctuary of Bom Jesus do

Endless lavender fields in the Alentejo region

Monte (see pp280–81). On the coast, Viana do Castelo (see pp276–7) is an elegant 13th-century town. The centre of Guimarães (see pp282–3) is similarly attractive, and any of the smaller towns along the Cávado, Lima and Minho rivers are worth stopping in.

ALENTEJO

- Vast, rolling plains
- Delicious wine and olives
- The elegant, ancient city of Évora

This is Portugal's biggest region, taking up most of the country south of Lisbon save for the strip of southern coastline that is the Algarve. It is also among the least densely populated, making it a region of wide open spaces. The idyllic landscape of olive groves, cork trees and wheatfields create an impression of unlimited space. The region also produces some of the country's best red wines as well as a surprising number of excellent whites which are usually very good value. Vineyards are located around Vidigueira (see p312). This tranquil landscape is irregularly dotted with picturesque medieval towns on hilltops, often clustered around a castle, such as at Marvão (see p296) and Monsaraz (see p309). The capital, Évora (see pp304–7), is a captivating walled city. The northern towns of Portalegre (see pp296–7), Castelo de Vide (see pp297), Elvas (see pp298–9), Estremoz (see pp302–3) and Vila Viçosa (see pp300–301) are also well worth a visit. Southern Alentejo is flatter and hotter than the north, but the eastern towns of Moura (see p312), Serpa (see p312) and Mértola (see p315), along the Guadiana river, offer plenty of interest. On the west side is the attractive Alentejo coastline, whose rougher seas and cooler temperatures have prevented it from developing to the extent of the Algarve. This is popular surfing territory, with small cove beaches surrounded by cliffs.

The Minho's spectacular religious sanctuary of Bom Jesus do Monte

ALGARVE

- Gorgeous beaches
- Luxury resorts
- World-class golf courses
- Picturesque port towns
- Unspoilt interior

The Algarve is perfect for holidaymakers, with a coastline of stunning beaches and temperate seas, ample sunshine throughout the year, and a gently hilly hinterland perfect for golf courses (see pp442–3). Although these ideal conditions have been over-exploited in some areas, and get overcrowded at some points during the year, there are still many places along this leisure coast that are not dominated by resorts. The short west coast, from Odeceixe to Cabo de São Vicente (see p321), is wilder and less accessible than the south coast. The south coastline has beautiful beaches at Lagos (see pp322–3), Portimão (see p324) and Albufeira (see p325). These areas are also where much of the best golf is to be found. Faro (see pp328–30), the capital, is a pleasant town and its old citadel and pedestrianized shopping streets are well worth exploring. The coastline to the east of Faro is characterised by the wide lagoon and marshes of the Parque Natural da Ria Formosa (see p331), which extend to the picturesque hamlet of Cacela Velha (see p332). The beaches beyond this protected area are long, narrow sand dunes with limited construction. Tavira (see p332), the main town in this area, is one of the most attractive in the region. The charming and secluded towns of Monchique (see pp320–21), Silves (see pp324–5) or Loulé (see pp326–7) prove that much of the interior of the Algarve retains a peaceful atmosphere and is largely unaffected and unaltered by tourism.

MADEIRA

- Breathtaking landscapes
- Sophisticated Funchal
- Levada walks
- Porto Santo's golden beach

Verdant Madeira's deeply-cleft valleys, dramatic cliffs, canyons and rust-coloured volcanic peaks are simply awe-inspiring. The island's dense vegetation seems almost miraculous when compared to the nearby dry and barren islands in this small archipelago off the west coast of Africa. Famous for the variety and vibrancy of its flora and the beauty of its gardens, Madeira's reputation as paradise is well deserved. Funchal (see pp346–9) is a busy and pretty city whose oldest parts have been untouched by tourism. Visitors with an urge for nature should rent a car, catch a bus, or simply discover the area's natural beauty on foot. Beyond Funchal and the southeast coast, Madeira is rural. The extensive network of levadas, or irrigation channels, allows walkers easy access to every part of the island. Among the most striking landscapes are those around the jagged central peaks and ravines of Pico Ruivo (see p356) and Pico do Arieiro (see p353). Here, it is possible to study the astonishing rock formations left over from the violent volcanic upheavals that led to the creation of the island. The high plateau of Paúl da Serra (see p356) and the sheer cliffs of the north coast that plunge into the sea with waterfalls that cascade for hundreds of feet are also magnificent. The long stretch of unspoilt golden sand on the neighbouring island of Porto Santo (see p359) attracts sunlovers.

A view of southern Madeira's dramatic cliffs

THE AZORES

- Volcanic lakes and springs
- Whale-watching
- Wild coastal scenery

A vast archipelago of nine islands in the mid-Atlantic, the Azores remain relatively undeveloped for tourism, particularly on the small and far-flung islands of Flores (see p373) and Corvo (see p373). The climate is similar to that on Madeira, albeit slightly wetter and cooler. This makes for misty peaks and green expanses, criss-crossed by thick hedges of hydrangea. The central group of islands – Faial (see p372), Pico (see pp370–71), São Jorge (see p369), Terceira (see pp366–7) and Graciosa (see p369) – is perhaps the most rewarding for visitors who are seeking to immerse themselves in nature. Pico is a centre for whale-watching, while Faial is a popular port of call for sailing boats crossing the Atlantic. São Jorge is famous for a cheddar-like cheese made from the milk of cows who graze its lush pastures. São Miguel (see pp364–5), the archipelago's main island, is also the biggest, most developed and most varied. It is famous for its lagoas, volcanic crater lakes that offer spectacular scenery. Santa Maria (see p366), the other island in the eastern group, has a slightly warmer climate than the others as well as sandy beaches.

Putting Portugal on the Map

Situated in the extreme southwest corner of Europe, Portugal occupies roughly one-sixth of the Iberian Peninsula with a population of just over 10 million. To the north and east, a border measuring approximately 1,300 km (800 miles) separates Portugal from its only neighbouring country, Spain, and to the south and west, 830 km (500 miles) of coastline meets the Atlantic Ocean. The Atlantic archipelagos of Madeira and the Azores are included in Portugal's territory.

The Azores

The Azores lie 1,300 km (800 miles) to the west of Lisbon in the Atlantic Ocean. Of volcanic origin, the islands are scattered over a distance of 650 km (400 miles).

Madeira

Lying 965 km (600 miles) southwest of Lisbon in the Atlantic Ocean, the Madeiran archipelago has two inhabited islands, Madeira and Porto Santo.

A PORTRAIT OF PORTUGAL

Most visitors to Portugal head for the sandy coves, rocky coastline and manicured golf links of the Algarve. But beyond the south coast resorts lies the least explored corner of Western Europe: a country of rugged landscapes, sophisticated cities, rural backwaters and sharply contrasting traditions.

Portugal appears to have no obvious geographical claim to nationhood, yet this western extremity of the Iberian Peninsula has existed within borders virtually unchanged for nearly 800 years. Its ten million people speak their own language, follow their own unique cultural traditions, and have a centuries-old history of proud independence from, and distrust of neighbouring Spain.

For a small country, the regions of Portugal are immensely varied. The rural Minho and Trás-os-Montes in the north are the most traditional – some would say backward. Over the last few decades many inhabitants of these neglected regions have been forced to emigrate in search of work.

The south of the country could not be more different. The Algarve, blessed with beautiful sandy beaches and a wonderful, warm Mediterranean climate all year round, has been transformed into a holiday playground for North Europeans.

Two great rivers, the Tagus and the Douro, rise in Spain and then flow westwards across Portugal to the Atlantic Ocean. From the wild upper reaches of the Douro valley, comes Portugal's most famous product – port wine, from steeply terraced vineyards hewn out of the mountainsides. The Tagus, by contrast, is wide and languid, often spilling out over the flat, fertile, Ribatejo flood plain where fine horses and fighting bulls graze.

At the mouths of the Tagus and Douro stand Portugal's two major cities, Lisbon and Oporto respectively. Lisbon, the capital, is a cosmopolitan metropolis with a rich cultural life and many national museums and art galleries. Oporto is a serious rival to Lisbon, especially in terms of commerce and industry. Most centres of population, however, are very much smaller: from the fishing communities on the Atlantic coast to the tiny medieval villages in the vast sun-baked plains of the Alentejo and the mountainous interior of the Beiras.

Far out in the Atlantic Ocean lie two remote archipelagos that are self-governing regions of the Portuguese state: warm, luxuriant Madeira off the coast of Morocco, and the nine rainy, green, volcano tips that make up the Azores, about one third of the way across the Atlantic between Lisbon and New York.

POLITICS AND ECONOMICS

In the final quarter of the 20th century, a new era of Portuguese history began. From the late 1920s, under the long dictatorship of António Salazar, the country was a virtual recluse in the world community. The principal concern of foreign policy was the ultimately futile defence of Portugal's African and Asian colonies. Domestic industry and commerce were dominated by a few wealthy families, in an economic framework of extreme fiscal tightness.

The Carnation Revolution of 1974 brought this era to an end. At first the re-establishment of democracy was a painful process, but since the 1980s Portugal has assumed an increasingly confident Western European demeanour. Entry into the European Community in 1986 was welcomed at all levels of society, and led to an explosion of new construction,

Barredo quarter of Oporto, Portugal's second city the like of which Portugal had never seen. Traditional exports, such as cork, resin, textiles, tinned sardines and wine, have been joined by new, heavier industries such as vehicle construction and cement manufacturing.

Grants and loans from the EU have funded the building of new roads, bridges and hospitals, and brought significant improvements in agriculture. Oporto was the European Capital of Culture in 2001 and in July 2002 the euro became Portugal's currency.

THE PORTUGUESE WAY OF LIFE

A mild-mannered and easy-going people, the Portuguese have an innate sense of politeness, a quality they also respect in others. They tend to use formal modes of address, calling new acquaintances by their Christian names, prefixed by Senhor, Senhora or Dona. In spite of this, they are gregarious folk, often to be seen eating, drinking and making merry in large groups – at a festa,

Luxury yachts in the harbour at Vilamoura in the Algarve or in a restaurant celebrating a birthday or a first communion. Except for the older sectors of the population, most Portuguese have some knowledge of English and will be eager to speak it. There is a special weakness for children who are cherished, indulged and welcomed everywhere. Visitors who bring their youngsters with them will discover an immediate point of contact with their hosts. Nevertheless, behind the smiles and the good humour, there is a deep-rooted aspect of the national psyche which the Portuguese themselves call

Collecting seaweed for fertilizer in the Ria de Aveiro lagoon

saudade, a sort of ethereal, aching melancholy that seems to yearn for something lost or unattainable.

In so far as these generalizations hold true, so too do a couple of Portuguese characteristics which can prove irritating. The first is a relaxed attitude to time: no visitor should interpret lack of punctuality as a personal slight. The second is the fact that many Portuguese men tend to discard their native courtesy completely when they are behind the wheel of a car. Reckless driving, particularly high-speed tailgating, is a national pastime.

The family is the bosom of Portuguese daily life. Although old customs are gradually changing, especially in the cities, it is quite common for three generations to live under one roof, and it is normal for both men and women to stay living in the family home until they marry. One thing that has changed dramatically is family size.

A generation ago, families of ten or more children were commonplace – especially in remote, rural areas. Nowadays, one or two children constitute an average-sized family, often looked after by a grandmother while both parents go out to work.

Catholicism is at the heart of Portuguese life, especially in the north, where you will see a crucifix or the image of a saint watching over most homes, cafés and barbers' shops. Weddings and first communion services are deeply religious occasions. Although church attendance is in decline, particularly in the cities, national devotion to Our Lady of Fátima remains steadfast, as does delight in festivals (romarias) honouring local saints, another tradition that is strongest in the north.

LANGUAGE AND CULTURE

There are few faux pas more injurious to national esteem, than to suggest that Portuguese is a mere dialect of Spanish. Great pride is taken in the language and literature. Os Lusíadas, the national epic by 16th-century poet Camões, is studied reverentially, while many Portuguese also delight in the detached, ironic portrait of themselves in the 19th-century novels of Eça de Queirós. Pride too, is taken in fado, the native musical tradition which expresses the notion of saudade. In rural areas, especially the Minho, there is still an enthusiastic following for folk dancing.

Religious procession in the village of Vidigueira in the Algarve

There are several excellent newspapers, but the country's best-selling daily is A Bola, which is devoted exclusively to sport, football being a national obsession. Bullfighting too has its adherents, although with nothing like the passion found in Spain.

The Portuguese have long been avid watchers of television and are now producing many home-grown soap operas, films and documentaries. Up until just a few years ago, virtually all of these were imported from abroad.

The country has become more forward-looking in recent years, but most aspects of heritage hark back to the Discoveries. The best-loved monuments are those built in the one uniquely Portuguese style of architecture, the Manueline, which dates from this period. Many azulejo tile paintings, another cherished tradition, also glory in Portugal's great maritime past.

When the Portuguese joined the European Community in 1986, Commission President Jacques Delors solemnly warned them that they should think of themselves as "Portuguese first, and European second". Typically, the Portuguese were too polite to laugh out loud. How could anyone have imagined that this little country was in danger of suddenly throwing overboard centuries of culture nurtured in staunch independence?

Vernacular Architecture

(see p296)

Traditionally, Portugal's rural architecture varied with climatic conditions and locally available building materials. Although light-weight bricks are now ubiquitous, many older houses still stand. There are the thick-walled granite houses of the north designed to keep out the cold and rain. The Beiras' milder climate means their houses are made of brick or limestone. In the Alentejo and the Ribatejo, the clay houses are long and low, to suit hot summers and chilly winters. The Algarve's gentler Mediterranean climate has led to houses of clay or stone.

Yellow-trimmed houses below walls of Óbidos (see pp176–7)

Chimneys are small or non-existent. Instead, smoke escapes through openings in the roof.

Roofs are constructed of slate or schist tiles, or occasionally thatch.

Village houses in the Minho (see p265) and Trás-os-Montes regions (see p235) are two-storeyed and usually built with the staircase on the outside. The veranda is used for extra living space.

Local granite is used for rustic stonework.

The ground floor is used to keep animals and for storage.

Fishermen's houses found in the Costa Nova region south of Aveiro (see p203) are painted in brightly coloured stripes. Forests planted to prevent the sand dunes from encroaching on the land provide the raw material.

Raised platforms guard against flooding.

Modern examples use tiles or painted façades to continue the tradition of striped houses.

Different coloured stripes painted onto the wood allowed the fishermen to identify their houses through the region's frequent mists.

Rooftops of Castelo de Vide in the Alentejo (see p297)

TILED ROOFS

Throughout Portugal, red clay roof tiles give towns and villages a memorable skyline. The most traditional and widely used type of roof tile is the telha de canudo or tubular tile. Originating from the Moors, these half-cylindrical tiles are placed in two layers: the first is placed with the concave side facing up and the second with the concave side facing down, covering the joints of the first.

Telhados de quatro águas, the distinctive tiled roofs found in Tavira, the Algarve (see p332)

Houses in the Beiras (see pp196–223) often have verandas, usually on the first floor. These are built to face the sun, at the same time affording protection from the cold north winds.

Thatched houses in the Sado Estuary (see p167) are now rare. Surviving examples have walls that consist of a wooden frame supporting woven sections made of straw and reed. The simple houses use only local materials.

PORTUGAL'S WINDMILLS

Windmills are thought to have existed in Portugal since the 11th century. Many pristine examples still dot the hillsides, particularly in coastal regions.

Most windmills have a cylindrical brick or stone base. The upper section revolves to catch the wind in its canvas sails. Estremadura (see pp172–95) has good examples.

Azorean windmills, such as this example on Faial (see p372), are fairly similar to the Portuguese model, but show the clear influence of early Dutch and Flemish settlers in their sail design.

Some roof tiles can be removed in summer for more light.

Wooden windows have a painted surround.

Huge chimneys provide spaces for smoking hams and sausages.

Colour-trimmed houses of the Alentejo and Ribatejo regions are mainly constructed of clay. Long and oblong in shape, they have few openings, to ensure that the heat is trapped in winter and kept out in summer.

Whitewashing protects the walls, deflects the hot summer sun and acts as a deterrent for pests and vermin. Many householders consider it a point of honour to renew their whitewash each year.

CHIMNEYS OF THE ALGARVE

These are an important decorative feature of houses in the Algarve (see pp316–33). The Moorish influence can be seen in their cylindrical or prismatic shapes and the geometric designs perforating the clay. The chimneys are whitewashed and many have details picked out in colour to accentuate their ornamentation.

Manueline Architecture

The style of architecture that flourished in the reign of Manuel I (see pp 46–9) and continued after his death is essentially a Portuguese variant of Late Gothic. It is typified by maritime motifs inspired by Portugal's Age of Discovery, and by elaborate “all-over” decoration. The artists behind it include João de Castilho and Diogo Boitac, renowned for the cloister of the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos (see pp104–5), and Francisco and Diogo de Arruda, designers of the Torre de Belém (see p108).

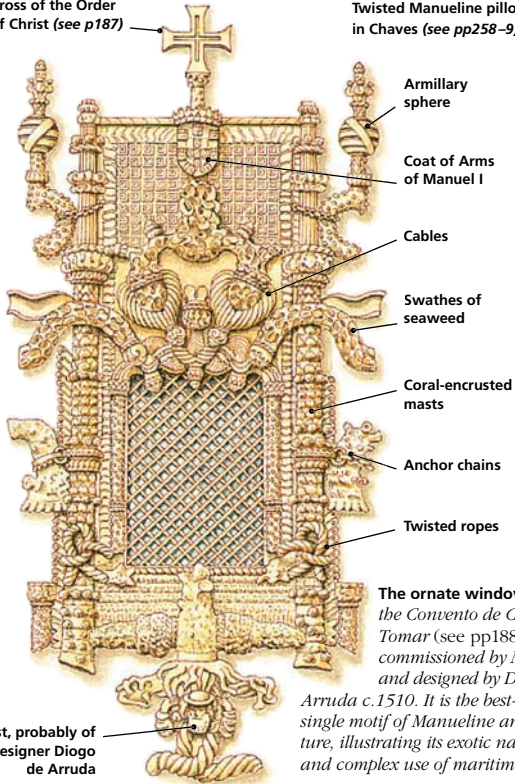

Twisted Maneliane pillory in Chaves (see pp258–9)

The portal of the church of Conceição Velha in Lisbon (see p85) was commissioned by Manuel in the early 16th century. The king himself appears in the carved relief in the tympanum.

Cross of the Order of Christ (see p187)

The ornate window in the Convento de Cristo at Tomar (see pp188–9) was commissioned by Manuel I and designed by Diogo de Arruda c. 1510. It is the best-known single motif of Maneliane architecture, illustrating its exotic naturalism and complex use of maritime detail.

Bust, probably of the designer Diogo de Arruda

Gil Vicente created the Belém Monstrance (1506) from the first gold brought back from India. Made for Santa Maria de Belém (see p105), its superstructure echoes the south portal.

DECORATIVE DETAILS

The most important motifs in Maneliane architecture are the armillary sphere, the Cross of the Order of Christ and twisted rope. Naturalistic and fantastic forms are often used, as well as flatter, finely crafted designs similar to those found on contemporary Spanish silverware. Later Maneliane schemes sometimes incorporate Italian Renaissance ornamentation.

The armillary sphere was a navigational device that became the emblem of Manuel I himself.

The Cross of the Order of Christ was the emblem of a military order that helped to finance early voyages. It also emblazoned sails and flags.

REBUILDING THE MANUELINE PORTAL OF MADRE DE DEUS

The Manueline portal of the church of Madre de Deus in Lisbon (see p121) was destroyed in the 1755 earthquake, but it was not until 1872 that João Maria Nepomuceno was commissioned to rebuild it. For accuracy, he referred to an early 16th-century painting by an unknown artist, The Arrival of the Relics of Santa Auita at the Church of Madre de Deus, now in the Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga (see pp94–7). The splendid procession in the picture is shown heading towards the Manueline portal of the church, which is clearly depicted. Like others of that period, it stands proud of the building and dominates the façade. The Manueline style favoured rounded rather than pointed arches and this one has an interesting trefoil shape.

Curving branches and crinkled exotic foliage recall Indian sculptural motifs.

In the Royal Cloister of Batalha (see pp184–5), early 15th-century pointed Gothic arches incorporate exquisite Manueline screens on colonnettes, probably by Diogo Boitac, whose two designs alternate.

Soft limestone allowed complex patterns to be carved in the tracery.

The colonnettes have all-over ornamentation, with repeated patterns of pearls, shells and coil motifs.

Pillars of plaited colonnettes were used by architects such as Boitac in the Igreja de Jesus in Setúbal (see p170).

Twisted ropes decorate ceiling vaults, columns and arches, and girdle entire buildings inside and out.

The Palace Hotel do Bussaco, today a luxury hotel (see p212), was originally built as a royal hunting lodge about the end of the 19th century. An extraordinary building, the palace incorporates every conceivable element of Manueline architecture and decoration, illustrating the persistence of the style in Portuguese design, which continues to this day.

Azulejos - Painted Ceramic Tiles

The idea of covering walls, floors and even ceilings with tiles was introduced to Spain and Portugal by the Moors. From the 16th century onwards, Portugal started producing its own decorative tiles. By the 18th century, no other European country was producing as many tiles, for such a variety of purposes and in so many different designs; the blue and white tiles of the Baroque era are considered by many to be the finest. Azulejos became and still remain a very important addition to the interior and exterior architecture of Portuguese buildings.

1716 Detail from Panel of Christ Teaching in the Temple

Around 1690 blue and white storytelling tiles began to be produced.

These figures are from a typical scheme by António de Oliveira Bernardes (c.1660–1732), the greatest master of the genre. The central panels are surrounded by a complex architectural border (Igreja Da Misericórdia, Évora, see p305).

c.1520 Frieze of Spanish-made Tiles

These Moorish-style tiles were produced by compartmental techniques using raised and depressed areas to prevent the tin-glaze colours from running (Palácio Nacional de Sintra, see pp160–61).

c.1680 Hunting Cat

Naturalistic panels of this period were often naively drawn, but used a wide range of colours (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

1565 Susannah and the Elders

The mid-16th century saw the introduction of the maiolica technique. This allowed artists to paint directly onto prepared flat tiles using several colours, as these did not run in the firing process. This panel of a biblical episode is one of the earliest produced in Portugal. The decorative details are typical of the Renaissance (Quinta da Bacalboa, see p169).

c.1650 Carpet Tiles
So-called because they imitated the patterns of Moorish rugs, these were produced mainly in blue, yellow and white. They often covered whole walls (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

1736 Capela de São Filipe

The small chapel inside Setúbal's castle is a fine example of a complete decorative scheme using blue and white tiles. The panels, illustrating the life of St Philip, are signed by Policarpo de Oliveira Bernardes, son of the great António (Castelo de São Filipe, see p170).

c.1670 Tiled Altar Frontal

The exuberant scheme incorporates Hindu motifs and other exotic themes inspired by the printed calicoes and chintzes brought back from India (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

1865 Viúva Lamego Tile Factory, Lisbon

For the first half of the 19th century, relatively few tiles were produced. The fashion then returned for covering whole surfaces with tiles, and simple stylized designs were used to decorate shop fronts and residential areas. This naive, chinoiserie figure is part of a scheme dating from 1865 that covers the entire façade of the factory.

c.1770–84 Corredor das Mangas

The Rococo period saw the reintroduction of polychromatic azulejos. This antechamber in the royal palace at Queluz has tiled panels showing hunting scenes, the seasons and the continents (Palácio de Queluz, see pp166–7).

1927 Battle of Ourique

The early years of the 20th century saw a revival of large-scale historical scenes in traditional blue and white. This panel is by Jorge Colaço (Carlos Lopes Pavilion, Parque Eduardo VII, Lisbon, see p113).

c.1970 Tile Pattern

The original design for this strikingly modern scheme by architect Raúl Lino dates from about 1910. Many of Portugal's leading modern artists have worked with azulejos (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

Sophisticated designs of this kind disappeared during the upheavals of the Peninsular War (see p54) at the beginning of the 19th century (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

TILES IN DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE

Art Nouveau friezes and decorations in deep colours enliven the façade of this early 20th-century house in Aveiro. To this day, tiles are used to cover façades of houses. They are relatively cheap to produce, long-lasting and need little maintenance. Tiled houses brighten up many Portuguese towns and villages. The town of Ovar (see pp200–201) is particularly striking.

Vila Africana, Aveiro (see p202)

c.1770 Gatekeeper

“Cut out” figures like this musketeer are an amusing feature of tile schemes in many palaces and mansions from the 18th century onwards. They stand guard at the entrance, on landings or on staircases (Museu Nacional do Azulejo, see pp120–21).

The Wines of Portugal

Although still overshadowed by the excellence and fame of port, Portuguese table wine deserves to be taken seriously. After years of investment in the industry, many of the reds, such as the full-bodied wines from the Douro (made with some of the same grapes as port), have established an attractive style all their own. Great whites are fewer, but most regions have some. And of course there is vinho verde, the usually white, light, slightly carbonated wine from the north.

WINE REGIONS

Many of Portugal's wine regions maintain their individual style by specializing in particular Portuguese grape varieties. The introduction of modern wine-making techniques has improved overall quality, and as yet the increasing use of imported grape varieties seems no threat to Portuguese individuality.

HOW TO READ A WINE LABEL

Tinto is red, branco is white, seco is dry and doce is sweet. Other essential information is the name of the producer, the region and the year. Wines made to at least 80 per cent from a single grape variety may give the name of that grape on the label. Denominação de Origem Controlada (DOC) indicates that the wine has been made according to the strictest regulations of a given region, but, as elsewhere, this need not mean higher quality than the nominally simpler Vinho Regional appellation. The back label often describes grape varieties and wine-making techniques used.

The Sociedade Agricola e Comercial dos Vinhos Vale da Corça, Lda, produced and bottled this wine.

This wine is from the Douro and is made according to DOC regulations for the region.

The name of this wine means "banks of the River Tua", further specifying its geographical origin.

Reserva means that the wine has been aged, probably in oak casks. It also implies that the wine is of higher quality than non-reserva wine from the same producer.

Vinho verde, "green wine" from the Minho region, can be either red or white, but the fizzy, dry reds are generally consumed locally. Typical white vinho verde is bone dry, slightly fizzy, low in alcohol and high in acidity. A weightier style of white vinho verde is made from the Alvarinho grape, near the Spanish border. Among the best brands are Soalheiro and Palácio da Brejoira.

Bairrada is a region where the small and thick-skinned Baga grape dominates. It makes big, tannic wines, sometimes with smoky or pine-needle overtones and like the older Dão wines, they need time to soften. Modern winemaking and occasional disregard for regional regulations have meant more approachable reds (often classified as Vinho Regional das Beiras) and crisper whites. Quality producers include Luis Pato and Caves Aliança.

Ribatejo is the fertile valley of the Tagus to the north and east of Lisbon. After Estremadura, it is Portugal's biggest wine region measured by volume, but its potential for quality wines has only just begun to be realized. As in Estremadura, Vinho Regional bottlings are frequently better than DOC ones. Producers to look for include Quinta da Alorna, Casa Branco and Fiuza and Bright.

The Douro region is best known as the source of port wine, but in most years about half of the wine produced is fermented dry to make table wine, and these wines are now at the forefront of Portuguese wine-making. The pioneer, Barca Velha, was launched half a century ago and is both highly regarded and among the most expensive. Other quality producers include Calheiros Cruz, Domingos Alves de Sousa, Quinta do Crasto, Niepoort and Ramos-Pinto.

Picking grapes for vinho verde

Setúbal, to the south of Lisbon, is best known for its sweet, fortified Muscat wine, Moscatel de Setúbal. In addition, the region also produces excellent, mostly red, table wine. Two big quality producers dominate the region: José Maria da Fonseca (see p169) and J.P. Vinhos. The co-operative at Santo Isidro de Pegões makes good-value wines, while interesting smaller producers include Venâncio Costa Lima, Hero do Castanheiro and Ermelinda Freitas.

The Dão region now offers some of Portugal's best wines. Small producers, such as Quinta dos Roques, Quinta da Pellada and Quinta de Cabriz, and the large Sogrape company make fruity reds for younger drinking, fresh, dry whites and deeper, richer reds which retain their fruit with age – a far cry from the heavy, hard-edged, and often oxidized wines of the past.

Estremadura is Portugal's westernmost wine area and has only recently emerged as a region in its own right. Several producers now make modern Vinho Regional wines with character; look for wines by DFJ, Casa Santos Lima, Quinta de Pancas and Quinta do Monte d'Oiro. The most interesting DOC is Alenquer. Bucelas, to the south of the region, produces characterful white wines.

Alentejo produced wine has possibly made the biggest leap in quality in the last decade.

Long dismissed by experts as a region of easy-drinking house reds for restaurants, this area now produces some of Portugal's most serious red wines and a surprising number of excellent whites. Among the best producers are Herdade do Esporão, Herdade dos Coelheiros, Cortes de Cima and João Portugal Ramos.

PORTUGAL THROUGH THE YEAR

While July and August are the most popular months for visiting, spring and autumn can be more rewarding if you want to tour and experience local culture. Free of excessive heat and crowds, the country is more relaxed. There is deep-rooted respect throughout the country for ancient traditions, which are most often reflected in religious festivals. Festas are held throughout the year, most frequently celebrating saints' days, but also marking the end of the harvest, or gastronomic and even sporting events. Festas call for prayers, processions, fireworks, eating and drinking, traditional folk dances and general merrymaking.

SPRING

From the Algarve to Trás-os-Montes, the country erupts in wild flowers as warmer days set in. This is the time to see the countryside at its most beautiful, although rain can be expected until the end of May.

Easter is a time of great religious celebration, with Holy Week processions taking place all over the country.

MARCH

Open de Portugal de Golfe (late Mar). Venue changes from year to year.

Festival Intercéltico do Porto (end Mar or early Apr). Oporto. A festival of music from Portugal and Spain.

Funchal Flower Festival (April)

APRIL

Holy Week (week before Easter), Braga. Events in the country's religious capital are particularly traditional and solemn. Torchlit processions are led by church authorities.

Fátima on 13 May, when 100,000 pilgrims gather every year

Easter Sunday is also the beginning of the bullfighting season throughout Portugal.

Mãe Soberana (second Sun after Easter), Loulé, Algarve. Pilgrimage to Nossa Senhora da Piedade (see p326).

FAIPE (end Apr) Estremoz. An international agricultural, cattle and handicrafts fair.

MAY

Festas das Cruzes (early May), Barcelos. The Festival of the Crosses celebrates the day the shape of a cross appeared in the earth in 1504.

Flower Festival (late Apr), Funchal, Madeira. Shops and houses are decorated with flowers. Ends with a parade of flower-covered floats.

Pilgrimage to Fátima (12-13 May). Huge crowds make the pilgrimage to the place where the Virgin appeared to three children in 1917 (see p186).

Queima das Fitas (mid-May), Coimbra. Lively celebrations mark end of the university's academic year (see p209).

Festa do Senhor Santo Cristo dos Milagres (fifth Sun after Easter), Ponta Delgada, São Miguel, Azores. The largest religious festival in the Azores.

Festa do Espírito Santo (Pentecost), Azores. High point of the festival of the Holy Spirit (see p367).

Pilgrimage to Bom Jesus (Pentecost), Braga. Penitents climb the spectacular staircase on their knees (see pp278-9).

Algarve Music Festival (May Jun-Jul), throughout region. Concerts and performances by the Gulbenkian Ballet.

SUMMER

Most visitors choose the summer months to visit Portugal. Since many businesses shut down in August, it is holiday time for locals too. Many families spend the entire summer by the seaside.

Summer is a good time to visit the cooler Minho, when the north is busy with saints' day festivals (see pp228-9).

JUNE

Festa de São Gonçalo (first weekend), Amarante. Young, unmarried men and women in the town swap phallus-shaped cakes as tokens of love.

Feira Nacional da Agricultura (early Jun), Santarém. A combination of agricultural fairs, bullfighting and displays of folk dancing.

Santo António (12-13 Jun), Lisbon. Celebrated in the Alfama district with singing and dancing, food and drink. Locals put up lanterns and streamers and bring out chairs for the thousands who arrive.

Festa da Coca (Thu after Trinity Sun), Monção. Part of the Corpus Christi Day celebrations, the festival features scenes of St George in comic battle with the dragon.

São João (23-24 Jun), Oporto. Mid-summer festivities include making wishes while jumping over small fires, and the barcos rabelos boat race (see pp228-9).

São Pedro (29 Jun), Lisbon. More street celebrations with eating, dancing and singing.

Sintra Festival (Jun-Aug), Sintra. Classical music concerts and ballet programme.

JULY

Festa do Colete Encarnado (first weekend), Vila Franca de Xira. Named after the red waistcoats of the Ribatejo horsemen, the festival consists of bullfights and bull running.

Festa dos Tabuleiros (mid-Jul, every four years), Tomar. Music, dancing, fireworks and a bullfight (see pp186-7). Four hundred women carry trays of decorated loaves on their heads.

Festa da Ria (all month) Aveiro. Folk dances, boat races and a best-decorated boat competition (see p203).

Festival da Cerveja (late Jul), Fábrica do Inglês, Silves. This is a lively beer festival with folk dancing.

AUGUST

Festas Gualterianas (first weekend), Guimarães. Three-day festival dating back to 1452. Torchlight procession, dancing, and medieval parade.

Madeira Wine Rally (first weekend), Funchal, Madeira.

Car enthusiasts flock to this challenging car rally, one of the stages of the European championships.

Festa da Nossa Senhora da Boa Viagem (early Aug), Peniche. A crowd gathers at the harbour with lighted candles to greet a statue of the Virgin that

AUTUMN

In many ways, this is the best season for touring and sightseeing. From mid-September temperatures cool sharply, and autumn is usually drier than spring. This is a mellow, fruitful time of year with the countryside a collage of brown, gold and red.

September is also the start of the vindima (the vintage) season. Grapes are harvested and crushed to wine in a spirit of festivity, especially in the port-growing Douro region.

SEPTEMBER

Romaria da Nossa Senhora dos Remédios (6–9 Sep),

Lamego. The annual pilgrimage to this famous Baroque shrine is the main feature of three days of celebration. Activities include a torchlit procession and live bands.

Romaria da Nossa Senhora da Nazaré (8 Sep and following weekend), Nazaré. Includes processions, folk dancing, and bullfights.

Feiras Novas (mid-Sep), Ponte de Lima. A huge market with fairground, fireworks, carnival costumes and a brass band competition.

Festa da Senhora da Consolação (throughout Sep), Sintra. A celebration of Portugal's patron saint with a month of parties, music and food in the Assafora area.

Portuguese Grand Prix, (Oct), Estoril. Motor-cycling Grand Prix held annually in October.

National Folklore Festival (mid-Sep), the Algarve. Colourful music and dance groups converge on the region's towns.

Wine Festival (all month), Funchal and Estreito de Câmara de Lobos, Madeira. The Funchal festival is a lively, popular event, but the one in Estreito de Câmara de Lobos is more authentic.

Feira de São Mateus (last week), Elvas. Festival offering a mixture of religious, cultural and agricultural events.

OCTOBER

Feira de Outubro (first or second week), Vila Franca de Xira. Bulls are run through the streets and bullfights staged.

NOVEMBER

All Saints' Day (1 Nov). Candles are lit in churches and homes, and flowers placed on graves to honour the dead.

Festa das Latas (early Nov), Coimbra. A celebration to welcome new students.

Feira Nacional do Cavalo (first 2 weeks), Golegã. Horse parades and races. Included are celebrations for St Martin's Day (11 Nov) with a grand parade and running of bulls.

Casinos do Algarve Rally (mid-Nov), Algarve. Car rally.

Encontros de Fotografia (throughout Nov), Coimbra. Portugal's biggest photography show features exhibitions of the work of both world-famous and new photographers.

WINTER

Seekers of mild, sunny climes fly south to the Algarve where many of the resorts remain alive in winter. For golfers too, the coolest months of the year are the most appealing. January and February also see the spectacular blossoming of almond trees right across southern Portugal.

Other visitors migrate even further south to sub-tropical Madeira where winter, in particular Christmas and the New Year, is high season.

Bolo rei, a cake enjoyed over the Christmas period

DECEMBER

Christmas (25 Dec). Everywhere churches and shops display cribs. On Christmas Eve bacalbau (salted dried cod) is eaten. Presents are opened, and people go to midnight mass.

In Madeira traditional bolo de mel (honey cake) is made, and children plant wheat, maize or barley in pots. The pots are placed around the crib to symbolize renewal and plenty.

Epiphany, bolo rei (king's cake), is made with a lucky charm and a bean inside. The person who gets the bean must buy the next cake. Bolo rei is also made at Christmas.

Festa de São Gonçálio (2nd week), Aveiro. Festival in which loaves of bread are thrown to the crowds from the top of a chapel in thanks for the safe return of a fisherman, or for finding a husband.

The Climate of Portugal

Mainland Portugal has a pleasant climate with long, hot summers and mild winters. In the north winters are cool and wet; heading further south temperatures increase and rainfall decreases all the way down to the Algarve, where the climate is Mediterranean. Further inland a more Continental climate prevails with hotter summers and colder winters than on the coast. Madeira is rainy in the north, warmer and drier in the south, and the Azores are mild with year-round rainfall and strong winds.

THE HISTORY OF PORTUGAL

Portugal is one of the oldest nation states in Europe: its foundation in 1139 predates that of its neighbour, Spain, by nearly 350 years. The Romans, who arrived in 218 BC, called the whole peninsula Hispania, but the region between the Douro and Tagus rivers was named Lusitania after the Celtiberian tribe that lived there. When the Roman Empire collapsed in the 5th century, Hispania was overrun first by Germanic tribes, then by Moors from North Africa in 711. Military reconquest by the Christian kingdoms of the north began in earnest in the 11th century and it was during this long process that Portucale, a small county of the kingdom of León and Castile, was declared independent by its first king, Afonso Henriques.

The new kingdom expanded southwards to the Algarve and Portuguese sailors began to explore the African coast and the Atlantic. Portugal's golden age reached its zenith in the reign of Manuel I with Vasco da Gama's voyage to India in 1498 and the discovery of Brazil in 1500. Eastern trade brought incredible wealth, but military defeat in Morocco meant that the prosperity was short-lived. Spain invaded in 1580 and Spanish kings ruled Portugal for the next 60 years.

After Portugal regained independence, her fortunes were restored by the discovery of gold in Brazil. In the second half of the 18th century, the chief minister, the Marquês de Pombal, began to modernize the country and to limit the reactionary influence of the church. However, Napoleon's invasion in 1807 and the loss of Brazil in 1825 left Portugal impoverished and divided.

Power struggles between Absolutists and Constitutionlists further weakened the country, and despite a period of stability from the 1850s, the debt crisis worsened. In 1910, a republican revolution overthrew the monarchy.

The economy deteriorated until a military coup in 1926 led to the long dictatorship of António Salazar, who held power from 1928 to 1968. The Carnation Revolution ended his rule in 1974 and democracy was restored in 1976. Portugal's depleted economy was gradually revived by an influx of funds through joining the EU in 1986.

The Rulers of Portugal

Afonso Henriques declared himself Portugal's first king in 1139, but his descendants' ties of marriage to various Spanish kingdoms led to dynastic disputes. João I's defeat of the Castilians in 1385 established the House of Avis which presided over the golden age of Portuguese imperialism. Then in 1580, in the absence of a direct heir, Portugal was ruled by Spanish kings for 60 years before the Duke of Bragança became João IV. A Republican uprising ended the monarchy in 1910. However, in the first 16 years of the Republic there were 40 different governments, and in 1926 Portugal became a dictatorship under the eventual leadership of Salazar. Democracy was restored by the "Carnation" Revolution of 1974.

Prehistoric and Roman Portugal

Gold solidus
(c.400 AD)

From about 2000 BC Portugal's Stone Age communities were supplanted by foreign invaders, most notably the Iberians and the Celts. When Rome defeated the Carthaginians in 216 BC and took over all their territories in eastern Spain, she still had to subdue Celtiberian tribes living in the west. One of these, the Lusitani, put up fierce resistance. After their defeat in 139 BC, their name was preserved in Lusitania, a province of Roman Hispania, corresponding roughly to present-day Portugal. Romanization led to four centuries of stability and prosperity, but as the Roman Empire collapsed, Lusitania was overrun by Germanic tribes, first the Suevi and then the Visigoths.

WHERE TO SEE PREHISTORIC AND ROMAN PORTUGAL

The Alentejo is rich in Stone Age megaliths (see p308), while the north has the two best examples of Celtiberian settlements at Sanfins (p246) and Briteiros. Many traces of the Roman period, including roads and bridges, are found throughout Portugal. Apart from Conimbriga, major sites, such as the villas at Pisões (p313) and Milreu (p327), are mainly in the south. Faro's Museu Municipal (p329) has a good collection of local finds.

Citânia de Briteiros, a hilltop settlement founded around the 5th century AD, survived until well into the Roman period. It was discovered in 1874 (p283).

Évora's temple dates from the 2nd century AD (see p304). It is almost all that remains of an important Roman city.

RECONSTRUCTION OF CONIMBRIGA

The extensive remains of Conimbriga (see p210) give a vivid picture of how thoroughly Romanized Portugal became under the empire. The town expanded rapidly in the 1st century AD, when it achieved the self-governing status of a municipium. It fell to the Suevi in AD 468.

Moorish Domination and Christian Reconquest

Bronze Moorish oil lamp in the shape of a bird

When Muslims from North Africa defeated the Visigoths in 711, the Iberian Peninsula became a province of the Caliphate of Damascus. Then, in 756, Abd al Rahman established the independent kingdom of Al Andalus, his capital Córdoba becoming one of the world's great centres of culture. Moorish control of the peninsula remained virtually undisputed for the next 300 years until the small Christian kingdoms in the north began the Reconquest. In the 11th century, as Moorish power waned, "Portucale" was just a small county of the Kingdom of León and Castile, centred on the Douro. It became independent after Afonso Henriques defeated the Moors at Ourique in 1139.

Under Moorish rule, co-operation between the faiths was common. This miniature from the 13th century shows the friendly meeting of two knights, one a Christian, the other a Moor.

WHERE TO SEE MOORISH PORTUGAL

The influence of the Moors is strongest in the south, in towns like Lagos (see p322), Faro (p328) and Silves, where they ruled for longer and the architecture (p23) retains many Arab features. In Mértola (p315), the church preserves much of the old mosque. Further north, the Castelo dos Mouros, in Sintra (p159), and many other fortresses were taken over and rebuilt by the Christians.

This cistern well was found on the site of the archaeological museum at Silves, a Moorish centre in the Algarve (p325).

Out at sea the fishermen's nets are full once more.

Capture of Lisbon

The Reconquest was given the status of a crusade by the pope. Lisbon was taken in 1147 with the aid of English troops bound for the Holy Land.

FARO UNDER MOORISH RULE

Christians who lived under Moorish rule were called Mozarabs. At Faro they placed a statue of the Virgin on the walls of the city, but resentful Muslims took the statue down. These four scenes from the Cantigas de Santa Maria tell the story of the miracle that followed.

The New Kingdom

14th-century statue of armed knight

The Portuguese Reconquest was completed in 1249 when Afonso III captured Faro in the Algarve. His successor, King Dinis, encouraged agriculture and commerce, earning the nickname of the “farmer king”. He also built castles to defend the border from Castilian attack and expanded the navy. Territorial disputes with Castile came to a head in 1383 when King Fernando died and his son-in-law, Juan I of Castile, claimed the Portuguese throne for his wife Beatriz. Juan’s opponents favoured Pedro I’s illegitimate son, João of Avis, elected king by the cortes (parliament) in Coimbra in 1385.

King Dinis had a chain of fortified towns and castles built along the borders with Castile and Moorish Spain. This 16th-century drawing shows the medieval walls and towers of Serpa (see p312).

WHERE TO SEE MIEVEAL PORTUGAL

Of the many castles built or rebuilt in this period, the most picturesque are at Almourol (see p191) and Óbidos. In the citadel of Bragança (pp260–61) stands the Domus Municipalis, a medieval meeting hall. Most surviving Romanesque buildings, however, are religious: the cathedrals in Oporto, Lisbon (p72) and Coimbra (p202) and many smaller churches in the north, such as those at Rates (p274), Roriz (p250) and Bravães (p269).

Óbidos Castle, now a pousada, was rebuilt by King Dinis when he gave this fairy-tale town to his wife Isabel as a wedding present in 1282 (p174).

Oporto's Sé (p242) has been much altered but the twin-towered west front retains its original 13th-century character.

TOMB OF PEDRO I

The Gothic carvings on the royal tomb at Alcobaça (see pp180–81) are the finest of their kind in Portugal. The forthright Pedro, who ruled from 1357–67, is remembered chiefly for the tragic tale of his murdered mistress, Inês de Castro, whose matching tomb stands facing Pedro's.

The House of Avis

After João of Avis had defeated the Castilians in 1385 to become João I of Portugal, he strengthened his position through an important alliance with England. His long reign saw the start of Portuguese imperialism and the beginning of maritime expeditions promoted by his son, Henry the Navigator (see pp48-9). Further voyages of discovery in the reign of Manuel I “the Fortunate”, led to trade with India and the East and, following Afonso de Albuquerque’s capture of Goa, initially brought great wealth. So, too, did the colonization of Brazil. However, the lure of overseas adventure weakened mainland Portugal, which suffered serious depopulation. The age of expansion ended when a foolhardy military expedition to Morocco, led by King Sebastião, was soundly defeated in 1578.

WHERE TO SEE GOTHIC PORTUGAL

Many churches include Gothic elements, such as the cloister of the Sé in Oporto (see p242) and the richly sculpted portal of the Sé in Évora (p306). Tomar's Convento de Cristo (pp188-9) is predominantly Gothic, as is the church at Alcobaça (pp180-81). The finest church, however, is at Batalha, built in thanks for João I's victory at the Battle of Aljubarrota. It also contains major examples of Manueline architecture (see pp24-5).

Batalha (pp184-5) incorporates a wide range of Gothic styles. The plain, lofty nave contrasts with the ornamented exterior.

The Age of Discovery

Portugal's astonishing period of conquest and exploration began in 1415 with the capture of the North African city of Ceuta. Maritime expeditions into the Atlantic and along the West African coast followed, motivated by traditional Christian hostility towards Islam and desire for commercial gain. Great riches were made from the gold and slaves taken from the Guinea coast, but the real breakthrough for Portuguese imperialism occurred in 1498 when Vasco da Gama (see p106) reached India. Portugal soon controlled the Indian Ocean and the spice trade, and established an eastern capital at Goa. With Pedro Álvares Cabral's "discovery" of Brazil, Portugal became a mercantile super-power rivalled only by Spain.

Japanese Screen (c.1600)

This screen shows traders unloading a nau, or great ship. Between 1575 and their expulsion in 1638, the Portuguese monopolized the carrying trade between China and Japan.

HENRY THE NAVIGATOR

Although he did not sail himself, Henry (1394–1460), the third son of João I, laid the foundations for Portugal's maritime expansion that were later built upon by João II and consolidated by Manuel I. As Master of the wealthy Order of Christ and Governor of the Algarve, Henry was able to finance expeditions along the African coast. By the time he died he had a monopoly on all trade south of Cape Bojador. Legend tells that he founded a great school of navigation either at Sagres (see p322) or Lagos.

PORTUGUESE DISCOVERIES

The systematic attempt to find a sea route to India, which led to a monopoly of the spice trade, began in 1482 with the first voyage of Diogo Cão, who planted a padrão (stone cross) on the shores where he landed.

Lateen-rigged Caravel

These ships with three triangular sails were favoured by the first Portuguese explorers who sailed close to the African coast. For later journeys across the open ocean, square sails were found more effective.

Spanish Rule

Philip II of Spain

When Henrique, the Cardinal-King, died without an heir in 1580, Philip II of Spain successfully claimed the Portuguese throne through his mother, a daughter of Manuel I. Under Spanish rule, influential positions were held by Portuguese nobles, but a common foreign policy led to a steady loss of colonies to the Dutch. In 1640 a Portuguese revolt took place in Lisbon and the Duke of Bragança was chosen to become King João IV. Spain retaliated and the ensuing war continued until 1668. Meanwhile Portugal was forced to rely economically on her overseas territories.

Spanish Armada

In 1588 Philip II of Spain hoped to invade England with his great fleet. It sailed from Lisbon where it had been equipped and provisioned.

The Graça fort was held by the Spanish.

WAR OF INDEPENDENCE

Portugal's long war against Spain (1640–68) was fought mostly in the Alentejo. This azulejo panel from Palácio Fronteira in Lisbon (see p123) shows the Battle of Linhas de Elvas (1658). A Portuguese army besieged in Elvas (see pp298–9) was relieved by fresh troops from Estremoz, who soundly defeated the Spanish.

António Vieira

Vieira (1606–97) was a Jesuit priest, writer and orator. He was sent on many diplomatic missions and clashed with the Inquisition over his support for Christianized Jews.

WHERE TO SEE 17TH-CENTURY PORTUGAL

Under Spanish rule an austere style of architecture prevailed, typified by São Vicente de Fora (see p70) in Lisbon, the Sé Nova in Coimbra (p206) and Santarém's Jesuit church (p193). At Vila Viçosa the style is evident in the long, plain façade of the palace of the Dukes of Bragança (pp300-301). Colourful azulejos from the period can be seen at Palácio Fronteira (p123) and the Museu Nacional do Azulejo (pp120-21).

Palácio dos Biscainhos in Braga (p279) was built by rich emigrants returning from Brazil. Enlarged in later centuries, it retains its 17th-century core.

The Inquisition

In the 16th and 17th centuries, the Inquisition, set up by the Catholic church, burned heretics in Lisbon's Terreiro do Paço to ensure religious conformity.

The relieving army from Estremoz surprised and routed the Spanish.

Josefa de Óbidos

Born in Spain, Josefa (1631-84) came to Óbidos (see pp176-7) when young. Trained by her father, she painted religious subjects and realistic still lifes.

The Age of Absolutism

Gold coin of João V

The 18th century was a period of mixed fortune for Portugal. Despite vast revenues from Brazilian gold and diamonds, João V almost bankrupted the country with his extravagance. In contrast, Pombal, chief minister of João's successor José I, applied the ideas of the Enlightenment, reforming government, commerce and education. When Maria I succeeded in 1777, she reversed many of Pombal's decrees. The French invasion of 1807 forced Maria, by then mad, and the royal family into exile in Brazil.

WHERE TO SEE 18TH-CENTURY PORTUGAL

Baroque churches are found throughout Portugal, many with ornate interiors of gilded wood (talha dourada) such as São Francisco (see p243) and Santa Clara (p241) in Oporto. Tiled interiors are also very common (pp22–3). Coimbra University houses the glittering Capela de São Miguel and a fine Baroque library. As well as the palaces at Mafra and Queluz, many elegant country houses, notably the Casa de Mateus, date from this era (pp256–7).

Queluz Palace (pp166–7), residence of Maria I, was begun in 1747. It is the finest example of Rococo architecture in Portugal.

The Capela de São Miguel at Coimbra University (pp208–9) was redecorated in Baroque style in the reign of João V.

Reform and Revolution

Portugal suffered many depredations during the upheavals of the Peninsular War, and after the loss of Brazil. A period of chaos culminated, in 1832, in civil war between the Liberal Pedro IV and the Absolutist Miguel: the War of the Two Brothers. Though the Liberals won, later governments were often reactionary. The second half of the century saw a period of stability and industrial growth, but attempts at expansion in Africa failed. By 1910, discontent with the constitutional monarchy was such that a Republican uprising forced King Manuel II into exile.

WHERE TO SEE 19TH-CENTURY PORTUGAL

Neo-Classicism, which dominated the early part of the century, can be seen in Lisbon's Palácio da Ajuda (see p109). More Romantic historical styles emerged later in the century, ranging from the fantastical Neo-Gothic of the Palácio da Pena (pp162–3) in Sintra to the subtle Orientalism of Monserrate (p157). Notable stations associated with the spread of Portugal's railways include Lisbon's Rossio and São Bento in Oporto (p241).

Modern Portugal

Modern tiles decorating a Lisbon metro station

The early years of the new Republic were marked by political and economic crisis, until a military coup in 1926 paved the way for the New State of 1933. Under the oppressive regime of prime minister António Salazar, the country was freed of its debts, but suffered poverty and unemployment. Portugal's reliance on its African colonies led to costly wars, unrest in the army and the overthrow of the government in 1974. The painful return to democracy was rewarded by admission to the European Community in 1986.

The revolution of 25 April 1974 gained its popular name when people began placing red carnations in the barrels of soldiers' guns. Led by army officers disaffected by the colonial wars in Africa, the revolution heralded a period of great celebration, as Portugal emerged from decades of insularity. The political situation, however, was chaotic: the new government pushed through a controversial programme of nationalization and land reform in favour of the peasants, but in November 1975 the left-wing radicals were ousted by a short-lived counter-coup.

Lisbon at a Glance

Portugal's capital sits on the north bank of the Tagus estuary, 17 km (10 miles) from the Atlantic. The city has a population of about 550,000, but the conurbation of "Grande Lisboa", which has engulfed many surrounding villages, has nearly two million people. Razed to the ground by the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), the city centre is essentially 18th century, with carefully planned, elegant streets in the Baixa. On the hills on either side of the centre, the narrow streets of the Alfama and Bairro Alto make it a personal, approachable city. Since its days of glory during the Age of Discovery, when the city was at the forefront of world trade, Lisbon has been an important port. Today the docks have moved; however, the great monuments in Belém still bear witness to the city's maritime past.

The Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga houses paintings, decorative art and sculpture. Of particular interest are the Flemish-influenced Portuguese paintings such as this Apparition of Christ to the Virgin by Jorge Afonso (see pp94–5).

The Mosteiro dos Jerónimos is a magnificent 16th-century monastery. Commissioned by Manuel I, much of it is built in the peculiarly Portuguese style of architecture, known as Manueline. The extravagantly sculpted south portal of the church, designed by João de Castilho in 1516, is one of the finest expressions of the style (see pp104–5).

BELÉM

The Sé, Lisbon's greatly restored cathedral, is a sturdy Romanesque building noted for its beautiful rose window. Ecclesiastical robes and silver are among the many religious objects on display in the treasury (see p72).

The 1755 Lisbon Earthquake

Ex-voto tile panel offered by survivors

The first tremor of the devastating earthquake was felt at 9:30am on 1 November. A few minutes later there was a second, far more violent shock, reducing over half the city to rubble. Although the epicentre was close to the Algarve, Lisbon, as the most populated area, bore the worst. Over 20 churches collapsed, crushing the crowds who had assembled for All Saints' Day. A third shock was followed by fires which quickly spread. An hour later, huge waves came rolling in from the Tagus and flooded the lower part of the city. Most of Portugal suffered damage and the shock was felt as far away as Italy. Perhaps 15,000 people lost their lives in Lisbon alone.

Some buildings that might have survived an earthquake alone were destroyed by the fire that followed.

The old royal palace, the 16th-century Paço da Ribeira, was utterly ruined by the earthquake and ensuing flood.

This anonymous painting of the arrival of a papal ambassador at court in 1693 shows how Terreiro do Paço looked before the earthquake.

The royal family was staying at the palace in Belém, a place far less affected than Lisbon, and survived the disaster unscathed. Here the king surveys the city's devastation.

Ships crammed full of people fleeing the fire were wrecked and anchors thrown up to water level.

This detail is from an ex-voto painting dedicated to Nossa Senhora da Estrela, given by a grateful father in thanks for the sparing of his daughter's life in the earthquake. The girl was found miraculously alive after being buried under rubble for seven hours.

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF LISBON

Marquês de Pombal (1699–1782)

No sooner had the tremors abated than Sebastião José de Carvalho e Melo, chief minister to José I and later to become Marquês de Pombal, was outlining ideas for rebuilding the city. While philosophers moralized, Pombal's initial response is said to have been, "bury the dead and feed the living". He restored order, then began a progressive town-planning scheme. His efficient handling of the crisis gained him almost total political control.

REACTIONS TO THE DISASTER

French author,
Voltaire

The earthquake had a profound effect on European thought. Eyewitness accounts appeared in the papers, many written by foreigners living in Lisbon. A heated debate arose as to whether the earthquake was a natural phenomenon or an act of divine wrath. Lisbon had been a flourishing city, famed for its wealth – also for its Inquisition and idolatry. Interpreting the quake as punishment, many preachers prophesied further catastrophes. Leading literary figures debated the significance of the event, among them Voltaire, who wrote a poem about the disaster, propounding his views that evil exists and man is weak and powerless, doomed to an unhappy fate on earth.

The ancient castle walls succumbed to the reverberating shock waves.

Flames erupted as the candles lit for All Saints' Day ignited the city's churches. The fire raged for seven days.

Some of Lisbon's finest buildings were destroyed, along with gold, jewellery, priceless furniture, archives, books and paintings.

At 11am, tidal waves rolled into Terreiro do Paço. The Alcântara docks, to the west, bore the brunt of the impact.

Churches, homes and public buildings all suffered in the disaster. The Royal Opera House, here shown in ruins, was only completed in March the same year.

A CONTEMPORARY VIEW OF THE EARTHQUAKE

This anonymous German engraving of 1775 gives a vivid picture of the scale of the disaster. Many who fled the flames made for the Tagus, but were washed away in the huge waves which struck the Terreiro do Paço. The human and material losses were incalculable.

The reconstruction of the centre of Lisbon took place rapidly. By the end of November the Marquês de Pombal had devised a strikingly modern scheme for a grid of parallel streets running from the waterfront to Rossio. The new buildings are shown in yellow.

Modern-day Lisbon holds many reminders of the earthquake. Pombal's innovative grid system is clearly visible in this aerial view of the Baixa (see pp70–85). The scheme took many years to complete, and the triumphal arch spanning Rua Augusta was not finished until over a century later, in 1873.

Fado: the Music of Lisbon

A guitarra accompanist

as often by women as men, always accompanied by the guitarra and viola (acoustic Spanish guitar). Fado from Coimbra has developed its own lighter-hearted style.

Like the blues, fado is an expression of longing and sorrow. Literally meaning “fate”, the term may be applied to an individual song as well as the genre itself. The music owes much to the concept known as saudade, meaning a longing both for what has been lost, and for what has never been attained, which perhaps accounts for its emotional power. The people of Lisbon have nurtured this poignant music in back-street cafés and restaurants for over 150 years, and it has altered little in that time. It is sung

A graphic depiction of the music's low-life associations from the 1920s

Maria Severa (1810–36) was the first great fadista and the subject of the first Portuguese sound film in 1931. Her scandalous life and early death are pivotal to fado history, and her spiritual influence has been enormous, inspiring fados, poems, novels and plays.

All female fadistas wear a black shawl in memory of Maria Severa.

The guitarista plays the melody and will occasionally perform a solo instrumental piece.

Most instruments have 12 paired strings, like this one. The double strings produce a resonant, silvery-sweet tone.

Delicate mother-of-pearl inlaid flower motifs

Mother-of-pearl finger plate

THE GUITARRA

Peculiar to Portuguese culture, the guitarra is a flat-backed instrument shaped like a mandolin, with eight, ten or twelve strings, arranged in pairs. It has evolved from a simple 19th-century design into a finely decorated piece, sometimes inlaid with mother-of-pearl. The sound of the guitarra is an essential ingredient of a good fado, echoing and enhancing the singer's melody line.

All kinds of themes may occur in fado. This song of 1910, for example, celebrates the dawning of the liberal republic. Such songs became a favoured means of dissemination, even after the first records were made in 1904.

Alfredo Duarte (1891–1982) was a renowned writer of fado lyrics dealing with love, death, longing, tragedy and triumph. Affectionately known as O Marceneiro (the master carpenter) because of his skill as a joiner, he is still revered and his work widely performed.

A cultural icon for the Portuguese, Amália Rodrigues (1921–99) was the leading exponent of fado for over 50 years. She crystallized the music's style in the postwar years, and made it known around the world.

The viola provides rhythm accompaniment, but the player will never take a solo.

The music has long inspired great writers and painters. O Fado (1910) by José Malbôa (see p55) shows it in an intimate setting with the fadista captivating his listener. The air of abandonment underlines the earthiness of many of the songs.

THE FADO HOUSE

Lisbon's best fado houses are those run by fadistas themselves. Based on a love of the music and on relationships with other performers, such houses usually offer a truer fado experience than the larger, tourist-oriented houses. A good example is the Parreirinha de Alfama, owned by Argentina Santos (shown above). Less slick, but more emotionally charged, are performances of fado vadio, "itinerant" fado, in humbler restaurants and bars such as Tasca do Chico in Bairro Alto.

WHERE TO ENJOY FADO IN LISBON

Any of these fado houses will offer you good food, wine and music – or visit the Casa do Fado for a fascinating exhibition on the history of fado.

ALFAMA

It is difficult to believe that this humble neighbourhood was once the most desirable quarter of Lisbon. For the Moors, the tightly packed alleyways around the fortified castle comprised the whole city. The seeds of decline were sown in the Middle Ages when wealthy residents moved west for fear of earthquakes, leaving the quarter to fishermen and paupers. The buildings survived the 1755 earthquake (see pp62–3) and, although there are no Moorish houses still standing, the quarter retains its kasbah-like layout. Compact houses line steep streets and stairways, their façades strung with washing.

The 12 and 28 trams rattle up the narrow streets of the Alfama from the Baixa. Bus 37 does a circuit from the Castle to Rossio. Many buses run east along Avenida Dom Infante Henrique to Santa Apolónia station, and west to Belém.

Beco dos Cruzes, like most of the alleyways (becos) that snake their way through the Alfama, is a steep cobbled street. Locals often hang washing between the tightly packed houses.

Also known as the Ricardo do Espírito Santo Silva Foundation, the museum was set up in 1953 to preserve the traditions and increase public awareness of the Portuguese decorative arts. The foundation was named after a banker who bought the 17th-century Palácio Azurara in 1947 to house his fine collection of furniture, textiles, silver and ceramics. Among the 17th- and 18th-century antiques displayed in this handsome mansion are many fine pieces in exotic woods, including an 18th-century rosewood backgammon and chess table. Also of note are the collections of 18th-century silver and Chinese porcelain, and the Arraiolos carpets (see p303). The spacious rooms still retain some original ceilings and azulejo panels.

In the adjoining building are workshops where artisans preserve the techniques of cabinet-making, bookbinding, gilding and other traditional crafts. Temporary exhibitions, lectures and concerts are also held in the palace.

St Vincent was proclaimed Lisbon's patron saint in 1173, when his relics were transferred from the Algarve (see p321) to a church on this site outside (fora) the city walls. Designed by Italian architect Filippo Terzi, and completed in 1627, the off-white façade is sober and symmetrical, in Italian Renaissance style, with towers either side and statues of saints Vincent, Augustine and Sebastian over the entrance. Inside, one is drawn immediately to Machado de Castro's Baroque canopy over the altar, flanked by life-size wooden statues.

The adjoining former Augustinian monastery, reached via the nave, retains its 16th-century cistern and vestiges of the former cloister but is visited for its 18th-century azulejos.

Among the panels in the entrance hall off the first cloister there are lively, though historically inaccurate, tile scenes of Afonso Henriques attacking Lisbon and Santarém. Around the cloisters the tiled rural scenes, surrounded by floral designs and cherubs, illustrating the fables of

The stalls of the so-called “Thieves’ Market” have occupied this site on the edge of the Alfama for over a century, laid out under the shade of trees or canopies. As the fame of this flea market has grown, bargains are increasingly hard to find amongst the mass of bric-a-brac, but a few of the vendors have interesting wrought-iron work, prints and tiles, as well as second-hand clothes. Evidence of Portugal’s colonial past is reflected in the stalls selling African statuary, masks and jewellery. Fish, vegetables and herbs are sold in the central wrought-iron marketplace.

One of Lisbon’s most striking landmarks, the soaring dome of Santa Engrácia punctuates the skyline in the east of the city. The original church collapsed in a storm in 1681. The first stone of the new Baroque monument, laid in 1682, marked the beginning of a 284-year saga which led to the invention of a saying that a Santa Engrácia job was never done. The church was not completed until 1966.

The interior is paved with coloured marble and crowned by a giant cupola. As the National Pantheon, it houses cenotaphs of Portuguese heroes, such as Vasco da Gama (see p106) and Afonso de Albuquerque, Viceroy of India (1502–15) on the left, and on the right Henry the Navigator (see p49). More contemporary tombs include that of the fadista Amália Rodrigues (see p65). A lift up to the dome offers a 360-degree panorama of the city.

This conspicuous house, faced with diamond-shaped stones (bicos), was built in 1523 for Brás de Albuquerque, illegitimate son of Afonso, Viceroy of India and conqueror of Goa and Malacca. The façade is an adaptation of a style popular in Europe during the 16th century. The two top storeys, ruined in the earthquake of 1755, were restored in the 1980s, recreating the original from old views of Lisbon in tile panels and engravings. In the interim the building was used for salting fish (Rua dos Bacalhoeiros means street of the cod fishermen). Once home to exhibitions, the Casa dos Bicos is now closed to the public.

In 1150, three years after Afonso Henriques recaptured Lisbon from the Moors, he built a cathedral for the first bishop of Lisbon, the English crusader Gilbert of Hastings, on the site of the old mosque. Sé is short for Sedes Episcopalis, the seat (or see) of a bishop. Devasted by three earth tremors in the 14th century, as well as the earthquake of 1755, and renovated over the centuries, the cathedral you see today blends a variety of architectural styles. The façade, with twin castellated belltowers and a splendid rose window, retains its solid Romanesque aspect. The gloomy interior, for the most part, is simple and austere, and hardly anything remains of the embellishment lavished upon it by King João V in the first half of the 18th century. Beyond the renovated Romanesque nave the ambulatory has nine Gothic chapels. The Capela de Santo Ildefonso contains the 14th-century sarcophagi of Lopo Fernandes Pacheco, companion in arms to King Afonso IV, and his wife, Maria Vilalobos. The bearded figure of the nobleman, sword in hand, and his wife, clutching a prayer book, are carved onto the tombs with their dogs sitting faithfully at their feet. In the adjacent chancel are the tombs of Afonso IV and his wife Dona Beatriz.

The Gothic cloister, reached via the third chapel in the ambulatory, has elegant double arches with some finely carved capitals. One of the chapels is still fitted with its 13th-century wrought-iron gate. Archaeological excavations in the cloister have unearthed various Roman and other remains.

To the left of the cathedral entrance the Franciscan chapel contains the font where the saint was baptized in 1195 and is decorated with a charming tiled scene of St Antony preaching to the fishes. The adjacent chapel contains a Baroque nativity scene made of cork, wood and terracotta by Machado de Castro (1766).

The treasury is at the top of the staircase at the right. It houses silver, ecclesiastical robes, statuary, illustrated manuscripts and a few relics associated with St Vincent, which were transferred to Lisbon from Cabo de São Vicente in 1173 (see p321). Legend has it that two sacred ravens kept a permanent vigil over the boat that transported the relics. The ravens and the boat became a symbol of the city of Lisbon, still very much in use today. It is also said that the descendants of the two ravens used to live in the cloisters of the cathedral.

SANTO ANTÓNIO (c.1195–1231)

The best-loved saint of the Lisboaetas is St Antony of Padua. Although born and brought up in Lisbon, he spent the last months of his life in Padua, Italy. St Antony joined the Franciscan Order in 1220, impressed by some crusading friars he had met at Coimbra, where he was studying. The friar was a learned and passionate preacher, renowned for his devotion to the poor and his ability to convert heretics. Many statues and paintings of St Antony depict him carrying the Infant Jesus on a book, while others show him preaching to the fishes, as St Francis preached to the birds.

In 1934 Pope Pius XI declared St Antony a patron saint of Portugal. The year 1995 saw the 800th anniversary of his birth – a cause for major celebrations throughout the city. Lisbon celebrates St Antony on 13 June, the day of the saint's death (see p31).

The popular little church of Santo António allegedly stands on the site of the house in which St Antony was born. The crypt, reached via the tiled sacristy on the left of the church, is all that remains of the original church destroyed by the earthquake of 1755. Work began on the new church in 1757 headed by Mateus Vicente, architect of the Basílica da Estrela (see p93) and was partially funded by donations collected by local children with the cry “a small coin for St Antony”. Even today the floor of the tiny chapel in the crypt is strewn with escudos and the walls are scrawled with devotional messages from worshippers.

The church's façade blends the undulating curves of the Baroque style with Neo-Classical Ionic columns on either side of the main portal. Inside, on the way down to the crypt, a modern azulejo panel commemorates the visit of Pope John Paul II in 1982. In 1995 the church was given a facelift for the saint's eighth centenary. It is traditional for young couples to visit the church on their wedding day and leave flowers for St Antony who is believed to bring good luck to new marriages.

Next door the small Museu Antoniano houses artefacts, relating to St Antony, as well as gold and silverware which used to decorate the church. The most charming exhibit is a 17th-century tiled panel of St Antony preaching to the fishes.

The working-class quarter of Graça developed at the end of the 19th century. Today, it is visited chiefly for the views from its miradouro (belvedere). The panorama of rooftops and skyscrapers is less spectacular than the view from the castle, but it is a popular spot, particularly in the early evenings when couples sit at café tables under the pines. Behind the miradouro stands an Augustinian monastery, founded in 1271 and rebuilt after the earthquake. Once a flourishing complex, the huge building is now used as barracks but the church, the Igreja da Graça, can still be visited. Inside, in the right transept, is the Senhor dos Passos, a representation of Christ carrying the cross on the way to Calvary. This figure, clad in brilliant purple clothes, is carried on a procession through Graça on the second Sunday in Lent. The azulejos on the altar front, dating from the 17th century, imitate the brocaded textiles usually draped over the altar.

Following the recapture of Lisbon from the Moors in 1147, King Afonso Henriques transformed their hilltop citadel into the residence of the Portuguese kings. In 1511 Manuel I built a more lavish palace in what is now the Praça do Comércio and the castle was used variously as a theatre, prison and arms depot. After the 1755 earthquake the ramparts remained in ruins until 1938 when Salazar (see pp56–7) began a complete renovation, rebuilding the “medieval” walls and adding gardens and wild-fowl. The castle may not be authentic but the gardens and the narrow streets of the Santa Cruz district within the walls make a pleasant stroll and the views are the finest in Lisbon.

BAIXA AND AVENIDA

From the ruins of Lisbon, devastated by the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), the Marquês de Pombal created an entirely new centre. Using a grid layout of streets, he linked the stately, arcaded Praça do Comércio beside the Tagus with the busy central square of Rossio. The streets were flanked by uniform, Neo-Classical buildings and named according to the shopkeepers and craftsmen who traded there.

Detail on statue of José I in Praça do Comércio

The Baixa (lower town) is still the commercial hub of the capital, housing banks, offices and shops. At its centre, Rossio is a popular meeting point with cafés, theatres and restaurants. The geometric layout of the area has been retained, but most of the buildings constructed since the mid-18th century have not adhered to Pombaline formality.

The streets are crowded by day, particularly the lively Rua Augusta, but after dark the quarter is almost deserted.

The complex, owned by the university of Lisbon, comprises two museums and four hectares (10 acres) of gardens. The botanical gardens have a distinct air of neglect. However, it is worth paying the entrance fee to wander among the exotic trees and dense paths of the gardens as they descend from the main entrance towards Rua da Alegriato. A magnificent avenue of lofty palms connects the two levels.

The Museu de História Natural (Natural History Museum) opens only for temporary exhibitions and these are well advertised throughout the city. The Museu da Ciência (Science Museum), whose exhibits demonstrate basic scientific principles, is popular with school children.

Avenida da Liberdade ②

Map 7 A2. www 2, 9, 36 & many other routes. M Restauradores, Avenida.

Following the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), the Marquês de Pombal created the Passeio Público (public promenade) in the area now occupied by the lower part of Avenida da Liberdade and Praça dos Restauradores.

Despite its name, enjoyment of the park was restricted to Lisbon's high society and walls and gates ensured the exclusion of the lower classes. In 1821, when the Liberals came to power, the barriers were pulled down and the Avenida and square became open to all.

The boulevard you see today was built in 1879–82 in the style of the Champs-Élysées in Paris. The wide tree-lined avenue became a focus for pageants, festivities and demonstrations.

A war memorial stands as a tribute to those who died in World War I. The avenue still retains a certain elegance with fountains and café tables shaded by trees, however, it no longer makes for a peaceful stroll. The once majestic thoroughfare, 90 m (295 ft) wide and decorated with abstract pavement patterns, is now divided by seven lanes of traffic linking Praça dos Restauradores and Praça Marquês de Pombal to the north. Some of the original mansions have been preserved, including the Neo-Classical Tivoli cinema at No. 188, with an original 1920s kiosk outside, and Casa Lambertini with its colourful mosaic decoration at No. 166. However, many of the Art Nouveau façades have unfortunately given way to newer ones occupied by offices, hotels or shopping complexes.

The square, distinguished by its soaring obelisk, erected in 1886, commemorates the country's liberation from the Spanish yoke in 1640 (see pp50–51). The bronze figures on the pedestal depict Victory, holding a palm and a crown, and Freedom. The names and dates inscribed on the obelisk are those of the battles of the War of Restoration.

On the west side, the Palácio Foz houses a tourist office and work premises. It was built by Francesco Savario Fabri in 1755–77 for the Marquês de Castelo-Melhor, and renamed after the Marquês de Foz, who lived here in the 19th century. The smart Avenida Palace Hotel on the southwest side of the square, was designed by José Luís Monteiro (1849–1942), who also built Rossio railway station (see p82).

Rossio 5

Map 6 B3.  2, 36, 44, 45 & many other routes. M Rossio.

Formally called Praça de Dom Pedro IV, this large square has been Lisbon's nerve centre for six centuries. During its history it has been the stage of bullfights, festival, military parades and gruesome autos da fé (see p51). However, today there is little more than an occasional political rally, and the sober Pombaline buildings,

Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II in Rossio illuminated by night

disfigured on the upper level by the remains of neon signs, are occupied at street level by souvenir shops, jewellers and cafés. Centre stage is a statue of Dom Pedro IV, the first emperor of independent Brazil (see p54). At the foot of the statue, the four female figures are allegories of Justice, Wisdom, Strength and Moderation.

In the mid-19 century the square was paved with wave-patterned mosaics which gave it the nickname of "Rolling Motion Square". The hand-cut grey and white stone cubes were the first such designs to decorate the city's pavements. Today, only a small central section of the design survives.

On the north side of Rossio is the Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II, named after Dom Pedro's daughter. The Neo-Classical structure was built in the 1840s by the Italian architect Fortunato Lodi. The interior was destroyed by fire in 1964 and reconstructed in the 1970s. On top of the pediment is Gil Vicente (1465–1536), the founder of Portuguese theatre.

Café Nicola on the west side of the square was a favourite meeting place among writers, including the poet Manuel du Bocage (1765–1805), who was notorious for his satires. Café Suiça, on the opposite side, is popular with tourists for its sunlit terrace.

Praça da Figueira 6

Before the 1755 earthquake (see pp62–3) the square next to Rossio was the site of the Hospital de Todos-os-Santos (All Saints). In Pombal's new design for the Baixa, the square took on the role of the city's central marketplace. In 1885 a covered market was introduced, but this was pulled down in the 1950s. Today, the four-storey buildings are given over to hotels, shops and cafés and the square is no longer a marketplace. Perhaps its most eye-catching feature is the multitude of pigeons that perch on the pedestal supporting Leopoldo de Almeida's bronze equestrian statue of João I, erected in 1971.

Ponsard, an apprentice of Alexandre Gustave Eiffel. Made of iron and embellished with filigree, it is one of the more eccentric features of the Baixa. The ticket office is located behind the tower on the steps up to Rua do Carmo.

Passengers can travel up and down inside the tower in one of two smart wood-paneled cabins with brass fittings, but the walkway linking them to the Largo do Carmo in the Bairro Alto, 32 m (105 ft) above, is currently closed for works.

The very top of the tower, reached via a tight spiral stairway, is given over to café tables. This high vantage point commands splendid views of Rossio, the grid pattern of the Baixa, the castle on the opposite hill, the river and the nearby ruins of the Carmo church. The fire that gutted the Chiado district in 1988 (see pp90) was extinguished very close to the lift.

Rua Augusta 8

Map 7 B4. M Rossio. ☐ 2, 36, 40, 714 & many other routes.

A lively pedestrianized street decorated with mosaic pavements and lined with boutiques and open-air cafés, Rua Augusta is the main tourist thoroughfare and the smartest in the Baixa. Street performers provide entertainment, while vendors sell lottery tickets, street art, books and souvenirs. The triumphal Arco da Rua Augusta frames the equestrian statue of José I in Praça do Comércio. Designed by the architect Santos de Carvalho to commemorate the city's recovery from the earthquake (see pp62–3), the arch was completed only in 1873.

The other main thoroughfares of the Baixa are Rua da Prata (silversmiths' street) and Rua do Ouro or Rua Aurea (goldsmiths' street). Cutting across these main streets full of shops and banks are smaller streets that give glimpses up to the Bairro Alto to the west and the Castelo de São Jorge (see pp76–7) to the east. Many of the streets retain shops that gave them their name: there are jewellers in Rua da Prata and Rua do Ouro, shoemakers in Rua dos Sapateiros and banks in Rua do Comércio.

The most incongruous sight in the heart of the Baixa is a small section of the Roman baths, located within the Banco Comercial Português in Rua dos Correiros. The ruins and mosaics can be seen from the street window at the rear side of the bank; alternatively you can book ahead to visit the "museum" on 213 211 000.

The elaborate Manueline doorway of the church is the only feature that survived from the original 16th-century Nossa Senhora da Misericórdia, which stood here until the 1755 earthquake. The portal is decorated with a profusion of Manueline detail including angels, beasts, flowers, armillary spheres and the cross of the Order of Christ (see pp22–3). In the tympanum, the Virgin Mary spreads her protective mantle over various contemporary figures. These include Pope Leo X, Manuel I (see pp46–7) and his sister, Queen Leonor, widow of João II. It was Leonor who founded the original Misericórdia (alms-house) on the site of a former synagogue.

Unfortunately, enjoyment of the portal is hampered by the stream of traffic hurtling along Rua da Alfândega and the cars that park right in front of the church. The gloomy interior has an unusual stucco ceiling; in the second chapel on the right is a statue of Our Lady of Restelo. This came from the Belém chapel where navigators prayed before embarking on their historic voyages east.

library and 70,000 books, was destroyed in the earthquake of 1755. In the rebuilding of the city, the square became the pièce de résistance of Pombal's Baixa design. The new palace occupied spacious arcaded buildings that extended around three sides of the square. After the revolution of 1910 (see pp54–5) these were converted into government administrative offices and painted Republican pink. However, they have since been repainted royal yellow.

The south side, graced by two square towers, looks across the wide expanse of the Tagus. This has always been the finest gateway to Lisbon, where royalty and ambassadors would alight and take the marble steps up from the river. You can still experience the dramatic approach by taking a ferry across from Cacilhas on the southern bank. However, today the spectacle is spoiled by the busy Avenida Infante Dom Henrique, which runs along the waterfront. In the centre of Praça do Comércio is the equestrian statue of King José I erected in 1775 by Machado de Castro, the leading Portuguese sculptor of the 18th century. The bronze horse, depicted trampling on serpents, earned the square its third name of “Black Horse Square”, used by English travellers and merchants. Over the years, however, the horse has acquired a green patina. The impressive triumphal arch on the north side of the square leads into Rua Augusta and is the gateway to the Baixa. Opened in January 2001, in the northwest of the square, the Lisboa Welcome Center has a tourist information service, gallery, restaurants and shops. In the opposite corner, stands Lisbon's oldest café, the Martinho da Arcada, formerly a haunt of the city's literati.

On 1 February 1908, King Carlos and his son, Luís Felipe, were assassinated as they were passing through the square (see p55). In 1974 the square saw the first uprising of the Armed Forces Movement which overthrew the Caetano regime in a bloodless revolution (see p57). For many years the area was used as a car park, but today is occasionally used for cultural events.

BAIRRO ALTO AND ESTRELA

Laid out in a grid pattern in the late 16th century, the hilltop Bairro Alto is one of the most picturesque districts of the city. First settled by rich citizens who moved out of the disreputable Alfama, by the 19th century it had become a run-down area frequented by prostitutes. Today, its small workshops and family-run tascas (cheap restaurants) exist alongside a thriving nightlife.

Very different in character to the heart of the Bairro Alto is the elegant commercial district known as the Chiado, where affluent Lisboaetas do their shopping. To the northwest, the Estrela quarter is centred on the huge domed basilica and popular gardens. The mid-18th century district of Lapa, to the southwest, is home to foreign embassies and large, smart residences.

The Bairro Alto (high quarter) is a fascinating area of cobbled streets, adjacent to the Carmo and Chiado areas. Since the 1980s, this has been Lisbon's best-known nightlife zone, with countless small bars and restaurants alongside the older Casas de Fado. Much restoration work has taken place over the last four years, and many new buildings now stand side by side with old, peeling houses and tiny grocery shops. In contrast, the Chiado is an area of elegant shops and old-style cafés that extends down from Praça Luís de Camões towards Rua do Carmo and the Baixa. Major renovation work has taken place since a fire in 1988 (see p90) destroyed many of the buildings.

Once a haunt of writers and intellectuals, Chiado is now an elegant shopping district. The 1920s Brasileira café, on Largo do Chiado, is adorned with gilded mirrors.

São Roque's plain façade belies a remarkably rich interior. The church was founded at the end of the 16th century by the Jesuit Order, then at the peak of its power. In 1742 the Chapel of St John the Baptist (last on the left) was commissioned by the prodigal João V from the Italian architects Luigi Vanvitelli and Nicola Salvi. Constructed in Rome and embellished with lapis lazuli, agate, alabaster, amethyst, precious marbles, gold, silver and mosaics, the chapel was given the Pope's blessing in the church of Sant'Antonio dei Portoghesi in Rome, dismantled and sent to Lisbon in three ships.

Among the many tiles in the church, the oldest and most interesting are those in the third chapel on the right, dating from the mid-16th century and dedicated to São Roque (St Roch), protector against the plague. Other features of the church are the scenes of the Apocalypse painted on the ceiling, and the sacristy, with its coffered ceiling and painted panels of the life of St Francis Xavier, the 16th-century missionary.

The Gothic ruins of this Carmelite church, built on a slope overlooking the Baixa, are evocative reminders of the devastation left by the earthquake of 1755. As the congregation was attending mass the shockwaves caused the church to collapse, depositing tons of masonry on to the people below. Founded in the late 14th century by Nuno Álvares Pereira, the commander who became a member of the Carmelite Order, the church was at one time the biggest in the city of Lisbon.

Nowadays the main body of the church and the chancel, whose roof withstood the violent shockwaves, house an archaeological museum with a small, heterogeneous collection of sarcophagi, statuary, ceramics and mosaics.

Among the more ancient finds from Europe are a remnant from a Visigothic pillar and a Roman tomb carved with reliefs depicting the Muses. There are also finds from Mexico and South America, including ancient mummies.

Outside the ruins, in the Largo do Carmo, stands the Chafariz do Carmo, an 18th-century fountain designed by Ângelo Belasco, elaborately decorated with four dolphins.

Chiado ③

Map 7 A4. 58, 100, 28.
Chiado.

Hypotheses abound for the origin of the word Chiado, in use since 1567. One of the most interesting recalls the creak (chiar) of the wheels of the carts as they negotiated the area's steep slopes. A second theory refers to the nickname given to the 16th-century poet António Ribeiro, "O Chiado".

THE CHIADO FIRE

On 25 August 1988 a disastrous fire began in a store in Rua do Carmo, the street that links the Baixa with the Bairro Alto. Fire engines were unable to enter this pedestrianized street and the fire spread into Rua Garrett. Along with shops and offices, many important 18th-century buildings were destroyed, the worst damage being in Rua do Carmo. The renovation project, which is now complete, has preserved many original façades, and was headed by Portuguese architect, Álvaro Siza Vieira.

Various statues of literary figures can be found in this area, known for its intellectual associations. Fernando Pessoa, Portugal's most famous 20th-century poet, is seated at a table outside the Café Brasileira, once a favourite rendezvous of intellectuals.

The name Chiado is often used to mean just Rua Garrett, the main shopping street of the area, named after the author and poet João Almeida Garrett (1799–1854). This elegant street, which descends from Largo do Chiado towards the Baixa, is known for its clothes shops, cafés and bookshops. Devastated by fire in 1988, the former elegance of this quarter has been recently restored.

On Largo do Chiado stand two Baroque churches: the Italian church, Igreja do Loreto, on the north side and opposite, Nossa Senhora da Encarnação, whose exterior walls are partly decorated with azulejos.

The National Museum of Contemporary Art, whose collection of 1850–1950 paintings could no longer be described as contemporary, changed its name in 1994 and moved to a stylishly restored warehouse. The paintings and sculpture are arranged over three floors in 12 rooms. Each room has a different theme illustrating the development from Romanticism to Modernism. The majority are works by Portuguese, often showing the marked influence from other European countries. This is particularly noticeable in the 19th-century landscape painters who had contact with artists from the French Barbizon School. The few international works of art on display include a collection of drawings by Rodin (1840–1917) and some French sculpture from the late 19th century. There are also temporary exhibitions which are held for “very new artists, preferably inspired by the permanent collection”.

The Portuguese word solar means mansion or manor house and the Solar do Vinho do Porto occupies the ground floor of an 18th-century mansion. The building was once owned by the German architect, Johann Friedrich Ludwig (Ludovice), who built the monastery at Mafra (see p154). The port wine institute of Oporto runs a pleasant if dated bar here for the promotion of port. Nearly 200 types of port are listed in the lengthy drinks menu, with every producer represented and including some rarities. Unfortunately, many of the listed wines are often unavailable. All but the vintage ports are sold by the glass, with prices ranging from one euro for the simplest ruby to 70 euros for a glass of 40-year-old tawny.

The Belvedere (miradouro) commands a sweeping view of eastern Lisbon, seen across the Baixa. A tiled map, conveniently placed against the balustrade, helps you locate the landmarks in the city below. The panorama extends from the battlements of the Castelo de São Jorge (see pp76–7), clearly seen surrounded by trees on the hill to the southeast, to the 18th-century church of Penha da França in the northwest. The large monastery complex of the Igreja da Graça (see p73) is also visible on the hill, and in the distance São Vicente de Fora (see p71) is recognizable by the symmetrical towers that flank its white façade.

Benches and ample shade from the trees make this terrace a pleasant stop after the steep walk up Calçada da Glória from the Baixa. Alternatively, the yellow funicular, Elevador da Glória, will drop you off nearby.

The memorial in the garden, erected in 1904, depicts Eduardo Coelho (1835–89), founder of the newspaper Diário de Notícias, and below him a ragged paper boy running with copies of the famous daily. This area was once the centre of the newspaper industry, however the modern printing presses have now moved to more spacious premises west of the city.

The view is most attractive at sunset and by night when the castle is floodlit and the terrace becomes a popular meeting point for young Lisboaetas.

Praça da Estrela. Map 4 D2. 9, 720, 738. 25, 28. 7am–midnight daily.

Laid out in the middle of the 19th century, opposite the Basílica da Estrela, the popular gardens are a focal part of the Estrela quarter. Local families congregate here at weekends to feed the ducks and carp in the lake, sit at the waterside café or wander among the flower beds, plants and trees. The formal gardens are planted with herbaceous borders and shrubs surrounding plane trees and elms. The central feature of the park is a green wrought-iron bandstand, decorated with elegant filigree, where musicians strike up in the summer months. This was built in 1884 and originally stood on the Passeio Público, before the creation of Avenida da Liberdade (see p44).

The English Cemetery to the north of the gardens is best known as the burial place of Henry Fielding (1707–54), the English novelist and playwright who died in Lisbon at the age of 47. The Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon, published posthumously in 1775, recounts his last voyage to Portugal made in a fruitless attempt to recover his failing health.

The tomb of the pious Maria I in the Basílica da Estrela

In the second half of the 18th century Maria I (see p167), daughter of José I, vowed she would build a church if she bore a son and heir to the throne. Her wish was granted and construction of the basilica began in 1779. Her son José, however, died of smallpox two years before the completion of the church in 1790. The huge domed basilica, set on a hill in the west of the city, is one of Lisbon's great landmarks. A simpler version of the basilica at Mafra (see p154), the church was built by architects from the Mafra School in late Baroque and Neo-Classical style. The façade is flanked by twin belltowers and decorated with an array of statues of saints and allegorical figures.

The spacious, somewhat awe-inspiring interior, where light streams down from the pierced dome, is clad in grey, pink and yellow marble. The elaborate Empire-style tomb of Queen Maria I, who died in Brazil, lies in the right transept. Locked in a room nearby is Machado de Castro's extraordinary Nativity scene, composed of over 500 cork and terracotta figures. (To see it, ask the sacristan.)

Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga 11

15th-century wood carving of St George

Portugal's national art collection is housed in a 17th-century palace that was built for the counts of Alvor. In 1770 it was acquired by the Marquês de Pombal and remained in the possession of his family for over a century. Inaugurated in 1884, the museum is known to locals as the Museu das Janelas Verdes, referring to the former green windows of the palace. In 1940 a modern annexe (including the main façade) was added. This was built on the site of the St Albert Carmelite monastery, which was partially demolished between 1910 and 1920. The only surviving feature was the chapel, now integrated into the museum.

Exploring the Collections of the Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga

The Museum has the largest collection of paintings in Portugal and is particularly strong on early religious works by Portuguese artists. The majority of exhibits came from convents and monasteries following the suppression of religious orders in 1834. There are also extensive displays of sculpture, silverware, porcelain and applied arts giving an overview of Portuguese art from the Middle Ages to the 19th century, complemented by many fine European and Oriental pieces. The theme of the discoveries is ever-present, illustrating Portugal's links with Brazil, Africa, India, China and Japan.

EUROPEAN ART

Paintings by European artists, dating from the 14th to the 19th century, are arranged chronologically on the ground floor. Unlike the Portuguese art, most of the works were donated from private collections, contributing to the great diversity of works on display. The first rooms, dedicated to the 14th and 15th centuries, trace the transition from medieval Gothic taste to the aesthetic of the Renaissance.

The painters best represented in the European Art section are 16th-century German and Flemish artists. Notable works are St Jerome by Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528), Salomé by Lucas Cranach the Elder (1472–1553), Virgin and Child by Hans Memling (c.1430–94) and The Temptations of St Antony by the great Flemish master of fantasy, Hieronymus Bosch (1450–1516). Of the small number of Italian works, the finest are St Augustine by the Renaissance painter, Piero della Francesca (c.1420–92) and a graceful early altar panel representing the Resurrection by Raphael (1483–1520).

Some Portuguese painters, including Josefa de Óbidos (see p51) and Gregório Lopes (1490–1550), are also displayed in the galleries of European art.

PORTUGUESE PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

Many of the earliest works of art are by the Portuguese primitive painters who were influenced by the realistic detail of Flemish artists. There had always been strong trading links between Portugal and Flanders and in the 15th and 16th centuries several painters of Flemish origin, for example Frey Carlos of Évora, set up workshops in Portugal.

Pride of place, however, goes to the São Vicente de Fora polyptych, the most important painting of 15th-century Portuguese art and one that has become a symbol of national pride in the Age of Discovery. Painted in about 1467–70, and generally believed to be by Nuno Gonçalves, the altarpiece portrays the Adoration of St Vincent, patron saint of Portugal, surrounded by dignitaries, knights and monks as well as fishermen and beggars. The accurate portrayal of contemporary figures makes the painting an invaluable historical and social document.

Later works include a 16th-century portrait of the young Dom Sebastião (see pp46–7) by Cristóvão de Morais and paintings by Neo-Classical artist Domingos António de Sequeira.

The museum's sculpture collection has many Gothic polychrome stone and wood statues of Christ, the Virgin and saints. There are also statues from the 17th century and an 18th-century nativity scene by Machado de Castro in the Chapel of St Albert.

PORTUGUESE AND CHINESE CERAMICS

The extensive collection of ceramics enables visitors to trace the evolution of Chinese porcelain and Portuguese faïence and to see the influence of oriental designs on Portuguese pieces, and vice versa. From the 16th century Portuguese ceramics show a marked influence of Ming, and conversely the Chinese pieces bear Portuguese motifs such as coats of arms. By the mid-18th century individual potters had begun to develop an increasingly personalized, European style, with popular, rustic designs. The collection also includes ceramics from Italy, Spain and the Netherlands.

Chinese porcelain vase, 16th century

ORIENTAL AND AFRICAN ART

The collection of ivories and furniture, with their European motifs, further illustrates the reciprocal influences of Portugal and her colonies. The 16th-century predilection for the exotic gave rise to a huge demand for items such as carved ivory hunting horns from Africa. The fascinating 16th-century Japanese Namban screens show the Portuguese trading in Japan. Namban-jin (barbarians from the south) is the name the Japanese gave to the Portuguese.

SILVER, GOLD AND JEWELLERY

Among the museum's fine collection of ecclesiastical treasures are King Sancho I's gold cross (1214) and the Belém monstrance (1506) (see p24). Also on display is the 16th-century Madre de Deus reliquary which allegedly holds a thorn from the crown of Christ. Highlight of the foreign collection is a sumptuous set of rare 18th-century silver tableware. Commissioned by José I from the Paris workshop of Thomas Germain, the 1,200 pieces include intricately decorated tureens, sauce boats and salt cellars. The rich collection of jewels came from the convents, originally donated by members of the nobility and wealthy bourgeoisie on entering the religious orders.

APPLIED ARTS

Furniture, tapestries and textiles, liturgical vestments and bishops' mitres are among the wide range of objects on display. The furniture collection includes many Medieval and Renaissance pieces, as well as Baroque and Neo-classical items from the reigns of King João V, King José and Queen Maria I. Of the foreign furniture, French pieces from the 18th century are prominent.

The textiles include 17th-century bedspreads, tapestries, many of Flemish origin, such as the Baptism of Christ (16th century), embroidered rugs and Arraiolos carpets (see p303).

BELÉM

At the mouth of the River Tagus, where the caravels set sail on their voyages of discovery, Belém is inextricably linked with Portugal's Golden Age (see pp46–9). When Manuel I came to power in 1495 he reaped the profits of those heady days of expansion, building grandiose monuments and churches that mirrored the spirit of the time. Two of the finest examples of the exuberant and exotic Manueline style of architecture (see pp24–5) are the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos and the Torre de Belém.

Generosity, statue at entrance to Palácio da Ajuda

Today Belém is a spacious, relatively green suburb with many museums, parks and gardens, as well as an attractive riverside setting with cafés and a promenade. On sunny days there is a distinct seaside feel to the embankment.

Before the Tagus receded, the monks in the monastery used to look out onto the river and watch the boats set forth. In contrast today several lanes of traffic along the busy Avenida da Índia cut central Belém off from the picturesque waterfront, and silver and yellow trains rattle regularly past.

Stone caravel,
Jerónimos monastery

Portugal's former maritime glory, expressed in the imposing, exuberant buildings such as the Jerónimos monastery, is evident all around Belém. In Salazar's (see p56) attempted revival of awareness of Portugal's Golden Age, the area along the waterfront, which had silted up since the days of the caravels, was restructured to celebrate the former greatness of the nation. Praça do Império was laid out for the Exhibition of the Portuguese World in 1940 and Praça Afonso de Albuquerque was dedicated to Portugal's first viceroy of India. The royal Palácio de Belém, restored with gardens and a riding school by João V in the 18th century, briefly housed the royal family after the 1755 earthquake.

Built by the Conde de Aveiras in 1559, this palace once had gardens bordering the river. In the 18th century it was bought by João V, who radically altered it, rendering the interior suitably lavish for his amorous liaisons.

When the 1755 earthquake (see pp62–3) struck, the king, José I, and his family were staying here. Fearing another earth tremor, they set up camp in tents in the palace grounds and the building was used as a hospital. Today the elegant palace is the residence of the President of Portugal. The Presidential Museum allows visitors to get acquainted with former presidents through their personal items and state gifts, as well as the official portrait gallery.

The museum's collection of coaches is arguably the finest in Europe. Occupying the east wing of the Palácio de Belém, this was formerly the riding school built by the Italian architect Giacomo Azzolini in 1726. Seated in the upper gallery, the royal family used to watch their beautiful Lusitanian horses (see p298) performing in the arena. In 1905 the riding school was turned into a museum by King Carlos's wife, Dona Amélia, whose pink riding cloak is on display.

Made in Portugal, Italy, France, Austria and Spain, the coaches span three centuries and range from the plain to the preposterous. The main gallery, in Louis XVI style with splendid painted ceiling, is the setting for two rows of coaches created for Portuguese royalty.

The collection starts with the comparatively plain 17th-century red leather and wood coach of Philip II of Spain (see pp50–51). The coaches become increasingly sumptuous, interiors lined with red velvet and gold, exteriors profusely carved and decorated with allegories and royal coats of arms. The rows end with three huge Baroque coaches made in Rome for the Portuguese ambassador to the Vatican, Dom Rodrigo Almeida e Menezes, the Marquês de Abrantes. The epitome of pomp and extravagance, these 5-tonne carriages are embellished with a plush interior and life-size gilded statues.

The neighbouring gallery has further examples of royal carriages, including two-wheeled cabriolets, landaus and pony-drawn chaises used by young members of the royal family. There is also a 19th-century Lisbon cab, painted black and green, the colours of taxis right up to the 1990s. The 18th-century Eyeglass Chaise, whose black leather hood is pierced by sinister eye-like windows, was made during the era of Pombal (see pp52–3) when lavish decoration was discouraged. The upper gallery has a collection of harnesses, court costumes and portraits of members of the royal family.

Also known as the Jardim do Ultramar, this peaceful park with ponds, waterfowl and peacocks, attracts surprisingly few visitors. Laid out at the beginning of the 20th century as the research centre of the Institute for Tropical Sciences, it is more of an arboretum than a flower garden. The emphasis is on rare and endangered tropical and subtropical trees and plants. Among the most striking are dragon trees, native to the Canary Islands and Madeira, monkey puzzle trees from South America and a handsome avenue of Washington palms. The oriental garden with its streams, bridges and hibiscus is heralded by a large Chinese-style gateway which represented Macau in the Exhibition of the Portuguese World in 1940 (see p100).

The research buildings and Museu Tropical are housed in the Palácio dos Condes da Calheta, whose interior walls are covered with azulejos spanning three centuries. The museum has 50,000 dried plant specimens and

The long west wing of the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos (see pp104–5), formerly the monks' dormitory, has been a museum since 1893. Reconstructed in the middle of the 19th century, the building is a poor imitation of the Manueline original. The museum houses Portugal's main archaeological research centre and the exhibits, from sites all over the country, include a gold Iron Age brace-

The main Egyptian and Greco-Roman section is strong on funerary art, featuring figurines, tombstones, masks, terracotta amulets and funeral cones inscribed with hieroglyphs alluding to the solar system. The dimly lit Room of Treasures has an exquisite collection of coins, necklaces, bracelets and other

A monument to the wealth of the Age of Discovery (see pp48–9), the monastery is the culmination of Manueline architecture (see pp20–21), commissioned by Manuel I in around 1501, after Vasco da Gama's return from his historic voyage, it was financed largely by "pepper money", a tax levied on spices precious stones and gold.

Various masterbuilders worked on the building, the most notable of whom was Diogo Boitac, replaced by João de Castilho in 1517. The monastery was cared for by the Order of St Jerome (Hieronymites) until 1834, when all religious orders were disbanded.

The Maritime Museum was inaugurated in 1962 in the west wing of the Jerónimos monastery (see pp104–5). It was here, in the chapel built by Henry the Navigator (see p49), that mariners took mass before embarking on their voyages. A hall about the Discoveries illustrates the progress in ship-building from the mid-15th century, capitalizing on the experience of long-distance explorers. Small replicas show the transition from the bark to the lateen-rigged caravel, through the faster square-rigged caravel, to the Portuguese nau. Also here are navigational instruments, astrolabes and replicas of 16th-century maps showing the world as it was known then. The stone pillars, carved with the Cross of the Knights of Christ, are replicas of the types of padrão set up as monuments to Portuguese sovereignty on the lands discovered.

VASCO DA GAMA (C.1460–1524)

In 1498 Vasco da Gama sailed around the Cape of Good Hope and opened the sea route to India (see pp48–9). Although the Hindu ruler of Calicut, who received him wearing diamond and ruby rings, was not impressed by his humble offerings of cloth and wash basins, da Gama returned to Portugal with a cargo of spices. In 1502 he sailed again to India, establishing Portuguese trade routes in the Indian Ocean. João III nominated him Viceroy of India in 1524, but he died of a fever soon after.

Standing prominently on the Belém waterfront, this massive angular monument, the Padrão dos Descobrimentos, was built in 1960 to mark the 500th anniversary of the death of Henry the Navigator (see p49). The 52-m (170-ft) high monument, commissioned by the Salazar regime, commemorates the mariners, royal patrons and all those who took part in the development of the Portuguese Age of Discovery. The monument is designed in the shape of a caravel, with Portugal's coat of arms on the sides and the sword of the Royal House of Avis rising above the entrance. Henry the Navigator stands at the prow with a caravel in hand. In two sloping lines either side of the monument are stone statues of Portuguese heroes linked with the Age of Discovery. On the western face these include Dom Manuel I holding an armillary sphere, the poet Camões with a copy of Os Lusíadas, the painter Nuno Gonçalves with a paint pallet as well as famous navigators, cartographers and kings.

On the monument's north side, the huge mariner's compass cut into the paving stone was a gift from South Africa in 1960. The central map, dotted with mermaids and galleons, shows the routes of the discoverers in the 15th and 16th centuries. Inside the monument a lift whisks you up to the sixth floor where steps then lead to the top for a splendid panorama of Belém. The basement level is used for temporary exhibitions, but not necessarily related to the Discoveries.

The rather ostentatious Padrão is not to everyone's taste but the setting is undeniably splendid and the caravel design is imaginative. The monument looks particularly dramatic when viewed from the west in the light of the late afternoon sun.

The drab building on the waterfront, between the Monument to the Discoveries and the Torre de Belém (see p108), houses the museum of Portuguese folk art and traditional handicrafts, opened in 1948. While the rooms housing the permanent collections are closed for alterations indefinitely, a temporary exhibition space is open. The exhibits are arranged by province and include local pottery, costumes, agricultural tools, musical instruments, jewellery and brightly coloured saddles. The display gives a vivid indication of the diversity between the different regions. Each area has its speciality such as the colourful ox yokes and ceramic cocks from the Minho, basketware from Trás-os-Montes, cowbells and

Arms of Manuel I

Commissioned by Manuel I, the tower was built as a fortress in the middle of the Tagus in 1515–21. Starting point for the navigators who set out to discover the trade routes, this Manueline gem became a symbol of Portugal's great era of expansion. The real beauty of the tower lies in the decoration of the exterior. Adorned with rope carved in stone, it has openwork balconies, Moorish-style watchtowers and distinctive battlements in the shape of shields. The Gothic interior below the terrace, which served as a storeroom for arms and a prison, is very austere but the private quarters in the tower are worth visiting for the loggia and the panorama.

Also known as the Capela de São Jerónimo, this elegant little chapel was constructed in 1514 when Diogo Boitac was working on the Jerónimos monastery (see pp104–5). Although a far simpler building, it is also Manueline in style and may have been built to a design by Boitac. The only decorative elements on the monolithic chapel are the four pinnacles, corner gargoyles and Manueline portal. Perched on a quiet hill above Belém, the chapel has fine views down to the River Tagus and a path from the terrace winds down the hill towards the Torre de Belém.

Built in 1760, the church was founded by King José I in gratitude for his escape from an assassination plot on this site in 1758. The king was returning from a secret liaison with a lady of the noble Távora family when his carriage was attacked and a bullet hit him in the arm. Pombal (see pp52–3), whose power had now become absolute, used this as an excuse to get rid of his enemies in the Távora family, accusing them of conspiracy. In 1759 they were savagely tortured and executed. Their deaths are commemorated by a pillar in Beco do Chão Salgado, off Rua de Belém.

The Neo-Classical domed church has a marble-clad interior and a small chapel containing the tomb of Pombal, who died a year after being banished from Lisbon.

Laid out by Pombal (see p19) in 1768, these Italian-style gardens provide a pleasant respite from Belém's noisy suburbs. The entrance (wrought-iron gates in a pink wall) is easy to miss. The park has 5,000 plant species from África, Asia and America. Notable features are the 400-year-old dragon tree, native of Madeira, and the flamboyant 18th-century fountain decorated with serpents, winged fish, sea horses and mythical creatures. A majestic terrace looks out over the lower level of the gardens.

The royal palace, destroyed by fire in 1795, was replaced in the early 19th century by this Neo-Classical building. Left incomplete when the royal family was forced into exile in Brazil in 1807 (see pp52–3), the palace only became a permanent residence of the royal family when Luís I became king in 1861 and married an Italian Princess, Maria Pia di Savoia. No expense was spared in furnishing the apartments, which are decorated with silk wallpaper, Sèvres porcelain and crystal chandeliers.

A prime example of regal excess is the extraordinary Saxe Room, a wedding present to Maria Pia from the King of Saxony, in which every piece of furniture is decorated with Meissen porcelain. On the first floor the huge Banqueting Hall, with crystal chandeliers, silk-covered chairs and an allegory of the birth of João VI on the frescoed ceiling, is truly impressive. At the other end of the palace, Luís I's Neo-Gothic painting studio is a more intimate display of intricately carved furniture.

FURTHER AFIELD

The majority of the outlying sights, which include some of Lisbon's finest museums, are easily accessible by bus or metro from the city centre. A ten-minute walk north from the gardens of the Parque Eduardo VII brings you to Portugal's great cultural complex, the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, set in a pleasant park. Few tourists go further north than the Gulbenkian, but the Museu da Cidade on Campo Grande is worth a detour for its fascinating overview of Lisbon's history.

The charming Palácio Fronteira, decorated with splendid tiles, is one of the many villas built for the aristocracy that now overlook the city suburbs. Those interested in tiles will also enjoy the Museu Nacional do Azulejo in the cloisters of the Madre de Deus convent.

Visitors with a spare half day can cross the Tagus to the Cristo Rei monument. North-east of Lisbon is the vast oceanarium, Oceanário de Lisboa, in the Parque das Nações, which includes other family-oriented attractions, hotels and shops.

Originally called the Ponte Salazar after the dictator who had it built in 1966, Lisbon's suspension bridge was renamed (like many other monuments) to commemorate the revolution of 25 April 1974 which restored democracy to Portugal (see p57).

Inspired by San Francisco's Golden Gate in the United States, this steel construction stretches for 2 km (half a mile). The lower tier was modified in 1999 to accommodate the Fertagus, a much-needed railway across the Tagus.

The bridge's notorious traffic congestion has been partly resolved by the opening of the 11-km (7-mile) Vasco da Gama bridge. Spanning the river from Montijo to Sacavém, north of the Parque das Nações, this bridge was completed in 1998.

In the 18th century, the Marquês de Pombal (see pp52–3) planted mulberry trees (amoreiras) on the western edge of the city to create food for silk worms. Hence the name of the futuristic shopping centre that was built here in 1985. This vast complex, with pink and blue towers, houses 370 shops, ten cinemas, and many restaurants. Once an incongruous feature, it now draws the crowds, particularly the young, and has been joined by other new buildings and shopping centres in the area.

At the top of the Avenida da Liberdade (see p82), traffic thunders round the “Rotunda” (roundabout), as the praça is also known. At the centre is a 1934 monument to Pombal. The despotic statesman, who virtually ruled Portugal from 1750–77, stands on the top of the column, his hand on a lion (symbol of power) and his eyes directed down to the Baixa, whose creation he masterminded (see pp62–3).

Allegorical images depicting Pombal’s political, educational and agricultural reforms decorate the base of the monument. Standing figures represent Coimbra University, where he introduced a new Faculty of Science. Broken blocks of stone at the foot of the monument and tidal waves flooding the city are an allegory of the destruction caused by the 1755 earthquake.

An underpass, which is not always open, leads to the centre of the square where the sculptures on the pedestal and the inscriptions relating to Pombal’s achievements can be seen. Nearby, the well-tended Parque Eduardo VII extends northwards behind the square. The paving stones around the Rotunda are decorated with a mosaic of Lisbon’s coat of arms. Similar patterns decorate many of the city’s streets and squares. A tunnel is being built under the roundabout to ease traffic. Until the work is completed, the area is likely to be heavily congested.

The largest park in central Lisbon was named in honour of King Edward VII of England who came to Lisbon in 1902 to reaffirm the Anglo-Portuguese alliance. The wide grassy slope that extends for 25 hectares (62 acres) was laid out as Parque de Liberdade, a continuation of Avenida da Liberdade (see p82) in the late 19th century. Neatly clipped box hedging, flanked by mosaic patterned walkways, stretches uphill from the Praça Marquês de Pombal to a belvedere at the top. Here, in the flower-filled landscaped garden dedicated to Amália Rodrigues (see p65), you will find the Fat Mama sculpture by Botero. From here there are fine views of the city. On clear days it is possible to see as far as the Serra da Arrábida (see p169).

Located at the northwest corner, the most inspiring feature of this rather monotonous park is the jungle-like Estufa Fria, or greenhouse, where exotic plants, streams and waterfalls provide an oasis from the city streets.

There are in fact two greenhouses: in the Estufa Fria (cold greenhouse), palms push through the slatted bamboo roof and paths wind through a forest of ferns, fuchsias, flowering shrubs and banana trees; the Estufa Quente, or hot-house, is a glassed-over garden with lush plants, water-lily ponds and cacti, as well as tropical birds in cages.

Near the estufas a pond with large carp and a play area in the shape of a galleon are popular with children. On the east side the Pavilhão Carlos Lopes, named after the 1984 Olympic marathon winner, is now a venue for concerts and conferences. The façade is decorated with a series of modern tiled scenes.

Museu Calouste Gulbenkian 6

Thanks to a wealthy Armenian oil magnate, Calouste Gulbenkian (see p117), with wide-ranging tastes and an eye for a masterpiece, the museum has one of the finest collections of art in Europe. Inaugurated in 1969, the purpose-built museum was created as part of the charitable institution bequeathed to Portugal by the multimillionaire. The design of the building, set in a spacious park allowing natural light to fill some of the rooms, was devised to create the best layout for the founder's varied collection.

Exploring the Gulbenkian Collection

Housing Calouste Gulbenkian's unique collection of art, the museum ranks with the Museu de Arte Antiga (see pp94–7) as the finest in Lisbon. The exhibits, which span over 4,000 years from ancient Egyptian statuettes, through translucent Islamic glassware, to Art Nouveau brooches, are displayed in spacious and well-lit galleries, many overlooking the gardens or courtyards. The museum is quite small, however each individual work of art, from the magnificent pieces that make up the rich display of Oriental and Islamic art, to the selection of European paintings and furniture, is worthy of attention.

EGYPTIAN, CLASSICAL AND MESOPOTAMIAN ART

Priceless treasures chart the evolution of Egyptian art from the Old Kingdom (c.2700 BC) to the Roman Period (1st century BC). The exhibits range from an alabaster bowl of the 3rd Dynasty to a surprisingly modern-looking blue terracotta torso of a statuette of Venus Anadyomene from the Roman period.

Outstanding pieces in the Classical art section are a magnificent red-figure Greek vase and 11 Roman medallions, found in Egypt. These are believed to have been struck to commemorate the Olympic games held in Macedonia in AD 242 in honour of Alexander the Great. In the Mesopotamian art section the large Assyrian alabaster bas-relief represents the winged genius of Spring, carrying a container of sacred water (9th century BC).

ORIENTAL ISLAMIC ART

Being Armenian, Calouste Gulbenkian had a keen interest in art from the Near and Middle East. The Oriental Islamic gallery has a fine collection of Persian and Turkish carpets, textiles, costumes and ceramics. In the section overlooking the courtyard, the Syrian mosque lamps and bottles commissioned by princes and sultans, are beautifully decorated with coloured enamel on glass. The Armenian section has some exquisite illustrated manuscripts from the 16th to 18th centuries, produced by Armenian refugees in Istanbul, Persia and the Crimea.

Late 16th-century Persian faience tile from the School of Isfahan

FAR EASTERN ART

Calouste Gulbenkian acquired a large collection of Chinese porcelain between 1910 and 1930. One of the rarest pieces is the small blue-glazed Roman porcelain bowl from the Yüan Dynasty (1279–1368), on the right as you go into the gallery. The majority of exhibits, however, are the later, more exuberantly decorated famille verte porcelain and the K'ang Hsi biscuitware of the 17th and 18th centuries. Further exhibits from the Far East are translucent Chinese jades and other semi-precious stones, Japanese prints, brocaded silk hangings and bound books, and lacquerwork.

EUROPEAN ART (14TH–17TH CENTURIES)

Illuminated manuscripts, rare printed books and medieval ivories introduce the section on Western art. The delicately sculpted 14th-century ivory diptychs and triptychs, made in France, show scenes from the lives of Christ and the Virgin.

The collection of early European paintings starts with panels of St Joseph and St Catherine by Rogier van der Weyden, leading painter of the mid-15th century in Flanders. Italian Renaissance painting is represented by Cima da Conegliano's Sacra Conversazione from the late 15th century and Domenico Ghirlandai's Portrait of a Young Woman (1485).

The collection progresses to Flemish and Dutch works of the 17th century, including two works by Rembrandt: Portrait of an Old Man (1645), a masterpiece of psychological penetration, and Alexander the Great (1660), said to have been modelled on Rembrandt's son, Titus, and previously thought to have portrayed the Greek goddess Pallas Athena. Rubens is represented by three paintings, the most remarkable of which is the Portrait of Hélène Fourment (1630), the artist's second wife.

French ivory triptych of Scenes from the Life of the Virgin (14th century)

The gallery beyond the Dutch and Flemish paintings has tapestries and textiles from Italy and Flanders, Italian ceramics, rare 15th-century medallions and sculpture.

FRENCH 18TH-CENTURY DECORATIVE ARTS

Some remarkably elaborate Louis XV and Louis XVI pieces, many commissioned by royalty, feature in the collection of French 18th-century furniture. The exhibits, many of them embellished with laquer panels, ebony and bronze, are grouped together according to historical style with Beauvais and "chinoiserie" Aubusson tapestries decorating the walls.

The French silverware from the same period, much of which once adorned the dining tables of Russian palaces, includes lavishly decorated soup tureens, salt-cellars and platters.

Louis XV chest of drawers inlaid with ebony and bronze

EUROPEAN ART (18TH–19TH CENTURIES)

The art of the 18th century is dominated by French painters, including Watteau (1684–1721), Fragonard (1732–1806) and Boucher (1703–70). The most celebrated piece of sculpture is a statue of Diana by Jean-Antoine Houdon. Commissioned in 1780 by the Duke of Saxe-Gotha for his gardens, it became one of the principal exhibits in the Hermitage in Russia during the 19th and early 20th centuries.

One whole room is devoted to views of Venice by the 18th-century Venetian painter Francesco Guardi, and a small collection of British art includes works by leading 18th-century portraitists, such as Gainsborough's Portrait of Mrs Loundes-Stone (c.1775) and Romney's Portrait of Mrs Constable (1787). There are also two stormy seascapes by JMW Turner (1775–1851).

French 19th-century landscape painting is well represented here, reflecting Gulbenkian's preference for naturalism, with works by the Barbizon school, the Realists and the Impressionists. The best-known paintings in the section, however, are probably Manet's Boy with Cherries, painted in about 1858 at the beginning of the artist's career, and Boy Blowing

Bubbles, painted about 1867. Renoir's Portrait of Madame Claude Monet was painted in about 1872 when the artist was staying with Monet at his country home in Argenteuil, in the outskirts of Paris.

LALIQUE COLLECTION

The tour of the museum ends with an entire room filled with the flamboyant creations of French Art Nouveau jeweller, René Lalique (1860–1945). Gulbenkian was a close friend of Lalique's and he acquired many of the pieces of jewellery, glassware and ivory on display here directly from the artist. Inlaid with semi-precious stones and covered with gold leaf or enamel, the brooches, necklaces, vases and combs are decorated with the dragonfly, peacock or sensual female nude motifs characteristic of Art Nouveau.

CALOUSTE GULBENKIAN

Born in Scutari (Turkey) in 1869, Gulbenkian started his art collection at the age of 14 when he bought some ancient coins in a bazaar. In 1928 he was granted a 5 per cent stake in four major oil companies, including BP and Shell, in thanks for his part in the transfer of the assets of the Turkish Petroleum Company to those four companies. He thereby earned himself the nickname of "Mr Five Percent". With the wealth he accumulated, Gulbenkian was able to indulge his passion for fine works of art. During World War II, he went to live in neutral Portugal and, on his death in 1955, bequeathed his estate to the Portuguese in the form of a charitable trust. The Foundation supports many cultural activities and has its own orchestra, libraries, ballet company and concert halls.

The Modern Art Museum lies across the gardens from the Calouste Gulbenkian museum and is part of the same cultural foundation (see p117).

The permanent collection features paintings and sculpture by Portuguese artists from the turn of the 20th century to the present day.

The most famous painting is the striking portrait of poet Fernando Pessoa in the Café Irmãos Unidos (1964) by José de Almada Negreiros (1893–1970), a main exponent of Portuguese Modernism. Also of interest are paintings by Eduardo Viana (1881–1967), Amadeo de Sousa Cardoso (1887–1910), as well as contemporary artists such as Paula Rego, Rui Sanches, Graça Morais and Teresa Magalhães.

The museum is light and spacious, with pleasant gardens and a busy cafeteria.

Dedicated to the history of Lisbon's water supply, this small but informative museum was imaginatively created around the city's first steam pumping station. It commemorates Manuel da Maia, the 18th-century engineer who masterminded the Águas Livres aqueduct (see p122). The excellent layout of the museum earned it the Council of Europe Museum Prize in 1990.

Pride of place goes to four lovingly preserved steam engines, one of which still functions (by electricity) and can be switched on for visitors. The development of technology relating to the city's water supply is documented with photographs. Particularly interesting are the sections on the Águas Livres aqueduct and the Alfama's 17th-century Chafariz d'El Rei, one of Lisbon's first fountains. Locals used to queue at one of six founts, depending on their social status.

Originally the site of Expo '98, Parque das Nações has become a new focus for Lisbon. With its contemporary architecture, family-oriented attractions and modern living spaces, the park has renewed the eastern waterfront, an industrial wasteland as recently as 1990. Even from a distance, the soaring geometry of the platform canopies over Santiago Calatrava's Oriente Station set the architectural tone for the development. The impressive Portugal Pavilion, designed by the Portuguese architect Álvaro Siza Vieira has an enormous reinforced-concrete roof suspended almost miraculously, like a sailcloth, above its forecourt.

The Pavilhão do Conhecimento – Ciência Viva (Knowledge and Science Pavilion) is a modern museum of science and technology that houses several interactive exhibitions. Views can be had from the cable car that lifts visitors from one end of the park to the other or the Torre Vasco da Gama, Lisbon's tallest building. The promenade along the river, which offers delightful views of the Tagus at its widest and the impressive Vasco da Gama bridge, is not to be missed.

The 10-mile (17-km) long Vasco da Gama bridge is the longest in Europe and was completed in 1998. Also in the area are the Sony Plaza and Pavilhão Atlântico, which host concerts and sporting events.

Centrepiece of Expo '98 and now the main attraction at Parque das Nações, the somewhat aircraft carrier-like oceanarium was designed by American architect Peter Chermayeff, and is perched on the end of a pier, surrounded by water. It is the second-largest aquarium in the world, and holds an impressive array of species – birds and some mammals as well as fish and other underwater dwellers.

Four separate sea- and landscapes represent the habitats of the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian and Antarctic oceans, with suitable fauna and flora. The main attraction for most visitors, though, is the vast central tank with a dazzling variety of fish, large and small, swimming round and round. Hammerhead sharks co-exist peacefully with bream, barracudas with rays.

Palácio Pimenta was allegedly commissioned by João V (see pp52–3) for his mistress Madre Paula, a nun from the nearby convent at Odivelas. When the mansion was built, in the middle of the 18th century, it occupied a peaceful site outside the capital. Nowadays it has to contend with the teeming traffic of Campo Grande. The house itself, however, retains its period charm and the city museum is one of the most interesting in Lisbon.

The displays follow the development of the city, from prehistoric times, through the Romans, Visigoths and Moors, traced by means of tiles, drawings, paintings, models and historical documents.

Visits also take you through the former living quarters of the mansion, including the kitchen, decorated with blue and white tile panels of fish, flowers and hanging game.

Some of the most fascinating exhibits are those depicting the city before the earthquake of 1755, including a highly detailed model made in the 1950s and an impressive 17th-century oil painting by Dirk Stoop (1610–86) of Terreiro do Paço (Praça do Comércio, see p85). One room is devoted to the Águas Livres aqueduct (see p122) with detailed architectural plans for its construction as well as prints and watercolours of the completed aqueduct.

18th-century Indian toy, Museu da Cidade

The earthquake theme is resumed with pictures of the city amid the devastation and various plans for its reconstruction. The museum brings you into the 20th century with a large colour poster celebrating the Revolution of 1910 and the proclamation of the new republic (see pp54–5).

Museu Nacional do Azulejo 10

Pelican on the Manueine portal

Dona Leonor, widow of King João II, founded the Convento da Madre de Deus in 1509. Originally built in Manueine style, the church was restored under João III using simple Renaissance designs. The striking Baroque decoration was added by João V. The convent cloisters provide a stunning setting for the National Tile Museum. Decorative panels, individual tiles and photographs trace the evolution of tile-making from its introduction by the Moors, through Spanish influence and the development of Portugal's own style (see pp26–7), up to the present day.

Panorama of Lisbon

A striking 18th-century panel, along one wall of the cloister, depicts Lisbon before the 1755 earthquake (see pp62–3). This detail shows the royal palace on Terreiro do Paço.

Hunting Scene

Artisans rather than artists began to decorate tiles in the 17th century. This detail shows a naive representation of a hunt.

★ Madre de Deus

Completed in the mid-16th century, it was not until two centuries later, under João V, that the church of Madre de Deus acquired its ornate decoration. The sumptuous Rococo altarpiece was added after the earthquake of 1755.

GALLERY GUIDE

The rooms around the central cloister are arranged chronologically with the oldest tiles on the ground floor. Access to the Madre de Deus is via level 2 of the museum. The front entrance of the church is used only during religious services.

The carved Manueline portal (see p25) was recreated from a 16th-century painting.

An important surviving feature of the original convent is the graceful Manueline cloister. Fine geometrical patterned tiles were added to the cloister walls in the 17th century.

The gardens here are as much a feature as the actual zoo. Opened in 1905, the zoo has recently been revamped and the majority of its aviaries and cages now provide more comfortable conditions for the specimens. The most bizarre feature is the dogs' cemetery, complete with tombstones and flowers. Current attractions of the zoo include a cable car touring the park, a reptile house, dolphin shows and an amusement park. The area is divided into four zones and the admission charge is based on how many you visit, or there is an all-inclusive ticket.

Considered the most beautiful sight in Lisbon at the turn of the century, the impressive structure of the Aqueduto das Águas Livres looms over the Alcântara valley to the northwest of the city. The construction of an aqueduct to bring fresh water to the city gave João V (see pp52–3) an ideal opportunity to indulge his passion for grandiose building schemes, as the only area of Lisbon with fresh drinking water was the Alfama. A tax on meat, wine, olive oil and other comestibles funded the project, and although not complete until the 19th century, it was already supplying the city with water by 1748. The main pipeline measures 19 km (12 miles), but the total length, including all the secondary channels, is 58 km (36 miles). The most visible part of this imposing structure are the 35 arches that cross the Alcântara valley, the tallest of which rise to a spectacular 65 m (213 ft) above the city.

The public walkway along the aqueduct, once a pleasant promenade, has been closed since 1853. This is partly due to Diogo Alves, a robber who threw his victims over the edge. Today, visitors may take an informative guided tour over the Alcântara arches. There are also tours of the Mãe d'Água reservoir and trips to the Mãe d'Água springs, the source of the water supply. These tours can be irregular, so it is best to contact the Museu da Água (see p118) for details of the trip on offer.

At the end of the aqueduct, the Mãe d'Água das Amoreiras is a castle-like building which once served as a reservoir for the water supplied from the aqueduct. The original design of 1745 was by the Hungarian architect, Carlos Mardel, who worked under Pombal (see pp62–3) in the rebuilding of the Baixa. Completed in 1834, it became a popular meeting place and acquired a reputation as the rendezvous for kings and their mistresses. Today the space is used for art exhibitions, fashion shows and other events.

This delightful country manor house was built as a hunting pavilion for João de Mascarenhas, the first Marquês de Fronteira, in 1640. Although skyscrapers are visible in the distance, it still occupies a quiet spot, by the Parque Florestal de Monsanto. Both house and garden have azulejo decoration whose subjects include battle scenes and trumpet-blowing monkeys.

Although the palace is still occupied by the 12th Marquis, some of the living rooms and the library, as well as the formal gardens, are included in the tour. The Battles Room has lively tiled panels depicting scenes of the War of Restoration (see pp50–51), with a detail showing João de Fronteira fighting a Spanish general. It was his loyalty to Pedro II during this war that earned him the title of Marquis. Interesting comparisons can be made between these naive 17th-century Portuguese tiles and the Delft ones from the same period in the dining room, depicting naturalistic scenes. The dining room is also decorated with frescoed panels and portraits of Portuguese nobility by artists such as Domingos António de Sequeira (1768–1837).

The late 16th-century chapel is the oldest part of the house. The façade is adorned with stones, shells, broken glass and bits of china. These fragments of crockery are believed to have been used at the feast inaugurating the palace and then smashed to ensure no one else could sup off the same set. Visits to the garden start at the chapel terrace, where tiled niches are decorated with figures personifying the arts and mythological creatures.

In the formal Italian garden the immaculate box hedges are cut into shapes to represent the seasons of the year. To one end, tiled scenes of dashing knights on horseback, representing ancestors of the Fronteira family, are reflected in the waters of a large tank. On either side of the water, a grand staircase leads to a terrace above. Here, decorative niches contain the busts of Portuguese kings and colourful majolica reliefs adorn the arcades. More blue and white tiled scenes, realistic and allegorical, decorate the wall at the far end of the garden.

Monteiro-Mor Park was sold to the state in 1975 and the 18th-century palace buildings were converted to museums. The gardens are attractive and rather more romantic than the manicured box-hedge gardens so typical of Lisbon. Much of the land is wooded, though the area around the museums has gardens with flowering shrubs, duck ponds and tropical trees.

The rather old-fashioned Museu Nacional do Traje (costume museum) has a vast collection of textiles, accessories and costumes worn by musicians, politicians, poets, aristocrats and soldiers.

The Museu Nacional do Teatro has two buildings, one devoted to temporary exhibitions, the other containing a small permanent collection. Photographs, posters and cartoons feature famous 20th-century Portuguese actors and one section is devoted to Amália Rodrigues, the famous fado singer (see pp64–5).

SHOPPING IN LISBON

Lisbon offers excellent shopping opportunities for the visitor with its combination of elegant high street shops, large modern shopping centres and flea markets. The cobbled streets of the Baixa and the chic Chiado district are the city's traditional shopping areas and the wine merchants are the best in the country. The more exclusive designer shops are found around the Avenida da Liberdade. The enormous indoor shopping centres are increasingly popular. The street and indoor markets offer more adventurous shopping if you are looking for something typically Portuguese, such as hand-woven tapestries, ceramics or clothes.

Portuguese ceramic figure

A delicatessen in the Bairro Alto

OPENING HOURS

Traditional shopping hours are Monday to Friday 9am to 1pm and 3pm to 7pm, and Saturday 9am to 1pm. However, in order to satisfy growing consumer demand, many shops, especially those in the Baixa, open during the lunch hour and on Saturday afternoons. Shopping centres are open daily from 10am to midnight.

HOW TO PAY

Most shops in Lisbon accept Visa but it is probably better to obtain a cash advance with a credit card from one of the many Multibanco teller machines (ATMs).

TAX FREE GOODS

Many shops are affiliated to the Tax Free for Tourists system and are identified by the logo of the same name. The shop assistant will issue a tax exemption form (isenção na exportação) which should be presented to customs on your departure from Portugal in order to obtain a rebate.

SHOPPING CENTRES

Shopping centres have had a dramatic impact on shopping in Lisbon. They combine vast supermarkets, restaurants, shops, cinemas and banks. Well-known centres include Amoreiras, Vasco da Gama, and El Corte Ingles.

FOOD AND MARKETS

There are markets of every variety in Lisbon, from municipal markets selling fresh produce to the famous Feira da Ladra (see p71). Bargains can be found among the bric-a-brac, second-hand clothes and general arts and crafts. Coin collectors head for the Feira Numismática in Praça do Comércio (see p85). Other good spots are the Feira de Antiguidades e Velharias for antiques and Feira dos Alfarrabistas for old books.

Gourmets will find Lisbon's delicatessens (charcutarias) irresistible. They are lined with superb cheeses, tasty smoked meats and wild game, delicious sweets (ovos moles) and an assortment of dried and crystallized fruits.

Charcutaria Brasil, Manuel Tavares, which has a fine selection of port and madeira, and Celeiro Dieta, known for organic foods, are popular.

WINES AND SPIRITS

Portugal's large variety of wines and spirits is well represented in Lisbon's specialist shops.

Napoleão, the city's best-known wine merchants, has a number of outlets, with its oldest in the Baixa. For port specifically, visit Solar do Vinho do Porto (see p92) where it is possible to sample before deciding what to buy.

BOOKS AND MUSIC

The music scene in Portugal is a lively mix of traditions and the very latest. Fado music is hugely popular, while dance music has a dedicated following. FNAC is Lisbon's best music retailer. Discoteca Amália specialises in fado. Portugal also boasts a great literary tradition, with a range of authors including Luís de Camões, Fernando Pessoa, Eça de Queirós and José Saramago. Translations of their works are found in most bookshops. Livraria Portugal and Livraria Bertrand are among Lisbon's oldest bookshops.

Bric-a-brac on display at the popular Feira de Ladra market

CLOTHES

Most of the large chain stores have outlets in Lisbon, particularly in the shopping centres. The Spanish Zara chain sell affordable clothes for everyone. More exclusive shops, including designer outlets, can be found on and around Avenida de la Liberdade. Ann Salazar is one of an increasing number of known Portuguese designers.

REGIONAL CRAFTS

Portugal has a rich history of fine craftwork (artesanato), notably embroidery, fine lace, hand-knitted woollens and delicate gold and silver thread jewellery. Head for the gift shops in the Restauradores and Rossio areas of Lisbon and Arte Rustica in the Baixa. Portugal's ceramics are renowned for their quality and variety and in Lisbon you can find everything from delicate porcelain to rustic terracotta, and from tiles to tableware. Fine porcelain tableware from Vista Alegre and hand-painted ceramics and tiles from Viuva Lamego are popular.

ANTIQUES

The majority of Lisbon's antique shops are located either on Rua Dom Pedro V or Rua São Bento. There are numerous religious artifacts to be found in the area and Solar specializes in antique tiles (azulejos). Beautiful prints sold at second-hand bookshops in the Bairro Alto are good value for money. Livraria Olisipo stocks books and also old prints of landscapes, fauna and maps. Look for shops that are members of APA (Associação Portuguesa de Antiquário), often indicated by a sign in the window.

ENTERTAINMENT IN LISBON

For a smallish European capital, Lisbon has a good and varied cultural calendar. Musical events range from classical and opera performances to intimate fado evenings, and large rock concerts. Dance, both classical and modern, is well represented in Lisbon. The Gulbenkian Foundation, long the only major arts patron, has been joined by other private funds as well as state institutions.

Football is a consuming passion of the Portuguese, and Lisbon's Sporting and Benfica teams play regularly at home. Lisbon outparties many larger capitals, with a nightlife known for its liveliness.

BOOKING TICKETS

Tickets can be reserved by phoning the Agência de Bilhetes para Espectáculos Públicos (ABEP). Pay in cash when you collect them from the kiosk. Tickets are also sold at FNAC. Not all cinemas and theatres accept credit card bookings – check first.

ABEP kiosk selling tickets on Praça dos Restauradores

LISTINGS MAGAZINES

Previews of forthcoming cultural events plus listings and reviews of the city's latest bars and clubs appear each week in major newspapers. English-language publications on offer include the monthly Follow Me Lisboa, which can be obtained free from tourist offices. The monthly Agenda Cultural is in Portuguese.

CINEMA AND THEATRE

Movie-goers are very well served in Lisbon. Films are shown in their original language with Portuguese subtitles, and tickets are inexpensive. On Mondays most cinemas offer reductions. The city's older cinemas have now largely given way to modern multiplexes, usually located in shopping centres such as Amoreiras or El Corte Inglés. While these screen mainstream Hollywood fare, cinemas such as King Triplex show more European films. For classics and retrospectives head to the Cinamateca Portuguesa; a programme is available at tourist offices. Theatre performances are most often in Portuguese, but large institutions such as the Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II and the Teatro da Trindade occasionally stage guest performances by visiting companies. Less formally, Chapitô sometimes has open-air shows.

CLASSICAL MUSIC, OPERA AND DANCE

Lisbon's top cultural centres are the modern Centro Cultural de Belém (see p106) and the Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian (see pp114–17). They host national and international events such as ballet and concerts. Ballet is also the focus of the Teatro Camões. The Teatro Nacional de São Carlos is Portugal's national opera, with a varied season that mixes its own productions with guest performances. The Coliseu dos Recreios has no institution attached and so offers a variety of events.

Performance at the Chapitô, circus school, Alfama

WORLD MUSIC, JAZZ, POP AND ROCK

Lisbon's musical soul may be fado (see pp64–5), but the city is no stranger to other forms of musical expression. African music, particularly that of former Portuguese colony Cape Verde, plays a big part in Lisbon's music scene. Venues include B.Leza and Enclave, both have frequent live performances.

The Hot Clube has been Lisbon's foremost jazz venue for as long as anyone can remember, and has the right intimate atmosphere.

The house orchestra playing at the Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian

Musician at Pé Sujo

Speakeasy is younger, slightly bigger, and varies live jazz with up-tempo blues, particularly at weekends.

Large rock and pop concerts are held at outdoor venues such as Praça Sony and football stadiums, or indoors at Pavilhão Atlântico or Coliseu dos Recreios.

NIGHTCLUBS

Bairro Alto remains a lively area for Lisbon nightlife, although its mostly small bars don't usually have dance floors or keep very late hours. There are a few exceptions, including the doyen of Bairro Alto clubs, Frágil.

Among the larger and more mainstream dance venues are Kremlin and Kapital; the first a nearly historic house club, the second a very middle-of-the-road disco.

Farther westward by the Doca de Santo Amaro marina is the attractively housed Buddha restaurant, bar and nightclub. Inland, in the Alcântara area, are W and Alcântara Club, while eastwards along the river near Santa Apolónia station, is Lux, the cream of Lisbon's current club scene.

SPECTATOR SPORTS

Portugal hosted the 2004 European Football Championship, and Lisbon's two main teams, Sporting and Benfica, built new stadiums for the event, the Estádio José Alvalade and the Estádio da Luz respectively. Portuguese football cup finals, as well as other events such as the Estoril Open tennis tournament, are held at the Estádio Nacional-Jamor. The Pavilhão Atlântico is also used for indoor events such as tennis, volleyball and basket-ball. The Autódromo do Estoril is a motor-racing venue.

LISBON STREET FINDER

Map references given in this guide for sights and entertainment venues in Lisbon refer to the Street Finder maps on the following pages. Map references are also given for Lisbon's hotels (see pp382-6) and restaurants (see pp408-12). The first figure in the map reference indicates which Street Finder map to turn to, and the letter and number which follow refer to the grid reference on that map. The map below shows the area of Lisbon covered by the eight Street Finder maps. Symbols used for sights and useful information are displayed in the key below. An index of street names and all the places of interest marked on the maps can be found on the following pages.

CENTRAL PORTUGAL

INTRODUCING CENTRAL PORTUGAL 144–149

THE LISBON COAST 150–171

ESTREMADURA AND RIBATEJO 172–195

THE BEIRAS 196–223

Central Portugal at a Glance

Between Portugal's capital and its second city, Oporto, can be found some of the country's most impressive architecture and important historical sights. Near Lisbon are the fine palaces of Sintra and Queluz, and in Estremadura are several of Portugal's foremost religious sites. Estremadura and Beira Litoral mix empty beaches with quaint fishing villages and smart resorts, while the lush country stretching inland to the banks of the Tagus supports livestock and crops from grapes to fruit and rice. Further north, the Beiras are more varied, with the historic university town of Coimbra, the vine-clad valleys of the Dão wine region and the bleak highlands and fortress towns of Beira Alta and Beira Baixa. Dominating this remote region is the granite range of the Serra da Estrela.

Alcobaça is principally known for its abbey, founded in the 12th century by Portugal's first king, Afonso Henriques. The graceful, contemplative air of this great Cistercian house (see pp180–81) is exemplified by its huge vaulted dormitory.

Batalha means "battle" and the monastery of Santa Maria da Vitória at Batalha was built to give thanks for victory over the Spanish at the Battle of Aljubarrota in 1385. Its delicate style makes it one of Portugal's finest Gothic buildings (see pp184–5).

The Palácio de Queluz, a masterpiece of Rococo architecture (see pp166–7), lies just outside Lisbon. The Lion Staircase leads up to the colonnaded pavilion named after its architect, Jean-Baptiste Robillon.

Sintra, just west of Lisbon, is a cool wooded retreat from the heat of the capital. This is where the Portuguese monarchs chose to spend their summers. The Palácio Nacional is full of remarkable decorative effects, such as this painted "magpie" ceiling (see pp160–61).

Buçaco's walled forest is an arboretum and a religious retreat. A Via Sacra winds among mossy trunks to stunning views from the hilltop Calvary (see pp212–13).

The Serra da Estrela, the highest mountain range in the country, offers startling contrasts of scenery, from bare ice-eroded peaks to green pastures dotted with shepherds' buts (see pp220–21).

Coimbra University is the oldest and most prestigious in Portugal (see pp208–9). Long ago it expanded beyond the royal palace which became its home in 1537, but the old palace, with its gilded Capela de São Miguel and spectacular library, are still at the heart of the campus.

Ribatejo

Tomar was founded by the Knights Templar in the 12th century, when these warrior monks played a leading role in the campaigns to win back Portugal from the Moors. The Templars' fortress survives, as does the drum-shaped bulk of their Rotunda, or oratory. This forms the core of the Convento de Cristo which over the centuries was built up around the original church (see pp186–9).

Horsemanship and Bullfighting

Horseman at the national fair in Golegã

Classical dressage and bravura bullfighting in Portugal are linked to the Marquês de Marialva, the King's Master of the Horse from 1770 to 1799. He made famous the most advanced and difficult dressage techniques, including some in which the horse lifts itself off the ground like a ballet dancer. The Art of Marialva, as it is called, is of great use to horsemen in the bullring, and they will usually demonstrate some dressage movements for the entertainment of the crowd. The Ribatejo is the traditional centre of bullfighting, with events held from spring to autumn at annual fairs and towns such as Santarém, Vila Franca de Xira and Coruche. In Portugal, the bull is never killed in the arena.

Ribatejan herdsmen or campinos, who round up the fighting bulls, here demonstrate their skills.

Leading bullfighter João Moura salutes the crowd at a tourada with his tricorn hat.

The mane is plaited with ribbons for a beautifully groomed effect.

THE CAVALEIRO

The bullfighter or cavaleiro wears traditional 18th-century costume, including the satin coat of a grandee, and rides an elaborately adorned horse. He has to plant a number of darts (farpas) in the bull's shoulders, and his performance is judged on style and courage.

The costly saddle cloth is embroidered with João Moura's initials.

Tail tidying and decoration go back to the ornate French style of Louis XV.

Box stirrups are traditional, stylish and secure.

TRADITIONAL EQUESTRIAN SKILLS

Lisbon's Escola Portuguesa de Arte Equestre, and equestrian centres in the Ribatejo, today maintain the standards set by Marialva. The Lisbon school performs several times a year around the country. On Lusitanian horses of Alter Real stock (see p298), riders in 18th-century costume give superb dressage displays. Their movements resemble these illustrations of 1790 from a book on equestrianism, dedicated to Dom João (later João VI), himself a keen horseman.

The Marquês de Marialva trains his horse in the croupade, its hind legs tucked up beneath it, as it springs into the air.

THE BULLFIGHT

The corrida or tourada combines drama and daring. First, a team of bullfighters on foot (peões de brega) distracts the bull with capes, preparing it for the cavaleiro. He is followed by eight volunteer forcados, who aim to overcome the bull with their bare hands in what is known as the pega. Finally the bull is herded from the ring among a group of farm oxen.

At this opening ceremony in Montijo, the two cavaleiros line up with the forcados on either side.

The cavaleiro lodges long darts in the bull's shoulders.

The bull charges, provoked by the cavaleiro and the prancing horse. The bull's horns are blunted and sheathed in leather.

Partnership between man and horse is paramount. Most cavaleiros ride a Lusitanian, the world's oldest saddle horse and a classic warrior steed, famed for its courage, grace and strength. Its agility and speed are essential in the ring, and defenders of bullfighting believe the spectacle has helped preserve the breed.

The horse's lower legs are strapped for support.

The leader of the forcados tackles the bull head on, throwing himself between its horns and gripping it around the neck.

The bullfight ends with the pega. The leader of the forcados challenges the bull to charge, then launches himself over its head. The others try to hold him in place and use their combined weight to bring the bull to a standstill, with one of the men holding onto its tail. Eight times out of ten the forcados get tossed in all directions, then re-form to repeat the challenge. The crowd laughs, but applauds the men's skill and courage.

The next in line assists the front man, while the others prepare to lend support.

Dom João himself demonstrates the galope, a difficult exercise with a change of direction at each step.

The horse leaps from a standstill, back legs outstretched, in the dramatic capriole.

The Flavours of Central Portugal

The geography of central Portugal ranges from a lagoon-dotted Atlantic coastline and a vast flood-plain to a hilly, then rocky, interior crowned by Portugal's highest mountains. The food here is equally varied, with roast suckling pig in the north, a rich choice of fish and seafood from the ports, unique cheeses and hearty stews from the mountains. One popular dish reflecting this diversity is porco à alentejana, a mixture of pork and clams. Cuisines old and new, exotic and familiar, rub along together in Lisbon, where cosmopolitanism has quietly thrived for half a millennium.

LISBON

The capital is not just the place where all the flavours of Portugal come together, but also where the influences of Portugal's 16th-century overseas expansion get their strongest expression. This applies equally to older influences, long since assimilated into the local cuisine, and to newer phenomena, from Cape Verdean restaurants to sushi bars. One old favourite, barbecued chicken with chilli (frango à piri-piri), originated in former colonies in Africa. The Lisbon speciality peixinhos da horta, runner beans coated in batter and deep fried, provide an interesting insight into influences going the other way. Japanese tempura is said to have developed from this Portuguese dish, introduced to Japan in the 16th century. The nickname alfacinbas for natives of Lisbon may have a connection with alface (lettuce) – city has long been famous for an especially delicious variety.

THE BAIRRADA AND SIERRA DA ESTRELA

The town of Mealhada, in the Bairrada region to the north, is known throughout Portugal for its leitão, spit-

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Paprika

Chanfana is a speciality of Beira Litoral in which goat's meat is cooked slowly with wine and spices in an earthenware pot known as a caçoilo. Cabrito à padeiro is a similar dish using kid that, after a wine marinade, is roasted and continually basted with the marinade. Traditionally, this would be done in the local baker's large wood-fired oven, and the best restaurants to eat it in are the ones with such ovens. Caldeirada de peixe is cooked all over Portugal but does not get any better than in Nazaré or Peniche, preferably eaten outdoors within sight of the sea. Feijoada is one of Portugal's most versatile dishes, mixing beans with a wide range of ingredients, including cuttlefish and snails. The latter is a speciality of Tomar. Favas à Portuguesa is a Lisbon favourite.

Feijoada is a paprika-spiced stew of beans, vegetables and cured meat (usually pork), with many local variations.

roasted suckling pig. The local custom is to drink red sparkling wine, unique to this area, with the crisp-skinned but mild-tasting pig. Nearby Lusó is the source of one of Portugal's finest mineral waters. The granite Serra da Estrela mountain range is home to Portugal's most famous cheese, the distinctive and buttery Serra. It is made from ewe's milk, and the rounds are wrapped in muslin to maintain their shape. Bay leaves are often used in Portuguese cooking, and the black-barked bay tree is common in these parts – though the scent in the air is not of bay but of eucalyptus. Bean stews are another common feature of the local cuisine, particularly feijoadá, of which every town and village seems to have its own version.

ESTREMADURA AND RIBATEJO

Further south, in Estremadura, the fishing ports of Nazaré and Peniche boast a smaller catch than they once did, but the local sardines in particular are well worth sampling. The rolling hills of Estremadura give way, as you cross the Tejo eastwards, to the fertile Lezíria flood-plain of Ribatejo, land of bulls, horses and juicy melons. Vila Franca de Xira, back on the west bank of the river, is a good place to try the local bull meat. For the most part, the regional cuisine of Ribatejo is frugal and thrifty. A classic example is magusto, a thick purée of dry maize (corn) and white bread blended with water, olive oil, and boiled kale served with oven-baked bacalbau (salt cod).

REGIONAL WINES

The Dão wine region now produces some of Portugal's finest red wines, often distinguishable from the wines of the Douro to the north by their greater elegance. The Bairrada region borders Dão but has only one authorized grape variety for making reds: Baga. There are some great examples of traditional style, with deep tannins and hints of pine and bonfire, but modernity features too, with fruitier, more approachable reds and fresh, light whites. Estremadura and Ribatejo once produced vast amounts of fairly unpalatable wine for mass consumption or distillation. Now they shine, with wines often made from foreign grape varieties. Of Lisbon's own appellations – Colares, Carcavelos and Bucelas – only the last remains commercially viable, making some of the country's most distinctive whites.

Caldeirada de peixe, a fish stew, uses a selection of seafood along with potatoes, tomatoes and peppers.

Favas à Portuguesa combines broad (fava) beans with morcela (blood sausage) and chopped pork ribs.

Arroz doce is a delicious dessert of lemon-zest scented rice pudding topped with a decoration of cinnamon.

THE LISBON COAST

Within an hour's drive northwest of Lisbon you can reach the rocky Atlantic coast, the wooded slopes of Sintra or countryside dotted with villas and royal palaces. South of Lisbon you can enjoy the sandy beaches and fishing towns along the coast or explore the lagoons of the Tagus and Sado river estuaries.

Traders and invaders, from the Phoenicians to the Spanish, have left their mark in this region, in particular the Moors whose forts and castles, rebuilt many times over the centuries, can be found all along this coast. After Lisbon became the capital in 1256, Portuguese kings and nobles built summer palaces and villas in the countryside west of the city, particularly on the cool, green heights of the Serra de Sintra.

Across the Tagus, the less fashionable southern shore (Outra Banda) could be reached only by ferry, until the suspension bridge was built in 1966. Now, the long sandy beaches of the Costa da Caparica, the coast around the fishing town of Sesimbra and even the remote Tróia peninsula have become popular resorts during the summer months. Fortunately, large stretches of coast and unspoilt countryside are being protected as conservation areas and nature reserves.

Despite the region's rapid urbanization, small fishing and farming communities still remain. Lively fish markets offer a huge variety of fresh fish and seafood; Palmela and the Sado region are noted for their wine; sheep still roam the unspoilt Serra da Arrábida, providing milk for Azeitão cheese; and rice is the main crop in the Sado estuary. Traditional industries also survive, such as salt panning near Alcochete and marble quarries at Pero Pinheiro.

Though the sea is cold and often rough, especially on west-facing coasts, the beaches are among the cleanest in Europe. As well as surfing, fishing and scuba diving, the region provides splendid golf courses, horse riding facilities and a motor-racing track. Arts and entertainment range from music and cinema festivals to bullfights and country fairs where regional crafts, such as hand-painted pottery, lace and baskets, are on display.

Exploring the Lisbon Coast

North of the Tagus, the beautiful hilltown of Sintra is dotted with historic palaces and surrounded by wooded hills, at times enveloped in an eerie sea mist. On the coast, cosmopolitan Cascais and the traditional fishing town of Ericeira are both excellent bases from which to explore the rocky coastline and surrounding countryside. South of the Tagus, the Serra da Arrábida and the rugged coast around Cabo Espichel can be visited from the small port of Sesimbra. Inland, the nature reserves of the Tagus and Sado estuaries offer a quiet retreat.

GETTING AROUND

Motorways give quick access from Lisbon to Sintra, Estoril, Palmela and Setúbal. Main roads are generally well signposted and surfaced, though traffic congestion can be a problem, particularly at weekends and holidays. Watch out for potholes on smaller roads. Fast, frequent trains run west from Lisbon's Cais do Sodré station to Estoril and Cascais, and from Roma Areeiro and Entrecampos stations to Queluz and Sintra. Trains south to Setúbal, Alcácer do Sal and beyond leave from Roma Areeiro, crossing the April 25 bridge. There are good bus services to all parts of the region, most of which leave from Sete Rios.

Palácio de Mafra ①

Road Map B5. Terreiro de Dom João V, Mafra. Tel 261 817 550. from Lisbon. Campo Grande, then 1 Mafrens. 10am–5:30pm Wed–Mon (last entry 4:30pm). 1 Jan, Easter, 1 May, 29 Jun, 25 Dec. (free 10am–1pm Sun). compulsory.

The massive Baroque palace and monastery (see also pp52–3), which dwarfs the small town of Mafra, was built during the reign of Portugal's most extravagant monarch, João V. It began with a vow by the young king to build a new monastery and basilica, supposedly in return for an heir (but more likely, to atone for his sexual excesses). Work began in 1717 on a modest project to house 13 Franciscan friars but, as wealth began to pour into the royal coffers from Brazil, the king and his Italian-trained architect, Johann Friedrich Ludwig (1670–1752), made ever more extravagant plans. No expense was spared: 52,000 men were employed and the finished project housed not 13, but 330 friars, a royal palace and one of the finest libraries in Europe, decorated with precious marble, exotic wood and countless works of art. The magnificent basilica was consecrated on the king's 41st birthday, 22 October 1730, with festivities lasting for eight days.

The palace was only popular with those members of the royal family who enjoyed hunting deer and wild boar. Today, a wolf conservation project runs here. Most of the finest furniture and art works were taken to Brazil when the royal family escaped the French invasion in 1807.

The monastery was abandoned in 1834 following the dissolution of all religious orders, and the palace itself was abandoned in 1910, when the last Portuguese king, Manuel II, escaped from here to the Royal Yacht anchored off Ericeira.

Allow at least an hour for the tour, which starts in the rooms of the monastery, through the pharmacy, with fine old medicine jars and some alarming medical instruments, to the hospital, where 16 patients could see and hear mass in the adjoining chapel without leaving their beds.

Upstairs, the sumptuous palace state rooms extend across the whole of the monumental west façade, with the King's apartments at one end and the Queen's apartments at the other. Halfway between the two, the long, imposing façade is relieved by the twin towers of the domed basilica. The interior of the church is decorated in contrasting colours of marble and furnished with six early 19th-century organs. Fine Baroque sculptures, executed by members of the Mafra School of Sculpture, adorn the atrium of the basilica. Begun by José I in 1754, many renowned Portuguese and foreign artists trained in the school under the directorship of the Italian sculptor Alessandro Giusti (1715–99). Further on, the Sala da Caça has a grotesque collection of hunting trophies and boars' heads.

Mafra's greatest treasure, however, is its magnificent library, with a patterned marble floor, Rococo-style wooden bookcases, and a collection of over 40,000 books in gold embossed leather bindings, including a prized first edition of Os Lusíadas (1572) by the Portuguese poet Luís de Camões (see p46).

Environs: Once a week, on Thursday mornings, the small country town of Malveira, 10 km (6 miles) east of Mafra, has the region's biggest market, selling clothes and household goods as well as food.

At the village of Sobreiro, 6 km (4 miles) west of Mafra, Zé Franco's model village is complete with houses, farms, a waterfall and working windmill, all in minute detail.

Ericeira 2

Road Map B5. 📍 7,500. 🏠

📍 Rua Dr Eduardo Burnay 46 (261 863 122). 🕒 daily.

Ericeira is an old fishing village which keeps its traditions despite an ever-increasing influx of summer visitors who enjoy the bracing climate, clean, sandy beaches and fresh seafood. In July and August, when the population leaps to 30,000, pavement cafés, restaurants and bars around the tree-lined Praça da República are buzzing late into the night. Red flags warn when swimming is dangerous: alternative attractions include crazy golf in Santa Marta park and an interesting museum of local history, the Museu da Ericeira, exhibiting models of traditional regional boats and fishing equipment.

The unspoilt old town, a maze of whitewashed houses and narrow, cobbled streets, is perched high above the ocean. From Largo das Ribas, at the top of a 30-m (100-ft) stone-faced cliff, there is a bird's-eye view over the busy fishing harbour below, where tractors have replaced the oxen that once hauled the boats out of reach of the tide. On 16 August, the annual fishermen's festival is celebrated with a candlelit procession to the harbour at the foot of the cliffs for the blessing of the boats.

On 5 October 1910, Manuel II, the last king of Portugal (see pp54–5), sailed into exile from Ericeira as the Republic was declared in Lisbon; a tiled panel in the fishermen's chapel of Santo António above the harbour records the event. The banished king settled in Twickenham, southwest London, where he died in 1932.

Colares 3

Road Map B5. 📍 7,500. 🏠

📍 Praça da República 23, Sintra (219 231 157).

On the lower slopes of the Serra de Sintra, this lovely village faces the sea over a green valley, the Várzea de Colares. A leafy avenue, lined with pine and chestnut trees, winds its way up to the village. Small quantities of the famous Colares wine are still made, but current vintages lack the character and ageing potential of classic Colares and growers face a financial struggle to survive. Their hardy old vines grow in sandy soil, with their roots set deep below in clay; these were the only vines in Europe to survive the disastrous phylloxera epidemic brought from America in the late 19th century with the first viticultural exchanges. The insect, which destroyed vineyards all over Europe by eating the vines, could not penetrate the dense sandy soil of the Atlantic coast. Wine can be sampled at the Adega Regional de Colares on Alameda de Coronel Linhares de Lima.

Environs: There are several popular beach resorts west of Colares. From the village of Banzão you can ride 3 km (2 miles) to Praia das Maçãs on the old tramway, which opened in 1910 and still runs throughout the year. Just north of Praia das Maçãs is the picturesque village of Azenhas do Mar, clinging to the cliffs; just to the south is the larger resort of Praia Grande. Both have natural pools in the rocks, which are filled by seawater at high tide. The unspoilt Praia da Adraga, 1 km (half a mile) further south, has a delightful beach café and restaurant. In the evenings and off-season, fishermen set up their lines to catch bass, bream and flat fish that swim in on the high tide.

Serra de Sintra Tour ④

Tiled angels,
Peninha chapel

This round trip from Sintra follows a dramatic route over the top of the wooded Serra. The first part is a challenging drive with hazardous hairpin bends on steep, narrow roads that are at times poorly surfaced. It passes through dense forest and a surreal landscape of giant moss-covered boulders, with breathtaking views over the Atlantic coast, the Tagus estuary and beyond.

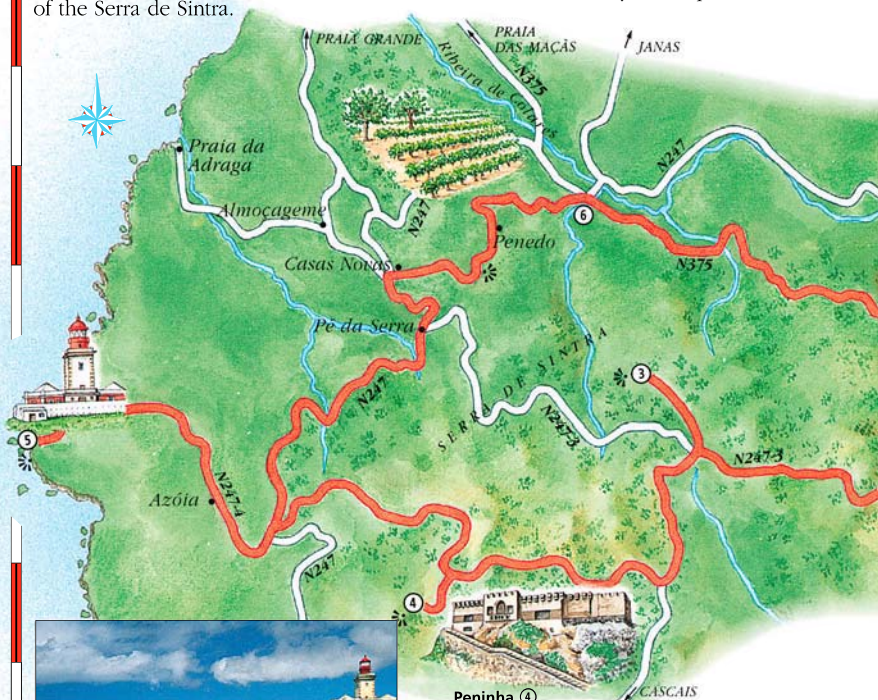

After dropping down to the rugged, windswept coast, the route returns along small country roads passing through hill villages and large estates on the cool, green northern slopes of the Serra de Sintra.

The wild, romantic garden of this once magnificent estate is a jungle of exotic trees and flowering shrubs. Among the sub-tropical foliage and valley of tree ferns are a waterfall, a small lake and a chapel, built as a ruin, tangled in the roots of a giant Ficus tree. Its history dates back to the Moors, but it takes its name from a small 16th-century chapel dedicated to Our Lady of Montserrat in Catalonia, Spain. The gardens were landscaped in the late 18th century by a wealthy young Englishman, William Beckford. They were later immortalized by Lord Byron in Childe Harold's Pilgrimage (1812).

In 1856, the abandoned estate was bought by another Englishman, Sir Francis Cook, who built a fantastic Moorish-style palace (which now stands eerily empty) and transformed the gardens with a large sweeping lawn, camellias and sub-tropical trees from all over the world. These include the giant Metrosidieros (Australian Christmas tree, covered in a blaze of red flowers in July), the native Arbutus (known as the strawberry tree because of its juicy red berries), from which the medronheira firewater drink is distilled, and cork oak, with small ferns growing on its bark.

The Friends of Monserrate is a group set up to help restore the sadly neglected house and gardens to their former glory.

Sintra 6

Sintra's stunning setting on the north slopes of the granite Serra, among wooded ravines and fresh water springs, made it a favourite summer retreat for the kings of Portugal. The tall conical chimneys of the Palácio Nacional de Sintra (see pp160–61) and the fabulous Palácio da Pena (see pp162–3), eerily impressive on its peak when the Serra is blanketed in mist, are unmistakable landmarks.

Today, the town (recognized as a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1995) draws thousands of visitors all through the year. Even so, there are many quiet walks in the wooded hills around the town, especially beautiful in the long, cool evenings of the summer months.

Exploring Sintra

Present-day Sintra is in three parts, Sintra Vila, Estefânia and São Pedro, joined by a confusing maze of winding roads scattered over the surrounding hills. In the pretty cobbled streets of the old town, Sintra Vila, which is centred on the Palácio Nacional de Sintra, are the museums and beautifully tiled post office. The curving Volta do Duche leads from the old town, past the lush Parque da Liberdade, north to the Estefânia district and the striking Neo-Gothic Câmara Municipal (Town Hall). To the south and east, the hilly village of São Pedro spreads over the slopes of the Serra. The fortnightly Sunday market here extends across the broad market square and along Rua 1° de Dezembro.

Exploring Sintra on foot involves a lot of walking and climbing up and down its steep hills. For a more leisurely tour, take one of the horse and carriage rides around the town. The Miradouro da Vigia in São Pedro offers impressive views, as does the cosy Casa de Sapa café, where you can sample queijadas, the local sweet speciality (see p139).

The many fountains dotted around the town are used by locals for their fresh spring drinking water. Two of the most striking are the tiled Fonte Mourisca (Arab Fountain), named for its Neo-Moorish decoration, and Fonte da Sabuga, where the water spouts from a pair of breasts.

Palácio Nacional de Sintra

Swan panel,
Sala dos Cisnes

At the heart of the old town of Sintra (Sintra Vila), a pair of strange conical chimneys rises high above the Royal Palace. The main part of the palace, including the central block with its plain Gothic façade and the large kitchens beneath the chimneys, was built by João I in the late 14th century, on a site once occupied by the Moorish rulers. The Paço Real, as it is also known, became the favourite summer retreat for the court, and continued as a residence for Portuguese royalty until the 1880s. Additions to the building by the wealthy Manuel I, in the early 16th century, echo the Moorish style. Gradual rebuilding of the palace has resulted in a fascinating amalgamation of various different styles.

Sintra: Palácio da Pena

Triton Arch

On the highest peaks of the Serra de Sintra stands the spectacular palace of Pena, an eclectic medley of architectural styles built in the 19th century for the husband of the young Queen Maria II, Ferdinand Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. It stands over the ruins of a Hieronymite monastery founded here in the 16th century on the site of the chapel of Nossa Senhora da Pena. Ferdinand appointed a German architect, Baron Von Eschwege, to build his summer palace filled with oddities from all over the world and surrounded by a park. With the declaration of the Republic in 1910, the palace became a museum, preserved as it was when the royal family lived here. Allow at least an hour and a half to visit this enchanting place.

Manuel II's Bedroom

The oval-shaped room is decorated with green walls and stuccoed ceiling. A portrait of Manuel II, the last king of Portugal, hangs above the fireplace.

In the kitchen the copper pots and utensils still hang around the iron stove. The dinner service bears the coat of arms of Ferdinand II.

Ferdinand was known in Portugal as Dom Fernando II, the “artist” king. Like his cousin Prince Albert, who married the English Queen Victoria, he loved art, nature and the new inventions of the time. He was himself a watercolour painter. Ferdinand enthusiastically adopted his new country and devoted his life to patronizing the arts. In 1869, 16 years after the death of Maria II, Ferdinand married his mistress, the opera singer Countess Edla. His lifelong dream of building the extravagant palace at Pena was completed in 1885, the year he died.

Cascais 7

Road map B5. 33,000.
Rua Visconde da Luz 14 (214 868 204). 1st & 3rd Sun of month.

Having been a holiday resort for well over a century, Cascais possesses a certain illustriousness that younger resorts lack. Its history is most clearly visible in the villas along the coast, built as summer residences by wealthy Lisboetas during the late 19th century, after King Luís I had moved his summer activities to the 17th-century fortress here. The military importance of Cascais, now waned, is much older as it sits on the north bank of the mouth of the Tagus.

The sandy, sheltered bay around which the modern suburb has sprawled was a fishing harbour in prehistoric times. Fishing still goes on, and was recently given a municipal boost with the decision to build a new quay for the landing and initial auctioning of the fishermen's catch. But Cascais today is first of all a favoured suburb of Lisbon, a place of apartments with a sea view and pine-studded plots by golf courses. It may sometimes seem more defined by its ceaseless construction boom than by any historic or even touristic qualities, but the beautiful, windswept coastline beyond the town has been left relatively undeveloped.

The Museu do Conde de Castro Guimarães is perhaps the best place to get a taste of Cascais as it was just over a century ago. A castle-like villa on a small creek by a headland, its grounds are today part of a park. The house and its contents were bequeathed to the municipality.

Across the road from the museum is the new marina, one of the most emblematic new developments in Cascais. With its small shopping centre, restaurants and cafés it is becoming a weekend magnet for today's car-borne Cascais residents and tourists.

Despite once being the haunt of exiled royalty and nobility fleeing European republicanism, the lovely resort town of Estoril does not rest on its historical laurels. Today, it is a tourist and business resort, and a place for comfortable retirement. As such, it relies equally on its historical reputation and on the natural attractiveness it has always possessed. There are also a number of good golf courses.

What separates Estoril from Cascais, besides a pleasant beach promenade of 3 km (2 miles) and a mansion-covered ridge known as Monte Estoril, is its sense of place. The heart of Estoril is immediately accessible from the train station. On one side of the tracks, the riviera-like

A railway, with open carriages, runs for 10 km (6 miles) along the coast during the summer months. The first beaches reached from the town are popular with families with children, while the furthest beaches suit those seeking quiet isolation. Further south, sheltered by pine forests, Lagoa do Albufeira, is a peaceful windsurfing centre and camp site.

Sheer cliffs drop straight into the sea at this windswept promontory where the land ends dramatically. The Romans named it Promontorium Barbaricum, alluding to its dangerous location, and a lighthouse warns sailors of the treacherous rocks below. Stunning views of the ocean and the coast can be enjoyed from this bleak outcrop of land but beware of the strong gusts of wind on the cliff edge.

In this desolate setting stands the impressive Santuário de Nossa Senhora do Cabo, a late 17th-century church with its back to the sea. On either side of the church a long line of pilgrims' lodgings facing inwards form an open courtyard. Baroque paintings, ex votos and a frescoed ceiling decorate the interior of the church. There are plans to fully restore the building and open it as a hotel. A domed chapel, tiled with blue and white azulejo panels, is located nearby.

The site became a popular place of pilgrimage in the 13th century when a local man had a vision of the Madonna rising from the sea on a mule. Legend has it that the tracks of the mule can be seen embedded in the rock. The large footprints, on Praia dos Lagosteiros below the church, are actually believed to be fossilized dinosaur tracks.

Palácio de Queluz 9

A sphinx in the gardens

In 1747, Pedro, younger son of João V, commissioned Mateus Vicente to transform his 17th-century hunting lodge into a Rococo summer palace. The central section, including a music room and chapel, was built, but after Pedro's marriage in 1760 to the future Maria I, the palace was again extended. The French architect, Jean-Baptiste Robillion, added the sumptuous Robillion Pavilion and gardens, cleared space for the Throne Room and redesigned the Music Room. During Maria's reign, the royal family kept a menagerie and went boating on the azulejo-lined canal.

Corridor of the Sleeves

Painted azulejo panels (1784) representing the continents and the seasons, as well as hunting scenes, line the walls of the bright Corredor das Mangas (sleeves).

The Hanging Gardens, designed by Robillion, were built over arches, raising the ground in front of the palace above the surrounding gardens.

MARIA I (1734–1816)

Maria, the eldest daughter of José I, lived at the palace in Queluz after her marriage to her uncle, Pedro, in 1760. Serious and devout, she conscientiously filled her role as queen, but suffered increasingly from bouts of melancholia. When her son José died from smallpox in 1788, she went hopelessly mad. Visitors to Queluz were dismayed by her agonizing shrieks as she suffered visions and hallucinations. After the French invasion of 1807, her younger son João (declared regent in 1792) took his mad mother to Brazil.

★ Palace Gardens

The formal gardens, adorned with statues, fountains and topiary, were often used for entertaining. Concerts performed in the Music Room would spill out into the Malta Gardens.

Sesimbra 13

Road map C5. 42,000.
 Largo da Marinha 26–7 (212 288 540). 1st & 3rd Fri of month.

A steep narrow road leads down to this busy fishing village in a sheltered south-facing bay. Protected from north winds by the slopes of the Serra da Arrábida, the town has become a popular holiday resort with Lisboetas. It was occupied by the Romans and later the Moors until King Sancho II (see pp42–3) conquered its heavily defended forts in 1236. The old town is a maze of steep narrow streets, with the Santiago Fort (now a customs post) in the centre overlooking the sea. From the terrace, which is open to the public during the day, there are views over the town, the Atlantic and the wide sandy beach that stretches out on either side. Sesimbra is fast developing as a resort, with holiday flats mushrooming on the surrounding hillsides and plentiful pavement cafés and bars that are always busy on sunny days, even in winter.

The fishing fleet of brightly painted boats is moored in the Porto do Abrigo to the west of the main town. The harbour is reached by taking Avenida dos Naufragos, a sweeping promenade that follows the beach out of town. On the large trawlers (traineiras), the catch is mainly sardines, sea bream, whiting and swordfish; on the smaller boats, octopus and squid. In the late afternoon, when the fishing boats return from a day at sea, a colourful, noisy fish auction takes place on the quayside. The day's catch can be tasted in the town's excellent fish restaurants along the shore.

High above the town is the Moorish castle, greatly restored in the 18th century when a church and small flower-filled cemetery were added inside the walls. There are wonderful views from the ramparts, especially at sunset.

 every other Tue.

The formidable castle at Palmela stands over the small hilltown, high on a north-eastern spur of the wooded Serra da Arrábida. Its strategic position dominates the plain for miles around, especially when floodlit at night. Heavily defended by the Moors, it was eventually conquered in the 12th century and given by Sancho I to the Knights of the Order of Santiago (see p43). In 1423, João I transformed the castle into a monastery for the Order, which has now been restored and converted into a splendid pousada (see p387), with a restaurant in the monks' refectory and a swimming pool for residents, hidden inside the castle walls.

From the castle terraces, and especially from the top of the 14th-century keep, there are fantastic views all around, over the Serra da Arrábida to the south and on a clear day across the Tagus to Lisbon. In the town square below, the church of São Pedro contains 18th-century tiles of scenes from the life of St Peter.

The annual wine festival, the Festa das Vindimas, is held on the first weekend of September in front of the 17th-century Paços do Concelho (town hall). Traditionally dressed villagers, press the wine barefoot and on the final day of celebrations there is a spectacular fireworks display from the castle walls.

Serra da Arrábida 15

Road map C5.  Setúbal.

 Parque Natural da Arrábida, Praça da República, Setúbal (265 541 140).

The Parque Natural da Arrábida covers the small range of limestone mountains which stretches east-west along the coast between Sesimbra and Setúbal. It was established to protect the wild, beautiful landscape and rich variety of birds and wildlife, including eagles, wildcats and badgers.

The name Arrábida is from Arabic meaning a place of prayer, and the wooded hill-sides are indeed a peaceful, secluded retreat. The sheltered, south-facing slopes are thickly covered with aromatic and evergreen shrubs and trees such as pine and cypress, more typical of the Mediterranean. Vineyards also thrive on the sheltered slopes and the town of Vila Nogueira de Azeitão is known for its wine, especially the Moscatel de Setúbal.

The Estrada de Escarpa (the N379-1) snakes across the top of the ridge and affords astounding views. A narrow road winds down to Portinho da Arrábida, a sheltered cove with a beach of fine white sand and crystal clear sea, popular with underwater fishermen. The sandy beaches of Galapos and Figueirinha are a little further east along the coast road towards Setúbal. Just east of Sesimbra, the Serra da Arrábida drops to the sea in the sheer 380-m (1,250-ft) cliffs of Risco, the highest in mainland Portugal.

Setúbal 16

Road map C5. 118,500. Casa do Corpo Santo, Praça do Quebedo (265 534 222).

Although this is an important industrial town, and the third largest port in Portugal (after Lisbon and Oporto), Setúbal can be used to explore the area. To the south of the central gardens and fountains are the fishing harbour, marina and ferry port, and a lively covered market. North of the gardens is the old town, with attractive pedestrian streets and squares full of shops and cafés.

The 16th-century cathedral, dedicated to Santa Maria da Graça, has glorious tiled panels dating from the 18th century, and gilded altar decoration. Street names commemorate two famous Setúbal residents: Manuel Barbosa du Bocage (1765–1805), whose satirical poetry landed him in prison, and Luísa Todi (1753–1833), a celebrated opera singer.

In Roman times, fish-salting was the most important industry here. Rectangular tanks, carved from stone, can be seen under the glass floor of the Regional Tourist Office at No. 10 Travessa Frei Gaspar.

treasures. Designed by the architect Diogo Boitac in 1494, the lofty interior is adorned with twisted columns, carved in three strands from pinkish Arrábida limestone, and rope-like stone ribs decorating the roof, recognized as the earliest examples of the distinctive Manueline style (see pp24–5).

On Rua do Balneário, in the old monastic quarters, a museum houses 14 remarkable paintings of the life of Christ. The works are attributed to the followers of Jorge Afonso (1520–30), influenced by the Flemish school.

The archaeological museum displays a wealth of finds from digs around Setúbal, including Bronze Age pots, Roman coins and amphorae made to carry wine and garum, a sauce made from fish marinated in salt and herbs. The ethnography display shows local arts, crafts and industries, including the processing of salt and cork over the centuries.

Castelo de São Filipe

Estrada de São Filipe. Tel 265 523 844. daily.

The star-shaped fort was built in 1595 by Philip II of Spain during the period of Spanish rule (see pp50–51) to keep a wary eye on pirates, English invaders and the local population. A massive gateway and stone tunnel lead to the sheltered interior, which now houses a pousada (see p388) and an exquisite small chapel, tiled with scenes from the life of São Filipe by Policarpo de Oliveira Bernardes (see p26). A broad terrace offers marvellous views over the city and the Sado estuary.

Environ: Setúbal is an excellent starting point for a tour by car of the unspoilt Reserva Natural do Estuário do

Sado, a vast stretch of mud flats, shallow lagoons and salt marshes with patches of pine forest, which has been explored and inhabited since 3500 BC. Otters, water birds (including storks and herons), oysters and a great variety of fish are found in the reserve. The old tidal water mill at Mouriscas, 5 km (3 miles) to the east of Setúbal, uses the different levels of the tide to turn the grinding stones. Rice-growing and fishing are the main occupations today, and pine trees around the lagoon are tapped for resin.

High-rise holiday apartments dominate the tip of the Tróia peninsula, easily accessible from Setúbal by ferry. The Atlantic coast, stretching south for 18 km (11 miles) of untouched sandy beach, lined with dunes and pine woods, is now the haunt of sun-seekers in the summer.

Near Tróia, in the sheltered lagoon, the Roman town of Cetóbriga was the site of a thriving fish-salting business; the stone tanks and ruined buildings are open to visit. To the south, smart new holiday villas and golf clubs are springing up along the lagoon.

Further on, Carrasqueira is an old fishing community where you can still see traditional reed houses. The narrow fishing boats moored along the mud flats are

Alcácer do Sal 18

Road map C5. Alcácer do Sal. P Largo Pedro Nunes (265 610 045). 1st Sat of month.

Bypassed by the main road, the ancient town of Alcácer do Sal (al-kasr from the Arabic for castle, and do sal from its trade in salt) sits peacefully on the north bank of the River Sado. The imposing castle was a hillfort as early as the 6th century BC.

The Phoenicians established an inland trading port here, and the castle later became a stronghold for the Romans. Rebuilt by the Moors, it was finally conquered by Afonso II in 1217. The restored buildings have now taken on a new life as a pousada (see p386), with sweeping views over the rooftops and untidy storks' nests.

There are pleasant cafés along the riverside promenade and several historic churches. The small church of Espírito Santo now houses a Museu Arqueológico exhibiting local finds and the 18th-century Santo António holds a marble Chapel of the 11,000 Virgins. The bullring is a focus for summer events and hosts the agricultural fair in October.

BIRDS OF THE TAGUS AND SADO ESTUARIES

Many waterbirds, including black-winged stilts, avocets, Kentish plovers and pratincoles are found close to areas of open water and mud flats as well as the dried out lagoons of the Tagus and Sado estuaries. Reed-beds also provide shelter for nesting and support good numbers of little bitterns, purple herons and marsh harriers. From September to March, the area around the Tagus estuary is extremely important for wildfowl and wintering waders.

ESTREMADURA AND RIBATEJO

Between the Tagus and the coast lies Estremadura, an area of rolling hills that tumble down to rugged cliffs and sandy beaches. In contrast, the Ribatejo is a vast alluvial plain stretching along the banks of the Tagus. Portugal's finest medieval monasteries bear witness to the illustrious, if turbulent past of these regions.

The name Estremadura comes from the Latin Extrema Durii, "beyond the Douro", once the border of the Christian kingdoms in the north. As Portugal expanded southwards in the 12th century, land taken from the Moors (see pp42–3) was given to the religious orders. The Cistercian abbey at Alcobaça celebrates Afonso Henriques's capture of the town of Santarém in 1147, and the Knights Templar began their citadel at Tomar (see p187) soon after.

Spanish claims to the Portuguese throne brought more fighting: Batalha's magnificent abbey was built near the site of João I's victory over the Castilians at Aljubarrota in 1385. More recently, in 1808–10, Napoleonic forces sacked many towns in the region, but were stopped by Wellington's formidable defences, the Lines of Torres Vedras.

Nowadays, Estremadura is an area of expanding commerce, where vineyards, wheatfields and market gardens flourish. In the Ribatejo (the name means "Banks of the Tagus") the river's vast flood plain provides fertile soil for agriculture and grazing land for Portugal's prized black fighting bulls and fine horses.

The area around Tomar and the river towns along the Tagus have thriving industries, while on the River Zêzere, the dam built at Castelo de Bode in the 1940s heralded a new era of hydro-electric power. The Atlantic coast is a popular holiday destination, especially the fishing village of Nazaré and the sandy beaches along the Pinhal de Leiria forest. Visitors also flock to Portugal's most important religious shrine at Fátima, scene of celebrated visions of the Virgin Mary in 1917.

Exploring Estremadura and the Ribatejo

The impressive monuments in Estremadura recall the important role the region has played in Portugal's history. Tomar and Óbidos are convenient bases from which to visit the great abbeys at Batalha and Alcobaça or the modern shrine at Fátima. Leiria's charming old town is also a good place to stay and it is possible to make day trips from Lisbon. Those in search of more leisurely pursuits can enjoy boating on the Castelo de Bode lake or relaxing on the coast's stunning beaches. The fertile Lezíria plain of the Ribatejo is an area famous for bull- and horse-breeding. Here visitors can enjoy bullfights at Santarém and lively local festivals.

GETTING AROUND

Although trains connect many of the major towns in the region, stations are often located outside the town. There are local bus services and coach trips from Lisbon to such destinations as Alcobaça and Tomar. Driving is the most convenient option. The A1 (E1) and A8 (IC1) allow easy north-south access. Avoid the N1 (IC2) as it is often congested. The IP6 (E806) runs eastwards from the A1 (E1).

Road map B4. 🗺️ from Peniche.

Monks, a lighthouse keeper, fishermen and, recently, biologists have inhabited this rocky archipelago that juts out from the Atlantic Ocean 12 km (7 miles) from the mainland. Berlenga Grande, the biggest island, can be reached by ferry in about an hour. This island is a nature reserve with nesting sites for seabirds including guillemots and herring gulls.

On the southeast side of the island is the 17th-century pentagonal Forte de São João Baptista. This stark, stone fort suffered repeated assaults from pirates and foreign armies over the years. Today it is a basic hostel. Small boats can be hired from the jetty to explore the reefs and marine grottoes around the island. Furado Grande is the most spectacular of these; a 70-m (230-ft) tunnel, opening into the Covo do Sonho (Dream Cove) framed by imposing red granite cliffs.

south side of town stands the 16th-century Fortaleza, used as a prison during the Salazar regime (see pp56–7). The fortress was made famous by the escape in 1960 of the communist leader, Álvaro Cunhal. Inside, the Museu de Peniche caters to popular interest with a tour that includes a look into the prison cells. In Largo 5 de Outubro, the Igreja da Misericórdia has 17th-century painted ceiling panels depicting the Life of Christ, and patterned azulejo panels from the same period.

This enchanting hilltown with pretty whitewashed houses is enclosed within 14th-century walls. When King Dinis (see pp44–5) married Isabel of Aragon in 1282, Óbidos was among his wedding presents to her. At the time Óbidos was an important port, but by the 16th century the river had silted up and its strategic importance declined. It has since been restored and preserved.

Boats anchored in the old harbour at Peniche

The entrance into the town is through the southern gate, Porta da Vila, whose interior is embellished with 18th-century tiles. Rua Direita, the main shopping street, leads to Praça de Santa Maria. Here, a Manueline pelourinho (pillory) is decorated with a fishing net, the emblem of Dona Leonor, wife of João II. She chose this emblem in honour of the fishermen who tried in vain to save her son from drowning.

Opposite the pillory is the church of Santa Maria, with a simple Renaissance portal. The future Afonso V was married to his cousin Isabel here in 1441. He was ten years old, she eight. The interior of the church retains a simple clarity with a painted wooden ceiling and 17th-century tiles. In the chancel, a retable depicting the Mystic Marriage of St Catherine (1661) is by Josefa de Óbidos (see p51). The artist lived most of her life in Óbidos and is buried in the church of São Pedro on Largo de São Pedro. Her work is also on display in the Museu Municipal.

Dominating the town is the castle, rebuilt by Afonso Henriques after he took the town from the Moors in 1148.

Today it is a charming pousada (see p390). The sentry path along the battlements affords fine views of the rooftops.

The “queen’s hot springs”, a sprawling spa town, owes its prosperity to three different fields: thermal cures, ceramics and fruit farming. The town is named after Dona Leonor, founder of the Misericórdia hospital on Largo Rainha Dona Leonor. The original hospital chapel later became the impressive Manueline Igreja do Populo, built by Diogo Boitac (see pp104–5). Inside is the 15th-century chapel of São Sebastião, faced with 18th-century azulejos.

Alcobaça ⑤

Portugal's largest church, the Mosteiro de Santa Maria de Alcobaça, is renowned for its simple medieval architecture. Founded in 1153, this UNESCO World Heritage site is closely linked to the arrival of the Cistercian order in Portugal in 1138 as well as the birth of the nation. In March 1147, King Afonso Henriques (see pp42–3) conquered the Moorish stronghold of Santarém. To commemorate the victory, he fulfilled his vow to build a church for the Cistercians, a task completed in 1223. The monastery was further endowed by other monarchs, notably King Dinis who built the main cloister. Among those buried here are the tragic lovers King Pedro and his murdered mistress Inês.

The chapterhouse was where the monks met to elect the abbot and discuss issues regarding the monastery.

THE MURDER OF INÊS DE CASTRO

Reasons of state obliged Pedro, son and heir of Afonso IV (see pp44–5), to marry Costanza, Infanta of Castile, despite the fact he was in love with a lady at court, Inês de Castro. When Costanza died, Pedro went to live with Inês in Coimbra. Persuaded that Inês's family was dangerous, Afonso IV had her murdered on 7 January 1355 (see p205). On Afonso's death, Pedro took revenge on two of the killers by having their hearts torn out. Declaring that he had been married to Inês, Pedro had her corpse exhumed and crowned. In a final gruesome gesture, he compelled his court to kneel before Inês and kiss her decomposed hand.

Beside a glorious beach in a sweeping bay backed by steep cliffs, this fishing village is a popular summer resort that has maintained some of its traditional character. Fishermen dressed in checked shirts and black stocking caps and fishwives wearing several layers of petticoats can still be seen mending nets and drying fish on wire racks on the beach. The bright boats with tall prows that once were hauled from the sea by oxen are still used, although now they have a proper anchorage south of the beach. According to legend the name Nazaré comes from a statue of the Virgin Mary brought to the town by a monk from Nazareth in the 4th century.

High on the cliff above the town is Sítio, reached by a funicular that climbs 110 m (360 ft). At the cliff edge stands the tiny Ermida da Memória. According to legend, this is where the Virgin Mary saved Dom Fuas Roupinho, a local dignitary, and his horse from following a deer that leapt off the cliff in a sea mist in 1182.

Across the square, the 17th-century church of Nossa Senhora da Nazaré, with two Baroque belfries and 18th-century tiles inside, contains an anonymous painting of the miraculous rescue. The church also contains the revered image of Our Lady of Nazaré. In September this statue is borne down to the sea in a traditional procession, a colourful reminder of the town's origins.

Environs: São Martinho do Porto, 13 km (8 miles) south of Nazaré, is a sandy beach on a curving, almost land-locked bay. The safe location makes it popular with families and children. The Visigothic church of São Gião, 5 km (3 miles) further south, has fine sculpting and well-proportioned arches.

Originally a Moorish fort, and rebuilt over the centuries by successive Christian kings, the rather fanciful castle perches on a hill above the small town of Porto de Mós. Its present appearance, with green cone-shaped turrets and an exquisite loggia, was the inspired work of King Afonso IV's master builders in 1420.

In the town below, the 13th-century church of São João Baptista retains its original Romanesque portal. In the public gardens is the richly decorated Baroque church of São Pedro. Just off the Praça da República, the Museu Municipal displays a varied collection of local finds dating back to Roman remains and dinosaur bones. The area is also dotted with vast and spectacular underground caverns with odd rock formations and festoons of stalactites and stalagmites. The Grutas de Mira de Aire, 17 km (10 miles) southeast of Porto de Mós, are the biggest, descending 110 m (360 ft) into tunnels and walkways around subterranean lakes. Episcopal city since 1545, Leiria is set in attractive countryside on the banks of the River Lis. Originally the Roman town of Collipo, it was recaptured from the Moors by Afonso Henriques (see pp42–3) in the 12th century. In 1254 Afonso III held a cortes here, the first parliament attended by common laymen.

The resplendent hilltop castle houses a library and meeting rooms. Along with Pombal, Ourém and Tomar, the Leiria castle was part of the defence system of central Portugal. In the early 1300s, King Dinis turned it into a royal residence for himself and his queen, Isabel of Aragon. Within the castle battlements is the Gothic church of Nossa Senhora da Pena, today little more than a roofless shell of dark granite walls. The view from the castle loggia overlooks the wide expanse of pine forest, the Pinhal de Leiria, and the rooftops of the town below.

The old town below the castle is full of charm, with tiny dwellings over archways, graceful arcades and the small 12th-century church of São Pedro on Largo de São Pedro.

The Romanesque portal is all that remains of the original church. The muted 16th-century Sé above Praça Rodrigues Lobo has an elegant vaulted nave and an altarpiece in the chancel painted in 1605 by Simão Rodrigues. From Avenida Marquês de Pombal, climbing the hill opposite the castle, an 18th-century stairway takes you up to the elaborate 16th-century Santuário de Nossa Senhora da Encarnação. The small Baroque interior is tightly packed with colourful geometric azulejo panels and 17th-century paintings of the Life of the Virgin.

João I's coat of arms on portal

The Dominican abbey of Santa Maria da Vitória at Batalha, a UNESCO World Heritage site, is a masterpiece of Portuguese Gothic architecture famous for its Manueline elements. The pale limestone monastery celebrates João I's 1385 victory over Castile at Aljubarrota. Today, two unknown soldiers from World War I lie in the chapterhouse. The abbey was begun in 1388 under master builder Afonso Domingues, succeeded in 1402 by David Huguet. Over the next two centuries successive kings left their mark on the monastery: João's son, King Duarte, ordered a royal pantheon behind the apse, and Manueline additions include the Unfinished Chapels and much of the decoration of the abbey buildings.

THE BATTLE OF ALJUBARROTA

In 1383 Portugal's direct male line of descent ended with the death of Fernando I (see pp44–5). Dom João, the illegitimate son of Fernando's father, was proclaimed king, but his claim was opposed by Juan of Castile. On 14 August 1385 João I's greatly outnumbered forces, commanded by Nuno Álvares Pereira, faced the Castilians on a small plateau near Aljubarrota, 15 km (9 miles) south of Batalha. João's spectacular victory ensured 200 years of independence from Spain. The monastery now stands as a symbol of Portuguese sovereignty and the power of the house of Avis.

The sanctuary of Fátima is a devotional shrine on a prodigious scale, a pilgrim destination on a par with Lourdes in France. The Neo-Baroque limestone basilica, flanked by statues of saints, has a 65-m (213-ft) tower and an esplanade twice the size of St Peter's Square in Rome.

On 12 and 13 of May and October vast crowds of pilgrims arrive to commemorate appearances of the Virgin to three shepherd children (the three pastorinhos). On 13 May 1917, 10-year-old Lucia Santos and her young cousins, Jacinta Marta and Francisco, saw a shining figure in a holm oak tree. She ordered them to return to the tree on the same day for six months and by 13 October 70,000 pilgrims were with the children by the tree.

Pope beatified Jacinta and Francisco in 2000. Their tombs are inside the basilica. Lucia, who became a nun, died in 2005. The stained-glass windows show scenes of the sightings. In the esplanade, the Capela das Aparições marks the site of the apparition. Inside, the crown of the Virgin holds the bullet used in the 1981 assassination attempt on Pope John Paul II. East of the sanctuary, the children's homes have been preserved in the Casa dos Pastorinhos. Waxworks and a multimedia show complete the experience.

For most people, however, the most impressive sight is the intense emotion and faith of the penitents who approach the shrine on their knees. Wax limbs are burned as offerings for miracles performed by the Virgin and thousands of candles light the esplanade in the night-time masses.

The town's name is said to derive from Oureana, a Moorish girl who, before she fell in love with a Christian knight and converted, was called Fátima.

Tomar 12

Road map C4. 🗺️ 43,000. 🚗

📍 Avenida Dr Cândido Madureira (249 322 427). 📶 Fri.

Founded in 1157 by Gualdim Pais, the first grand master of the Order of the Templars in Portugal, the town is dominated by the 12th-century castle containing the Convento de Cristo (see pp188–9). The heart of this charming town is a neat grid of narrow streets. The lively shopping street, Rua Serpa Pinto, leads to the Gothic church of São João Baptista on Praça da República, the town's main square. The late 15th-century church has an elegant Manueline portal and is capped by an octagonal spire. Inside, there is a carved stone pulpit and 16th-century paintings including a Last Supper by Gregório Lopes (1490–1550). A particularly gory beheading of John the Baptist is also attributed to Lopes.

The area outside the church is the focus of the spectacular Festa dos Tabuleiros, a festival with pagan origins held in July, every two or three years, in which girls in white carry towering platters of bread and flowers on their heads. The festival has similar roots to the Festa do Espírito Santo (see p368), popular in the Azores.

Nearby, in Rua Dr Joaquim Jacinto, stands one of the oldest synagogues in Portugal, built in 1430–60 with four tall columns and a vaulted ceiling. The building was last used as a place of worship in 1497 after which Manuel I (see pp46–7) banished all Jews who refused to convert to Christianity. It has since been a prison, a hay loft and a warehouse. Today, it holds a small Jewish museum, the Museu Luso-Hebraico de Abraham Zacuto, named after a renowned 15th-century astronomer and mathematician.

Further south stands the 17th-century church of São Francisco. Its former cloisters now house the Museu dos Fósforos, a match museum proudly boasting the largest collection in Europe – over 43,000 matchboxes from 104 countries of the world.

On the east side of the River Nabão, just off Rua Aquiles da Mota Lima, is the 13th-century church of Santa Maria do Olival, with a distinctive three-storey belltower. Restored various times over the centuries, the church preserves its Gothic façade and rose window. Inside are the graves of Gualdim Pais (died 1195) and other Templar Masters, and an elegant Renaissance pulpit. The church once had significance far beyond Tomar as the mother church for mariners in the Age of Discovery.

Heading north, Rua Santa Iria takes you to the Capela de Santa Iria, beside the 15th-century bridge, Ponte Velha. This Renaissance chapel is said to have been built where the saint was martyred in the 7th century (see p193). A powerful stone retable depicting Christ on the Cross (1536) stands Continuing northwards, past the octagonal 16th-century Ermida de São Gregório with its wild Manueline doorway, a huge flight of steps leads to a 17th-century chapel, Nossa Senhora da Piedade.

On the slopes of the hill leading up to the Convento do Cristo is the Renaissance basilica, Nossa Senhora da

Conceição, built between 1530 and 1550. Its exterior simplicity contrasts with the elegantly proportioned and delicately carved Corinthian columns of the interior. The architect is believed to be Francisco de Holanda (1517–84), who worked for King João III.

THE ORDER OF CHRIST

During the 12th and 13th centuries, the crusading Order of the Knights Templar helped the Portuguese in their battle against the Moorish “infidels”. In return they were rewarded with extensive lands and political power. Castles, churches and towns sprang up under their protective mantle. In 1314, Pope Clement V was forced to suppress this rich and powerful Order, but in Portugal King Dinis turned it into the Order of Christ, which inherited the property and privileges of the Templars.

Ideals of Christian expansion were revived in the 15th century when their Grand Master, Prince Henry the Navigator, invested the order's revenue in exploration. The emblem of the order, the squared cross, adorned the sails of the caravels that crossed the uncharted waters (see pp46–7).

Founded in 1162 by the Grand Master of the Templars, the Convent of Christ still retains some reminders of these monk-knights and the inheritors of their mantle, the Order of Christ (see p187).

Under Henry the Navigator, the Governor of the Order from 1418, cloisters were built between the Charola and the Templars' fortress, but it was the reign of João III (1521–57) that saw the greatest changes. Architects such as João de Castilho and Diogo de Arruda, engaged to express the Order's power and royal patronage in stone, built the church and cloisters with dazzling Manueline flourishes, which reached a crescendo with the window in the west front of the church.

THE CHAROLA

The nucleus of the monastery is the 12th-century Charola, the Templars' oratory. Like many of their temples, its layout is based on the Rotunda of Jerusalem's Holy Sepulchre, with a central octagon of altars. In 1356, Tomar became the headquarters of the Order of Christ in Portugal, and the Charola's decoration reflects the Order's wealth. The paintings and frescoes (mostly 16th-century biblical scenes) and the gilded statuary below the Byzantine cupola have undergone much careful restoration.

When the Manueline church was built, an archway was created in the side of the Charola to link the two, making the Charola the church's main chapel.

Perhaps there once was a “Castle of the Billygoat”, but today the name refers to a large dam (barragem) that blocks the flow of the River Zêzere 10 km (6 miles) upstream from its confluence with the Tagus. Construction of the dam began in 1946 to serve the first of Portugal’s hydroelectric power stations. Above it, a long, sprawling lake nestles between hills covered in pine and eucalyptus forests in which lie small, isolated villages. The valley is a secluded area popular for boating, fishing and water sports and it is possible to hire equipment from centres along the lake shore. Canoes, windsurf boards and water skis can be found at the Centro Náutico do Zêzere, in Castanheira on the western side of the lake, and yachting facilities are usually available from the lakeside hotels such as the peaceful Estalagem Lago Azul (see p388). A cruise can also be taken from the hotel, stopping at the sandy beaches and the small islands.

LUÍS VAZ DE CAMÕES (1524–80)

The author of Portugal’s celebrated epic poem, Os Lusíadas, had a passionate nature and was often in trouble. Banned from court, he enlisted in 1547 and set sail for North Africa, where he lost an eye. Imprisoned after another brawl, he agreed to serve his country in India, but his was the only ship from the fleet to survive the stormy seas. This experience gave his subsequent poem its vibrant power. A unique record of the Discoveries, this Classical-style epic charts the voyage of Vasco da Gama to India and recounts events and legends from Portuguese history. There was to be no success for Camões, however, and he passed bleak years in India yearning for Lisbon. His poem was published in 1572 but he died almost unnoticed.

Rua de D. Afonso Henriques, Largo da Imaculada Conceição (249 977 361). Wed.

Usually a quiet town, Golegã is overrun during the first two weeks of November by thousands of horse enthusiasts who throng to the annual Feira Nacional do Cavalo. This horse fair, which attracts Portugal's finest horses, breeders and equestrians, coincides with the tasting of the year's new wine on St Martin's day (11 November). The atmosphere is enlivened by the consumption of the young wine known as agua-pé (literally, foot water).

In the centre of town, the 16th-century Igreja Matriz, attributed to Diogo Boitac (see pp104–5), has an exquisite Manueline portal and a calm interior. The small Museu de Fotografia Carlos Relvas is housed in the elegant Art Nouveau house and studio of the photographer (1838–94). A vivid modern art collection can be seen in the Museu de Pintura e Escultura Martins Correia in the old post office.

 Parque de Campismo de Alpiarça (243 556 000). Wed.

Set in the vast, fertile plain known as the Lezíria, which stretches east of the Tagus and is famous for horse breeding, Alpiarça is a small, neat town. The fine twin-towered parish church, on Rua José Relvas, is dedicated to Santo Eustáquio, patron saint of the town. Built in the late 19th century, it houses paintings from the 17th century, including a charming Divine Shepherdess in the sacristy in which the young Jesus is shown conversing with a sheep. The stone cross in the courtyard is dated 1515.

On the southern outskirts of town is the striking Casa Museu dos Patudos surrounded by vineyards. This was the residence of the wealthy and cultivated José Relvas (1858–1929), an art collector and diplomat as well as a politician and – briefly – premier of the Republic. The exterior of this eye-catching country house, built for him by Raúl Lino in 1905–9, has simple whitewashed walls and a green and white striped spire. The colonnaded loggia, reached via an outside staircase, is lined with azulejo panels. The museum contains Relvas's personal collection of fine and decorative art. Renaissance paintings include Virgin with Child and St John by the school of Leonardo da Vinci and Christ in the Tomb by the German school. There are also paintings by Delacroix and Zurbarán as well as many works by 19th-century Portuguese artists, including 30 by Relvas's friend, José Malhóa (see p55). Relvas also collected exquisite porcelain, bronzes, furniture and Oriental rugs, as well as early Portuguese Arraiolos carpets, including a particularly fine one in silk.

Many large estates and fine stables extend across the vast flat plains of this fertile horse and cattle breeding area. The Quinta da Alorna, a handsome 19th-century manor house within walled gardens and well known for its wines, lies just outside Almeirim.

Santarém 19

Road map C4. 30,000.

Rua Capelo e Ivens 63 (243 304 437). 2nd & 4th Sun of month.

The lively district capital of the Ribatejo, overlooking the Tagus, has an illustrious past. To Julius Caesar it was an important bureaucratic centre, Praesidium Julium. To the Moors it was the stronghold of Xantarim – from Santa Iria, the 7th-century martyred nun from Tomar (see pp186–7) whose body was thrown into the River Nabão and allegedly reappeared here on the Tagus shore. To the Portuguese kings, who ousted the Moors in 1147, Santarém was a pleasing abode and the site of many gatherings of the cortes (parliaments).

At the centre of the old town, in Praça Sá da Bandeira, is the vast Igreja do Seminário, a multi-windowed Baroque edifice built by João IV for the Jesuits in 1640 on the site of a royal palace. The huge interior has a painted wooden ceiling and marble and gilt ornamentation. From here, Rua Serpa Pinto runs southeast past a cluster of older buildings. The lofty Igreja de Marvila, built in the 12th century and later altered, has a Manueline portal and is lined with dazzling early 17th-century diamond-patterned azulejo panels. The medieval, although much restored 22-m (72-ft) high Torre das Cabaças, was once a clock tower and now houses a small museum of time, Núcleo Museológico do Tempo. Opposite the tower, the Museu Arqueológico was formerly the Romanesque church of São João de Alporão. Unfortunately, the museum has been closed because of unstable foundations, and has no reopening date as yet.

Rua Serpa Pinto leads into Rua 5 de Outubro and up to the Jardim das Portas do Sol, built on the site of a Moorish castle. The gardens are enclosed by the city's medieval walls, and a terrace affords a panorama of the river and its vast meadowlands. Returning into town, on Largo Pedro Álvares Cabral, the 14th-century Igreja da Graça has a spectacular rose window carved from a single stone. The church contains the tombstone of Pedro Álvares Cabral, who discovered Brazil (see p48). Further south, the 14th-century Igreja do Santíssimo Milagre, on Rua Braamcamp Freire, has a Renaissance interior and 16th-century azulejos. A small crystal flask in the sacristy is said to contain the blood of Christ. The belief stems from a 13th-century legend in which a holy wafer intended to help persuade a husband to stop beating his wife was miraculously transformed into blood.

Santarém is an important bullfighting centre with a modern bullring at the southwest corner of town. During the first ten days of June, the town hosts the Ribatejo Fair, Portugal's largest agricultural fair, in which there are bullfights and contests between the colourfully dressed herdsmen, campinos. In the autumn (Oct/Nov) Portugal's biggest gastronomy festival is held here, with lots of informal eating at stands representing the country's regions and types of food.

Coruche is an attractive little town in the heart of the bullfighting country with a riverside location overlooking the Lezíria, the wide open plain that stretches east of the Tagus. The town, inhabited since Palaeolithic times, was razed to the ground in 1180 by the Moors as reprisal against the reconquering Christians.

In the central pedestrian street, Rua de Santarém, the O Coruja café is lined with vivid modern azulejo panels showing bulls in the Lezíria, the town's bullring and scenes of local life. A short walk up the street stands the tiny church of São Pedro. Its interior is completely covered with 17th-century blue and yellow carpet tiles. An azulejo panel on the altar front shows St Peter surrounded by birds and animals. Above the town stands the simple 12th-century blue and white church of Nossa Senhora do Castelo. From here there are excellent views over the fertile agricultural land and cork oaks of the Sorraia valley and the Lezíria.

Sitting beside the Tagus, surrounded by the riverside industries that dominate this area, the town has a reputation larger than its modest appearance suggests. Traditionally the area has been the centre for bull and horse rearing communities. Twice a year crowds flock here to participate in the bull-running through the streets and watch the tourada and traditional horsemanship. The animated and gaudy Festa do Colete Encarnado (named after the red waistcoat worn by campinos, the Ribatejo herdsmen) takes place over several days in early July. The festival is a lively occasion with folk dancing, boat races on the Tagus and sardines grilled in the street. A similar festival, the Feira de Outubro, takes place in October. The brightly coloured traditional costumes of the campinos and other exhibits related to bullfighting in Portugal are on display in the small Museu Etnográfico.

The town centre retains an exuberantly tiled covered market dating from the 1920s. Further east, on Largo da Misericórdia, striking 18th-century azulejos adorn the chancel of the Misericórdia church. South of town, the Ponte Marechal Carmona, built in 1951, is the only bridge across the River Tagus between Santarém to the north and Lisbon to the south.

Vila Alta, the old part of town, climbs steeply up the slopes of the hillside, high above the newer town by the river. In the central Praça Luis de Camões, the 15th-century church of São Pedro contains the tomb of the humanist chronicler and native son, Damião de Góis (1501–74). Pêro de Alenquer, a navigator for the explorers Bartolomeu Dias in 1488 and Vasco da Gama in 1497 (see pp48–9), was also born here. Uphill, near the ruins of a 13th-century castle, the monastery church of São Francisco retains a Manueline cloister and a 13th-century portal. Founded in 1222, this was Portugal's first Franciscan monastery.

The town is closely linked with the Lines of Torres Vedras, fortified defenses built by the Duke of Wellington to repel Napoleon's troops during the Peninsular War (see p54). North of the town, near the restored fort of São Vicente, traces of trenches and bastions are still visible, but along most of the lines the forts and earthworks have gone, buried by time and rapid change.

Above the town, the restored walls of the 13th-century castle embrace a shady garden and the church of Santa Maria do Castelo. Down in the town, on Praça 25 de Abril, a memorial to those who died in the Peninsular War stands in front of the 16th-century Convento da Graça. Today the monastery houses the well-lit Museu Municipal. A room devoted to the Peninsular War displays a model of the lines; other interesting exhibits include a 15th-century Flemish School Retábulo da Vida da Virgem. Open for mass at weekends, the monastery church, Igreja da Graça, has a 17th-century gilded altarpiece. In a niche in the chancel is the tomb of São Gonçalo de Lagos (see p322).

Beyond the pedestrian Rua 9 de Abril, the Manueline church of São Pedro greets the visitor with an exotic winged dragon on the portal. The interior has a painted wooden ceiling, and colourful 18th-century azulejo panels depicting scenes of daily life adorn the walls. Behind the church, on Rua Cândido dos Reis, is a 16th-century water fountain, the Chafariz dos Canos.

THE LINES OF TORRES VEDRAS

Flintlock pistol from Peninsular War

In October 1809, to save Lisbon from Napoleonic invasion, Arthur Wellesley (later the Duke of Wellington) ordered an arc of defensive lines (Linhas de Torres) to be built. When complete, over 600 guns and 152 redoubts (masonry forts) lay along two lines stretching from the sea to the River Tagus. One was 46 km (29 miles) long, from the Sizandra river mouth, west of Torres Vedras, to Alhandra, south of Vila Franca de Xira. The second line, running behind the first as far as the sea, was 39 km (24 miles) long. A short third line covered the possibility of retreat and embarkation. Construction of the lines took place in extraordinary secrecy: rivers had to be dammed, earthworks raised, hills shifted and homes and farms demolished, but within a year the chain of hilltop fortresses was complete. On 14 October 1810, General Masséna, at the head of 65,000 French troops, saw with astonishment the vastly altered and fortified landscape and realized it was impregnable. In November, the invaders fell back to Santarém (see p193) and in 1811, suffering hunger and defeat, withdrew beyond the Spanish border.

THE BEIRAS

Stretching from the Spanish frontier to the sea, the Beiras are a bulwark between the cool green north and the parched south. This diverse region encompasses the heights of the Serra da Estrela and the salt marshes of the Ria de Aveiro, and its towns vary from lively Figueira da Foz to the stately old university town of Coimbra.

The three provinces of the Beiras (also called Centro) may not be a hub of tourism, but their past commercial and defensive significance has left its mark. In Beira Litoral, the prows of Aveiro's seaweed boats are a legacy of trade with the Phoenicians. All over Beira Baixa, from Castelo Branco to little granite villages, are relics of foreign occupations, and Viseu, Beira Alta's capital, grew up at a crossroads of Roman trading routes.

The Romans were never as firmly entrenched here as further south, but the ruins of Conímbriga speak eloquently of the elegant city that once stood here, and which gave its name to Coimbra, the principal city of Beira Litoral. Afonso Henriques, as king of the new nation of Portugal (see p42), moved his court to Coimbra, the young country's capital for over a century.

The upheavals of the nation's founding and a hard-won independence have left a rich heritage of castles and fortified towns. Conscious of Spain's proximity and claim on their land, successive Portuguese kings constructed a great defensive chain of forts along the vulnerable eastern border. The seemingly impregnable walls of Almeida still stand as a reminder of the region's unsettled history. These border fortresses continued to prove vital in the fight for independence from Spain in the 17th century, and again against Napoleon's forces (see p54). Even Buçaco, revered for the peace and sanctity of its forest, is known also as the site of Wellington's successful stand against Masséna.

Despite the unforgiving terrain and 20th-century depopulation, the Beiras are the source of some gastronomic treats: Portugal's favourite cheese is made in the Serra da Estrela, and the lush Bairrada district around Mealhada is renowned for its leitão, sucking pig. The region's red wines are among Portugal's best known: elegant Bairradas and powerful Dãos (see pp28–9).

Exploring the Beiras

The Beiras, encompassing some of Portugal's finest scenery, comprise three regions. Along the Beira Litoral are the sleepy backwaters of the Ria de Aveiro and, in contrast, the busy seaside resort of Figueira da Foz. The stately old university city of Coimbra repays exploration, and is a convenient base for visiting the historic forest of Buçaco and several of Portugal's spas.

Inland lies Viseu, the charming capital of Beira Alta, on the route to the medieval strongholds of Guarda, Trancoso and the border castles. The country's highest mountains, the Serra da Estrela, separate the Beira Alta from the little-visited Beira Baixa, where Monsanto, voted "most Portuguese village", and the handsome little city of Castelo Branco are contrasting attractions.

GETTING AROUND

A rail network links the principal cities to smaller towns, but stations are often outside the town. Buses run from Coimbra to outlying areas, and local buses link villages and towns throughout the region. The most convenient way to explore the Beiras, however, is by car. The Oporto-Lisbon A1 (E2) motorway passes close to Coimbra and Aveiro, while the A25 motorway links Aveiro and the eastern uplands. Long inclines and bad bends make the A25 Portugal's worst road for accidents. All but the major routes are relatively traffic-free and a pleasure to drive, but unpaved surfaces can still be expected.

Road map C2. 24,000.
 R. Alfredo Vaz Pinto (256 943 575). 5 & 20 of month.

This small town in a green valley owes its principal attraction, the great Convento de Arouca, to its saintly royal benefactor, Mafalda. Princess Mafalda was born in 1195, the daughter of Sancho I. She was betrothed to the teenage Prince Enrique of Castile, but when he died in an accident, Mafalda took the veil in Arouca. Under her, the convent became Cistercian and Mafalda's wealth and dedication made the house highly influential. She died in 1256, and her incorrupt corpse was discovered in 1616, leading to her beatification in 1793.

For over a thousand years the convent has stood beside Arouca's church on the cobbled main square. In the early 18th century the church underwent costly redecoration: 104 carved choir stalls are surmounted by paintings in sumptuous gilded panels, and the organ and chancel reredos are also heavily gilded. Honoured with its own altar is a recumbent effigy of Santa Mafalda in a silver and ebony casket; her mummified remains lie below the casket.

Guided tours take visitors round the convent's museum, in which are displayed some exquisite silver monstrances, furniture and religious works of art, including two paintings by 18th-century artist André Gonçalves, showing Mafalda saving the monastery from fire. The Neo-Classical double cloister, begun in 1781, the large refectory and kitchen and a chapterhouse covered with cheerful Coimbra tiles of rural scenes can also be visited.

Prosperous from cork and its thriving markets, Santa Maria derives its name from long tradition – a document from 1117 refers to “Terra de Santa Maria, a place people call Feira”, after the fairs held here. A large market each month in the broad Rossio upholds the town's reputation.

The pinnaled and crenellated castle crowning Santa Maria da Feira

A double stairway leads from the Rossio to the Igreja dos Lóios, with blue 17th-century tiles decorating the façades of its two symmetrical belltowers. On the opposite side of the Rossio, winding streets of solid merchants' houses from the 18th and 19th centuries lead to a decorative stairway with an ornamental fountain. This rises up to the 18th-century Misericórdia church.

Crowning a wooded hill on the southern edge of the town is the fairytale castle. Although much is a 20th-century reconstruction, it follows the 15th-century design of a local, Fernão Pereira, and his son. They added crenellations and towers to an 11th-century fort which in turn had been built over a temple to a local god. The title of Conde da Feira was bestowed on Pereira, and the castle remained in his family until 1700. There is not much inside the castle now, but it retains its romantic air.

Gleaming tiles cover many of the small houses, as well as the twin-towered 17th-century Igreja Matriz in Avenida do Bom Reitor. In the town centre the Calvary chapel of the 18th-century Capela dos Passos is adorned with woodcarvings carrying a shell motif.

This attractive and historic hillside town rises out of fields of rice and maize beside the River Mondego. Its castle, which served as a primary defence of the city of Coimbra (see pp204–9) is mostly 14th century, but it had previously been a Moorish stronghold, and the keep has fragments of Roman stonework. The church of Santa Maria de Alcaçova within its walls was founded in 1090. Restored in the 15th century, its naves and arches reflect the Manueline style.

Montemor was the birthplace of Fernão Mendes Pinto (1510–83), famous for the colourful accounts of his travels in the east. Another explorer, Diogo de Azambuja (died 1518), is buried here. Columbus is said to have sailed with Azambuja, who intrepidly navigated along the West African coast. His tomb, by the Manueline master Diogo Pires, is in the Convento de Nossa Senhora dos Anjos in the square of the same name (ask at the tourist office for key). ## Aveiro 4

Wooden barrel of ovos moles

This little city, once a great sea port, has a long history – Aveiro's salt pans were featured in the will of Countess Mumadona in AD 959. By the 16th century it was a considerable town, rich from salt and the bacalhoeiros fishing for cod off Newfoundland. When storms silted up the harbour in 1575 this wealth vanished rapidly, and the town languished beside an unhealthy lagoon, the ria. Only in the 19th century did Aveiro regain some of its prosperity; it is now ringed with industry and is home to an important university. The ria and canals give Aveiro its individual character.

Old Quarter

Tucked in between the Canal das Pirâmides and the Canal de São Roque are the neat, whitewashed houses of Aveiro's fishermen. In the early morning the focus of activity is the Mercado do Peixe, where the fish from the night's catch is auctioned.

Skirting the Canal Central, along Rua João de Mendonça, are Art Nouveau mansions and some of the many pastelarias selling Aveiro's speciality: ovos moles. Literally "soft eggs", these are a rich confection of sweetened egg yolk in candied casings shaped like fish or barrels. As so often in Portugal, the original recipe is credited to nuns. Ovos moles are sold by weight or in little barrels.

Across the Canal Central

South of the Canal Central and the bustling Praça Humberto Delgado are the principal historic buildings of Aveiro. The Misericórdia church in the Praça da República dates from the 16th century, its façade of azulejos framing a splendid Mannerist portal. In the same square stands the stately 18th-century Paços do Concelho, or town hall, with its distinctive Tuscan-style pilasters.

Nearby, opposite the museum, is Aveiro's modest 15th-century cathedral of São Domingos. The figures of the Three Graces over the door on the Baroque façade were added in 1719.

A short walk south lies the Igreja das Carmelitas, its nave and chancel decorated with paintings of the life of the Carmelite reformer, St Teresa.

The former Mosteiro de Jesus is full of mementoes of Santa Joana, who died here in 1490. The daughter of Afonso V, Joana retreated to the convent in 1472 and spent the rest of her life here. She was beatified in 1693 and her ornamental Baroque marble tomb, completed 20 years later, is in the lower choir. Simpler in style are the 18th-century paintings in the chapel, showing scenes of her life. This was once the needlework room where Santa Joana died. Among Portuguese primitive paintings is a superb 15th-century full-face portrait of the princess in court dress.

Also part of the museum are the superb gilded chancel (1725–9), 15th-century cloisters and refectory faced in Coimbra tiles. Between the refectory and chapterhouse lies the Gothic tomb of an armoured knight, Dom João de Albuquerque.

RIA DE AVEIRO

Old maritime charts show no lagoon here, but in 1575 a terrible storm raised a sand bar that blocked the harbour. Denied access to the sea, Aveiro declined, its population cut down by the fever bred in the stagnant waters. It was not until 1808 that the barra nova was created, linking Aveiro once more to the sea.

The lagoon which remains covers some 65 sq km (25 sq miles), and is nearly 50 km (30 miles) long, from Furadouro south past Aveiro's salt pans and the Reserva Natural das Dunas de São Jacinto (nature reserve of São Jacinto) to Costa Nova. The reserve includes beaches, dunes and woods as well as the lagoon, and is home to a large and varied bird population, including pintails and goshawks. Of the boats seen here the most elegant is the moliceiro. Despite the bright, often humorous, decoration on its high, curving prow, this is a working boat, harvesting molicho (seaweed) for fertilizer. Chemical fertilizers have drastically cut demand for molicho, but a few of the stately craft survive; the Festa da Ria is a chance to see them in full sail.

Student in May celebrations

The birthplace of six kings and the seat of Portugal's oldest university, Coimbra arouses an affection in the Portuguese shared by no other city. To the Romans the town founded on Alcaçova hill was Aeminium, but as its importance grew it took on the mantle and name of nearby Conimbriga (see p210). Coimbra was wrested from the Moors in AD 878, only to come under their control again a century later, until finally freed by Ferdinand the Great of Castile in 1064. When Afonso Henriques, the first king of Portugal, decided to move his capital south from Guimarães in 1139 (see pp42–3), his choice was Coimbra, an honour it retained until 1256. For the Portuguese, Coimbra carries the roots of nationhood and, for visitors, a wealth of fascinating historic associations.

Orientation

In the historic heart of the city, high above the Mondego, lie the cathedrals, university and a fine museum, but a first impression of Coimbra is likely to be of commerce, not culture. Shops, traffic and the railway rule the riverside and around the Praça do Comércio. The Largo da Portagem is a useful starting point, and river trips depart from nearby, alongside the Parque Dr Manuel Braga.

The Lower Town

From Largo da Portagem, Rua Ferreira Borges leads past shops, lively bars, restaurants and pastelarias to the Praça do Comércio. In one corner of this bustling square stands the church of São Tiago. Its plain façade is a restoration of the 12th-century original, but inside is an exuberant Rococo altarpiece in gilded wood.

Running north of the Praça do Comércio, Rua Visconde da Luz leads to the Praça 8 de Maio and the historic church of Santa Cruz (see p207).

Portugal's first two kings are buried here, and monks from the adjacent monastery of Santa Cruz tutored the first students at Coimbra university.

Beyond Praça 8 de Maio is Rua da Sofia, the "street of wisdom", named after the theological colleges that once stood here. The convent churches to which they were attached remain: the Igreja do Carmo (1597), with a 16th-century retablo, and the Igreja da Graça, founded by João III in 1543. The nearby Pátio da Inquisição is a reminder that Coimbra, like Lisbon and Évora, was a seat in the 16th century of the fiercely intolerant Inquisition (see p51).

Coimbra's two cathedrals, Sé Velha and Sé Nova (see p206), lie in the shadow of the hilltop university (see pp208–9). Beyond is the upper town's main square, Praça da República.

Across the Mondego

It is worth crossing the river just to admire the view of old Coimbra. The two convents of Santa Clara (see p207) on the southern bank have close ties with Santa Isabel, and with Inês de Castro, Pedro I's luckless lover, who was stabbed to death here in 1355 (see p181). A romantic legend tells how a spring, the Fonte dos Amores, rose on the spot. This can be seen in the garden of the 18th-century Quinta das Lágrimas, now a hotel (see p399), just south of Santa Clara-a-Velha.

Exploring Coimbra

That the citizens of Coimbra fondly call their river, the Mondego, “O Rio dos Poetas” gives a clue to the affection they have for their vibrant and beautiful city. From the university (see pp208–9) at the top of Alçaçova hill, down the narrow streets and stairways to the lower town, the city is crammed with historic buildings and treasures (and, all too often, slow-moving traffic). Most sights are within walking distance of each other, and despite its steep hill, Coimbra is a city best appreciated on foot. Across the Mondego there are further historic sights and an unusual theme park for children.

Afonso Henriques, made the city of Coimbra his capital and his son, Sancho I, was crowned here in 1185, soon after the cathedral was completed.

Inside, square piers lead the eye up the nave to the flamboyant retablo over the altar. The work of Flemish woodcarvers in about 1502, this depicts the birth of Christ, the Assumption and many saints. A 16th-century altarpiece in the south transept is also highly decorated, as is the Manueline font, thought to be by Diogo Pires the Younger. In contrast is the quiet restraint of the cloister, built in 1218 but restored in the 18th century.

The tomb of the city's first Christian governor, Sisinando (a Moslem convert who died in 1091), lies in the chapterhouse, and in the north aisle is the tomb of the Byzantine Dona Vetaça (died 1246), tutor to the wife of King Dinis, the saintly Queen Isabel (see p45).

The Jesuit Order was banned by the Marquês de Pombal in 1759 (see p52) but their church became the episcopal seat in 1772. Jesuit saints still look out from the façade.

The interior, more spacious than the Sé Velha, is barrel-vaulted, with a dome over the crossing. To the left of the entrance is a Manueline-style octagonal font brought, like the choir stalls, from the Sé Velha. The paintings above the stalls are copies of Italian masters. Carvings by Nicolau Chanterène and Jean de Rouen adorn the church's Portal da Majestade, designed by Diogo de Castilho in 1523. The chapterhouse by Diogo Boitac is Manueline in style, as are the Claustro do Silêncio and the choir stalls, carved in 1518 with a frieze about exploration. ## Coimbra University on the Via Latina

In response to an ecclesiastical petition, in 1290 King Dinis founded a university in Lisbon, one of the world's oldest and most illustrious. In 1537 it was transferred to Coimbra and located in what used to be King Afonso's palace. Study was mostly of theology, medicine and law until the reforms by the Marquês de Pombal in the 1770s broadened the curriculum. Several 19th-century literary figures, including Eça de Queirós (see p55), were alumni of Coimbra. Many buildings were replaced after the 1940s, but the halls around the Pátio das Escolas echo with 700 years of learning.

STUDENT TRADITIONS

When the university was first founded, the only subjects studied were canon and civil law, medicine and letters – grammar and philosophy. To indicate which faculty they belonged to, students began to pin coloured ribbons to their gowns: red for law, yellow for medicine, dark blue for letters. Much has changed in 700 years, but students are still initiated in rites whose origins are long forgotten, and in May, as the academic year ends, there is a ceremonial burning of ribbons, the Queima das Fitas.

This, the largest and most extensively excavated Roman site in Portugal (see pp40–41), was on the Roman road between Lisbon (Olisipo) and Braga (Bracara Augusta). There is evidence of Roman habitation as early as the 2nd century BC, but even before then there was a Celtic settlement here.

Under the Roman emperor Augustus, from about 25 BC, Conímbriga became a substantial town: baths, a forum and the aqueduct have been uncovered from this era. The finest buildings, however, date from the 2nd and 3rd centuries AD, and they provide a vivid image of a prosperous city.

The site is approached along a section of Roman road that led into the city from the east. Just to the left cluster the outlines of shops, baths and two once-luxurious houses, both with exquisite mosaic floors.

At Conímbriga is one of the largest houses discovered in the western Roman empire. This opulent villa, known as the Casa de Cantaber, is built around ornamental pools in superb colonnaded gardens, with its own bath complex and a sophisticated heating system. Some of the fine mosaics in the museum probably came from this huge residence.

Detail of a bedroom floor in a house near the entrance

The Casa das Fontes, dating from the early 2nd century, is under a protective cover but walkways provide good views. Its mosaics and fountains, rare survivals, which give the house its name, form a strong image of the Roman taste for good living. The city's pools, and the baths and steam rooms of Trajan's thermae, were fed by a spring 3.5 km (2 miles) away via a mostly subterranean aqueduct.

Official excavation was begun here in 1912, but a considerable part of the 13-ha (32-acre) site has yet to be explored, including an amphitheatre north of the city. In the 3rd or early 4th century, buildings were plundered for stone as defensive walls were hastily raised against Barbarian hordes. In a successful assault in AD 468, the Suevi burned the city and murdered the inhabitants. Excavated skeletons may date from this episode.

An informative museum explains the history and layout of the site, and has exhibits of Roman busts, mosaics and coins alongside more ancient Celtic artefacts. There is also a restaurant and picnic site.

Environs: Deep in a valley, 3 km (2 miles) south of Lousã, is the Castelo de Arouce.

Legend says it was built in the 11th century by a King Arunce who took refuge in the valley when fleeing from raiders. Permission to visit the castle is available from the town hall. Near the castle are the three shrines of the Santuário de Nossa Senhora da Piedade.

In the 11th century Luso was just a village linked to a monastery at Vacariça, but it developed into a lively spa town in the 18th century as its hot-water springs became a focus for tourism. The thermal waters, which originate from a spring below the Capela de São João, are said to be of therapeutic value in the treatment of a wide range of conditions, from bad circulation and muscle tone to renal problems and rheumatism.

There are a number of grand, if somewhat faded, hotels here, and an elegant Art Nouveau lobby adorns the former casino, but the main reason for visiting the resort is to enjoy its spa facilities. An additional attraction of Luso is the proximity of the treasured national forest of Buçaco, which is a powerful presence above the town.

Tradition says that this was a Roman city called Argos. In the 12th century, Dona Teresa, the mother of Afonso Henriques (see pp42–3), gave the town to the bishopric of Coimbra, whose incumbent also acquired the title of Conde de Arganil. Most of the town's architecture is unremarkable, but the church of São Gens, the Igreja Matriz in Rua de Visconde de Frias, dates back perhaps to the 14th century.

Environs: One of the most curious local sights is kept in the sanctuary of Mont'Alto, 3 km (2 miles) above the town. Here, the Capela do Senhor da Ladeira harbours the Menino Jesus, a Christ Child figure in a bicorne hat (part of a full wardrobe). He comes out for festas but the chapel key is otherwise available from the last house on the right.

THERMAL SPAS

In response to the Portuguese enthusiasm for thermal waters and health-orientated holidays, spa resorts have developed across the northern half of the country, with several of them in the Beiras, near Luso. All offer extensive sports facilities and a calm ambience as well as treatments for all the body's major systems. Most spas close for the winter, but Curia, 16 km (10 miles) northwest of Luso, is open all year for relaxation and treatments. Luso itself produces the country's best-known bottled mineral water.

Buçaco 12

Viewpoint

Part ancient woodland, part arboretum, the National Forest of Buçaco is a magic place. As early as the 6th century it was a monastic retreat, and in 1628 the Carmelites built a house here, walling in the forest to keep the world at bay (women had already been banned by the pope in 1622). In their secluded forest the monks established contemplative walks, chapels – and trees. The trees, added to by Portuguese explorers, gained papal protection in 1632, and the 105 ha (260 acres) contain some 700 native and exotic species, including the venerable “Buçaco cedar”. The peace of the forest was disturbed in 1810 as British and Portuguese troops fought the French on Buçaco ridge. In 1834 the monastery closed, but the forest endures, with its shady walks, hermits’ grottoes and the astonishing Palace Hotel Bussaco at its centre.

PALACE HOTEL BUSSACO

King Carlos, who commissioned this extravaganza in 1888, never lived to see his creation. His son, Manuel II, visited only briefly before his exile in 1910 (see p55) – he is said to have brought the French actress, Gaby Deslys, here for a romantic interlude. Its rebirth as a luxury hotel, serving its own renowned wines, was the inspiration of the royal chef and it became a fashionable rendezvous for socialites; in World War II it was also rumoured to be frequented by spies. It is now one of the great hotels of Portugal (see p391).

Piódão 15

Road map D3. 60 km (12 miles) away. Largo Cónego Manuel Fernando Nogveira (235 732 787).

As its name suggests, the Serra de Açor, hills of the goshawk, is a place of bleak beauty, where solitary villages cling to precipitous terraces. Piódão is the most striking of these dark schist and slate hamlets. Seemingly remote, Piódão was, until the late 19th century, on the main commercial route from Coimbra to Covilhã, but with newer roads the village was forgotten. With help from EU funds, it is now coming back to life: shops are opening, houses are being repainted with traditional blue trim, and in the main square the bright white Igreja Matriz stands out against the surrounding dark stone. Happily, Piódão retains its old-world charm.

Oliveira do Hospital 16

Road map D3. 22,000 km. Casa da Cultura, Rua do Colégio (238 609 269). 2nd Mon of month.

These lands once belonged to the Knights Hospitallers, a gift in 1120 from the mother of Afonso Henriques. The 13th-century Igreja Matriz in Largo Ribeira do Amaral, houses a magnificent reminder of the era of these warrior monks. One of the founders of the town, Domingues Joanes, lies in a large tomb surmounted by a charming equestrian statue.

Today, this lively industrial town is perfectly situated for exploring the valleys of the Mondego and the Alva.

Environs: At Lourosa, 12 km (7 miles) to the southwest, the 10th-century church of São Pedro reflects the changing fate of Portugal over the centuries. A cemetery excavated beneath the church dates from the Roman era; the porch is Visigothic, while inside are ten impressive Roman arches and an ajimene (Moorish window).

It is better known today for two very disparate museums in a single institutional block.

In the Museu do Caramulo, the exhibits range from 16th-century Flemish tapestries, sculpture, porcelain, silver and ivory to Egyptian bronzes from 1580 to 900 BC. The paintings are as varied: from Portuguese primitives to the 20th century. Chagall and Dalí are represented, as is the Portuguese Maria Helena Vieira da Silva (1908–92). One of Picasso's haunting still lifes was donated by the artist in 1947.

The collection in the Museu do Automóvel is just as eclectic: a working 1899 Peugeot, Bugattis and Rolls-Royces, and a bullet-proof 1938 Mercedes-Benz ordered for Salazar when he was prime minister (see pp56–7) but never used.

Viseu 18

Road map D3. 19,500.

Avenida de Gulbenkian (232 420 950). Tue.

An enthralling old town is at the heart of this lively regional capital. Viseu has been a major northern crossroads since the time of the Romans and is the centre of the Dão wine-growing region (see p29).

On a visit to Viseu it is hard to miss that this was the home town of one of Portugal's great 16th-century artists. The name of Grão Vasco graces a hotel, a museum, even a wine label.

On the western side of the old town is the striking 15th-century Porta do Soar de Cima, a remnant of the original walls. In the Rossio, the main square, the Igreja dos Terceiros de São Francisco (1773) has an Italianate façade and gilded interior. The 1887 town hall on the west side has a grand stairway and azulejos featuring the history of Viseu and its personalities. Just north is Rua Augusto Hilário, named after the originator of Coimbra-style fado (see pp64–5) who was born here.

Viseu's cathedral still retains a few Romanesque features, but it has been altered over the centuries in a variety of styles which work together surprisingly well. The façade is a 17th-century replacement of a Manueline frontage that fell down in 1635. Inside, the vaulted roof is supported by 16th-century knotted ribs on 13th-century columns. In the north chapel are fine azulejos from the 18th century, while those in the two-storey cloister date from a century earlier. The sacristy has a lavishly painted ceiling and early “carpet” tiles (see p26). In the chancel, choir stalls in Brazilian jacaranda contrast with a startling modern altar, an inverted pyramid in polished granite and steel.

The Sé's treasury, housed in the chapterhouse, includes a 12th-century Gospel and a 13th-century Limoges coffer.

Facing the cathedral is the Misericórdia church, with its 18th-century Rococo façade. It houses a temporary exhibition from the Museu de Grão Vasco.

(free 10am–2pm Sun).

In the 16th-century former bishops' palace abutting the cathedral is the Museu de Grão Vasco, Viseu's “great Vasco”. The paintings of Vasco Fernandes (c.1475–1540) and his fellow artists of the Viseu School are highly esteemed for their naturalism, background landscapes, drapery and attention to detail. Their treatment of light betrays the marked influence of Flemish painters.

On the top floor of the three-storey museum are the masterpieces that once adorned the cathedral's chancel altarpiece, including Grão Vasco's monumental St Peter and, from a series of 14 panels on the life of Christ, The Adoration of the Magi. Painted around 1503–5, it is memorable for the inclusion of a Brazilian Indian among those paying homage to the newborn Christ (see p48). Some of the other panels are thought to be by fellow artists in the Viseu School.

Among other masterpieces here are works by Grão Vasco's great rival, Gaspar Vaz, including a Last Supper. On the lower floors are works by Portuguese artists from the 19th and 20th centuries, including Columbano Bordalo Pinheiro.

every other Thu.

Small whitewashed houses cluster around the granite heart of this modest Beira town which was established on the banks of the Távora in the 10th century. In the central Praça da República stands the Romanesque Igreja Matriz. The granite statues in its façade niches, survivors from the 12th century, flank a notable arched portal embellished by a semicircle of carved angels. The pillory that stands across the square is dated 1554.

The grandest house here is the Baroque Solar dos Carvalhos behind the church. Long and low, with carved granite portals against whitewashed walls, it is where the local noble family lived in the 18th century. It is still a private house.

Only a few stubs of castle wall remain on the rocky outcrop overlooking the square, but a small battlemented house has been built into them.

Environ: In the Serra da Lapa, which rises to the south of Sernancelhe, stands a popular shrine known as the Santuário da Nossa Senhora da Lapa. The story tells of a dumb shepherd girl, Joana, who found a statue of the Virgin Mary on a great boulder and took it home. Irritated, her mother threw it on the fire, at which moment the child miraculously spoke: "Don't burn it," cried Joana. "It is the Senhora da Lapa."

A chapel was built to enshrine the boulder, and the image, now with a slightly scorched face, looks down from an ornamental recess. The space below her niche is packed with images and offerings left by pilgrims.

The castle at Penedono is captivating. Perched on rocks in the middle of this small town 17 km (11 miles) northeast of Sernancelhe, it has survived since at least the 10th century.

The castle is mentioned in the medieval tale of a knight known as O Magriço, who went to England with 11 other knights to joust in honour of 12 English ladies. There is little to see inside the castle – if closed, the key is in the store beside the pelourinho (pillory), but there are splendid views from the walls.

Avenida Heróis de São Marcos (271 811 147). Fri.

When King Dinis married Isabel here in 1283 (see pp44–5), he gave her Trancoso as a wedding gift. He was also responsible for the impressive walls that still encircle the town and, in 1304, established here the first unrestricted fair in Portugal. Left in peace after 1385, the town became a lively commercial centre. Trancoso once had a large Jewish population, and in the old Judiaria, houses survive with one broad and one narrow door, separating domestic life from commerce.

From the southern gate, Rua da Corredoura leads to São Pedro, restored after 1720. A tombstone in the church commemorates Gonçalo Anes, a local shoemaker who, in the 1580s, wrote the celebrated Trovas under the name of Bandarra. These prophesied the return of the young King Sebastião (see p105).

Environ: Tumbledown ruins above a humble village are all that remain of the medieval citadel of Marialva, 14 km (9 miles) to the northeast of Trancoso. Granite walls, fragments of stone carvings and a striking 15th-century pillory emanate an aura of lost grandeur. Probably founded by Ferdinand of León and Castile early in the 11th century and fortified by Sancho I, it is not known why Marialva fell into ruin. No battle destroyed it and it seems merely to have been abandoned as townsfolk moved to more fruitful lands.

SERRA CHEESE

Serra, made from the milk of ewes grazing in the Serra da Estrela (see pp220–21), is Portugal's finest cheese. It is made in the winter – its success was once governed by the temperature of the women's hands as they worked in their cool granite kitchens – and traditionally the milk is coagulated with flor do cardo, thistle. Now the small factories producing the cheese, in rounds of 1.5–2 kg (about 3–5 lb), are certified to ensure quality and authenticity (fakes are not uncommon). At room temperature Serra becomes runny. The cheese is scooped out with a spoon through a hole cut into the top.

Road map D3. 🏠 8,800. 🚗
 📍 Estrada Nacional 16 (271 742 109). 📅 Tue, Dec–May; alternate Fri.

In the lee of the Serra da Estrela, the pastures around Celorico da Beira have long been a source of the region's famous Serra cheese. From December to May the cheese market is held in the Praça Municipal and every February there is a cheese fair. Around Rua Fernão Pacheco, running from the main road up to the castle, is the old centre of Celorico, a cluster of granite houses with Manueline windows and Gothic doors. Of the 10th-century castle, battered by a long succession of frontier disputes with Spain, only a tower and the outer walls remain. Its stark silhouette is less dramatic at close quarters. The Igreja Matriz, restored in the 18th century, has a painted coffered ceiling. During the Peninsular War, the church served briefly as a makeshift hospital for the English forces.

Almeida ②

Road map E2. 🏠 1,500. 🚗
 📍 Portas de São Francisco (271 574 204). 📅 8th day & last Sat of month.

Formidable defences in the form of a 12-pointed star guard this small, delightfully preserved border town.

Almeida was recognized by Spain as Portuguese territory under the Alcañices Treaty on 12 September 1297, but this did not stop further incursions. The present Vauban-style stronghold (see p299) was designed in 1641 by Antoine Deville after Spain's Philip IV, in post-Restoration rage, destroyed the earlier defences protecting the town and its medieval castle.

From 1742 to 1743 Almeida was in Spanish hands again, and then during the Peninsular War was held in turn by the French under Masséna and the British under the Duke of Wellington. In 1810, a French shell lit a powder trail that destroyed the castle.

To breach the town's fortifications today, it is necessary to cross a bridge and pass through a tunnel. The underground casamatas, soldiers' barracks, can be visited and an armoury in the main gateway, the Portas de São Francisco, holds further mementoes of Almeida's military past. In the town itself are a 17th-century parish church and a Misericórdia church of a similar age, attached to one of Portugal's oldest almshouses. A walk around the grassy walls gives rewarding views of the town.

Border Castles Tour 29

Defending Portugal's frontiers was a vital priority of the nation's early kings. The greatest period of castle-building was in the reign of King Dinis (1279–1325). All along the shakily held border, Spanish incursions were frequent and loyalties divided. Castles were constantly being assaulted, besieged and rebuilt, and the 20 that survived are a lasting reminder of this long period of dispute. Much of the terrain, especially in the Serra da Maroفا, is bleak and rocky, but near Pinhel and beyond Castelo Mendo the scenic valley of the River Côa provides a dramatic backdrop.

Figueira de

Castelo Rodrigo ③

From the 18th century, Castelo Rodrigo was largely abandoned in favour of less isolated Figueira, now a flourishing little town known for its almond blossom. Just to the south, topped by a huge stone Christ the King, is the highest point of the Serra da Maroفا, 977 m (3,205 ft).

Pinhel ④

Part of the region's defences since Roman times, Pinhel formed the fulcrum for a network of fortresses, and in the early 14th century King Dinis built it up into an impressive citadel. Much of this ring of walls survives, as do two towers.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Length: 115 km (72 miles).

Stopping-off points: Most villages have cafés, and Pinhel and Almeida have restaurants.

Road conditions: The tour uses well-surfaced roads but short cuts are deceptive and are not recommended. (see also pp460–61.)

Castelo Rodrigo ②

This tiny fortified village still has its encircling walls built by King Dinis in 1296. But the fine palace of its lord, the Spanish sympathizer Cristóvão de Moura, was burnt down at the Restoration in 1640 (see pp50–51).

Almeida ①

The town's star-shaped defences are a finely preserved example of the complex but effective style of fortifications developed by the French engineer, Vauban, in the 17th century (see p299).

Guarda 24

Road map D3. 26,000.
P Praça Luis de Camões (271 205 530). 1st & last Wed of month.

Spread over a bleak hill on the northeast flank of the Serra da Estrela, Guarda is Portugal's highest city, at 1,056 m (3,465 ft). Founded in 1197 by Sancho I, the city's original role as frontier guard explains its name and its rather forbidding countenance. Some of its arcaded streets and squares are lively and interesting, but the great fortress-like Sé, with its flying buttresses, pinnacles and gargoyles, could never be described as lovely. Master architects who worked on the cathedral, begun in 1390 and completed in 1540, included Diogo Boitac (from 1504 to 1517) and the builders of Batalha (see pp184–5). The interior, by contrast, is light and graceful. The 100 carved figures high on the altarpiece in the chancel were worked by Jean de Rouen in 1552.

On display in the nearby Museu de Guarda are two floors of paintings, artefacts, archaeological discoveries and a section on the city's own poet, Augusto Gil (1873–1929).

From the cathedral square, Rua do Comércio leads down to the 17th-century Miseri-córdia church. Inside the ornamental portal are Baroque altars and pulpits. Just north of the cathedral, in the historic town centre, is the 18th-century church of São Vicente, which has 16 elaborate azulejo panels depicting the life of Christ.

Guarda used to support a thriving Jewish community and in Rua Dom Sancho I is a key shop that may once have served as a synagogue. History records that João I, on a visit to Guarda, was smitten by Inês Fernandes, the beautiful daughter of a Jewish shoemaker. From their liaison a son, Afonso, was born. In 1442 the title of first Duke of Bragança was bestowed on Afonso, and 200 years later his descendant would take the throne as João IV, first of the Bragança monarchs (see p301).

Road map D3. 3,500.
P Castelo de Belmonte (275 911 488). 1st & 3rd Mon of month.

Belmonte was for generations the fiefdom of the heroic Cabral family. Pedro Álvares Cabral, the first navigator to land in Brazil, had forebears who fought at Ceuta (see p48) and Aljubarrota (see p185). Fernão, an earlier ancestor, was famed for his feats of strength. The family crest, incorporating a goat (cabra), can be seen in the castle and adjacent chapel.

The castle, begun in 1266, retains its keep and, a later addition, an ornate Manueline window. The little church of São Tiago nearby has preserved its Romanesque simplicity: the frescoes above the altar and, in a tiny side chapel, a serene granite pieta date from the 13th century. Beside the church is the 15th-century Capela dos Cabrais which holds the Cabral family tombs.

The modern Igreja da Sagrada Família (1940) is the repository for a treasured statue of Nossa Senhora da Esperança said to have accompanied Cabral on his voyage to Brazil. A museum charting the development of the Jewish community in the region is due to open soon.

Environs: Just northeast of Belmonte is a Roman tower, Centum Cellas, also called Torre de Colmeal. The role of this square, three-storeyed structure is uncertain and archaeologists' theories have suggested a range of functions from hostel or military base to mansion and temple.

Serra da Estrela 25

Haymaking near the town of Linhares

These “star mountains” are the highest range on mainland Portugal, with much of the Serra over 1,500 m (5,000 ft). The highest point rises to 1,993 m (6,539 ft) but is topped by a small stone tower – the Torre – to “stretch” it to 2,000 m. The exposed granite of the upper slopes is good for little but grazing sheep, and stone shepherds’ huts form part of the landscape, their thatched roofs renewed each year after the harsh winter. Sheep have shaped the fortunes of the area, providing wool for a textile industry and supplying milk for Portugal’s best-known cheese. A designated nature reserve, the Serra’s long-distance paths and stunning flora attract walkers and nature enthusiasts, while a winter snowfall brings skiers to the slopes around Torre.

Valezim

In Valezim are several old water mills of a type not often found in Portugal. Two of them are still used to grind grain.

Seia is one of the main entry points to the Parque Natural da Serra da Estrela.

Cabeça do Velho

The granite of the mountain tops has been eroded into many weird shapes, such as this “old man’s head” near Sabugueiro. It is matched by an “old woman’s head” south of Seia.

Serra Cheese Shop

The best Serra cheese, prized for its rich flavour (see p217), is still made by hand. Farmers sell their produce at cheese fairs and at stalls or small shops such as this one near the summit of Torre.

Penhas de Saúde, once a health spa, is now popular with skiers.

Despite the unpredictability of snow, the slopes below Torre are used for skiing, tobogganing or just fun in the snow.

Intelligent, loyal and brave, the Serra da Estrela sheepdog embodies all the qualities required in this wild region. Its heavy coat, as shaggy as its charges, helps it survive the bitter high-altitude winters and in the past its strength was called upon to defend the flock from wolves. In 1296, when this small town beside the River Côa was confirmed as Portuguese in the Treaty of Alcañices, the castle was refortified by the ever-industrious King Dinis (see p44). Its imposing towered walls and unusual five-sided keep survive from this era, although the castle suffered in peacetime from villagers raiding it for building stone.

Peopled since prehistoric times, Sabugal still has part of its medieval walls, reinforced in the 17th century and now ringed by newer houses. In the Praça da República stands a granite clocktower, reconstructed in the 17th century.

Environs: Wrapped in its ring of walls, Sortelha, 20 km (12 miles) west, is enchanting. It sits on a granite outcrop and the views from the high keep of its gem of a 13th-century castle are stunning. In front of the arched castle entrance is a 16th-century pillory with an armillary sphere on top. In the tiny citadel are a school and stony lanes of granite houses, some discreetly converted into restaurants (see p419).

Fought over by successive waves of Romans, Visigoths and Moors, this frontier town was fortified in the 12th century by Gualdim Pais, Master of the Knights Templar (see pp186–7). Today the weather-beaten castle walls rise above a quiet town at the heart of hardy, sparsely inhabited country where the main attraction is the hunting of small game.

From the main square, the road up to the old town passes beside the former town hall, built over a medieval archway. Beyond lie the restored castle keep and the 16th-century Igreja da Misericórdia, with an elegant Manueline portal capped by armillary spheres, the emblem of Manuel I.

Environs: Penamacor is the headquarters of the Reserva Natural da Serra da Malcata. 📍 Rua Marquês de Graciosa (277 314 642). 🕒 3rd Sat.

An odd fame hit Monsanto in 1938 when it was voted “most Portuguese village in Portugal”. The village is at one with the granite hillside on which it perches: its lanes blend into the grey rock, the houses squeezed between massive boulders. Tiny gardens sprout from the granite and dogs drink from granite bowls.

The ruined castle began as a castro, a Lusitanian fortified settlement, and suffered a long history of sieges and battles for its commanding position. It was finally destroyed by a 19th-century gunpowder explosion. Cars cannot venture beyond the village centre, but the view alone is worth the walk up to the ruined walls.

A story is told of how a long siege by the Moors drove the hungry villagers to a desperate ploy. They threw their last calf, full of their last grain, over the walls, a show of profligacy that convinced the Moors to give up. Each May there is a mock re-enactment of this victory amid much music and singing.

Idanha-a-Velha was, it is said, the birthplace of the Visigothic King Wamba, and had its own bishop until 1199. The present appearance of the cathedral comes from early 16th-century restoration, but in the echoing interior are stacked inscribed and sculpted Roman stones.

In the middle of the village stand several historic monuments: a 17th-century pillory and the Renaissance Igreja Matriz, while near an early 20th-century olive press is a ruined Torre dos Templários, a relic of the Templars. This order of religious knights held sway in Idanha until the 14th century (see pp186–7).

This handsome, busy old city, overlooked by the vestiges of a Templar castle, is the most important in the Beira Baixa.

Much the greatest attraction is the extraordinary Jardim Episcopal beside the former bishops' palace. Created by Bishop João de Mendonça in the 18th century, the garden's layout is conventionally formal; its individuality lies in its dense population of statues. Baroque in style and often bizarre in character, stone saints and apostles line the box-edged paths, lions peer at their reflections in pools and monarchs stand guard along the balustrades – the hated kings of the 60-year Spanish rule (see p50) conspicuously half-size.

The 17th-century Paço Episcopal itself now houses the Museu Francisco Tavares Proença Júnior. Its wide-ranging collection includes archaeological finds, displays of 16th-century tapestries and Portuguese primitive art. Castelo Branco is also well known for its fine silk-embroidered bedspreads, called colchas, and examples of these are also exhibited in the museum.

In the mainly 18th-century Convento da Graça opposite there is a small Museu de Arte Sacra with a varied collection of religious art, including an ivory Christ. Beside the road back to the town centre stands a 15th-century cross known as the Cruzeiro de São João.

Northern Portugal at a Glance

Portugal north of the River Douro is rural and unspoilt, yet offers splendid opportunities for cultural sightseeing, walking and water sports. Beyond the cultivated valley of the Douro and the fertile Minho rises the remote and romantically named Trás-os-Montes (“Behind the Mountains”), with its tracts of wilderness and tiny medieval townships. It could be said the nation was conceived between the Minho and the Douro, and historic cities such as Oporto, Bragança and Braga give fascinating insights into the country’s past.

In the Parque Nacional da Peneda-Gerês scenery ranges from dramatic forested valleys to flowery meadows. Local farmers store their grain in curious stone espigueiros (see pp272–3).

Viana do Castelo, at the mouth of the River Lima, is elegant and relaxed (see pp276–7). The stately buildings in the Praça da República, including the arcaded Paços do Concelho (the old town hall), reflect the town’s wealthy past.

Bom Jesus do Monte, near Braga, attracts worshippers, penitents and tourists, who all come to climb 116 m (380 ft) up the Baroque staircase (see pp280–81). This is the Staircase of the Five Senses, with fountains depicting each of the senses.

Oporto, set on Penaventosa Hill above the River Douro, is Portugal’s second city (see pp236–47). Alongside a wealth of historic sights and sophisticated shopping, it offers the charm of its steep medieval alleys tumbling down to the lively riverside quays, and a chance to taste port at its point of origin.

The Casa de Mateus, familiar to many from the Mateus Rosé wine label, lies in the hills above the valley of the Douro. This Baroque solar, or manor house, is set in beautifully manicured formal gardens, its distinctive pinnacles rising above the orchards and vineyards that surround it (see pp256–7).

Bragança, capital of Trás-os-Montes, gave its name to Portugal's last and longest-ruling royal dynasty. The keep and walls of this remote citadel, founded in the 12th century, look out over the valley of the River Fervença (see pp260–61).

Port Country, as the scenic valley of the Upper Douro is commonly called, is the nursery of Portugal's port industry. A tour of a quinta, or wine estate, with its steeply terraced riverside vineyards, is highly recommended (see pp254–5).

The Festivals of the North

Dressing up for Holy Week

Portuguese cities, towns and villages all have their own particular saints' days. These are primarily religious occasions, particularly in the Minho and across the devout north, but are also a chance to put aside the cares of life for a day or two. It is a popular maxim that a holy day is best celebrated by eating, drinking, dancing and merrymaking, as well as worshipping and giving thanks. The most solemn and spectacular celebrations of Holy Week, Semana Santa, can also be seen in the north, especially in Braga (see pp278–9), Portugal's ecclesiastical capital.

Cross, many believers doing public penance as they recall Christ's suffering. In some villages an effigy of the lifeless and bleeding Christ is carried through the streets.

On Easter Sunday, after an uplifting mass proclaiming the risen Christ, every parish priest processes around his village with a crucifix on a tall staff for parishioners to kiss the feet of Jesus. While the priest takes a customary glass of wine, his entourage ecstatically let off rockets. Families then traditionally lunch on roast kid (cabrito).

After Easter, in early May, the passion of Christ is recalled in Barcelos (see p275). Crosses are erected the length of a petal-strewn route for the Festa das Cruzes.

SÃO JOÃO

Oporto's celebration of São João (23–24 Jun) is one of Portugal's most exuberant festival. It coincides with the summer solstice, and to celebrate, people eat, drink and dance all night, playfully hitting each other over the head with giant garlic-leeks (or sometimes, even more strangely, with squeaky plastic hammers). Bonfires are lit and a spectacular display of fireworks explodes over the Douro.

EASTER

Holy Week, culminating in Easter Sunday, is the major religious festival of the year. In Braga, processions snake round the city walls to the great cathedral, and every village has its own ceremonies.

The start of Holy Week is heralded by Palm Sunday, when branch-waving faithful line the streets to commemorate the entry of Christ into Jerusalem. Good Friday evening is palpably solemn, as innumerable processions follow the 14 Stations of the

COSTUME IN THE MINHO

Festivals are important vehicles for keeping alive tradition, particularly regional costume. These days, rock music and designer clothes are as much part of young people's life in Minho villages as elsewhere in western Europe, but traditional dress is worn with pride on days of celebration. The Minho's costume is the most colourful in Portugal, with exquisitely embroidered scarves and aprons in colours denoting village loyalties. Messages of love and friendship are stitched on to pockets, and bodices are half-lost under tiers of gold filigree.

A new tradition, which has become a part of São João over the last decade, is the annual regatta of the barcos rabelos, the boats in which port used to be shipped down the Douro (see p254).

ROMARIAS

Any kind of celebration or party can be described as a festa, but one billed as a romaria implies a religious dimension. Most festas in the north are romarias; they begin with a special mass, then saints' statues are brought from the church to be paraded through the streets on litters. Blessings are dispensed in all directions – fire engines and ambulances frequently also getting the treatment – followed by a spraying with some Raposeira sparkling wine. Many romarias take place in the summer, and in August few days go by without a celebration. Assumption Day (15 Aug)

is fêted all over Portugal with dancing and music.

Gigantones, grotesque giants of pre-Christian origin, join street processions and fireworks light the sky. A few days later, around 20 August, one of the year's most spectacular romarias takes place in Viana do Castelo (see pp272–3). The festivities celebrating Nossa Senhora da Agonia include a bullfight and an afternoon devoted to a kaleidoscopic display of regional costume,

STICK DANCING

Stick dancers, or pauliteiros, can still be seen at village festival in Trás-os-Montes. The dances are of ancient origin, probably associated with fertility rites, and the sticks may once have been swords. The most famous troupe comes from the village of Duas Igrejas, near Miranda do Douro (see p262).

which may include more than a thousand participants. As a finale, fireworks are let off from the bridge over the River Lima to cascade down into the water as a fiery waterfall.

On the coast just to the west of Braga, villagers in São Bartolomeu do Mar mark the end of their romaria (22–24 Aug) by dipping their children in the sea, as a mock sacrifice to the waves.

CHRISTMAS AND WINTER

On Christmas Eve, families gather to enjoy enormous quantities of bacalbau (salt cod) and mulled port, and to exchange presents, before attending midnight mass.

Between Christmas and Epiphany, Trás-os-Montes village boys dress in crazy, fringed suits to take part in the rite-of-passage Dia dos Rapazes.

The Christmas season ends on Dia de Reis (6 Jan), when the bolo rei, or “king cake”, rich with crystallized fruit “jewels”, is eaten (see p33).

The Story of Port

The “discovery” of port dates from the 17th century when British merchants added brandy to the wine of the northern Douro region to prevent it souring in transit. They found that the stronger and sweeter the wine, the better flavour it acquired. Methods of maturing and blending continue to be refined by the main port producers. Croft was one of the first big shippers, followed by other English and Scottish firms. Despite the consolidation of the global drinks industry, much of the port trade is still in British hands, and some firms are still family-run.

Barco rabelo ferrying port down the Douro river

THE PORT REGION

Port comes only from a demarcated region of the upper Douro valley, stretching 100 km (62 miles) to the Spanish border. Régua and Pinhão are the main centres of production, but most top-quality vineyards lie on estates or quintas in the harsh eastern terrain.

STYLES OF PORT

There are essentially two categories of port: red and wood-aged. The former are deeper in colour and will develop after bottling; the latter, which include tawney ports, are ready to drink when they are bottled. White port is in a category of its own.

Vintage

Vintage, the star of any shipper's range, is made from wines of a single year, from the best vineyards. It is blended and bottled after two years in wood, and may then mature for a very long time in the bottle.

LBV

Late Bottled Vintage (LBV) is wine of a single year, bottled between four and six years after the harvest. Filtered LBV does not require decanting but may have less flavour than unfiltered, “traditional” LBV.

Aged Tawny

Aged tawny port is blended from top-quality wines that have been aged in wood for a long time. The age on the label is not precise, but the older it is, the paler, more delicate, less fruity and more expensive the port is likely to be.

Tawny

Tawny port without indication of age may not have been in wood for long enough to develop the complex flavours of aged tawny; its style is light and its price fairly low. It may be a blend of red and white ports.

Ruby

Ruby port is deep red and should be full of lively fruit flavour. It has been aged for two or three years, sometimes in wood, sometimes not. It is less complex than either LBV or Vintage, but costs considerably less.

White

White port is made from white grapes and may be sweet or not so sweet. It is mainly drunk chilled as an aperitif. Some types of white port have a slightly lower alcohol content than the normal 20% for port.

HOW PORT IS MADE

The climax of the Douro farmers' year comes in late September when bands of pickers congregate to harvest the grapes.

More than 40 varieties are used for making port, but there are five recommended top varieties.

Treading the grapes in stone tanks or lagares to extract the juice is a feature of very traditional quintas. Some shippers believe it adds a special quality.

Fermentation in cement or steel tanks is a more common method. Carbon dioxide builds up within the tank, forcing the fermenting must (juice from the grapes) up a tube into an open trough at the top. The gas is released and the must sprays back over the pips and skins, in a process similar to treading.

In the fortification process, the semi-fermented must is run into a second vat where brandy – actually grape spirit – is added. This arrests the fermentation, leaving the wine sweet from natural grape sugar.

Thousands of bottles of Graham's vintage port from 1977 await full maturation in the cellars of the Vila Nova de Gaia lodge.

Quality tawny port is matured in oak casks in the port lodges. Once bottled, it is ready for drinking and does not require decanting.

VINTAGE PORT

In the interests of maintaining the highest standards of quality – and of not saturating the market – port producers do not “declare” a vintage every year. Each year, the wine from the best vineyards is closely monitored for 18 months, other producers are consulted about their quality, and then a decision is taken. If a vintage is not declared, the wine may remain in wood to be blended as tawny or LBV in future, or it may be bottled as a “single quinta” port – a kind of second-label vintage. On average, producers declare a vintage three times in a decade, though not always in the same years.

A good vintage needs time in bottle to reveal itself. Fifteen years is seen as a minimum, although many impatient drinkers do not actually wait that long; there is even a fashion for drinking young vintage port. The nature of vintage port's aging process results in a continuously evolving list of great vintages. Most experts agree, however, that no recent vintage has yet equalled that produced in 1963.

Post-war vintages

The Flavours of Northern Portugal

There is a smoky flavour to the rustic food of the north. This seems to come not only from the area's wealth of cured, often smoked, pork products (frequently used to add spice to other dishes), but from the woodsmoke-scented air of the quiet valleys of the interior, too. The cuisine consists of rich stews and thick soups, beans, chestnuts and cabbage, and crusty maize bread. The prized pig does service in everything from the pale, lightly cured hams of Amarante to clove- and cumin-spiced morcela (blood sausage). Local beef is renowned, and cabrito (kid) is a favourite in roasts and stews.

Maize bread (cornbread) of Portugal's soups. It is made with couve galega, the tall-growing, open-leaved kale typical of the Minho. The Portuguese love affair with bacalbau, dried salted cod, is as ardent here as it is anywhere in the country, despite the availability of fresh fish throughout the region. Try it com broa – baked with a crust of the rich maize bread (broa de milhao), another speciality of the north.

DOURO AND TRÁS-MONTES

These are meatier regions, famed for their embutidos or enchidos (cured pork products). Vila Real is a centre for the production of spiced, salted, sometimes marinated and smoked meats and sausages, but each area makes its own, often on a small scale. Presunto (cured ham) from Chaves, traditionally covered

MINHO

Northernmost Portugal is a landscape of dense greenery, punctuated with granite and traversed by rivers. Trout, eel and lamprey all still feature prominently on local menus, even if the trout nowadays is mostly farmed and the lamprey often imported. The Minho region is also home to caldo verde, the best-known

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Portuguese cabbage

Caldo verde is by far the best-known dish from the north, and its simple composition and strong flavours, though sometimes diluted by too much potato, are representative of the northern style of cooking. Combinations of fish and meat, in particular cured pork, are another feature, as in lampreia à moda do Minho (lamprey cooked in white wine with chouriço), trutas com presunto (trout with cured ham) and bacalbau à Transmontana (salt cod with pork belly). Cozido is a pan-Portuguese dish whose origins are thought to be in the north or across the border in Spain. It is a stew of beef, vegetables and sausages, including morcela. Traditionally, the meat and vegetables are served separately, with rice and beans respectively, and the stock is served on the side.

Caldo Verde is a hearty soup of kale or cabbage with spicy chouriço sausage. The colour is as vibrant as the flavour.

EXTREME CLIMATES

The rows of vines that line the slopes of the upper Douro valley, neatly tracing its contours, give this once remote region a tamed appearance that belies its extremes of climate. Cold winters, slow warming in spring, and blistering-hot summers bring out the best in the thick-skinned grape varieties that go into making port. On the valley's northern side are the olive groves and orchards of the Terra Quente, the "hot lands" of the lower Trás-os-Montes region. Interestingly, the olive oils from here are prized for their mildness of flavour. Farther north, beyond Bragança, lie the drier and colder high plains of the Terra Fria, where some inhabitants still spend the winter indoors, warmed by their animals and living off their stocks of chestnuts, cabbages and cured meats.

PORTO

Modern cooking is largely confined to Porto, where some of the country's most innovative chefs work, but the city also retains culinary traditions such as cooking tripe, which has earned its citizens the nickname tripeiros – tripe-eaters. It is also famed for its egg-based pastries.

REGIONAL WINES

Vinho verde, the familiar light white and slightly fizzy wine from the Minho, has made something of a comeback after a period of neglect by producers as well as consumers. Its appeal lies in its acidity (the "crispness" and "freshness" of wine writing), its carbon dioxide sparkle and its relatively low alcohol content – around 10 per cent. There is also a fuller-bodied, more complex style, made from the Alvarinho grape in and around the town of Monção. The red version of vinho verde is rarely found outside the region. Port wine (see pp230–31) is the other highlight among northern Portuguese drinks, but modern wines from the Douro also merit serious attention. They match the regional cuisine admirably, and their distinctive character includes rare wine flavours such as violets and heather.

Trutas con presunto wraps fat river trout in lean cured ham before they are fried in bacon fat until golden.

Cozido à Portuguesa is a winter stew of beef, sausage and root vegetables, suited to the cold northern plains.

Toucinho do céu translates as "heavenly bacon" but is actually a rich and mouth-watering almond cake.

DOURO AND TRÁS-OS-MONTES

On its way to the Atlantic, the Douro or “Golden River” weaves its scenic path through deep-cleft gorges, terraced with thousands of vineyards, to the historic city of Oporto, home of port. To the northeast, the high plateaus and mountain ranges of Trás-os-Montes, “Behind the Mountains”, form Portugal’s wildest region.

As early as the 9th century BC, Phoenician merchants arrived in the Douro estuary to trade. The Romans later developed the settlements of Portus and Cale on either side of the river, and the names subsequently united, as Portucale, to denote the region between the Minho and Douro rivers. This was the nucleus of the kingdom of Portugal (see pp42–3). The estuary and coastal strip, or Douro Litoral, is now a mix of fishing ports, beach resorts and industrial zones, while Portus, at the river’s mouth, became Oporto, the regional capital and Portugal’s second city.

Rich from centuries of trade, cosmopolitan Oporto is at once modern and steeped in the past, its waterfront and higgledy-piggledy streets a delight to explore. From its hillside, Oporto looks across the Douro to the lodges which nurture the precious wine to which the city gave its name: port.

The upper reaches of the river are devoted to the cultivation of grapes for port, the landscape shaped by endless vineyards and wine estates (quintas).

In contrast with the thriving Douro valley, Trás-os-Montes is remote and untamed, a refuge in the past of religious and political exiles. The hard life and lack of opportunity to better it have depopulated the land; those who remain till the fields and herd their flocks in the unforgiving climate, according to the rhythm of the seasons.

The rural north clings closely to tradition and local festas are some of the country’s most colourful (see pp228–9). Outside influences are beginning to make an impact on Trás-os-Montes, but for the visitor it remains a land of quiet stone villages amid fields of rye and moorland, where the wild Parque Natural de Montesinho stretches from Bragança to the Spanish border.

Exploring the Douro and Trás-os-Montes

Oporto itself is so full of interest that many visitors venture no further. But to follow the Douro upstream is to discover a world of neat terraced vineyards and prosperous quintas all dedicated to producing wine and port. Oporto apart, either Peso da Régua or the pilgrimage town of Lamego would make a convenient base from which to explore the area.

Trás-os-Montes is Portugal's poorest and least-known region. Its isolated capital, Bragança, is full of historic associations, and lies on the edge of the wild terrain of the Montesinho reserve. Between here and Chaves is spectacular country seldom visited by tourists.

GETTING AROUND

With the frenetic tempo of traffic in Oporto, it is best to negotiate the inner city by bus, taxi or on foot. Boat trips from Oporto are a good way to see the varied Douro landscape at a relaxed pace. Trains link Oporto to the major towns of the north and also run along the Douro valley. Services are less frequent beyond Peso da Régua, but a trip alongside the Douro is highly recommended. In Trás-os-Montes, public transport is minimal and driving is the most convenient way to explore this remote region, especially now the IP4 (E82) links Vila Real and Bragança. However, the state of repair of many minor roads leaves a lot to be desired.

Oporto 1

Lion and eagle statue, Rotunda da Boavista

Ever since the Romans built a fort here, where their trading route crossed the Douro, Oporto has prospered from commerce. Quick to expel the Moors in the 11th century and to profit from provisioning crusaders en route to the Holy Land, Oporto took advantage of the wealth generated by Portugal's maritime discoveries in the 15th and 16th centuries. Later, the wine trade with Britain compensated for the loss of the lucrative spice trade. Still a thriving industrial centre and Portugal's second-largest city, Oporto, known locally as Porto, blends industry with charm. In 2001 the city, the historic centre of which is a UNESCO World Heritage site, was the European Capital of Culture.

The Cathedral District

Oporto's cathedral (see p242) crowns the city's upper level and in the surrounding streets are a variety of monuments to the city's past, including the Renaissance church of Santa Clara (see p241) and the turn-of-the-century railway station of São Bento (see p241), alongside bustling street markets.

Beneath the towering cathedral lies the crowded Barredo, a quarter seemingly unchanged since medieval days, where balconied houses cling to each other and to the vertiginous hillside, forming a maze of ancient alleys; some are no more than outside staircases.

Ribeira

This riverside quarter is a warren of narrow, twisting streets and shadowy arcades. Behind brightly tiled or pastel-painted façades, many in faded glory, a working population earns its living, hangs out the washing, chats and mixes in lively street scenes. Restoration of this atmospheric district is attracting a growing number of restaurants and nightclubs.

Cordoaria

The Cordoaria gardens lie in the lee of the hilltop landmark of the Torre dos Clérigos (see p243). Nearby streets are full of interesting shops.

Street-by-Street: Oporto's Cathedral District

Archaeological excavations show that Penaventosa Hill, now the site of Oporto's cathedral, or Sé, was inhabited as early as 3,000 years ago. In its elevated position, the cathedral is a useful landmark and its terrace provides an excellent orientation point. The broad Avenida de Vimara Peres, named after the military hero who expelled the Moors from the city in AD 868, sweeps south past the huddle of steep alleys and stairways of the Barredo. The view to the north is towards the extraordinarily embellished São Bento station and the busy commercial heart of the city.

Exploring Oporto

Throughout Oporto there is evidence of the wealth that flowed into the city from the 15th century onwards. Trade in the commodities from Portugal's newly claimed lands (see pp48–9) brought Brazilian gold and exotic woods to embellish Oporto's churches, and prosperous merchants spent prodigiously on paintings and azulejos. Recently the city authorities restored footpaths, cobbled streets and stone steps to create five historical walks between the Jardim do Palácio de Cristal and the river.

This religious hospice, alongside its imposing church, was founded in the 1500s. Its most precious possession is the Fons Vitae (Fountain of Life), donated by Manuel I in about 1520. It shows the king and his family kneeling before the crucified Christ. The artist's identity remains unproven, but both Van der Weyden and Holbein have been suggested.

SÃO FRANCISCO'S TREE OF JESSE

Illustrating biblical episodes, either in stained-glass windows or as elaborate carvings, was a common form of “Bible teaching” before literacy became widespread. A popular subject was Christ’s genealogy, showing his descent from the kings of Judah and Israel. This was commonly rendered as an actual tree, tracing the family line back through Joseph to the father of King David, Jesse of Bethlehem.

São Francisco’s Tree, in gilded and painted wood, was carved between 1718 and 1721 by Filipe da Silva and António Gomes. Its sinuous branches and trunk, sprouting from a reclining Jesse, support a dozen expressive figures, culminating in Christ flanked by His mother, Mary, and St Joseph.

Solomon, who succeeded his father, David, was famed for his wisdom and for the building of the Temple in Jerusalem.

Jesse is shown with the roots of the Tree springing from his loins. His youngest son was David, the slayer of Goliath, who became king of Israel and Judah.

The elegant Carrancas Palace, built in the 18th century, has been a Jewish textile workshop, a royal abode and a military headquarters. In 1809 Oporto was in French hands, and Marshal Soult and his troops were quartered here. They were ousted in a surprise attack by Arthur Wellesley, later Duke of Wellington, who then calmly installed himself at the marshal's dinner table.

Today, the palace provides an appropriate setting for an outstanding museum, named after António Soares dos Reis, the country's leading 19th-century sculptor. Pride of place goes to the display of Portuguese art. This includes paintings by the 16th-century master, Frey Carlos, and the Impressionist, Henrique Pousão. Also hung here are landscapes of Oporto by the French artist, Jean Pillement (1728–1808). The star sculpture exhibit, O Desterrado (The Exile), is Soares dos Reis's own marvel of pensive tension in marble, completed in 1874. Further sections display

A River View of Oporto

Flowing over 927 km (576 miles) from its source in Spain to the Atlantic, the Douro has been linked with the fortunes of Oporto since time immemorial. There is an unsubstantiated story that Henry the Navigator, patron of Portuguese explorers, (see p49), was born in the waterfront Casa do Infante. The days are long since gone when ships laden with port or goods from overseas would moor here, but the river continues to be a focal point of the city. A river cruise is a chance to appreciate Oporto from a different viewpoint.

Most river-boat operators are based in the shadow of the swooping curve of the splendid two-tier Ponte de Dom Luís I, built in 1886 by an assistant of Gustave Eiffel, to link the city to Vila Nova de Gaia on the southern bank. The city recently inaugurated a largely above ground metro system, which uses the upper level of the Dom Luís I bridge. Just upriver, the new Infante Dom Henrique bridge is for cars.

Vila Nova de Gaia is home of the port lodges (see p249).

Oporto: Further Afield

A way from the city centre, Oporto has many additional places of interest. Crossing the Ponte de Dom Luís I brings you to Vila Nova de Gaia, the home of port, and the Mosteiro da Serra do Pilar, with one of the finest views of the old city. In the northern and western suburbs are several fascinating attractions, from the great church of the Hospitallers at Leça do Bailio, north of Oporto, to the latest developments in Portuguese art exhibited in the beautifully modern setting of the Museu Serralves.

Along the coast, beyond the river-mouth castle at Foz do Douro, lies Matosinhos which, despite its industrial port, is renowned for its seafood.

The beaches, such as Espinho, are the main draw along the coast south of Oporto.

The former residence of the businessman, collector and poet, Fernando de Castro (1888–1950), was donated to the state by his sister in 1951. His collection ranges from religious sculpture saved from disbanded churches to works by modern artists, and includes a painting of the infant Jesus attributed to Josefa de Óbidos (see p51). Also of special interest are figurines from the 19th and 20th centuries by Teixeira Lopes, both father and son.

Environs: Forts around the river mouth, such as Castelo da Foz at Foz do Douro and Castelo do Queijo just to the north, are reminders that for centuries the coast and ships were under constant threat from the Spanish and pirates.

The church of Bom Jesus, near Matosinhos, was reconstructed by Niccolò Nasoni in the 18th century. Each June, pilgrims come here to honour a wooden statue of Christ. Found on the beach in the 10th century, it was allegedly carved by the disciple Nicodemus.

The 14th-century fortified Igreja do Mosteiro at Leça do Bailio, 8 km (5 miles) north of Oporto, was Portugal's first headquarters of the Order of Hospitallers. The church is graced with elegant Gothic arches, finely sculpted capitals and a splendid rose window.

Vila Nova de Gaia

port

Afonso III, in dispute with the Bishop of Oporto over shipping tolls, established a rival port at Vila Nova de Gaia. In 1253, they reluctantly agreed to share the levies. Today the heart of Vila Nova de Gaia is devoted mostly to the maturation and shipping of port (see pp254–5). Although the regulation that port could be made only in Vila Nova de Gaia was relaxed in 1987, this is still very much the centre of production. Every alley is lined with the lodges or armazéns (there are no cellars here) in which port is blended and aged.

Guided tours are a chance to see how port is made (see pp230–31) and often end with a tasting to demonstrate the different styles.

The port lodges dominate Vila Nova de Gaia. Over 50 port companies are based in these narrow streets, ageing and blending most of the world's supply of port beneath a sea of red roofs emblazoned with world-famous names.

Santo Tirso, a major textile centre, lies beside the River Ave. The town's most notable building is the former monastery of São Bento. Founded by the Benedictines in the 8th century, the monastery was later rebuilt, then modified in the 17th century. The pairs of columns in the 14th-century Gothic cloister are graced with richly carved capitals.

The monastery is now an agricultural college, but houses the Museu Abade Pedrosa, featuring local archaeological finds, including stone axes, bronze armlets and ceramics.

Environs: At Roriz, 13 km (8 miles) east of Santo Tirso, the Romanesque church of São Pedro perches above the Vizela valley. A date of 1228 is carved in the porch, although there are claims that a church may have stood here as early as the 8th century. Above the portal is a fine rose window. Set apart from the church are an attractive belltower and the ruins of the monastic cloister.

Sanfins de Ferreira, 5 km (3 miles) further east, is the hilltop site of a citânia, an Iron Age citadel, probably inhabited from around the 6th century BC. Traces remain of a triple ring of defensive walls around about 100 huts, and there is also a small museum on the site. The guard next door will let you in on public holidays.

The granite town of Penafiel stands on a hilltop above the River Sousa. Apart from an elegant Renaissance-style Igreja Matriz, there is also a sanctuary, Nossa Senhora da Piedade, built in 1908 in a curious medley of Neo-Gothic and Byzantine styles. Penafiel is chiefly known, however, as the regional centre for vinho verde production.

Environs: One of the region's foremost estates producing vinho verde is Quinta da Aveleda, just north of Penafiel.

Boelhe, around 17 km (11 miles) south of Penafiel, merits a detour for the 12th-century church of São Gens. Only 10 m (33 ft) high, and a mere 7 m (23 ft) in width and length, it is claimed to be the smallest Romanesque church in the country. Its simple design enhances the aesthetic appeal.

In the 13th-century church of São Salvador at Paço de Sousa, 8 km (5 miles) southwest of Penafiel, is the tomb of Egas Moniz. A figure of legendary loyalty, he was counsellor to Afonso Henriques (1139–85), the first king of Portugal.

Amarante 4

Road map D2. 70,000.

Alameda Teixeira de Pascoães (255 420 246). Wed & Sat.

The pretty, riverside town of Amarante is one of the gems of northern Portugal. Rows of 17th-century mansions with brightly painted wooden balconies line Amarante's narrow streets, and restaurants seat diners on terraces overhanging the river. The origins of the town are uncertain but the first settlement here was probably around 360 BC. Much of the town was burnt down in 1809, after a two-week siege by the French forces under Marshal Soult.

A recurring name in Amarante is that of São Gonçalo, a very popular saint born at the end of the 12th century. There are many stories of the dancing and festivities he organized to keep ladies from temptation by finding them husbands, and he has become associated with matchmaking and fertility. On the first weekend in June, the Festa de São Gonçalo begins with prayers for a marriage partner, followed by dancing, music and the giving of phallic-shaped São Gonçalo cakes.

When the old Roman bridge across the Tâmega collapsed during floods in the 13th century, it was São Gonçalo who was credited with replacing it. The present Ponte de São Gonçalo crosses to the 16th-century Igreja de São Gonçalo, where his memory lives on. In the chapel to the left of the chancel, the image on his tomb has been eroded through the embraces of thousands of devotees in search of his intercession.

The Museu Amadeo de Sousa-Cardoso is housed in the old monastery cloister next to the church. One of the exhibits describes a fertility cult that predates even São Gonçalo. The diabo and diaba are a pair of bawdy devils carved in black wood, and are 19th-century replacements for a more ancient duo destroyed in the Peninsular War. They gradually became the focus of a type of local fertility rite, and were threatened with burning by an outraged bishop of Braga; the diabo was “castrated” instead.

The museum’s other prized possession is the collection of Cubist works by the artist after whom the museum is named. Amadeo de Sousa-Cardoso (1887–1918), one of Portugal’s leading 20th-century artists, was a native of Amarante.

Road map D2. 📍 4,000. 📄
📍 Rua Dr Flávio Resende 43 (255 560 571). 📄 10 & of month.

Cinfães lies just above the Douro, tucked below the foothills of the Serra de Montemuro whose peaks rise over 1,000 m (3,300 ft). The town is a gateway to Lamego and the Upper Douro to the east (see pp254–5) and is surrounded by verdant scenery. Cinfães itself is an agricultural centre and local handicrafts include weaving, lacework, basketry, and the production of miniature rabelos, the boats that used to ship port down the river to Oporto (see p252).

Environs: Around 16 km (10 miles) west of the town, at Tarouquela, is the 12th-century church of Santa Maria Maior. Romanesque columns flank the portal, while later additions include the 14th-century Gothic mausoleum beside the chancel.

In the village of Cárquere, between Cinfães and Lamego, stands another church dedicated to the Virgin Mary. Legend tells how the sickly young Afonso Henriques, future king of Portugal, was healed at Cárquere by his devoted aide, Egas Moniz. In about 1110, guided by a dream, Moniz unearthed a buried statue of the Virgin and built a church for her. Miraculously, his young charge was cured overnight. The present church dates from the 14th or 15th century, but the finest of its treasures is a minute ivory carving of the Virgin, of unknown date.

This scenic gateway to the port wine-growing region enjoys a fine setting above the River Douro. Around it, the majestic tiers of the Serra do Marão rise to form a natural climatic shield for the vineyards to the east. Mesão Frio itself is known for its wickerwork and a culinary speciality, falachas or chestnut cakes.

The Igreja Matriz of São Nicolau was rebuilt in 1877, but has fortunately retained its magnificent late 16th-century ceiling panels, each one featuring an individual portrait of a saint. The tourist office and town hall are housed in the 18th-century cloisters of a former Franciscan monastery.

On the western edge of the town, the lavish Baroque Casa da Rede can be seen from the roadside, but not visited.

Peso da Régua 7

Road map D2. 21,000.
f Rua da Ferreirinha (254 312 846).
 Wed.

Developed from the villages of Peso and Régua in the 18th century, Peso da Régua is the major hub for rail and road connections in the region.

In 1756, Régua, as the town is invariably called, was chosen by the Marquês de Pombal as the centre of the demarcated region for port production. From here, rabelos, the traditional wooden sailing ships, transported the barrels of port through hazardous gorges to Vila Nova de Gaia (see p249). They continued to ply the river even after the advent of the Douro railway in the 1880s offered a faster and safer means of transport. Régua suffered frequently in the past from severe floods, and these are still a threat, although they have lessened since dams were built across the Douro in the 1970s and 1980s.

Visitors to Régua usually pause only briefly on their way to explore the “port country” (see pp254–5), but it is worth seeking out the Casa do Douro, the administrative headquarters of the Port Wine Institute. Its modern stained-glass windows, created by Lino António, vividly depict the history and production of port. Also displayed is a fine map of the Douro valley drawn in the mid-19th century by Baron Forrester (see p254).

An attractive town within the demarcated port area, Lamego also produces wines, including Raposeira, Portugal's premier sparkling wine. This fertile region is also known for its fruit and choice hams.

In its more illustrious past, Lamego claims to have been host in 1143 to the first cortes, or national assembly, to recognize Afonso Henriques as first king of Portugal. The town's later economic decline was halted in the 16th century, when it turned to wine and textile production, and handsome Baroque mansions from this prosperous period are still a feature of the town. Today, the main focus of Lamego is as a pilgrimage town.

A small hilltop chapel, originally dedicated in 1391 to St Stephen, became the focus of pilgrims devoted to the Virgin, and in 1761 Nossa Senhora dos Remédios was built on the spectacular site. The church is reached via an awe-inspiring double stairway, similar to Braga's even larger Bom Jesus (see pp280–81). Its 686 steps and nine terraces, embellished with azulejos and urns, rise to the Pátio dos Reis, a circle of noble granite figures beneath the twin-towered church. The church itself is of marginal interest, but there is a well-earned view across the town to the Douro and its tributaries.

In early September pilgrims arrive in their thousands for Lamego's Romaria de Nossa Senhora dos Remédios (see p32), many of them climbing the steps on their knees.

One of the country's best local museums is housed in the former bishops' palace. Pride of place goes to the strikingly original Criação dos Animais (Creation of the Animals), part of a series of masterly altar panels attributed to the great 16th-century Portuguese artist, Grão Vasco (see p215). Finely worked 16th-century Flemish tapestries include a vividly detailed life of Oedipus.

Environs: At the foot of the valley 4 km (2 miles) east, the Capela de São Pedro de Balsemão is said to be the oldest church in Portugal. Although much modified, the 7th-century sanctuary, of Visigothic origins, remains. Here, in an ornate tomb, lies Afonso Pires, a 14th-century bishop of Oporto. A statue of Nossa Senhora do Ó, the pregnant Virgin, is from the 15th century.

The 12th-century monastery of São João de Tarouca, the first Cistercian house in Portugal, lies 16 km (10 miles) south of Lamego. The interior of the church has many fine 18th-century azulejo panels, notably those in the chancel depicting the founding of the monastery, and in the sacristy, where none of the 4,709 tiles has the same design. The church also contains a remarkable St Peter by Grão Vasco. The Count of Barcelos, bastard son of King Dinis, is buried here, his tomb adorned with vigorous scenes of a boar hunt.

Just to the northeast, Ucanha is famed for its fortified tollgate and bridge, imposing survivals from the 12th century.

Port Country Tour 9

Bottles of Graham's port

The barrels of port maturing in the port lodges of Vila Nova de Gaia (see p249) begin their life here, on the wine estates (quintas) of the Upper Douro (see pp230–31). Centuries of toil on the poor schist have created thousands of terraces along the steep river banks, many no wider than a person's outstretched arms. Recently, many vineyards have had their terraces widened to allow tractor access, but some of the oldest ones are protected as part of the cultural heritage. Many quintas, including those shown on the map, welcome visitors. Early autumn is the most rewarding time to tour; workers sing as they pick, and celebrate a good vindima or harvest.

Peso da Régua ① Régua's role as an administrative centre for port and, later, for the wines of the region, goes back to 1756. The rabelos moored here are a reminder of how port used to be transported down to the lodges of Vila Nova de Gaia.

JOSEPH JAMES FORRESTER, PORT BARON

In 1831, Joseph Forrester arrived from Britain to join his uncle's wine company in Oporto, and enthusiastically set about reforming the port trade. In his 1844 treatise, A Word or Two on Port, he waged war on shippers who adulterated the wine. He also studied the vine blight, Oidium tuckeri, drew up remarkably detailed maps of the Douro valley and found time to become a talented watercolourist. His contribution was such that in 1855 Pedro V bestowed on him the title of Barão. In 1862, Forrester's boat capsized at Cachão de Valeira. Dragged down by his moneybelt, he drowned, but the ladies in his company survived, buoyed up by their crinolines.

Many of the most famous names in port production have quintas close to this small town. Its railway station is decorated with 24 dazzling azulejo panels depicting local scenes and folk culture.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Tour length: 125 km (78 miles). Beyond Pinhão, steep, narrow roads can make the going slow.

Stopping-off points: The drive beside the Douro has several fine viewpoints. Alijó, Régua and Sabrosa make good overnight stops (see pp393–5) and many quintas offer tours and port-tasting (see also pp460–61).

Sabrosa ③

The village of Sabrosa, set among vineyards above the River Pinhão, has a wealth of 15th-century houses. It was in one of these that the explorer Magellan (see p48) was born in about 1480.

Alijó ④

Alijó was officially founded in 1226, but a number of castros (hill forts) in the area tell of habitation from a much earlier date. The name of the pousada here, the Barão de Forrester (see p393), recalls the famous reformer.

Tua ⑤

Tua, in a region famous for its luscious oranges and figs, has long been a junction on the Douro railway line. Travelling on one of the infrequent trains is an enjoyable way of seeing the valley's terraced vineyards.

São João da Pesqueira ⑦

From São João da Pesqueira's viewpoint, São Salvador do Mundo, there are fine views of the valley and its vineyards. In early spring the landscape foams with almond blossom.

Barragem de Valeira ⑥

Until the end of the 18th century the Douro was unnavigable beyond Cachão de Valeira. Even when engineers had bypassed the worst of the rapids, this stretch of water remained treacherous – it was here that Baron Forrester met his death – until the water was tamed by the Valeira dam in 1976.

Casa de Mateus 10

English 17th-century cupboard in the Tea Salon

The splendid manor house, or solar, depicted on the labels of Mateus Rosé (see p28) epitomizes the flamboyance of Baroque architecture in Portugal. It was built in the early 18th century, probably by Niccolò Nasoni, for António José Botelho Mourão, whose descendants still live here. The house, which was declared a national monument in 1911, is also a breeding ground for creativity, offering 11 six-month residencies to budding artists.

The Manor House

Inside and out, the Casa de Mateus was conceived to present carefully created vistas and series of mirror images. A formal pool added in the 1930s continues this spirit of harmonious repetition, reflecting the main façade and its two wings.

Tours start in the first-floor entrance salon, a well-proportioned room graced by a pair of sedan chairs and with a magnificent wooden ceiling featuring family coats of arms. Doorcases and ceilings throughout the house are of richly carved chestnut. The Tea Salon has a 17th-century William and Mary cup-board and matching longcase clock from England, while the Salon of the Four Seasons gets its name from the large 18th-century paintings on its walls. Many of the paintings in the house were contributed by the 4th Morgado's uncle, an archdeacon in Rome who was also responsible for the original gardens. The library, remodelled in the mid-20th century, contains volumes dating back to the 16th century, but the rarest book is in the small museum: an 1817 copy of Os Lusíadas (see p190), with engravings by leading artists.

It is one of a limited edition produced by the colourful diplomat grandson of the 3rd Morgado (his tomb is in the family chapel beside the house). Also on display in the museum is family correspondence with famous figures of the era, including Frederick the Great and Wellington.

The Gardens

Beneath the entrance staircase a dark passageway leads between the stables to an inner courtyard and out to the formal gardens on the far side of the house. Little remains of the original gardens planted by the horticultural archdeacon, and the present gardens were laid out in the 1930s and 1940s. The style, however, is of an earlier, romantic era and the complex parterres and formal beds edged with tightly clipped dwarf box hedges form a living tapestry which reflects perfectly the ornate symmetry of the house. In winter the grand old camellias, relics from the 19th century, are a highlight of the gardens, but for most visitors the lasting memory is of the vast cedar tunnel, greatest among the many pieces of topiary here.

Beyond the formal gardens lie the well-ordered orchards and fields of the estate.

THE CEDAR TUNNEL

This celebrated feature in the Casa de Mateus garden was formed from cedars planted in 1941. It is 35 m (115 ft) long and 7.5 m (25 ft) high, the tight-knit greenery providing an aromatic walk in summer. To keep it in shape, gardeners have to scale specially fashioned outside ladders.

Vila Real 11

Road map D2. 20,000.
 Avenida Carvalho Araújo 94 (259 322 819). Tue & Fri.

Perched over a gorge cut by the confluence of the Cabril and Corgo rivers, Vila Real is a busy commercial centre. As the communications hub of the Upper Douro, it makes a convenient starting point from which to explore the valley of the Douro to the south and the Parque Natural do Alvão to the northwest. Vila Real also has a motor-racing circuit, which hosts major events each year during June and July.

Midway along the broad main street, Avenida Carvalho Araújo, is the 15th-century Sé. This fine Gothic cathedral was originally the church of a Dominican friary. The other monastic buildings burnt down in suspicious circumstances in the mid-19th century.

At the southern end of the avenue, a plaque on the wall at No. 19 marks the birthplace of Diogo Cão, the explorer who discovered the mouth of the Congo in 1482 (see pp48–9).

The Igreja dos Clérigos, in nearby Rua dos Combatentes da Grande Guerra, is also known as Capela Nova. It presents a pleasing Baroque façade attributed to Niccolò Nasoni and an interior of fine blue and white azulejos.

Environs: The small village of Bisalhões, 6 km (4 miles) to the west, is famed for its boldly designed black pottery (see p25). Examples can be seen displayed for sale at the annual Festa de São Pedro, celebrated in Vila Real each year on 28–9 June. Also seen at this time is the fine linen from nearby Agarez.

Parque Natural do Alvão 12

Road map D1. to Ermelo via Campeã. Lago dos Freitas, Parque Natural do Alvão (259 302 830).

The scenic Parque Natural do Alvão

Within the 72 sq km (28 sq miles) of the nature reserve between the Corgo and Tâmega rivers, the scenery ranges from verdant, cultivated lowlands to bleak heights that reach 1,339 m (4,393 ft) at Alto das Caravelas. Despite hunters and habitat encroachment, hawks, dippers and otters can still be spotted. Between the picturesque hamlets of Ermelo and Lamas de Olo, where maize is still kept in espigueiros (see p273), the Olo drops in a spectacular cascade, the Fisgas de Ermelo. From Alto do Velão, just southwest of the park, are splendid views west over the Tâmega valley.

Road map D1. to Montalegre or Boticas. Praça do Município, Montalegre (276 511 010). www.rt-atb.pt

Just southeast of the Parque Nacional da Peneda-Gerês (see pp272–3) is the wild and remote Serra do Barroso. The landscape of heathery hillsides is split by the immense Barragem do Alto Rabação, the largest of many reservoirs in the area created by the damming of rivers for hydro-electric power. Water is a mainstay of the local economy: a high rainfall enables farmers to eke out an existence on the poor soil, and the artificial lakes attract fishing and water-sports enthusiasts. The source of one of the country's most popular bottled mineral waters is at Carvalhelhos.

The village of Boticas nearby produces a beverage with a more original claim to fame. In 1809, the locals buried their wine rather than have it fall into the hands of the invading French. When the enemy departed, the wine was retrieved and found to have improved. The bottles were colloquially termed mortos ("dead"), hence the name of the wine – vinho dos mortos. The practice continues and bottles are usually buried for up to two years.

The area's principal town is Montalegre, on a plateau to the north. Its most notable feature is the imposing keep, 27 m (88 ft) high, of the ruined 14th-century castle.

Oxen are bred in the Serra, and inter-village chegas dos bois (ox fights) are a popular pastime. The contest is usually decided within half an hour, when the weaker ox takes to its heels.

Chaves 14

Road map D1. 18,000. Terreiro da Cavalaria (276 340 661). Wed. www.rt-atb.pt

Beside the upper reaches of the Tâmega stands historic Chaves, attractively sited in the middle of a fertile plain.

Thermal springs and nearby gold deposits encouraged the Romans to establish Aquea Flaviae here in AD 78. Its strategic position led to successive invasion and occupation by the Suevi, Visigoths and Moors, before the Portuguese gained final possession in 1160. The name Chaves ("keys") is often associated with the keys of the north awarded to Nuno Álvares Pereira, hero of Aljubarrota (see p185). A likelier but more pedestrian explanation is that Chaves is simply a corruption of the Latin "Flaviae".

Today Chaves is renowned for its spa and historic centre, and for its smoked hams. A curiosity of the north, the distinctive black pottery (see p25), is made in nearby Nantes.

The old town focuses on the Praça de Camões. The 14th-century keep overlooking this pleasant medieval square is all that remains of the castle given to Nuno Álvares Pereira by João I. On the south side of the square stands the Igreja Matriz with its fine Romanesque portal. The Baroque Misericórdia church opposite has an exquisite interior lined with 18th-century azulejos. Attributed to Policarpo de Oliveira Bernardes (see p26), the huge panels depict scenes from the New Testament.

Within the castle keep is a small military museum, where suits of armour, uniforms and associated regalia are on display. Also exhibited are military memorabilia from the city's defence against the attack by Royalists from Spain in 1912.

In the flower-filled garden surrounding the keep are a few archaeological finds from Chaves's long history, but most are to be found in the Museu da Região Flaviense behind the keep. Here, in the Paço dos Duques de Bragança, are displayed a variety of local archaeological discoveries. Items of interest include souvenirs of the Roman occupation, such as milestones and coins, alongside an oxcart and a straw mantle of the type worn by shepherds for protection in the rain or the hot sun.

Ponte Romana

The 16-arch Roman bridge across the Tâmega was completed around AD 100, at the time of the Emperor Trajan. Its construction brought added importance to Chaves as a staging post on the route between Braga and Astorga (in northwestern Spain). On the bridge are Roman milestones which record that funds to build it were raised locally.

A few minutes on foot from the city centre is one of the hottest springs in Europe. Water here bubbles up at a temperature of 73°C (163°F) and the spa's facilities attract both holiday-makers and patients seeking treatment (see p211). Chaves water is recommended for the treatment of ailments as diverse as rheumatism, kidney dysfunction and hypertension.

The huge cleft Pedra Bolideira near Chaves

Environs: Close to the village of Soutelo, 4 km (2 miles) northwest of Chaves (the route is signposted), is the strange Outeiro Machado Boulder.

It measures 50 m (165 ft) in length and is covered with mysterious hieroglyphs and symbols of unknown meaning. These may be Celtic in origin.

Another gigantic boulder, the Pedra Bolideira, lies near Bolideira, 16 km (10 miles) east of Chaves. Split in two, the massive larger section balances lightly, needing only a gentle push to rock it to and fro.

The spa town of Vidago, 17 km (11 miles) southwest of Chaves, is well known for its therapeutic water. The Vidago Palace Hotel (see p396), once the haunt of royalty, has been renovated in recent years, but retains the regal charm of its park, lakes and pump room.

The market town of Murça is famed for its honey, goat's cheese and sausage. Its major attraction, and the focal point of the garden in the main square, is its porca, an Iron Age granite pig with a substantial girth of 2.8 m (9 ft) (see p40). The role of berrões, as beasts such as these are called, is enigmatic, but they may have been linked to fertility cults. Smaller versions survive in Bragança, Chaves and elsewhere. In more recent times the Murça porca has been pressed into service at elections, when the winning political parties would paint her in their colours.

The Misericórdia chapel on the main street is notable for its early Baroque façade, attractively ornamented with designs of vines and grapes.

Mirandela, at the end of the Tua narrow-gauge railway line, has pretty gardens running down to the River Tua and an elegant Roman bridge with 20 asymmetrical arches. Built for the deployment of troops and to aid the transport of ore from local mines, it was rebuilt in the 16th century and is now for pedestrians only.

Displayed in the Museu Municipal Armindo Teixeira Lopes are sculpture, prints and paintings, including views of Lisbon and Mirandela by the local 20th-century artist after whom the museum is named.

The 17th-century town hall once belonged to the Távoras, but the family was accused of attempted regicide in 1759 and all trace of them was erased.

Bragança: the Citadel 17

This strategic hilltop was the site of a succession of forts before Fernão Mendes, brother-in-law to King Afonso Henriques, built a walled citadel here in 1130. Like several predecessors, it was named Brigantia. Within the walls still stand Sancho I's castle, built in 1187, with its watchtowers and dungeons, and the pentagonal 12th-century Domus Municipalis beside the church of Santa Maria.

The town gave its name to Portugal's final royal dynasty, descended from an illegitimate son of João I who was created first Duke of Bragança in 1442 (see p301).

Beyond the Citadel

By the 15th century, Bragança had expanded west along the banks of the River Fervença. The Jewish quarter in Rua dos Fornos survives from this era, when Jews from North Africa and Spain settled here and founded the silk industry.

Despite its royal links, the town never overcame its isolation, the Bragança monarchs preferring Vila Viçosa (see pp300–301). Only now are the investments of returning emigrants and the completion of the Oporto–Spain motorway reviving trade. A new cathedral “for the millennium” was inaugurated in 1996, another indicator of the city’s rebirth. Near the modest old cathedral in the town centre is a lively covered market where delicacies such as smoked hams and albeiras (chicken sausages) are sold.

Museu Abade de Baçal

Rua Abílio Beça 27. Tel 273 331 595. daily. public hols. (free 10am–2pm Sun).

The Abbot of Baçal (1865–1947) was a prodigious scholar whose definitive researches into the region’s history and customs, including its Jewish connections, were published in 11 volumes. Bragança’s museum is named after him.

Highlights among the paintings are The Martyrdom of St Ignatius, an unsigned triptych of the 16th century, and watercolours by Aurélia de Sousa (1865–1922), including A Sombra (In the Shade). In another section are colourful pauliteiros costumes (see p229) and instruments of torture.

In the garden are a variety of archaeological discoveries including porcas and tablets with Luso-Roman inscriptions.

São Bento

Rua de São Francisco. Tel 273 325 876. by appt.

Founded in 1590 by Bishop António Pinheiro, São Bento has two startlingly contrasting ceilings: a splendid canopy of Moorish-influenced geometric carving in the chancel, and a richly coloured 18th-century trompe l’oeil over the nave.

The original 13th-century church was reconstructed in the 17th century with the addition of a great deal of sumptuous gilt-work. The azulejo panel to the right of the main door depicts General Sepúlveda exhorting the citizens of Bragança to free themselves from French occupation in 1809.

Parque Natural de Montesinho 18

Road map E1. to Rio de Onor & Vinhais. Bairro Salvador Nunes Teixeira 5, Bragança (273 300 400).

One of the wildest areas in Europe, the reserve covers 70,000 ha (175,000 acres) between Bragança and the border with Spain. The region, understandably, is known as Terra Fria (Cold Land). Bleak mountains rise to 1,481 m (4,859 ft) above heather and broom, descending to oak forests and valleys of alder and willow.

Spectacular views of the park can be enjoyed from Vinhais, on its southern fringe, and the wilderness attracts walkers and riders – mountain bikes and horses can be hired locally.

The population clusters in farming communities on the lowlands, leaving much of the Serra an undisturbed habitat for rare species such as wolves and golden eagles, as well as boars, otters and falcons.

Little changed from medieval times, villages such as França and Montesinho are typical in their stone houses, wooden balconies and cobbled streets. Ancient practices such as herbal cures and reverence for the supernatural linger, and ties are communal rather than national: in Rio de Onor Spanish and Portuguese have been welded into a unique dialect, Rionorês.

Miranda do Douro 19

Road map E1. 3,000. Largo do Menino Jesus da Cartolinha (273 431 132). 1st of month.

This medieval outpost stands on top of the Douro gorge, which here forms an abrupt border with Spain. Its key position and the establishment of a bishopric here in 1545 paved the way for the town's development into the cultural and religious centre of Trás-os-Montes. But in 1762, during the Seven Years' War against France and Spain, the powder store exploded, claiming 400 lives and destroying the castle (only the keep remains). This mishap, compounded by the transfer of the bishopric to Bragança, led the town into a deep economic decline, only recently halted by new trade links with the coast and Spain.

The lovely twin-towered Sé was founded in the 16th century. The graceful wood-carvings of the chancel retablo depict, among other themes, the Apostles and the Virgin attended by angels. But the cathedral's most original feature is a wooden figure of the Boy Jesus in the south transept. The Menino Jesus da Cartolinha represents a boy who, legend tells, appeared during a Spanish siege in 1711 to rally the demoralized Portuguese to miraculous victory. Devotees dressed the statue in 17th-century costume and later gave him a top hat (cartolinha).

The excellent Museu da Terra de Miranda houses an eclectic display of archaeological finds, folk costume, a reconstruction of a Mirandês farmhouse parlour and curious rural devices such as an inflated pig's-bladder cosh.

THE DOVECOTES OF MONTESINHO

Doves supply not only food, but also droppings, which are highly prized as fertilizer. In this part of Trás-os-Montes the traditional horseshoe-shaped dovecote or pombal is still a familiar sight, although many are now disused. The birds nest in rough cells inside the whitewashed schist walls and enter and leave through gaps in the tile or slate roof. They are fed via a small raised door at the front of the pombal.

Famed for the white mantle of almond blossom that fleetingly covers the valleys in early spring (egg-shaped amêndoas cobertas, sugared almonds, are an Easter treat), Moncorvo also offers an atmospheric stroll through its maze of medieval streets. Its name is variously attributed to a local nobleman, Mendo Curvo, or perhaps to his raven (corvo).

The ponderous 16th-century Igreja Matriz, the largest in Trás-os-Montes, boasts a 17th-century altarpiece depicting scenes from the life of Christ.

Environs: The fate of the Cõa valley, south of Moncorvo, was finally decided in 1996 when plans for a dam were dropped to preserve the world's largest collection of open-air Stone Age rock art. Discovered in 1933 and estimated to be 20,000 years old, it features bulls, horses, fish and a naked man, the Homem de Pisco. Vila Nova de Foz Cõa, Castelo Melhor and Muxagata offer several guided tours a day into the Parque Arqueológico do Vale do Cõa, and visits must be booked in advance.

Several stories try to explain the curious name of this remote border town. "Ash tree of the girl sword" may derive from the arms of a Spanish nobleman, or a Visigoth called Espadacinta, or from a tale that, when founding the town in the 14th century, King Dinis strapped his sword to an ash.

Dominating the skyline is the heptagonal Torre do Galo, a relic from the 14th-century defences. Views from the top are splendid, especially in spring when the almond blossom attracts a great many tourists. A newer cultivation is that of silkworms, revival of an 18th-century industry.

The intricate 16th-century portal of the Igreja Matriz leads into a splendid small-scale version of Belém's Mosteiro dos Jerónimos (see pp104–5). Panels of the altarpiece, attributed to Grão Vasco (see p215), include a fine Annunciation.

MINHO

Known as the birthplace of the nation, the Minho has two of Portugal's most historic cities: its first capital, Guimarães, and Braga, the country's main religious centre. Life in the province is still firmly rooted in tradition. Agriculture thrives thanks to abundant rainfall that makes this the greenest area in Portugal.

The province of Minho occupies land between the River Douro in the south and the River Minho in the north. Fortified hilltop stone forts (castros) remain as evidence of the Neolithic history of the region. When Celtic peoples migrated into the area in the first millennium BC, these sites developed into citânias (settlements) such as Briteiros.

During the 2nd century BC, advancing Roman legions conquered the land, introduced vine-growing techniques and constructed a network of roads. Roman milestones are still visible in Peneda-Gerês National Park. When Christianity became the official religion of the Roman empire in the 4th century AD, Braga became an important religious centre, a position it holds to this day. The Suevi swept aside the Romans in the 5th century, followed by the Visigoths, who were ousted in turn by the Moorish invasion of 711. The Minho was won back from the Moors in the 9th century. The region rose to prominence in the 12th century under Afonso Henriques (see pp42-3), who proclaimed himself the first king of Portugal and chose Guimarães as his capital.

The Minho's fertile farms and estates have been handed down within families for centuries, each heir traditionally receiving a share of the land. This custom results in plots of land too small to support their owners, many of whom emigrate in search of work. The economy of the Minho, under pressure from high local unemployment, concentrates on medium-scale industry around Braga and Guimarães. Agriculture in the valleys includes production of the area's distinctive vinhos verdes or "green wines". Despite the growth of tourism, the Minho has maintained its strong folk traditions. Carnivals and street markets pervade everyday life and ox-drawn carts are still in use.

Exploring the Minho

In the south of the Minho lie Braga and Guimarães, the two major cities of the region, both rich in historic sights. From Braga, the Baroque splendour of Bom Jesus or the ruins of Citânia de Briteiros, the country's largest Iron Age site, are within easy reach. Between Braga and the coast lies Barcelos, the ceramics centre of the region, famed for its weekly market. Travelling north, the pretty town of Viana do Castelo is a useful base from which to explore the coast. Turning inland again, the picturesque market town of Ponte de Lima, beside the River Lima, is one of many places in the Minho that provide accommodation in traditional manor houses. In the north of the Minho, the River Minho forms the border with Spain. Along the river, fortified towns offer magnificent views into Spain. To the northeast, walkers and wildlife enthusiasts should not miss the dramatic mountain ranges of the Parque Nacional da Peneda-Gerês.

GETTING AROUND

The road system is efficient, with motorways joining Oporto with Braga, Guimarães, Valença on the Spanish border and Viana do Castelo along the coast. Elsewhere in the region, potholes are a common hazard, and motorists need to allow time for the scenic routes winding through the mountains in the east. Train routes link Oporto to Barcelos and Viana do Castelo, en route to the border with Spain; separate lines run to Guimarães and Braga from Oporto. A bus network provides frequent service to the main towns, but it is reduced for more isolated destinations, especially those in the east.

Caminha ①

Road map C1. 🗺️ 2,000. 🚗 🚲 🚶

📍 Rua Ricardo Joaquim de Sousa (258 921 952) 🕒 Wed.

This ancient fortress town perches beside the Minho with fine views across the river to Spain. Occupied in Celtic and Roman times for its strategic position, Caminha developed into a major port until the diversion of its trade to Viana do Castelo in the 16th century. Today it is a small port, with a daily ferry connection to A Guarda in Spain.

On the main square is the 15th-century Torre do Relógio clock tower, once a gateway in the medieval defensive walls, and the 17th-century Paços do Concelho with its attractive loggia supported by pillars. Cross to the other side of the square, past the Renaissance fountain, to admire the seven Manueline windows on the upper storey of the Solar dos Pitãs mansion (15th century).

The Rua Ricardo Joaquim de Sousa leads to the Gothic Igreja Matriz. Begun in the late 15th century, it has a superb inlaid ceiling of panels carved in Mudéjar (Moorish) style. Renaissance carvings above the side doors depict the Apostles, the Virgin, and several figures in daring poses, including one man with his posterior bared towards Spain.

Environ: Foz do Minho, the mouth of the Minho, lies 5 km (3 miles) southwest of town. From here local fishermen will take groups (by prior arrangement) to the ruined island fortress of Forte da Ínsua.

The small walled town of Vila Nova de Cerveira, 12 km (7 miles) northeast of Caminha on the road to Valença, has a 16th-century castle, refurbished as the luxurious Pousada Dom Dinis (see p398). The tranquil atmosphere is ideal for a stroll in narrow streets lined with 17th- and 18th-century mansions, or along the riverfront, where a car ferry runs to the Spanish town of Goíán.

Valença do Minho ②

Road map C1. 🗺️ 3,000. 🚗 🚲 🚶

📍 Avenida de Espanha (251 823 329) 🕒 Wed.

Set in a commanding position on a hilltop overlooking the River Minho, Valença is an attractive border town with an old quarter set in the narrow confines of two double-walled forts, shaped like crowns and linked by a causeway. During the reign of Sancho I (1185–1211), the town was named Contrasta, due to its position facing the Spanish town of Tui.

The forts date from the 17th and 18th centuries and were designed according to the principles of the French architect, Vauban. There are fine views from the ramparts across the river into Galicia. Although the town was briefly captured by Napoleonic troops in 1807, its formidable bastions resisted subsequent shelling and attacks from across the river in 1809.

Lining the cobbled alleys of the old quarter are shops full of linen, wickerwork, pottery and handicrafts to tempt the thousands of Spanish visitors who stroll across the bridge to shop. South of the ramparts is the newer part of town.

In Praça de São Teotónio, Casa do Eirado (1448) boasts a crenellated roof and late Gothic window, adorned with the builder's signature. The 18th-century Casa do Poço presents symmetrical windows and wrought-iron balconies.

Environ: The Convento de Ganfei, 5 km (3 miles) east of Valença on the N101, was reconstructed in the 11th century by a Norman priest. It retains pleasing Romanesque features, including ornamental animal and plant motifs and vestiges of medieval frescoes. To visit the chapel, ask for the key at the house opposite.

A remote and charming town, Monção once formed part of the string of fortified border posts standing sentinel on the River Minho. Both the town's main squares are lined with old houses, and decorated with chestnut trees, flowerbeds and mosaic paths.

The 13th-century Igreja Matriz in Rua João de Pinho boasts an outstanding Romanesque doorway of sculpted acanthus flowers. Inside, to the right of the transept is the cenotaph of the valiant Deu-la-Deu Martins, the town's heroine, erected in 1679 by a descendant. A leafy avenue east of the town leads to the hot mineral springs used for the treatment of rheumatism.

A colourful element in the June Corpus Christi festival is the Festa da Coca, when St George engages the dragon (coca) in comic ritual combat before giving the final blow.

Environs: The countryside around Monção produces excellent vinho verde (see p29); one of the best-known estates is the privately owned Neo-Classical Palácio de Brejoeira, 5 km (3 miles) south of town.

About 5 km (3 miles) south-east of Monção, the monastery of São João de Longos Vales was built in Romanesque style

The town of Ponte da Barca derives its name from the graceful 15th-century bridge that replaced the boat once used to ferry pilgrims across the River Lima (ponte means bridge, and barca means boat). A stroll through the tranquil town centre leads past the pilory (crowned with sphere and pyramid), the graceful arcades and noble mansions from the 16th and 17th centuries. The Jardim dos Poetas (Poets' Garden) and riverside parks are ideal for picnics, and the huge open-air market along the river is well worth a visit.

Environs: Some of Portugal's finest Romanesque carvings are on the 13th-century church at Bravães, 4 km (2 miles) west of Ponte da Barca. Sculpted monkeys, oxen, and birds of prey decorate the columns of its main portal; the tympanum shows Christ in majesty flanked by two angels.

The town of Arcos de Valdevez, 5 km (3 miles) north of Ponte da Barca, nestles by the banks of the River Vez and lies within convenient reach of Peneda-Gerês National Park. The impressive church of Nossa Senhora da Lapa was built in 1767 by André Soares. This Baroque showpiece has an oval exterior, yet transforms the interior into an octagon.

Hiking enthusiasts should ask the tourist office for directions to follow the circuit of elevated viewpoints and local villages from the hamlet of São Miguel, 11 km (7 miles) east of Ponte da Barca.

DEU-LA-DEU MARTINS

In 1368, when a Spanish army had besieged Monção to the verge of starvation, Deu-la-Deu Martins used the last of the town's flour to bake rolls that she flung over the walls to the Spaniards, with taunts that there were plenty more to throw at them. Thinking their time was being wasted in a futile siege, the troops soon withdrew. In gratitude for saving the town, Deu-la-Deu (the name means "God gave her") is remembered on the town's coat of arms, where she is shown with a loaf of bread in each hand. Pãezinhos (bread rolls) de Deu-la-Deu used to be baked to honour her memory, but the tradition is no longer followed.

Peneda-Gerês National Park, one of Portugal's greatest natural attractions, stretches from the Gerês Mountains in the south to the Peneda range and the Spanish border in the north. Established in 1971, it extends over about 700 sq km (270 sq miles) of wild, dramatic scenery, with windswept peaks and wooded valleys of oak, pine and yew. It also hosts rare wolves and golden eagles among its rich variety of fauna. In the park's villages, everyday life remains firmly rooted in tradition.

The tomb-like architecture of espigueiros (granaries) appears in several areas of the park, especially in the villages of Lindoso and Soajo. Constructed either of wood or granite, they are raised on columns and slatted for ventilation. The design keeps grain and maize at the right humidity as well as off the ground, out of reach of hens and rodents. This attractive riverside town takes its name from the ancient bridge over the River Lima. During the Middle Ages, the town played a pivotal role in the defence of the Minho against the Moors.

The Roman bridge has only five of its original stone arches; the rest were rebuilt or restored in the 14th and 15th centuries. The 15th-century church of Santo António now houses the Museu dos Terceiros, a museum of sacred art. The Museu Rural has antique farming equipment, an authentic regional kitchen and gardens.

Ponte de Lima's remaining medieval fortifications of include the 15th-century Palácio dos Marqueses de Ponte de Lima.

The town's market, a tradition dating back to 1125, takes place on the river's wide and sandy left bank. In mid-September crowds gather in the town to celebrate the Feiras Novas (new fairs), a combined religious festival and folkloric market.

The small town of Vila do Conde enjoyed its boom years as a shipbuilding centre in the Age of Discovery (see pp46–7); today it is a quiet fishing port. By the river, in the historic centre, the main attraction is the Mosteiro de Santa Clara, founded in 1318. The principal dormitory building, dating from the 18th century, is now a correctional institution for teenagers. The church and cloisters, however, are open to the public. The Gothic church has Renaissance additions and contains the tombs of the nunnery's founders, Dom Afonso Sanches (son of King Dinis) and his wife Dona Teresa Martins. By the Mosteiro de Santa Clara are parts of the imposing 5-km (3-mile) aqueduct, built in 1705–14, with 999 arches.

At the heart of the historic centre is Praça Vasco da Gama, with an unusual pillory in the shape of an arm with thrusting sword – a vivid warning to potential wrongdoers. Bordering the square by the pillory is the 16th-century Igreja Matriz, notable for its wonderfully ornate Manueline portico, attributed to João de Castilho.

The town is a centre for lace-making (bone lace or rendas de bilros). Visitors can buy samples and see the skills at the Escola de Rendas (lace-making school). The same building also houses the Museu de Rendas (lace museum).

In the village of Rates, 10 km (6 miles) northeast, the 13th-century church of São Pedro de Rates boasts a portal surmounted by gracefully sculpted statues of saints, and a rose window. Its nearby counterpart at Rio Mau, the church of São Cristóvão de Rio Mau, was finished in 1151. Above the door is a bishop (possibly St Augustine) flanked by helpers.

THE LEGEND OF THE BARCELOS COCK

A Galician pilgrim, as he was leaving Barcelos en route to Santiago de Compostela, was accused of stealing silver from a landowner, and sentenced to death by hanging. As a final plea to save himself, the prisoner requested a meeting with the judge, who was about to tuck into a meal of roast cockerel. The Galician vowed that as proof of his innocence the cockerel would stand up on the plate and crow.

The judge pushed aside his meal and ignored the plea. But as the prisoner was hanged, the cockerel stood up and crowed. The judge, realizing his mistake, hurried to the gallows and found that the Galician had miraculously survived thanks to a loose knot. According to legend, the Galician returned years later to carve the Cruzeiro do Senhor do Galo, now housed in the Museu Arqueológico in Barcelos.

Barcelos 9

Road map C1. 10,000.
 Largo Dr. José Novais 8 (253 811 882). Thu.

A pleasant riverside town, Barcelos is famed as the country's leading ceramics and crafts market and the source of the legendary cock that has become Portugal's national symbol. From its origins as a settlement in Roman times, the town of Barcelos developed into a flourishing agricultural centre and achieved political importance during the 15th century as the seat of the First Duke of Bragança. The town's star attraction is the Feira de Barcelos, a huge weekly market held on Campo da República. Anything from clothes to livestock can be bought here. Pottery enthusiasts can browse amongst bright designs including pagan figurines and the famous clay cockerels.

North of the square stands Nossa Senhora do Terço, the 18th-century church of a former Benedictine nunnery. In contrast to its plain exterior, the interior is beautifully decorated with panels of azulejos illustrating St Benedict's life.

In the southwest corner of the square, a graceful cupola crowns the Igreja do Senhor da Cruz, built around 1705 on the site where two centuries earlier João Pires, a cobbler, had a miraculous vision of a cross etched into the ground. The Festa das Cruzes (festival of crosses), the town's most spectacular event, is held at the beginning of May to celebrate the vision. During the celebrations thousands of flowers are laid on the streets to welcome a procession to the church, and events include magnificent displays of local folk costumes, dancing and fireworks.

The other historic attractions in the town are clustered together in a tranquil setting beside the 15th-century granite bridge that crosses over the River Cávado. The privately owned Solar dos Pinheiros is an attractive mansion on Rua Duques de Bragança, built in 1448. The sculpted figure plucking his beard on the south tower is known as Barbadão, the "bearded one". So incensed was this Jew when his daughter bore a child to a gentile (King João I) that he vowed never to shave again, hence his nickname.

A rich Gothic pillory stands in front of the ruined Counts' Palace or Paço dos Condes, destroyed by the earthquake of 1755. The ruins provide an open-air setting for the Museu Arqueológico, which displays stone crosses, sculpted blazons, sarcophagi, and its famous exhibit, the Cruzeiro do Senhor do Galo, a cross paying tribute to the Barcelos cock legend. Next to the palace, the Igreja Matriz is Romanesque with Gothic influences, and dates from the 13th century. There are 18th-century azulejos inside as well as an impressive rose window. The nearby Museu de Olaria illustrates the history of ceramics in the region.

Street-by-Street: Viana do Castelo 7

Viana do Castelo lies in a beautiful setting on the Lima estuary. This 13th-century town gained prominence as a fishing centre in the 1400s; later it provided ships and seafarers for the great maritime discoveries of the 16th century (see pp48–9). From here João Velho set off to explore the Congo, and João Álvares Fagundes charted the rich fishing grounds of Newfoundland. Wealth derived from trade with Europe and Brazil funded the town's many opulent mansions built in Manueline, Renaissance and Baroque styles. Today the main interest lies in the winding streets and intimate squares of the city centre, easily explored on foot.

The fountain, constructed in 1553 by João Lopes the Elder, forms the focal point of the square.

The chapel, with façade and altar designed by André Soares, draws enormous crowds for the romaria of Nossa Senhora da Agonia, a three-day festival held each year in the month of August (see p229). The statue is carried in procession through the town amid much feasting and celebration.

Environs: In order to enjoy exceptional views, take the

The basilica, completed in 1926 and modelled on the Sacré Coeur in Paris, is a pilgrimage site with little aesthetic appeal. The steep climb, however, is well rewarded by the superb views from the top of the dome. Behind the church you can wander along woodland paths or visit the Pousada de Santa Luzia (see p398). From the pousada it is a short walk to the top of the hill, where there are traces of a Celtiberian settlement (citânia).

Braga 10

Symbol of the city, Our Lady of the Milk

Churches, grand 18th-century houses and pretty gardens provide the focus for the charm and interest of Braga's centre, once past the urban development on the city outskirts.

Known in Roman times as Bracara Augusta, Braga has a long history as a religious and commercial centre. In the 12th century, it became the seat of Portugal's archbishops, and the country's religious capital. The city lost some influence in the 19th century, but today continues as the ecclesiastical capital of Portugal and main city of the Minho.

Not surprisingly, Braga hosts some of Portugal's most colourful religious festivals. Semana Santa (Holy Week) is celebrated with dramatic, solemn processions, while the lively festival of São João in June sees dancing, fairs and fireworks.

Exploring Braga

The compact historic centre borders Praça da República, the central square. Within the square stands the 14th-century Torre de Menagem, all that remains of the city's original fortifications.

A short walk leads to Rua do Souto, a narrow pedestrian street lined with elegant shops and cafés, including the Café Brasileira, furnished in 19th-century salon style. Towards the end of the road stands the impressive Sé, the cathedral of Braga. Other churches worth a visit include the small, 16th-century Capela dos Coimbras, and the 17th-century Baroque Santa Cruz. Many of the finest mansions in Braga also date from the Baroque period, such as the Palácio do Raio and the Câmara Municipal (the town hall). Both buildings are attributed to the 18th-century architect André Soares da Silva.

Bom Jesus do Monte ❶

Fountain on Staircase of the Three Virtues

On a forested slope east of Braga stands Portugal's most spectacular religious sanctuary. In 1722 the Archbishop of Braga devised the giant Baroque Escadaria (stairway) of Bom Jesus as the approach to a small existing shrine. The stairway and the church of Bom Jesus were completed by Carlos Amarante in 1811. The lower section features a steep Sacred Way with chapels showing the 14 Stations of the Cross, the scenes leading up to Christ's crucifixion. The Escadório dos Cinco Sentidos, in the middle section, depicts the five senses with ingenious wall-fountains and statues of biblical, mythological and symbolic figures. This is followed by the similarly allegorical Staircase of the Three Virtues.

At the summit, an esplanade provides superb views and access to the church. Close by are several hotels, a café and a boating lake hidden among the trees. Both a pilgrimage site and tourist attraction, the sanctuary attracts large festive crowds at weekends.

Guimarães ⑩

Framed by gently rising hills, the town of Guimarães is celebrated as the birthplace of the nation. When Afonso Henriques proclaimed himself king of Portugal in 1139 (see pp42–3), he chose Guimarães as his capital, and the distinctive outline of its proud castle appears on the Portuguese coat of arms. In the well-preserved city centre, the narrow streets of the medieval quarter are ideal for exploration on foot. The cobbled Rua de Santa Maria, lined with old town houses embellished with ornate statuary, leads up from the main square, the Largo da Oliveira, past the Paço dos Duques to the castle. To feel the hustle and bustle of the Middle Ages, visit the town in the first week of August for the Festas Gualterianas, a festival of medieval art and costume.

The castle's huge square keep, encircled by eight crenellated towers, dominates the skyline. First built to deter attacks by Moors and Normans in the 10th century, it was extended by Henry of Burgundy two centuries later and, according to tradition, was the birthplace of Portugal's first king, Afonso Henriques. The font where he was reputedly baptized is kept in the tiny Romanesque chapel of São Miguel, situated at the western end of the castle.

On view in a small museum inside the palace, are lavish displays of Persian rugs, Flemish tapestries and paintings, such as the impressive O Coreiro Pascal (Paschal Lamb) by Josefa de Óbidos (see p51). Paying unusual homage to the nation's maritime exploits, the chestnut ceiling in the banquetting hall imitates the upturned hull of a Portuguese caravel.

This museum, housed in the beautiful Romanesque cloister and adjoining rooms of Nossa Senhora da Oliveira, displays some outstanding religious art, azulejos and ceramics, all from local churches.

The star exhibits, donated to the church by João I, are his tunic worn at the battle of Aljubarrota in 1385 (see p185), and a 14th-century silver altarpiece of the Visitation, Annunciation and Nativity, reportedly taken from the defeated Spanish king. The Santa Clara room contains gilt carving, the work of local craftsmen, taken from the former convent of Santa Clara, now the town hall.

This former monastery lies on the square's east side. Founded by Afonso Henriques, the church was restored by João I in gratitude to Our Lady of the Olive Tree for his victory at Aljubarrota (see p185). The Manueline tower is from 1515.

In front of it is the Padrão do Salado, a 14th-century Gothic shrine housing a cross. It commemorates the legend of how the church and square acquired their name. An olive tree was transplanted here to supply the altar lamp with oil, but it withered. In 1342, the merchant Pedro Esteves placed the cross on it, whereupon the tree flourished. The tree that stands in the square today dates only from 1985.

Specializing in finds from these sites, some dating to the Stone Age, the museum contains a wealth of archaeological, ethnological and numismatic exhibits. These include a rare pair of Lusitanian granite warriors, a bronze votive ox-cart, and the Pedras Formosas, two stone slabs inscribed with human figures. This Iron Age settlement is one of Portugal's most impressive archaeological sites. Excavated by Martins Sarmento (1833–99), who devoted his life to the study of Iron Age sites, are the foundations of 150 stone dwellings, a number of which have since been reconstructed.

From about the 4th century BC to the 4th century AD, the site was inhabited by Celtiberians, but was most probably under Roman rule from c.20 BC. A network of paths leads visitors past paved streets, subterranean cisterns, sewers and water supply ducts. The Museu Martins Sarmento in Guimarães displays various excavated artefacts.

Baroque Mosteiro de Refojos, with its splendid dome 33 m (108 ft) high, surrounded by statues of the Apostles, and surmounted by a statue of the archangel Michael. The town also owns the best of the basto statues, albeit with a French head; it was changed by troops as a joke during the Napoleonic Wars.

Environs: The fine hiking country of the Terras de Basto, carpeted with flowers in spring, has other villages worth visiting.

SOUTHERN PORTUGAL

INTRODUCING SOUTHERN PORTUGAL 286–291

ALENTEJO 292–315

ALGARVE 316–333

Southern Portugal at a Glance

South of the Tagus the vast wheatfields and rolling plains of the Alentejo stretch almost uninterrupted to the horizon. There is a rich legacy of early civilization here, dating back to prehistory, but visitors to Évora, Beja or even the World Heritage city of Évora will usually be untroubled by mass tourism – until reaching the southern coast. Many visitors know nothing of Portugal except the tourist playground of the Algarve, yet it is least typical of the country. The sandy beaches are a year-round attraction but the historic town centres such as Faro, and the quieter hinterland, are well worth exploring.

Évora, the Alentejo's historic university city, has monuments dating back to the Roman era. Gleaming white arcades and balconies of finely wrought ironwork are reminders that for over 450 years, until 1165, Évora was inhabited by the Moors (see pp304–7).

Beja flourished under the Moors and its museum is housed in a former convent resplendent with Hispano-Arab tiles, such as these in the chapter-house (see p313).

Lagos, principal town of the western Algarve, is flanked by inviting cove beaches, such as Praia de Dona Ana, which make it easy to understand why sunseekers flock here (see pp322–3).

Alto Alentejo

ALENTEJO
(See pp292-315)

Marvão, within a stone's throw of the Spanish border, sits like a miniature fortress high in the Serra de São Mamede. The granite walls which protect the tiny town merge imperceptibly with the rock and have kept Marvão safe through centuries of dispute (see p296).

Elvas has some of the best-preserved fortifications in Europe (see p299). At the centre of the walled old town lies the Praça da República, where Elvas's former cathedral looks out over the square's striking geometric mosaics.

Vila Viçosa was chosen in the 15th century as the seat of the dukes of Bragança. Here they built their Paço Ducal (see pp300-301), in front of which stands a bronze equestrian statue of the 8th Duke, who became King João IV in 1640.

Faro, the gateway to the Algarve thanks to its international airport, is nevertheless bypassed by many visitors. Much was destroyed by the 1755 earthquake, but the town still has a pleasant historic centre beside the harbour. In spring the streets and squares are scented with the sweetness of orange blossom (see pp328-9).

The Beaches of the Algarve

Sunbathing on the beach

Facing North Africa to the south, and exposed to the force of the Atlantic in the west, the Algarve has a varied coastline. The Barlavento (windward side) includes the west coast and the south coast almost as far as Faro. Beaches around the promontory of Sagres are backed by cliffs and on the west coast many beaches are deserted. The sea here is colder and rougher than on the south coast, with dangerous currents. Between Sagres and Lagos is the start of a series of beautiful sandy coves, punctuated with grottoes, overlooked by tightly packed holiday resorts. East of Faro, the Sotavento (leeward side) has long, sandy beaches washed by warmer calmer water.

Arrifana ①

The gracefully curving beach of Arrifana is one of the most stunning on the west coast. Sheltered below high cliffs, the approach by road offers dramatic views (see p320).

Beliche ③

Despite being at the "world's end", Beliche is sheltered by Cabo de São Vicente. The sandy beach is backed by fascinating caves and rock formations (see p322).

Castelejo ②

This long, deserted beach of soft sand can only be reached via a dirt road by bicycle, car or jeep. Its remote location, however, ensures peace and quiet (see p321).

KEY

Motorway

Minor road

Martinhal ④

Martinhal is a wide, sheltered expanse of sand east of Sagres. The area is popular for water sports of all kinds, and the beach boasts an aquatic school with parasailing, water-skiing and windsurfing (see p322).

Dona Ana ⑤

A tiny cove on the way to Ponta da Piedade, Dona Ana is one of the prettiest beaches in the Algarve, although crowded during the summer. A boat trip to see nearby caves and grottoes is highly recommended (see p323).

Meia Praia ⑥

A vast expanse of sand stretching for 4 km (2 miles), the sheltered Meia Praia is the longest beach in the Algarve. Easily reached by road, there is also a boat trip from Lagos during the summer months (see p323).

Praia da Rocha ⑦

Framed by ochre cliffs and lapped by calm water, this spacious beach is justifiably famous – and crowded in high season. Water sports can be practised here in a gentler sea than the extreme southwest and visitors are well catered for (see p324).

Ilha de Tavira ⑪

In summer, boats go from Quatro Águas to the sandy Ilha de Tavira. The beach facing the coast has calm water, whereas the beaches on the ocean side, that run the length of the island, offer good swimming and windsurfing (see p332).

Carvoeiro ⑧

Carvoeiro is a fishing village with a diminutive cove. The whole area is great for cove beaches, and a boat trip or a walk along the cliff will take you to spectacular sandy beaches with excellent swimming and snorkelling.

Monte Gordo ⑫

The warm water and balmy climate, combined with vast stretches of clean sand backed by pine woods, make Monte Gordo a very popular resort.

Senhora da Rocha ⑨

Senhora da Rocha, named after a small chapel on its eastern promontory, is actually three small, sheltered beaches. Typical of this part of the coast, these half-moons of sand tucked below eroded yellow cliffs are reached via steep steps.

São Rafael ⑩

The small, popular beach of São Rafael offers soft sand and shallow water, with spectacular caves and eroded rock formations to explore. For those without a car, it is a steep walk down from the bus stop on the main road (see p 325).

The Flavours of Southern Portugal

Alentejan cuisine is one of the country's most loved. The landscape is a powerful source of culinary inspiration, with its abundant wheat fields, its silvery olive groves and its wide oaks that provide acorns for pigs giving an intense flavour to local pork meat. The Portuguese trinity of olive oil, garlic and coriander is at its holiest here, and some of the country's tastiest fish and seafood is caught off the region's rocky western coast. The Algarve boasts a wide variety of fish, a wealth of fruit and vegetables, a unique pan, the cataplana, and the culinary cosmopolitanism that comes with tourism.

THE ALENTEJO

For a region whose history and identity is bound up with a poor and landless peasantry, the Alentejo has a surprisingly rich culinary heritage. Dishes are varied and use basic ingredients imaginatively, leaving little to waste. One example is Alentejan bread, that famously keeps for a long time. Even when at last it begins to go stale it still has uses. Slices are placed in a broth of hot water, olive oil, garlic and coriander, mashed and topped with a poached egg to make açorda.

The ewe's milk cheeses of Serpa, Évora and Nisa are eaten when they are freshly made, soft and even runny, or after prolonged maturing, which hardens them and sharpens their flavour. Shepherds also herd Ibérico pigs, or porcos pretos as they are often called. These are fattened up by foraging for acorns, which gives the meat and fat a delicious intensity of flavour to make most other pork seem insipid in comparison.

Olives are a staple of the Alentejo, and the area around Moura is famous for its olive oil. Small, hot chillies known as piri-piri make their way into many local dishes and

Harvest of fish and seafood from the southern Portuguese coastline

REGIONAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Olives

It might seem strange that one of the great dishes of the Alentejo is a fish soup, but sopa de cação masterfully transforms the humble dogfish into a velvety soup with a sweet-and-sour streak. Ensopado is a quintessentially Alentejan type of dish, a sort of soupy stew, often served with a slice of bread at the bottom of the bowl. The lamb version, ensopado de borrego, is the most popular. Porco preto is prepared in any number of ways, from the classic pêzinhos de coentrada (pig's trotters with coriander), to lombo de porco em presunto – tenderloin wrapped in cured ham. The Algarvian cataplana pan is often used to cook a rich fish and seafood stew, cataplana de peixe e mariscos. Figs feature in many of the region's desserts, including the fudge-like morgado de figo.

Lombo de porco em presunto is often served with baby turnips. The ham keeps the tenderloin moist.

Fresh char-grilled sardines and giant prawns pickles, while large, sweet red peppers are char-roasted and peeled to add to salads, or mashed into a paste with salt to be preserved as massa de pimentão.

The coast yields delicacies such as sargo (white bream) and perceves, the odd-looking goose barnacle, which is pried off steep cliffsides at low tide. Deep-fried dried eel is popular, and tastes similar to pork crackling.

THE ALGARVE

Portugal's tourist hub is often condescendingly regarded as a culinary cliché of grilled sardines, vinegary salads, grilled chicken and chips, but that misses a few crucial points. In the cataplana, a wok-shaped copper pan with a hinged, domed lid, the region has its own cooking utensil and technique as well as a link to its Arabic past. Though many restaurants use it like any other pan, the cataplana is above all a steaming device, particularly suited to the coast's many delicious edible shells, such as ameijoas and conquilhas

Oranges ripening in a citrus grove in the Algarve

(types of cockle) and ostras (oysters). Tuna is rarer now than it was, but the range at any fish market remains vast.

Inland from its popular beaches, the region is a fertile garden for almost every kind of vegetable – peppers and beefsteak tomatoes are particularly good – and a large variety of fruits including citrus, figs and melons. The serras, mostly low mountain ranges forming a natural border with the Alentejo, provide traditional cheeses, herbs, honey and sweets.

REGIONAL WINES

The Alentejo is Portugal's favourite wine region, and accounts for about one-third of the country's vineyards. Parts of it date back to Roman times. It produces wines with styles ranging from traditional, farmyard-scented light reds to deep, berry-flavoured and oaked ones, often made from grapes that are new to the region, including Syrah and the Douro variety Touriga Nacional. The leap in quality that the Alentejo has performed over the last couple of decades is perhaps most noticeable in the whites, which are strikingly fresh and fruity for a region of extreme heat. The Algarve has begun a process of renewal and modernization as well, with a few individual producers leading the way, and some co-operatives are now making very palatable reds. Wines tend to be soft and aromatic with a high alcohol content.

Enfopado de Borrego uses cheap cuts of lamb marinated with cumin and cloves and simmered until very tender.

Cataplana is named for the pan. Shellfish, squid, prawns and fish are steamed with white wine, garlic and herbs.

Morgado de Figo is a rich, sticky cake of dried figs, almonds, sugar, chocolate, cinnamon and aniseed.

ALENTEJO

The sun-baked Alentejo occupies nearly one-third of Portugal, stretching all the way from the Tagus south to the Algarve. Its vast rolling plains, golden with wheat or silver with olive trees, its whitewashed villages, megaliths and castles, and above all the space and tranquillity, are the Alentejo's great attractions for visitors.

Stone circles, dolmens and other relics of Stone Age life pepper the Alentejan plain, particularly around Évora, a historical gem of a city at the region's geographical centre.

Évora, like Beja, Vidigueira and other towns, was founded by the Romans, who valued this land beyond the Tagus – além Tejo – for its wheatfields. Introducing irrigation systems to overcome the soil's aridity, they established enormous farms to grow grain for the empire. Worked by peasant farmers, these huge estates, or latifúndios, still exist, some of them now being run as co-operatives.

Grain apart, the vast plains yield cork from the bark of cork oaks and olives – Elvas is prized for these as well as its candied greengages. Vineyards around Reguengos and Vidigueira have long produced powerful wines, and the Alentejo has a number of demarcated wine regions (see pp28–9). Since 1986, Portugal's membership of the European Union has increased the rate of investment and modernization, although the region is still sparsely populated, supporting only ten per cent of the population. Land tenure has always been a concern here, and communism has a strong appeal – the Alentejans were solid supporters of the 1974 revolution (see p57).

Many towns and villages, especially in the south, carry echoes of the long Moorish occupation in the cube-like white houses, while to the north and east the plains give way to a rocky terrain of fortified villages and scrubland grazed by flocks of sheep.

Portuguese from other regions mock the amiable alentejanos for their slow ways, but they are widely admired for their singing and their handicrafts.

Exploring the Alentejo

The ancient city of Évora, with its exceptional historic centre and location in the heart of the Alentejo, is an obvious starting point for exploring this varied and beautiful region.

To the northeast lie the white towns of Estremoz and Vila Viçosa, where local marble has been used in the construction of some fabulous façades, and Alter do Chão, home of Portugal's royal horse, the Alter Real. Nearer the formerly-disputed Spanish frontier, towns and villages still shelter within massive fortifications, while travelling south the legacy of the Moors becomes ever more apparent; Beja and Mértola, especially, are full of Moorish history.

On the west coast there are some lovely beaches, with many stretches still relatively untouched by tourism.

GETTING AROUND

Exploration by road is a more feasible option than by rail, although trains run between the major towns of Évora, Beja and some of the smaller centres. The bus network links most towns and villages, but time and patience are needed to cope with the logistics. For motorists, the A6 (E90) provides fast access from Lisbon right through the Alentejo to the Spanish border, while the IP2 (E802) bisects the region from north to south. Links on to minor roads are generally well marked and roads are mainly in good condition.

Serra de São Mamede ①

Road map D4. to Portalegre.
 Portalegre.

The diverse geology and capricious climate of this remote range, caught between the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, encourage a fascinating range of flora and fauna. In 1989, 320 sq km (120 sq miles) of the Serra were designated a parque natural, and griffon vultures and Bonelli's eagles soar overhead. Red deer, wild boar and the cat-like genet live among the sweet chestnut trees and holm oaks, and streams attract otters and amphibians, such as the Iberian midwife toad. The reserve is also home to one of the largest colonies of bats in Europe.

The Serra's apparent emptiness is deceptive: megaliths suggest that it was settled in prehistoric times, and in the south of the reserve, rock paintings survive in the Serra de Cavaleiros and Serra de Louçoes. Below Marvão is the Roman town of Amaia (São Salvador de Aramenha), and the Roman network of roads still winds among the trim white villages, offering grand views at every curve.

From Portalegre, the road climbs for 15 km (9 miles) to the Pico de São Mamede at 1,025 m (3,363 ft). A minor road leads south to Alegrete, a fortified village crowned by its ruined 14th-century castle.

 Largo de Santa Maria (245 909 131). Thu.

This serene medieval hamlet is dramatically set at 862 m (2,828 ft) on a spectacular escarpment facing Spain. Its 13th-century walls and 17th-century buttresses blend seamlessly into the granite of the mountains, making it an impregnable stronghold. The Romans, who called the outcrop Herminius Minor, were followed by the Moors – the name may have come from Marvan, a Moorish leader – whom the Christians evicted with difficulty only in 1166.

The walls completely enclose the little collection of white-washed houses, a pousada (see p399) and the 15th-century Igreja Matriz. Rua do Espírito Santo leads past the former governor's house (now a bank) with its 17th-century iron balcony, and a Baroque fountain, up towards the castle.

Built by King Dinis in about 1299, the castle dominates the village. Its walls enclose two cisterns, a museum displaying historic weapons and a keep. The castle offers spectacular views south and west towards the Serra de São Mamede and east to the Spanish frontier.

The Museu Municipal, in the former church of Santa Maria, retains the main altar, and has an interesting exhibition of traditional remedies and local archaeological finds dating from Palaeolithic to Roman times.

Strategically positioned on a low plateau of the Serra de São Mamede amid fertile country, Portalegre is of Roman origin. Fortified by King Dinis (see pp44–5), it acquired city status in 1550.

Textile, tapestry and silk industries brought prosperity in the 16th and 17th centuries, reflected in the Renaissance and Baroque mansions found along Rua 19 de Junho, the main street of the old town. Near the new town's central square, the Rossio, a former Jesuit monastery is now the only tapestry factory still in use. Cork production is also a tradition here, and the tall chimneys of cork factories on the edge of the city indicate a continuing industry.

Uphill lies the cathedral or Sé. Built in 1556, it acquired its Baroque façade and twin pinnacles in the 18th century. The late Renaissance interior has paintings by anonymous Portuguese artists and a sacristy lined with striking azulejo panels. These blue and white tile pictures, dating from the first years of the 17th century, depict scenes from the life of the Virgin Mary and the flight of the Holy Family into Egypt.

In an adjacent 18th-century mansion is the small Museu Municipal, where the eclectic collection on display ranges from religious art to Portuguese ceramics.

The home of José Régio (1901–69), the eminent Portuguese poet and dramatist, is near the Praça da República. Now the Museu José Régio, it contains some fascinating folk art objects in a variety of media as well as his collection of crucifixes and a recreated Alentejan kitchen.

Sprawled on a green slope of the Serra de São Mamede, this pretty spa town enjoyed by the Romans has worn well. It is fringed by modern development but the lower town, around Praça Dom Pedro V, retains its Baroque church of Santa Maria, the 18th-century town hall and pillory, and handsome mansions from the same era. In the Largo Frederico Laranjo is one of several sources of the town's curative waters: the Fonte da

The town's oldest chapel, the 13th-century Salvador do Mundo on the Estrada de Circunvalação, has a much admired

In the upper town, the tiny Nossa Senhora da Alegria offers a feast of 17th-century polychrome floral tiles. It stands within the walls of the castle that gave the town its name. This was rebuilt in 1310 by King Dinis, who negotiated here to marry Isabel of Aragon. Much of the castle was lost in an explosion in 1705.

Modest houses under outsize chimneys give no hint of Crato's past eminence. Part of a gift from Sancho II to the powerful crusading Order of Hospitallers, Crato was the Order's headquarters by 1350. Its prestige was such that Manuel I and João III were both married here, and João III's nephew was Grand Prior.

In 1662, invading Spanish forces sacked and burned the town, a catastrophe from which it never recovered. The Hospitallers' castle remains, in ruins, and in the Praça do Município the 15th-century Varanda do Grão-Prior marks the entrance to what was the Grand Prior's residence.

Rua de Santa Maria leads, via an avenue of orange trees, to the Igreja Matriz, much altered since its 13th-century origins. In the chancel, 18th-century azulejos depict fishing, hunting and travelling scenes.

Environs: Just north of Crato are the imposing monastery and church of Flor da Rosa. Built in 1356 by the Grand Prior of Crato, father of Nuno Álvares Pereira (see p185), the monastery was restored and in 1995 opened as a pousada (see p398). A tapestry in the dining room shows the monastery surrounded by pine forests, as it was until the 20th century.

Dominating the town centre is the five-towered castle (closed for restoration). It has a Gothic portal built in 1359 by Pedro I. The flower-filled market square, the Largo Doze Melhores de Alter, lies at its feet.

Several streets northwest of the castle are graced by fine Baroque town houses, many trimmed with Alentejan style yellow paintwork. The 18th-century Palácio do Álamo (closed until 2004), houses an art gallery and library.

According to legend, this town got its name when three families settled in campo maior, the “bigger field”. King Dinis fortified the town in 1310 and the monumental Porta da Vila was added in 1646.

Disaster struck in 1732 when a gunpowder magazine, ignited by lightning, destroyed the citadel and killed 1,500 people. It seems likely that after a decent period, the victims provided the material for the morbid Capela dos Ossos, entirely faced in human bones. Dated 1766, it bears an inscription on mortality spelt out in collar bones.

Each September the streets are dressed with paper flowers for the joyful Festa das Flores.

Only 12 km (7 miles) from the Spanish border, Elvas feels like a frontier town. The sprawl of modern Elvas caters for busy cross-border traffic, but the old town's fortifications are among the best preserved in Europe. Within the walls a few architectural features and many of the street names are reminders that for 500 years the town was in Moorish hands.

Elvas was liberated from the Moors in 1230, but for another 600 years its fate was to swing between periodic attacks from Spain and the witnessing of numerous peace treaties.

Despite its dramatic history, Elvas is nowadays associated in Portuguese minds with Elvas plums.

ALTER REAL: HORSE OF KINGS

Most Lusitano horses – Portugal's national breed – are grey, but those called Alter Real (“real” means royal) are purebred bay or brown. King José (1750–77), who yearned for a quality Portuguese horse, imported a stock of Andalusian mares, from which the gracious, nimble Alter Real was bred. The equestrian statue in Lisbon's Praça do Comércio (see p85) is of José astride his beloved Alter, Gentil. The stud prospered until the Napoleonic Wars (1807–15), when horse stealing and erratic breeding sent the Alter into decline. By 1930, the royal horse was practically extinct, but years of dedication have ultimately revived this classic breed.

THE FORTIFICATIONS OF ELVAS

A walk around the top of the battlements gives a fine view of the old town and a vantage point from which to appreciate the ingenious design of the fortifications. Using the principles of the French military architect, the Marquis de Vauban, a series of pentagonal bastions and free-standing angled ravelins form a multi-faceted star, protecting the walls from every angle. What survives dates mostly from the 17th century, when the defences held off Spanish troops in the War of Independence (see pp50–51). Elvas also served as Wellington's base to besiege Badajoz across the Guadiana.

Two surviving satellite forts indicate the strategic importance of Elvas: just to the south-east lies Forte de Santa Luzia (1641–87), and 2 km (1 mile) to the north is the 18th-century Forte de Graça, which is still a military post.

🏰 Castle

Parada do Castelo. ☐ daily.

Romano-Moorish in origin, the castle which crowns the steep Elvas streets was rebuilt for Sancho II in 1226. It has been subjected to further remodeling over the years, principally by King Dinis and then in the late 15th century under João II, whose arms, which incorporate a pelican, can be seen above the entrance. The great keep was erected in 1488. Until the end of the 16th century the castle was used as the residence of the mayors of Elvas.

🏰 Nossa Senhora dos Aflitos

Largo do Pelourinho. ☐ Tue–Sun.

The plain exterior belies the wealth within the walls of this little 16th-century church. The octagonal floor plan originates from the layout of an earlier Templar church, but its appeal is in the fine marble columns and spectacular yellow and blue azulejos added in the 17th century. These line the walls and reach up into the cupola.

Just behind the church is the archway of the Arab Porta da Alcáçova, a vestige of Elvas's Moorish fortifications. In the

🏰 Aqueduto da Amoreira

Until the 16th century the only source of drinking water in Elvas was the Alcalá well in the west of the town. When this began to fail, alarmed citizens conceived the notion of an aqueduct to bring water from the spring at Amoreira, some 8 km (5 miles) away. Work, begun in 1498, was not finished until 1622. The great round buttresses and arches of architect Francisco de Arruda march across the valley and still deliver water to the fountain in the Largo da Misericórdia. The aqueduct has a total of 843 arches in up to five tiers and in places towers to over 30 m (100 ft).

Vila Viçosa: Paço Ducal

The Dukes of Bragança owned vast estates, but the lavish palace at Vila Viçosa, begun by Dom Jaime in 1501, became their favoured residence.

When the 8th Duke became king in 1640, many of the furnishings accompanied him to Lisbon, but the long suite of first-floor rooms is still splendid, from the Sala da Cabra-Cega, where royal parties played blind man's buff, to the heroic Sala de Hércules. More intimate are the rooms of King Carlos and his wife, which are much as he left them the day before his assassination in 1908.

Chapel

Despite later additions, the chapel has retained its coffered ceiling and other features from the early 16th century. It was here, on 3 December 1640, that the 8th Duke learnt that he was to become king.

★ Sala dos Duques

Lining the ceiling of the Room of the Dukes are portraits of all the dukes of Bragança by the Italian Domenico Duprà (1689–1770), commissioned by João V. On the walls are Brussels tapestries of scenes from the life of Achilles.

The vast kitchen, which once regularly fed several hundred people, gleams with over 600 copper pots and pans, some large enough to bathe in.

Vila Viçosa 📍

Road map D5. 🗺 8,700. 📍
1 Praça da República (268 881 101). 🕒 Wed.

After the expulsion of the Moors in 1226, this hill-side town was named Val Viçosa – “fertile valley”. In the 15th century it became the country seat of the dukes of Bragança, and when the 8th Duke became King João IV, Vila Viçosa was expanded to meet the needs of nobles and visiting ministers. Substantial houses, built from the local white marble, in streets lined with orange trees, reflect its prosperous royal past.

The town is full of reminders of the Braganças. Dominating the west side of the Terreiro do Paço is the long façade of the Paço Ducal, which stretches for 110 m (360 ft). Visitors to the palace emerge through the Porta do Nó, a marble and schist gateway formed into the knot symbol of the Braganças.

In the centre of the square a statue of João IV on horseback looks across to the Igreja dos Agostinhos (not open to the public). Founded in 1267 but rebuilt in the 17th century, the church was intended as the last resting place of the dukes, but despite their affection for Vila Viçosa, most Bragança monarchs are buried in Lisbon, at São Vicente de Fora (see p70).

View from the castle at Vila Viçosa, looking towards the Paço Ducal

In the Renaissance Convento das Chagas, on the south side of the square, are the tombs of the Bragança wives. Founded by the 4th Duke's second wife in 1530, the convent is being converted to a pousada.

Alongside the Paço Ducal, an 18-km (11-mile) wall rings the tapada real, or royal chase. Uphill from the Terreiro do Paço is the castle, where an exhibition explains the history of the hunt. The castle, built by King Dinis, was the Braganças' residence from 1461 until the Paço Ducal became habitable.

In the nearby 14th-century church of Nossa Senhora da Conceição stands a Gothic image of the Virgin, said to be from England. During the 1646 cortes João IV crowned her as patron saint of Portugal, after which no Portuguese monarch ever wore a crown.

THE ROYAL HOUSE OF BRAGANÇA

Catherine, born at Vila Viçosa in 1638

Afonso, illegitimate son of João I, was created Duke of Bragança in 1442, first of an influential but bloodstained dynasty. Fernando, the 3rd Duke, was executed in 1483 by his cousin, João II, who feared his power. Jaime, the unstable 4th Duke, locked up his wife in Bragança castle (see p260), then killed her at Vila Viçosa. It was Dom Jaime who initiated the building of the palace at Vila Viçosa, an ambitious work embellished by later dukes to reflect their aspirations and affluence.

The 8th Duke only reluctantly relinquished a life of music and hunting here to take up the throne (see p50).

The Braganças ruled Portugal for 270 years, accumulating wealth and forging alliances (João IV's daughter, Catherine, married Charles II of England), but inbreeding enfeebled the bloodline (see p167). The last monarch, Manuel II, fled to exile in 1910, two years after his father and brother were shot by Republicans. The present duke farms quietly near Viseu.

Above the doorway of No. 41, along Évora's single street, is a historic plaque. It records that here, on 26 May 1834, Dom Miguel ceded the throne, ending the conflict with his older brother (see p54).

Évora's eye-catching castle, its walls bound by bold stone “ropes”, largely replaced an earlier castle that fell in an earthquake in 1531. The 16th-century walls, however, have been controversially “restored” with concrete. An exhibition explains the castle's history.

The foundation of Arraiolos is attributed either to Celts or perhaps to local tribes in about 300 BC. Its 14th-century castle seems overwhelmed by the town walls and looming 16th-century Igreja do Salvador. Typically, houses in Arraiolos are low and white, and are painted with a blue trim to ward off the devil.

The principal sight in Arraiolos, however, is of women stitching at their bright wool rugs in the shadowy rooms behind the main street. Carpets have been woven in Arraiolos since the 13th century and decorate countless manor houses and palaces throughout Portugal. The craft may have begun with the Moors, but floral designs of the 18th century are thought to be the finest. At the many carpet shops here it is also possible to see a range of contemporary designs with their bright colours and less elaborate patterns.

Street-by-Street: Évora 16

Rising out of the Alentejan plain is the enchanting walled city of Évora. The town rose to prominence under the Romans and flourished throughout the Middle Ages as a centre of learning and the arts. It was a popular residence of Portuguese kings, but fell out of favour after Spain's annexation of Portugal in 1580. Its influence waned further when the Jesuit university closed in the 18th century. Students once again throng Évora's streets, joined by visitors who come to discover its many historical sites and enjoy the atmosphere of the old town. The city's historic legacy was officially recognized in 1986, when UNESCO declared Évora a World Heritage Site.

Exploring Évora

Squeezed within Roman, medieval and 17th-century walls, Évora's web of streets is an architectural and cultural cornucopia. From the forbidding cathedral, a stroll down past the craft shops of Rua 5 de Outubro leads to Praça do Giraldo, the city's lively main square, whose arcades are a reminder of Moorish influence. Évora's religious dedication is reflected in the number and variety of its churches – over 20 churches and monasteries, including a grisly chapel of bones. On a happier note, Évora's restaurants are excellent and the pleasure of wandering the historic streets is enhanced by evocative names such as Alley of the Unshaven Man and Street of the Countess's Tailor.

With the establishment of the Jesuits' Colégio do Espírito Santo, Évora, already noted for its architecture and sacred art, became a seat of learning. The school, which was inaugurated in 1559 by Cardinal Henrique, brother of João III, flourished for 200 years, but was closed in 1759 when the reforming Marquês de Pombal banished the Jesuits (see p53).

Today part of the University of Évora, the school still has a graceful cloister and notable azulejos – in the classrooms they depict suitably studious themes such as Plato lecturing to disciples (1744–9). The 18th-century Baroque chapel, now the Sala dos Actos, is used for graduation ceremonies.

🏛️ Praça do Giraldo

Évora's bustling main square is bounded along its eastern side by a series of graceful Moorish arcades. The name Giraldo, some say, stems from Geraldo Sem-Pavor (the Fearless), an outlaw who in 1165 ousted the Moors for King Afonso Henriques.

The square has witnessed some bloody acts: João II watched the beheading of his brother-in-law, the Duke of Bragança, here in 1483, and it was the site in 1573 of an Inquisitional burning. Today, it is a favourite meeting-place, especially on market days.

☐ daily. 🗺️ to Capela dos Ossos.

The principal fascination of this 15th-century church is its Capela dos Ossos. This gruesome chapel of bones was created in the 17th century from the remains of 5,000 monks. Two leathery corpses, one of a child, dangle from a chain, and a mordant reminder at the entrance reads: Nós ossos que aqui estamos, pelos vossos esperamos (We bones that are here await yours).

🏰 Largo da Porta de Moura

The western entrance to this square is guarded by the vestiges of a Moorish gateway. Both the domed Casa Soure and the double arches of the belvedere on Casa Cordovil at the opposite end, show the Arab influence on architecture in Évora. The central fountain, looking like some futuristic orb, surprisingly dates back to 1556. Just south of the square, the portal of the Convento do Carmo features the knot symbol, denoting it once belonged to the Braganças (see p301).

🌿 Jardim Público

🕒 daily. ♿

On the southern edge of the old town, Évora's public gardens are set out on the site of the grandiose Palácio de Dom Manuel, built for Afonso V (1438–81) and embellished by successive kings. It was the venue for grand banquets and ceremonies but fell into disrepair and finally disappeared in 1895. All that remains is the graceful Galeria das Damas, a 20th-century reconstruction of a walkway and pavilion built for Manuel I (1495–1521).

THE ROMANS IN THE ALENTEJO

Once the Romans gained dominance over Lusitania (see pp40–41), they turned the Alentejo into a vast wheatfield: their very name for the principal town – Eborā Cerealis (Évora) – reflects the importance of the region's grain supply. Latifúndios, large farms instigated by the Romans, survive to this day, as do Roman open-cast copper and iron mines. Local marble was used in the construction of the finest villas, and Roman remains are to be found scattered throughout the region, particularly in Évora and Beja (see p313) and in more isolated sites such as São Cucufate, near Vidigueira (see p312) and Miróbriga, near Santiago do Cacém (see p314).

🏰 Walls

The fortifications that have protected Évora down the centuries form two incomplete concentric circles. The inner ring, of which only fragments are discernible, is Roman, from perhaps as early as the 1st century AD, with Moorish and medieval additions – the two stubby towers that give the Largo da Porta de Moura its name mark an Arab gate.

In the 14th century, new walls were built to encompass the growing town. Completed under Fernando I, these had 40 towers and ten gates, including the Porta de Alconchel, which still faces the Lisbon road.

When João IV was defiantly declared king in 1640 (see p50), major fortifications were erected on this outer ring in anticipation of Spanish attack, and it is these 17th-century walls which are most evident today. The fear of attack was not unfounded, and the walls withstood much battering from the besieging Spanish in 1663.

Surviving arches of Évora's 16th-century aqueduct

🏰 Aqeduto da Água de Prata

Évora's aqueduct, evocatively called "of the silver water", was built between 1531 and 1537 by the town's own eminent architect, Francisco de Arruda. The construction was regarded with wonder, and is even described in Os Lusíadas, the epic by Luís de Camões (see p190). It originally carried water as far as the Praça do Giraldo. Like the walls, it was damaged in the 17th century during the Restoration War with Spain, but a surviving stretch, some 9 km (5 miles) long, can still be seen approaching from the north-west: there is a good view of it from Rua Cândido dos Reis.

Megaliths Tour 17

Archaeologists date the pedras talbas, hewn stones, near Évora to between 4000 and 2000 BC. Their symbolism remains mysterious. Dolmens are thought to be where Neolithic communities buried their dead, together with their possessions – more than 130 have been found in the region. Tall phallic menhirs jutting from olive groves immediately suggest fertility rites, while cromlechs, carved stones standing in regulated groups, probably had religious significance. This tour includes examples of each; more can be found further east, near Monsaraz, and the museum in Montemor-o-Novo (see p303) has finds related to the area.

Cromlech of Almendres ③

This oval, made up of 95 elliptical stones, is believed to have been a temple dedicated to a solar cult. The route to the cromlech is signposted from the N114.

Menhir of Almendres ②

Standing 2.5 m (8 ft) tall, this solitary stone is located away from the cromlech, in an olive grove behind a row of tall Cooperativa Agrícola storage bins.

Grutas do Escoural ⑥

Discovered in 1963, these caves contain paintings about 15–20,000 years old.

Évora ①

In the undulating farmland around the historic city of Évora (see pp304–7) at least 150 megalith sites have been found.

Dolmen of Zambujeiro ④

This, the largest dolmen in Portugal, has an entrance passage 14 m (46 ft) long leading to a chamber built of enormous stones. It is off the beaten track; the route from Valverde leads across farmland.

Dolmen-chapel of São Brissos ⑤

Beyond the hamlet of Brissos, this tiny chapel has been created from an anta or dolmen. Another is to be found at Pavia (see p303).

Riding through the narrow streets of Monsaraz on the day of a bullfight

Monsaraz 18

Road map D5. 150.

Largo Dom Nuno Álvares Pereira 5 (266 557 136).

The tiny medieval walled town of Monsaraz perches above the River Guadiana on the frontier with Spain. Now a pretty backwater, it has known more turbulent times. Regained from the Moors in 1167 by the intrepid adventurer Geraldo Sem-Pavor (the Fearless), the town was handed over to the militant Knights Templar. Its frontier position continued to expose it to Spanish attack, but in 1381 assault came from an unexpected quarter. Troops of the Earl of Cambridge, Portugal's ally, were enraged by lack of pay and the annulment of the earl's betrothal to Fernando I's daughter, and unleashed their wrath on Monsaraz.

Principal access to the town is through the massive Porta da Vila. Rua Direita, the main street, leads up to the castle. Built by Afonso III and Dinis in the 13th century as part of the border defences, it was reinforced in the 17th century. The keep commands glorious views in all directions and at its foot is the garrison courtyard which today serves on occasion as a bullring.

The 16th-century Igreja Matriz in Rua Direita is worth visiting for its tall gilded altars and painted pillars. The 17th- and 18th-century houses along here display coats of arms. In the Gothic Paços da Audiência, now the Museu de Arte Sacra, is a collection of vestments, religious books and sculpture. Its earlier role as a law court is reflected in an unusual secular fresco: O Bom e o Mau Juiz (The Good and Bad Judge).

Environs: Surrounded by vineyards, Reguengos de Monsaraz, 16 km (10 miles) west, lies at the heart of one of the region's demarcated wine areas (see p29). Its 19th-century church, Santo António, was built in flamboyant Neo-Gothic style by the architect of Lisbon's bullring (see p118).

A number of striking megaliths are found near Monsaraz. The spectacular Menhir of Outeiro, 5.6 m (18 ft) tall, and the strangely inscribed Menhir of Bulhõa are signposted in Telheiro, just north of Monsaraz. About 4 km (2 miles) south is the Cromlech of Xerez, a menhir in a square of lesser stones. The tiny houses of Mourão, some 8 km (5 miles) further on, have huge chimneys. The town's 14th-century castle looks out over the River Guadiana and vast new Alqueva Dam.

Viana do Alentejo 19

Road map D6. 3,500.

Praça da República (266 930 012). 2nd & last Thu of month.

The natural springs of Viana do Alentejo have offered an abundant water source in the Alentejo's dry heartland since Roman times. Its castle, begun in 1313, was built to the design of King Dinis, the height of the outer wall exactly calculated to protect soldiers from attacking lancers. The unusual cylindrical towers show a Moorish influence and much of the later remodelling dates from João II, who held a cortes here in 1481–2.

Mirroring the castle walls are the crenellations and pinnacles of the adjacent 16th-century Igreja Matriz. The highly carved Manueline entrance to this splendid fortified church leads into a majestic triple-naved interior.

Ten minutes' walk east of the town stands the vast pilgrimage church of Nossa Senhora de Aires, rebuilt in the 1700s. Inside, the chancel's golden canopy contrasts with pilgrims' humble ex votos.

Environs: The Moorish-style castle at Alvito, 10 km (6 miles) south of Viana, was built in 1482 for the newly ennobled Barão de Alvito; it now operates as a pousada (see p398).

Fine wines from Vidigueira make it a leading centre of wine production in the Alentejo. Less well known is the fact that the explorer Vasco da Gama was Conde de Vidigueira. His remains, now in the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos (see pp104–5), lay from 1539 to 1898 in the Convento do Carmo, now private property. A mediocre statue of the town's most famous son stands in the flowery square named after him. The main features of this unpretentious little town are a Misericórdia church dated 1620, and a clocktower from Vasco da Gama's time.

Environs: One of Portugal's most notable Roman sites, São Cucufate, named after a later monastery, lies 4 km (2 miles) west. The vaulting belonged to a 4th-century villa, but excavations have revealed the baths of a 2nd-century house, whose wine presses, reservoir and temple indicate a sumptuous Roman residence.

Moura 21

Road map D6. 7,000.
 Largo de Santa Clara (285 251 375). 1st Sat of month.

Legend mingles with history in this quiet town among oak and olive trees. Salúquia, daughter of a Moorish governor is said to have thrown herself from the castle tower on learning that her lover had been killed. From this tragedy the town acquired its name – Moura, the Moorish girl. The town's old Moorish quarter is an area of narrow streets and low, whitewashed houses.

Even after the Reconquest in the 12th century, Moura's frontier position left it open to attack. A siege in 1657, during the War of Restoration (see pp50–51), levelled much of it. The 13th-century castle survived, only to be blown up by the Spanish in 1707 – just a skeletal keep and wall remain.

Nossa Senhora do Carmo, near the castle, was founded in 1251, the first Carmelite convent in the country. Its two-storey cloister shows Gothic and Renaissance influence and the chancel ceiling frescoes are early 18th century.

Serpa 22

Road map D6. 6,000.
 Largo Dom Jorge de Melo 2–3 (284 544 727). last Tue of month.

Serpa's stout walls are topped by an arched aqueduct. Beside the monumental Porta de Beja is a nora, or Arab water wheel. Won from the Moors in 1232, Serpa successfully resisted foreign control until a brief Spanish occupation in 1707.

Today, Serpa is a quiet agricultural town known for ewe's-milk cheese. Pleasing squares and streets of whitewashed houses are overlooked by a Moorish castle, rebuilt in the late 13th century. The 15th-century Convento de Santo António in Rua da Ladeira is noted for flamboyant 18th-century azulejos. Serpa also has an interesting Watch Museum.

Serpa's great Porta de Beja

Environs: Serpa is just 35 km (22 miles) from the Spanish border. The Moors, and later Spain, fought for control of the region, which was finally ceded to Portugal in 1295. Continued disputes have left the legacy of a chain of watch-towers and a peppering of fortresses across these hills. One of the most remote, the deserted fort at Noudar, was built in 1346, but even in this isolated corner, evidence of pre-Roman habitation has been uncovered.

On the border at Barrancos, an incomprehensible mix of Spanish and Portuguese is spoken. A speciality here is pata negra (black trotter), a ham from the local black pigs.

LOVE LETTERS OF A HEARTSICK NUN

Mariana's window

Lettres Portugaises, published in French in 1669, are celebrated for their lyric beauty. They are the poignant letters of a nun whose French lover deserted her: she was Mariana Alcoforado, born in Beja in 1640; he was the Comte de Saint-Léger, later Marquis de Chamilly, fighting in the Restoration wars with Spain. The true authorship of the five letters may be in doubt, but the story of the lovelorn nun endures – Matisse even painted her imaginary portrait. Sentimental visitors to the convent of Nossa Senhora da Conceição (now the Museu Regional) in Beja still sigh over “Mariana’s window”.

Beja 23

Road map D6. 35,000. 📍

📍 Rua Capitão João Francisco de Sousa 25 (284 311 913). 📅 Sat.

Capital of the Baixo (lower) Alentejo, Beja is a city of historic and social importance. It is also a major centre for the production of wheat, olives and cork, which are grown on the Bejan plains and provide the city’s lifeblood.

The town became a regional capital under Julius Caesar, who called it Pax Julia after the peace made here with the Lusitani (see p40). The Praça da República marks the site of the Roman forum. The Moors arrived in AD 711, giving the town its present name and a lively, poetic culture until they were forced out in 1162.

More recently, Beja has been the scene of struggles against oppressive regimes. In 1808, occupying French troops massacred the inhabitants and sacked the city, and in 1962, during the Salazar regime (see pp56–7), General Delgado led an unsuccessful uprising here.

Beja’s old town, an area of narrow, often cobbled, streets, stretches from the castle keep southeast to the 13th-century convent of São Francisco, now a superb pousada (see p398).

In the heart of the old town, the former Convento de Nossa Senhora da Conceição houses the regional museum. A little marble ossuary near the entrance contains the bones of the convent’s first abbess. Exhibits are mostly paintings and coats of arms, but the building itself is a remarkable blend of architectural styles, with a Gothic church portal, Manueline windows and a dazzling Baroque chapel. Its azulejos are especially beautiful, the most notable being the Hispanic-Arab tiles in the chapterhouse and the early 16th-century examples in the cloister. Upstairs is a section on local archaeology and the romantic “Mariana’s window”.

Environ: The remains of the luxurious Roman villa at Pisões, 10 km (6 miles) southwest of Beja, date from the 1st century AD. Excavation is far from complete, but extensive floor mosaics and fragments of decorated walls, baths, a bathing pool and hypocaust have been uncovered.

Castelo de Sines (269 634 472).

1st Thu of month.

The birthplace of Vasco da Gama (see p106) is now a major industrial port and tanker terminal ringed with refinery pipelines. Once past this heavy industrial zone visitors reach the old town with its popular sandy beach, but it is not always possible to escape the haze of pollution.

A prominent landmark above the beach is the modest medieval castle, restored in the 16th century by King Manuel. It was here that Vasco da Gama, son of the alcaide-mor, or mayor, is reputed to have been born in 1469, and a museum dedicated to the great navigator is to be housed in the castle keep. A modern statue of Vasco da Gama stands looking out over the bay.

The Museu Arqueológico in the town displays striking jewellery, perhaps Phoenician, found on a nearby estate.

Museu Arqueológico

Rua Francisco Luís Lopes 38. Tel 269 632 330. Tue–Sun. public hols.

Environs: North and south of Sines are attractive beaches. About 10 km (6 miles) south, Porto Covo is a picturesque village with an old fort above a cove beach. A little further to the south and a short boat ride offshore is the low hump of Ilha do Pessegueiro, Peach Tree Island. Treeless and wind-swept, with the ruins of a fort, the little island is rather less romantic than it sounds.

More appealing are two sea-blue lagoons, Lagoa de Santo André and Lagoa de Melides, set in a long stretch of sandy coast about 20 km (12 miles) north of Sines. The lagoons attract a commune of campers, but vast open spaces remain for seekers of privacy.

One of the loveliest places on Portugal's west coast is where the River Mira meets the sea. The popular resort of Vila Nova de Milfontes, on the sleepy estuary, is low-key and unassuming, but offers many places to stay. Its small castle overlooking the bay once defended the coast from pirates, and is now a hotel. In contrast to the quiet river are the pretty beaches with their crashing waves, a major summer attraction, especially with surfers.

Environs: To the south about 10 km (6 miles) is the unspoilt beach of Almogrove, backed by impressive cliffs.

A narrow strip of sheltered land divides the plains of the Alentejo from the bracing Atlantic. Here lies the solitary village of Zambujeira do Mar, the whiteness of its gorgeous beach enhanced by the dark backdrop of high basalt cliffs. Traditionally, families come here for Sunday beach outings, joined nowadays by campers and more adventurous tourists.

Mértola 28

Pretty, whitewashed Mértola is of great historical interest. The whole of this small town is a vila museu, a museum site, with discoveries from different eras exhibited in núcleos, or areas where a concentration of treasures from that period can be found. The tourist office has details of each núcleo.

Mértola's origins date back to the Phoenicians, who created a thriving inland port here on the Guadiana, later enjoyed by the Romans and the Moors. Roman artefacts can be seen at the Núcleo Romano, based at an excavation beneath the municipal council buildings.

The post-Roman period in Mértola is on display in the Núcleo Visigótico and in an early Christian basilica whose ruins adjoin the Roman road to Beja (see p313). The influence bequeathed by several centuries of Moorish domination is seen in Mértola's Núcleo Islâmico which houses one of the country's best collections of Portuguese Islamic art, and includes ceramics, coins and jewellery. The Igreja Matriz below the Moorish walls was formerly a mosque, unique in Portugal for being so little altered. Among surviving Arab features are the five-naive layout, four horseshoe arches and a mibrab or prayer niche.

Overlooking the town is the crumbling hilltop castle, with its keep of 1292, offering lovely views of the river valley.

THE VERSATILITY OF CORK

Groves of evergreen cork oak (Quercus suber) provide the Alentejo with welcome shade and a thriving industry. It was Dom Pérignon, the wine-making monk, who in the 17th century revived the use of cork as a tasteless, odourless seal for wine. Portugal, the world's largest cork producer, has almost 7,000 sq km (2,700 sq miles) under cultivation and turns out some 30 million corks a day. In rural areas, this versatile bark is fashioned into waterproof, heatproof food containers and these decorated boxes are a traditional craft of the Alentejo.

Harvesting cork is a skilled task. Mature trees, stripped in summer every ten years or so, reveal a raw red undercoat until their new bark grows.

The glowing red of a stripped tree in an Alentejan cork grove

Environs: The copper mines at Minas de São Domingos, 16 km (10 miles) to the east, were the main employer in the area from 1858 to 1965, when the vein was exhausted. An English company ran the mine under the harshest conditions, with miners' families living in one windowless room. The village's population has now fallen from 6,000 to 800, and the ghost-town atmosphere is relieved only by a reservoir and surrounding lush greenery.

Around Mértola, 600 sq km (230 sq miles) of the wild Guadiana valley is a newly designated Parque Natural, home to the black stork, azure-winged magpie and raptors such as the red kite.

ALGARVE

Enclosed by ranges of hills to the north, the Algarve has a climate, culture and scenery very different from the rest of Portugal. Its stunning coastline and year-round mild weather, maintained by warm sea and air currents from nearby North Africa, make it one of the most popular holiday destinations in southern Europe.

The Algarve's fertile soil and strategic headlands and rivers have attracted visitors since the time of the Phoenicians. Five centuries of Arab rule, from AD 711, left a legacy that is still visible in the region's architecture, lattice chimneys, azulejos, orange groves and almond trees. Place names beginning with Al are also of Moorish origin; Al-Gharb ("the West") denoted the western edge of the Islamic empire.

When the Algarve was reclaimed by the Christians in 1249, the Portuguese rulers designated themselves kings "of Portugal and of the Algarves", emphasizing the region's separateness from the rest of the country. It was the Algarve, however, that shot Portugal to prominence in the 15th century, when Henry the Navigator (see p49) is said to have set up a school of navigation at Sagres, and launched the age of exploration from these southern shores.

The earthquake of 1755 (see pp62-3) had its epicentre just south of Lagos, then the region's capital. Virtually all the towns and villages were destroyed or badly damaged, which explains why very few buildings in the region predate this period.

Since the 1960s, when Faro airport was opened, international tourism has replaced agriculture and fishing as the region's main industry. A few stretches of the southwestern seashore are now cluttered with high-rise complexes catering for the yearly influx of tourists. However, the whole western seaboard exposed to the Atlantic and the lagoons east of Faro have been less affected by development. Trips inland, to the pretty whitewashed village of Alte or the border town of Alcoutim in the east, provide a welcome reminder that, in places, the Algarve's rural way of life continues virtually uninterrupted.

GETTING AROUND

The A22 (E1) runs from Albufeira to Spain and has relieved the N125, which can become congested in summer. Roads branch off to beaches, coastal towns and inland villages.

A frequent but slow rail service connects the main towns, but stations are sometimes far from the centre. Reliable buses link coastal resorts and inland towns, though progress can be slow.

📍 Largo do Mercado (282 998 229).

📅 3rd Mon of month.

The small village of Aljezur is overlooked by a 10th-century Moorish castle, reached via the old quarter. Although now in ruins, a cistern and towers remain, and there are splendid views towards the Serra de Monchique.

Aljezur's Igreja Matriz, much rebuilt after the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), has a fine Neo-Classical altarpiece. Dating from about 1809, it was probably executed in the workshop of José da Costa of Faro.

Environs: From Aljezur, the wild and deserted beaches of the Algarve's west coast are easily explored, although a car is essential. Open to the strong currents of the Atlantic, Praia de Arrifana 10 km (6 miles) southwest, and Praia de Monte Clérigo, 8 km (5 miles) northwest, are sandy, sweeping beaches backed by cliffs. On the Alentejo border, Praia de Odeixe is a sheltered cove that is popular with surfers.

Serra de Monchique ②

Road map 7C. 🏰 Monchique.

📍 Monchique (282 911 189).

Providing shelter from the north, this volcanic mountain range helps to ensure the mild southern climate of the Algarve. The highest point is Fóia at 902 m (2,959 ft). This, however, is less pleasantly wooded than Picota, which, at 773 m (2,536 ft), is the second highest peak. An impressive 4-km (2-mile) walk to this peak from Monchique passes among chestnut trees and fields of wild flowers. A spectacular panorama sweeps down to the Ponta de Sagres (see p322) and there are stunning views of the rest of the range. Whether you explore the Serra on foot or by car, there is a wonderful variety of vegetation to enjoy with rhododendron, mimosa, chestnut, pine, cork oak and patches of terraced fertile land in the valleys.

In recent years, the increased planting of fast-growing eucalyptus trees has given cause for concern. This highly flammable species is one of the reasons for the serious fires that break out all too often in the Serra.

The 68-km (42-mile) run along the N267 from Nave, just below Monchique, to Aljezur in the west, leads through a beautiful part of the Serra. The landscape is a mixture of woods and moorland, kept fertile by an abundant water supply. Cork oak grows here, home to the nuthatch and lesser-spotted woodpecker.

Manueline portal of the Igreja Matriz in Monchique

The small market town of Monchique is primarily famous for its altitude, 458 m (1,500 ft), and consequently spectacular views. It is also known for its wooden handicrafts, particularly the folding chairs which are believed to date back to Roman times.

The 16th-century Igreja Matriz, on the cobbled Rua da Igreja behind the main square, has an impressive Manueline doorway whose knotted columns end in unusual pinnacles. Above the town is the ruined monastery of Nossa Senhora do Desterro. This Franciscan house, founded in 1632 by Dom Pero da Silva, is now only a shell but it is worth visiting for the stunning views across to the peak of Picota.

Environs: A delightful, tiny spa, 6 km (4 miles) south, Caldas de Monchique is set in the foothills of the Serra in peaceful wooded surroundings.

The hot, curative waters have attracted the ailing since Roman times, and even though João II died soon after taking them in 1495, their reputation has remained undiminished. In the summer, people come to be treated for skin, digestive and rheumatic complaints. As well as the wholesome spring water, the bars here offer the local firewater, medronheira.

The shady main square has a large, attractive handicraft centre and there are some pretty walks in the woods.

 Rua Comandante Matoso, Sagres (282 624 873).  1st Thu of month.

The grand name of “The Bishop’s Town” today refers to a peaceful village, rather remote in feel, which makes the crowds of central Algarve seem very far away. It acquired its name in the 17th century when it was donated to the see of Faro. The town’s parish church, Nossa Senhora da Conceição, has a delightful interior decorated with 18th-century azulejos from the floor up to the wooden, painted ceiling, and a Baroque altarpiece dating from 1715.

Environs: The beaches in the area are remote and unspoiled. Praia do Castelejo, 5 km (3 miles) to the west, is accessible by a dirt road that winds up from the village over moorland. The beach, set at the foot of steep cliffs, is large, sandy and surf-fringed. The intrepid can turn off this track for the 6 km (4 miles) journey to Torre de Aspa, an obelisk at 156 m (512 ft) marking the spot for spectacular views over the ocean. The road is quite rough, so it is advisable to walk the last 2 km (1 mile).

Cabo de São Vicente 5

Road map 7C.  to Sagres then taxi.  Sagres (282 624 873).

In the Middle Ages, this windblown cape at the extreme southwest of Europe was believed to be the end of the world. The Romans called it the Promontorium Sacrum (Sacred Promontory), and today, with its 60-m (200-ft) cliffs fronting the Atlantic, it still presents a most awe-inspiring aspect. The ocean waves have created long, sandy beaches and carved deep caves into the cliffs.

Since the 15th century, Cabo de São Vicente has been an important reference point for shipping, and its present lighthouse has a 95-km (60-mile) range, said to be the most powerful in Europe. For even longer it has had religious associations, and its name arises from the legend that the body of St Vincent was washed ashore here in the 4th century. Prince Henry the Navigator (see p49) was also reputed to have lived here, but, if so, all traces of his Vila do Infante have disappeared. A number of important naval battles have taken place off the Cape, including the defeat of a Spanish fleet in 1797 by the British admirals Jervis and Nelson.

Since 1988 the coast from Sines in the north to Burgau in the east has been made a nature reserve, providing important nesting grounds for Bonelli’s eagle, kestrel, white stork, heron and numerous other bird species. There is also a colony of sea otters.

FLOWERS OF THE WESTERN ALGARVE

The remote headlands of Cabo de São Vicente and Sagres are renowned in botanical circles for their flowers, which put on a strikingly colourful and aromatic display from February to May. The climate, underlying rock and comparative isolation of these headlands have given an intriguing, stunted appearance to the local vegetation. There is a great array of different species, including cistuses, squills, an endemic sea pink, junipers, lavenders, narcissi, milk-vetches and many other magnificent plants.

Sagres 6

Road map 7C. 3,500.
 Rua Comandante Matoso (282 624 873). 1st Fri of month.

The small town of Sagres has little to offer except a picturesque harbour. Essentially it is a good base from which to explore the superb beaches (see p288) and isolated peninsula west of the town. Henry the Navigator (see p49) built a fortress on this windswept promontory and, according to tradition, a school of navigation and a shipyard. From here he realized his dream “to see what lay beyond the Canaries and Cape Bojador... and attempt the discovery of things hidden from men”. From 1419–60, he poured his energy and the revenues of the Order of Christ (see p185), of which he was master, into building caravels and sending his fear-stricken sailors into unknown waters.

In 1434 Gil Eanes of Lagos was the first sailor to round the dreaded Cape Bojador, in the region of Western Sahara. With this feat, the west coast of Africa was opened up for exploration (see pp48–9) and Portugal poised for expansion.

Little remains of Prince Henry’s original fortress: the walls that can be seen today are part of a 17th-century fort. Still visible is the giant pebble wind compass, the Rosa dos Ventos, 43 m (141 ft) in diameter, said to have been used by Henry. The simple chapel of Nossa Senhora da Graça was also built by him. The whole site, looking across to Cabo de São Vicente and out towards the open Atlantic, is exhilarating and atmospheric.

Environs: The town is also within easy reach of many superb beaches. Some, such as Telheiro, 9 km (5 miles) west of Sagres, and Ponta Ruiva 2 km (1 mile) further up the west coast, are only accessible by car. Nearer to Sagres, Beliche is surprisingly sheltered, Tonel, on the tip of the promontory, has wonderful surf and Martinhal, 1 km (half a mile) east, has a water-sports school offering water-skiing, surfing and wind surfing.

Set on one of the largest bays in the Algarve, Lagos is an attractive, bustling town. In the 8th century it was conquered by the Arabs, who left behind fortifications that were extended in the 16th century. A well-preserved section and archway can be seen near Rua do Castelo dos Governadores, where there is a monument to the navigator Gil Eanes.

The discoveries of the 15th century (see pp48–9), pioneered by Henry the Navigator, whose statue gazes scowlingly out to sea, turned Lagos into an important naval centre. At the same time a most deplorable period of history began, with the first slaves brought back from the Sahara in 1441 by Henry’s explorer Nuno Tristão. The site of the first slave market in Europe is marked by a plaque under the arcades on Rua da Senhora da Graça.

The city was the capital of the Algarve from 1576–1756. Extensive damage was caused by the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), so that today the centre consists primarily of pretty 18th- and 19th-century buildings. The citizens of Lagos continue to make their living from fishing, which helps the town to retain a character independent of the tourist trade.

The smart new marina on the east side of town provides the first safe anchorage on the south coast for boats coming in from the Atlantic.

A statue of the saint stands above the altar, surrounded by gilded pillars and arches adorned with angels and vines. St Antony was patron and honorary colonel-in-chief of the local regiment and, according to tradition, this statue accompanied it on various campaigns during the Peninsular War (1807–11) (see p54).

Near the altar is the grave of Hugh Beatty, an Irish colonel who commanded the Lagos regiment during the 17th-century wars with Spain. He died here in 1709 and his motto “Non vi sed arte” (Not with force but with skill) adorns the tomb.

The prettiest beach is Praia de Dona Ana, 25 minutes' walk from the centre of town, but Praia do Camilo, further round to the tip of the promontory, may be less crowded. The long Meia Praia stretches for 4 km (2 miles) east of Lagos; a regular bus service leaves from the centre of town.

This pretty fishing town of white houses is popular with holiday-makers, but in low season retains its charm. It was a Roman port, and later the Moorish town of Al-Bur. By the 16th century it was again a prosperous town, but it suffered much damage in the earthquake of 1755. The town was rebuilt with stone from the Moorish castle, so little of that fortress remains.

At the top of the town the 16th-century church, Divino Salvador, has a Manueline portal, carved with foliage, lions and dragons. The outermost arch is an octopus tentacle.

One of the largest towns in the Algarve, Portimão is not renowned for its beauty but has plenty of character and a long history as a port. The Romans settled here, attracted by the natural harbour on the wide estuary of the Rio Arade.

Portimão's sprawling outskirts are graced with a new marina and shopping centre. Its 18th-century town centre has excellent shopping as well as a large, bustling market.

The centre lies around the pedestrianized Rua Vasco da Gama, with numerous shops specializing in leather goods. Along Rua Diogo Tomé, the church of Nossa Senhora da Conceição occupies a low hill. Rebuilt after the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3), its 14th-century origins are still visible in the portico with its carved capitals. Inside, there are 17th- and 18th-century azulejo panels. In Largo 1º de Dezembro there are benches adorned with brightly coloured 19th-century tiles. The waterfront is always lively and restaurants serve fresh sardines and sea bass.

Environs: Just 3 km (2 miles) south lies Portimão's touristic neighbour, Praia da Rocha, a series of sandy coves amongst protruding red and ochre rocks. At its east end is the Fortaleza de Santa Catarina, a castle built in the 16th century to protect Portimão and Silves. From here there is a superb view of the lovely, sweeping beach backed by 70-m (230-ft) cliffs, and overlooked by a swathe of high-rise hotels. These are multiplying, and visitors will find themselves fighting for space in high season.

Silves 10

Road map 7C. 10,000. Rua 25 de Abril 26–28 (282 442 255). 3rd Mon of month.

Silves's commanding position made it the ideal fortified settlement. The Romans built a castle here, but it was under the Arabs that the city flourished, becoming the Moorish capital, Xelb. In the mid-12th century the Arab geographer Idrisi praised its beauty and its "delicious, magnificent" figs.

Silves was renowned as a centre of culture in Moorish Al-Gharb until the Knights of Santiago (see pp42–3) took the city in 1242.

Today, the red walls of the castle stand out against the skyline. Next to the castle, the Fábrica di Inglês houses a cork museum, the Museu da Cortica, which tells the story of cork production in Portugal.

The museum is built around its star exhibit, a large Arab well-cistern of about the 12th century that was uncovered here in 1980. The staircase built into the structure descends 15 m (49 ft) to the bottom of the well.

Environ: One kilometre (half a mile) east of Silves is the Cruz de Portugal, an ornate 16th-century granite cross. This may have been given to the city by Manuel I, when João II's body was transferred from Silves Cathedral to Batalha (see pp184–5). The faces are intricately carved with the Crucifixion and the Descent from the Cross.

The coast between Faro and Lagos has effectively become a strip of villa complexes and high-rise hotels. Vilamoura is a prime example of this kind of development and is set to become Europe's largest leisure complex. Its 1,600 ha (4,000 acres) encompass four golf courses, tennis courts, a riding school, fishing and shooting facilities, and indoor and outdoor sports complexes. There is even a small landing strip. Its hotels and apartment blocks are still on the rise, and the already well-established complex is still under construction.

The focal point is the large marina, which bristles with powerboats and is fronted by restaurants, cafés and shops. It makes a diverting excursion, attracting many Portuguese visitors, including Lisbon's jet set. Due east is the crowded Praia da Marina. 18th-century tile panels and gilded altar in São Lourenço, Almancil

Almancil 14

Road map D7. 🏠 2,000. 🚗

📍 Loulé. 🕒 1st & 4th Sun of month, antiques 2nd Sun.

Outside the undistinguished town of Almancil lies one of the Algarve's gems, the 18th-century Igreja Matriz de São Lourenço. Its interior is an outstanding masterpiece of decoration in azulejo panels. The church was commissioned by local inhabitants in gratitude to St Laurence, who answered their prayers for water.

The copious blue and white tiles were probably designed by master craftsmen in Lisbon and shipped down. They cover the cupola, the walls of the chancel, nave, and nave vault, to stunning effect. The wall panels depict episodes from the life of St Laurence; on one side of the altar the saint is shown healing two blind men, and on the other, giving money to the poor. The nave arches show the saint conversing with Pope Sixtus II; arguing for his Christian belief with the Roman Emperor Valerian; and refusing to give up his faith. The story culminates in his martyrdom. In the last panel on the right, in which the saint is placed on a gridiron to be burned, an angel comforts him. The nave vault depicts the Coronation of St Laurence, and the cupola has decorative, trompe-l'oeil effects of exceptional quality. The last tiles were put in place in 1730.

The altarpiece, dated around 1735, was the work of Manuel Martins and was gilded by leading local painters. Astonishingly, the 1755 earthquake (see pp62–3) only dislodged five tiles from the vault.

Today, Almancil houses a large community of British expats, and is noted for its property agents and holiday and construction-related shops and services. The town is also within striking distance of some of the best restaurants in the Algarve (see pp426).

Loulé 15

📍 Av. 25 de Abril (289 463 900).

Loulé is an attractive market town and thriving craft centre. Its Moorish origins are still visible in the belltower of the church of São Clemente. The castle, on the north side of town, is also Moorish in origin, rebuilt in the 13th century. Remnants of the walls behind the castle afford an overview of the town and the many pretty filigree chimneys, typical of the Algarve.

The heart of the town lies immediately south of Praça da República and encompasses the busy, pink-domed market. On Saturdays the area is particularly lively when gypsies run a simultaneous outdoor market. From Rua 9 de Abril to the Igreja Matriz you can watch handicraft workers carving wood, weaving hats, making lace, decorating horse tackle and painting pottery and tiles.

The 13th-century São Clemente, on Largo da Silva, was badly damaged in three earthquakes, the last in 1969, but its triple nave, defined by Gothic arches, has been conserved. There are two beautiful side chapels dating from the early 16th century. The Capela de Nossa Senhora da Consolação is decorated from floor to vault with superb blue and white azulejo panels, while the Capela de São Brás, has a Manueline arch and a blue and gold Baroque altarpiece.

Other churches of note are the Igreja da Misericórdia, on Avenida Marçal Pacheco, which has a Manueline doorway, and the chapel of Nossa Senhora da Conceição, close to Praça da República. Here, the Baroque altarpiece (1745) by Miguel Nobre of Faro is complemented by scenes in blue and white azulejos.

Environs: The 16th-century, hilltop chapel of Nossa Senhora da Piedade, adorned with azulejo panels, lies 2 km (1 mile) west of Loulé. Behind it stands a modern white church of the same name built to replace the old chapel but which never became a popular place of worship. The spot also affords spectacular views.

The quiet village of Estoi has two notable sights, separated by a short distance and about 1,800 years. Just off the main square is the Palácio de Estoi, an unashamedly pretty Rococo pastiche, unique to the region. The palace was the brainchild of a local nobleman, who died soon after work was begun in the mid-1840s. Another wealthy local later acquired the place, and completed it in 1909. For the vast amount of money and energy he expended on his new home, he was made Viscount of Estoi. The work was supervised by the architect Domingos da Silva Meira, whose interest in sculpture is evident everywhere.

The palace is now undergoing restoration of its interior – a feast of pastel and stucco – and is to become a pousada.

 A ten-minute walk downhill from the other end of the main square leads to Estoi's second sight: the Roman complex of Milreu, which dates from the 1st or 2nd century AD. The buildings probably began as a large farmhouse that was converted in the 3rd century into a luxurious villa, built around a central courtyard. Ebullient fish mosaics still adorn the baths, alongside the living quarters, but most portable archaeological finds are now housed in Faro's Museu Municipal (see p329). The importance of the villa, which may have belonged to a wealthy patrician, is indicated by the remains of a temple overlooking the site. This was converted into a Christian basilica in the 5th century.

Faro 17

Capital of the Algarve since 1756, Faro has been reborn several times over the centuries – following invasion, fire and earthquake. A prehistoric fishing village, it became an important port and administrative centre under the Romans, who named it Ossonoba. Captured from the Moors in 1249 by Afonso III, Faro prospered until 1596, when it was sacked and burned by the Earl of Essex, favourite of Elizabeth I of England. A new city rose from the ashes, only to be badly damaged in the earthquake of 1755 (see pp62–3). Although vestiges of the ancient city walls are still standing, the finest buildings date mainly from the late 18th and 19th centuries.

Exploring the Old City

The centre of Faro is attractive and easily explored on foot. It fans out from the small harbour to encompass the compact Old City to the southeast. Partly encircled by ancient walls, this is reached via the

Arco da Vila. The arch was built on the site of a medieval castle gate in the 19th century for the bishop, Dom Francisco Gomes do Avelar, who had taken it upon himself to re-design the city in decline. The portico is originally Moorish, and a statue of St Thomas Aquinas, patron saint of Faro, surveys the scene. At the heart of the Old City, the Largo da Sé is a peaceful square, lined with orange trees and flanked by the elegant 18th-century seminary and Paço Episcopal (bishops' palace), still in use and closed to the public. Just outside the walls, through another archway of Moorish origin, the Arco do Repouso, is the 18th-century church of São Francisco, impressively decorated with tiled scenes of the life of St Francis. Further north is the 17th-century Nossa Senhora do Pé da Cruz with

📍 Sé

Largo da Sé. ☐ daily. 🕒 Sat pm, public hols.

The first Christian church here, built on the site of a mosque, was all but destroyed in the attack by the English in 1596. The base of the belftower, its medieval doorway and two chapels survived, and long-term reconstruction resulted in a mixture of Renaissance and Baroque styles.

By the 1640s a grander building had emerged which included a chancel decorated with azulejos and the Capela de Nossa Senhora dos Prazeres, decorated with ornate gilded woodcarving. One of the cathedral's most dashing and eccentric features is the large 18th-century organ decorated with Chinese motifs. Its range includes an echoing horn and a nightingale's song, and it has often been used by leading European organists.

One example is Vasco da Gama's São Gabriel, the flagship on his voyage to India in 1498. There are also displays of traditional fishing methods from the Algarve.

It served from 1838 until 1932, during which time 60 families prospered in the area then gradually moved away so that there is no Jewish community in Faro today.

Olhão 18

Road map D7. 🗺 15,000. 📷

📍 Largo Sebastião Martins Mestre 6A (289 713 936). 🗺 daily (fish); Sat (general).

Olhão has been involved in fishing since the Middle Ages, and today is one of the largest fishing ports and tuna and sardine canning centres in the Algarve. In 1808 the village was elevated to the status of town, after 17 of its fishermen crossed the Atlantic Ocean without charts, expressly to bring the exiled King João VI, in Rio de Janeiro, the news that Napoleon's troops had been forced out of the country.

Olhão's square, whitewashed houses with their flat roof terraces and box-like chimneys are reminiscent of Moorish architecture. The best view is from the top of the belltower of the parish church, Nossa Senhora do Rosário, on Praça da Restauração, built between 1681 and 1698 with donations from the local fishermen. The custodian lets visitors through the locked door leading from the nave. In 1758 the parish priest remarked on the fishermen's great devotion to "Our Lady of the Rosary in their grief and danger at sea, especially in summertime when North African pirates often sail off this coast." At the rear of the church is the external chapel of Nossa Senhora dos Aflitos, where women pray for their men's safety in stormy weather. The narrow, pedestrianized streets of the old town wind down from here to the waterfront, the Stretching from Praia de Faro to Cacela Velha (see p333), the Ria Formosa Nature Reserve follows 60 km (37 miles) of coastline. It was created in 1987 to protect the valuable ecosystem of this area, which was under serious threat from uncontrolled building, sand extraction and pollution, all by-products of the massive rise in tourism. The lagoon area of marshes, salt pans, islets and channels is sheltered from the open sea by a chain of barrier islands – actually sand dunes.

Inlets between the islands allow the tide to ebb and flow into the lagoon.

The lagoon waters are rich in shellfish, such as oysters, cockles and clams: bred here, they make up 80 per cent of the nation's mollusc exports. The fish life and warm climate attract numerous wildfowl and waders, and snakes, toads and chameleons also live here. Apart from fish and shellfish farming and salt panning, all other human activities which might encroach on the park's ecosystem are strictly controlled or forbidden.

Centro de Educação Ambiental de Marim, about 3 km (2 miles) east of Olhão, is an environmental education centre. Its 60 ha (148 acres) of dune and pinewoods are home to various sights, including a restored farmhouse, a tidal mill, a centre for injured birds, as well as exhibitions and aquariums. The web-footed Portuguese water dog, once much used by fishermen, has been bred back from near-extinction here. At the eastern end of the park are Roman tanks where fish was salted before being exported to the empire.

WATER BIRDS OF THE RIA FORMOSA

The Ria Formosa is an important area for breeding wetland birds such as cattle egrets, red-crested pochard and purple herons. On drier areas of land, both pratincoles and Kentish plovers can be found. Some northern European species, such as the wigeon and dunlin, winter here, and it is a stopover for migrant birds en route to Africa. Among the resident species is the rare purple gallinule, symbol of the park.

Cattle egrets feed among cattle and are often seen perched on their backs pecking off insects and flies.

The purple gallinule is a dark-coloured relative of the moorhen. It can run fairly fast on its extremely long legs but is a poor flier.

The red-crested pochard is a brightly coloured duck originally from central Europe.

Tavira 20

Road map D7. 10,000.
 Rua da Galeria 9 (281 322 511).
 3rd Sat of month.

The pretty town of Tavira, full of historic churches and fine mansions with filigree balconies, lies along both sides of the Gilão river, linked by a bridge of Roman origin. This was part of the coastal Roman road between Castro Marim and Faro (see pp328–31).

Tavira's early ascendancy began with the Moors, who saw it as one of their most important settlements in the Algarve, along with Silves and Faro. It was conquered in 1242 by Dom Paio Peres Correia, who was outraged at the murder of seven of his knights by the Moors during a truce.

Tavira flourished until the 16th century, after which a slow decline set in, aggravated by a severe plague (1645–6) and the silting up of the harbour. The town now accommodates tourists, without compromising either its looks or atmosphere.

The best view of the town is from the walls of the Moorish castle in the old Arab quarter on top of the hill. From here the distinctive four-sided roofs of the houses that line Rua da Liberdade are clearly visible. These pyramid-like roofs possibly evolved to allow the sudden torrential rain of the Algarve to run off easily. From the castle walls, the nearby clock tower of the church of Santa Maria do Castelo also acts as a landmark. The church itself occupies the site of what was once the biggest mosque in the Algarve. Its façade retains a Gothic doorway and windows, and its interior, restored in the 19th century, houses the tombs of Dom Paio Peres Correia and his seven knights. Santa Maria do Castelo and Igreja da Misericórdia are the only two of Tavira's 21 churches to be open outside service hours. Below the castle, is the 1569 convent of Nossa Senhora da Graça.

Renaissance architecture was pioneered in the town by André Pilarte, and can be seen on the way up to the castle, in the Igreja da Misericórdia (1541–51), with its lovely doorway topped by saints Peter and Paul, and in the nearby Palácio da Galeria (open for temporary exhibitions). Rua da Liberdade and Rua José Pires Padinha have a sprinkling of 16th-century houses. The river embankments are graced by a few 18th-century mansions.

Enviros: The sandy, offshore Ilha de Tavira, provides excellent swimming. A popular resort in summer, it is reached by ferry from Quatro Águas.

This hamlet perches on a cliff overlooking the sea, reached via a landscape of fields and olive trees. It has remained untouched by mass tourism, and retains a peaceful atmosphere. Charming blue and white fishermen's houses cluster around the remains of a 16th-century church.

The beach is sheltered by a long spit of sand, and fishing boats are dotted about. The Phoenicians and Moors used this protected site until it was taken over by the Knights of Santiago in 1240 (see p43).

Vila Real de Santo António 22

Road map D7. 10,000. Av. Marginal, Monte Gordo (281 544 495). 3rd Sun of month.

Built to a plan by the Marquês de Pombal in 1774, Vila Real de Santo António is a little like a miniature version of Lisbon's Baixa (pp 78–81), rebuilt after the 1755 earthquake also under the auspices of Pombal. The symmetrical grid of fairly wide streets, the equal-sized blocks with similar façades, the well-ordered naming system for the streets, all speak of Pombal's practical and political ideals.

Today, the town is one of the most important fishing ports on the Algarve coast, as well as a border town with its markets geared towards visiting Spaniards. Its centre now seems too grand for its size, all of which makes it an interesting place to drop in on.

Castro Marim 23

Road map D7. 4,000. Rua José Alves Moreira 2–4 (281 531 232).

Castro Marim has attracted "visitors" since ancient times. The Phoenicians, Greeks and Romans all made use of its commanding location above the River Guadiana. It was the gateway to the Moorish Al-Gharb and for centuries it was a sanctuary for fugitives from the Inquisition (see p51). The castle above the town is of Moorish origin, the outlying walls a 13th-century addition.

Moorish castle and the abandoned Misericórdia church, Castro Marim

Environs: The town was also a centre for salt production and the surrounding salinas are now home to the wildlife reserve, Reserva Natural do Sapal, established in 1975. Extending for 2,090 ha (5,160 acres) south and east of town, this is an area of saltpans and marshes with a large variety of bird species including flamingos, avocets, and black-winged stilts, symbol of the reserve. Group tours may be booked on 281-510 680.

Alcoutim 24

The tiny, gem-like, unspoilt village of Alcoutim lies 15 km (9 miles) from the border with the Alentejo, and on the natural border with Spain, the River Guadiana. The drive there along the N122-2, a rough, winding road which sometimes runs alongside the Guadiana, provides stunning views of the countryside and across the river to Spain.

The size of Alcoutim belies its history. As a strategic location and river port, it was seized on by the Phoenicians, Greeks, Romans and, of course, the Moors who stayed until the reconquest in 1240. Here, in 1371, on flower-decked boats midway between Alcoutim and its Spanish counterpart, Sanlúcar de Guadiana, King Fernando I of Portugal signed the peace of Alcoutim with Enrique II of Castile. By the late 17th century, when its political importance had waned, the town had acquired a new reputation – for smuggling tobacco and snuff from Spain.

The walls of the 14th-century castle give an excellent view over the small village and its idyllic setting. Near the main square, by the river, is the refreshingly simple 16th-century church of San Salvador.

Environs: Visitors can take a scenic trip 15 km (9 miles) downriver to Foz de Odeite by fishing boat from the jetty. The boat passes orchards and orange groves and, at Álamo, there is a Roman dam.

PORTUGAL'S ISLANDS

INTRODUCING PORTUGAL'S ISLANDS 336-341

MADEIRA 342-359

THE AZORES 360-373

Portugal's Islands at a Glance

Once remote outposts of a maritime empire, today Madeira and the Azores are easily accessible by air from mainland Portugal. The fertile islands of Madeira and Porto Santo, 600 km (375 miles) off the African coast, are popular holiday destinations, with subtropical flora and high mountains. The Azorean archipelago lies further west, close to the Mid-Atlantic Ridge. The climate here is more temperate and the active volcanoes have created a fascinating scenery of moon-like landscapes and collapsed craters.

Terceira is a relatively flat island famous for its bull-running festivals, the "tourada à corda". On the southern coast, the twin-towered church of São Mateus, built at the turn of the century, overlooks the barbour of São Mateus.

Pico is the summit of a steep volcano protruding from the sea. On the lower slopes of the mountain that fall towards the sea, the fields are crisscrossed with a patchwork of dry-stone walls made from black volcanic basalt.

MADEIRA

(See pp342-59)

Funchal is the capital of Madeira, famous for its flowers. Exotic blooms are sold along the main street, Avenida Arriaga, which is lined with tall jacaranda trees.

Pico Ruivo, at 1,861 m (6,105 ft), is the highest point on the island of Madeira. The slopes below are dotted with small farms.

The Landscape and Flowers of Madeira

Pride of Madeira

Madeira has a mild, moist climate which promotes a rich cover of vegetation. At first glance, the flowers and foliage appear to harmonize with the environment. The well-travelled botanist, however, will soon become aware of the strange assortment of flowers from around the world. For example, over the past few centuries, many flowers from South Africa's Cape region and exotic blooms from South America have been introduced, which now thrive alongside indigenous plants.

AROUND THE COAST

In many coastal areas the cliffs are spectacular, such as this stretch at Ponta de São Lourenço (see p352). A rich and varied flora, both native and introduced, can be found along Madeira's coast despite the dry and stony habitat.

Hottentot fig is a coastal, ground-cover plant originating from South Africa.

Lampranthus spectabilis is a South African plant which flowers on the coast between May and July.

Canary Island date palms are a familiar sight, especially along the sunny south coast.

Parrot's Beak is a large, striking flower that appears in March and April.

Hibiscus syriacus, from the Far East, flowers between June and October.

MADEIRA'S GARDENS

The sub-tropical climate and mixture of indigenous and imported plants combine to produce gardens that are the envy of horticulturalists all over the world. Gardens such as the Botanical Gardens in Funchal (see p346) are awash with colour all year. Here are some of the most striking plants that can be found in Madeira's gardens.

Magnolia in bloom

AGRICULTURAL AND WAYSIDE GROUND

An irrigation system using man-made channels called levadas, such as this one near Curral das Freiras (see p356), allows the islanders to cultivate many otherwise unpromising areas. The margins of agricultural land are often rich with flowers.

Mimosa trees grow especially well in wooded parts of Madeira, where they bloom in winter.

Coral trees

originate from southern Brazil, and on Madeira flower between January and March.

Lady's slipper orchids come in a variety of colours and are great favourites among Madeira's more serious gardeners.

Cymbidium orchids from Southeast Asia thrive when they are grown in sheltered sites and in partial shade.

Camellia thrives in partial shade and grows to the size of a small tree.

Protea cynaroides

comes from South Africa where it is known as the Cape artichoke or king protea.

HIGH GROUND

The views from the summit of Pico Ruivo, the island's highest point (see p356), are spectacular. In upland areas, the vegetation harbours a higher proportion of native species than in the lowlands.

TERRACED PLANTATIONS

Plantations, such as this one growing bananas near Calheta (see p358), are made by digging terraces into the hillside. A wide range of crops are grown, for home consumption and export.

Isoplexis sceptrum, known as the yellow foxglove, is a flowering shrub native to Madeira.

Broom flowers are colourful and popular with pollinating insects.

Sweet chestnuts grow well in Madeira and produce an abundant autumn harvest.

Pawpaws produce fruit all year round. The plant originates from South America.

Prickly juniper is a bardy, spiny evergreen shrub covered in tough red berries.

Sword aloe has spiky leaves which provide a good physical barrier around plantations.

The Azores: Volcanic Islands Rising from the Ocean Bed

Situated on either side of the Mid-Atlantic Ridge, the Azores are a result of 20 million years of volcanic activity. As the plates of the earth's crust pull apart, volcanic eruptions form a giant ridge of mountains beneath the Atlantic. In places, the ridge is buckled and cut by perpendicular fractures, known as transform faults. Molten rock (magma) has been forced through these faults to form the Azores. These islands, among the youngest on earth, emerged above the waves less than five million years ago. Their striking landscape tells of their volcanic past and is still shaped by volcanic activity today.

The Mid-Atlantic Ridge is a line of submarine volcanoes that runs the whole length of the Atlantic Ocean.

The Mid-Atlantic Ridge marks the join where the African, Eurasian and American plates of the earth's crust are being pulled apart.

A mantle plume is a mass of partially molten mantle that has welled upwards, pooling beneath the rocky lithosphere. The magma it produces seeks fissures through which to erupt.

São Miguel has several spectacular water-filled calderas and hot springs.

VOLCANIC RESOURCES OF THE AZORES

The dramatic formation of the Azores has left the islands with abundant natural resources. Hot springs, strong building materials and, eventually, fertile soil, are all the result of the ongoing volcanic activity. A wet, temperate climate gradually breaks down the volcanic rocks into fertile soils. Older soils support luxuriant vegetation and are excellent for arable farming, but younger soils, like those found on Pico, support little agriculture yet.

These stone cottages on Pico, like many on the islands, make use of the plentiful basalt rock as a durable building material.

Furnas, on São Miguel, is an area of sulphur and hot mud springs used for bathing and for medicinal purposes.

Rising high above the clouds, the still-active volcanic peak of Pico Alto dominates the island of Pico, which is itself the top of a giant underwater volcano. At 2,350 m (7,700 ft) above sea level, Pico Alto is the highest peak in the whole of Portugal.

THE GEOLOGY OF THE AZORES

The Azores lie along transform fault lines, cracks in the earth's crust which cross the Mid-Atlantic Ridge. These faults are weak points through which magma can rise. Successive volcanic eruptions have formed hundreds of undersea mountains on either side of the ridge.

The highest peaks of these mountains are the nine islands of the Azores. Their emergence above the sea has been aided by the swelling of the mantle plume beneath the ocean crust, which lifts the sea floor closer to the surface of the sea.

Basalt lava blocks used for dry-stone walls provide shelter for vines and protect against soil erosion on Pico. Volcanic soil here is of relatively recent formation and suitable for few crops except grapes.

THE FORMATION OF A CALDERA

A caldera is a large crater that forms during or after a volcanic eruption, when the roof of the magma chamber collapses under the weight of the volcano's cone. Water collecting in the natural bowl of a caldera can form a crater lake.

Caldeira das Sete Cidades on the island of São Miguel

In an active volcano, the magma chamber below the cone is full of molten rock. As pressure forces this magma up through the volcano's vent, it is expelled to the surface as a volcanic eruption.

As magma is expelled, the level in the magma chamber drops. This may cause the volcano's cone to collapse under its own weight, leaving behind the characteristic bowl-shaped crater, or caldera.

After the volcano has died down and is eroded, the caldera can fill with water and form a lake. Residual hot rock near the magma chamber may continue to heat the surrounding ground water.

MADEIRA

Madeira is a green, subtropical paradise of volcanic origin, its soils formed from lava and ash, completely different in character from the Portuguese mainland. Blessed with an equable daytime temperature that varies only by a few degrees either side of 20°C (68°F), the island has an all-year-round appeal.

Madeira is a mere dot in the Atlantic Ocean, 608 km (378 miles) from Morocco, and nearly 1,000 km (621 miles) from Lisbon. Despite this, Madeira and Porto Santo appear on a Genoese map of 1351, so there is no doubt that sailors had long known about the islands. They remained unclaimed, however, until 1418 when João Gonçalves Zarco was blown out into the Atlantic by violent storms while exploring the coast of Africa. Zarco counted his blessings at having found safe harbour in Porto Santo, set up the Portuguese flag and returned to Lisbon. A year later he returned on a voyage of discovery sponsored by Henry the Navigator (see p49). Early in 1420, after a winter on Porto Santo, he set sail for the mist-shrouded land on the horizon. He found a beautiful, thickly wooded island (madeira means wood), with abundant fresh water.

The bird-of-paradise flower (Strelitzia reginae)

Within seven years the island had attracted a pioneer colony and the early settlers exploited the fertile soil and warm climate to grow sugar cane. The islanders grew rich on this "white gold", and slaves were brought in to work the land and create the terraced fields and irrigation channels (levadas) that still cling to the steep hillsides. Today, despite the gradients, Madeirans make use of every spare patch of land, growing bananas, flowers and grapes (although tourism is the main industry).

In the late 19th century, Madeira became a popular winter holiday spot for northern Europeans. The start of commercial flights in 1964 introduced the rest of the world to its charms. Today Madeira appeals to keen walkers, plant lovers and sun seekers, although it lacks the sandy beaches of its sister island, Porto Santo.

Exploring Madeira

Funchal is the island's capital and the only town of any size. This is where most of the museums and historic buildings are to be found, as well as the best hotels, restaurants and shops. Most of Madeira's agricultural crops are grown along the sunny, prosperous south coast. The cooler, wetter north side has fewer settlements and more cattle. Many parts of the mountainous and volcanic interior remain wild, and some are accessible only on foot. Pico Ruivo, the highest peak on the island, is a favourite destination for walkers.

GETTING AROUND

Madeira's international airport, Santa Catarina, is at Santa Cruz, 18 km (11 miles) northeast of Funchal. Buses operate to all corners of the island from Funchal but are not geared to tourists. Taxis can be used, but for flexibility car hire is best. From north to south the island is 19 km (12 miles) wide and from east to west just 56 km (35 miles) long. Even so, travelling times are magnified by the mountainous terrain. To reach the nearby island of Porto Santo, you can either fly from Santa Cruz or take the ferry from Funchal to Porto de Abrigo (near Vila Baleira). (see also pp460-61.)

Tiling on Palácio do Governo Regional, Avenida M. Arriaga

The deep natural harbour of Madeira's capital, Funchal, attracted early settlers in the 15th century. The historic core of the capital still overlooks the harbour and boasts fine government buildings and stately 18th-century houses with shady courtyards, iron balconies and carved black basalt doorways. Visitors have justly called Funchal a "little Lisbon" because of the town's steep cobbled streets and overall air of grandeur.

The Igreja do Colégio (Collegiate Church) was founded by the Jesuits in 1574. The plain exterior contrasts with the richly decorated high altar, framed by carved, gilded wood (1641–60).

Rua da Carreira and Rua do Surdo have preserved many of their original elegant balconied houses.

Exploring Funchal

Funchal extends in a crescent along the coastline of Funchal Bay, with the Zona Velha or Old Quarter, a warren of former fishermen's houses, at the eastern end and the Hotel or Tourist Zone, dominated by hotels and restaurants, at the western end and beyond. Between is the heart of Funchal, with its attractive historic centre around the gracious Avenida Arriaga. It has a lively marina and working port, where a small fishing fleet is overshadowed by cruise liners. Funchal also has two scenic cable cars. A few blocks inland, the city fans out in a dense web of red-tiled roofs and subtropical greenery.

📍 Sé

The cathedral is one of the few buildings in Madeira to have survived virtually untouched since the early days of the island's colonization. In the 1490s, King Manuel I (see pp46–9) sent the architect Pêro Anes from the mainland to work on the design of the colony's cathedral. The Sé was finally completed in 1514.

The highlights are the ceiling and the choir stalls, though neither is easy to see in the dark interior. The ceiling of inlaid wood is best seen from the south transept, where enough light filters in to illuminate the intricate patterning. The choir stalls depict saints, prophets and apostles in 16th-century costume. Aspects of Madeiran life feature in the decorative details of the armrests and seats: one cherub carries a bunch of bananas, another a goatskin full of wine.

Madeiran merchants, who grew rich on the profitable sugar trade, sought to secure their salvation by commissioning paintings, statues, embroidered vestments and illuminated hymn books for their local churches. Hundreds of examples now fill this museum which is housed in the former bishops' palace, a building dating from 1600. There are some masterpieces in the collection, including the late-Gothic processional cross donated by King Manuel I, and religious paintings by major Flemish artists of the 15th and 16th centuries. Some works include portraits of the dignitaries who commissioned them. Saints Philip and James is a 16th-century painting showing Simão Gonçalves de Câmara, Zarco's (see p343) grandson.

It is said that Zarco, the man who claimed Madeira for Portugal (see p341), built his house where the Quinta das Cruzes now stands. The elegant 19th-century mansion is now the Museum of Decorative Arts, furnished as a wealthy merchant's house with Indian silk wall hangings, Regency sideboards and oriental carpets. In the basement is furniture made from mahogany packing cases used in the 17th century for shipping sugar, and turned into chests and cupboards when the sugar trade died.

The garden is dotted with ancient tombstones and architectural fragments. These include two window frames from 1507 carved with rope motifs, acrobatic figures and man-eating lions in a Madeiran version of the Manueine style of architecture (see pp20–21).

The Quinta do Palheiro Ferreiro is Madeira's finest garden and a place of pilgrimage for flower-lovers. A French landscape architect laid out the gardens in the 18th century for the wealthy Count of Carvalhal, who built the elegant mansion (not open to visitors) overlooking the garden and the Baroque chapel in the garden itself.

The estate was acquired in 1885 by the long-established Anglo-Madeiran Blandy family, hence its English name: Blandy's Gardens. New species were introduced from South Africa, China and Australia, resulting in a garden that combines the clipped formality of late 18th-century layout with the profusion of English-style herbaceous borders, plus the combination of tropical and temperate climate varieties.

Quite apart from its horticultural interest, the garden is a peaceful wildlife haven, full of beauty and contrast as you pass from the formality of the Ladies' Garden to the tropical wilderness of the ravine ominously signposted "Inferno" (Hell).

Monte 3

10,000. Caminho de Ferro 182, Junta da Freguesia (291 782 555).

Monte has been a favourite destination for visitors to Madeira since the late 19th century, when a rack and pinion railway was built to haul cruise liner passengers up the hillside from Funchal. Coming down they would take the famous Monte toboggan ride.

An alternative way to get to the Monte is by the new cable car that runs from Jardim do Almirante Reis, below the old town, up to the Caminho das Babosas, by the Monte Palace Gardens. The ascent takes 15 minutes, and the car operates between 10am and 6pm daily. The railway closed in 1939, but the station and a viaduct survive, now forming part of the luxuriant Jardim do Monte public gardens. It is a short stroll through the gardens to the church of Nossa Senhora do Monte, whose twin-towered façade looks down on the island's capital. The present church was built in 1818 on the site of a chapel built in 1470 by Adam Gonçalves Ferreira.

The Virgin of Monte is Madeira's patron saint and this church is the focal point of the pilgrimage that takes place annually on 15 August (the Feast of the Assumption) when penitents climb the church's 74 steps on their knees. The object of their worship is a tiny statue of the Virgin on the high altar.

Left of the nave is a chapel housing a mortuary chest, containing the remains of the last Hapsburg Emperor, Karl I, who was deposed in 1918. Exiled in Madeira he died of pneumonia in 1922, aged only 35.

Toboggan drivers in straw hats wait for passengers every day on the corner of Caminho do Monte, and they run (for a fee) to Livramento and on to Funchal. From the church steps, past the drivers' corner, a left turn signposted "Old Monte Gardens" leads to the Monte Palace Tropical Gardens. These superb gardens, laid out in 1894, will delight children with their maze of pathways and bridges, follies, fountains, cascades and black swans. The gardens extend for 7 ha (17 acres) down a lush valley with areas devoted to Madeiran flora, South African proteas, plants from Japan and China, azaleas, camellias and orchids.

Most of the wicker products sold in Funchal are made in and around Camacha, and the sole attraction in this otherwise sleepy village is a large shop packed with everything wicker, from picture frames, bedsteads and cradles to peacock-backed armchairs. It is often possible to see weavers at work, bending the pliant stripped willow round a frame to produce a linen basket or plant-pot container. A Noah's Ark full of paired animals is displayed on the middle floor, along with a full-sailed galleon, as an advertisement of the local wicker weavers' skills.

THE MONTE TOBOGGAN

Sliding in a wicker basket mounted on wooden runners, it is possible to cover the 2-km (1-mile) descent from Monte to Livramento in 10 minutes. The trip is made by thousands every year, fascinated by the experience of travelling at speed down a public highway on a wooden sled. Ernest Hemingway once described it as "exhilarating". A cushioned seat softens the ride and passengers are in the safe hands of the toboggan drivers, who push and steer from the rear, using their rubber-soled boots as brakes. Madeiran tobogganing was invented as a form of passenger transport around 1850.

Madeira Wine

Wicker-covered Madeira bottle

In the 16th century, ships stopping at Funchal would take on barrels of local wine. This unfortified Madeira often spoiled during the voyage, so shippers started adding spirit to make it better.

The wine now seemed to improve after a long, hot voyage, and quality Madeira began to be sent on round trips as an alternative to maturing it in Funchal's lodges. This expensive method was replaced with the estufa system, still very much in use today. Large volumes of wine are heated to between 30 and 50°C for a period of three months to a year. The effect is to hurry up the ageing process: the best wines are "cooked" more gently and slowly. The finest Madeirans are heated by the sun, maturing slowly in the attics of the wine lodges.

Most Madeira is made from the Tinta Negra Mole grape, often blended with one of the four noble varieties listed below.

Making barrels for Madeira, Funchal

THE FOUR TYPES OF MADEIRA

Sercial is made from white grapes grown at heights up to 1,000 m (3,280 ft). Good-quality Sercial is aged for at least ten years, giving it its amber colour. A dry wine – it is mostly drunk as an aperitif or with soup, and is best served chilled.

Verdelho grapes are grown in cool vineyards at lower heights than the Sercial.

This medium-dry tawny wine is also drunk as an aperitif. Sweeter than Sercial, Verdelho goes well with a slice of Madeira cake (invented by the English for just this purpose).

The barrels in the Adegas de São Francisco (see p347), where Madeira is warmed, need frequent repair as do the wooden floors that bear their huge weight.

These casks of Verdelho are being aged after the addition of brandy to the wine. Vintage wine must spend at least 20 years in the cask and two in the bottle.

Bual (or Boal) grapes are grown in lower, warmer conditions. Dark, rich and nutty, it is a medium-sweet wine that can be served as an alternative to port. It goes very well with cheeses and dessert, and is best drunk at room temperature.

Malmsey, the most celebrated Madeira, is made from Malvasia grapes grown in sunny vineyards backed by cliffs, where the heat absorbed by the rock by day warms the grapes by night. The result is a rich dark wine drunk as an after-dinner digestive.

Vintage Madeira from every decade as far back as the mid-19th century is still available for sale. The oldest surviving bottle of Madeira dates from 1772.

Machico 5

⚠ 22,000. 📍 Forte de Nossa Senhora do Amparo, R. Dr. José António de Almada (291 962 289).

Legend has it that Machico was named after Robert Machim, a merchant from Bristol, who eloped with the aristocratic Anne of Hertford and set sail for Portugal. Caught in a storm and shipwrecked on Madeira, the two lovers died from exposure and were buried. The rest of the crew repaired the boat and sailed to Lisbon, where their story inspired Prince Henry the Navigator (see p49) to send João Gonçalves Zarco (see p343) in search of this mysterious wooded island.

Machico has been Madeira's second most important town since the first settlements, when the island was divided into two captaincies: Zarco ruled the west from Funchal whilst his fellow navigator, Tristão Vaz Teixeira, ruled the east from Machico. However, Funchal's superior location and harbour soon ensured that it developed as the capital of Madeira while Machico became a sleepy agricultural town.

Main altar in the Capela dos Milagres, Machico

The Igreja Matriz on Largo do Município, Machico's main square, dates from the 15th century. Above the high altar is a statue of the Virgin Mary, donated by Manuel I (see pp46–9), as were the three marble pillars used in the construction of the Gothic south portal. Inside, there is a fine example of Manueline-style stone masonry in the Capela de São João Baptista, whose arch shows Teixeira's coat of arms, with a phoenix rising from the flames.

Across the River Machico, on Largo dos Milagres, is the Capela dos Milagres (Chapel of the Miracles). The present structure dates from 1815, but it stands on the site of Madeira's first church, where Robert Machim and Anne of Hertford are supposedly buried. The earlier church of 1420 was destroyed in a flood in 1803, but the 15th-century crucifix was found floating out at sea. Machico celebrates the return of its cross with a procession every year on 8 October.

Caniçal 6

⚠ 5,000. 📍 (as for Machico) (291 962 289).

Caniçal was once the centre of Madeira's whaling industry: the whaling scenes for John Huston's film version of Moby Dick (1956) were shot here. Whaling ceased in June 1981, and since then the waters around Madeira have been declared a marine mammal sanctuary – killing whales, dolphins and seals is forbidden. Fishermen who once hunted whales now help marine biologists at the Society for the Protection of Sea Mammals understand whale migrations.

The old whaling company's office is now the Museu da Baleia (Whaling Museum). It shows a 45-minute video on whale hunting with commentaries by retired fishermen.

Caniçal is still a busy fishing port, and the stony beach is used by tuna fishermen to repair their colourful boats.

Walkers are attracted by footpaths which meander from one cliff-top to another, with wild flowers growing in sheltered hollows. The treeless landscape contrasts totally with the island's wooded interior.

On the road from Caniçal to Ponta de São Lourenço, look out for the signpost to the bay of Praia, Madeira's only naturally sandy beach.

Santana 7

 10,500.  Sítio do Serrado
(291 572 992).

Santana (named after St Anne, mother of the Virgin) has more than 100 thatched triangular houses, several of which, restored and brightly painted, can be visited by the public. The hillsides above the broad valley in which Santana sits are also dotted with triangular thatched byres, where cows are tethered to stop them from wandering along narrow terrace paths and harming themselves or crops.

The valley is intensively farmed both for fruit and vegetables, and osiers, the willow branches that are the raw material for the wicker workers of Camacha (see p350).

Ribeiro Frio 8

 45.  from Funchal.

Bridge across a levada on the walk from Ribeiro Frio to Balcões

Ribeiro Frio is a pretty spot consisting of a couple of restaurants, shops and a trout farm, fed by the “cold stream” after which the place is named.

Surrounding the trout farm is an attractive garden full of native trees and shrubs. This is the starting point for two of the island’s best levada walks (see p357). The 12-km (7-mile) path signposted to Portela (on the right heading downhill past the restaurants) passes through dramatic mountain scenery but is best left to experienced walkers because of the long tunnels and steep drops in places. Far easier is the 20-minute walk on the left (going downhill) signposted to Balcões (Balconies). This viewpoint gives panoramic views across the valley of the River Ametade to Penha de Águia (Eagle Rock), the sheer-sided hill that projects from Madeira’s northern coast.

Sunrise over the mountains, seen from Pico do Arieiro

Pico do Arieiro 9

 to Camacha, then taxi.

From Funchal it is about a 30-minute drive up the Pico do Arieiro, Madeira’s third highest mountain at 1,810 m (5,938 ft). The route leads through steep hillsides cloaked in fragrant eucalyptus and bay laurel. At around 900 m (2,950 ft), you will often meet the cloudline and pass for a few minutes through swirling mists and possibly rain, before emerging into a sunlit landscape of volcanic rocks. At the top, the spectacular view is of clouds in the valleys and dramatic mountain ridges with knife-edge peaks. Just visible on a clear day is Pico Ruivo (see p356), connected to Pico do Arieiro by a 10-km (6-mile) path. On especially clear days you may be able to see the neighbouring island of Porto Santo, some 48 km (30 miles) north of Madeira.

THE TRIANGULAR HOUSES OF SANTANA

Simply constructed from two A-shaped timber frames, with a wood-panelled interior and thatched roof, these triangular houses are unique to Madeira. They are first mentioned in the 16th century, but most of the surviving examples are no more than 100 years old. Today their doors and windows are often painted a cheerful red, yellow or blue. In the warm year-round climate of Madeira, cooking and eating take place out of doors, and the toilets are placed well away from the house. To the inhabitants, therefore, the triangular houses serve principally as shelter from the rain and for sleeping in. The interior is deceptively spacious, with a living area downstairs and sleeping space up in the loft.

Panoramic view of the mountains from the Pico Ruivo summit to Santana or Faial, then taxi to Achada do Teixeira, then walk.

Pico Ruivo 10

Madeira's highest mountain at 1,861 m (6,105 ft), Pico Ruivo is only accessible on foot. The easiest way to scale its heights is via a well sign-posted footpath which begins at the village of Achada do Teixeira and leads visitors on a 45-minute walk to the top.

Alternatively, follow the walk from the top of Pico do Arieiro (see p353) along one of the island's most spectacular footpaths. Awe-inspiring mountain scenery and glorious views can be enjoyed all along the 10-km (6-mile) walk. This takes two to three hours and is really only suitable for experienced, well-equipped walkers. Vertigo sufferers should not attempt the path, as it involves negotiating narrow ridges with sheer drops on either side.

Curral das Freiras 11

3,000. Câmara de Lobos (291 943 470).

Curral das Freiras means "Nuns' Refuge" and the name refers to the nuns of the Santa Clara convent who fled to this idyllic spot when pirates attacked Funchal in 1566. The nuns have left now, but the village remains. Visitors first glimpse Curral das Freiras from a viewpoint known as the Eira do Serrado, perched some 800 m (2,625 ft) above the scattered village.

The valley is surrounded on all sides by jagged mountain peaks. Until 1959 the only access to the village was by a steep zig-zagging path, but road tunnels now make the journey much easier and allow local people to transport their produce to the capital. Television arrived in 1986.

The sweet chestnuts that grow in profusion around the village are turned into sweet chestnut bread, best eaten still warm from the oven, and licor de castanha, a chestnut-flavoured liqueur. Both can be sampled in local bars.

Paúl da Serra 12

to Canhas, then taxi.

Sheep grazing on the wide plateau of Paúl da Serra, east of Rabaçal

The Paúl da Serra (literally "high moorland") is a large, boggy plateau, 17 km (11 miles) in length and 6 km (4 miles) in width. The plain contrasts dramatically with the jagged mountains that characterize the rest of Madeira.

Electricity for the north of the island is generated here by wind turbines. Only gorse and grass grow on the thin soil, and the sponge-like volcanic substrata act as a natural reservoir for rainfall. Water filters through the rock to emerge as springs which then feed the island's levada system.

THE LEVADAS OF MADEIRA

Madeira possesses a unique irrigation system that enables the plentiful rainfall of the north of the island to be distributed to the drier, sunny south. Rainfall is stored in reservoirs and lakes, or channelled from natural springs, and fed into the network of levadas that ring the island. These narrow channels carry water long distances to banana groves, vineyards and market gardens. Altogether there are 2,150 km (1,335 miles) of canals, some dating back to the 1500s. Maintenance paths run alongside the levadas, providing a network of footpaths reaching into remote parts of the island inaccessible by road.

Levada do Risco, one of many walking routes across Madeira

Rabaçal Walks 13

Reached down a single-track road from the Paúl da Serra plateau, Rabaçal is the starting point for two, equally magical, levada walks. One is a simple 30-minute, there-and-back stroll to the Risco waterfall, while the other is a more demanding two- to three-hour walk to the beauty spot known as Vinte e Cinco Fontes (25 Springs).

Levada da Rocha Vermelha 6

Wild, mountainous terrain forms the backdrop to the steep path down to the lower levada.

TIPS FOR WALKERS

Length: These two walks can be combined to create a circular route of 8 km (5 miles), taking around three and a half hours.

Note: The levadas can be slippery and sometimes very narrow. In places the path is only 30 cm (1 ft) wide, but the channel runs at waist height and you can hold on.

São Vicente 14

8,000. Câmara Municipal, Vila de São Vicente (291 842 135).

The agricultural town of São Vicente has grown prosperous over the years by tempting travellers to break their journeys here as they explore Madeira's northern coast.

To see how the village looked before development began, visit the Igreja Matriz (originally built in the 17th century), and look at the painting on the ceiling of St Vincent blessing the town. St Vincent appears again over the elaborately carved and gilded main altar, this time blessing a ship.

Around the church, cobbled traffic-free streets are lined with boutiques, bars and shops selling sweet cakes, including the popular Madeiran speciality bolo de mel, the so-called "honey cake" (actually made with molasses and fruit).

São Vicente marks the starting point of the coastal road northwest to Porto Moniz, one of the island's most exhilarating drives. The road, little more than a ledge cut into the sheer cliffs, sometimes passes through tunnels, sometimes through waterfalls. The 19-km (12-mile) road took 16 years to build without the aid of machinery.

The only village along this lonely road is Seixal. Despite the Atlantic storms that can batter the island's northern coast, Seixal occupies a remarkably sheltered spot where vineyards cling to the hillside terraces, producing excellent wine.

Porto Moniz 15

4,000. R. Eng. América, Vila do Porto Moniz (291 852 555).

Although it is only 75 km (47 miles) from Funchal, visitors arriving in Porto Moniz feel a great sense of achievement after the long journey to this remote coastal village, on the northwest tip of Madeira.

Porto Moniz is surrounded by a patchwork pattern of tiny fields. The fields are protected by fences made from tree heather and dried bracken, a necessary precaution against the heavy, salt-laden air that blows in off the Atlantic.

The warm, natural rock pools at Porto Moniz

Apart from its picturesque charm, the main attraction at Porto Moniz is the series of natural rock pools joined by concrete paths on the foreshore, where you can paddle or immerse yourself in sun-warmed water while being showered by spray as waves break against the nearby rocks.

Calheta 16

3,500. Câmara Municipal, Vila da Calheta (291 820 200).

Bananas, a prolific crop in Calheta

Calheta stands among flourishing vineyards and banana plantations. It is also at the centre of what little sugarcane production survives on Madeira, and the sweet smell of cane syrup being extracted and turned into rum hangs around the village from the factory (visitors are welcome; the best time is March to April).

The Igreja Matriz looks unpromisingly modern but it dates from 1430 and contains a large ebony and silver tabernacle donated by Manuel I (see pp46–7). There is also a fine wooden ceiling.

Ribeira Brava 17

Ribeira Brava is a small, attractive resort town, situated on the sunny south coast of Madeira. It has a pebble beach and a fishing harbour, which is reached through a tunnel to the east of the main town.

Overlooking the principal square, São Bento remains one of the most unspoiled churches on Madeira. Despite restoration and reconstruction, several of its 16th-century features are still intact. These include a stone-carved font and ornate pulpit decorated with wild beasts such as wolves, the Flemish painting of the Nativity in the side chapel, and the wooden statue of the Virgin over the main altar. The church's clock tower has a beautifully tiled roof.

São Bento's clock tower, Ribeira Brava

This is one of Madeira's main centres for catching scabbard fish (peixe espada), which feature on every Madeiran menu. Long lines are baited with octopus to catch these unusual fish that dwell at depths of 800 m (2,600 ft). The fishermen live in single-storey dwellings along the harbour front, and their tiny chapel dates from the 15th century, but was rebuilt in 1723. The chapel is dedicated to St Nicholas, the patron saint of seafarers, and is decorated with scenes from the saint's life, as well as vivid portrayals of drownings and shipwrecks.

Environs: The second highest sea cliff in Europe is Cabo Girão, located 10 km (6 miles) west of Câmara de Lobos. It peaks at a dramatic 589 m (1,932 ft) above sea level.

Visitors to this pretty fishing village are not allowed to forget that it was several times painted by Winston Churchill, who often visited Madeira in the 1950s. Bars and restaurants are named in his honour and a plaque marks the spot on the main road, east of the harbour, where the great statesman set up his easels. The town has not changed greatly since then.

Porto Santo 19

5,000. Av. Dr. Manuel Gregório Pestana Júnior (291 985 189).

Porto Santo, the island that lies 37 km (23 miles) north-east of Madeira, is smaller, flatter and drier than its sister island. It also possesses something that Madeira lacks: a 9-km (6-mile) beach of golden sand, running the entire length of the island's south coast. There is a daily ferry service between Funchal and Porto Santo, which takes 2 hours and 40 minutes. There are also daily flights, shortening the trip to 15 minutes.

Porto Santo is a popular holiday destination for Madeirans, mainland Portuguese and growing numbers of foreign tourists. There are five big, but mostly discreet hotels, and several holiday resorts with villas and apartments. Snorkelling is good here and bicycles can be hired.

The one historic site of note on the island is the Casa de Colombo (house of Christopher Columbus), located behind Nossa Senhora da Piedade in Vila Baleira. The restored house is built from rough stone, and contains exhibits that tell Columbus's story, including maps, paintings and engravings.

CHRISTOPHER COLUMBUS ON PORTO SANTO

Historical records vouch for the fact that Christopher Columbus came to Madeira in 1478, probably as an agent for sugar merchants in his native Italian town of Genoa. He went to Porto Santo to meet Bartolomeu Perestrelo, also from Genoa and the island's governor. There he met Filipa Moniz, Perestrelo's daughter. The two were married in 1479, but Filipa died soon after while giving birth to their son. Nothing else is known about Columbus's visit to the island, though this has not prevented local people from identifying his house.

THE AZORES

Far out in the Atlantic, 1,300 km (800 miles) west of Portugal's mainland, the nine islands of the Azores are known for their spectacular volcanic scenery, abundant flora and peaceful way of life. Once wild and remote, they are now a popular destination for travellers who enjoy walking, sailing and getting away from it all.

Santa Maria was the first island discovered by the Portuguese in 1427. The archipelago was named after the buzzards the early explorers saw flying overhead and mistook for goshawks (açores). The islands were settled during the 15th and 16th centuries by colonists from Portugal and Flanders who introduced cattle, maize and vines.

The Azores have profited from their far-flung position in the Atlantic. Between 1580 and 1640, when Portugal came under Spanish rule (see pp50–51), the ports of Angra do Heroísmo on Terceira and Ponta Delgada on São Miguel prospered from the trade with the New World. In the 19th century the islands were a regular port of call for American whaling ships. During the 20th century they have benefited from their use as stations for transatlantic cable companies, meteorological observatories and military air bases.

Império chapel on Pico

Today the majority of islanders are involved in either dairy farming or fishing, and close links are maintained with both mainland Portugal and the sizeable communities of emigrant Azoreans in the United States and Canada. Many emigrants return to their native island for the traditional annual festivals, such as the festas of the Holy Spirit, celebrated in the colourful impérios. With few beaches, a capricious, often wet climate and no large-scale resorts, the Azores have escaped mass tourism. Most travellers come here to explore the green mountains embroidered with blue hydrangeas and relax in quiet ports adorned with cobbled streets and elegant Baroque churches. Once a brave new world of pioneer communities, the Azores are now an autonomous region of Portugal and an exotic corner of the European Union, where life remains refreshingly civil and unhurried.

Exploring the Azores

The islands of the Azores are spread 650 km (400 miles) apart and fall into three distinct groups. In the east lie Santa Maria and São Miguel, the largest island and home to the regional capital, Ponta Delgada. The main towns in the central group of five islands are Horta on Faial, a popular stopover port for boats crossing the Atlantic, and Angra do Heroísmo on Terceira, a charming, historic town.

From here visitors can travel to the other islands of São Jorge, Graciosa and Pico, the last dominated by a towering volcanic peak 2,350 m (7,700 ft) high. Further west lie the remote, weather-beaten islands of Flores and Corvo.

GETTING AROUND

São Miguel, Faial and Terceira have international airports and the local airline, SATA, flies between all the islands. Ferry services connect the five central islands several times a week in summer. There is a daily summer service between Flores and Corvo but no service between Santa Maria and São Miguel. All ferry services are subject to the weather. Bus services on the islands are designed for the locals and therefore not always practical for tourists. Car hire is more convenient and available on all islands except Corvo. (See also p463.)

São Miguel 1

With its historic maritime capital, rich green fields and dramatic volcanic scenery, this ilha verde (green island) provides a rewarding introduction to the Azores. The largest and most populated of the archipelago's nine islands, São Miguel is 65 km (40 miles) long and was originally two separate islands. The capital, Ponta Delgada, is a good base from which to make day tours of the rugged coast or visit the volcanic crater lakes and steaming thermal springs in the interior of the island.

Ponta Delgada

Lined with many impressive churches, convents and trim white houses, the cobbled streets of the Azorean capital recall the wealthy days when the port was a crucial staging post between Europe and the New World (see pp48–9). Its hub is the arcaded Praça de Gonçalo Velho Cabral, named after the first governor of the island in 1444, which looks out onto the seafloor. It is dominated by three imposing arches, dating from 1783, that once marked the entrance to the city. To the north, in Largo da Matriz, stands the parish church of São Sebastião. Founded in 1533 it has a graceful Manueline portal intricately carved in limestone. The sacristy is decorated with azulejo panels and beautiful 17th-century furniture made of jacaranda wood from Brazil.

A short walk west lies the Praça 5 de Outubro, a shaded, tree-lined square overlooked by the Forte de São Brás. This Renaissance fortress, built on a spur overlooking the sea, was greatly restored in the 19th century. Also on the square, the immense Convento da Esperança becomes the focus of intense festivities when the city celebrates the festival of Santo Cristo dos Milagres on the fifth Sunday after Easter. A statue of Christ, wearing a red robe decorated with sumptuous diamond and gold ornaments, leads the procession through the streets. The statue can be seen in the lower church along with other religious treasures, including reliquaries and jewels. Colourful tiles, dating from the 18th century, by António de Oliveira Bernardes (see p26) decorate the choir.

The principal museum in the Azores, the Museu Carlos Machado, occupies the former monastery of Santo André. Its exhibits reflect the fishing and farming industries that have ruled life on the islands. Of particular interest are the paintings by Domingos Rebelo (1891–1975) showing scenes of Azorean life. The natural history wing is packed with an encyclopedic array of stuffed animals, varnished fish, skeletons and a large relief model of the island.

West of the Island

The northwest of São Miguel is punctured by a giant volcanic crater, Caldeira das Sete Cidades, with a 12-km (7-mile) circumference. In places its sheer walls drop like green curtains for 300 m (1,000 ft). When not obscured by cloud, the crater is best seen from the viewpoint of Vista do Rei from where a walk leads west around its rim. The crater floor contains the small village of Sete Cidades and six dark green lakes. The crater is believed to have been formed in the 1440s when an eruption destroyed the volcanic peak that had formed the western part of the island. In contrast to the lush vegetation that covers the crater now, the first settlers described the area as a burnt-out shell.

The main town on the north coast, Ribeira Grande has a small Casa da Cultura (cultural centre) housed in the restored 17th-century Solar de São Vicente. Azulejos from the 16th to 20th century are on display and in other rooms the crafts and rural lifestyle of the islanders are recorded, including a period barber's shop rescued from Ponta Delgada.

East of the Island

The Lagoa do Fogo, “Lake of Fire”, was formed in the island’s central mountains by a volcanic eruption in 1563. On sunny days its remote sandy beach is a tranquil picnic spot.

Further east, the spa resort of Furnas is the perfect place to admire the geothermal activity taking place beneath the surface of the Azores (see pp340–41). Scattered around the town are the Caldeiras das Furnas where visitors will see the hot bubbling springs that provide the therapeutic mud and mineral water used for the spa’s treatments. In the 18th century, Thomas Hickling, a prosperous merchant from Boston, laid out gardens in Furnas which have now grown into the glorious Parque Terra Nostra. Covering 12 ha (30 acres), the gardens have a rich collection of mature trees and plants, including hibiscus and hydrangeas, as well as a bizarre swimming pool with warm, mustard-coloured water.

The volcanic ground on the northern shores of the Lagoa das Furnas, 4 km (2 miles) south, is so hot the islanders come here to cook cozido.

Lying 55 km (34 miles) south of São Miguel, Santa Maria was the first island in the archipelago to be discovered by the Portuguese around 1427. Though only 18 km (11 miles) long, it has great scenic variety and boasts sandy beaches, tranquil countryside and the warmest climate in the Azores.

The island's capital, Vila do Porto, is on the south coast and consists of a long main street that runs down to a small harbour. The west of the island is a dry, flat plateau with a vast airstrip built in World War II. To the north lies the fishing town of Anjos, where a statue commemorates a visit made by Christopher Columbus in 1493 on his return from discovering the New World. Next to it, the small, whitewashed chapel of Mãe de Deus is the oldest in the Azores.

The highest point of Santa Maria is the central Pico Alto, 590 m (1,935 ft) above sea level, which on a clear day offers fine views over the green and hilly east side of the island. Towards the east coast, the village of Santo Espírito is worth visiting for the white Baroque façade of its church of Nossa Senhora da Purificação adorned with black lava decoration, while the vine-covered half-crater of Baía de São Lourenço, north of here, is a delightful summer beach resort.

Terceira, meaning “third” in Portuguese, is so named because it was the third island to be discovered, in 1427. It is the most developed of the five central islands – a result in part of the large American-run airbase that has been operating at Lajes since World War II. Terceira is famous for its unusual form of bull-running, the tourada à corda (bullfight with a rope), in which a bull is taunted while tied to a rope held tight by teams of men. It is also renowned for the brightly painted chapels devoted to the cult of the Holy Spirit (see p368). Terceira's interior is mainly green pastureland, while the coast has barren areas of black lava.

Angra do Heroísmo

This attractive and historic town was declared a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1983, in recognition of the strategic role the port has played in the Atlantic. For over three centuries the town was a stopover point on the routes between Europe, America and Africa. It was here in 1499 that Vasco da Gama (see p106) buried his brother Paulo after their pioneering journey to India, and in the early 17th century its harbour glittered with Spanish fleets returning laden with treasure from the Americas. Maria II gave the town its name for the bravery (heroísmo) it demonstrated during the struggles for Liberalism in the early 19th century (see pp54–5). Despite the severe damage caused by an earthquake in 1980, the city's wealthy past is reflected in the pretty streets lined with monumental churches and balconied houses.

The most spectacular view of the harbour is from Monte Brasil, a volcanic crater on the western side of the bay. Beside this popular picnic spot stands the fort, Castelo de São João Baptista, built during Spain's annexation of Portugal (see pp50–51) as a treasure store, and still in military use. A second rewarding viewpoint is from the Alto da Memória at the south end of Rua São João de Deus, from where the twin towers of the 16th-century Sé (restored after a fire in 1983) are easily seen. A path leads down into the Jardim Municipal, the city's restful public gardens. These once formed part of the 15th-century Convento de São Francisco which now houses the Museu de Angra do Heroísmo. The museum's exhibits reflect the history of the Azores and the city and include armour, maps, paintings and sculptures.

Around the Island

Terceira is a large, oval-shaped island with a gentle green interior of forested hills and farmland. Its centre bears witness to its volcanic origins: the Caldeira de Guilherme Moniz is an eroded crater 3 km (2 miles) wide, the largest in the Azores. Nearby, the Algar do Carvão is a dramatic volcanic blast-hole, thick with dripping moss where visitors can tour an enormous subterranean cave. West of here, the Furnas do Enxofre are hot steaming geysers where the heavy sulphur vapours crystallize into brightly coloured formations.

Two viewpoints overlooking the island can be reached by car: in the west, a road bordered with blue hydrangeas winds up through the Serra de Santa Bárbara to a vast lonely crater at 1,022 m (3,353 ft), while the eastern Serra do Cume, at 545 m (1,788 ft), overlooks the airport and Praia da Vitória. This port has a large bay with a sandy beach. Its name pays tribute to a famous victory in 1581 when the Spanish attempted to seize the island at Baía da Salga, 10 km (6 miles) south, and were thwarted by the release of a herd of cattle onto the shore.

Wooden John the Baptist, Museu de Angra

On the north coast, Biscoitos (which means biscuits) takes its name from the rubble of biscuit-like lava spread along the shore. Exhilarating swimming pools, popular in the summer, have been created amongst the rocks. The area is also known for its wine, and the land is covered in a chessboard of stone-walled pens (curraletas) built to shelter vines. The friendly Museu do Vinho explains the simple production methods used to produce the rich verdelho wine that was once exported to the Russian court, and provides an opportunity to taste and purchase today's vintages.

The Holy Spirit Festivals

Festivals are a vibrant feature of life in the Azores and have helped foster the deep sense of community that is a hallmark of the islands' culture. Emigrants and relatives from North America and mainland Portugal often return to their native island to celebrate the most popular festas.

The islands' most traditional festivals are associated with the Holy Spirit (Festas do Espírito Santo). Brought to the Azores by the first Portuguese settlers, who called upon the Holy Spirit to protect them against natural disasters, the rituals have remained almost unchanged. An "emperor", usually a child, is crowned in the parish church. With a sceptre and silver plate as insignia of the Holy Spirit, the "emperor" presides over the festivities that take place each Sunday for seven weeks after Easter. The seventh Sunday, Whit Sunday, the day of Pentecost when Christ's disciples were filled with the Holy Spirit, is the occasion of a great feast in the village.

A girl wearing the emperor's crown

The distribution of bread for the Festival of the Holy Spirit originates in the donation of food to the poor introduced by saintly Queen Isabel (see p45). On the last day of celebrations, the seventh Sunday after Easter, a Holy Spirit soup is made from beef and vegetables and is handed out along with bread to everyone outside the local império.

The focus of the ceremonies is a small chapel or império (empire) which is used for the distribution of the Holy Spirit soup on the seventh Sunday. Here, the emperor's crown, sceptre and plate are displayed on the altar on the last day of the festivities. On Terceira, where the cult of the Holy Spirit is particularly strong, many of the 68 impérios are painted in bright colours every spring. Up to 500 islanders gather for a village feast accompanied by dancing, brass bands and lavish floral displays. In many places a tourada à corda will be held, where a bull, tied to the end of a long rope, is let loose in the street.

The “gracious” island is one of the most peaceful in the Azores. Only 12 km (7 miles) long, most of its low-lying land is given over to farms and vineyards where ox-drawn carts and ploughs are still in use. The capital, Santa Cruz da Graciosa, on the northern coast, has a simple quayside backed by rows of stark, two-storey, whitewashed houses with wrought-iron balconies and oval windows. A small Museu da Graciosa recalls life on this sleepy island with a homely miscellany of toys, sea chests, kitchenware, wine presses, furniture and mementoes sent back by emigrants to North America. A building next door houses a whaling boat (see pp370–71).

The picturesque Monte da Ajuda that rises behind the town is capped by a 16th-century fortified chapel, Nossa Senhora da Ajuda, decorated with 18th-century tiles. Nearby, a small vigia (whalers’ lookout) faces the sea.

In the southeast lies the island’s principal sight, Furna do Enxofre, where visitors can descend flights of steps into the bowels of a volcanic crater. At the bottom is a huge cave with a deep, sulphurous lake and peep-holes where bubbling brews of evil grey liquid can be spied beneath the rocks. The best time to visit is late morning when the sun shines through the small cave mouth and lights the interior.

Above the cave, at Furna Maria Encantada, a natural tunnel through the rock leads to the edge of the crater. From here there are stunning views over the island. Treatments using the island’s geothermal waters are available at the coastal resort of Carapacho, at the foot of the volcano.

São Jorge is a long, thin mountainous island that stretches for 56 km (35 miles) but is only 8 km (5 miles) wide.

On its north coast, sheer cliffs drop 480 m (1,575 ft) to the sea. Over the centuries these cliffs have collapsed in places, creating tongues of land known as fajãs. It was on these coastal promontories that the island’s Flemish colonists first settled in the mid-15th century.

Today many islanders on São Jorge are engaged in the production of a cured cheese, Queijo de São Jorge, exported to mainland Europe. The pace of life is leisurely and most visitors come to enjoy the walking along the paths that climb between the fajãs. The most popular route is in the northeast of the island from Serra do Topo 10 km (6 miles) down to Fajã dos Cubres.

Most of the settlements lie along the gentler south coast, including the capital, Velas, and Calheta, where the small Museu de São Jorge displays objects of local history such as the ornate breads baked for the Holy Spirit festival, a honey press, agricultural utensils and religious sculptures. West of Calheta, in the pretty village of Manadas, the 18th-century church of Santa Bárbara has an atmospheric carved and painted interior. In Urzelina, 2 km (1 mile) further west, the tower of a church buried by lava in 1808 protrudes defiantly from the ground. In the west of the island there is a pleasant forested picnic area at Sete Fontes, and on a clear day the nearby summit of Pico da Velha offers superb views of the central Azorean islands.

The full majesty of Pico, the highest mountain in Portugal, becomes apparent when it is seen from the neighbouring central islands. Only then does one realize how gracefully this volcanic peak soars out of the Atlantic, shooting up 2,350 m (7,700 ft) to form the summit of the greatest mountain range in the world, the Mid-Atlantic Ridge (see pp340–41).

The island's capital, Madalena, is a relaxed port that lies opposite Faial's capital, Horta. A regular ferry service crosses the 8 km (5 miles) between the two islands, making a day trip feasible. The entrance to the harbour is guarded by two rocks, Em Pé (standing) and Deitado (lying down) where colonies of birds have made their home.

Many people come to Pico to climb its eponymous peak, which in winter is often snow-capped and at other times can be wrapped in cloud. It is a strenuous climb, best done in

In Pursuit of the Whale

Every summer the waters around the Azores are visited by a great variety of whales and dolphins. Until 1984 whaling was a traditional part of Azorean life – in the 18th century American whaling vessels frequently called here to pick up crew for their expeditions, and from the 1870s the Azoreans took up large-scale hunting in their own waters. Flags were waved from cliff-top vigias (lookouts) giving coded directions so that other villagers would not get to the prize first.

Since whaling was banned in the 1980s, the Azoreans have applied their knowledge gained from hunting to whale watching and conservation.

Scrimshaws are carvings made on the teeth and bones of whales and often depict whaling scenes. This fine example from the Museu do Scrimshau on Faial (see p372) shows the long, narrow boats called canoas that could hold up to 7 men.

Whale watching today takes place in small boats that allow fast and safe access to the whales. As well as trips out to sea, the whales can be observed from the vigias. These land-based towers afford spectacular views of the whales in their natural habitat. Expeditions run from Pico and Faial (see p372).

from men who scan the sea for a fluke (tail) from the former vigias (lookouts). The history of Azorean whaling is recalled at the Museu dos Baleeiros, also in Lajes, where boats, tackle and whalebone artefacts are displayed. The whales were processed at an immense factory on the north side of the island at São Roque do Pico. Closed down in 1984, the Museu da Indústria da Baleeira has been preserved as a piece of industrial heritage, retaining the boilers where the blubber was turned into oil.

A coastal road encircles Pico, offering a slow but rewarding drive that reveals the charm of this slowly developing island. Minor eruptions in previous centuries have covered parts of its landscape with black mole-hills of lava that the islanders christened mistérios (mysteries). The black lava has been used to build houses and grids of stone walls that enclose fields or shelter vines. In some places, notably around Cachorro on the north coast, the eroded lava has formed curious arches in the sea.

Pico's famous Verdelho wine is similar to the one made in Madeira (see p351) and was once exported to mainland Europe. In recent years there has been a revival of viticulture on the island, and the production of new reds and whites – such as the much acclaimed Terras da Lava – allows visitors a refined alternative to the ubiquitous vinho de cheiro (wine of smell) traditionally drunk by the Azoreans.

MARINE LIFE IN THE AZORES

Some 20 species of cetaceans can be found in the waters of the Azores. These warm-blooded animals follow the warm currents of the Gulf Stream to feed in the region's abundant, unpolluted waters. Schools of playful and gregarious dolphins are often seen scything through the waves at incredible speeds, but the most impressive sights are sperm whales. These large, sociable animals dive to great depths for giant squid and live in family groups called pods. Like all whales and dolphins they must come to the surface to breathe and this is when whale-watching expeditions make their sightings.

Atlantic spotted dolphins, fast and graceful swimmers are huge, tear-shaped creatures, the largest of the toothed whales. They can be seen breaching (diving out of the water), spy hopping (raising their head to have a look around) and socializing by rubbing bodies.

Sperm whales

Pilot whales belong to the dolphin family and are recognizable from their strong blow of up to 1 m (3 ft).

Risso's dolphins have a squat head and light grey colouring. Older ones are often crisscrossed with white scars.

Bottlenose dolphins are the best known. These playful animals love to ride the waves at the bow of a moving vessel.

Loggerhead

turtles, born on Florida's beaches, are frequent visitors to the warm Azorean waters.

Faial was settled by Flemish farmers in the 15th century and prospered with the development of Horta harbour as a stopover for ships and – more recently – flying boats crossing the Atlantic. Today it is a fertile island with an international atmosphere and a mild climate, famous as a yachting destination and for the endless rows of colourful hydrangeas that bloom in June and July.

Horta

Stretching around a wide bay, Faial's capital has been a convenient anchorage for caravels, clippers and sea planes over the centuries. Captain Cook commented on Horta's fine houses and gardens when he called here in 1775. Today, visiting crews crossing between the Caribbean and Mediterranean paint a calling card on the quayside and celebrate their safe passage in Peter's Café Sport. In the upstairs rooms of the café, an engrossing Museu do Scrimshaw exhibits engraved whales' bones and teeth dating back to 1884 (see p370).

Barren ash-covered volcanic landscape at Capelinhos, the westernmost point of Faial

In the Museu da Horta displays of antique furniture, portraits, nautical memorabilia and nostalgic photographs of the island's port are upstaged by miniature sculptures of liners and scenes of daily life, painstakingly carved from the white pith of fig trees. These virtuoso examples of a traditional island craft are by the Faial-born Euclides Sequeira da Rosa (1910–79).

Excursions for dolphin- and whale-watching (see pp370–71) in the waters around the island are organized by the Espaço Talassa company.

Around the Island

Two viewpoints overlook Horta – to its south rises the volcanic peak of Monte da Guia, while the northern Miradouro da Espalamarca is guarded by a huge statue of Nossa Senhora da Conceição.

If the cloud cover permits, it is well worth driving 15 km (9 miles) to see Faial's central Caldeira do Cabeço Gordo – a vast green crater 2 km (1 mile) wide and 400 m (1,300 ft) deep. The path winding around its rim takes about two hours to walk and has magnificent views.

Faial's other spectacular natural sight is the Vulcão dos Capelinhos in the far west of the island. A volcano erupted here in 1957–8, smothering a lighthouse which can now be seen buried in ash. Around it lies a scorched and barren landscape that has, not surprisingly, been used as the location for a German post-nuclear holocaust film. The story of the eruption is told in the nearby Museu dos Capelinhos where photographs and maps trace the area's geological activity, showing how the black land is gradually coming back to life. Also shown are the lava formations created in the eruption.

Often cut off by stormy weather, the island of “Flowers” is a romantic outpost that was not permanently settled until the 16th century. A notorious hideout for pirates waiting to raid the treasure-laden Spanish galleons on their return to Europe, Flores was the scene of an epic battle in 1591 between the ship of the English commander Sir Richard Grenville and a fleet of Spanish ships. The battle was immortalized in a poem by Alfred Tennyson, The Revenge (the name of Grenville’s ship).

This westernmost island of the Azores is 17 km (10 miles) long and extremely mountainous. Its name derives from the abundance of flowers growing in its ravines, and the prospect of wilderness draws adventurous walkers here during the summer. The capital, Santa Cruz, is enlivened by the enthusiastically run Museu das Flores, housed in the former Franciscan convent. Its displays include shipwreck finds, Azorean pottery, furniture and agricultural tools, as well as fishing rods and a guitar made from whalebone. The convent church of São Boaventura, erected in 1641, has a beautiful carved cedarwood chancel.

Hydrangeas growing in the mountains of Flores

The southern half of the island is the most scenic. The deep, verdant valleys are punctuated with dramatic peaks and volcanic crater lakes and caves. Yams and sweet potatoes grow in the fertile soil. The tranquil Lagoa Funda (Deep Lake), 25 km (15 miles) southwest of Santa Cruz, is a large crater lake at the base of a mountain. Visible from the main road just west of the lake, are the strange vertical rock formations of the Rocha dos Bordões formed by solidified basalt.

The winding road continues northwards over the mountains and, as the road descends towards the west coast, there are stunning views of the green valley and village of Fajãzinha. The resort of Fajã Grande, ringed by cliffs, is a popular base for walkers and impressive waterfalls plunge into the sea from the high cliffs. A short walk north from the town is the Cascata da Ribeira Grande, a towering jet of water that divides into smaller waterfalls before collecting in a still pool.

Corvo lies 24 km (15 miles) northeast of Flores. The smallest island in the Azores, it has just one settlement, Vila Nova, and is blissfully undeveloped, with only two taxis and one policeman. The entire island is the blown top of the marine volcano, Monte Gordo. An ethereal green crater, the Lagoa do Caldeirão, squats at its northern end. Its rim can be reached by road, after which there is a steep descent down to the crater floor 300 m (984 ft) below. In its centre, the crater is dotted with serene lakes and islands; a patchwork of stone-walled fields covers part of the slopes.

WHERE TO STAY

Portugal offers a wide range of accommodation, from luxury hotels and restored palaces to family-run hostels and self-catering apartments. The majority of the country's hotels are in Lisbon, Oporto and on the Algarve and Estoril coasts. Elsewhere, outside of the main towns, hotels are relatively scarce. This shortage is made up for by a number of schemes offering accommodation in traditional or historic buildings often set in lovely countryside. These all require advance booking, as rooms are in short supply.

Porter at Lisbon's luxurious Lapa Palace (see p384)

Self-catering options include purpose-built apartments in cities and resorts, and converted country villas and farmhouses, all offering flexibility and good value. It is worth remembering that all rooms are cheaper outside high season. Accommodation in Lisbon divides between top-flight hotels and basic lodging with little choice in between. The hotels listed on pages 382–405 have been selected from every price category and represent the best value in each area.

TYPES OF HOTEL

Lodgings in Portugal come at all levels of comfort and cost. There are two main types, as classified by the Portuguese tourist authority: hotels and pensões. Hotels are distinguished mainly by the fact that they take up an entire building and are often purpose-built. Pensões are always housed in shared premises, typically occupying several floors of a residential building. Apartment-hotels are essentially flats with self-catering apartments, offering most or all of the services that normal hotels do.

All hotels and pensões are meant to provide meals. If they only offer breakfast their name must have residencial added to it. It is always best to check, however, as the official regime is often merely official. There are also plenty of lodgings that operate without classification.

Estalagens (estalagem in the singular), are usually located outside of city centres and must have a garden. Albergarias are the top category of pensão, which means that their facilities are on the same level as 4- or 5-star hotels (see page 377 for information on gradings).

POUSADAS

Pousadas are a special type of lodgings. They come in two categories: regional and historical. Regional pousadas are country inns offering a high level of comfort, often located in scenic, sometimes remote, areas. Historical pousadas are housed in converted castles, convents or palaces and offer excellent service and luxury accommodation as well as memorable historical and architectural surroundings. With the exception of two mountain inns on Madeira that use "pousada" in their names, all pousadas are state-owned, and are run as a chain by the Pestana company.

HOTEL CHAINS

International luxury groups such as Le Meridien and Orient-Express are represented in the Algarve and Madeira, as well as in Oporto and the Lisbon area. Smaller luxury groups include Tivoli Hotels – with three hotels in Lisbon, two in Sintra, three in the Algarve and one each in Madeira, Oporto and Coimbra – and the Pestana Group, with eight hotels in Madeira, five in the Algarve, and one each in Cascais, Lisbon and Oporto.

Hotel Tivoli Almansor in the resort of Carvoeiro, the Algarve (see p401)

Lower down the scale, Choice Hotels Portugal operates a number of hotels in its Comfort Inn and Quality Inn categories in the Lisbon area and the north of the country, while Best Western has 17 hotels country-wide. IBIS hotels are also well represented with hotels that are frequently located outside cities and towns, but offer very good value for money.

GRADINGS

The Portuguese tourist authority rates hotels with one to five stars (five being the top rating) and pensões in four categories (albergaria is the top rating, followed by 1st to 3rd category). Apart-hotels are rated with two to five stars. These ratings are based on a fixed set of criteria which covers most aspects of comfort. They do not, however, take into account more subjective factors such as view, atmosphere or the staff's service-mindedness.

It is important to remember that hotels and pensões are rated separately from top to bottom. In other words, a one or two-star hotel will always have a lower level of comfort – and lower prices – than an albergaria or even a 1st-category pensão.

All rated establishments are meant to have a sign by the entrance showing their rating, but as the system has been changed recently, these are not always up-to-date.

PRICES

In Portugal, establishments are free to decide their own prices, but all tariffs must be clearly displayed at reception and in the rooms. The cost of the room usually includes all taxes and a continental breakfast. Other meals are charged as extras. It is sometimes possible to bargain for a better rate, especially outside the high season. As a rule, the cost of a single room is around 60 to 75 per cent of the cost of a double room.

Tourist areas, such as the Algarve and Estoril coasts, and Madeira and the Azores, can be expensive. But prices drop substantially outside the peak months of the summer. In Lisbon and Oporto however, many business-oriented hotels charge the same rates throughout the year.

Pousadas have two rates for low (Nov–Mar except New Year, Carnival and Easter) and high (Apr–Oct) season. In Madeira, Christmas and New Year are seen as high season.

BOOKINGS

You will need to book in advance for all tourist areas in the high season. Much of the accommodation in the Algarve and around the Estoril coast is mass booked by tour operators. For Madeira, Lisbon and Oporto, book ahead regardless of the season. Most receptionists speak English so it should not be a problem to book by phone. Deposits are not usually required, but a written confirmation by email or fax, including a credit card number, may be requested.

Pousadas can be booked through Pestana or at the pousadas website, which also has plenty of information. The Portuguese tourist authority, Direcção-Geral do Turismo, publishes two official guides which are revised regularly: Alojamento Turístico, (Tourist Accommodation) and Turismo no Espaço Rural (Tourism in the Country).

These list all of the establishments rated by the authority, but only the latter contains any descriptions of individual settings, services or surroundings.

RURAL ACCOMMODATION

The choice of accommodation in Portugal is vastly enhanced by the possibility for visitors to stay in private manors, country houses or on farms, usually, but not always situated in the countryside and usually, but not always, with the owners in residence.

This Turismo no Espaço Rural (Tourism in the Country) falls into four main categories: Turismo de Habitação (TH), which are manors or palatial houses of recognised historical and/or architectural value, including interiors and furnishings; Turismo Rural (TR), country houses typical of their region and located in or near a village; Agroturismo (AG), houses that form part of a working farm; and Casas de Campo (CC), country houses that offer lodging in which the owners may be in residence.

Elegant dining room in a rural hotel setting

Most of the grandest Turismos de Habitação are to be found in the Minho region in the north. However, there are now four owner's associations in Portugal who offer information and a booking facility.

The annual publication Turismo no Espaço Rural lists all the houses. Bookings can be made through agents or directly through the owners.

RESORT ACCOMMODATION

Portugal's resort accommodation is mainly situated along the Algarve and Estoril coasts. The most convenient way to book accommodation is to make prior arrangements through a travel agent or tour operator. Hotel prices can drop considerably outside high season, and it is often possible to get a very good deal at less popular times of the year, when there are also fewer crowds to contend with.

The tourist village or Aldeamento Turístico is a unique feature of resort areas such as the Algarve. These self-contained complexes offer well-furnished and fitted private apartments and usually provide a range of sports facilities, beaches, pools, restaurants, bars and sometimes a supermarket.

These complexes are graded from three to five stars.

Apartamentos Turísticos (Tourist Apartments) do not have the hotel-style facilities of the tourist villages but are ideal for those who require flexibility and independence. They are generally purpose-built modern buildings in resort areas that offer self-catering accommodation.

These Tourist Apartments also carry quality gradings of between two and five stars.

The luxurious Tivoli Marinotel at the resort of Vilamoura in the Algarve (see p403)

BUDGET ACCOMMODATION

Youth hostels in Portugal (Pousadas de Juventude) are mainly dotted along the coast, and include two in the Azores. There are 47 in total and they are open all through the year, but advance booking is advisable in the summer. They require a valid IYHF card which can be obtained from any Youth Hostel Association. Facilities vary greatly, and may include the use of a kitchen, bar and swimming pool. Some also offer facilities for disabled travellers. Information is available from Movijovem, the head office of the Portuguese Youth Hostel Association.

Almost as cheap as youth hostels, and offering greater privacy, rooms (quartos) in private houses will invariably cost less than a pensão. This type of accommodation is often rented out in resorts, and lists of quartos are available from the local tourist office.

CAMPING AND CARAVANNING

There are over 100 official campsites in Portugal in total. Most are along the coast, usually in attractive locations. The largest is at Albufeira in the Algarve, but most are small and quiet. There is a national chain of campsites run by the company Orbitur.

Generally you pay a rate for the tent and per person, and an extra charge for showers and parking. The Portuguese Tourist Office will provide lists of campsites and information. You will need an international camping carnet, available from motoring organizations or the Camping and Caravanning Club in Great Britain. This provides third party insurance cover and entitles holders to some out-of-season discounts.

Provided you show due care and consideration for the environment, it is possible to camp outside official sites in the countryside, except for the Algarve, where it is strictly forbidden to stray from the sites.

São Miguel campsite, near Odemira in the Alentejo region

CHILDREN

Children are as welcome as adult visitors to Portugal and families are well catered for. Some hotels give children under eight years old a 50 per cent discount on the price of accommodation and meals.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

Hotels with facilities for the disabled are listed by the Portuguese National Tourist Office, who also produce a leaflet with useful information. Some campsites and youth hostels provide special facilities and these are listed by relevant organizations, and in a guide published by the Secretariado Nacional de Reabilitação.

The Pousadas of Portugal

Pousada symbol

The concept of the pousada dates from the 1940s, when the Portuguese government decided to establish a national network of state-run country inns, offering "hospitality in keeping with the style and tradition of the region". Pousadas are often set in remote, scenic locations, and most have fewer than 30 rooms, so visitors can expect friendly, personalized service and a high degree of comfort. This map does not show all of Portugal's pousadas, just the 38 that are described in the listings on pages 382–405.

Pousada Conde de Ourém, located within the medieval walled town of Ourém, offers breathtaking views of the Seica River valley. This pousada is the ideal base from which to explore this interesting area of Portugal, including the Shrine of Fatima and the Convento do Cristo at Tomar (see p390).

Pousada do Castelo, in the walled town of Óbidos, is situated in a beautifully restored palace inside the 15th-century castle keep. The pousada combines a medieval atmosphere with all modern comforts and a highly recommended restaurant (see p390).

Pousada de Palmela boasts an elegant interior, commanding hilltop views over the town of Palmela and the Atlantic Ocean, and an illustrious history. It is a thoughtful conversion of a monastery which was the headquarters of the Portuguese Knights of Santiago in the 13th century (see p387).

Pousada do Infante occupies a spectacular cliff-top position in the most southwesterly town of Europe, Sagres. The terrace restaurant of this purpose-built pousada has magnificent views over the Atlantic Ocean (see p402).

Pousada de Murtosa/Torreira-Ria near the port of Aveiro has 19 bedrooms, most with balconies overlooking the lagoon of Ria de Aveiro (see p391).

Pousada da Rainha Santa Isabel dominates the town of Estremoz and the surrounding countryside. In the 13th century, the site of the pousada was home to King Dinis and his wife Queen Isabel (see p399).

Pousada dos Lóios in Évora has been converted from a 15th-century monastery. Adjacent to the remains of a Roman temple of Diana, it features an elegant dining room set in the original monastic cloisters and a Neo-Classical façade that dates from the mid-18th century (see p399).

Pousada de São Francisco is located in the heart of the old Roman town of Beja at the centre of the sun-baked plains of the southern Alentejo. The building incorporates parts of a former Franciscan convent, dating back to the 13th century. It was opened as a pousada in 1994 (see p398).

WHERE TO EAT

Portugal is the country to feast on all kinds of fish and seafood, from clams, lobster and sardines to tuna, swordfish and bacalhau (salted cod), the national favourite. All along the coast are restaurants dedicated to cooking freshly caught fish. The Portuguese are great meat eaters too and justifiably proud of such dishes as roast kid and sucking pig. While meat may be more common in inland regions, fresh fish is available throughout Portugal. Most restaurants are reasonably priced, and offer generous portions. Lisbon has plenty of cheap cafés and restaurants, as well as international ones, as does the Algarve. This introduction gives tips on types of eating places, menus, drinks and ordering to help you enjoy eating out in Portugal.

TYPES OF RESTAURANTS

Eating venues come in all shapes and sizes and at all price levels. Among the most reasonable is the local tasca or tavern, often just a room with half-a-dozen tables presided over by a husband-and-wife team. These are often frequented by locals and professionals at lunch time, which is a good lead to follow. The casa de pasto offers a budget three-course meal in a large dining room, while a restaurante is more formal and offers a wider choice of dishes. At a marisqueira (found all along the coast), the emphasis is on fresh fish and seafood. The churrasqueira, a very popular concept imported from Brazil, specializes in spit-roasted foods, while a cervejaria (beerhouse) is the ideal place to go for a beer and a snack. As a rule, restaurants in the better hotels are generally of good quality. Pousadas (see pp380–81), found throughout the country, offer a network of high-quality restaurants featuring regional specialities.

Sign for Maria Rita's (see p421)

EATING HOURS

Lunch is usually served between 1 and 3 pm when many restaurants, especially in cities, get very crowded.

Dinner is served from 7 to 10pm in most places, but can be later in restaurants and cervejarias in major cities and resort areas such as Lisbon, Oporto and the Algarve. Another choice for a very late dinner would be to combine a meal with a show at a fado house (see pp64–5), open from about 9:30pm to 3 or 4am.

RESERVATIONS

It is a good idea to book ahead for expensive restaurants, and for those in popular locations in high season. Disabled people should certainly check in advance on facilities and access. Special facilities are generally lacking but most places will try to be helpful.

THE MENU

Some restaurants, especially in tourist areas, offer an ementa turística, a cheap, daily-changing three-course menu served with coffee and a drink (glass of wine, beer, water or soft drink). This provides a full meal at a good price with no hidden costs. Lunch, almoço, is often a two-course fixed menu, consisting of a fish or meat main course with potatoes or rice and either a starter or a pudding. To sample a local speciality, ask for the prato do dia – dish of the day.

Sharing the local veal specialty at Gabriela's, in Sendim (see p422)

Dinner (jantar) may be two or more courses, perhaps followed by ice cream, fruit, a simple dessert or cheese. Casserole-style dishes, such as fish or meat stews or carne de porco à alentejana (pork with clams), are brought to the table in a pot for people to share, as are large fish such as sea bass, which are sold by weight. One serving can easily be shared by two people and it is perfectly acceptable to ask for a meia dose or half-portion. Peculiar to Portugal is the plate of assorted appetizers – olives, cheese and sardine pâté – brought with bread at the start of a meal. These are not included in the menu price, and may add substantially to the bill.

VEGETARIANS

Vegetarians will not eat as well as fish lovers, although local cheeses and breads can be excellent. In Lisbon or along the Algarve, vegetarians will benefit from ethnic restaurants. Chefs will usually be happy to provide something meatless, though this will probably mean simply an omelette or a salad.

WINE AND DRINKS

It would be a shame to visit Portugal without sampling its two most famous fortified wines: port (see pp254–5) and Madeira (see p351). Wherever you are, it is safe to order a bottle or jug of house wine to wash down your meal.

Otherwise, ask for the wine list, and choose one of Portugal's many native wines (see pp28–9). Sagres and Super Bock are good beers and the bottled water is recommended. This comes either com gás (sparkling) or sem gás (still).

CAFÉS AND CAKE SHOPS

Cafés are fundamental to Portuguese daily life and vary from modern white rooms to splendidly decorated, tiled and mirrored places where you can sit and talk or read the paper for hours. Many have tables outside. They make perfect meeting points and usually offer a range of snacks and sandwiches. At any time of the day a café is the obvious choice for a coffee break with a roll, croissant or cake. Do not miss the pastelarias (cake shops); the sweet-toothed Portuguese adore cakes, and the selections are excellent (see p229).

PAYING THE BILL

It is common practice to add a 5–10 per cent tip to bills. Although service is not included, it provides a low wage which the tip is meant to supplement. Note that not all restaurants accept credit cards.

CHILDREN

In Portugal, children are viewed as a blessing rather than a nuisance, so it is an ideal country for families to eat out together. Children's portions or half-portions at reduced prices are advertised or will be provided on request.

SMOKING

Smoking is widespread and permitted in all public places in Portugal, unless there is a sign saying proibido fumar. No-smoking areas in restaurants are fairly rare.

COFFEE DRINKING IN PORTUGAL

Coffee is widely drunk in Portugal and served in many forms. The most popular is a small cup of strong black coffee like an espresso. In Lisbon and the South this is called uma bica; elsewhere ask for um café. A strong one is called uma italiana; for a weaker version, try um carioca de café. Uma meia de leite is half coffee, half milk. Strong coffee with a dash of milk is known as um garoto escuro (um garoto claro is quite milky). If you like your coffee with plenty of milk, ask for um galão (a gallon). This is served in a tall glass, and again you can order um galão claro (very milky) or escuro (strong).

LISBON

ALCÂNTARA Alcântara Café

Rua Maria Luísa Holstein 15, 1300-388 Tel 213 637 176

Map 3 A4

Opened in the 1980s, this remains a classic Lisbon dining venue. The vast interior is styled on the Nautilus, the submarine from Jules Verne's Twenty Thousand Leagues Under The Sea. The menu reflects new Portuguese cuisine and is crammed with specialities like salmon escalopes. Impressive wine list. Reservations a must.

ALFAMA Hua-Ta-Li

Rua dos Bacalhoeiros 109-115, 1100-068 Tel 218 879 170

Map 7 C4

This large and popular Chinese restaurant is located in a semi-pedestrianized street close to the docks. A long list of great soups and all the regular rice and noodle dishes are available, plus one or two surprises such as prawn casserole and frogs' legs with chillis. Service is swift and somewhat hurried, but the portions are generous and well presented.

ALFAMA Lautasco

Beco do Azinhal 7a (off Rua de São Pedro), 1100-067 Tel 218 860 173

Map 8 E4

Rustically decorated with wooden panelling and wagon-wheel chandeliers, Lautasco specializes in typical Portuguese cuisine that can be enjoyed on the outside terrace. Decorative streamers and colourful spotlights enhance an already atmospheric setting and the restaurant is extremely popular in summer. Reservations recommended. Closed Sun.

ALFAMA Mestre André

Calçadinha de Santo Estevão 6, 1100-502 Tel 218 871 487

Map 8 E3

Lively Portuguese restaurant offering delicious pork and fish dishes as well as excellent churrasco (spit-roasted meat). During the summer months, tables are set outside on a terrace. The restaurant can be reached from the cathedral (see p36) via a network of narrow alleys, a walk that is bound to work up an appetite. Closed Sun.

AMOREIRAS Mezzaluna

Rua Artilharia Um 16, 1250-039 Tel 213 879 944

Map 5 A4

This attractive restaurant, in a quiet neighbourhood, is arguably one of the best Italian restaurants in the city. On the menu are classics like spaghetti alla carbonara, tagliatelle with shrimp and vodka sauce, and lemon mecceroni, an inspired combination of leek, salmon and capers with cognac cream sauce. Marvellous wine list. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

AVENIDA Os Tibetanos

Map 4 F1

Perfumed with incense and decorated with Tibetan prayer flags and images of the Dali Lama, this informal restaurant is an oasis for vegetarians. The imaginative and healthy menu is full of suggestions like tofu com pesto e queijo de cabra (tofu with pesto and goat's cheese). There's an open-air terrace at the rear of the building. Closed Sat & Sun.

AVENIDA Ribadouro

Map 4 F1

On the corner of Avenida da Liberdade in a long, pointed building, Ribadouro is a great place to meet after a late film or show. Roomy, functional but with prompt service, the menu reads like a fisherman's wish list: oysters, buzios (whelks), crab, lobster and other seafood (all priced by the kilogram) stand alongside more conventional meat dishes.

BAIRRO ALTO Bota Alta

Travessa da Queimada 35-37, 1200-364 Tel 213 427 959

Map 7 A3

In the heart of Lisbon's bohemian quarter, the popular "High Boot" has an attractive interior, decorated with original paintings and ceramics, including an enormous clay boot placed on the bar. The menu is traditional Portuguese and includes costeletas fumados à algarvia (smoked ribs Algarve style) and bacalhau real (codfish). Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

BAIRRO ALTO Buenos Aires

Calçada Escadinhas do Duque 31b, 1200-155 Tel 213 420 739

Map 7 A3

The generous cuts of Argentine beef served with potatoes and a crispy green salad are the obvious choice at this decorative eatery that draws a young, attractive crowd. Cosy and intimate, the walls are festooned with colourful cards and posters. The menu features some truly memorable chocolate desserts. Reservations recommended. Closed Sun.

BAIRRO ALTO CasanostraTravessa do Poço da Cidade 60, 1200-334 Tel 213 425 931

Map 7 A3

A favourite haunt of Lisbon's artistic and intellectual set, this Italian restaurant is renowned for its creative six-page menu. Popular choices include penne all'arrabiata (pasta with bacon smothered in hot tomato and garlic sauce). The wine list has been carefully chosen to complement each dish. Closed Mon & Sat lunch.

BAIRRO ALTO A CharcuteriaRua do Alecrim 47a, 1200-015 Tel 213 423 845

Map 7 A4

This is one of the best places in Lisbon to experience traditional Alentejo fare, and it's all about authentic cooking without the frills. Using fresh, seasonal produce, the kitchen conjures up regional delights such as canja (consommé) of partridge, sea bass with clams and dogfish soup. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

BAIRRO ALTO Imperio dos SentidosRua da Atalaia 35-7, 1200-037 Tel 213 431 822

Map 4 F2

Snuggling inside an early 20th-century building, this understated eatery, though not billed as a seafood restaurant, nonetheless entices clients with dishes such as pasta with creamed spinach sauce and shrimp, and salmon loin in red wine sauce. It's also well known for desserts, especially the hot chocolate "petit gâteau" with mint sauce. Closed Mon.

BAIRRO ALTO Pap'AçordaRua da Atalaia 57, 1200-037 Tel 213 464 811

Map 4 F2

One of Lisbon's great gastronomic landmarks, this establishment was one of the first to modernize Portuguese food and remains one of the most successful restaurants in the city. Both Lisboetas and tourists come here for the delicious açorda de mariscos (bread stew and seafood). Comprehensive wine list. Reservations essential. Closed Sun & Mon.

BAIRRO ALTO Tavares RicoRua da Misericórdia 35-37, 1200-270 Tel 213 421 112

Map 7 A4

A revered institution with a more than 200-year-old history, this rich heritage makes Tavares a very special place to dine. Fashioned in gilt and walled with mirrors, the restored dining room exudes 18th-century charm and elegance. The menu is modern, international gourmet cuisine, with an outstanding wine list. Closed Sun, and Mon & Sat lunch.

BAIXA MuniRua dos Correeiros 115-117, 1100-163 Tel 213 428 982

Map 7 B4

Discreet and unassuming, this delightful restaurant does justice to traditional Portuguese fare. Taster dishes include an excellent octopus salad and peixinhos da horta (runner beans deep-fried in crispy batter). The cabrito assado no forno (oven-baked kid) is as succulent as you'll get anywhere. Wine stocked from every region in Portugal. Closed Sat & Sun.

BAIXA Terreiro do PacoLisbon Welcome Centre, Praça do Comércio, 1100-148 Tel 210 312 850

Map 7 A5

Tucked under a colonnaded building overlooking Praça do Comércio, this is a wonderful example of how 18th-century elegance can be enriched by 21st-century style. There are two restaurants – downstairs for light dishes, upstairs for an à la carte menu paying homage to Portugal's great culinary traditions. Excellent wine list. Closed Sun eve & Sat lunch.

BELÉM Rosa dos MaresRua de Belém 110, 1300-085 Tel 213 621 811

Map 1 C4

This attractive restaurant is named after a seafaring legend dating from the era of Discoveries. After months at sea, a crewmember spied roses floating in the water. The flowers heralded land. Overjoyed, the deckhand collected the roses and upon return to Portugal presented them to the queen. Naturally, specialities here are fresh seafood. Closed Mon.

BELÉM Ja SeiAvenida Brasília 202, 1400-038 Tel 213 015 969

Map 1 B5

This restaurant sits right at the edge of a small lake that's situated in front of the Monument to the Discoveries, with the river beyond. At night the monument is illuminated and the view from a waterside table is quite remarkable. So is the food, with a seafood-based menu that includes grilled catch of the day. Closed Sun eve and Mon.

BELÉM BBC - Belém Bar CaféAvenida de Brasília - Pavilhão Poente, 1300-598 Tel 213 624 232

Map 2 E4

Slick and sophisticated interior design at this fashionable riverside restaurant. The refined dining environment is further enhanced with one glance at the menu. Starters like tuna tartare with ginger and fresh herbs and main courses like one-sided salmon with plantain, lime chutney and cuttlefish ink gives some idea of the chef's ingenuity. Closed Sun.

BELÉM Vela LatinaDoca do Bom Sucesso, 1400-038 Tel 213 017 118

Map 1 B5

The relatively high prices here reflect Vela Latina's enviable waterfront location and its menu of classic, well-prepared Portuguese cuisine. Choices include lobster-filled crepes and fillet of hake with rice. There is a peaceful, unhurried air and of course, the view of the Tagus River and nearby Torre de Belém is priceless. Closed Sun.

CAMPO DE OURIQUE Tasquinha d'AdelaideRua do Protaçinio 70-74, 1350-231 Tel 213 962 239

Map 3 C2

The menu choice at this cosy restaurant has its origins in the Tras-os-Montes and as such diners can feast on regional dishes like rojões à transmontana (fried pork Tras-os-Montes) and paletilha e sela de borrego no forno (saddle of oven-racked lamb). A wide variety of wines are available to suit the palate. Arrive early to beat the locals. Closed Sun.

CAMPO PEQUENO Rodízio Grill

Map 5 C1

Large, well-ordered restaurant built to serve a high turnaround of custom. The menu lists 40 starters alone! The theme is South American and dishes include the Brazilian BBQ – ribs of buffalo flavoured with spicy garlic and served with black beans and banana fritters. The buffet “pay as you weigh” price depends on how much you stack on your plate.

CAMPO PEQUENO Clube dos Empresários

Map 5 C2

This splendid restaurant is housed in a 1906 mansion. Originally founded as a place where politicians and businessmen could socialize, the dining experience is enhanced by original period furniture, antique artifacts and a French-influenced menu. It's a venue to dress for, but the owners insist that the casually attired are welcome for lunch. Closed Sun.

CAMPOLIDE Aya

Galerias Twin Towers, Rua Campolide 531, 1060-034 Tel 217 271 115

Map 5 A4

Arguably the city's best Japanese restaurant, Aya's ambiance is one of low lights and hushed conversation, a relaxing way to enjoy the tempting selection of tempura, sushi and sashimi and some wonderful noodle dishes. Service here is polite and dignified, and worth the effort of heading off the beaten track to find. Reservations recommended.

CASTELO Restô do Chapitô

Costa do Castelo 7, 1149-079 Tel 218 855 550

Map 7 C3

Chapitô is actually a school for performing arts and the cheerful ambiance is carried through to the informal restaurant where you can enjoy dishes like steak with mustard sauce, trout with bacon and flame grilled sausages. Some tables offer incredible views of downtown Lisbon. Live jazz enlivens the weekends and the place can get very busy in summer.

CASTELO Casa do Leão

Castelo de São Jorge, 1100-129 Tel 218 875 962

Map 8 D3

Chef's suggestions here include the excellent goat cheese terrine with cherry tomato confit followed by leg of duck with rataouille. The restaurant is incorporated into the grounds of Castelo de São Jorge (see pp76-7); customers must book in advance to ensure the entrance fee is deducted from their bill. On warm days, tables are set outside.

CHIADO La Brasserie de l'Entrecôte

Rua do Alecrim 117, 1200-016 Tel 213 473 616

Map 7 A4

There's only one fixed menu here, a crunchy green salad garnished with pine nuts and French dressing followed by prime cutlets of entrecôte steak, prepared as you wish, swamped in a cream and herb sauce and served with finger-thin French fries. There is a choice of 3 desserts. You can't book ahead, so arrive early for a table.

GRAÇA Via Graça

Map 8 D1

Via Graça is perched on the edge of a hill, serving a panorama that showcases the landmark Castelo de São Jorge. The late Hollywood actor Anthony Quinn used to come here when he was in town. The well-presented Portuguese cuisine includes dishes like lombino de javali braseado (wild boar). Excellent wine list. Closed Sat & Sun lunch.

LAPA Picanha

Rua das Janelas Verdes 96, 1200-692 Tel 213 975 401

Map 4 D4

For a set price you can eat all you want, but the meal is based around one ingredient: picanha, which is rump steak grilled on an open fire. Tread carefully and you'll have room for dessert, the choice of which includes cheesecake, chocolate mousse and tropical fruit. The interior is decorated with some beautiful azulejo tiles. Closed Sat eve & Sun.

LAPA Sua Excelência

Map 4 D3

At “His Excellency”, in Lisbon's diplomatic quarter, the proprietor can recite the menu in five languages. The food is classic Portuguese, with the cogumelos salteados em manteiga com natas e vinho da Madeira (fried mushrooms in a butter, cream and Madeira wine sauce) just one example of the chef's creativity. Booking advised. Closed Sat & Sun lunch.

LAPA A Confraria

Pensão York House, Rua das Janelas Verdes 32, 1200-691 Tel 213 962 435

Map 4 D3

This charming hotel restaurant offers an eclectic menu and a delightful setting. Customers can sit inside and admire the tiled walls, or outside below a palm in the flower-laden garden. The cuisine is typically Portuguese and includes monkfish in a mustard sauce and partridge in a vinegar-flavoured marinade. The wine list features earthy Douro reds.

LAPA Ristorante Hotel Cipriani

Lapa Palace, Rua do Pau da Bandeira 4, 1249-021 Tel 213 949 494

Map 3 C3

Sumptuous gourmet dining in the luxury Lapa Palace Hotel. Seasonal menu with an emphasis on Italian cooking of the highest order. Specialities include carpaccio clássico do Cipriani (thinly sliced prime beef seasoned with classic Cipriani sauce) and tagliolini verdi gratinado com presunto (homemade green thin noodles with ham “au gratin”). Top wine list.

MARQUÊS DE POMBAL Marisqueira Santa Marta

Travessa do Enviado de Inglaterra 1d, 1150-139 Tel 213 525 638

Map 5 C5

At lunchtime, this place heaves with hungry mouths and it's often difficult to get a table. The restaurant is known for its wide range of fish and shellfish dishes, as well as for a good choice of traditional Portuguese fare. Value for money and a loyal clientele is another reason why you might have to wait before taking your seat.

MARQUÊS DE POMBAL Pabe

Rua Alexandre Herculano 33a, 1250-008 Tel 213 546 079
Map 5 C5

This restaurant has a small lounge space that resembles the interior of a hunting lodge, with stuffed deer and boar heads staring down impassively from the wall. In fact, the whole place has a rural ambience and a décor to match. The menu is traditional Portuguese and is more likely to be enjoyed by city types than country folk. Closed Sun & Sat lunch.

MOURARIA Tentações de Goa
Rua S. Pedro Mártir 23, 1100-555 Tel 218 875 824
Map 7 C3

A hidden little gem tucked away in a cobblestone backstreet, this modest restaurant is the recipient of a best ethnic food award for its exotic Goan menu. Dishes include lentils with lamb, fish massala and baby shark. The service is prompt and friendly and great value for money, considering this is slap bang in the city centre. Closed Sun.

PRAÇA ESPANHA O Policia

Avenida de Berna 64, 1050-043 Tel 217 970 426
Map 5 B2

Located opposite the Gulbenkian Centre, the daily specials here are great value. The menu, bursting with Portuguese and Italian dishes, features a vegetarian selection and some wicked desserts, including vodka sorbet. This is a charming place to unwind, especially during the summer when you can enjoy your meal in the pleasant gardens. Closed Sun.

PRAÇAO DO CHILE Cervejaria Portugalia
Avenida Almirante Reis 117, 1115-014 Tel 213 140 002
Map 6 E5

This cavernous, atmospheric beer hall is the original of a national chain (see p137) and serves excellent seafood dishes like açorda de camarão (bread stew with prawns). The presuntos (cured hams) are also very good. A huge aquarium lines one side of the bar, where if you prefer you can just order a beer and soak in the atmosphere.

RATO Real Café
Map 4 E1

Between 1735 and 1835, this was a silk-manufacturing factory under Royal patronage. Later abandoned, the building was refurbished in 1995. Roomy, with a wood and stone interior decor and an al fresco ambience, starters here include spicy Mozambique prawns. The signature dish is entrecote à Real Fábrica – steak fit for a king. Closed Sun.

RATO Casa da Comida
€€€€€€
Travessa das Amoreiras 1, 1250-025 Tel 213 885 376
Map 5 B5

A refined restaurant with a charming patio overflowing with bouganvillia, this is a place to go for a romantic evening when good food is more important than price. The menu is haute cuisine in style and international in outlook, with caviar, frogs' legs, duck and pheasant. Naturally, the wine list is exceptional. Closed Sun and Mon & Sat lunch.

RESTAURADORES Casa do Alentejo
Map 7 A2

Visitors to this extraordinary 19th-century house are in for a surprise. Behind the unremarkable façade is a beautiful Moorish-style courtyard decorated with tiles inlaid with intricate Arabic calligraphy. Art exhibitions regularly take place here, as do choral recitals. The food is standard regional fare, but the exuberant surroundings more than compensate.

RESTAURADORES Solar dos Presuntos
Rua das Portas de Santo Antão 150, 1150-269 Tel 213 424 253
Map 7 A2

This restaurant is one of Lisbon's best places to sample presunto – leg of cured ham. The window display is devoted to hams and also allows passers-by to see cuts being prepared. Solar dos Presuntos is also well known for its fish and seafood dishes, and with a menu so rich in Portuguese culinary tradition reservations are advisable. Closed Sun.

RESTAURADORES Gambrinus
€€€€€€
Map 7 B2

One of the best seafood restaurants in the country, Gambrinus is exclusive and expensive. It is not only shellfish that attracts visitors, the menu lists Iranian Beluga caviar and truffle foie gras, among the starters. Fresh fish is the mainstay however, with a carefully selected choice available. The extensive wine list includes an array of vintage ports.

SALDANHA AntónioRua Tomás Ribeiro 63, 1050-226 Tel 213 538 780Map 5 C3

António's is a good stop for lunch. The cooking is straightforward and served up with a polite but no nonsense attitude. The portions are generous, with steak and fries or roast chicken a popular order. The dessert list leans heavily towards ice-cream. A handy take-away service is available and is considerably less than the sit-down price. Closed Sun.

SANTA APOLÓNIA Faz FiguraRua do Paraíso 15b, 1100-396 Tel 218 868 981Map 8 F2

The tables on the covered terrace at this fashionable restaurant are hard to come by given the dizzy views of the Tagus river, but if you're prepared to wait you can linger over a drink in the bar. The menu is eclectic, with traditional Portuguese cuisine and dishes with an international twist. Children and vegetarians are catered for. Closed Mon lunch.

SANTA APOLÓNIA Bica do SapatoAvenida Infante Dom Henrique, at Cais da Pedra, 1900-000 Tel 218 810 320Map 8 F3

Part-owned by American actor John Malkovich, this trend-setting restaurant housed in a converted riverfront warehouse offers modern interpretations of Portuguese dishes in the gourmet area, bistro food in the café and a mix of Asian fusion and sushi specials upstairs. Minimalist decor and a soft jazz soundtrack. Booking advisable. Closed Sun & Mon lunch.

SANTA APOLÓNIO CasanovaAvenida Infante Dom Henrique, at Cais da Pedra, 1900-264 Tel 218 877 532Map 8 F3

This trendy Italian eatery has a prime position overlooking the river. A scribbled version of the menu is stencilled on the wall near the entrance and it's clear that pizzas are the speciality. They even offer an unusual but delicious chocolate-spread pizza as a dessert. Advance bookings are not accepted so it's first come, first served. Closed Mon & Tue lunch.

SANTOS KaisCais da Viscondessa, Rua da Cintura do Porto de Lisboa, 1200-109 Tel 213 932 930Map 4 D4

Superb example of how an old warehouse can be transformed into a fashionable venue, Kais is two restaurants in one. Downstairs is "Adega" where typical Portuguese food is served. Upstairs, a refined international menu caters to discerning palates in an industrial chic setting. 200 wines from around the world. Reservations essential. Closed Sun.

SÃO BENTO TrivialRua da Palmeira 44a, 1200-314 Tel 213 473 552Map 4 F2

An informal atmosphere and discreet service has won this small and intimate restaurant a loyal patronage. Traditional Portuguese cuisine is the mainstay, with beefsteak the speciality. It's prepared either with mushrooms and pepper, Roquefort cheese or even vermouth! Parking in the vicinity is a real problem so avoid arriving by car. Closed Sun.

SÃO BENTO ConventualPraça das Flores 45, 1200-192 Tel 213 909 246Map 4 E2

Hugging one of Lisbon's most charming squares, this is a restaurant decorated with artifacts from convents. The menu reflects the Portuguese vernacular and offers some fine variations on regional cuisine. Specialities include duck and red pepper with a champagne sauce. The wine list suits all denominations. Closed Sun, and Mon & Sat lunch.

XABREGAS D'AvisRua do Grilo 96-98, 1950-146 Tel 218 681 354*

Located east of the city centre near the former Convento dos Grilos and on the same side of the street as the Igreja de São Bartolomeu, this popular rustic-styled venue has a menu influenced by southern Portuguese cooking. Try the cod with coriander and migas (bread-based stew with spare ribs). The wine list features Alentejo labels. Closed Sun.

THE LISBON COAST*ALCÁÇER DO SAL Dom Afonso IIPousada de Alcáçer do Sal, 7580-197 Tel 265 613 070Road map C5

Housed in the historic surrounds of the Pousada de Alcáçer do Sal, the menu here is influenced by the ocean and the river, with Sado fish soup a typical starter. The river also provides the main ingredient for the unusual tomato rice with fried eel. Other more conventional though no less creative choices include lamb stew with a pennyroyal cream.

CASCAIS Casa VelhaAvenida Valbom 1, 2750-508 Tel 214 832 586Road map B5

In the heart of Cascais, the property resembles a traditional farmhouse with a maritime themed interior, complete with mock oil lanterns over the tables. The menu is predominantly seafood, with caldeirada de peixe (fish stew) and cherna grelhado (grilled halibut) among the favourites. The kitchen also rustles up delicious paella. Closed Wed.

CASCAIS MayuraRua Freitas Reis 15b, 2750-357 Tel 214 846 540Road map B5

Flavours from the sub-continent abound at this restaurant located in a quiet neighbourhood away from the beach. The menu is what you'd expect from any quality curry house but the presentation is first class. Besides the tandoori specialities, the kitchen serves a variety of spicy Goan dishes. The ceiling is decorated with colourful Indian shawls.

CASCAIS Eduardo'sLargo das Grutas 3, 2750-367 Tel 214 831 901Road map B5

With its wooden panels and squat appearance, this Belgian-run restaurant could be mistaken for a forester's lodge. Inside, an aquarium forms part of a dividing wall. The food slants towards French European, with options like ragoût de borrego à flamenga (Flemish style lamb ragoût) and delicious sweet crepes. Closed Sun.

CASCAIS Mise en ScèneRua Luís Xavier Palmeirim 12a, 2750-000 Tel 214 842 313Road map B5

North Africa meets the Mediterranean at this atmospheric eatery. The mix of exotic Moroccan cuisine with French and Portuguese influences conspires to produce a colourful menu of intense flavour. Candlelit tables, big bright cushions and Moorish artwork add to the mystical Arabian Nights feel. Try the chicken tajine with a mint tea. Closed Tue.

CASCAIS O PescadorRua das Flores 10b, 2750-348 Tel 214 832 054Road map B5

This well-established seafood restaurant has lured Mick Jagger and Julio Iglesias, among many other famous personalities. It is decorated with quirky maritime artifacts. An ocean of choice leaps from the menu, with lobster soup, rose shrimp cocktail, spidercrab platter, swordfish steak and codfish cataplana. Closed Sun.

CASCAIS Gourmet Hotel MiragemAvenida Marginal 8554, 2754-536 Tel 210 060 600Road map B5

The Miragem's menu table d'hôte is a culinary roll call of some of the finest food on the coast, such as lobster cocotte with artichokes, truffles and piquillo, milk-fed veal medallions with citrus and pistachio pesto and asparagus risotto with wild mushrooms and parmesan cheese. The three restaurants here all offer international-influenced Portuguese cuisine.

CASCAIS Rosa MariaAvenida Rei Humberto de Itália 7, 2750-461 Tel 214 823 490Road map B5

Set in a remodelled 19th-century mansion but sporting a bright, airy modern look, Rosa Maria offers Mediterranean fusion cuisine cooked in a way that preserves its flavour and structure. Choices include pigeon breast with beluga lentils and foie gras sauce. The floor-to-ceiling windows afford a full view of the deck and the rocky coast beyond.

ERICEIRA O BarcoRua Capitão João Lopes 14, 2655-295 Tel 261 862 759Road map B5

Well situated on the seafront, O Barco practically opens out into the ocean, and the menu is orientated in the same direction. The fish specialities include feijoada de marisco (seafood and bean stew) and seafood curry. The daily specials are another option. Surprisingly for such a modest eatery, the wine list is more than adequate. Closed Mon eve & Tue.

ESTORIL Pinto'sArcadas do Parque 18b, 2765-087 Tel 214 687 247Road map B5

Close to the Palácio Hotel and with pleasant views across the esplanade gardens, Pinto's is a mix of bar, cafeteria and restaurant and is a great standby if you want a quick meal without breaking the bank. Pizzas, pastas, omelettes and burgers share the menu with a large selection of shellfish and some generous salads.

ESTORIL Estoril MandarinCasino Estoril, 2765-237 Tel 214 667 270Road map B5

Short of actually visiting China, this is the best place in Portugal to sample authentic Chinese cuisine. The Peking duck is sautéed, sliced and served wrapped in crisp lettuce leaves. Lunchtimes are a revelation, with delicious dim-sum a great choice. The menu also includes mini deep-fried spring rolls and shredded pork congee soup with egg. Closed Tue.

ESTORIL Four Seasons GrillHotel Palácio Estoril, Rua do Parque, 2765-000 Tel 214 680 400Road map B5

Located in the Palácio Hotel, this is one of Estoril's most sophisticated fine dining venues. Set within a stylishly designed mezzanine and lower floor, the restaurant's decor changes according to each season of the year. The à la carte menu shines with superb Portuguese and international cuisine and is done justice by an inspired wine list and attentive service.

GUINCHO Estalagem MuchaxoPraia do Guincho, 2750-642 Tel 214 870 221Road map B5

Housed in the estalagem of the same name, Muchaxo affords splendid views over Cabo da Roca, the most westerly point of the European mainland. The restaurant offers a good seafood menu, with the lobster in a tomato, cream and port sauce typical of the dishes on offer. The kitchen has its own shellfish beds, so fresh supply is constant.

GUINCHO Porto de Santa MariaEstrada do Guincho, 2750-642 Tel 214 879 450Road map B5

With its stunning location overlooking Guincho beach and the Sintra Hills, this attractive restaurant is very popular. The menu pays tribute to the ocean with stuffed crab, rock lobster, oyster and shrimp just for starters. One of the house specialities is fish backed in crusty bread smothered with olive oil and garlic. The wine cellar is exemplary. Closed Mon.

MONTE ESTORIL O SinaleiroAvenida de Sabóia 595, 2765-278 Tel 214 685 439

Unassuming but welcoming, O Sinaleiro divides itself between a bar and the restaurant proper. At first glance the menu appears to list fairly standard Portuguese fare, though the cooking is excellent. Look more closely though and you'll spy more unique fare like espetada mista de caça (barbecued wild boar and deer kebab). Closed Wed.

MONTE ESTORIL Com Sentido'sAvenida de Sabóia 515d, 2765-502 Tel 214 682 838*

Large, abstract canvasses adorn the walls of this fashionable restaurant and the care taken with the decor marries well with the time spent compiling the menu. Customers can opt for meals like the duck magrê in orange sauce or milk-fed veal cutlet confit with sautéed Swiss chard. The dessert list is equally appealing. Closed Sun & Mon lunch.

PAÇO D'ARCOS Aquarela do BrasilPraça 5 de Outubro 12, 2770-029 Tel 214 415 412Road map B5

There are times when this charming establishment resembles an art gallery more than a restaurant. Aquarela means watercolour but the owners encourage artists to submit work for the walls in all mediums. The Brazilian food is wonderful, with generous portions offered in a polite, easy-going manner. Expect some noisy banter. Closed Mon.

PALMELA Pousada do Castelo de PalmelaPousada do Castelo de Palmela, 2950-317 Tel 212 351 226Road map C5

The converted refectory of the 15th-century monastery provides a suitably romantic setting for a restaurant that offers discreet service in historic surroundings. The dining hall is part illuminated by chandelier that throws light across such delicacies as oyster soup or Dover sole in a beer marinade. The diverse cellar stocks several Muscatels.

PORTINHO DA ARRÁBIDA Beira-MarPortinho da Arrábida, 2925-378 Tel 212 180 544Road map C5

On warm days, the most sought-after tables are on the balcony overlooking the harbour. The stunning seaside setting helps whet the appetite for a robust selection of food and customers can enjoy specials such as arroz de tamboril (monkfish rice) and arroz de marisco (seafood rice). In summer, the sardines are a must! Closed Wed (in winter).

QUELUZ Cozinha VelhaLargo Palácio Nacional de Queluz, 2745-191 Tel 214 356 158Road map B5

Set in the old kitchens of the Queluz Royal Palace, this venerable restaurant draws on traditional Portuguese recipes. The building retains much of the 18th-century architecture, with the original stone chimney acting as a design centrepiece. The wealth of meat and fish dishes is complemented by excellent wines and a celebrated choice of desserts.

SESIMBRA RibamarAvenida dos Naufragos 29, 2970-637 Tel 212 234 853Road map C5

Comfortable, cheerful and flooded with light, Ribamar sits right on the waterfront and is considered one of the best restaurants in the region. Along with the sea views, it serves up some wonderfully original concoctions, and there's always something new on the menu. Be daring and opt for the fish with seaweed, or cream of sea-urchin soup.

SETÚBAL Copa d'OuroTravessa das Viçosas 15, 2900-663 Tel 265 523 755Road map C5

Plastic tables, plastic chairs and no standing on ceremony, this is the place to come for an enthusiastic, carefree night out, where the wine flows as easily as the beer. Here it's all about the sea: eel soup, seafood stew, grilled grouper and monkfish steamed a cataplana gives some idea of how the menu ebbs and flows. Closed Tue.

SETÚBAL Pousada de São FilipePousada de São Filipe, Castelo de São Filipe, 2900-300 Tel 265 550 070Road map C5

The pousada's restaurant, Fortaleza, offers a jaw-dropping view of Setúbal and the Sado estuary and if it's warm, tables are set outside on the esplanade. The ambience is late 16th-century Portugal and the food reflects the country's centuries-old culinary tradition, with pumpkin cream soup, fried red mullet and grilled lamb with orange sauce.

SINTRA MonserrateHotel Tivoli Sintra, Praça de República, 2710-616 Tel 219 237 200Road map B5

Housed in the Tivoli Hotel Sintra, this restaurant overlooks the lush, verdant Sintra valley, an inspiring view that is carried through to the Panorâmico bar. The international menu, which features dishes like costeletas de borrego fritas com batata duchesse (succulent fried lamb cutlets with duchess potatoes) changes daily.

SINTRA TulhasRua Gil Vicente 4-6, 2710-568 Tel 219 232 378Road map B5

The mysterious hole near the entrance is the last vestige of a series of medieval granaries that once stood here (the Portuguese word for granary is Tulhas). Small and down-to-earth, the homemade food is wholesome and great value. The veal steak in Madeira wine is particularly flavoursome, but leave room for the cheesecake. Closed Wed.

SINTRA Lawrence'sRua Consiglieri Pedroso 38-40, 2710-550 Tel 219 105 500Road map B5

The owners describe Lawrence's as a restaurant with rooms rather than a hotel, such is the esteem in which they hold this gourmet venue. Indeed, Lord Byron and William Beckford are just two of the historical figures said to have eaten here. The à la carte cuisine is served with finesse, and there are over 200 wines to choose from.

SINTRA Restaurante Palácio de SeteaisAvenida Earbosa du Bocage 8, Seteais, 2710-517 Tel 219 233 200Road map B5

The palace (now a hotel) is a breathtaking example of 18th-century splendour, and is home to a splendid gourmet restaurant. The grand dining room, decorated with mythological motifs and frescos, affords outstanding views of the landscaped gardens and the coast. The menu is essentially Portuguese haute cuisine, with a wine list to match.

Closed Mon; Sun evening (except Aug); 2 weeks in May & Dec.

FÁTIMA Restaurante Hotel Estalagem Dom Gonçalo

Rua Jacinto Marto 100, 2495-000 Tel 249 539 330

Road map C4

"O Convite", is a welcoming and popular restaurant space set in the charming Estalagem Dom Gonçalo. Tasty Portuguese fare like fillet of fish with prawn rice, or braised duck in orange sauce is served promptly and without fuss. The restaurant is very busy during Fátima's pilgrim dates, around the beginning of the second week in May and October.

FÁTIMA Tia Alice

Rua do Adro, 2495-557 Tel 249 531 737

Road map C4

Gastronomic tradition raised to a contemporary level makes this one of the hottest tables in town and a favourite culinary destination in May and October with Fátima's pilgrims. On the surface the food appears standard but the secret lies in the ingredients and preparation. House specialities include Trás-os-Montes-style rice. Closed Mon; Sun evening; Jul.

LEIRIA Tromba RiijaRua Professor Portelas 22, 2400-406 Tel 244 855 072Road map C4

A positive feast awaits those brave enough to attempt to savour Tromba's entire buffet selection of pesticos (snacks). The table groans under the weight of breads, sausages, cheeses, fresh fish and seafood, salads and more! Set meals include the belly-swelling pork and bean stew. Tue, Wed & Thu bookings only. Closed Mon; Sun evening; public holidays.

NAZARÉ O LuisSítio, 2450-065 Tel 262 551 826Road map C4

You have to take the funicular to Sítio to eat at this restaurant, located near the Nossa Senhora da Nazaré church. The interior is simple and discreet but has a homely feel missing from the better-known places in town. The speciality is o barco – a boat crammed with seafood of the day. The wine list includes refreshing vinho verde. Closed Thu.

NAZARÉ Mar BravoPaça Sousa Oliveira 71, 2450-159 Tel 262 569 160Road map C4

Set in the hotel of the same name, Mar Bravo's best feature is a glass wall affording dramatic views over the ocean. The meat and fish menu choice includes starters like grilled prawns in garlic or presunto Pata Negra (cured black pig ham). The chateaubriand à Mar Bravo (tenderloin steak) is a favourite house speciality.

ÓBIDOS O AlcaideRua Direita, 2510-001 Tel 262 959 220Road map B4

Snuggled inside the castle walls on the picturesque Rua Direita, this rustic little jewel of a restaurant offers delicious food in a cosy atmosphere. Inventive Portuguese and international cuisine colour the menu, such as the cod fritters stuffed with Serra cheese served with chestnuts and baked apple. Closed Wed.

ÓBIDOS CasteloPousada do Castelo, Paço Real, 2510-99 Tel 262 955 080Road map B4

Located in the pousada, which is part of the fairy-tale medieval castle, Castelo's unique location and stylish interior is mirrored in the food it serves, with lombo de robalo selvagem com feijão-verde e bata suada à limão (sea bass with green beans and pureed potato flavoured with lemon) just one of the well-presented gastronomic choices.

PENICHE EstelasRua Arquitecto Paulino Montês 21, 2520-294 Tel 262 782 435Road map B4

Estelas is situated in the town centre, next to the municipal market. The menu at the entrance lists just about every fish that can be caught in Portuguese waters including a local speciality, robalo à ilha da Berlanga (Berlanga sea bass) named after the nearby archipelago. The monkfish kebab, too, is a prize catch. Closed Wed & 2 weeks in Sep.

PENICHE Marisqueira CortiçaisPorto d'Areia Sul, 2520-000 Tel 262 787 262Road map B4

When Peniche lets its hair down and celebrates its festival of the sea (see p31) the first wave of revelry invariably takes place here. This may be because of its renowned filet mignon com rabos de lagosta (tender steak with broiled lobster tails) or the fact that it sits right on Cabo Carvoeiro beach. Closed Wed (Sep–Jul).

SANTARÉM Mal CozinhadoCampo da Feira, Emílio Infante da Câmara, 2000-014 Tel 243 323 584Road map C4

Don't be put off by the name – Mal Cozinhado (badly cooked). This hugely popular restaurant, just south of the town centre near the bullring, offers well-prepared, excellent value meals. Dishes include bacalhau com magusto (baked cod with green broth) and lombinhos de porco com coentros (pork with coriander). Closed Sun evening.

SANTARÉM Santo BecoQuinta do Gaio de Cima, EN3, Gaio, 2070-211 Tel 243 306 733Road map C4

Located in Cartaxo, south-west of Santarém, the interior of this smart, modern restaurant is washed in a sea of indigo. The constantly evolving menu leans towards traditional Portuguese cuisine. The chef's recommendations include queijo de cabra com farinheira (goat's cheese with spicy sausage) and the beef capachio. Closed Mon; Sun evening.

TOMAR A Bela VistaRua Marquês nPombal 6, 2300-510 Tel 249 312 870Road map C4

This restaurant has beautiful views of the River Nabão and the castle, and is situated right next to the old bridge. With all that for starters, main courses like cabrito no forno (roast kid) and caldeirada (fish stew) go down a treat. The flowered terrace exudes even more atmosphere during the summer months. Closed Mon evening; Tue; Nov.

TOMAR Calça Perra TajRua Pedro Dias 59, 2300-589 Tel 249 321 616Road map C4

Located in the gardens of a 16th-century house, this is Tomar's first Indian restaurant. The proprietor hails from Kerala, in southern India, and has brought with him an exotic menu of spicy dishes that includes a choice of chicken and lamb vindaloo and biryani options. Be sure to try the lassi de manga (mango lassi) – mango milkshake Indian style.

TOMAR Chico EliasRua Principal 70, Algarvias, 2300-302 Tel 249 311 067Road map C4

Family-run restaurant on the old road to Torres Novas, 2 km (1.2 miles) south of Tomar. The traditional recipes demand that much of the food be oven baked, and the chef is a dab hand at producing dishes like coelho na abóbora (rabbit with pumpkin). Book in advance – you can request a particular meal when doing so. Closed Sun eve, Tue; 1–15 Sep.

TORRES VERDES O Pátio do FaustinoLargo do Choupal, 2350-000 Tel 261 324 346Road map B5

O Pátio is a large, rustic restaurant decorated in an eclectic style. Some rooms are adorned with antiques and Roman-style amphorae, others festooned with colourful football scarves. The restaurant caters for groups as well as individuals but all seek the delicious grilled fish dishes that are the speciality here, and the pleasant atmosphere. Closed Sun evening.

VILA FRANCA DE XIRA O RedondelArcadas da Praça de Touros, 2600-000 Tel 263 272 973Road map C5

Housed under the elegant arches of the town's bullring, the restaurant's cuisine pays tribute to the cavaleiro (bullfighter) with such dishes as costeleta de novilho à matador (roasted ribs of prime beef). Other traditional Ribatejo dishes include açorda de sável (bread and shad fish stew). The wine list is a worthy match for the menu. Closed Mon.

THE BEIRAS*ALMEIDA Senhora das NevesPousada da Nossa Senhora das Neves, 6350-112 Tel 271 574 283Road map E2

Set in the pousada inside Almeida's curious star-shaped fort, this bright and airy restaurant manages to convey a sense of history despite the hotel's modern look. The well-presented regional cuisine is extremely wholesome. A typical meal includes fish soup starter, codfish stuffed with smoked ham or grilled kid with creamed potatoes and almond pudding.

AVEIRO Cozinha do ReiRua D. Manuel Neves 66, 3800-101 Tel 234 483 710Road map C3

The King's Kitchen serves the Hotel Dom Afonso V and is a large restaurant decorated in warm, inviting hues. The fish choice is exceptional, but it's the espetada real e vitela assada (royal veal kebab) that truly symbolizes the kitchen. The ovos moles de Aveiro (egg and sugar sweets) are a regional delicacy. Reservations recommended. Closed Sun evening.

AVEIRO Mercado do PeixeLargo da Praça do Peixe, 3800-243 Tel 234 383 511Road map C3

Situated directly above Aveiro's vibrant fish market and styled in a refreshingly modern, minimalist manner, the food at this restaurant is as fresh as it gets. Try the mussel soup as a starter. The caldeiradas (fish stews) are also excellent. A wonderful place at lunchtime to soak in the busy atmosphere of one of Portugal's busiest markets. Closed Sun evening.

AVEIRO O MercantelCais dos Mercantéis 13, 3800-105 Tel 234 428 057Road map C3

This used to serve as a warehouse and would take delivery of fresh fish stocks from the canal barges lined up against the quay. Today, an eager clientele charts a course to this voluminous restaurant for its outstanding array of fresh fish and seafood. A good meat selection is also available. There's some romantic waterfront views. Closed Mon.

BELMONTE Pousada do Convento de BelmonteSerra da Esperança, Belmonte, 6250-073 Tel 275 910 300Road map D3

The restaurant, in line with the rest of the building, preserves the historical architecture of the former Nossa Senhora da Esperança convent and affords a dramatic panorama of the Cova da Beira. Ambitious regional Portuguese food is served alongside modern dishes such as duck breast with jasmine sauce and trout layered with presunto (cured ham).

BUÇACO Palace Hotel BussacoPalace Hotel do Buçaco, 3050-261 Tel 231 937 970Road map C3

The dining room here is a Manueline fantasy, with an intricately carved balcony (see p212). Palatial in dimensions and replete with paintings by João Vaz, the restaurant's cuisine is classical French and traditional Portuguese. Local dishes include fisherman's stew and roast suckling pig from Bairrada. Buçaco's acclaimed wines are bottled in the basement.

CARAMULO Restaurante Estalagem de CaramuloAvenida Dr. Abel Lacerda, 3475-031 Tel 232 861 291Road map C3

The panoramic restaurant at this estalagem really does live up to its name – the views of the rugged Serra do Caramulo are outstanding! The food is typically Portuguese made all the more appetizing after a walk in the mountains. Dishes include arroz de pato á antiga (traditional-style duck rice).

CASTELO BRANCO Praça VelhaLargo Luís de Camões 17, 6000-000 Tel 272 328 640Road map D4

Situated in the old part of town, in an old granary transformed by visionary architects and interior designers, Praça Velha offers ambitious cuisine that combines traditional methods and modern creativity in dishes in like paella D. João V and lombo de porco com molho agridoce (pork with corn). Wines from the Beira region figure prominently. Closed Mon.

COIMBRA DemocráticaTravessa Rua Nova 7, 3000-000 Tel 239 823 784Road map C3

This humble eatery is just two small rooms, the back one a favourite hangout for university students. A tasty snack is the carapauzinhos (fried mackerel). For something more substantial try the prato do juiz (judge's dish), a hearty pork casserole with potato and vegetables. The restaurant is signposted on Rua da Sofia. Closed Sun; public holidays.

COIMBRA O TrovadorLargo Sé Velha 15-17, 3000-383 Tel 239 825 475Road map C3

Positioned in front of Coimbra's Sé Velha and always a popular restaurant. The rustic decor adds to an already homely atmosphere and the food is typical of the region. Standard dishes abound, but for something more creative, go for the chanfana (kid stew in wine sauce). Weekend fado performances are not uncommon, so check for details. Closed Sun.

COIMBRA L'AmphitryonAvenida Emídio Navarro 21, 3000-150 Tel 239 853 020Road map C3

Set in a fine circular dining room of the Astoria hotel amid 1920s Art Deco splendour, L'Amphitryon serves traditional French and Portuguese à la carte cuisine. The ambience is one of elegance and refinement, the service prompt and discreet. The restaurant is considered one of the best in the region and its generous wine list includes Buçaco reservas.

COIMBRA Arcadas da CapelaQuinta das Lágrimas, Rua António Augusto Gonçalves, 3041-901 Tel 239 802 380Road map C3

A luxury gourmet restaurant, dining here is a Michelin-starred treat. Executive chef Albano Lourenço changes the menu four times a year. One dish is themed around Portugal's enduring love story – that of the doomed, 14th-century affair between Pedro I and Inês de Castro. The kitchen celebrates the couple's lives with a Pedro & Inês 4-course dinner.

CONDEIXA-A-NOVA Santa CristinaRua Francisco de Lemos, 3150-142 Tel 239 944 025Road map C3

A refined and contemporary styled restaurant aptly set in a modern pousada close to the famous ruins of Conimbriga. Regional favourites are listed together with several speciality dishes like roast kid with turnips tops and octopus rice and roast chicken with pepper sauce. The menu is supported by an interesting wine list.

GOUVEIA O JúlioRua do Loureiro 11, 6290-534 Tel 238 498 106Road map D3

The arroz de carqueja com entrecosto (steak rice) here is a classic example of Beira country cooking served in a rustic and unpretentious environment. In fact, the food is unashamedly traditional in orientation, with hearty dishes like fejoca à pastor (shepherd's bean stew) and bacalhau à tia Arminda (cod aunt Arminda) gracing the menu. Closed Tue.

GUARDA O FerrinhoRua Francisco de Passos 21, 6300-558 Tel 271 211 990Road map D3

With its solid 17th-century granite walls and noble appearance, this restaurant, next to the cathedral, blends well into Guarda's historical centre. The ensopado de cabrito à Ferrinho (kid broth) and espetada mista de carnes (mixed kebab) are two favourites, and game dishes like guisado de javali (wild boar) are specialities when in season. Closed Sun.

LUSO O CesteiroRua Monsenhor Raúl Mira 76, 3050-235 Tel 231 939 360Road map C3

Located near the train station on the road leading out of town towards Mealhada, this unassuming but attractive eatery is a popular haunt with the locals. The hearty, unpretentious fare is fresh and wholesome and includes chanfana (kid stewed in wine), roast suckling pig with saffron sauce and various bacalhau (cod) dishes. Closed Wed.

MANTEIGAS São LourençoPenhas Douradas-Santa Maria, N232, 6260-200 Tel 275 980 050Road map D3

Set in a pousada high in the Serra da Estrela, north of Manteigas, the restaurant's decor matches the territory, all granite and wood. The red bean and cabbage soup is typical of the starters on offer. For the main course, try the cabritinho no forno com arroz e esparregado (oven baked kid with rice and asparagus seasoned with vinegar oil).

MEALHADA Pedro dos LeitõesRua Álvaro Pedro 1, N1, Sernadelo, 3050-382 Tel 231 209 950Road map C3

Over 50 years in business, this is one of the region's best-known restaurants. A handy stop for travellers, the speciality is delicious leitão (suckling pig). The dish is served up in a manner of ways but is always accompanied by oven-roasted potatoes and onions. The menu also offers some fish options. Closed last week in June, first week in Jul.

MONSANTO Estalagem de MonsantoRua da Capela 3, 6060-091 Tel 277 314 471Road map E3

The well-preserved village of Monsanto sets the scene for this equally delightful restaurant set within the estalagem. National and regional cuisine is on offer but the local recipes really catch the eye. The soups are straight off the land: pumpkin, broad bean, turnip, chestnut and mushroom. Customers can select a four-course meal from the buffet.

MONTEMOR-O-VELHO RamalhãoRua Tenente Valadim 24, 3140-255 Tel 239 689 435Road map C3

Dine in a 16th-century manor house surrounded by period antiques, curios and objet d'art, and try such local specialities such as ensopado de enguias (eel stew). The bar, surmounted by an ancient statue of a saint, is sanctuary for a choice selection of wines displayed neatly behind a beautiful glass cabinet. Closed Sun evening, Mon, Oct.

SORTELA Dom Sancho ILargo do Corro, 6320-536 Tel 271 388 267Road map D3

Dom Sancho's weatherworn granite façade competes with the neighbouring Castelo da Sortelha for character, and the restaurant has a charming, medieval air. The cosy interior has a large open fireplace that helps fuel the appetite for dishes like caldeirada de borrego (lamb stew) and fejoado de javali (wild boar with beans). Closed Sun evening & Mon.

TRANCOSO O MuseuLargo de Santa Maria de Guimarães, 6420-101 Tel 271 811 810Road map D2

This restaurant is the former residence of the notorious 15th-century priest Francisco da Costa, said to have fathered 224 children and who narrowly escaped a death sentence imposed by King João II. The stonework walls enclose a rustic interior where smoked meats cooked with cabbage and potatoes are a speciality. Closed Sun (except Jul–Sep).

WISEU CasablancaAvenida Emídio Navarro 70-72, 3500-124 Tel 232 422 239Road map D3

With a smart though modest interior decorated with pretty tiles, Casablanca's hallmark is an attentive attitude and quality cuisine. Fresh fish and seafood is the order of the day, with specialities like arroz de polvo com gambas (octopus rice with prawns). Meat dishes include fondue de carne a Châteaubriant do lombinho (fondue steak). Closed Mon.

WISEU Charrascaria Santa EuláliaAvenida Luís Martins, Repeses, 3500-227 Tel 232 436 283Road map D3

South of Viseu off the Estrada Nacional, Santa Eulália is a large spacious pit stop with a seafood-based menu. Salmon, bass, bream and perch are also on the menu, together with the usual variations of cod. Lamb, beef and pork dishes also hitch a ride. For those on the go, there's a handy take-away service available. Closed Thu.

WISEU O CortiçoRua Augusto Hilário 47, 3500-089 Tel 232 423 853Road map D3

This restaurant, located in the city's historical zone, comes highly recommended. The authentic regional cuisine leans towards meat dishes, some of which are christened with delightfully quirky names: the coelho bêbado três dias em vida (drunk rabbit with three days to live) is marinated in wine for several days before being cooked. Closed 24–25 Dec.

DOURO AND TRÁS-OS-MONTES*ALIJÓ Barão de ForresterQuinta Barão de Forrester, Rua José Ruffino, 5070-031 Tel 259 959 215Road map D2

Given its location deep in port country, it's no surprise that framed posters advertising several port wine houses decorate the walls of this tidy restaurant, which is housed in a pousada. A polished pine floor and printed fabric curtains also characterize the interior. Try the delicious roast kid transmontana-style or grilled octopus and pears with Muscatel wine.

AMARANTE O AlmiranteLargo Conselheiro António Cândido, 4600-029 Tel 255 432 566Road map D2

A city-centre favourite, O Almirante combines excellent food with a friendly atmosphere. Among the house specialities are lamprey rice and beef with mushrooms. The chef's own fish dish is worth casting a line for. The wine cellar offers bottles from the Dão region as well as one or two excellent vinho verdes.

AMARANTE São GonçaloPousada de Marão-São Gonçalo, Ansiães, 4604-909 Tel 255 460 030Road map D2

Northeast of Amarante, São Gonçalo boasts a spectacular vista down a long, deep valley, especially at sunset. Housed in the pousada of the same name, the restaurant resembles a huge country kitchen with open fireplace and wrought-iron candelabras. The regional, rural menu features trout stuffed with ham, and pork with chestnuts.

AMARANTE Casa da CalçadaLargo do Paço 6, 4600-017 Tel 255 410 830Road map D2

This upscale, gourmet restaurant is housed in the Casa da Calçada, a splendid 16th-century former palace. The menu degustation perfectly complements the region's culinary heritage and the presentation, together with the wine choice, is what you'd expect from a Michelin-starred establishment. The interior conveys understated elegance.

BRAGANÇA GeadasRua do Loreto 32, 5300-184 Tel 273 331 493Road map E1

The window tables here command peaceful views of the River Fervença and the restaurant is very popular with Portuguese families at weekends. The large, comfortable exterior is styled in pinewood and local stone and the menu features typical regional cuisine like perdiç estufada com castanhas (partridge with chestnuts).

BRAGANÇA Solar BragançanoPraça da Sé 34, 5300-271 Tel 273 323 875Road map E1

Housed on the first floor of an old mansion overlooking the main square, this restaurant has high ceilings that peer down on a dignified interior. It is the owners themselves who serve dishes like faisão com castanhas (pheasant with chestnuts). In summer, meals can be taken on the inner patio. Closed Mon in winter.

CHAVES CarvalhoLargo das Caldas, 5400-523 Tel 276 321 727Road map D1

There are fine views from this pretty restaurant in Chaves' thermal spa complex. Starters include melão ou manga com presunto (freshly sliced melon or mango with ham) and progress to main courses like arroz de fumeiro (rice with smoked meats). Be sure to try the heavenly doce dos anjos à conventual (convent angel's dessert). Closed Mon.

CHAVES Leonel

Campo da Roda, 5400-007 Tel 276 323 188

Road map D1

Located opposite the aerodrome on the road southeast of Chaves towards São Julião de Montenegro, the menu here is small on quantity but big on quality. It includes bacalhau au gratin (baked codfish) and açorda de marisco (bread and shellfish stew) and the substantial portions make this place a popular dining spot. Closed Mon; 2 weeks in Jul & Nov.

ESPINHO Terraço Atlântico

Praia Golf Hotel, Rua 6, 4500-357 Tel 227 331 000

Road map C2

Few restaurants have such a wonderful panoramic view as this one, though window tables are at a premium and reservations are recommended to secure one. Fish dishes are prominent on the menu, although the meat dishes are not forgotten, and both red and white wines from every region in Portugal are available.

GIMONDE Dom Roberto

EN 218, 5300-553 Tel 273 302 510

Road map D2

The wooden balconies of this restaurant give it a somewhat Wild West look and the rustic, country theme is carried inside. The walls are decorated with antique farming implements, and painted over the fireplace is a wild boar in full flight. The restaurant is located on the riverside in the small town of Gimonde, 7 km (4 miles) east of Bragança.

LAMEGO Adega Matos

Rua Trás da Sé 52, 5100-169 Tel 254 612 967

Road map D2

Dishes like enguia em molho de escabeche (eels in pickle sauce) and arroz de salpicão (rice with pickled pork) spice up the traditional menu at this modest, town-centre restaurant located near the Sé (cathedral). The frango no charrasco (grilled chicken) remains a firm favourite though, and is a popular take-away order. Closed Sun evening.

LAMEGO Panorâmico Turisserra

Complexo Turístico Turisserra, Serra das Meadas, 5100-062 Tel 254 609 100

Road map D2

This charming three-roomed restaurant, set in the tourist village 6 km (4 miles) north of Lamego, serves excellent traditional fare like cabrito assado (roast kid). It's also where you can sample bolas de Lamego, the regional sweet cake. Afterwards, enjoy the beautiful views of the Douro and the surrounding countryside. Take-away service is available.

LEÇA DA PALMEIRA Casa da Chá Boa Nova

Lugar da Boa Nova, Praia de Boa Nova, 4450-608 Tel 229 951 785

Road map C2

The Tea House restaurant, set just above the shoreline on rocks overlooking the ocean, was designed by one of Portugal's eminent architects, Alvaro Siza Vieira. The menu is inspired by the vicinity and features dishes such as fejoadade marisco (bean and shellfish stew) and robala assado no forno (oven-baked sea bass). Closed Sun.

LEÇA DA PALMEIRA O Chanquinhas

Rua de Santana 243, 4450-000 Tel 229 951 884

Road map C2

O Chanquinhas occupies the elegant dining rooms of a large, aristocratic mansion. The cuisine is Portuguese and international in flavour and is served with a reserved grace. The menu lists specialities like arroz de sarabulho com rojões (black pudding rice with fried pork) and fish dishes. The desserts are excellent. Closed Sun; 2 weeks in Aug.

MIRANDA DO DOURO A Balbina

Rua Rainha Dona Catarina 1, 5210-228 Tel 273 432 394

Road map E1

Well-known politicians sit with the locals and Spanish holidaymakers at this traditional restaurant situated just a short walk from Largo de Misericórdia. A popular order is the bife à Balbina, a steak of local Mirandesa beef. Another is bacalhau à Balbina (codfish). Game, such as pheasant and partridge, is available in season. Closed Easter, 25 Dec.

MIRANDA DO DOURO Buteko

Largo Dom João III, 5210-000 Tel 273 431 231

Road map E1

Set in the centre of town, and upstairs from its ice-cream parlour, Buteko's specialities include posta Mirandesa (beef), bacalhau à Buteko (cod in the house style) and costeleta de vitela (veal cutlets). An alternative choice is the lunch emenda turística (tourist menu) that includes a glass of house red wine. Closed Sun (winter); 2 weeks in Jan.

MIRANDELA Flor de Sal

Parque Dr José Gama, 5370-000 Tel 278 203 063

Road map D1

Perched over the banks of the River Tua, this contemporary restaurant features an elaborate set of themed menus. Specialities include medalhão de vitela com redução de queijo terrincho (veal medallions in a reduced cheese terrine sauce). The cellar stocks Portuguese reds and whites, champagnes and ports. Closed Sun evening & Mon lunch (winter).

MURÇA Miradouro

Pensão Miradouro, Curves de Murça, 5090-136 Tel 295 512 461

Road map D2

The small handwritten menu in this plain restaurant changes daily but the quality of the food remains constant. The list features national and regional favourites such as cozido à Portuguesa (boiled meat), fejoadade transmontana (bean and meat stew) and cabrito assado no forno (oven roast rabbit). The house wine washes it all down. Closed Tue; end Sep.

OPORTO Bule

Rua de Timor 128, 4150-728 Tel 226 179 376

Road map C2

This delightful restaurant near Castelo do Queijohas has charming views over a garden sloping down to the sea. The buffet has a sumptuous selection of hors d'oeuvres that include home-made pastries. Complementing this is an extensive choice of traditional Portuguese and international dishes. Closed Mon; first 2 weeks in Aug.

OPORTO Casa AleixoRua da Estação 216, 4300-171 Tel 225 370 462Road map C2

Run by the same family since 1948, Casa Aleixo is located near Oporto's Campanhã railway station. The restaurant is known for its tripe dishes, but for those with less accustomed palates, the filetes de polvo (octopus) and the cabrito assado (roast kid) come highly recommended. Closed Sun & public holidays; 3 weeks in Aug.

OPORTO MerceriaCais da Ribeira 32, 4050-510 Tel 220 04 389Road map C2

With its low vaulted, granite stone ceiling and wooden beams, Merceria exudes warmth and character, furnished with antique glass-fronted cabinets and walls decorated with old prints. The menu features traditional Portuguese cuisine with an emphasis on seafood and fish. Reservations recommended. Closed Tue in winter.

OPORTO Adega Vila MeãRua dos Caldeireiros 62, 4050-137 Tel 222 082 967Road map C2

Lying in the shadow of the Torre dos Clérigos, this place is a busy, family-run restaurant known for its genuine northern cuisine. Each weekday features a "Special of the Day" that can range from cod pasties in bean rice to oven roast lamb. However, the waiters are quite happy to read aloud the chef's recommendations. Closed Sun; 3 weeks in Aug.

OPORTO Peixes & CompanhiaRua do Ouro 133, 4150-000 Tel 226 185 655Road map C2

A pleasant restaurant metaphorically filled to the gills with fish. The menu lists nothing else and meat is only available by prior arrangement. Fashioned throughout in an attractive wood finish, the windows open out to views across the river. The fish are prepared to your taste – either grilled, fried, boiled or baked. Closed Sun

OPORTO TripeiroRua Passos Manuel 193-195, 4000-385 Tel 222 005 886Road map C2

Tripeiro – meaning tripe eater – is the name for a native of Oporto as well as this famous restaurant, which has been serving up tripe since 1942. Naturally, the house speciality reflects the restaurant's raison d'être but the menu also lists more conventional dishes, much of it seafood but all prepared in a traditional manner. Closed Sun evening.

OPORTO Restaurante KoolCasa da Música, Avenida da Boavista, 4100-111 Tel 226 092 876Road map C2

On the 7th floor of the city's Casa da Musica building, this stark, angular restaurant is named after Dutch architect Rem Koolhaas. The menu is haute cuisine at accessible prices. Choices include poached eggs with warm Brie cheese, Savoy cabbage and bacon, and grilled lamb cutlets with country parsley sauce with baby potatoes. Closed Mon, Sun evening.

OPORTO Dom TonhoCais da Ribeira, 4050-509 Tel 222 004 307Road map C2

Located in a refurbished 17th-century warehouse on the historic ribeira (quayside) in the shadow of the Dom Luis bridge, the menu here respects the culinary traditions of northern Portugal. Dishes like arroz de pato à moda antiga (duck rice-traditional style) are served in a contemporary space under soft spotlight. Good wine list. Closed 1 Jan, 25 Dec.

OPORTO Foz VelhaEsplanada do Castelo 141, Foz do Douro, 4150-196 Tel 226 154 178Road map C2

Strawberry and red-rose hues paint this smart, fashionable restaurant with joie de vivre. The gourmet food is the chef's take on regional northern gastronomy, and the choice is extensive – the tasting menu alone offers 6 or 9 plates! The restaurant is located near Castelo da Foz and commands blissful ocean views. Closed Sun & Mon lunch.

OPORTO Bull and BearAvenida da Boavista 3431, 4149-017 Tel 226 107 669Road map C2

One of Portugal's most highly regarded restaurants, with modern cuisine based on fresh, natural ingredients. The meals are refined, light and textured. The stylish interior, enriched by bold, abstract canvases, makes this one of Oporto's most fashionable fine dining venues. Weekend reservations obligatory. Closed Sat lunch & Sun; lunch public holidays; Aug.

OPORTO Dom ManuelAvenida Montevideu 384, 4150-516 Tel 226 172 304Road map C2

Set in a late 19th-century mansion with marvellous Atlantic views, Dom Manuel's combination of impeccable service and choice cuisine is hard to beat. Specialities include parrilhada mista (fish and shellfish mixed grill) and vitela assada com batatas e arroz parolo de legumes (grilled veal with potatoes and vegetable rice). Closed Sun; last 2 weeks in Aug.

OPORTO PortucaleRua da Alegria 598, 4000-000 Tel 225 370 717Road map C2

One of the finest restaurants in the country, on the upper floor of the Albergaria Miradouro hotel. The menu reflects the spirited partnership of traditional Portuguese and international cuisine, illustrated by the sole Walewski – fillets of sole with champagne, lobster, shellfish and grated cheese. Reservations required. Closed 24 Dec (evening), 25 Dec.

PESO DA RÉGUA Varanda da RéguaLugar da Boavista, Loureiro, 5050-000 Tel 254 336 949Road map D2

Impressive panoramic views can be enjoyed, and equally agreeable dishes of Portuguese cuisine savoured at this friendly, family-run restaurant just north of Régua. Be sure to try the intriguingly named febras de porco à Padre Piedade (Father Pity's pork cutlets). Varanda da Régua is a popular venue for wedding parties so check ahead for availability.

ROMEU Maria RitaRua da Capela, 5370-620 Tel 278 939 180Road map E1

During the Middle Ages, pilgrims and journeymen would stop at a place near where this rustic townhouse restaurant now stands to rest and eat. Today, Maria Rita provides the sustenance. The spicy sausage soup or roast turkey is sure to put the bounce back in the boots of any weary traveller. Closed Mon; Wed evening.

SENDIM GabrielaLargo da Igreja 27, 5225-106 Tel 273 739 180Road map E2

Six granite pillars prop up the balcony terrace of this attractive restaurant installed in a pensão of the same name. The cuisine is prepared to a high standard and includes regional favourites like posta mirandesa com molho especial (beef steak in a special sauce). The open fire is really appreciated during the winter months. Closed 24 Dec eve, 25 Dec.

TORRE DE MONCORVO O ArturLugar de Rentão, Carviçais, 5160-069 Tel 279 939 184Road map E2

Halfway between Torre de Moncorvo and Mogadouro, this country-style restaurant is richly decorated with ancient shotguns, farming tools and the frozen staves of several stuffed wild boar heads. The fare is similarly rustic in nature. The cheeses and desserts are worth trying, in particular the bolo de castanha (chestnut cake). Closed Mon.

VILA NOVA DE GAIA Presuntaria TransmontanaAvenida Diogo Leite 80, 4400-111 Tel 223 758 380Road map C2

This is one of two restaurants sharing the same name but both under the same management. A radiant panorama of Oporto looming over the River Douro is the perfect entrée for the nourishing Tras-os-Montes cuisine that flavours the menu. Only the cheeses represent another region in Portugal, that of the Alentejo.

VILA REAL O EspadeiroAvenida Almeida Lucena, 5000-660 Tel 259 322 302Road map D2

This comfortable first-floor restaurant offers superbly prepared regional dishes accompanied by local wines. Standard fare includes cabrito (roast kid), cod Espadeiro and roast leg of pork. Specials include arroz de feijocas com orelheira de porco (pig's ears with beans and rice). The dish of the day is good value. Closed Sun evening & Mon.

VILA REAL Cozinha do ValeCasa de Campeã, Torgueda, 5000-742 Tel 259 979 604Road map D1

Some interesting fish and meat combinations can be ordered at this modern restaurant, set in the scenic Campeã valley, north of Vila Real. Of note is the presunto de aldeia e polvo vinagrete (cured ham with octopus garnished with vinaigrette dressing). The trutas recheadas (stuffed trout) is also recommended. Closed Mon & Tue.

MINHO*ARCOS DE VALDEVEZ Costa do VezN121, Silvares, 4970-483 Tel 258 516 122Road map C1

In a pretty setting just north of Arcos, this attractive and comfortable restaurant maintains a regional cuisine with an emphasis on grills. The espetada de lulas com gambas (prawn and squid kebab) is a speciality. So, too, is the roast veal. A variety of wines are on offer, including vinho verdes. Closed Mon; last 2 weeks in Oct.

BARCELOS BagoeiraAvenida Sidónio Pais 495, 4700-000 Tel 253 811 236Road map C1

Hotel Bagoeira's own enormous restaurant, divided into various rooms decorated in different styles. The gastronomy celebrates with gusto the Minho region and specialities like rojões (fried pork with potatoes) feature highly on the menu. The food is prepared with finesse and served in generous portions befitting the restaurant's gigantic dimensions.

BARCELOS Dom AntónioRua Dom António Barroso 87, 4750-258 Tel 253 812 285Road map C1

Dom António is an attractive, stone-walled eatery whose rustic interior belies its city-centre location. The traditional Portuguese menu is supplemented by game in season. Typical choices include vitela à moda de Barcelos (veal Barcelos style) and the popular arroz de frango (chicken rice). Ask for for laranjinhas doces (orange pudding) for dessert.

BRAGA Abade de PriscosPraça Mouzinho Albuquerque (Campo Novo) 7, 4710-301 Tel 253 276 650Road map C1

Named in honour of a celebrated 19th-century chef, the convivial atmosphere of this restaurant mixes well with the carefully prepared traditional Portuguese cuisine. As well as dishes like rabbit and braised veal, the menu features welcome surprises like caril de camarão (curried prawns). Closed Mon lunch; Sun; public holidays & 3 weeks in July.

BRAGA ExpositorParque de Exposições, 4700-000 Tel 253 217 031Road map C1

Located in Braga's exhibitions park, this lively restaurant is one of the best places to observe Minhotos enjoying a family night out. Ingredients are often combined to create dishes like arroz de cherne e de polvo (stone bass and octopus rice). In winter, heartier meals like cozida à Portuguesa (meat stew) are served up. Closed Tue.

BRAGA InácioCampo das Hortas 4, 4700-000 Tel 253 613 235Road map C1

Located outside the city walls, the granite façade of the popular tasca-style Inácio is indicative of the architectural style associated with Braga's historical centre. Inside, the restaurant is decorated with unusual artifacts and rare antiques that can sometimes detract from the menu of first-rate Portuguese cuisine. Closed Tue; 2 weeks in April; 2 weeks in Sep.

BRAGA São FrutosoRua Costas Gomes 168, 4700-262 Tel 253 623 372Road map C1

Located just north of Braga, near the São Frutoso de Montélios chapel, dishes here include vitela à São Frutoso (veal) and pescada à São Frutoso (fish). More ambitious creations include barriginha de porco recheada e arroz de pato à moda de Braga (pork belly stuffed with duck and rice). Closed Mon; 3 weeks in Aug; 2 & 25 Dec.

CAMINHA NapoleonLugar de Coura, Seixas, 4910-340 Tel 258 727 115Road map C1

Classic Alto Minho gastronomy can be sampled here, together with national and French cuisine. The high standard produces specialities like bacalhau recheado com queijo e gambas (cod fish stuffed with cheese and prawn). The restaurant is just northeast of Caminha, near the old bridge. Closed Mon; Sun evening; 2 weeks in May; 2 weeks in Dec.

GUIMARÃES El Rei D. AfonsoPraça de São Tiago 20, 4810-311 Tel 253 419 096Road map C1

It's apt that a restaurant in Guimarães should be named after King Afonso, the first king of Portugal who chose the city as his capital. El Rei has chosen to offer its subjects an essentially regional menu but one that also mystifies. Ask for the bacalhau mistério (cod surprise) – a house-invented speciality. Closed Sun.

GUIMARÃES São GiãoLugar de Vinhas, Moreira de Cónegos, 4810-000 Tel 253 561 853Road map C1

Inspired by tradition but not afraid to be creative, São Gião's kitchen has become a byword for culinary excellence. The gourmet menu includes the imaginatively named perdiz à Convento de Alcântara com cogumelos selvagens (partridge with wild mushrooms) and ovos mexidos com trufas (scrambled egg with truffles). Closed Mon; Sun evening; Aug.

GUIMARÃES Solar do ArcoRua de Santa Maria 48-50, 4810-443 Tel 253 513 072Road map C1

Housed in an elegant mansion, Solar do Arco's entrance lies in the shadow of an arch joining one side of the street with the other. The restaurant interior has preserved the original granite walls to charming effect. The cuisine, including specialities like arroz de tamboril (monkfish with rice), is served with aplomb. Closed Sun evening.

PONTE DA BARCA O MoinhoCampo Curro, 4980-614 Tel 258 452 035Road map C1

A charming place with picture-postcard views of the River Lima, the spacious O Moinho is renowned across the region for its signature dish, lampreia com arroz (lamprey with rice). But that is not all the former mill is known for. The menu also lists old favourites like cabrito da serra (mountain kid). Closed Tue.

PONTE DE LIMA EncanadaLargo Doutor Rodrigues Alves, 4990-000 Tel 258 941 189Road map C1

Incorporated into the façade of the municipal market building, this busy restaurant is well known for its desserts as well as its regional mainstays. The trout are plucked straight from the river and are a popular choice. Round a meal off with leite crème queimado (cream pudding with a singed top). Closed Thu; May; 25 Dec.

PONTE DE LIMA A CarvalheiraAntepaço, Arcozel, 4990-000 Tel 258 742 316Road map C1

Nestling in a pleasant rural setting just northwest of Ponte de Lima, the country location is evident in the restaurant's rustic interior that uses natural stone and dark wood to great effect. The menu lists chouriço (spicy smoked sausage) among other starter options. The house special is cod with maize bread. Closed Mon; 2 weeks in Oct; 25 Dec.

PÓVOA DE VARZIM O MarinheiroRua Gomes de Amorim, Estrada Fontes Novas, 4490-000 Tel 252 682 151Road map C2

Designed in the shape of a fisherman's smack and decorated with fishing nets, lobster pots and buoys, there's really no mistaking what the menu favours at this busy restaurant. The arroz de lagosta à Marinheiro (sailor's lobster rice) is the signature dish and the ever-present codfish dishes always make a splash. Closed 25 Dec.

VALENÇA DO MINHO ManéAvenida Miguel Dantas 5, 4930-678 Tel 251 823 402Road map C1

The proprietors are from Moscow but the only concession to eastern European cuisine is the bolo Húngaro and montanha Russa sweet cake desserts. Otherwise, the menu is an amalgamation of Portuguese and Mediterranean cuisine, with fish and seafood. Pheasant and wild boar are available in season. Closed Sun evening; Mon (except Aug); Jan.

VALENÇA DO MINHO São TeotónioBaluarte de Socorro, 4930-000 Tel 251 800 260Road map C1

Every Wednesday this restaurant, located in a pousada within an old fort, offers a buffet de bacalhau (codfish buffet) comprising cod steak accompanied by tuna, red beans and cabbage, corn, lettuce, asparagus, tomato and onion. The rest of the week, hearty regional specialities suffice. Fantastic view across the Minho valley to Tuy in Spain.

VIANA DO CASTELO Cozinha das MalheirasRua Gago Coutinho 19-21, 4900-510 Tel 258 823 680Road map C1

Making good use of the former manor house in which it is housed, the interior of this intimate, centrally located restaurant glows under candelabra suspended from an arched ceiling. The traditional cuisine is given an international twist with starters like smoked salmon with asparagus and Hollandaise sauce. Closed Tue; late Dec-early Jan.

VIANA DO CASTELO CameloN202, Santa Marta de Portuzelo, 4925-090 Tel 258 839 090Road map C1

In a village 1 km (half a mile) from Viana do Castelo, this gem of a restaurant holds monthly festive banquets and has a capacity for around 850 people. Summer dining can be enjoyed under shady vines when specialities like lampreia assada no forno (oven baked lamprey) can be savoured. Closed Mon.

VIANA DO CASTELO Casa d'ArmasLargo 5 de Outubro, 4900-515 Tel 258 824 999Road map C1

Behind an imposing early 18th-century façade, the stone and wood-panelled interior of Casa d'Armas is enhanced by medieval decor and a tangible sense of history. The cuisine is equally noble, with dishes like bifinhos de boi com cogumelos (bull steak with mushrooms) and polvinho ao alho (baby octopus flavoured with garlic). Closed Wed.

VILA PRAIA DE ÂNCORA Tasquinha do IbraimRua dos Pescadores 11, 4910-000 Tel 258 911 689Road map C1

The entire contents of the sea appear to be listed on the menu of this well patronized restaurant that overlooks the harbour. The interior exudes a rustic atmosphere despite its proximity to the ocean, and there are tasty costeletão (T-bone steak) choices and other meat dishes available as an alternative to the fish and seafood. Closed Tue (Jan-Mar).

ALENTEJO*ALANDROAL A MariaRua João de Deus 12, 7250-142 Tel 268 431 143Road map D5

A relaxed, easy-going ambience greets diners at this enchanting restaurant, and the menu is equally conducive. Starters include sopa de cacao (dogfish soup) and main courses feature pato em molho de vinho tinto (duck in red wine sauce), among other plates. The outside terrace is perfect for warm evenings. Closed Mon; last 2 weeks Aug.

ALBERNÔA Herdade dos GrousHerdade dos Grous, Albernôa, 7800-601 Tel 284 960 000Road map D6

A beautiful country estate set deep in the heart of the Alentejo countryside, not far from Beja. Many of the ingredients and produce used in the kitchen are organic and sourced from the surrounding farms. The outstanding gourmet menu has transformed countryside cooking into an art and is suitably complemented with wines from the estate's cellars.

ALVITO Castelo de AlvitoPousada do castelo de Alvito, 7920-999 Tel 284 480 700Road map D6

A 15th-century castle with beautiful gardens provides the setting for this splendid restaurant, with tables set under a low, vaulted ceiling; the look conjures up a medieval atmosphere. The costeletas de borrego em molho de coentros (lamb cutlets in coriander sauce) is delicious. The bacalhau à Marquês de Alvito (codfish) honours the castle's former owner.

BEJA Dom DinisRua Dom Dinis, 7800-000 Tel 284 375 937Road map D6

The unassuming façade of this modest eatery stares directly at the castle and its landmark keep, built by the restaurant's namesake in the late 13th century. The food is nourishing rural fare, with dishes like carne de porco à alentejana (pork and shellfish) and the delightfully named coelho com molho vilão (rabbit in countryman sauce) on offer. Closed Wed.

BEJA Os InfantesRua dos Infantes, 7800-495 Tel 284 322 789Road map D6

This excellent restaurant is built over foundations dating from Roman times. The snug interior is welcoming and the food some of the best in Beja. Starter dishes include figado de coentrada (liver in coriander sauce) and sopa de peixe (fish soup). A recommended main course is ensopado borrego à moda de Beja (lamb stew, Beja style). Closed Sun.

CAMPO MAIOR O FaisãoRua 1º de Maio 19, 7370-000 Tel 268 686 139Road map E5

Pictures of local life decorate the interior of this tidy restaurant and the effect is similar to that of being invited into someone's home. The menu is traditional in flavour, with a good selection of regional dishes such as cozida de grão (pork and chickpea stew). The house beef in mushroom sauce is very good.

CRATO Flor da RosaPousada da Flor da Rosa, 7430-099 Tel 245 997 210Road map D4

The restaurant is located in the historic pousada adapted from the monastery which is thought to date from the mid-14th century. The restaurant's marvellous period interior is matched by the attractive menu. Specialities include lin-guado recheado de camarão (sole stuffed with shrimp) and bife de vitela com queijo de Nisa (veal with Nisa cheese).

ELVAS Pousada de Santa LuziaAvenida de Badajoz, 7350-097 Tel 268 637 470Road map D4

Not far from the Spanish border, the large restaurant of this pousada is popular with Portuguese and Spaniards alike, attracted by the gracious interior and the quality of the food on offer. The menu is national in outlook but includes regional favourites like cabrito à lavrador (roast kid, farmer's style). The wines, however, are all from the Alentejo.

ESTREMOZ Adega Típico do IsaíasRua do Almeida 21, 7100-000 Tel 268 322 318Road map D5

Set in an old wine cellar, this restaurant offers some wonderfully original rustic Alentejan cooking like sopa de beldroegas (purslane soup) and migas de espargos bravos com carne de alguidar (bread and meat stew with asparagus cooked in an earthenware pan). Good local wine by the jug. Closed Sun; last 3 weeks in Aug; public holidays.

ESTREMOZ São RosasLargo D. Dinis II, 7100-000 Tel 268 333 345Road map D5

São Rosas sits in the town's main square. The cuisine features regional specialities like tarte de perdiz (partridge kart) but caters for more conservative tastes with dishes like lombo assado com ameixas (beef with prunes) and migas de pão com carne de porco frita (bread stew with fried pork). Closed Mon; 2 weeks in Jan; 2 weeks in July.

ÉVORA Cozinha de Santo HumbertoRua da Moeda 39, 7000-513 Tel 266 704 251Road map D5

Set in a narrow whitewashed cellar, St. Humberto's kitchen is adorned with antique cooking utensils, including heavy copper kettles suspended across the arched ceiling. The food is classic Alentejan, including borrego assado no forno (oven baked lamb) and carne de porco com amêijoas (pork with cockles). Closed Thu; first 3 weeks in Nov.

ÉVORA O GrémioRua Alcárcova de Cima 10, 7000-842 Tel 266 742 931Road map D5

Built into the city's Roman wall and overlooking a spot that was once a regular meeting point for farmers and herdsmen, the starters here include grilled peppers and garlic prawns. The tasty hare stewed with beans is recommended, as is the steak Mestre d'Avis bathed in a red wine and honey sauce. Closed Wed.

ÉVORA Tasquinha do OliveiraRua Cândido dos Reis 45a, 7000-582 Tel 266 744 841Road map D5

A small restaurant with a big reputation whose walls are decorated with brightly coloured ceramic bowls and old wooden utensils. The starters here alone number 20 plates, all composed of a delicious variety of petiscos (snacks). The favas com chouriça (broad beans with spicy sausage) is particularly appetizing. Closed Sun; first 2 weeks Aug.

ÉVORA FialhoTravessa das Mascarenhas 16, 7000-557 Tel 266 703 079Road map D5

Squeezed into a converted fisherman's house in the old town, the decor here is an odd mix of local maritime tradition and African safari. The soups are marvellous and a perfect complement to dishes like bouillabaisse and paella. The gambas à Indiana (prawns) and the bife à Jango (beefsteak) are house specialities.

FUNCHAL O TapassolRua Dom Carlos I, 62, 9000-000 Tel 291 225 023

Booking is advised at this excellent small, upmarket restaurant in the old town. It's on the first floor of a traditional house and has a lovely roof patio with beautiful views across the district. The tomato and onion soup is a choice starter and you can dine on quail, mussels, limpets or rabbit. Wines are excellent and reasonably priced.

FUNCHAL BeerhouseAvenida Mar, Porto do Funchal, 9000-054 Tel 291 229 011

Identified by its familiar white-coned roof, this harbour-front eatery is famed for its excellent golden rye beer brewed on the premises and served either by the glass or on tap with a 1-metre pipe placed on your table. Polished copper brew kettles decorate the restaurant's interior. Specialities include delicious açorda de gambas (prawn and bread stew).

FUNCHAL O CeleiroRua Aranhas 22, 9000-044 Tel 291 230 622

This appealing restaurant is situated on an old street and is identified by its English pub-style façade, complete with wooden window shutters, and an outside terrace. Its rustic interior offers candlelit dining and a fish-based menu featuring several dishes for two, such as shellfish and lobster cataplana and bouillabaisse. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

FUNCHAL BarqueiroRua Ponta da Cruz, Centro Commercial Centromar 21, 9000-103 Tel 291 761 229

One of Funchal's best fish and seafood venues, this relaxed and informal restaurant serves delicious local delicacies like lapas (limpets), castanhas (winkles) and ovas de espada (scabbard fish roe). For something more substantial there's a wide choice of fresh fish dishes, including fresh lobster plucked straight from the aquarium.

FUNCHAL Dona AméliaRua Imperatriz d. Amélia 83, 9000-018 Tel 291 225 784

Once a private residence, Mrs Amélia serves up some creative cuisine inspired by regional and international recipes. Flambé dishes and espetaadinhas (small beef kebabs) on bay-wood skewers are the speciality. Alternatively, try the três peixes na grelha com molho de abacate (three fishes with avocado sauce). Dessert choice includes wonderful ice creams.

FUNCHAL Quinta da PalmeiraAvenida do Infante 17-19, 9000-015 Tel 291 221 814*

In this attractive, 19th-century town house traditional Portuguese dishes are prepared with flair and imagination. The espada com salmão (scabbard fish with salmon) is an inspired combination. The gambas à moçambicana ou à Palmeira (Mozambique prawns Palmeira style) is a house speciality. For dessert try the almond ice cream in hot chocolate sauce.

FUNCHAL Ristorante Villa CiprianiEstrada Monumnetal 139, 9000-098 Tel 291 717 171*

Elegant but informal, Villa Cipriani enjoys a superb clifftop location alongside Reid's Palace Hotel. The menu is authentic gourmet Italian, with tagliatelle, spaghetti and linguini among the home-made pasta dishes and a rich variety of fish and meat dishes also available. The large outside terrace offers summer dining with dramatic ocean views.

FUNCHAL Xôpana RestauranteTravessa do Largo do Choupana, 9060-340 Tel 291 206 020*

First-class gourmet dining in a splendid location above Funchal harbour. The restaurant is in the Choupana Hills resort (see p404) and is renowned for French cuisine fused with exotic Asian influences, such as scallops with gomasio and crispy poppadum with piri-piri wok vegetables or veal filet mignon and crispy spring rolls in a sichuan pepper sauce.

PORTO MONIZ OrcaResidencial Orca, Vila Porto Moniz, 9270-000 Tel 291 850 000*

Orca is fashioned entirely out of wood, apart from the large windows that enable diners to gaze out over the town's famous, natural rock pools and to the ocean beyond. The cuisine is regional, with dishes like filete espada com banana (scabbard fish with banana) and bifes com tâmaras (beefsteak with dates) flavouring the menu.

PORTO SANTO O CalhetasSítio de Calheta, Vila de Porto Santo, 9400-001 Tel 291 984 380*

Located on Porto Santo's southern tip, one of the most tranquil spots on the island, this restaurant serves a variety of fish and seafood dishes all freshly prepared and typical of the region. Specialities include arroz de cherne (stone bass rice). The sunsets over nearby Ilha do Cal are spectacular. A hotel pick-up and drop-off service is available.

PORTO SANTO Quinta do SerradoSítio do Pedregal, 9400-010 Tel 291 980 270*

The kitchen here focuses on home-style northern Portuguese gastronomy. Housed in a fabulously rustic quinta, the restaurant's menu lists vitelha com arroz de feijão (veal with bean rice) and cabrito assado no forno (roast kid) among its specialities. Desserts include the unusual but delicious puddim de maracujá (sweet granadilla pudding).

RIBEIRA BRAVA D. LuísRua Cago Coutinho, Porto Vila., 9350-217 Tel 291 952 543*

Located in lower Ribeira Brava and fanned by salt-laced sea breezes, this informal restaurant is a favourite with locals and tourists alike, drawn to its good-value menu. The cuisine is Portuguese with an international twist and includes specials like espitada mista de peixe (mixed fish kebab) and the curiously named chicken dish, frango Sophia Loren.

RIBEIRA BRAVA Fajã dos PadresEstrada Padre António Dinis Henriques I, 9300-261 Tel 291 944 538*

There are only two ways to reach Fajã dos Padres: by boat or a vertiginous elevator ride. Specialities pay homage to the sea and include caldeirada de atum (tuna stew) and espada e lulas para grelhar (grilled squid kebab). The fish options are impressive and include snapper, grouper and even parrotfish. Closed Tue; Dec 24, 25; second week Jan–1 Mar.

SANTANA Quinta do FurãoAchada do Gramacho, 9230-000 Tel 291 570 100*

Set in the quinta of the same name, this restaurant's brick stone and thatched wood interior is replete with a majestic fireplace that makes it a favourite on cold days. The inventive menu features dishes like atum com molho de gengibre (tuna in ginger sauce) and bife em vinho tinto (beefsteak in red wine). The terrace views are breathtaking.

SANTANA Cantinho da SerraEstrada do Pico das Pedras, Pico António Fernandes, 9230-107 Tel 291 573 727*

Located near Pico das Pedras, this is one of the most picturesque of Madeira's restaurants. The cosy interior has windows framed by dappled flowered curtains and tables draped with crisp, blue check linen. The rustic charm is accentuated by a menu that features hearty, home-style regional cooking. Be sure to try the home-made liquor digestifs. Closed Mon.

AZORES*CORVO TraineiraRua dos Combatantes, 9980-020 Tel 292 596 207*

Currently the only restaurant on Corvo, at Traineira you can sample local delicacies like linguiça (sausage) and yam (sweet potato). Starters invariably include the famed queijo da Ilha do Corvo (Corvo cheese) and favourites like enchidos das ilhas (island pork stuffing). Azorean fishermen supply the restaurant with a fresh daily catch. Closed Sun.

FAIAL Capote

Rua Conselheiro Miguel da Silveira 24, Horta, 9900-114 Tel 292 293 295

A lively restaurant at the north end of the seafront facing the neighbouring island of Pico, Capote is popular with locals and yachties celebrating their return to dry land. An appetizing selection of grilled meat and fish dishes, plus house specialities like feijoada à Capote (bean-based stew), complements a more economical daily buffet.

FAIAL Sal e Pico

Rua Vasco da Gama, Horta, 9900-017 Tel 292 202 200

Housed in the pousada Santa Cruz, this is one of the best restaurants on the island. Its name plays on the fact that there are magnificent views of Pico to be enjoyed from the terrace. The high quality cooking produces dishes like fried pork with pineapple and roasted tuna. The passion fruit pie is a regional delicacy. Closed Mon–Mar.

FLORES Reis

Rua da Boa Vista, Santa Cruz das Flores, 9960-000 Tel 292 592 697

Up in the hills above Santa Cruz, this is a clean and simple restaurant attached to the salsicharia (sausage shop) run by a local butcher. The fare is hearty and wholesome and excellent value. A modest list of fresh fish dishes, plus pork and beef options, flavour a menu that signs off with coco pudding, among other desserts. Closed Sun.

PICO Ancoradouro

Areia Larga, Madalena, 9950-302 Tel 292 623 490

Located just outside Pico's capital, Madalena, this modest restaurant has glorious views of neighbouring Faial island and is a favourite with the local population who come for morcela com ananás (black pudding with pineapple), grilled fish, mixed kebabs and seafood cataplana as well as puddim de amêndoa (almond pudding). Closed Wed in winter.

PICO Terra e Mar

Miradouro do Arrife, Terras, Lajes do Pico, 9930-301 Tel 292 672 794

This small, cliff-top restaurant has a windmill and terrace and its proprietor is used to seeing satisfied customers take a souvenir snapshot before leaving. They arrive to sample delicacies like caldeirada de congro (conger eel stew) or familiar dishes such as bife de vaca com batatas fritas (beefsteak and chips). In winter, it operates as a snack bar.

SANTA MARIA Candeia

Rosa Alta, São Pedro, 9580-000 Tel 296 884 804

A popular restaurant that stands in the shadow of the local church, Candeia offers a varied fish-based menu that includes cod with béchamel sauce or baked in a terracotta terrine. It also does a very good fried octopus in garlic and red wine sauce. One of the house specialities is black scabbard fish grilled with banana and cheese. Closed Sat lunch & Sun.

SÃO JORGE Manezinho

Furna das Pombras, Urzelina, 9800-429 Tel 295 414 484

The draw at this simple seaside restaurant is the set-price seafood buffet. The famous queijo de São Jorge (cheese) is among the petiscos (snacks) available. Otherwise, the menu lists dishes like ameijoas (clams) from Fajã da Caldeira de Santo Cristo. The esplanade allows for al fresco dining during the summer, with impressive views of Pico. Closed Mon.

SÃO MIGUEL Monte Verde

Rua da Areia 4, Ribeira Grande, 9600-000 Tel 296 472 975

Monte Verde's interior comprises a first-floor dining room decorated with modern azulejos and a display balcony where diners can select their own fresh fish. A house speciality is the tigelada de chicharro, a stew made with thin, sardine-like fish. The grelhados de carne à Monte Verde (grilled meat) is another. Service is friendly and competent. Closed Mon.

SÃO MIGUEL Alcides

Rua Hintze Ribeiro 67-77, Ponta Delgada, 9504-000 Tel 296 282 677

An unpretentious but accomplished restaurant sporting a stylish interior situated in Ponta Delgado's historical zone close to the Igreja Matriz de São Sebastião. Besides the robust steak and chips fare, Alcides offers more emblematic dishes like cavala assada (grilled mackerel) and lulas guisadas (squid fricassee), with fresh fruit for dessert. Closed Sun.

SÃO MIGUEL O Miroma, Furnas

Rua Dr Frederico Moniz Pereira 15, 9675-005 Tel 296 584 422

One of several excellent restaurants in Furnas that serve up a unique and highly unusual cozida (stew) that is sealed in a huge pot and then buried underground and left to slowly cook for several hours in heat generated by subterranean volcanic springs. The meat, yam and vegetables simply melt in your mouth. Closed Wed.

TERCEIRA Casa do Peixe

Estrada Miguel Corte Real 30, Angra do Heroísmo, 9701-000 Tel 295 217 678

Overlooking the harbour, the city's former fish market has been turned into an atmospheric restaurant with a full menu that reads as if the market were still in operation. Choices listed as peixe na telha mean the fish dishes are served on tiles – a traditional way of presenting the meal. Closed Tue.

TERCEIRA Quinta do Martelo

Canada do Martelo 24, Cantinho, São Mateus, 9700-576 Tel 295 642 842

The restaurant at this cultural resort was once a humble grocer's store and is now the place to go to try genuine Azorean dishes like Holy Spirit soup (meat and vegetable in white wine) and alcatra (meat stew). The interior is faithfully reproduced as a country inn, complete with wooden furniture and hand-painted crockery. Closed Wed.

SHOPPING IN PORTUGAL

Portugal offers a wealth of tempting goods at reasonable prices for shoppers. The best buys include handmade leather goods and shoes, hand-crafted gold and silver jewellery, fine porcelain and crystal, glassware, and high-quality clothes ranging from hand-knitted sweaters to the latest fashion garments and designer labels. The appearance of shopping malls has brought a range of sophisticated consumer products onto the market. Fortunately, traditional arts and crafts have not been lost as a result of this modernization. Pottery and ceramics, embroidery and lace, woodcarving and cork, copper artifacts, tapestries, carpets and fresh produce are of a high standard. The regional tourism office shops are some of the best places to buy genuine Portuguese handicrafts.

Lisbon's enormous Centro Colombo shopping mall

OPENING HOURS

Normal shopping hours are 9am–1pm and 3–7pm Monday to Friday and 9 or 10am–1pm on Saturdays. However, many shops in the bigger towns and cities remain open during the lunch hour and on Saturday afternoons. The big shopping centres are open every day, including Sundays, from 10am to 11pm or midnight.

TAX-FREE GOODS

On most goods a 21 percent value-added tax (IVA – Imposto sobre o Valor Acrescentado) is charged in mainland Portugal. In Madeira and the Azores, the tax is 15 percent.

Portugal has more than 1,600 shops affiliated with the 'Tax Free for Tourists System', which can be identified by the logo of that name. Non-European Union visitors are exempt from IVA, provided that they stay in Portugal no longer than 180 days.

Obtaining a rebate in smaller shops may be complicated; it is simpler to buy in a shop with a 'tax free' sign outside. Ask the shop assistant for an Isenção na Exportação form, which must be presented to a customs official on your departure from Portugal.

HOW TO PAY

Most shops accept credit and visa cards, though you may need to pay with cash in some of the smaller shops outside the big cities. You may be asked to show a passport when purchasing expensive items by credit card.

Under EU regulations on consumer goods, you have a two-year guarantee on products. Faulty goods must be returned with the original receipt for exchange or repair.

SHOPPING MALLS

Springing up in ever increasing numbers, large shopping malls have exerted a big influence on shopping habits in Portugal. Lisbon's huge Centro Colombo boasts more than 420 stores. Opened in 1997, it is the Iberian Peninsula's largest shopping mall. It also houses a leisure complex, multiplex cinema, health club, driving range, chapel and bowling alley.

MARKETS

A social and commercial occasion, the street market is integral to Portuguese life. It is usually held in the town's main square; ask for the mercado or feira if in doubt. Most markets sell a wide range of goods from food to household items and clothes, but you will also see sites devoted to antiques and local crafts. Roadside stalls offer produce from smallholdings, including delicious home-made liqueurs, pastries and cakes. Most markets are held in the mornings only, but in tourist areas they may go on until late afternoon.

Portugal's most famous market is the one in Barcelos (see p275), held Thursday in the main square. Here you can buy a vast range of household goods and local produce, and handicrafts such as pottery, lace, rugs and clothes.

Lisbon's Feira da Ladra (Thieves' Market) (see p71) is probably the best-known flea market and attracts large crowds. The Feira de Antiquidades at Estação Oriente in the city is another good hunting ground, and the Feira de Carcavelos, Feira de Cascais and Feira de São Pedro in Sintra attract bargain hunters by the thousands.

CERAMICS

Antique hand-painted glazed tiles (azulejos) are highly sought-after and expensive (see p435), but excellent reproductions are available in museum shops such as Lisbon's Museu Nacional do Azulejos (see pp120–21). Azulejos Sant' Ana also produces excellent replicas of early tiles.

Portugal's oldest established ceramics company is Vista Alegre, which produces high-quality porcelain.

If you are visiting Viseu (see p215), look out for the beautiful black earthenware pottery made by a handful of master potters. Viseu is one of the last few places where ceramics of this type are made.

Barcelos is renowned for its regional pottery, especially figures based on everyday rustic life and religious themes. The best can be seen in the local museum and Centro de Artesanato in the city, and finely made replicas are on sale in shops and markets. The village of São Pedro do Corval in the Alentejo region is known for its colourful hand-painted plates and pots depicting flower motifs or rural scenes, such as the harvest or the pig-slaughter.

Porches Pottery in the Algarve is famous for its plates and pots decorated with revivalist designs of ancient Iberian forms and motifs.

HANDICRAFTS

Portugal is well known for its delicate embroidery and fine lace, and the best-known source is the island of Madeira. On the mainland, the best lace and embroidery comes from towns in the Minho such as Viana do Castelo, also famous for its brightly printed shawls. Embroidered bedspreads are sold in Castelo Branco in the Beira Baixa, and colourful carpets, such as those from Arraiolos, are sold throughout the Alentejo.

Popular regional items are embroidered lovers' handkerchiefs (lenços dos namorados) in the Minho region and the typical local costume which is notable for its brilliant colours, rich ornaments and variety. The Minho is famous for its filigree gold and silver work, from traditional necklaces, heart-shaped pendants, earrings and rings to religious votives and trinkets.

Also unique to the Minho is the ancient floral art of palmito, a type of bouquet made with metallic coloured paper by young girls and women for religious ceremonies and as souvenirs for tourists. Northern Crafts Minho is a good source for these handicrafts.

Arraiolos in the Alentejo has been famous since the late 16th century for its hand-embroidered carpets, which are sewn in wool on a canvas frame. Originally, they followed traditional Persian and Indian designs, but from the 18th century, more modern designs became popular. Fine examples are on sale in many shops in the town, especially at Tapetes Condéstavel, and elsewhere in Portugal.

The Alentejo is also the best region for buying hand-made rugs and bedspreads in brightly coloured materials. In the town of Estremoz you will find the unique traditional clay figures known as bonecos (dolls). The making of these gaily painted pieces depicting religious and rustic themes dates back more than two centuries.

WINE AND SPIRITS

While it may be best known for fortified wines such as port and Madeira, Portugal also has a wide and varied range of excellent table wines (see pp28-9), which are well represented in shops, supermarkets and wine merchants. Some of the most characterful wines, particularly reds, are made in the Douro region, where port is also made. More approachable reds (and increasingly, whites) are made in the Alentejo, whose wines are much loved by the Portuguese themselves. Wines are widely available, but for a good selection try Napoleão in Baixa, or the Coisas do Arco do Belém or Solar do Vinho do Porto in Lisbon.

The wines in Portugal are inexpensive compared to other European countries, and include the whole range, from young green wines (vinho verdes) through popular rosés, fruity whites and robust reds to Madeira wine and ports. It is often cheaper to shop direct from the winemaking co-operatives.

Home distilling is also a favourite pastime in Portugal. Apart from distilled wine (aguardente) and a spirit made from grape skins (bagaçõ), various liqueurs are made with cherries (gingjinha), almonds, (amêndoa) and figs (figo).

A speciality in the Algarve is medronho, a local firewater made from the fruit of the wild strawberry tree. Another Algarve regional product is brandymel, a mixture of honey, herbs and medronho – once a traditional homemade remedy for coughs and influenza, but now produced commercially and much loved by the Portuguese.

CLOTHING AND SHOES

Portugal has a thriving textile industry, despite fierce competition from China and India, though much of the country's production in clothes and shoes goes to supply well-known designer brands abroad. With the advent of large clothing stores and shopping malls, however, there is no shortage of quality designer clothes. Zara is one of the popular clothing shops.

Some excellent-value seconds are on sale at local markets everywhere; a particularly well-known one is at Carcavelos between Lisbon and Estoril.

Shoe-making is a vital part of Portugal's economy. Hundreds of factories produce a range of different styles of shoes and sandals, which are exported all over the world. They also make good souvenirs.

Quality leather boots from Madeira – a popular gift

Leather goods, such as bags, purses, wallets, gloves and belts, are consistently good. Variations in price reflect the quality of the products.

Ornately embroidered women's linen blouses, fashioned in the regional style, are on sale in many craft shops. Prices are also reasonable for knitwear and woollen fishermen's sweaters from Nazaré (see p182).

ANTIQUES

Whether you are a connoisseur or casual collector, Portugal's antique shops and markets are bound to have something to catch your eye. Antique markets (feiras de velbarias) take place in many regions, usually on Saturday or Sunday.

There is a steady demand for rare and unusual antiques, especially those connected with Portugal's trading links with the Orient over past centuries: Japanese lacquer work and mother of pearl, carvings in wood and ivory, and religious icons. Hand-painted tiles, introduced by the Moors in medieval times, now attract buyers from all over the world.

The best hunting grounds in Lisbon are in the Rua São Bento, Largo de S Martinho, Rua Augusto Rosa, and Rua D Pedro V. Loja Azul and Antique Tiles are two of the best shops for tiles.

REGIONAL PRODUCE

Every region in Portugal offers its own specialities and it is best to buy fresh items in the region where they are made, though most of the better-known regional produce can be found throughout the country. Cured ham (presunto) from the north of Portugal is particularly good in Chaves (see pp258-9). Monchique (pp 320-21) in the Algarve also has a reputation for cured ham. Spicy pork sausages (linguiça) are a speciality of Porto. The Minho region is known for its tasty garlic sausage made with turkey and chicken meat (albeira de Mirandela) and a sumptuous black sausage (morcela) made from pork.

Serra cheese from the Serra da Estrela

A wide variety of cheese is made in Portugal. The best is reputed to be from the town of Serpa (see pp217-20) and the surrounding region of the lower Alentejo. Serpa cheese finds its way into many shops throughout the country. It is rivalled in taste and quality perhaps only by cheese made in the Serra da Estrela region (see pp220-21).

ENTERTAINMENT IN PORTUGAL

The traditional love of music, dance and singing in Portugal is reflected in a vast range of cultural activities and entertainment. Theatre, classical and contemporary music, opera, dance, film festivals, pop, rock and jazz festivals and variety shows featuring internationally renowned performers can be enjoyed in many regions.

Portuguese drummer

The major venues and events are concentrated in Lisbon, Porto and other big cities, where there is abundant nightlife. Lisbon is considered one of the liveliest European capitals after dark. The colourful folklore festivals and carnivals that are rooted in Portuguese culture are celebrated in every corner of the country.

Lisbon's Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II

INFORMATION

The tourism boards issue a free monthly calendar of programmes, events and venues. The Portuguese newspapers all have a 'what's on' section. The best weekly guides in English are in The Resident (www.portugalresident.com) and Portugal News (www.the-news.net), available in the Algarve with some outlets in Lisbon.

THEATRE AND DANCE

A wide range of professional and amateur productions can be seen in many cities and towns. Lisbon and Porto offer the widest choice, with many established theatres and cultural centres staging world-class productions.

Lisbon's Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II (p127) is the principal venue and Porto's Teatro Rivoli presents a prestigious two-week International Festival of Iberian theatre.

The Algarve is well served by municipal theatres. One of the biggest regional events is the Algarve Folk Music and Contemporary Dance Festival that takes place at different venues with dancers from all over the world.

The Sintra Festival of classical music and dance is the pinnacle of cultural events in Portugal. It takes place in various stunning fairytale venues, including the romantic Palácio de Pena (pp162-3), Palácio Nacional de Queluz (pp166-7) and Palácio de Seteais (p157).

FILM

All of the latest releases, usually with subtitles, are screened in cinemas in shopping malls all over the country, while fringe cinema can be seen at a number of cultural centres and theatres.

The Lisbon Film Festival is the only festival dedicated exclusively to documentary films; it attracts entries from all over the world. The Porto Film Festival encompasses sci-fi, fantasy and thrillers.

The Algarve International Film Festival is the country's oldest film festival, catering for short films of up to 30 minutes' duration.

CLASSICAL MUSIC, OPERA AND BALLET

Some of the world's most famous orchestras and artists perform at the major venues. The most prestigious is the Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian (p127), with its own orchestra and ballet company. The Casa da Musica in Porto has an extensive programme of dance and music.

ROCK AND JAZZ

The two biggest open-air rock festivals are Rock in Rio Lisboa and the Super Bock Rock Festival. Another big international event is the Algarve Summer Festival featuring some of the world's leading singers and groups.

Some of the biggest names in world jazz and blues appear at the major concert halls in the big cities and at the jazz festivals in Lisbon, Porto, Guimaraes, Viana do Castelo, and the Algarve.

Major venues in Lisbon for world class performances of jazz and other modern music include the Centro Cultural de Belém (p127), Praça Sony (p127), Culturgest, and Pavilhão Atlântico (p127).

One of the highlights of the year is the Festival de Jazz do Porto, with some of the legendary names in jazz and blues participating. The Centro Cultural Vila Flor in Guimarães hosts one Portugal's most important jazz festivals.

CARNIVALS

Celebrated mostly in honour of the Saints or Our Lady, Portuguese festivals and carnivals are colourful events with costumed dancers, decorated floats and papier maché models. The most famous is the Loulé Carnival in the Algarve. Thousands of visitors come to join in the three days of parades and merrymaking.

One of the most exuberant religious festivals is the Romaria de Nossa Senhora d'Agonia (see p31).

The most extraordinary summer festival takes place in the small Alentejo village of Flower Festival Campo Maior, where the streets are decorated with thousands of paper flowers.

NIGHTLIFE

There is no shortage of places to enjoy a drink, listen to music and dance until the early hours of the morning in a club, disco or late-night bar. Irish bars are in vogue for a lively night out and gay bars have sprung up in many regions. For nightlife, Lisbon reigns supreme and the choice is almost endless. The main districts are the riverside area that stretches along the dockland, and the Bairro Alto, known for its (fado) houses (see pp64-5). The most sophisticated clubs are Lux (see p127) and Kapital (see p127). The jet-set in Algarve flock to T-Clube in Quinta do Lago.

BULLFIGHTING

The Ribatejo region northeast of Lisbon is bullfighting country (see pp146-7) and the principal arena in this region is Praça de Touros in Santarém. Lisbon's major arena is the Campo Pequeno (see p118), while Cascais has its own Praça de Touros.

OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES AND SPECIALIST HOLIDAYS

Portugal offers an amazing variety of terrain with sports and leisure activities to match. The mild climate in the Algarve, Madeira and the Azores means that many outdoor leisure pursuits can be enjoyed throughout the year. Specialist holidays are available for a variety of activities, including microlight flying, whale watching, big game fishing, surfing and horse riding. Water skiing, jet skiing, canoeing and kayaking can also be enjoyed, as can mountaineering and rock-climbing. The unspoiled landscape invites leisurely walking. Golf (see pp442-3) and tennis facilities are well established.

Visitors enjoying a sailing trip

INFORMATION

Regional tourist offices can provide information on sport and outdoor activities. In addition, the following English language/bi-lingual publications provide information: Essential Algarve, Essential Lisboa, Essential Madeira, Goodlife Magazine and the weekly newspapers The Resident and Portugal News.

WATER SPORTS

Surfing, windsurfing, diving, water skiing and jet skiing are popular along the coast and around the Atlantic islands. Vilamoura Lda and Polvo Watersports, operating out of Vilamoura Marina, are leading Algarve companies offering specialist holidays. Jet skis, water skis and wake boards (along with powerboats) can be hired with the services of expert instructors.

The best beaches for surfing are on the Lisbon coast at Guincho and Ericeira. In the Algarve the long sandy Praia de Vale Figueiras on the west coast is a major destination.

Equipment can be hired or bought from Algarve Surf School Camp, which offers lessons for beginners.

The Azores islands catch huge swells, though access can be difficult, and waves up to 1.8 m (6 ft) in summer and 4.5 m (15 ft) in winter are for professionals only. The most popular spots are Ribeira Grande and Rabo de Peixe on the north coast of São Miguel.

Madeira's coastline boasts exceptional conditions – especially near the village of Jardim do Mar, Paul do Mar, the Ponta Pequena and the renowned Ponta do Jardim. Excellent but difficult surfing waters to access front the villages of Contreira, Ponta Delgada and São Vicente.

For windsurfers, Praia do Martinhal near Sagres in west Algarve is one of the most popular spots, with the Praia do Martinhal Windsurfing School on the beach.

Surfing – a popular pastime along the mainland coast and islands

Scuba divers are drawn to Portugal's clear, mild waters and wealth of marine life. The best diving is in the Algarve, the Berlengas Islands near Peniche on the Silver Coast, and Madeira and the Azores, where divers may see tropical species such as barracuda, monkfish, dolphins, rays and giant mantas. Diving centres include Marina Diving in Lagos, Tivoli Almansor Dive Centre in Carvoeiro, Torpedo Diving in Vilamoura, Atlantic Diving in Albufeira and Espírito Azul Diving on São Miguel, Azores.

SAILING AND CANOEING

The marinas at Lagos and Vilamoura in the Algarve are important sailing and yachting centres where international regattas are staged. The new Portimão Marina and Albufeira Marina cater for the growing interest in yachting in southern Europe. The marina on the island of Faial in the Azores is a stopping-off point for trans-Atlantic yachtsmen. Madeira is an excellent destination for boating and yachting, with many marinas.

Windsurfing near Martinhal in the Algarve

Canoeing is popular on Portugal's rivers especially the Mondego, Zêzere, Arade, Cavado, Lima and Vez.

BOATING

Tour operators in the Algarve, Madeira and the Azores offer sightseeing cruises. Specialist holidays designed especially for wine buffs are offered by Douro Riverboat Cruises in the famous wine-growing region in northern Portugal. The itinerary combines river trips with journeys on the old steam engines along riverside routes that once transported the wines to the city of Porto, and include overnight stays at traditional wine-growing farms (quintas).

WALKING AND CYCLING

Madeira is ideal as a walking destination, with picturesque villages, amazing mountain landscapes, rugged coastlines and golden beaches. The favourite routes follow the island's extensive network of irrigation channels (levadas).

The Azores are a paradise for walkers and hikers, with flowered roads, volcanic mountainous terrain and verdant countryside. Sherpa Expeditions specializes in walking holidays here and in Madeira.

The Silver Coast (western central Portugal) has undulating terrain, forested hills and long sandy beaches, almost deserted for most of the year.

The Algarve offers exhilarating cliff-top walks, especially along the west coast. Portugal Walks specializes in walking holidays in this region. In the east Algarve the Ria Formosa Natural Park (p331) and the Sapal Nature Reserve near Castro Marim (p333) are popular locations for nature lovers and birdwatchers.

Inland, the hilly Serra de Calderão region provides walking terrain off the beaten track, with small villages providing welcome watering holes.

Verdant and more densely forested North Portugal is a joy to explore on foot. Here, you can follow the ancient paths of the pilgrims to the holy shrine of Santiago de Compostela in Spain.

Also well worth exploring are the Peneda-Gerês National Park (pp272-3) and further east Montesinho Natural Park (p262), which offers scenic mountain routes.

The Alentejo has vast tracts of open plains, and near the bigger towns and cities, such as Évora, Elvas, and Serpa, the landscape and monuments are inspirational. The Lisbon coastline stretching north has enjoyable coastal and countryside routes. The areas around Cascais and Sintra, with its mountainous terrain and lush forestation, is pleasant for walks.

Mountain bikes can be hired in many areas of the country to search out the most scenic trails. Mountain Bike Adventures is a good source of information.

FLYING, PARAGLIDING AND SKYDIVING

Microlight flying is available at the Algarve Sports Centre. The center was established by ex-world champion Gerry Breen, who is the chief instructor here.

You can take lessons leading to a pilot's qualification recognized by the Federação Portuguesa de Voo Livre (National Association for Free Flight), or occasional pleasure flights along the rugged west Algarve coastline.

The weather conditions and terrain in parts of Portugal are also ideal for paragliding. Most students bring their own gear.

Adrenalin seekers can indulge in the exhilarating sport of skydiving at the Aerodrome Municipal de Portimão in the Algarve.

FISHING

The coastline, waterways and rivers of Portugal offer plenty of opportunities for fishing, from angling for trout in the rivers to big game fishing off the shores of the Algarve, the Lisbon Coast, the Silver Coast, Madeira and the Azores. Many of the rivers and lakes yield abundant trout, carp and eels.

A licence obtained locally from the Instituto Florestal is required to fish the rivers, but not for line fishing from the shore or from a boat at sea. Contact Federação Portuguesa de Pesca Desportiva for further information.

Among the companies offering big game fishing are Big Game Fishing and Cruzeiros de Vilamoura in the Algarve; Madeira Game Fishing, Nautisantos Big Game Fishing, Turipesca and Katherine B Sportfishing in Madeira; and Big Game Fishing Azores in the Azores.

TENNIS

Tennis courts are found almost everywhere in Portugal, and are an integral part of the facilities in most tourist resorts. Many resorts also have squash courts. The larger Algarve resorts, such as Vale do Lobo, offer tennis coaching holidays, or you can book a specialist tennis holiday through Tennis Holidays in the Sun.

WHALE WATCHING

The Azores is a prime spot to see whales and other cetaceans, such as dolphins, that are attracted to the warm waters and abundant food. In recent years as many as 20 different species have been seen. The whale-watching season lasts from May to October due to weather conditions, though whales inhabit the waters throughout the year.

Whale-watching holidays as well as daily expeditions are offered by Whale Watch Azores, Futurismo Azores, Whale Watching, Espaçotalassa and Pico Sport Lda.

HORSE RIDING

Portugal's proud riding tradition stems mainly from the country's handsome Lusitano horses and the sturdy Garrano breed that roams free in the Peneda-Gêres National Park (see pp272-3).

One of the most renowned equestrian centres for training Lusitano and Garrano horses is Centro Equestre Vale do Lima, where equestrian holidays with lessons and tuition in horse care, riding, and dressage are provided.

In the Algarve, Quinta dos Amigos, Quinta Martins, Pinetrees Riding Centre and Vale do Ferro are well-known riding centres.

CAVING

The Algarve has more than 100 subterranean caves scattered across the central and eastern region, some dating from the Jurassic period. For more information, contact the Centro de Estudos Espeleológicos e Arqueológicos do Algarve.

Many of the caves have stalagmites and stalactites but visitors should explore only with a recommended guide.

On the Azores island of Terceira the Algar do Carvão is one of the volcanic wonders of the world. It is a giant cave that spirals downwards nearly 100 m (328 ft) from the opening of its conduit, ending at a crystal-clear lake. Milky white stalactites and stalagmites cover large areas of the roof and walls.

The smaller Gruta de Natal is safe and easy to explore with the help of an on-site guide.

CLIMBING AND MOUNTAINEERING

Madeira's volcanic origins and rugged mountain terrain, with cliff faces rising from the sea, offer exciting conquests for experienced climbers. The favourite areas are the central mountain range, the sea cliffs and some of the northern cliffs. The Azores offers a similar landscape, and the island of Pico provides the ultimate challenge to scale its 2,341-m (7,680 ft) mountain – the highest in Portugal.

Golfing Holidays in Portugal

Portugal is well established as a golfing destination, and specialist golfing holidays have become a very popular way of visiting the country. The Algarve in particular has emerged as one of Europe's premier golfing regions. Its mild winters and large number of quality courses make it attractive to the serious as well as the recreational golfer. The other main golfing region is the area around Lisbon, but there are courses in central and northern Portugal as well. The Oporto Golf Club has the distinction of being one of the oldest courses in Europe. Madeira and the Azores also cater for the golfer.

The scenic Penha Longa Golf Club, Central Portugal

GENERAL INFORMATION

The majority of Portugal's nearly 60 golf courses are by the sea, with spectacular scenery. Along the mainland west coast, and in exposed areas of western Algarve, the wind increases as the day progresses, so golfers wishing to avoid it should opt for an early start. It is always best to book ahead. The main season runs from mid-autumn to late spring, but summer can also be busy. Rates vary from just over €30 to over €150 for a round of 18 holes, but there are many discounts available through tour operators, hotels and booking services.

MAJOR TOURNAMENTS

Portugal currently hosts three PGA tournaments: the Madeira Island Open, held in March at the Santo da Serra; the Open de Portugal, held in the Algarve or Lisbon area in March or April; and the Portugal Masters, first held at Southern Portugal's Victoria Vilamoura in October 2007. Visit www.pga.com for further information on tournaments.

NORTHERN PORTUGAL

The north is the least developed in terms of golf, but it was here that golf began in Portugal when Scottish and English port shippers founded the Oporto Golf Club in 1890. The course, is the oldest in the Iberian peninsula. The par-71 circuit is laid out on sand dunes by the Atlantic. The Amarante Golf Club offers a varied par-68 mountain course.

LISBON AND CENTRAL PORTUGAL

Near the picturesque town of Óbidos, the Praia d'El Rey Golf Club is one of Portugal's most highly regarded. Laid out by American golf architect Cabell Robinson, the long par-72 course is set in a coastal resort and extends across sand dunes, cliffs and pine woods. The course is accessible to players of all levels. Oitavos Golf is part of the Quinta da Marinha resort near Cascais. The par-71 course, designed by Arthur Hills, offers great views of the Atlantic and the Sintra hills. It is set in the Sintra-Cascais Natural Park and runs in a loop among reforested sand dunes, pine woods and open coastal terrain. There is another 18-hole course within the resort, the Quinta da Marinha Golf Club. Nearby, is the Penha Longa Golf Club with a par-72 course in landscape similar to that of the Oitavos course. This is complemented by a 9-hole course. Tróia Golf, a challenging par-72 course of small greens and narrow fairways. Sections of the course run alongside Tróia beach, with a view of the Arrábida hills which protect the course and beach from northerly winds.

SOUTHERN PORTUGAL

Ammaia Golf Club is the only golf course in the large Alentejo region, is near Marvão, not far from the Spanish border. The wide fairways and large greens of this par-72 course make it amateur-friendly, but there are real challenges for proficient golfers, too. The number and density of golf courses in the Algarve means that a visitor to any part of the region can reach a golf course in a couple of hours at most. The oldest course along this holiday coast is Penina, part of the Le Meridien Penina resort (see p402).

The par-73 parkland course is complemented by two 9-hole courses. Farther east, Vale da Pinta is a highly regarded par-71 course.

The vast Vilamoura resort in central Algarve is home to no fewer than five golf courses, all of the highest standard. The most recent course, Victoria

Vilamoura, was acclaimed as one of the best in Europe within a year of opening. Slightly farther east is Vale do Lobo, the first golf resort in the Algarve, opened in 1962.

Its Royal course is a demanding par-72 course with memorable scenery, overlooking the beach and the Atlantic. The resort's other course, Ocean, is regarded as equally challenging. Neighbouring Quinta do Lago, has two excellent golf courses, South and North.

Also within the resort, but not owned by it, are two other top par-72 courses, San Lorenzo and Pinheiros Altos.

MADEIRA AND THE AZORES

Palheiro Golf is a beautiful mountain course. Santo da Serra Golf hosts the Madeira Island Open. Porto Santo Golf features two 18-hole courses, designed by Severiano Ballesteros. Dramatic cliff-top ocean holes are combined with long holes along the island's famous beach. São Miguel, the main island in the Azores archipelago, has two golf courses: Furnas and Batalha. The former overlooks the stunning Furnas valley and the latter is by the ocean, on the island's north coast.

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 446-455

TRAVEL INFORMATION 456-465

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Portugal is an easy country to visit. In the Algarve and the Lisbon area, where most tourists go, the choice of hotels, restaurants and entertainment is vast. English is widely spoken, and visitors are welcomed. But even in the less developed parts of the country, visitors will find it easy to deal with friendly locals. And even here, English is widely spoken. Accommodation can be found virtually anywhere, children are always welcome, and food is good. Most towns also have helpful tourist offices.

WHEN TO VISIT

The country's long Atlantic coast is the single most important factor for Portugal's climate. Coastal regions can be very rainy in winter, and although temperatures don't drop that low, it often feels very cold. The exception is the Algarve, which although it is also on the Atlantic, faces south and is protected from northerly winds by inland hills.

The Algarve, then, is the only year-round destination, with hot to very hot summers and mild winters. Other coastal areas generally have warm to hot summers, with either balmy or windy evenings. Inland areas throughout the country are subject to more extreme conditions, with colder winters even in the Alentejo and hotter summers even in Trás-os-Montes.

Spring and autumn are good times to visit because the weather is mild, but spring in particular may be wet, which contributes to the glory of the country flowers.

CUSTOMS

On 30 June 1999, the intra-EU Duty and Tax Free Allowances, better known as Duty-free and mainly affecting such items as alcohol, perfumes and tobacco, were abolished. Consulates can generally provide up-to-date information on particular customs regulations. For more details on customs and other tax-related matters, see pages 432-3.

VISAS

EU nationals only need a valid passport to enter Portugal. If they stay for more than six months they should apply for a residence permit. There is currently no visa requirement for Americans, Canadians, New Zealanders or Australians entering Portugal. Nationals of those countries may stay for up to 90 days and then apply for an extension (usually another 90 days). However, travellers from outside the EU are advised to check with the nearest Portuguese embassy or consulate before going, as visa regulations are subject to change.

Bottles of port

TOURIST INFORMATION

The Portuguese Ministry of Tourism divides the country into a number of touristic regions, which are separate from its administrative districts. All major cities or large towns within each touristic region have a Municipal Tourist Office (Posto de Turismo), as do the larger towns on Madeira and the Azores. This guide gives details of the relevant tourist information office for each sight. Here, visitors can obtain information about the region, town plans, maps and details on regional events. In some cases they will also sell advance tickets for local shows and concerts. Information about local hotels will be available from the tourist office, although they will not usually book the accommodation.

High season on a beach in the resort of Albufeira, in the Algarve

Signpost in the village of Marvão

Office opening hours vary as each tourist region is organized independently, but generally they follow the same opening hours as local shops. In more rural areas, offices are often closed at weekends, and may not offer the same information and services that can be found in larger towns. There are tourist offices at all the major airports, as well as in all cities and large towns. Visitors can also obtain information prior to travelling, from Portuguese tourist offices abroad. These offices will normally provide visitors planning a trip with a wide range of useful maps, fact sheets and tourist brochures.

MUSEUMS

The majority of Portugal's museums are run by the state, although there are also a number of private ones. In addition to the main national museums and galleries, there are countless regional ones scattered around the country. These cover a range of topics, from the history of a region to the works of local artists.

ADMISSION CHARGES

Most museums in Portugal charge a small entrance fee, which varies from one to three euros. These charges are sometimes reduced or waived altogether (or just in the morning) on Sundays and public holidays. Young people under 14 or pensioners (with proof of age) may obtain a 40 per cent discount. Those under 26 with a Cartão Jovem (youth card) or ISIC card (International Student Identity Card) are entitled to half-price entrance. Tourists to Lisbon may also buy a Lisboa card, available from the airport, tourist offices, and travel agents. It allows free entry to 26 of the city's museums, and reduced entry to many others, including the Gulbenkian, as well as free public transport for a fixed period. Lisboa cards are valid for one, two or three days.

OPENING TIMES

Museums are usually open from 10am–5pm from Tuesday to Sunday, with many closing for lunch either from noon to 2pm or from 12:30pm to 2:30pm. Smaller and private museums may have different opening times. Museums and some sights close on Mondays and public holidays. Major churches are open during the day without a fixed timetable although some may close between noon and 4pm. Smaller churches and those in rural areas may only be open for religious services and in some cases you may need to find the keyholder for admittance.

LANGUAGE

Written Portuguese is fairly similar to Spanish, so if you know Spanish you should have little difficulty understanding Portuguese text. However, Portuguese pronunciation is different and spoken Portuguese sounds nothing like spoken Spanish.

The Portuguese are justifiably proud of their own language, and may take offence at being addressed in Spanish. Their own language is widely spoken throughout the world as a result of former colonial ties with Brazil and a number of countries in Africa. A phrase book containing the most useful words and phrases, along with their phonetic pronunciations, can be found on pages 495–6.

ETIQUETTE

Although English is more widely spoken in Portugal than in neighbouring Spain, the Portuguese appreciate visitors' efforts, however small, to communicate in their language. A simple bom dia (good day) or boa tarde (good afternoon) can work wonders. For any attempts at more advanced communication, be prepared to repeat yourself several times, allowing your listener to suspend his disbelief and adjust to the peculiarities of your pronunciation.

Portuguese retains some old-fashioned modes of address which are seen as polite rather than formal, including o senhor and a senhora where English uses "you". This contrasts with the informality of cheek-kisses, used between men and women as well as between women in most situations except formal and business introductions. Men generally shake hands.

Although dress is generally relaxed these days, arms should be covered up and shorts should not be worn when visiting churches.

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

English-language newspapers printed in Europe are available at large newsagents on the day of publication, including the American International Herald Tribune. Various other European newspapers and periodicals are generally on sale the day after home publication.

Portuguese daily newspapers include Diário de Notícias and Público. The weekly Portugal News, published on Saturday, is the country's main English-language publication. Catering to the expat population, it provides a range of news and information about local happenings.

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Portugal has two state-owned television channels, RTP1 and RTP2, and two privately-owned channels, SIC and TVI. Most foreign-language programmes are broadcast in the original language, with Portuguese subtitles. Other European and international broadcasts are available via satellite and cable, and include the usual 24-hour news, music, sports and feature channels. RDP radio broadcasts in English in the summer only.

FACILITIES FOR THE DISABLED

Facilities in Portugal for the disabled are limited at present, although the situation is gradually improving. Wheelchairs and adapted toilets are now available at most airports and the main stations, reserved car parking is becoming more evident and ramps and lifts are gradually being installed in public places. In addition, Lisbon and Oporto have a dial-a-ride bus service. To book, phone and indicate when and where you want to be picked up, and your destination. The operators speak only Portuguese, so you may need to ask your hotel for help. There is a special taxi service in Lisbon, but it has to be booked long in advance.

WOMEN TRAVELLING ALONE

Travelling alone in Portugal is fairly safe for women although common principles, such as keeping to well-lit, public areas after dark, still apply. Some areas of Lisbon, such as the Baixa, Bairro Alto and Cais do Sodré, are best avoided at bar closing time. Resorts on the Algarve and Lisbon coasts tend to be the worst for unwanted attentions. Hitching alone is not safe; use taxis or public transport.

STUDENT INFORMATION

Young people aged 12–25 may buy a Cartão Jovem, (youth card), which costs about €8 and is valid for a year. It offers travel insurance and discounts for shops, museums, travel and youth hostels (see p376). This card is supplied by the Instituto Português da Juventude (Portuguese Youth Institute). The International Student Identity Card (ISIC) provides the same benefits as the Cartão Jovem and can be bought in your own country.

RELIGION

Roman Catholicism is the dominant religion in Portugal. Church services are held most evenings and every Sunday morning as well as on religious holidays. Sightseeing may be difficult (and is not encouraged) while services are in progress. Churches of other denominations, including the Church of England, Baptist, and Evangelical can be found in larger towns and cities. St Vincent's Anglican Church, which travels from place to place, holds a number of religious services in the Algarve.

PORTUGUESE TIME

Portugal and Madeira follow Britain in adopting Greenwich Mean Time (GMT) in winter and moving the clocks forward one hour from March to September (as in British Summer Time). In the Azores, clocks are one hour behind GMT in winter and the same as GMT in summer. The 24-hour clock is more commonly used throughout Portugal.

ELECTRICAL ADAPTORS

Voltage in Portugal is 220 volts and plugs have two round pins. Most hotel bathrooms offer built-in adaptors for electric razors.

Personal Health and Security

Pharmacy sign

Portugal does not have a serious crime problem, but simple precautions should always be taken. Watch out for pickpockets in crowded areas and on public transport, avoid carrying large amounts of cash and don't leave valuables in parked cars. The police are helpful, but bureaucratic. Reporting a crime can be slow but is necessary. For minor complaints, consult a pharmacy.

WHAT TO DO IN AN EMERGENCY

The number to call in an emergency is 112. Dial the number and ask for the service you require – police (polícia), ambulance (ambulância) or fire brigade (bombeiros). If you need medical treatment, the casualty department (serviço de urgência) of the closest main hospital will treat you. On motorways and main roads, use the orange SOS telephone to call for help should you have a car accident. The service is in Portuguese; press the button and then wait for the operator who will connect you.

Motorway SOS telephone

HEALTH PRECAUTIONS

No vaccinations are needed for visitors, although doctors recommend being up-to-date with tetanus, diphtheria and measles jabs. Tap water is safe to drink throughout the country. If you are visiting during the summer, it is advisable to bring insect repellent, as mosquitoes, while they do not present any serious health problems, can be a nuisance.

MEDICAL TREATMENT

Social security coverage is available for all EU nationals, although you may have to pay first and reclaim later. To reclaim, you must obtain a EU health insurance card before you travel. This form is available at post offices throughout the UK or from the Department of Health, with a booklet called Health Advice for Travellers, which explains entitlements and how to claim them. The card covers emergencies only, so medical insurance is strongly advised.

Bear in mind that private health care is expensive in Portugal and get an itemized bill for your insurance carrier.

The British Hospital in Lisbon has English-speaking doctors, as do health centres on the Lisbon coast and throughout the Algarve. For details, look in the local English newspapers.

PHARMACIES

Pharmacies (farmácias) can diagnose simple health problems and suggest treatment. Pharmacists can dispense a range of drugs that are available on prescription in many other countries. The sign for a farmácia is a green cross on a white background. They are open from 9am to 1pm and 3pm to 7pm weekdays (9am–1pm Saturday). Each pharmacy displays a card showing the address of the nearest all-night pharmacy and a list of those with late closing (10pm).

Police station at Bragança in the Trás-os-Montes region

PORTUGUESE POLICE

In all main cities and towns, the police force is the Polícia de Segurança Pública (PSP). Law and order in rural areas is kept by the Guarda Nacional Republicana (GNR). The Brigada de Trânsito (traffic police) division of the GNR, recognizable by their red armbands, is responsible for patrolling roads.

PERSONAL SECURITY

Violent crime is rare in Portugal, and the vast majority of visitors will experience no problems whatsoever. Nonetheless, a Traffic policeman

Male PSP officer

Female PSP officer

few sensible precautions are worth taking: in Lisbon, avoid quiet areas such as the Baixa after dark, and don't stroll alone through Bairro Alto, Alfama or around Cais do Sodré after bars' closing time. In the daytime, be alert to the possibility of pickpockets or bag-snatchers. Similar precautions apply to some of the resorts in the Algarve and to the Ribeira district of Oporto.

It is generally a good idea to ignore any jeering, heckling or other provocations – they are usually not as serious as they can sound. Other precautions include not carrying large amounts of cash and holding on to mobile phones and cameras. If you are robbed, you are advised not to try to resist.

REPORTING A CRIME

If you have any property stolen, you should immediately contact the nearest police station. Theft of documents, such as a passport, should also be reported to your consulate. Many insurance companies insist that policy holders report any theft within 24 hours. The police will file a report which you will need in order to claim from your insurance company on your return home. Contact the PSP in towns or cities, or the GNR in rural areas. In all situations, keep calm and be polite to the authorities to avoid delays. The same applies should you be involved in a car accident. In rural areas you may be asked to accompany the other driver to the nearest police station to complete the necessary paperwork. Ask for an interpreter if no one there speaks English.

LEGAL ASSISTANCE

An insurance policy that covers the costs of legal advice, issued by companies such as Europ Assistance or Mondial Assistance, will help with the legal aspects of your insurance claim should you have an accident.

If you have not arranged this cover, call your nearest consulate or the Ordem dos Advogados (lawyers' association) who can give you names of English-speaking lawyers and help you with obtaining representation.

Lists of interpreters, if you require one, are given in the local Yellow Pages (Páginas Amarelas) under Tradutores e Intérpretes, or can be contacted through the Assistentes Intérpretes de Portugal, which is based in Lisbon.

PUBLIC CONVENIENCES

The Portuguese for toilets is casa de banho. If the usual figures of a man or woman are not shown, look for bomens, senbores or cavalheiros (men) and senboras or damas (ladies).

Toilet facilities are provided at service areas every 40 km (25 miles) and at drive-in rest areas on motorways.

Banking and Local Currency

BPI Bank Logo

Portugal is one of the founding members of the European Monetary Union and one of the countries that launched the euro in 2002. Conversion to the new currency went more smoothly than anyone had dared hope, but in some cases prices may still be quoted in both currencies. Traveller's cheques are the safest way to carry money, but cashing them can be quite expensive, and they are rarely accepted as payment. Credit and debit cards are often a more convenient option. Still, it is always a good idea to arrive with enough euros in cash to cover one or two days' expenditure.

BANKING HOURS

Banks are open between 8:30am and 3pm, Monday to Friday. Some branches stay open for longer, usually until 6pm – enquire at individual banks to find out which these are, as they sometimes change. Banks are closed at weekends and on public holidays.

CHANGING MONEY

Money can be changed at banks, bureaux de change (agências de câmbios) and at many hotels. Bank branches are everywhere, but their rates of exchange and commissions vary. Waiting times and bureaucratic practices at banks may also make them a worse option. Bureaux de change charge higher commissions than many banks but offer a more expedient service, as well as longer opening hours (including weekends). As a rule, hotels have the highest rates of exchange. At banks and bureaux de change you may be asked to show your passport or some other form of identification for exchange transactions.

If you are passing through Lisbon, a convenient alternative is to use one of a few currency exchange machines.

CHEQUES AND CARDS

Traveller's cheques are a safe but not very convenient way of carrying money in Portugal. It is rare for shops or hotels to accept them as payment, and cashing them may be quite expensive. In general, bureaux de change are better for this than banks, whose commissions may be high.

Most visitors, however, find it most practical and convenient to withdraw cash from an automatic teller machine (Multi-banco or MB) using their credit/debit card. Multibanco machines are typically found outside bank branches or in shopping centres. Most accept Visa, MasterCard, American

Bank façade in Lisbon

Express, Maestro and Cirrus. Bear in mind that transaction fees are always charged when withdrawing cash on a card, and that these are sometimes irrespective of the amount withdrawn. Fewer and larger withdrawals are therefore preferable to many small ones.

THE EURO

Introduction of the single European currency, the euro, has taken place in 13 of the 27 member states of the EU. Austria, Belgium, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg,

The Netherlands, Portugal, Slovenia and Spain have adopted the single currency; the UK, Denmark and Sweden have stayed out, with an option to review the decision. Euro banknotes and coins came into circulation on 1 January 2002. After a transition period allowing the use of both national currencies and the euro, Portugal's own currency, the escudo, was completely phased out by March 2002. All euro banknotes and coins can be used anywhere within the 13 participating member states.

Banknotes

Euro banknotes, each a different colour and size, have seven denominations. The 5-euro note (grey in colour) is the smallest, followed by the 10-euro note (pink), 20-euro note (blue), 50-euro note (orange), 100-euro note (green), 200-euro note (yellow) and 500-euro note (purple).

Coins

The euro has eight coin denominations: 2 euros and 1 euro; 50 cents, 20 cents, 10 cents, 5 cents, 2 cents and 1 cent. The 2- and 1-euro coins are both silver and gold in colour. The 50-, 20- and 10-cent coins are gold. The 5-, 2- and 1-cent coins are bronze.

Using the Telephone

English-style phone box

Once notorious for its unreliability, Portugal's telecommunications system is now fully modern. The visitor should have few problems using the telephone, with the possible exception of a few old-fashioned telephone booths. The previous monopoly of the state operator, Portugal Telecom, has been broken, and a price war is in full swing. Look out for special offers on phone cards, which are the best option when using a public telephone.

There are three main mobile phone operators in Portugal: Vodafone, TMN and Optimus. All have good coverage in most parts of the country.

TELEPHONING IN PORTUGAL

Public pay phones come in both the coin and the card variety, as well as in combinations of the two. They are found in booths in the street as well as in bars, cafés and shopping centres. Coin-operated phones now accept all denominations of euro and cent coins except the one-cent coin. Card operated phones are more common and more convenient, accepting a variety of phone cards available from post offices, newsagents, tobacconists and Telecom company outlets. Some also accept credit cards, although that incurs a small extra charge.

The cheapest way to use a payphone is with a phone card. The main operator, PT Comunicações (previously the monopoly holder and still the owner of the network), charges about three European cents per minute for a local call. International calls and calls to mobile phones are more expensive again, but there are special cards and deals to be had. An alternative is to phone from a post office, without having either change or card. You simply step into a free booth, make your call, and pay the cashier afterwards. The cost per unit is relatively low. Some cafés, restaurants and bars also have a units meter connected to their phone and calculate the cost of your call. They charge more than the post office but less than hotels.

For international calls and calls to mobile phones in particular, bear in mind that rates are lower between 9pm and 9am and at weekends and on public holidays.

REVERSE CHARGE CALLS

Reverse charge calls can be made from any telephone. Dial the Directo number listed at the front of the telephone directory, after the country and city dialling codes or dial 179 and ask for the Directo number to the country you wish to call. This number will put you in contact with an operator in the country you wish to call. For some countries, including the USA, there is a choice of carriers (eg AT&T or MCI).

DIALLING CODES

- To make a call within each town or region, and also to call from one town or region to another, simply dial the nine-digit number that you require.
- To phone Portugal from abroad dial the Portugal country code (+ 351), and then the nine-digit local number that you require.
- To call abroad from Portugal, dial 00 and then the country code and local number you require. The telephone country code for US and Canada is 1; Ireland is 353; UK is 44; Australia is 61; and New Zealand is 64.
- Portugal's directory enquiries number is 118. For international directory enquiries dial 177.

Postal Services

Correios (postal service) logo

The postal service in Portugal is known as the Correios. It is reasonably efficient: a letter sent to a country within the EU should take five to seven days, and a letter sent to the USA or further afield should take about seven to ten days. The Correios sign depicts a horse and rider in red.

SENDING A LETTER

First-class mail is known as correio azul and second-class mail is called normal. First-class letters are posted in blue postboxes and second-class post in red ones. At post offices there may be separate slots for national and international mail. There is also an express mail service called EMS, and for valuable letters, a recorded delivery service (correio registado) is available. Stamps (selos) can be bought from post offices or from any shop displaying the red and white Correios sign, and also from vending machines. These are found in airport terminals and in railway stations, as well as on the streets of large towns.

Portuguese stamps

by posta restante together with the postcode and the name of the destination town. To collect the mail, take your passport and look for the counter that is marked encomendas. A small fee is charged for this service.

POST OFFICES

Post offices are usually open from 9am until 6pm from Monday to Friday. Central post offices in major cities have different opening times. These are 8am–10pm from Monday to Friday and 9am–6pm on Saturdays.

PORTUGUESE ADDRESSES

Portuguese addresses often include both the storey of a building and the location within that floor. The ground floor is the rás-do-chão (r/c), first floor primeiro andar (1<sup>o</sup>), the second floor is expressed as 2<sup>o</sup>, and so on. Each floor is divided into left, esquerdo (E or Esqth), right, direito (D or Dth).

POSTE RESTANTE

A mail-holding service (posta restante) is also available at most major post offices. The envelope should carry the name of the recipient in block capitals, underlined, followed

First-class letters should be posted in blue (Correio Azul) boxes and second-class letters in red boxes.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Portugal, Madeira and Porto Santo, as well as the major Azorean islands, have airports served by TAP, the national airline. European and other airlines fly to the international airports of Lisbon, Oporto, Faro and Funchal, which all get busier during the holiday season. Charter flights, which may or may not be part of a package deal, are often the cheapest alternative. Portugal's main-land rail network is fast and modern on busy lines such as Lisbon-Oporto and slow on provincial lines. Trains are inexpensive, especially if you are eligible for any of the discounts. Buses are sometimes faster and generally offer a wider choice of departures than the rail network. Car rental is not cheap (pre-arranged package deals are often the best value), but obviously offers the greatest flexibility. Diesel costs less than petrol, while motorway tolls can be expensive. Road users should also be aware that Portugal has one of Europe's highest road accident rates.

ARRIVING BY AIR

Lisbon, and to a lesser extent Oporto, have regular scheduled flights from European capitals and major cities, including London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, Munich, Frankfurt, Zurich and Milan. Most of these are daily, and in many cases there are several daily connections. TAP, Portugal's national carrier, currently operates five daily flights from London (three from Heathrow and two from Gatwick) to Lisbon and one to Oporto (from Heathrow), plus several weekly ones. It is worth checking the internet for bargains (TAP auctions flights online every Thursday, under "virtual auction" on www.tap.pt).

Faro is the usual Portuguese destination for charter flights and low-cost airlines, particularly during the holiday season. Many fly to Lisbon as well.

Funchal and Porto Santo are also package holiday destinations, which means that charter flights may be available. The Azores are becoming a more accessible holiday destination, in terms of flights and prices (see p457).

LONG-HAUL FLIGHTS

Travellers from North America will usually have to change at some European hub. Delta flies to Lisbon via Paris (using a partner airline) daily or twice daily. TAP's only direct flights from the US are out of Newark. South America is better served thanks to Portugal's ties with Brazil: TAP has direct flights to and from several Brazilian destinations, as does the Brazilian national carrier, VARIG.

There are no direct flights to mainland Portugal from Canada, Australia or New Zealand. London is the most popular hub for flights from these countries.

North Americans wanting to visit the Azores will find a greater choice of direct connections, due to the large Azorean communities in the US and Canada. The same is true of the ever-popular Madeira.

AIR FARES

Charter flights are available to Lisbon and Faro, particularly during the summer months. Tickets always have fixed outward and return dates, but as they are often cheaper than a regular one-way ticket, many passengers only use the outward flight. Some charter companies now re-sell empty return seats at very competitive prices.

Major low-cost airlines such as easyJet and Ryanair fly weekly or several times a week to Faro – Ryanair currently only from Dublin, while easyJet flies from Luton, Stansted, East Midlands and Bristol. bmibaby is another low-cost airline with a weekly flight to Faro, from East Midlands.

Much the best way of getting a cheap ticket is to check websites such as www.cheapflights.com which offer an overview of currently available deals. These are not necessarily on low-cost airlines, as regular airlines sell quotas of low-cost seats or unsold ones via a network of agents.

PACKAGE DEALS

Specialist holidays are now a popular option in Portugal. These include stays in manor houses and pousadas (see pp380-81), short breaks to Lisbon and Oporto, tennis and golfing holidays in the Algarve and walking holidays in the Minho. These, together with package deals including hotel, villa or apartment accommodation, will often provide inclusive bus service to your destination from the airport.

TAP Air Portugal aircraft on the tarmac at Lisbon Airport

Fly-drive deals are also available, to the Algarve especially, that mean you spend less time at the airport dealing with paperwork. Car hire, when booked as part of a package deal, may be very reasonable. Travel agents sell these holidays but a list of companies specializing in them on the mainland and the islands is available from ITP, the National Tourist Office.

INTERNAL FLIGHTS

Tap also flies between major domestic destinations, including Lisbon, Oporto, Faro and Funchal. PGA Portugalíia Airlines, Portugal's privately owned second airline, has a large domestic network (and a growing European one). In partnership with SATA, TAP flies daily from Lisbon and Oporto to Funchal and from Lisbon to São Miguel, Terceira and Faial in the Azores.

Travelling by Rail

The Portuguese state railway, Comboios de Portugal (CP), provides an inexpensive, country-wide network. Quality of service can vary considerably, however, and much modernization to the system is still in the planning stage. The Alfa Pendular train between Lisbon and Oporto, via Coimbra, is fast and efficient, but for some other long journeys, such as Lisbon to Évora, it may be quicker and more comfortable to take the bus.

Carved arch over entrance to Lisbon's Rossio station (see p82)

ARRIVING BY TRAIN

There are two main routes into Portugal by train. The first is to travel from Austerlitz station in Paris, changing at Irún on the French-Spanish border, then continuing on to the Portuguese border town of Vilar Formoso in the north. The train splits near Coimbra, heading north for Oporto and south for Lisbon, coming into Santa Apolónia station. The entire journey from London to Lisbon, using the Eurostar to reach Paris, takes 30 hours.

The alternative route is to travel on the overnight train from Madrid, passing through Marvão and Santarém, then on to Lisbon. Travel from Madrid into Lisbon takes 10 hours. This train, called the "hotel-train", has luxurious carriages, some of which have showers.

TRAVELLING BY TRAIN

Most areas of Portugal are served by rail, although the more remote lines, such as Tua to Mirandela, have sadly been made obsolete as new roads are built. A bus service covers any gaps in the system, although it is wise to confirm that the service you require exists before setting off.

There are several categories of train in Portugal. The most comfortable and quickest is the modern Alfa Pendular, which travels between Lisbon, Coimbra and Oporto. The Rápido Inter-Cidades (IC) is only marginally slower, although less luxurious, and connects most important towns and cities. Most smaller towns and villages throughout the country are served by the Regional and the Inter-Regional lines. These local lines are considerably slower than the Rápido and Alfa Pendular, and the trains are less comfortable, with fewer facilities. However, they stop at a great many more stations.

Logo for Comboios de Portugal

CITY STATIONS

Lisbon has four rail termini. Santa Apolónia station, on Avenida Infante Dom Henrique, serves the north and all international destinations.

Oriente, by the Expo site Parque das Nações, was opened on the same line as Santa Apolónia in 1998. It serves the south. For more routes south and east, cross the river (using the Ferretagus train service, which runs on the 25 de Abril bridge) to catch a train from Barreiro station. Trains for Estoril and Cascais (a 30-minute trip) leave from Cais do Sodré station.

Rossio station, near Praça dos Restauradores, used to serve Sintra and stations along the coast as far north as Figueira da Foz, but it is closed indefinitely. Trains to Sintra now leave from Entre Campos Metro station. Care should be taken on the Lisbon to Sintra line at night.

Coimbra has two mainline stations: trains from Lisbon and Oporto stop at Coimbra B, a five-minute shuttle ride from the central Coimbra.

Oporto has two mainline stations: international and long-distance trains come into Campanhã, to the east of the city; regional and suburban trains come into São Bento in the centre. From here there is a shuttle service to Campanhã station. The former rail station at Trindade will become a Metro station.

FARES

Fares within Portugal are fairly cheap in comparison with other European countries, and there are numerous discounts available. Children under the age of four travel free, and those from four to twelve pay half-fare. There are also discounts for groups, students and pensioners.

PORTUGAL'S PRINCIPAL RAILWAY LINES

First-class travel on Portugal's trains is 40 per cent more expensive than second class, and second-class travel, while fairly basic on some lines, is usually sufficiently comfortable.

Visitors who intend to do much travelling by train might consider buying a tourist ticket (bilhete turístico). This is valid for an unlimited number of journeys for 7, 14 or 21 consecutive days, and can be used on all the different types of train.

Families can save money by using the cartão de família, which gives good discounts, but only on journeys over 150 km (90 miles). It works as follows: one member of the family pays full fare, other members over 13 years of age pay half the full fare, and those under 13 pay a quarter of the fare.

An Interrail pass for young people under 26 gives unlimited travel on all European trains for a month, so will allow travel both to and within Portugal (if it is bought outside the country). The slightly more expensive Interrail 26-plus pass does not allow travel in Spain. For journeys within Portugal only, the Eurodomino pass offers unlimited travel for three, five or ten days, with a reduced rate for those younger than 26.

BUYING TICKETS

Tickets for Alfa and Rápido (IC) trains can usually be booked up to 30 days ahead, although some services only offer 10-day advance bookings, so it is important to check first. Reservations can be made at stations or travel agents. If you want to buy a ticket the day you travel, arrive early as long queues at the ticket office are normal, especially during peak hours and holiday periods. It is important that you buy a ticket before boarding, otherwise you are liable to be fined on the spot by the conductor.

TIMETABLES

Main stations in Portugal provide a complete rail timetable, the Guia do Horário Oficial, which details all routes for Alfa Pendular, IC, Inter-Regional and Regional trains. A section in Portuguese only has details of the tickets and discounts that are available.

Driving in Portugal

Automóvel Clube de Portugal logo

Portugal's road network includes an expanding motorway system, but some older main roads may be in need of repair, while minor roads can be very rough and tortuous. Traffic jams are a problem in and near cities. Never attempt driving in the rush hour, and be wary of reckless Portuguese drivers. Always carry your passport, licence, log book or rental contract, and car insurance. Failure to produce these documentos if the police stop you will incur a fine.

Disembarking at Setúbal after crossing on the car ferry from Tróia

ARRIVING BY CAR

The quickest route is to cross the French-Spanish border at Irún and then take the E80 via Valladolid to Vilar Formoso in Portugal. To go to Lisbon or the Algarve, turn off at Burgos, head for Cáceres and then on to Badajoz.

Taking the car ferry to northern Spain from the UK reduces time on the road, but crossings are extremely long: 24 hours to Santander and 35 hours to Bilbao. Brittany Ferries travel to Santander leaving from Plymouth (March to November), and from Portsmouth (November to January). P & O's Portsmouth-Bilbao line runs all year round, and all routes operate twice-weekly. There are no ferries travelling to Madeira or the Azores.

Driving time may also be reduced by using the Motorail link from Paris Gare d'Austerlitz to Lisbon, a twice-weekly service. Drivers load their cars one day, travel by passenger train the next, and pick up their cars on the third day. French Railways in the UK will supply information.

CAR HIRE

Car hire agencies may be found at Lisbon, Faro and Oporto airports and in main towns. Local firms usually offer better rates than international ones, but you should check the condition of the car more carefully before you accept it, as well as the insurance coverage. You must have an international driving licence, be over the age of 23 and have held a licence for at least one year.

A steep road near Gouveia in the Serra da Estrela (see pp220-21)

TRAVELLING AROUND BY CAR

Major roads include EN (Estrada Nacional) roads, many of which have been upgraded to either IP (Itinerário Principal) or IC (Itinerário Complementar) roads. IP roads are much used by heavy goods lorries avoiding motorway tolls, and can be slow as a result.

Always fill up with petrol in town before setting off, as petrol stations can be scarce in remote areas. The best road maps are by Michelin or the Portuguese motoring organization, the ACP (Automóvel Clube de Portugal).

PARKING

Finding a parking space in cities can be difficult. Most parking spaces in Lisbon and Oporto are now pay-and-display during the working week. A simpler and safer, if more expensive, alternative is one of the many new underground car parks. Follow the blue signs with a white P.

PETROL (GASOLINE)

Petrol is relatively expensive and generally the same price countrywide. Diesel (gasóleo) is cheaper than petrol, both leaded and unleaded. Some pumps are self-service and colour-coded: green for unleaded, red for leaded and black for diesel.

Traffic queuing to pass over the Ponte 25 de Abril, Lisbon

RULES OF THE ROAD

Traffic drives on the right hand side, continental rules of the road apply and the international sign system is used. Unless there are signs to the contrary, traffic from the right has priority at squares, crossroads and junctions. Cars on roundabouts travel anticlockwise, and have priority over waiting traffic. There is very little advance warning of pedestrian crossings.

Seat belts must be used and the alcohol limit is 0.05 per cent. Speed limits are 60 kph in towns and 90 kph on other roads (37 mph and 55 mph), and 120 kph (74 mph) on motorways. Breaking the speed limit incurs an on-the-spot fine.

A motorway toll – the left lane reserved for users of the Via Verde system two lanes. Tolls are payable on motorways and on Lisbon's bridges, the Ponte 25 de Abril and the new Ponte Vasco da Gama. Do not use the Via Verde (green lane) at tolls; this is only for the use of drivers who subscribe to an electronic system allowing them to pay automatically.

BREAKDOWN SERVICES

There is a reciprocal breakdown service between ACP and other organizations. To qualify, drivers should take out European cover with their own organization. Motorways have SOS phones, and if you use them, state that you are entitled to ACP cover. For drivers without cover, most towns have a garage with breakdown lorry.

CYCLING

The south is the best area for cycling, but in summer the Alentejo can be too hot. If you plan on doing a lot of cycling, Instituto Português de Cartografia e Cadastro sells good large-scale maps.

MOTORWAYS AND TOLLS

Portugal's expanding motorway network (see map on back endpaper) links Lisbon with Braga and Guimarães in the north, and Oporto with Amarante. Another section goes from Lisbon to Torres Vedras, and a cross-country stretch runs east to the Spanish border at Elvas. Apart from some sections near Lisbon and Oporto, all motorways have

ROAD NUMBERS

Roads in Portugal may have up to three different numbers. Thanks to a building and upgrading programme, former EN or Estrada Nacional roads can also be IP (Itinerário Principal) roads. A road with an E (Estrada Europeia) number indicates that it is also a direct international route.

The Bragança-Oporto road is now the IP4, part motorway (A4) and part dual carriageway.

The road's original EN number (Estrada Nacional)

The E82 is an international route, ending in Spain near Valladolid.

Travelling by Coach

The logo of EVA, one of the country-wide coach companies

Since the privatization of Portugal's bus network, the Rodoviária Nacional (RN), coach companies have multiplied and some routes are now even operated by foreign companies. Regional operators compete with each other to offer better services to more destinations, and as a result, many coach journeys, such as Lisbon to the Algarve, are quicker and often more comfortable than the equivalent train journeys. Coaches also cover the increasing number of defunct sections of railway, such as Mirandela-Bragança and Beja-Moura.

GETTING TO PORTUGAL BY COACH

Travelling to Portugal by coach is cheap but very time-consuming. Eurolines runs a weekly summer service from Victoria Coach Station in London to Oporto, avoiding Paris. Passengers change in Valladolid in central Spain, and the journey takes 31 hours in total. The London to Lisbon service, which runs all year, takes even longer. Passengers change in Paris and spend two nights on the coach.

TRAVELLING AROUND BY COACH

Coach operators in Portugal include Renex, who link Faro, Lisbon, Oporto and Braga, and EVA which focuses on the Algarve. Rodoviária de Lisboa connects Lisbon with Estremadura. In Vila Real, Rodonorte covers the extreme north, and Rede Expressos, based in Oporto, covers the inland areas of Portugal.

There is no central coach station in either Lisbon or Oporto as companies are private and operate separately, but the main coach terminus in Lisbon is on Avenida Casal Ribeiro. In Oporto, the main departure and arrival points are at Rua das Carmelitas and Praça Dona Filipa de Lencastre. Information on routes and prices is available from tourist offices and travel agencies.

COACH TOURS

Bus and coach tours around Lisbon and Oporto are plentiful. Citirama runs sight-seeing tours of Lisbon and its coast, and daytrips to sights such as Batalha, Sintra and Mafra. It also offers a night-time tour of the city, taking in the Jerónimos monastery and then dinner with a fado show. From Oporto, it runs tours of the Minho and Douro valleys, and a six-day trip to Lisbon. Gray Line, part of Citirama, also offers daytrips running from Lisbon to Évora and Coimbra, a cruise on the Tagus and a trip lasting three days to the Algarve. Pick-up points are at the main hotels or central locations. It is also possible to arrange longer trips to areas of historical or scenic interest.

A Cityrama coach on an excursion along the Lisbon coast

In the Algarve, there are frequent coach trips to places of interest such as Loulé, Silves and Monchique, the southwest and the River Guadiana, and further afield to Évora and Lisbon. Tourist offices, hotels and travel agencies can help with these, and pick-up points are the main coastal hotels.

Travelling Around the Islands

On the rocky, mountainous islands of Madeira and the Azores, the pace of transport is necessarily slow, and some places are only accessible on foot. Driving needs care and patience, and you may find organized trips by coach or taxi are more relaxing and rewarding.

Inter-island aircraft on the runway on Pico

ISLAND HOPPING

TAP flies several times a day between Funchal and Porto Santo in the Madeira group, and on the Azores, flights are operated by SATA (see p457). Flights to Flores and Corvo are often disrupted by adverse weather conditions, so for extensive island hopping it is a good idea to insure against delays. SATA flights should be confirmed at least 72 hours before take-off.

The most useful ferry connections are between the five central islands of the Azores, especially the Faial-Pico run.

AROUND MADEIRA

Buses operate throughout Madeira, but cater mainly for islanders' needs. However, companies such as Intervisa and Blandy organize coach trips around the island. Taxis can be hired by the day or half-day, but car hire offers the most flexibility (see p460). Book well ahead and allow plenty of time for journeys: roads are steep, tortuous and full of potholes.

The new road along the south coast was finally finished in 1999, but many places are still accessible only on foot.

AROUND THE AZORES

Cars can be hired on all the Azores except Corvo, from firms such as Ilha Verde Rent-A-Car. Charges are high compared to the mainland and the roads are precipitous, so it may be more restful, at least on the smaller islands, to take a tour by taxi. Many drivers speak English, and they often make memorable companions. Before setting off on a day trip, you should agree a price, itinerary and return time. You should also offer to pay for the driver's lunch. Check the weather beforehand: if the mountains and calderas are concealed by clouds, there is no point setting out. Buses are cheap but, as on Madeira, of little use to visitors. Tourist offices can supply information on coach trips by Agência Açoreana de Viagens and others, and also on boat trips along the coast. Bicycles can be hired, but the mountainous terrain makes cycling difficult. On the smaller islands you can usually hitch a lift with ease.

The best way to enjoy the Azores is on foot. Taxi drivers are willing to drop visitors off at the start of a route and pick them up further on. Detailed maps of the Azores are hard to find, so try to acquire one prior to arrival. Some routes are described in the specialist guidebooks sold locally.

Travelling within Cities

Sign for Metro
in Lisbon

The interesting parts of most towns and cities in Portugal – generally the centro histórico, – are small and eminently walkable, if you have both the time and inclination. In hilly cities such as Oporto and, particularly, Lisbon, the steep climbs can be avoided by using a choice of options such as centenarian tram, funicular or lift. Other cities are well served by buses, trolleybuses and taxis. Transport of any kind should be avoided during rush hour (8–10am and 5:30–7:30pm).

BUSES

Buses are a practical way to travel round and see the main cities, and Lisbon has an extensive network. When boarding the bus, enter at the front door and exit by the central door.

Tickets may be bought from the driver on boarding and are clipped by the (obliterador) machine near the driver. However, it is cheaper to buy tickets beforehand, usually for two journeys. Travelling without a valid ticket, if discovered by roaming inspectors, will incur a hefty fine. Every bus (autocarro) displays its destination (destino) at the front and most bus stops (paragens) have information about the route that the bus will take.

LISBON METRO

Lisbon's Metro network has four lines, mainly on the north-south axis; it is set to expand further north and west. It is the most efficient way to get around, especially during rush hour (8–10am and 5:30–8pm). The Metro operates between 6am and 1am.

Tickets are bought in machines or from ticket offices at the stations. They must be validated on entering the platform area and on leaving the station. In most stations, there are now gates that open on insertion of a valid ticket, or there is a small stamping machine to use. Fines for travelling without a valid ticket are severe. For further information, visit www.metrolisboa.pt

BUS TOURS

In Oporto, Cityrama runs city tours at least twice a week, and more often in summer. They include a visit to a port lodge with tasting (see p249). Tickets are sold at the Cityrama office, and the tourist office in Praça Dom João I, from where the buses depart. Cityrama runs a once-weekly tour of Coimbra. They have no office there, but the tourist office can take bookings and enquiries, and the bus departs from just outside.

TRAMS AND FUNICULARS

Fun ways of exploring Lisbon are by tram (eléctrico), funicular or lift (both elevador), while Oporto has one short tram route along the waterfront. In Lisbon, Carris runs a "hill tour" (Linha das Colinas) by antique tramcar.

Single trip

TICKETS IN LISBON

Buses, trams and funiculars accept the same tickets, which can be bought from any Carris kiosk. The basic multitrip Carris ticket is for two journeys and valid for an unlimited number of days. Other options are 1- and 3-day tickets. The Metro has its own system. Choose between a single-trip (€0.70) or a two-trip ticket (€1), or a ten-trip ticket (€6.65) valid for an unlimited number of days. There are also 30-day passes; combined Carris/Metro 1-day tickets (€3.30); and 5-day Carris/Metro tickets (€13.20). Bring your ID to buy them.

Lisbon's Elevador da Glória ascending to the Bairro Alto

Funiculars offer wonderful views over Lisbon (as well as saving tired legs) and there are a variety that ascend from river level up to the Bairro Alto: the Elevador da Bica starts near Cais do Sodré station and the Elevador da Glória goes from Praça dos Restauradores. Although the lifts in the Elevador de Santa Justa remain open to visitors using the café at the top, closure of the walkway for works means the lift does not currently link the Baixa with the Bairro Alto (see p84).

The Elevador da Lavra climbs from Praça dos Restauradores up to the Hospital São José.

TAXIS

Taxis have traditionally been black with a green roof, but these have been phased out in favour of a beige livery. They are relatively cheap and if you share the cost it sometimes works out cheaper than a bus or tram. Vacant taxis have their rooftop "taxi" signs switched on, but it is sometimes difficult to see if they are lit. From behind, they glow counter-intuitively red. The green lights indicate that the taxi is taken; two green lights mean that the higher rate is being charged (10pm–6am, weekends and public holidays), one that the normal rate applies. A flat rate
