HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide helps you get the most from your stay in the Netherlands. The first section, Introducing the Netherlands, places the country on the map and puts it in its historical and cultural context. Chapters on the provinces and the capital, Amsterdam, describe the most important sights and places of interest. Features cover topics from architecture to tulip growing. They are accompanied by detailed and helpful illustrations. Travellers' Needs gives specifics on where to stay and where to eat and drink, while the Survival Guide contains practical information on everything from the public telephone system to transport and personal safety.

AMSTERDAM

Amsterdam is divided into five tourist areas. The corresponding chapters all begin with a list of numbered sights and places of interest, which are plotted on the Area Map. The information for each sight follows this numerical order, making sights easy to locate within the chapter.

Sights at a Glance
groups the sights by category: historical buildings and monuments, streets, squares and gardens, museums and churches.

All pages about Amsterdam are marked in red.

2 Street-by-Street Map
This map gives a detailed summary of the heart of the five main tourist areas of the city.

1 Area Map
This map is numbered to show the most important attractions. They are also given in the Street Finder section on pages 150-9.

A locator map places the district in the context of the rest of the city.

A recommended route covers the most interesting streets in the area.

Stars indicate sights that should not be missed.

DISCOVERING THE NETHERLANDS

From the Frisian Islands in the north to Zeeland in the south, the Netherlands packs quite a punch for such a small country, with its fine sandy beaches, picturesque villages and vibrant, progressive cities. This mix becomes more remarkable when you consider that one-third of their present land was reclaimed from the sea. "God may have created the earth, but the Dutch created the Netherlands", as the popular saying goes. Water and trade shaped its history, and as any visitor will soon discover, this friendly, outward-looking nation is adept at managing both.

AMSTERDAM

- Beautiful waterways
- Golden Age mansions
- Rijksmuseum art gems
- Cosy "brown" cafés

For one of the world's great cultural centres, Amsterdam wears its riches with remarkable ease. It has a wealth of art gems and handsome buildings in an old centre bathed by beautiful waterways. Lined with elms and spanned by hump-backed bridges, the canals frame the gabled mansions built for Dutch merchants and bankers (see pp62–3). In the 17th century, they frequently commissioned artists such as Rembrandt van Rijn, whose celebrated Nightwatch can be seen in the Rijksmuseum (see pp122–3). This repository of Old Masters includes works by Johannes Vermeer, Frans Hals and Jan Steen. It is located near the unmissable Van Gogh Museum (see pp126–7), which has over 200 paintings on display, the largest collection of the artist's paintings in the world. The Stedelijk Museum (see pp128–9) has a rich collection of modern art. The city has museums galore, from the moving displays of the Anne Frank Huis (see pp108–9) to ones devoted to sex, tulips and hemp. Wondrous architecture is seen everywhere, from the elaborate Westerkerk (see p110) to the designer offices on the IJ riverside. From the 14th century, sailors sought more transient pleasures in the Red Light District (see p74), today a mish-mash of bars, brothels and neon-lit sex shops, though the council has started a clean-up campaign. The Dutch have a strong café culture (see pp68–9). It is arguably cosiest in the renowned "brown" cafés, some 400 years old, named for their dark, cosy, wood-panelled interiors. Many are hidden in the tiny lanes of the Jordaan, the popular former workers' district (see pp106–7).

NORTH HOLLAND

- Rich heritage of Haarlem
- Windmills at Zaanse Schans
- Traditional cheese markets
- The past comes to life at Enkhuizen

A short distance from Amsterdam you'll find charms that rival any the capital has to offer. The historic city of Haarlem has a well-preserved old centre, anchored by the vast Grote Kerk and buildings in classic Dutch and Art Deco style (see pp182–5). Here the Frans Hals Museum (see pp186–7) is a must for lovers of fine art. To the north lies Zaanse Schans with its picture-book windmills (see p175). The old ports of Hoorn (see p178) and Monnickendam (see p174) along the coast of the IJsselmeer exude an old-time prosperity. On the West Frisian peninsula, the one-time fishing village of Enkhuizen is home to the intriguing Zuiderzeemuseum, an open-air museum depicting village life of yesteryear (see pp176–7). Of all the traditional Dutch cheese markets, the most famous is held in Alkmaar (see p181).

UTRECHT

- Towering glory of the Dom
- Innovative Rietveld house
- Witch scales at Oudewater

The river Vecht weaves lazily through this petite province, where many landed gentry kept their summer estates (see p198). The church bishops of Utrecht city once wielded enormous power, and their influence is still palpable in this merry university town. Its soaring Domtoren, or cathedral tower, is the country's tallest (see p202). A milestone of the De Stijl movement, the fascinating architecture of the Rietveld Schröderhuis features moveable walls (see p204). Superstition is the thing in sleepy Oudewater, which still has a set of witches' scales (see p197).

SOUTH HOLLAND

- Radiant tulip fields
- Old Master paintings in Mauritshuis
- Daring Rotterdam designs

The most densely populated region of the country is home to the Dutch government and the industrial heartland, yet vast areas are chocolate-box pretty, with verdant meadows, windmills and grazing cattle. Come springtime, the bulb fields erupt into a riot of colours, an event choreographed at Keukenhof gardens (see pp212). Leiden is famous for its university, the country's oldest, and the exotic gardens of Hortus Botanicus (see pp216). An air of refined elegance pervades The Hague, where French was once the lingua franca of the upper class (see pp218–21). Due to a compromise with Holland's trading elite, the city became the seat of Dutch parliament but never the capital. Its impressive Mauritshuis contains Vermeer's masterpiece, Girl with a Pearl Earring (see pp222–3). Weaving and brewing put it on the map, but Delft is known best for its distinctive blue-and-white pottery (see p229). The busiest port in the world, Rotterdam boasts an abundance of unusual architecture (see pp230–33) and art collections such as the Museum Boijmans Van Beuningen (see pp234–5).

ZEELAND

- Zeeuws Abbey in Middelburg
- Mighty Delta flood barrier
- Historic houses of Zierikzee

Of all the watery Dutch provinces, none experiences Neptune's wrath more than tiny Zeeland. Lakes and river estuaries slice the landscape into islands and peninsulas, giving its communities an isolated feel. It was a fitting spot for monks, as chronicled at the Zeeuws Abbey Museum in Middelburg (see p250). Nowadays the sea is checked by the Delta Works, a marvel of Dutch engineering (see p247). Hundreds of listed buildings, some of them from the Middle Ages, can be admired in historic Zierikzee (see p252).

WEST FRISIAN ISLANDS

- Bird-filled wetlands
- Dark forests of Texel
- Wild, windswept dunes

This necklace of sandy isles offers some of the most alluring and remote terrain in

Dunes and clear skies in the West Frisian Islands

Europe. The shores of the Waddenzee have wetlands favoured by breeding and migratory birds (see pp268–9). A curious local pastime is wadlopen, or walking through the mudflats when the tide goes out (see p271). The largest and most diverse island is Texel, with its wide beaches, dark pine forests and sleepy villages (see p272).

Schiermonnikoog is perfect for hiking, and entirely car-free (see p275). The smallest island, Vlieland, consists only of dunes (see p273).

GRONINGEN

- Lively Groningen city
- Seal nursery at Pieterburen
- Star fortress of Bourtange

In the Middle Ages this northerly province grew rich through farming, and later through its links to the Hanseatic League of trading cities. Agriculture is still big, but the region is also noted for its windmills, castles and terps, or ancient knobs of elevated land. Historic Groningen is the provincial capital, a lively university town with the cutting-edge Groninger Museum of art, archaeology and history (see pp284–5). The seal nursery at Pieterburen attracts visitors from around the country (see p287). The geometric beauty of Bourtange, a star-shaped fortress commissioned by William of Orange, is now an open-air museum (see p289).

Windmills dot the Groningen landscape

FRIESLAND

- Frisian pomp in Leeuwarden
- Skating hub Thialfstadion
- Sailor's paradise at Sneek

The Frisians are known for their singularity thanks to a distinct language, sports like fierljeppen (ditch-polevaulting) and an unmistakable breed of black-and-white cow. Its hub, Leeuwarden, was home to World War I femme fatale Mata Hari as well as the House of Orange-Nassau, a branch of the Dutch Royal Family, and its generous parks, courtyards and gardens bear their royal stamp (see p296). The region produces champion ice-skaters who race at the Thialfstadion in Heerenveen (see p300). In summer, Sneek comes alive with boaters in their sailbarges on the glistening lakes (see p299).

DRENTHE

- Lush peatlands and heath
- Mysterious megaliths

The Netherlands' prehistoric roots run deepest in this sparsely-populated region that has always lived off the land. Woodlands, heath and peat bogs ooze a primeval atmosphere and the province is peppered with megaliths that mark ancient burial grounds (pp307–9). The largest concentration of megaliths can be found at Emmen (see p311).

OVERIJSEL

- Hanseatic trading towns
- Canals of Giethoorn

This eastern province has a long and fascinating history marked by clashes in religion and dialect among its competing towns. The picturesque river port of Zwolle belonged to the Hanseatic League, which dominated trade with England and the Baltic states (see p316). It was later joined by Kampen and Deventer, both pretty towns with fortifications (see pp316, p320). Girded by ponds, lakes and tiny canals, Giethoorn is an impossibly quaint village (see pp318–19).

FLEVOLAND

- 17th-century frigate Batavia
- Age-old fishing villages

Consisting solely of reclaimed land, this is the youngest Dutch province, established only in 1986. Its star turn is the Batavia, a reconstruction of a 17th-century Dutch frigate that sank on its maiden voyage to the East Indies (see p327). The former island villages of Urk and Schokland have fishermen's cottages, churches and monuments to those lost at sea (see p326). The Oostervaardersplassen is a marshland reserve that lures bird-watchers (p328).

GELDERLAND

- Magnificent Paleis Het Loo
- Hoge Veluwe National Park
- Kröller-Müller art museum

This former duchy is known for its medieval buildings, castles and fortified towns. Its royal pedigree led the House of Orange to build the fabulous Paleis Het Loo, where Queen Wilhemina lived until 1962 (see pp334–5). The rambling Nationaal Park De Hoge

Magestic Sint Jan cathedral, North Brabant

The waterways of Giethoorn, Overijssel

Veluwe is the biggest in the country. It contains the acclaimed Kröller-Müller Museum with its major works by Van Gogh (see pp338–9). Pummelled in a fierce battle in World War II, Arnhem has several monuments restored to their pre-war splendour (see p340).

NORTH BRABANT

- Prosperous Den Bosch
- Gothic Sint Jan cathedral
- Imposing castles and bastions

This southern province bears many hallmarks of its medieval heyday. Towns flourished along key trading routes, including 's-Hertogenbosch, also called Den Bosch, a wealthy town founded by the Dukes of Brabant (see pp358–9). The old centre is dominated by the Gothic-style Sint Jan Cathedral, which has many religious treasures (see pp360–61). There are plenty of castles to be admired in towns like Breda and Heeze (see pp362–5). North Brabant is also renowned for the natural beauty of areas such as the Biesbosch National Park and the Loonse dunes, which teem with wildlife (see pp356–7).

LIMBURG

- Cosmopolitan Maastricht
- Gentle rolling hills
- Fortified town Valkenburg

Perched on a spit of land with Belgium and Germany on either side, Limburg is multilingual and easy-going. The cosmopolitan town of Maastricht, which was founded in Roman times, has several fine museums, limestone caves, a splendid basilica and some of the country's best restaurants (see pp372–3). Its Bonnefontenmuseum has an outstanding gallery of modern art (see pp374–5). In contrast to the northern flatlands, the gently rolling hills of the Heuvelland are dotted with woodlands and fruit orchards (see pp380–81). Situated in an area replete with castles, the old fortified town of Valkenburg has a 13th-century Romanesque church, catacombs and a cable car (see p379).

Romanesque Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebasiliek in Maastricht

Putting the Netherlands on the Map

The Netherlands is situated in Western Europe, bordering Belgium to the south and Germany to the east. To its north and west is the North Sea. The country is popularly known as Holland, although the provinces of North and South Holland form only part of the Netherlands in reality. Since the completion of the Deltawerken (Delta Works), the coastline is some 800 km (500 miles) in length. The country's major waterways and excellent road and rail systems make it an important gateway to the rest of Europe, and to Germany in particular. Approximately one-sixth of its total area is covered with water. The Netherlands has a population of about 16 million.

THE NETHERLANDS

AMSTERDAM AND ENVIRONS

Amsterdam and its Environs
 Amsterdam is the capital of the Netherlands and is situated at the point where the river Amstel joins the river IJ. The city has a population of about 800,000 and is the country's second largest port (after Rotterdam). Amsterdam is 20 km (12 miles) from the sea and is close to Schiphol international airport.

A PORTRAIT OF THE NETHERLANDS

From the Frisian Islands in the north to Zeeland in the south, the Netherlands is a place of contrasts, with fine sandy beaches, picturesque villages and vibrant towns with multilingual and outward-looking people. The mighty river Rhine bisects the country, bringing trade and prosperity from far and wide.

The landscape of what is now the Netherlands has changed considerably over the past 2,000 years. Since Roman times, large tracts of land have been swallowed up by the sea in areas such as Zeeland and the former Zuiderzee. Old maps show that during the Middle Ages almost half of today's provinces of North Holland and South Holland were under water. Since then, large parts of this land have been reclaimed. The constant battle with the sea reached its height with the Delta Works. This massive hydraulic engineering achievement (see pp246-7) was designed to protect the southwestern part of the country against flooding. The project was started after the disastrous floods of 1953, in which more than 1,800 people died.

Typical cottage

The Netherlands covers an area of 41,547 sq km (16,040 sq miles), about one-tenth the size of California. With some 16 million inhabitants, this means a population density of around 380 per sq km (1,000 per sq mile), making it the third most densely populated country in Europe after Monaco and Malta. However, this is not something that is readily noticeable to visitors outside the main cities, as the flat landscape seems anything but crowded.

Dutch people are friendly, outgoing and direct. They care about social issues and the environment and almost everyone speaks English, many fluently. They live in a country that is neat and tidy, where there is excellent public transport and where visitors find it easy to get around.

INTRODUCING THE NETHERLANDS

Although the Netherlands is this country's official name, most of the rest of the world call it Holland. However, Holland actually comprises only 2 of the 13 Dutch provinces. North and South Holland contain the country's three main cities of Amsterdam, Rotterdam and Den Haag (The Hague), which together with the cities of Dordrecht, Utrecht, Leiden and Haarlem form a horseshoe-shaped conurbation known as the Randstad, literally, "rim city" (see pp166–7).

When people ask, "What is the capital of the Netherlands?", the smiling Dutch tend to reply: "Our capital is Amsterdam, and the government sits in The Hague." Amsterdam is the most cosmopolitan of these three cities, as well as the the country's centre for cultural life. Rotterdam, home to the Europoort, one of the world's largest ports, is the Netherlands' industrial centre. The Hague is the seat of government and quarters many prestigious institutions, including the International Court of Justice. With its neighbouring seaside resort of Scheveningen, The Hague is where most of the foreign embassies and consulates are situated.

Holland can be roughly divided into the Protestant north and Catholic south, separated by the great rivers flowing into the North Sea: the Rhine, the Waal and the Maas (Meuse). The people in the north of the country tend to be more sober and matter-of-fact, whereas those of the south tend to be much more flamboyant in their lifestyles.

SOCIETY AND POLITICS

Social life in the Netherlands was for many years based on the idea of verzuiling, wherein society lay on four pillars (zuilen) on which different sections of society rested their beliefs: Protestantism, Catholicism, liberalism and socialism. At one time, these groups had almost no contact with one another. Catholics would always vote for the Katholieke Volkspartij, join

Shoppers at the Albert Cuypmarkt in Amsterdam

Catholic trade unions, base their social lives on Catholic societies and send their children to Catholic schools. The Protestant “pillar”, on the other hand, was formed of two main factions: the Dutch Reformed Church and the Calvinist Church. Both had their own political parties, their own trades unions and their own schools and societies. As for socialism and liberalism, the division was less explicit, though the gap between the world of the “workers” and that of the “entrepreneurs” was huge.

A major step towards unity came in 1980, when the three largest religion-based political parties united in the CDA, a Christian Democratic alliance that went on to dominate government coalitions for the next 20 years. The gap between the other parties closed in 1994, when the Labour Party (PvdA) and the small D66 formed a coalition with the conservative Liberal Party (VVD). This resulted in a tripartite “purple” cabinet, which appeared so successful that the coalition was continued in 1998.

The Dutch elections of May 2002 surprised everybody as the country moved to the right of the political spectrum. The assassination, nine days before, of the popular, flamboyant and openly gay Pim Fortuyn had shocked the entire country.

A hollow post mill in the polder landscape

With his unyielding views on Muslims and immigration, and his criticism of the establishment, Fortuyn was the antithesis of the Dutch tradition of consensual politics. Despite the loss of their charismatic leader, LPF became the second largest party in the Lower House; only the Christian Democrats (CDA) did better. The coalition parties of the former government lost 43 seats between them, making this the biggest shake-up in Dutch politics since World War II.

The 2010 elections revealed dissatisfaction with another eight years of coalition between the PvdA, CDA and conservative Christen Unie. The PvdA and CDA lost many seats, seeing gains for the VVD and Geert Wilders' Party for Freedom (PVV). Most other parties balked at forming a coalition with Wilders, known for his criticism of Islam. In October 2010 a right-wing coalition was finally formed between the VVD, CDA and PVV parties, changing the Dutch political climate completely.

LANGUAGE AND CULTURE

Dutch, a Germanic language, is used by more than 20 million people in Holland, Flanders and parts of the former Dutch colonies. Afrikaans, a language of South Africa closely related to Dutch, is a separate language, as is Frisian, which is spoken by more than 400,000 people in the province of Friesland. Dutch has many dialects, each of which has numerous regional differences. However, these differences are gradually disappearing because of the far-reaching influences of radio and television.

Culturally, Holland has plenty to offer. The country's colourful history is reflected in its many old buildings and large number of valuable museum collections. Exhibits range from those with local themes to world-famous art such as the collections in Amsterdam's Rijksmuseum (see pp122-5) and the Mauritshuis in The Hague (see pp222-3). In addition to the major museums of the cities, contemporary art can be seen in galleries all over the country, and in the profusion of works displayed in the streets and at numerous local markets. As for the performing arts, more variety is available today than ever before. Holland boasts a number of renowned orchestras and is an established name in ballet. Stage and theatre have recently marked a shift from experimental to more conventional performances.

THE DUTCH WAY OF LIFE

The German poet Heinrich Heine (1797-1856) described Holland as a place where "everything happens 50 years later than anywhere else". But today, anyone who reflects on the tolerant Dutch attitude towards drugs, the country's relaxed laws regarding euthanasia and the popular opposition to the deployment of nuclear weapons will come away with a different picture. In fact, the Netherlands was the first country to legalize gay marriages, regulate prostitution, officially sanction euthanasia and tolerate the over-the-counter sale of marijuana. Even the attitude of the Dutch towards their monarchy is modern – they are regarded with an affection more commonly extended to family members than to rulers.

Since the depredations of the Second World War, much has changed in the way the Dutch live their lives. Thrift and moderation, the two traditional virtues of Calvinism, are no longer writ large in society. A measure of flamboyance is slowly but surely making its way into the Dutch lifestyle. Today the Dutch eat out enthusiastically as well as often. Restaurant and cooking columns are now featured in newspapers and magazines, and there are also many cookery programmes aired on television.

Dutch drinking habits have also changed. On fine-weather days, people throng the pavement cafés to end the working day with a beer or a glass of wine. They also drink a great deal more wine with meals than once was the case. As well, the renowned Dutch gin, jenever, with its various types (see p428), is still popular. Nevertheless, overall per capita alcohol consumption is reasonable.

A Dutch production of The Three Musketeers

As soon as they have spare time, Dutch people head outdoors, often on bicycles, which are enormously popular. Love of the environment is a strong Dutch characteristic. Outdoors, there are hundreds of organized rambling and cycling tours, funfairs and theme parks, as well as a wide assortment of festivals and other events held throughout the year (see pp32-5). And wherever you are, you will always find a flea market – with items ranging from flowers to antiques for sale – not far away.

The new-found joue de vivre of the Dutch reflects the general trend evident in Western European countries. This is the result of a new leisure culture, one which is more “sensory”. Less time is devoted to reading and contemplation as food, drink, sport and the arts all take on increasingly prominent roles. Politically, socially and culturally, the Dutch are embracing the 21st century with confidence.

Holding Back the Water

Recent floods in the Netherlands' river valleys, particularly the one which occurred in 1995, when 200,000 people needed to be evacuated from the area, have shown what a threat water continues to pose to the Netherlands. The only way the sea can be held back is by dams, but in order to contain rivers at high tide, the country is adopting a new approach, that of "controlled flooding".

Flooded farm in Gelderland (1995)

Since the 11th century, increasing areas of land have been reclaimed from the sea. Countless dykes were built over the centuries using elementary tools, such as spades and "burries", a kind of stretcher. The illustration shows a breached dyke being filled.

At the Hook of Holland, the sea is not held back by dunes, as it is along the entire coast of North Holland and South Holland, but by a dyke.

The lowest point in Holland is the Zuidplaspolder at Gouda, 6.74 m (22 ft) below sea level.

At Krimpen, the IJssel discharges into the Nieuwe Maas.

The Krimpenerwaard, between the IJssel and the Lek, consists of high-quality hayfields and pasture.

The River Lek

A large part of the Netherlands (blue on the map) is below sea level. These areas have been called "laag-Nederland", or the "low Netherlands", and have only come into being over the past 10,000 years.

CROSS-SECTION OF THE NETHERLANDS

This cross-section of the Netherlands follows a straight line from the Hook of Holland to Achterhoek (see Locator Map) and shows clearly how low much of the land is. Only some 65 km (40 miles) inland, at Neder-Betuwe, does the ground rise above sea level. The lowest point in the Netherlands is the Zuidplaspolder, which is more than 6.74 m (22 ft) below sea level. Comparatively elevated areas like the Betuwe have nothing to fear from the sea, but this does not mean that they are not at risk of flooding: the Waal River, which runs more or less parallel to this cross-section, may flood at unusually high tides or after a heavy rainfall.

Floods in the river valleys in 1993 and 1995 led to the implementation of large-scale dyke reinforcement projects, known as the "delta plan for the large rivers". Old flood channels were also repaired as a matter of priority to allow more water to drain off.

THE STORY OF HANS BRINKER

The tale of the little boy who held his finger in a leak in a dyke to hold back the sea is not a figure from Dutch folklore but probably originated in the book Hans Brinker, or, The Silver Skates, by American writer Mary Mapes Dodge (1831–1905). It tells the story of a poverty-stricken boy who helps his ailing father. Hans and the doctor in the book (Boerhaave) are historical figures. The story was published in over 100 editions in Dodge's lifetime.

Neder-Betuwe is probably Holland's most important fruit-growing region.

Over-Betuwe is an area of fruit orchards, horticulture and cattle farming.

The Pannerdens Canal currently connects the Upper and Lower Rhineland.

Montferland is an important region of lateral moraines. These moraines were formed by the actions of glaciers.

Blocks of boulder clay protect the dyke from the wash of the river. The water seeps through the water-resistant clay layer slowly, draining off quickly only once it reaches the sand layer. This way the body of the dyke stays dry and hard.

Farmhouses and Windmills

In the mainly flat landscape of the Netherlands, farmhouses always stand in the shelter of trees. Windmills, on the other hand, needing as much wind as they can get, usually stand in very exposed areas. Both are highly valued because they are so picturesque, and it is easy to forget that they actually belong in the category of functional architecture. How a windmill works is explained on page 179.

In the farmhouses of North Holland, the barn, threshing-floor and house are all under one pyramidal roof.

This Drenthe farmhouse is a modern version of what has been known since the Middle Ages as a los hoes (detached house).

THE ZUID LIMBURG FARMHOUSES

The traditional farmhouses of Zuid Limburg have a distinctive inner yard, enclosed by the house and farm buildings. In the inner yard, ducks, chickens and pigs once roamed, rummaging in the dunghill. The picture may have been lively but was not particularly hygienic.

The gateway is large enough to let in a horse and wagon.

The walls are made of marl and covered in plaster.

The hallenhuys has a low-hanging roof held up by uprights kept in position by cross-beams. The side walls are half-timbered.

The krukhuis is a hall-type house, distinguished by the main house being at right angles to the barn.

The kop-halsromp farmhouse is found mainly in Friesland. In this type of farmhouse, the long, oblong barn is separated from the main house by a small, intermediate building.

Langgevel (long-gable) farmhouses are common on the sandy ground of Peel and Kempen. In this type of farmhouse, the living accommodation and farm buildings are arranged in a row.

PALTROK MILLS

Paltrok, or smock, mills were developed for use as sawmills around 1600. They were so called because of their resemblance to the paltrok, a smock that was commonly worn at the time. These windmills were mounted on a circular track, allowing them to rotate in their entirety. Generally, smock mills were used to saw uagenschot – entire oak trunks that had been split in two.

Belt or berg mills

have an extra-high body because of surrounding buildings or trees. A mound (berg) made at the base of the mill provides access to the sails.

Toren mills (tower mills)

have a brick cylindrical body and a cap that can be rotated from inside. Only four survive in Holland today. The oldest one can be seen at Achterboek near Zeddam.

Stander (post) mills are the oldest type of mill in Holland. The entire wooden body rotates on a central wooden post. Most post mills were used to grind corn.

Wipmolen are a later version of the stander mills and were designed to pump water. The smaller body rotates on a fixed, pyramidal base.

Stellingmolen, like the belt mill, has an extra-tall body. This type was used to produce dye, oil or paper. An encircling platform halfway up the body enables the mill to be rotated and the sails to be reefed on the wings.

The tjasker was used to drain small areas of water. It consisted of a sloping axle with sails at one end and an Archimedes' screw at the other.

The Dutch Masters

The proliferation of painting in the Netherlands during the 17th century – the country's Golden Age – corresponded with the great demand for paintings among newly rich townspeople. The lack of major royal and ecclesiastic patrons meant that there was no official school of painting, which left artists free to specialize in particular fields, such as historical subjects, portraits, landscapes and still life, as well as genre painting.

Willem Heda (1594–1680) was one of the masters of still life. The painter's simple compositions reflect his signature use of sober colours.

Frans Hals (c.1580–1666) left an oeuvre of some 200 portraits and more than 50 genre paintings. He painted not only regents and wealthy townsmen but also peasants, soldiers, fishermen, publicans and drunkards. No sketches for his paintings are known, and it is assumed that he painted alla prima, that is, straight onto the canvas without sketches. The Fool, shown above, dates from around 1623.

REMBRANDT VAN RIJN

Rembrandt van Rijn is regarded by many as the greatest Dutch painter of all time. He was born in Leiden in 1606 but lived in Amsterdam from 1632 until his death in 1669. Rembrandt was a master in the use of light and shadow. The Jewish Bride (painted around 1665) is regarded as one of the best portraits of his later period.

Jacob van Ruisdael (1628–82) was an unrivalled landscape painter. In his View of Haarlem depicted here, the low horizon is dwarfed by an imposing sky with clouds.

The silversmith Adam van Vianen (1569–1627) was famous for his ornamental style, which was known as kwabstijl, or “flabby style”, and distinguished by flowing ornamentation and the use of various fantasy elements. This gilded silver jug is an example of his style. Much of the silver work from this time has been lost because pieces have been melted down in order to trade in the metal for cash.

Jan Steen (1625–79) was a prolific painter with a variety of works, 800 of which survive today. They include everything from altar pieces to landscape paintings to works with mythological themes. However, Steen is known primarily for his genre painting, which gives a detailed, humorous picture of 17th-century society. The Family Scene, shown above, is a typical “Jan Steen household” – one in disarray. Tavern scenes were another of the artist’s favourite subjects.

Gerard van Honthorst (1590–1656) was greatly influenced by the works of Caravaggio. As well as historical scenes and portraits, he painted genre pieces such as The Merry Fiddler (above). His famous nocturnal scenes lit by candle-light led to his being nicknamed “Gberardo delle Notte” in Italy.

Johannes Vermeer (1632–75) spent his entire life in Delft. Only 40 of his works are known today, but even this modest oeuvre plays a prominent role in the history of painting. His balanced compositions appear very modern. Long before the Impressionists, Vermeer succeeded in conveying light through colour. The street depicted in View of Houses in Delft (c. 1658), left, has become known as “Vermeer’s street”.

Pottery and Tiles

When in 1620 exports of porcelain from China to Europe fell because of the troubles in China, Dutch potters seized the opportunity and started to produce their own wares, imitating the Chinese style on a large scale. The quality of the Dutch blue-white pottery was excellent. The city of Delft became one of the prime centres for the production of this china, which reached its height between 1660 and 1725. During the Art Nouveau and Art Deco periods, Dutch potters regained their international renown. The best known of them was TAC Colenbrander.

De Porceleyne Fles is the only Delftware shop which has managed to survive throughout the centuries. The business was bought in 1876 and revived by Joost Thooft, whose initials can still be seen on the workshop's mark. The exquisite painting on the porcelain continues to be done by hand, although the rest of the manufacturing process no longer involves the craft's traditional methods.

DELFTWARE

Although tin-glazed earthenware was also made in other parts of the Netherlands, "Delft" came to describe almost all earthenware made in the Netherlands during this period. Any piece made after 1650 will always have a workshop mark. Later, the glazer's initials, as well as a code denoting the year and a serial number, were added.

This set of four tiles features a pattern of pomegranates, grapes, rosettes and lilies.

The first Dutch porcelain was made in 1759 in the North Holland town of Weesp. At the time, it was second in quality only to Meissen porcelain. However, production was halted after 10 years because of financial difficulties. In 1774, a new factory was opened in Loosdrecht, which was moved to Ouder-Amstel in 1784. This large vase from 1808 is a typical example of the Amstel china that was produced there.

Delft design is used here to decorate a plane tail. The artist Hugo Kaagman decorated the tails of four British Airways' aircraft with blue Delft designs.

TILES

Majolica wall tiles – decorated earthenware on a tin-glazed background – were made for the first time in the Netherlands during the 16th century, with production reaching its peak in the 17th century. Until 1625, polychrome decoration predominated, after which the majority of tiles were painted in blue on white. Major centres were Makkum – where in the 17th century the Tichelaar family firm, which operates to this day, was established – as well as Harlingen, Delft, Gouda, Amsterdam, Utrecht and Haarlem. The tiles depicted here are from Haarlem. See also page 427.

The lily often features as a corner motif on Dutch tiles.

TAC COLENBRANDER

One of the biggest names in Art Nouveau pottery is Tac Colenbrander (1841–1930). Originally an architect, he became known for his fanciful floral-based designs for the Rozenburg earthenware and porcelain factory in The Hague, where he was chief designer from 1884 to 1889. As celebrated as his designs were, the ceramics had limited commercial success. One reason for this was their expense, a reflection of the labour-intensive production. In 1912–13, Colenbrander worked for the Zuid-Holland pottery in Gouda. In addition to pottery, he designed wallpaper and carpets, and worked as a graphic and interior designer.

The Art Nouveau plate by WP Hartgring was made in 1904, the same year as this master potter won a gold medal at the world exhibition at the St Louis World's Fair.

Hartgring worked for 20 years at the Rozenburg factory in The Hague and for 10 years at the Zuid-Holland pottery. His works reflect the Japanese style.

The Netherlands in Bloom

Orchid

The Dutch love affair with flowers began rather unromantically in homes during the 17th century, when flowers were used to keep bad smells at bay. The aesthetic aspect soon developed, and today the Netherlands is one of the world's most important flower-growing countries. It has an unrivalled distribution system, keeping Holland ahead of competition from countries such as Israel, Spain, Colombia, Kenya, Zimbabwe and Zambia. The Netherlands has a 92 per cent share of the world market for flowers.

Fields of flowers are not confined to the west of the country. These rose fields are outside Lottum in the north of the southern province of Limburg, where every year a special rose competition is held.

Tulips were introduced to Holland from Turkey in the 17th century. They became the subject of an unparalleled speculative bubble which has become known as "tulip mania". Today the tulip is considered a quintessentially Dutch product, with innumerable varieties.

The annual flower competition (bloemen corso) in the bulb-growing region is a grand event (see p32).

CUT FLOWERS FROM DUTCH NURSERIES

As consumers have become increasingly demanding, the number of flower species and varieties is constantly on the rise. Consumer tastes vary from place to place: in France, gladioli are very popular, whereas in Great Britain, it is lilies and carnations. In Asia, tulips are in great demand. A small sample of the flowers grown commercially in the Netherlands is shown here.

The iris (Iris) flower and bulb are in demand.

The chrysanthemum (Chrysanthemum) originated in China.

The sandy soil in the high areas behind the dunes of Holland is known as "geest soil" and is very well suited for cultivating bulbs.

Not all daffodil bulbs can survive the winter.

Crocus bulbs should be planted in September.

Hyacinth bulbs range in colour from violet red to white.

Tulip bulbs are highly resistant to disease and pests.

Iris bulbs should be dug up after flowering.

FLOWER SELLERS

Flower sellers are part and parcel of the Netherlands' street scene. They can also be found indoors, in places such as stations or office buildings. In most countries, cut flowers are considered a luxury. In the Netherlands, however, they are practically a daily shopping item. The Netherlands is indeed the land of flowers par excellence.

Dahlias (Dahlia) come in 20,000 varieties.

The lilac (Syringa) is often bought for its fragrance.

The carnation (Dianthus) is loved as a spray.

The rose (Rosa) is known as "the queen of flowers".

THE NETHERLANDS THROUGH THE YEAR

The Netherlands has much to offer in the way of holidays, festivals and other events.

The choice of cultural events is greatest in summer – several cities host theatre festivals in June. Some festivals, such as Leiden's 3-Okttoberfeesten, have deep historical roots, whereas others, such as the multicultural

Festival float

Zomercarnaval in Rotterdam, are much more modern. Many of the events are held to honour navigation and fishing, such as Flag Day (Vlaggetjesdag), held each May in Scheveningen. Music, too, plays a prominent role. The world-renowned North Sea Jazz festival brings the genre's greats to Rotterdam.

SPRING

In March, daffodils and crocuses burst into bloom in the country's towns and villages. From mid-April onwards, when the tulips are in flower, the bulb fields along the Dutch coast are a spectacular sight to see.

MARCH

Foto Biënnale (mid-Mar to mid-Apr), Rotterdam. This biannual international photography exhibition takes place in odd-numbered years.

Meezing Matthäus (Easter), Amsterdam and elsewhere. Concert-goers are welcome to sing along during many performances of Bach's St Matthew's Passion.

Keukenhof (end Mar to mid-May), near Lisse. These 32 ha (79 acres) of landscape gardens demonstrate the best of all the flowers Holland has to offer. This open air exhibition was started in 1949, and has become internationally renowned.

APRIL

First of April Celebrations, Brielle. Dressed in 16th-century-style clothing, the inhabitants of Brielle (Den Briel) re-create the 1572 recovery of the city from the Spaniards.

Bloemen Corso (Flower Competition) (late Apr), Bollenstreek. Floats with floral sculptures travel a 40-km (25-mile) route through Haarlem, Hillegom, Lisse and Noordwijk.

Koninginnedag (Queen's Day) (30 Apr). The birthday of the former queen, Juliana, sees festivities throughout the land; the biggest event is held in Amsterdam.

MAY

Landelijke Fietsmaand (National Cycling Month) (all month). Cycling activities throughout the country.

Nationale Moldendag (National Windmill Day) (second Sat in May). Some 600 of the 1,000 windmills in the country are opened up to the public.

Vlaggetjesdag (Flag Day) (May), Scheveningen. The arrival of the first herring catch of the season is celebrated with demonstrations of traditional fishing-related crafts, music and a race.

Aspergerie Primeur (Ascension Day), Venlo. In a festive atmosphere on a re-created old-time village green, visitors can tuck into deliciously cooked asparagus.

Keidagen (around Ascension Day), Lochem. Five days of music, funfairs, street fairs and performances by international artists.

Flag Day, the start of the new herring fishing season

Sloepenrace (Boat Regatta). A regatta from Harlingen to Terschelling.

Jazz in Duketown (around Whitsun), 's-Hertogenbosch. Four days of open-air high-quality jazz and blues bands at various venues in town. The beer flows freely.

SUMMER

Summer in the Netherlands is a time of major cultural events. These include the Holland Festival in Amsterdam, the Theater a/d Werf in Utrecht, the Rotterdam Parade and the Haagse Zomer in The Hague.

And if theatre is not your favourite pastime, there are plenty of other activities to keep you entertained.

JUNE

Holland Festival (3 weeks of Jun), venues throughout Amsterdam and major cities. A varied programme of concerts, plays, opera and ballet.

Aaltjesdag (Eel Day) (second Sat in Jun), Harderwijk. Major fishing celebration in this former harbour on the Zuider Zee.

Oerol Festival (mid-Jun), Terschelling.

This alternative cultural festival lasts for ten days, with clowns, street theatre, acrobats, pop concerts and music from around the world.

Poetry International (mid-Jun), Rotterdam.

Prestigious poetry festival featuring an international programme, in Rotterdam's Doelen district.

Pasar Malam Besar (second half of Jun),

The Hague. This festival of Indonesian music and dance, shadow puppets, cooking demonstrations and colourful eastern market takes place at Malieveld in The Hague.

JULY

Oud Limburgs Schuttersfeest (Marksman's Festival)

(first Sun in Jul). Annual tournament by the marksmen of Limburg is a colourful folk event held in the hometown of the previous year's winner.

North Sea Jazz (mid-Jul), Rotterdam. A three-day spectacle widely acknowledged as the world's largest jazz festival, with performances by the biggest names in jazz.

Tilburgse kermis (Tilburg Fair) (end Jul). One of the biggest and most exuberant fairs in Holland, with a special gay Pink Monday.

Zomercarnaval (Summer Carnival) (last Sat in Jul), Rotterdam. A lively Caribbean carnival with exotic music, plenty to eat and drink and a swirling procession.

AUGUST

Gay Pride (first weekend in Aug), Amsterdam. One of the very best Prides in the world; the highlight is the Canal Parade.

Mosselheesten (Mussel Festivals) (third Sat in Aug), Yerseke; (last weekend in Aug), Philippine. Harvest festival presenting the new crops of Zeeland.

Preuvenemint (last weekend in Aug), Maastricht. Flamboyant festival of food and drink at the historical Vrijthof.

Uitmarkt (last weekend in Aug), Amsterdam. Festive opening of the theatre season with performances and information booths. There is also a book fair, where literary publishers are represented with their own stalls.

AUTUMN

As the cold weather starts slowly but surely to set in, indoor events become more prominent. In autumn, the theatres are full in the evenings, and museums are routinely busy. However, open-air events are still held, the golden light of dusk and magnificent clouds adding to the atmosphere.

SEPTEMBER

Monumentendag (Monument Day) (second Sat in Sep). Private historic buildings open to the public.

Fruitcorso (second weekend in Sep), Tiel. Spectacular parade of floats with gigantic fruit sculptures.

Vliegerfeest (Kite Festival) (mid-Sep), Scheveningen. For two days, hundreds of strange creations hover over the beach.

Jordaanfestival (second and third weeks in Sep), Amsterdam. Fairs, street parties, talent contests and live music are held in the southern part of the picturesque former working-class district of Jordaan.

Prinsjesdag (third Tue in Sep), The Hague. Accompanied by high-ranking government officials and with a guard of honour, the queen rides in her golden carriage from Noordeinde Palace to the Binnenhof (Parliament Building), where she makes her Royal Speech in the Ridderzaal (Hall of the Knights) in order to open the Dutch Parliament.

Nijmeegse kermis (Nijmegen fair) (end Sep/early Oct).

Held every year since the 13th century, the fair stretches ribbon-like through the centre of the city. On Mondays and Tuesdays are the "piekdagen", when children can visit the attractions for the entrance price of 50 cents.

OCTOBER

3-Oktoberfeesten, Leiden. A large public festival to commemorate the relief of Leiden from its siege on 3 October 1574.

Permanent fixtures in the festivities are the distribution of herring and white bread to the townspeople, as well as the procession and funfair.

Eurospoor (mid- to late Oct), Utrecht. Europe's biggest model train show takes place in the Jaarbeues.

NOVEMBER

Sint-Maarten (11 Nov), Western and Northern Netherlands. In the early evening, children equipped with lanterns walk from door to door, singing songs, for which they are given sweets.

Intocht van Sinterklaas (arrival of St Nicholas) (second or third week in Nov). St Nicholas is celebrated in every town and village in Holland. He arrives by ship near St Nicholasskerk (see p91) and then rides on his grey horse through town.

The arrival of St Nicholas, attracting a great deal of attention

Until 5 December, children traditionally sing Nicholas carols in the evenings, and every morning find sweets in their shoes.

WINTER

December aside, there are not as many events in the winter calendar as there are for the rest of the year – perhaps to the relief of those who need January to recover from St Nicholas, Christmas and the New Year.

DECEMBER

Sinterklaasavond (St Nicholas' Day) (5 Dec). St Nicholas ends with St Nicholas' Eve on 5 December. Both young and old are brought gifts, more often than not in person by (a hired) Santa Claus. Friends give poems caricaturing each other.

Cirque d'Hiver (between Christmas and New Year's Eve), Roermond. Four days of world-class circus acts in the Oranjerie theatre hotel, in the historic town centre.

New Year's Eve (31 Dec). The Dutch spend the last evening of the old year in festive surroundings at home or with friends. Fritters and apple turnovers are eaten and, in many houses, the champagne corks pop at midnight. Afterwards, people walk the streets to see in the New Year with organized firework displays.

JANUARY

Nieuwjaarsduik (New Year's Dip) (1 Jan), Scheveningen. Every year, at noon on New Year's Day, a starting-gun is fired on the pier in Scheveningen, and hundreds of people in swimsuits run down the beach to take a dip in the ice-cold water.

New Year's fireworks display

Leidse Jazzweek (mid-Jan), Leiden. Throughout the week, jazz of all styles is played in the halls and cafés of the old town.

FEBRUARY

Hiswa (Feb or Mar), Amsterdam. Boat show in the RAI (see p141), featuring all types of crafts, from dinghies to yachts.

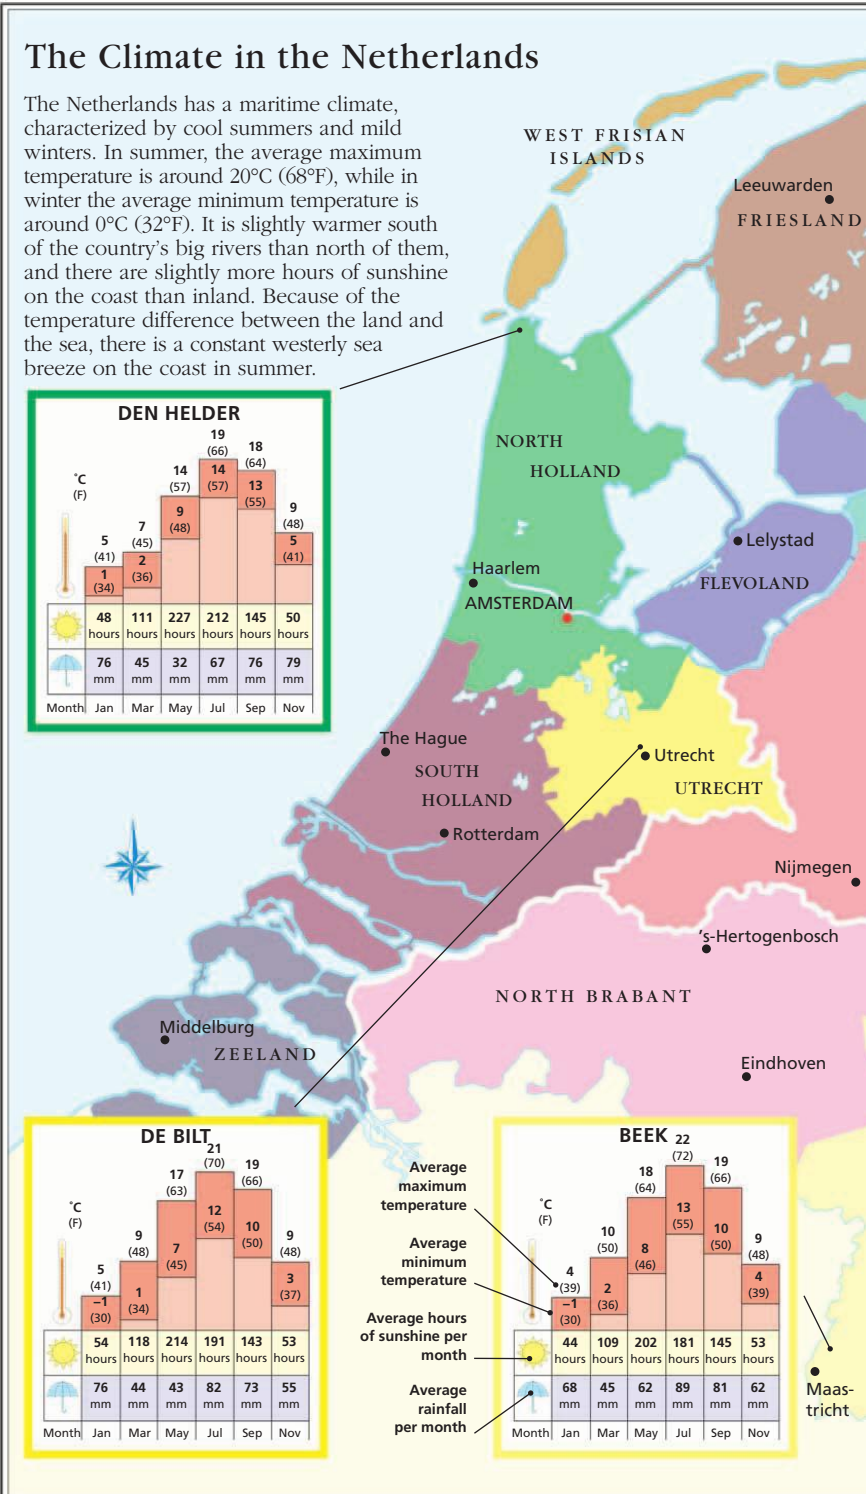

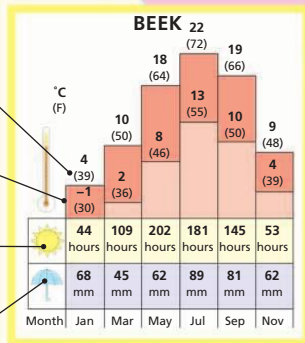

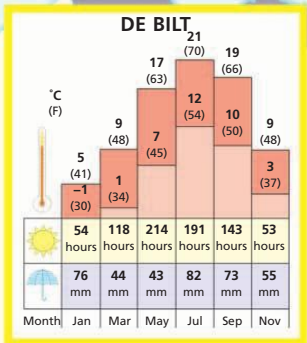

The latest boats on display at the annual Hiswa

Carnival (Feb or Mar). Officially three, but in practice five, days before Lent, the Catholic south celebrates wildly. There are processions with colourful floats, and costumed people sing and dance in the cafés and in the streets.

The Climate in the Netherlands

The Netherlands has a maritime climate, characterized by cool summers and mild winters. In summer, the average maximum temperature is around 20°C (68°F), while in winter the average minimum temperature is around 0°C (32°F). It is slightly warmer south of the country's big rivers than north of them, and there are slightly more hours of sunshine on the coast than inland. Because of the temperature difference between the land and the sea, there is a constant westerly sea breeze on the coast in summer.

THE HISTORY OF THE NETHERLANDS

In 12 BC, the Romans conquered southern Holland, and in AD 50 they declared the Rhine the northern border of their empire. The region north of this was conquered by the Frisians. At the end of the 4th century, the Romans withdrew from the Low Countries, which were taken over by the Frisians, Franks and Saxons. In the 8th century, the Franks ruled the region alone. The introduction of Christianity, begun by the missionary Willibrord in 695, was completed under Charlemagne.

After the disintegration of the Frankish Empire, the Netherlands fell under German rule. Actual power was exercised by the vassals, of whom the Bishop of Utrecht was the most powerful – until the Concordat of Worms in 1122, when the German king lost the right to appoint bishops. In the course of the 12th century, the Count of Holland was the most important figure in the region.

In the 14th and 15th centuries, the dispute between the two factions – the Hooks and the Cods – marked, in a certain sense, the end of the feudal age.

When at the end of the 16th century the Northern Netherlands liberated itself from the Habsburg Duke Philip II, it enjoyed a period of unprecedented economic and cultural flowering.

By the mid-17th century, it had become the greatest trading nation in the world, a status gradually relinquished during the 18th century.

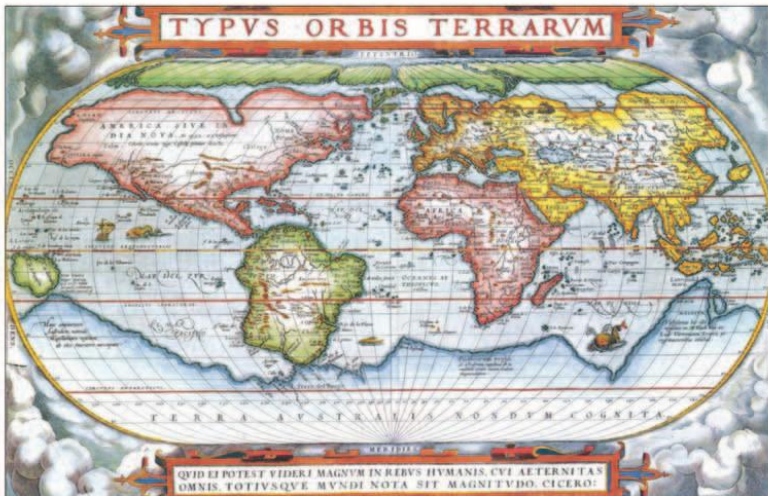

The different independent regions making up the republic were joined together under Napoleon, with William I becoming king in 1815. However, unification with Belgium proved unsuccessful and was officially ended in 1839, although it had already ended de facto in 1830.

In the 20th century, Holland maintained neutrality during World War I, but suffered greatly during World War II. Invaded by the Nazis in May 1940, the country was not liberated entirely until May 1945. It subsequently developed into one of the most prosperous states within the European Union. Today, the country remains a constitutional monarchy, the royal family enjoying great popularity among the Dutch.

Rulers of the Netherlands

Old coin with image of Queen Beatrix

In the Middle Ages, the Netherlands were run by local feudal dukes, as well as by the counts of Holland and the bishops of Utrecht. They were all officially vassals of the German king. In the 15th century, the region came under the rule of the House of Burgundy through marriage alliances, after which it was incorporated into the Habsburg Empire. In 1581, the Northern Netherlands freed itself from the Habsburgs. Since then – with some interruptions – the House of Orange has ruled over parts of what are today called Holland, initially as stadholders, but from 1815 as monarchs.

Prehistoric and Roman Times

Roman dagger

About 13,000 years ago, the Low Countries emerged from under the ice of the last Ice Age. Temperatures gradually rose, turning the tundra into areas of forest and marshes, inhabited by nomadic hunters. In the Early Stone Age (4500–2000 BC), farming communities were established here and there. The megalith builders were the best known of these settled inhabitants. Around 600 BC, Germanic and Celtic tribes settled in the Low Countries. They were here when the Romans conquered the southern part of the region, in the 1st century BC. In AD 50, the Romans finally declared the Rhine as the Roman Empire's northern frontier, establishing Roman settlements in Utrecht and Maastricht.

Megaliths

Between 3400 and 3200 BC, the inhabitants of the Drenthe plateau built some 100 megaliths. Of these, 54 have survived into the present (see pp306–7). These impressive tombs were once concealed beneath a mound of sand.

Urns

These urns date from 1150–800 BC.

The dark rings in this picture are of the ditches that originally surrounded the urn-mounds. The rings are interrupted at their southeastern edge, possibly to represent the symbolic entrance to the tomb.

WHERE TO SEE PREHISTORIC AND ROMAN HOLLAND

In addition to the megaliths of Drenthe and the Someren urnfield, prehistoric graves have been discovered at Almere, Hilversum, Vaassen, Lunteren, Goirle and Rolde, and at Toterfout/Halfmijl in Brabant, where 16 burial mounds have been restored to their original condition, complete with trenches and rings of stakes. The urnfield on the Bosoverheide, a couple of kilometres west of the Weert, was, around 800 BC, one of the largest burial grounds in northwestern Europe. Roman finds can be seen in places like Oudheden in Leiden (see p217) and the Valkhof museum in Nijmegen (see p343). The Archeon archaeological theme park in Alphen a/d Rijn (see p434) is highly informative and entertaining, for adults and children alike.

THE URNFIELD

In 1991, an urnfield dating from 600 BC was discovered at Someren near Brabant. It had been ploughed under by farmers during the Middle Ages. The dead were cremated in southern Holland from 1500 BC, and in northern Holland from 1000 BC. The burial mounds of Someren were arranged closely together, and each contained its own urn.

Frisians, Franks and Saxons

Frisian

When the Romans withdrew at the end of the 4th century, the Low Countries, like the rest of Europe, experienced a great migration of peoples. By around 500, the Frisians had spread their territory southwards to the great rivers, while the Saxons lived east of the IJssel and the Franks had settled in the area south of the great rivers. Approximately two centuries later, the Franks took over the whole region as far as the Lauwerszee. With the spread of Christianity and under Charlemagne, the entire area of the Netherlands became Christian. After Charlemagne's death, the region belonged first to the Middle Kingdom of Lothair, and then, from 925, to the German Empire.

In 753, he embarked on a further missionary expedition to Friesland, which resulted in his death the following year.

The staff is one of Boniface's constant possessions. He was reputed to have used it to make a spring well up.

DORESTAD

Situated at the confluence of the Lek and the Kromme Rijn (by present-day Wijk bij Duurstede, see p207), Dorestad was the most important trading settlement in northern Holland during the Early Middle Ages. It was the centre of Frisian trade in the 7th century and afterwards under the Merovingians and Carolingians. In the 9th century, Dorestad was repeatedly plundered by marauding Vikings, who sailed up the rivers in their longboats in search of booty. The settlement's decline, however, was due to the damming of the Rhine against flooding rather than because of the Viking raids. There is no reference in historical records to Dorestad after 863. During the 10th century, Dorestad's functions were taken over by Tiel, Deventer and Utrecht. In Wijk, the Museum Dorestad (tel. 0343-571448) gives an excellent idea of what life must have been like here during the Early Middle Ages through its various displays of archaeological finds from that period, as well as its informative diorama, complete with models of port houses.

The Emergence of Towns

Pilgrim's badge

In the 13th century, towns started to acquire considerable economic power. At that time, the Low Countries were nominally under the rule of the German king, but in practice local nobles ran things themselves. In the north, the counts of Holland were the most powerful. In the mid-14th century, their territory fell into the hands of the House of Bavaria. Disunity between Margaretha of Bavaria and her son William marked the beginning of the dispute between the Hooks and the Cods, which split towns as well as noble families for one and a half centuries.

Cruel Punishment

In the Middle Ages, barbaric punishments were often meted out. This cask on the wall of the waag in Deventer was once used to immerse counterfeiters in boiling oil.

Grain brought by farmers to the towns was inspected by officials. Produce in the meat and fish markets was also inspected daily. An excise tax was charged on the basis of the inspection.

A MEDIEVAL TOWN

Demands of trade and industry meant that towns were given all kinds of privileges from the 13th century onwards. Often important allies for the counts of Holland against local feudal lords, Dutch towns were more powerful than in other countries during this period because of the lack of a powerful central authority.

WHERE TO SEE THE LATE MEDIEVAL NETHERLANDS

Famous monuments from this period are the Oude Kerk in Amsterdam (14th century, see pp 76–7) and the Begijnhof, which has the city's oldest house (1420, see p 87); the Cathedral Tower (1382) and the Catharijneconvent (15th century) in Utrecht (see p 202); the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebasiliek (11th–12th centuries) and the St-Servaasbasiliek (11th–15th centuries) in Maastricht (see p 377); the 13th-century Ridderzaal and the 14th-century Gevangenpoort in The Hague (see p 220); the Pieterskerk (15th century) and the town walls of the 12th-century castle in Leiden (see p 217); the Lange Jan (14th century, see p 249) and the restored abbey (11th–15th centuries) in Middelburg (see p 250); the centre of Deventer around the Brink and Bergkerk, including the oldest stone house in Holland (see p 320); and the Martinatoren in Groningen (1469, see p 280).

The Dutch Trading Empire

compass

The early 17th century marked a period of expansion worldwide for northern Holland. Within a few decades, the Levant, the Gulf of Guinea, the Caribbean, North and South America, the East Indies, Persia, Arabia, Japan, India and China were all on the Dutch trading routes. The republic's merchant fleet became the world's largest. The powerful Dutch East India Company (VOC), established in 1602, dominated trade with Asia, with a monopoly on all profits from trade east of the Cape of Good Hope, while the Dutch West India Company, established in 1621, concentrated on the New World and the slave trade.

While Willem Barents was exploring the Arctic seas, de Houtman and Keyzer set off on the “first voyages” to Java. In 1606, Willem Jansz discovered the north coast of Australia, and in 1616, Jacob le Maire and Willem Schouten were the first to sail around Cape Horn. Abel Tasman discovered Tasmania and New Zealand in 1642–3.

THE 80 YEARS WAR

In the second half of the 16th century, Holland officially belonged to the Spanish branch of the House of Habsburg. In 1567, Philip II sent troops to put down Protestant unrest in Flanders and halt the Protestant Reformation sweeping through northern Europe; this led to a revolt against Spanish rule in northern Holland and resulted in years of civil war and religious strife. The 80 Years War ended in 1648 with the Peace of Münster.

The Golden Age

Baruch de Spinoza

The 17th century was for the north of Holland a time of unprecedented flowering in trade, art (see pp26–7) and science. While elsewhere in Europe economies were in stagnation, the republic's merchant fleet brought great prosperity, particularly to the towns of Amsterdam and Utrecht. The Amsterdam Exchange (Amsterdamse Wisselbank), which was founded in 1609, ensured that Amsterdam became the financial centre of the world. Trade was protected by a powerful navy, which enjoyed significant victories under Michiel de Ruyter.

Calvinism

John
Calvin

From the end of the 1500s, Calvinism took hold in the Netherlands as Protestant opposition to Spanish Catholic rule.

Amsterdam, which had sided with Spain, switched loyalties in 1578 to become the fiercely Protestant capital of an infant Dutch Republic. Reformed Church doctrine was to have a profound influence on Dutch history. Strict living and industriousness became ingrained in the character of Calvinists as well as of Catholics and agnostics and was instrumental in the country's prosperity during the Golden Age.

Gold and paintings decorated all churches.

The Statenbijbel was the translation of the Bible officially recognized by the Synod of Dordrecht (1618-19). The language used in it helped to standardize Dutch. The New Translation (Nieuwe Vertaling) did not appear until 1957.

Traces of the damage caused by the iconoclasts can still be seen today in some places, such as this retable in Utrecht.

The iconoclasts combined efforts to topple a huge religious image from the wall.

THE ICONOCLASTIC RIOTS

Underground Calvinist preachers goaded troublemakers into the Iconoclastic Riots of 1566, when the decorations of Catholic churches were destroyed with great violence. Invaluable works of religious art were lost in this way.

The interiors of Dutch churches were no longer given the Baroque ornamentation that characterizes churches in the rest of Europe. After all, according to the Ten Commandments in the Bible, "Thou shalt not make graven images" and "Thou shalt not worship nor serve them".

Pieter Saenredam (1597–1665) painted unrivalled pictures of the plain Calvinist churches – this one is Interior of the Sint-Odolphuskerk in Assendelft.

WHERE TO SEE CALVINIST NETHERLANDS

Strict Calvinism can be found in the Netherlands' "Bible belt" which stretches from Zeeland and southeastern South Holland via the Veluwe to the cape of Overijssel and Drenthe. The strict Sunday worship, black clothes and head coverings when attending church, as well as abstinence from modern developments (such as television and vaccinations), are gradually disappearing. However, when visiting such areas, do remember that photography and driving are still not looked upon kindly in Reformed Church villages. These communities are closed, with strong social controls. Calvinist villages worth visiting are Goederede (see p241), in South Holland, and Staphorst (see p320), in Overijssel, as well as the former Zuiderzee island of Urk (see p326), where older people continue to wear traditional dress.

Priceless stained-glass windows are systematically smashed to pieces.

The leaders of the iconoclast riots came from all classes of the population. In addition to fervent Calvinists, there were also paid helpers and all kinds of hangers-on who used the opportunity to do some plundering.

CLANDESTINE CHURCHES

When, in 1597, the Union of Utrecht proclaimed mandatory Calvinist services throughout the Netherlands and Zeeland, a blind eye – in return for payment – was turned to other confessions. Catholics, Remonstrants and Mennonites held their services in secret churches, which were unrecognizable as such from the outside. They were generally held in town houses, although later they were held in secret churches that were built for the purpose, particularly in Amsterdam, with De Zon and De Rode Hoed. The St Gertrudiskapel (1645) in Utrecht and Ons' Lieve Heer op Solder (1663, now the Amstelkring Museum) in Amsterdam are the finest surviving early examples of these institutions.

From Republic to Kingdom

18th-century
trader

After the death of the powerful stadholder William III, the republic no longer played an important role within Europe. Britain took over as most important maritime and trading power. At the end of the 18th century, a long dispute began between the House of Orange and democratically minded patriots, which was resolved in favour of the latter with the founding of the Batavian Republic (1795). After the Napoleonic era, the House of Orange returned to power, this time not as stadholder but as monarch. In 1839, the borders of the present-day Netherlands were finally established.

WILLIAM I LANDING AT SCHEVENINGEN

In 1813, almost 20 years after the House of Orange had been ousted by the patriots, Prince William returned to the Netherlands. He landed on the shore at Scheveningen, the same place where his father had departed for England. Two days later, he was inaugurated as sovereign. In 1815, he also claimed possession of present-day Belgium and pronounced himself king of the Netherlands.

Goerjanvervelleshuis

In 1785, the patriots took power, and the stadholder William V and his wife Wilhelmina of Prussia fled from The Hague. Wilhelmina attempted to return in 1787 but was stopped at Goerjanvervelleshuis. It was at this point that the Prussian king decided to send troops to restore the power of the stadholder.

THE SCHOOLS CONTROVERSY

The 19th-century schools controversy between liberals and denominational supporters was over the inequality between independent education and public education. Under HJAM Schaepman and Abraham Kuyper, Catholics and Protestants joined forces and in 1889 laid the foundations for government subsidies for independent education.

Colonialism

Tobacco trader

Dutch colonial history started in the 17th century when trading settlements were established in Asia, Africa and America. Many colonies were lost during the course of time, but the Dutch Indies (Indonesia), Suriname and the Dutch Antilles remained under Dutch rule until far into the 20th century. In the Indonesian archipelago, Dutch power was for a long time limited to Java and the Moluccas. It was only in 1870 that a start was made on subjugating the remaining islands. Indonesia gained independence in 1949 and Suriname in 1975. The Antilles, Aruba and the Netherlands are now equal parts of the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

Tortured Slave
Rebellion was cruelly punished.

Jan Pieterszoon Coen

Appointed governor-general in 1618, Jan Pieterszoon Coen devastated the Javanese settlement of Jakarta in 1619, founding in its place the new administrative centre of Batavia. He bolstered the position of the Dutch East India Company on the spice islands (the Moluccas) and is considered one of the founding fathers of Dutch colonialism.

Selling female slaves half-naked at auctions was condemned by Holland.

Session of the Landraad

This landraad, or joint court, is presided over by the assistant resident. The landraad was the civil and criminal common-law court for native Indonesians and all non-European foreigners in the Dutch Indies. The court could, with government approval, inflict the death penalty.

SLAVE MARKET IN SURINAME

In total, over 300,000 slaves were shipped to the Dutch colony of Suriname to work the plantations. The slave trade was abolished in 1819, though slavery itself was not abolished until 1863, making Holland the last Western European power to do so.

Batavia During the 17th Century

This painting by Andries Beekman shows the fish market with the “Kasteel” in the background, from which the Dutch ruled over the strategic Sunda Strait.

The auctioneer sits taking notes at the table. The slaves whom he is selling were delivered by special traders. Until 1734, slaves were auctioned exclusively by the Dutch West India Company, which had the monopoly on the slave trade.

Colonial Wares

From the end of the 19th century, a number of Dutch grocers offered for sale “colonial wares” such as coffee, tea, rice, sugar and various exotic eastern herbs and spices, including the much-prized peppercorns, cloves, nutmeg, mace and cinnamon.

Multatuli

The writer Multatuli, in his novel from 1860

Max Havelaar, condemned colonial rule in the Dutch Indies. In the book’s final chapter, the author directly addresses King William III, in whose name the people of the Indies were being exploited.

The Establishment of Cape Town

In 1652, Jan van Riebeeck set up a supply station for ships of the Dutch East India Company en route to the Indies. The settlement soon grew into a Dutch colony, which was settled by immigrants from the republic, and to a lesser extent from France (Huguenots) and Germany. Those who moved farther inland were later to become the Boers (“farmers”) or Afrikaanders. In 1806, the Cape Colony was taken over by the British Empire.

Kris from Java

Many travellers to the Indies brought back characteristic items to Holland. The Javanese kris was a favourite souvenir.

The Modern Netherlands

Neutrality during World War I meant that the Netherlands survived the first decades of the 20th century relatively unscathed. However, the economic crisis of the 1930s and particularly World War II left deep wounds. In 1957, as the country was rebuilding, it became one of the six founding members of the European Economic Community (EEC). The Dutch welfare state flourished in the 1960s and 1970s, and Amsterdam's tradition of tolerance made it a haven for the hippy culture. In a survey carried out by the United Nations in 2009, the Netherlands ranked seventh in the list of best countries to live.

Amsterdam's Best: Canals and Waterways

From the grace and elegance of the waterside mansions along the Grachtengordel (Canal Ring) to the rows of converted warehouses on Brouwersgracht and the charming houses on Reguliersgracht, the city's canals and waterways embody the very spirit of Amsterdam. They are spanned by many beautiful bridges, including the famous Magere Brug (see pp114–15), a traditionally styled lift bridge. You can also relax at a canalside café or bar and watch an array of boats float by.

Brouwersgracht

Bloemgracht

There is a great variety of architecture along this lovely, tree-lined canal in the Jordaan, including a row of houses with step gables.

Keizersgracht

A view of this canal can be had from any of its bridges. For an overview of the Canal Ring go to Metz & Co at Leidsestraat 34–36 (see p113).

Singel

The Poezenboot, a boat for stray cats, is just one of the many sights to be found along the Singel, whose distinctive, curved shape established the horseshoe contours of the Canal Ring.

Entrepotdok

The warehouses on the Entrepotdok (see p134) were redeveloped in the 1980s. The quayside is now lined in summer with lively café terraces that overlook an array of houseboats and pleasure craft.

Herengracht

Known as "the twin brothers", these matching neck-gabled houses at Nos. 409-411 are two of the prettiest houses on the city's grandest canal.

Reguliersgracht

Many crooked, brick buildings line this pretty canal, which was cut in 1664. The statue of a stork, located at No. 92, is symbolic of parental responsibility and commemorates a 1571 by-law protecting this bird.

Amstel

This river is still a busy thoroughfare, with barges and, above all, many sightseeing boats.

The Golden Age of Amsterdam

The 17th century was truly a Golden Age for Amsterdam. The population soared; three great canals, bordered by splendid houses, were built in a triple ring round the city; and scores of painters and architects were at work. Fortunes were made and lost, and this early capitalism produced many paupers, who were cared for by charitable institutions – a radical idea for the time. In 1648, an uneasy peace was formalized with Catholic Spain, causing tension between Amsterdam's Calvinist burgo-masters and the less-religious House of Orange, which was dominant elsewhere in the country.

Spice Trade

The Love Letter (1666)
Genre painting (see p123), such as this calm domestic interior by Jan Vermeer, became popular as society grew more sophisticated. Jan Steen, Honthorst and Terborch were other famous genre painters.

DAM SQUARE IN 1656

Money poured into Amsterdam at this time of civic expansion. Holland was active overseas, colonizing Indonesia, and the spice trade brought enormous wealth. The Dutch East India Company (VOC), the principal trade organization in Holland, prospered – gold seemed almost as common as water. Dutch painter Jan Lingelbach (c.1624–74) depicted the city's Dam square as a busy, thriving and cosmopolitan market, brimming with traders and wealthy merchants.

Delft Tiles

Delicate flower paintings were popular themes on 17th-century Delft tiles (see pp28–9), used as decoration in wealthy households.

Flora's Bandwagon (1636)

Many allegories were painted during "tulip mania". This satirical oil by HG Pot symbolizes the idiocy of investors who paid for rare bulbs with their weight in gold, forcing prices up until the market collapsed.

Spices

A load of spices was worth a fortune in the 17th century. The VOC traded in a great variety of these costly spices, primarily pepper, nutmeg, cloves, mace and cinnamon. As early as 1611 the VOC was the largest importer of spices.

WHERE TO SEE 17TH-CENTURY AMSTERDAM

Many public buildings, such as churches and palaces, sprang up as Amsterdam grew more wealthy. The Westerkerk (see p110) was designed by Hendrick de Keyser in 1620; the Lutherse Kerk (see p90) by Adriaan Dortsman in 1671. Elias Bouman built the Portugees-Israëlitische Synagoge (see p80) in 1675 for members of the city's immigrant Sephardic Jewish community.

Apollo (c.1648) Artus Quellien's statue is in the South Gallery of the Koninklijk Paleis (see pp88-9). Construction of the place, a masterpiece by Jacob van Capenubich, began in 1648.

Museum het Rembrandthuis (1606) Jacob van Campen added the pediment in 1633 (see p78).

VOC
In the Scheepvaart Museum (see pp132-3), an entire room is dedicated to the Dutch East India Company.

Giving the Bread

This painting by Willem van Valckert shows the city's needy receiving alms. A rudimentary welfare system was introduced in the 1640s.

Amsterdam's Best: Museums

For a fairly small city, Amsterdam has a surprisingly large number of museums and galleries. The quality and variety of the collections are impressive, covering everything from bibles and beer to shipbuilding and space travel. Many are housed in buildings of historical or architectural interest. The Rijksmuseum, with its Gothic façade, is a city landmark, and Rembrandt's work is exhibited in his original home.

Anne Frank Huis
Anne Frank's photo is exhibited in the house where she hid during World War II.

Amsterdam Museum

A wealth of historical information is on display here. Once an orphanage for boys, it is depicted in Governesses at the Burger Orphanage (1683) by Adriaen Backer.

Rijksmuseum

An extensive collection of paintings by Dutch masters can be seen in the country's largest national museum. Jan van Huysum's Still Life with Fruit and Flowers, dating from about 1730, is a fine example (see pp122-5).

Stedelijk Museum

Gerrit Rietveld's simple Steltman chair (1963) is one of many exhibits at this modern art museum (see pp128-9).

Amsterdam's Best: Cafés

Amsterdam is a city of cafés and bars, about 1,500 in all. Each area has something to offer, from friendly and relaxed brown cafés – a traditional Dutch local pub characterized by dark wooden panelling and furniture, low ceilings, dim lighting and a fog of tobacco smoke – to lively and crowded designer bars. Each café and bar has some special attraction: a large range of beers, live music, canalside terraces, art exhibitions, board games and pool tables or simply a brand of gezelligheid, the unique Dutch concept of “cosiness”.

Café Chris

This brown café in the Jordaan is patronized by regular customers (artists and students).

Odeon

This popular disco attracts a hip crowd. The basement café combines original 17th-century features with modern furnishings.

Vertigo

OUDE ZIJDE

The eastern half of Amsterdam became known as the Oude Zijde (Old Side). Originally it occupied a narrow strip on the east bank of the Amstel river, running between Damrak and the Oudezijds Voorburgwal. At its heart was built the Oude Kerk, the oldest church in the city. In the early 15th century the Oude Zijde began an eastward expansion that continued into the 1600s. This growth was fuelled by an influx of Jewish refugees from Portugal. The oldest of the four synagogues, now containing the Joods Historisch Museum, dates from this period. These were central to Jewish life in the city for centuries. During the Golden Age (see pp50–51), the Oude Zijde was an important commercial centre. Boats could sail up the Geldersekade to Nieuwmarkt, where goods were weighed at the Waag before being sold at the market.

Street-by-Street: University District

The University of Amsterdam, founded in 1877, is predominantly located in the peaceful, southwestern part of the Oude Zijde. The university's roots lie in the former Athenaeum Illustre, which was founded in 1632 in the Agnietenkapel. Beyond Damstraat, the bustling Red Light District meets the Nieuwmarkt, where the 15th-century Waag evokes a medieval air. South of the Nieuwmarkt, Museum Het Rembrandthuis gives a fascinating insight into the life of the city's most famous artist.

Red Light District 1

Map 5 A1. ☐ 4, 9, 16, 24, 25.

Barely clad prostitutes bathed in a red neon glow and touting for business at their windows is one of the defining images of modern Amsterdam. The city's Red Light District, referred to locally as de Walleijes (the little walls), is concentrated on the Oude Kerk (see pp 76–7), although it extends as far as Warmoesstraat to the west, the Zeedijk to the north, the Kloveniersburgwal to the east and then along the line of Damstraat to the south.

Prostitution in Amsterdam dates back to the city's emergence as a port in the 13th century. By 1478, prostitution had become so widespread that attempts were made to contain it. Prostitutes straying outside their designated area were marched back to the sound of pipe and drum.

A century later, following the Alteration, the Calvinists (see pp 52–3) tried to outlaw prostitution altogether. Their attempts were half-hearted, and by the mid-17th century prostitution was openly tolerated. In 1850, Amsterdam had a population of 200,000, and more than 200 brothels.

Entrance to one of the clubs in the Red Light District

Today, the whole area is criss-crossed by a network of narrow lanes, dominated by garish sex shops, seedy clubs and unsavoury characters. At night, the little alleys assume a somewhat sinister aspect, and it is unwise to wander away from the main streets. But by day, hordes of visitors generate a festive buzz, and amid the sleaze there are interesting cafés, bars, restaurants and beautiful canalside houses to be discovered. The city council is trying to make the area more culturally attractive by cutting down on window-prostitutes, closing the seediest clubs and encouraging non-sex-industry businesses.

Waag 2

Nieuwmarkt 4. Map 2 E5. ☐ 9, 14.

M Nieuwmarkt. ☐ upper rooms closed to public.

The multi-turreted Waag is the city's oldest surviving gatehouse. Built in 1488, it was then, and often still is, called St Antoniespoort. Public executions were held here, and condemned prisoners awaited their fate in the "little gallows room". In 1617, the building became the public weigh house (waaggebouw). Peasants had their produce weighed here and paid tax accordingly. Various guilds used the upper rooms of each tower. From 1619 the Guild of Surgeons had a meeting room and anatomy theatre here. They added the central octagonal tower in 1691. Rembrandt's Anatomy Lesson of Dr Nicolaes Tulp, now in the Mauritshuis (see pp 222–3), and The Anatomy Lesson of Dr Jan Deijman, in the Amsterdam Museum (see pp 92–3), were commissioned by guild members and then hung here.

The weigh house closed in the early 19th century and the Waag has since served as a fire station and two city museums. It is now home to the restaurant In de Waag.

Nieuwmarkt 3

Map 2 E5. 9, 14. Nieuwmarkt. Antiques market May–Sep: 9am–5pm Sun. Organic farmers' market 9am–5pm Sat.

An open, paved square, the Nieuwmarkt is flanked to the west by the Red Light District. With the top end of the Gelderse kade, it forms Amsterdam's Chinatown. The Waag dominates the square, and construction of this gateway led to the site's development in the 15th century as a marketplace. When the city expanded in the 17th century (see pp64–5), the square took on its present dimensions and was called the Nieuwmarkt. It retains an array of 17th- and 18th-century gabled houses. True to tradition, an antiques market is held on Sundays during the summer.

The old Jewish Quarter leads off the square down St Antoniesbreestraat. In the 1970s, many houses here were demolished to make way for the metro, sparking off clashes between protesters and police. The action of conservationists persuaded the council to adopt a policy of renovating rather than redeveloping old buildings. Photographs of their protests decorate the metro.

This museum is the only one in Europe to chart the history of hemp (marijuana). Exhibits refer back 8,000 years to early Asiatic civilizations, which used the plant for medicines and clothing. It was first used in the Netherlands, according to a herbal manual of 1554, as a cure for earache.

Until the late 19th century, however, hemp was the main source of fibre for rope, and was therefore important in the Dutch shipping industry. Other exhibits relate to the psychoactive properties of this plant. They include an intriguing array of pipes and bongs (smoking devices), along with displays that explain smuggling methods. The museum also has a small cultivation area where plants are grown under artificial light. Police sometimes raid and take away exhibits, so there may be occasional gaps in displays.

Map 2 D5. 4, 9, 14, 16, 24, 25. to the public.

The Agnietenkapel was part of the convent of St Agnes until 1578 when it was closed after the Alteration. In 1632, the Athenaeum Illustre, the precursor of the University of Amsterdam, took over the building and by the mid-17th century it was a centre of scientific learning. It also housed the municipal library until the 1830s. The Agnietenkapel itself dates from 1470, and is one of the few Gothic chapels to have survived the Alteration. During restoration from 1919 to 1921, elements of the Amsterdam School architecture were introduced (see pp142–3). Despite these changes and long periods of secular use, the building still has the feel of a Franciscan chapel. The large auditorium on the first floor is the oldest in the city. It has a lovely ceiling, painted with Renaissance motifs and a portrait of Minerva, the Roman goddess of wisdom and the arts. The walls are hung with forty portraits of European humanist scholars, including one of Erasmus (1466–1536). The Agnietenkapel once housed the University of Amsterdam Museum, but the museum's collection can be seen in Oude Turfmarkt 129 (next to the Allard Pierson Museum). A conference centre has taken its place.

The Oudemanhuispoort was once the entrance to old people's almshouses (Oudemannenhuis), built in 1754. Today the building is part of the University of Amsterdam.

The pediment over the gateway in the Oudezijds Achterburgwal features a pair of spectacles, a symbol of old age. Trading inside this covered walkway dates from 1757 and today there is a market for second-hand books. Although the building is closed to the public, visitors may enter the 18th-century courtyard via the arcade.

The origins of the Oude Kerk date from the early 13th century, when a wooden church was built on a sand bank. The present Gothic structure is 14th century and has grown from a single-aisled church into a basilica. As it expanded, the building became a gathering place for traders and a refuge for the poor.

Paintings and statuary were destroyed after the Alteration in 1578, but the gilded ceiling and stained-glass windows remain.

The Great Organ was added in 1724, and there are two other fine organs. The floor is undergoing restoration, and part of the church will be screened off until 2012.

Justus Vingboons designed this ornate Classical mansion, completed in 1662. It appears to be one house: it is in fact two. The façade, outlined by eight Corinthian columns, features false middle windows. The house was designed for arms merchants Lodewijk and Hendrick Trip; the chimneys look like cannons. The city's art collection was housed here 1817–85, when it moved to the Rijksmuseum (see pp122–5).

Trippenhuis now houses the Dutch Academy. Opposite at No. 26 is the Kleine Trippenhuis (1698). Only 2.5 m (7 ft) wide, it has detailed corning, including two carved sphinxes.

Rembrandt worked and taught in this house from 1639 until 1660. He lived in the ground-floor rooms with his wife, Saskia, who died here in 1642, leaving the artist with their only surviving child, a baby son, Titus.

Many of Rembrandt's most famous paintings were created in the first-floor studio. Lessons were conducted in the attic. A fine collection of Rembrandt's etchings and drawings includes various self-portraits. There are also landscapes, nude studies, religious and crowd scenes, and sketches of the artist with his wife. The house has undergone historically accurate restoration and a further wing has been opened to the public.

Few buildings in Amsterdam caused as much controversy as the new Stadhuis (city hall) and Muziektheater (opera house). Nicknamed the “Stopera” by protesters, the plan required the destruction of dozens of medieval houses, which were virtually all that remained of the original Jewish quarter, and the temporary relocation of a popular market. This led to running battles between squatters and the police.

The building, completed in 1988, is a huge confection of red brick, marble and glass. A mural illustrating the Normaal Amsterdams Peil is shown on the arcade linking the two parts of the complex. The complex has the largest auditorium in the country, and it is home to the Netherlands’ national opera and ballet companies.

Waterlooplein ⑫

Map 5 B2. 9, 14. Waterlooplein. Market 9am–5pm Mon–Fri, 8:30am–5pm Sat.

The Waterlooplein dates from 1882, when two canals were filled in to create a market square. The site was originally known as Vlooyenburg, an artificial island built in the 17th century to house Jewish settlers. The original market disappeared during World War II when most of the Jewish residents of Amsterdam were transported by the Nazis. After the war, a popular flea market grew up in its place, and today the northern end of the square still hosts a lively mix of stalls.

church took its name from the Old Testament figures depicted on the gable stones of the original building. These are now set into the rear wall.

The church was restored in 1990, its twin wooden towers painted to look like sandstone. It is now used for exhibitions, public meetings and concerts.

This complex of four synagogues, built by Ashkenazi Jews in the 17th and 18th centuries, opened as a museum in 1987. The synagogues were central to Jewish life here, until the devastation of World War II left them empty. Restored in the 1980s, they are connected by internal walkways. Displays of art and religious artifacts depict Jewish culture and the history of Judaism in the Netherlands.

Highlights include the Grote Synagogue, its hall lined with galleries; and the Holy Ark (1791) from Enkhuizen (see p178) which dominates the Nieuwe Synagoge and holds two 18th-century silver Torah shields and three velvet mantles. Also not to be missed is the 1734 Haggadah containing the Passover order of service.

The buildings were renovated in 2006, when a basement print room was created, and one of the synagogues turned into a children’s museum.

Elias Bouman's design for the Portugees-Israëlitische Synagoge is said to be inspired by the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem. Built for the wealthy Portuguese Sephardic community of Amsterdam and inaugurated in 1675, the huge brick building has a rectangular ground plan with the Holy Ark in the southeast corner facing towards Jerusalem, and the tebah (the podium from which the service is led) at the opposite end.

The wooden, barrel-vaulted ceiling is supported by four Ionic columns. The interior of the synagogue, with its pews made of mahogany, is illuminated by more than 1,000 candles and 72 windows.

Isaac de Pinto, a wealthy Portuguese merchant, bought the Pintohuis in 1651 for the then enormous sum of 30,000 guilders. He had it remodelled over the next decades to a design by Elias Bouman, and it is one of the few private residences in Amsterdam to follow an Italianate style. The exterior design was reworked from 1675 to 1680. Six imposing pilasters break up the severe, cream façade into five recessed sections, and the cornice is topped by a blind balustrade concealing the roof. Inside, the painted ceiling is decorated with birds and cherubs.

In the 1970s, the house was scheduled for demolition because it stood in the way of a newly planned main road. Concerted protest saved the building. It now houses a branch of the Amsterdam Public Library.

Montelbaanstoren 17

Oude Waal/Oudeschans 2. Map 5 B1. 9, 14. Nieuwmarkt. to the public.

The lower portion of the Montelbaanstoren was built in 1512 and formed part of Amsterdam's medieval fortifications. It lay just beyond the city wall, protecting the city's wharves on the newly built St Antoniesdijk (now the Oudeschans) from the neighbouring Gelderland. The octagonal structure and open-work timber steeple were both added by Hendrick de Keyser in 1606. His decorative addition bears a close resemblance to the spire of the Oude Kerk, designed by Joost Bilhamer, which was built 40 years earlier (see pp76–7).

In 1611, the tower began to list, prompting Amsterdammers to attach ropes to the top and pull it right again. Sailors from the Dutch East India Company would gather at the Montelbaanstoren before being ferried in small boats down the IJ to the massive East Indies-bound sailing ships, anchored further out in deep water to the north.

The building appears in a number of etchings by Rembrandt, and is still a popular subject for artists. It now houses the offices of the Amsterdam water authority.

Prins Hendrikkade 108. Map 2 E4. 1, 2, 4, 5, 9, 13, 16, 17, 24, 25. Centraal Station.

Built as an office complex in 1916, the Scheepvaarthuis (shipping house) is regarded as the first true example of Amsterdam School architecture (see p142–3). It was designed by Piet Kramer (1881–1961), Johan van der May (1878–1949) and Michel de Klerk (1884–1923) for a group of shipping companies which no longer wanted to conduct business on the quay.

The imposing triangular building has a prow-like front and is crowned by a statue of Neptune, his wife and four female figures representing the four points of the compass.

The medieval Montelbaanstoren, with its decorative timber steeple

No expense was spared on the construction and internal decoration of the building, and local dock workers came to regard the building as a symbol of capitalism. The doors, stairs, window frames and interior walls are festooned with nautical images, such as sea horses, dolphins and anchors. Beautiful stained-glass skylights are also decorated with images of sailing ships, maps and compasses.

Schreierstoren 19

Prins Hendrikkade 94–95.

Map 2 E4. 1, 2, 4, 5, 9, 11, 13, 16, 17, 24, 25. M Centraal Station.

The Schreierstoren (weepers' tower) was a defensive structure forming part of the medieval city walls, dating from 1480. It was one of the few fortifications not to be demolished as the city expanded beyond its medieval boundaries in the 17th century. The distinctive building now houses a basement café that offers tastings of genuine sailors' gin.

Popular legend states that the tower derived its name from the weeping (schreien in the original Dutch) of women who came here to wave their men off to sea. It is more likely, however, that the title has a less romantic origin and comes from the tower's position on a sharp (screye or scherpe), 90-degree bend in the old town walls. The earliest of four wall plaques, dated 1569, adds considerably to the confusion by depicting a weeping woman alongside the inscription scraye bovck, which means sharp corner.

In 1609, Henry Hudson set sail from here in an attempt to discover a new and faster trading route to the East Indies. Instead, he unintentionally "discovered" the river in North America which still bears his name. A bronze plaque, laid in 1927, commemorates his voyage.

Zeedijk 20

Map 2 E4. 1, 2, 4, 5, 9, 13, 16, 17, 24, 25. M Centraal Station.

Along with the Nieuwendijk and the Haarlemmerdijk, the Zeedijk (sea dyke) formed part of Amsterdam's original fortifications. Built in the early 1300s, some 30 years after Amsterdam had been granted its city charter, these defences took the form of a canal moat with piled-earth ramparts reinforced by wooden palisades. As the city grew in prosperity and its boundaries expanded, canals were filled in and the dykes became obsolete. The paths that ran alongside them became the streets and alleys which bear their names today.

One of the two remaining wooden-fronted houses in the city is at No. 1. It was built in the mid-1500s as a hostel for sailors and is much restored. Opposite is St Olofskapel, built in 1445 and named after the first Christian king of Norway and Denmark. By the 1600s, the Zeedijk had become a slum. The area is on the edge of the city's Red Light District, and in the 1960s and 1970s it became notorious as a centre for drug-dealing and street crime. However, following an extensive clean-up campaign in the 1980s, the Zeedijk is much improved. Architect Fred Greves has built a Chinese Buddhist temple, Fo Kuang Shan.

Plaques on the gables of some of the street's cafés reveal their former use – the red boot at No. 17 indicates that it was once a cobbler's.

NIEUWE ZIJDE

The western side of medieval Amsterdam was known as the Nieuwe Zijde (New Side). Together with the Oude Zijde it formed the heart of the early maritime settlement. Nieuwendijk, today a busy shopping street, was originally one of the earliest sea defences. As Amsterdam grew, it expanded eastwards, leaving large sections of the Nieuwe Zijde, to the west, neglected and in decline. With its many wooden houses, the city was prone to fires and in 1452 much of the area was burned down. During rebuilding, a broad moat, the Singel, was cut, along which warehouses, rich merchants' homes

"The calf" emblem on a house in the Begijnhof and fine quays sprang up. The interesting Amsterdams Historisch Museum, which is now housed in a splendid former orphanage, has scores of maps and paintings charting the growth of the city from these times to the present day. One room is devoted to the Miracle of Amsterdam, which made the city a place of pilgrimage, and brought commerce to the Nieuwe Zijde. Nearby lies Kalverstraat, Amsterdam's main shopping street, and also the secluded Begijnhof. This pretty courtyard is mostly fringed by narrow 17th-century houses, but it also contains the city's oldest surviving wooden house.

Street-by-Street: Nieuwe Zijde

Although much of the medieval Nieuwe Zijde has disappeared, the area is still rich in buildings that relate to the city's past. The Dam, dominated by the Koninklijk Paleis and Nieuwe Kerk, provides examples of architecture from the 15th to the 20th centuries. Around Kalverstraat, narrow streets and alleys follow the course of some of the earliest dykes and footpaths. Here, most of the traditional gabled houses have been turned into bustling shops and cafés. Streets such as Rokin and Nes are now home to financial institutions, attracted by the nearby stock and options exchanges. Nes is also well known for its venues which feature alternative theatre.

Dating from the late 14th century, Amsterdam's second parish church was built as the population outgrew the Oude Kerk (see pp76–7). During its turbulent history, the church has been destroyed several times by fire, rebuilt and then stripped of its finery after the Alteration. It reached its present size in the 1650s.

The pulpit, not the altar, is the focal point of the interior, reflecting the Protestant belief that the sermon is central to worship. The carved central pulpit, unusually flamboyant for a Dutch Protestant church, was finished in 1664 and took Albert Vinckenbrink 15 years to carve. Above the transept crossing, grimacing gilded cherubs struggle to support the corners of the wooden barrel vault. Magnificent three-tiered brass candelabra were hung from the ceilings of the nave and transepts during restoration work following the fire of 1645. The colourful arched window in the south transept was designed by Otto Mengelberg in 1898. It depicts Queen Wilhelmina surrounded by courtiers at her coronation. In the apse is Rombout Verhulst's memorial to Admiral De Ruyter (1607–76), who died at sea in battle against the French.

The Begijnhof was originally built in 1346 as a sanctuary for the Begijntjes, a lay Catholic sisterhood who lived like nuns, although they took no monastic vows. In return for lodgings, these women undertook to educate the poor and look after the sick. Nothing survives of the earliest dwellings, but the Begijnhof, cut off from traffic noise, retains a sanctified atmosphere. Among the houses that overlook its well-kept green is the city's oldest surviving house at No. 34. On the adjoining wall there is a fascinating collection of wall plaques taken from the houses. In keeping with the Begijntjes' religious outlook, the plaques have a biblical theme.

The southern fringe of the square is dominated by the Engelse Kerk (English Church), dating from the 15th century.

Directly west stands the Begijnhof Chapel, a clandestine church in which the Begijntjes and other Catholics worshipped in secret until religious tolerance was restored in 1795. Stained-glass windows and paintings depict scenes of the Miracle of Amsterdam. The occupants of the houses are trying to close public access to the Begijnhof, and public tours are not allowed.

No. 34 is Amsterdam's oldest house, dating from around 1420. It is one of the city's two wooden-fronted houses; timber houses were banned in 1521 after a series of catastrophic fires. Most of the Begijnhof houses were built after the 16th century.

Engelse Kerk

This church was built around 1419 for the Begijntjes. It was confiscated after the Alteration and rented to a group of English and Scottish Presbyterians in 1607. The Pilgrim Fathers may have worshipped here.

Koninklijk Paleis ②

Formerly the town hall, the Koninklijk Paleis (Royal Palace) is still regularly used by the Dutch royal family on official occasions. Construction of the sandstone building began in 1648, at the end of the 80 Years War (see p49). The Neo-Classical design of Jacob van Campen (1595–1657) reflected Amsterdam's new-found self-confidence after the victory against the Spanish. When not in use by members of the Royal House, the Paleis is open to the public.

Amsterdam's only specialist archaeological collection is named after Allard Pierson (1831–96), a humanist and scholar. The collection was moved into this handsome Neo-Classical building in 1976.

The museum contains Cypriot, Greek, Egyptian, Roman, Etruscan and Coptic artifacts.

In summer, café tables on the bridge offer pleasant views down the Singel.

The Lutherse Kerk was designed by Adriaan Dortsman (1625–82) and opened in 1671. It is the first Dutch Reformed church to feature a circular ground plan and two upper galleries, giving the whole congregation a clear view of the pulpit.

In 1882 a fire destroyed everything but the exterior walls. When the interior and entrance were rebuilt in 1883, they were made more square and more ornate. A vaulted copper dome replaced the earlier ribbed version. Falling attendance led to the closure of the church in 1935. The building is now used by Renaissance Amsterdam Hotel as a business centre. Concerts are sometimes held here.

Sint Nicolaas was the patron saint of seafarers, and so was an important icon in Amsterdam. Many Dutch churches are named after him, and the Netherlands' principal day for the giving of presents, 5 December, is known as Sinterklaasavond (see p35).

Completed in 1887, Sint-Nicolaaskerk was designed by AC Bleyens (1842–1912). It replaced some clandestine Catholic churches set up in the city when Amsterdam was officially Protestant.

The exterior is forbidding, its twin towers dominating the skyline. The monumental interior has squared pillars and coffered ceiling arches.

Tucked away on the edge of the Red Light District is a restored 17th-century canal house, with two smaller houses to the rear. The combined upper storeys conceal a secret Catholic church, known as Ons' Lieve Heer op Solder (Our Dear Lord in the Attic), built in 1663. Following the Alteration, when Amsterdam officially became Protestant, many such hidden churches were built in the city.

The lower floors of the building became a museum in 1888 and today contain elegantly refurbished and decorated rooms, as well as a fine collection of church silver, religious artifacts and paintings.

Work due to be completed in 2012 will link the church to the house opposite, providing much-needed space for more exhibitions, a shop and a café. The museum will remain open during this work.

The clean, functional appearance of Hendrik Berlage's 1903 stock exchange marked a departure from late 19th-century revivalist architecture. Many of its design features were adopted by the Amsterdam School. An impressive frieze shows the evolution of man from Adam to stockbroker. Now used for concerts and shows, it is home to the Nederlands Philharmonic Orchestra. The Beurs houses changing exhibitions.

Amsterdam Museum 6

The convent of St Lucien was turned into a civic orphanage two years after the Alteration of 1578. The original red brick convent has been enlarged over the years; new wings were added in the 17th century by Hendrick de Keyser and Jacob van Campen. The present building is largely as it was in the 18th century. Since 1975 the complex has housed the city's historical museum, charting Amsterdam's development.

CANAL RING

In the early 1600s, construction of the Grachtengordel (canal ring) began and the marshy area beyond these fashionable canals, later called Jordaan, was laid out for workers whose industries were prohibited in the centre. Immigrants fleeing religious persecution also settled here. Historically a poor area, it now has a bohemian air. As the major canals were extended, the merchant classes bought land along the Herengracht, Keizersgracht and Prinsengracht to escape the city's squalor. In the 1660s, the richest built houses on a stretch known today as the Golden Bend. The canal ring was also extended east to the Amstel. Houses here, like the Van Loon, convey a sense of life in the Golden Age. In 2010, the canal ring was declared a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

A Guide to Canal House Architecture

Amsterdam has been called a city of “well-mannered” architecture because its charms lie in intimate details rather than in grand effects. From the 15th century on, planning laws, plot sizes and the instability of the topsoil dictated that façades were largely uniform in size and built of lightweight brick or sandstone, with large windows to reduce the weight. Canal house owners stamped their own individuality on the buildings, mainly through the use of decorative gables and cornices, ornate doorcases and varying window shapes.

Bartolotti House (1617)

The contrasting brick and stone, flamboyant step gable, with its marble obelisk and scrolls, is typical of the Dutch Renaissance style of Hendrick de Keyser (see p110).

Felix Meritis Building (1778)

The Corinthian columns and triangular pediment are influenced by Classical architecture. This marks the building by Jacob Otten Husly as Dutch Classical in style.

Ground Plans

Taxes were levied according to width of façade, so canal houses were often long and narrow, with an achterhuis (back annexe) used for offices and storage.

CORNICES

Decorative top mouldings, called cornices, became popular from 1690 onwards when the fashion for gables declined. By the 19th century, they had become unadorned.

GABLES

The term “gable” refers to the front apex of a roof. It disguised the steepness of the roof under which goods were stored. In time, gables became decorated with scrolls, crests, and even with coats of arms.

Simple triangular gable

No. 34 Begijnhof (c.1420) is one of the few remaining timber houses.

Warehouse-style spout gable

The style of gable on No. 213 Leliegracht (c.1620) was used for warehouses.

Dutch Renaissance style

Step gables like the one on No. 2 Brouwerwvgracht were in vogue between 1600–65.

Leaning Façades

Canal houses were often built with a deliberate tilt, allowing goods to be winched up to the attic without crashing against the windows. A law dating from 1565 restricted this lean to 1:25, to limit the risk of buildings collapsing into the streets.

GOLDEN BEND

The stretch of the Herengracht between Leidenstraat and Vijzelstraat was first called the Golden Bend in the 17th century, because of the great wealth of the ship-builders, merchants and politicians who originally lived here. The majority of the buildings along this stretch are faced with imported sandstone, which was more expensive than brick. An excellent example is house No. 412, which was designed by Philips Vingboons in 1664. He was also responsible for the design of the Witte Huis at Herengracht No. 168 as well as Bijbels Museum at Herengracht 366. Building continued into the 18th century, with the Louis XIV style predominating. The house at No. 475, with its ornate window decoration, is typical of this trend. Built in 1730, it is often called the jewel of canal houses. Two sculpted female figures over the front door adorn its monumental sandstone façade.

Dutch Hofjes

Alms-houses (hofjes) were built throughout the Netherlands by rich benefactors in the 17th and 18th centuries. By providing accommodation for the elderly and infirm, the hofjes marked the beginning of the Dutch welfare system.

WALL PLAQUES

Carved and painted stones were used to identify houses before street numbering was introduced in the 19th century. Many reflect the owner's occupation.

No. 419 Singel has a neck gable, a common feature from 1640 to around 1840.

No. 119 Oudezijds Voorburgwal has an ornate 17th-century neck gable.

No. 57 Leliegracht has a plain bell gable, popular from the late 17th century.

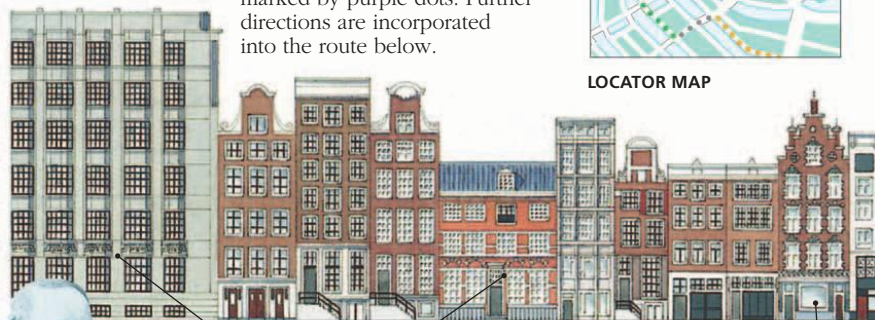

No. 298 Oudezijds Voorburgwal has a bell gable dating from the 18th century.

Dam Square to Herengracht 487

The walk along Amsterdam's finest canals begins in Dam square (see pp84–5). Following the grey dots on the map, leave the square past the Koninklijk Paleis (see pp88–9), cross Nieuwezijds Voorburgwal and Spuistraat down Paleisstraat, and turn left along the left bank of Singel, marked by purple dots. Further directions are incorporated into the route below.

Street-by-Street: Around the Jordaan

West of the Grachtengordel, the Jordaan still retains a network of narrow, characterful streets and delightful canals. Among the 17th-century workers' houses are dozens of quirky shops, which are well worth a browse, selling anything from designer clothes to old sinks, and lively brown cafés and bars, which spill onto the pavements in summer. A stroll along the Grachtengordel provides a glimpse into some of the city's grandest canal houses, including the Bartolotti House.

The quiet Bloemgracht canal was once a centre for makers of paint and dye.

Egelantiersgracht is a charming tree-lined Jordaan canal overlooked by an interesting mixture of old and new architecture. Its numerous bridges provide pretty views.

Anne Frank Huis ❶

Star of David

On 6 July 1942, to avoid their Nazi persecutors, the Jewish Frank family moved from Merwedeplein to the rear annexe of the house at Prinsengracht 263. Anne; her mother, Edith; her father, Otto; and her older sister, Margot, lived here, along with the Van Pels family and dentist Fritz Pfeffer. It was here that Anne wrote her famous diary. On 4 August 1944, the annexe was raided by the Gestapo. All those hiding here were arrested and taken to Nazi concentration camps.

Anne in May 1942

This photograph was taken in 1942, when Anne started writing in the now-famous diary that she had been given on 12 June 1942, her 13th birthday. Less than one month later, the Frank family went into hiding.

The Helpers

MUSEUM GUIDE

The rear annexe is accessible via the reconstructed offices of Otto Frank. The building beside Anne Frank Huis holds various exhibitions. It also houses a café, shop and information desk.

THE DIARY OF ANNE FRANK

Otto Frank returned to Amsterdam in 1945 to discover that his entire family had perished: his wife, Edith, in Auschwitz and his daughters, Anne and Margot, in Bergen-Belsen. Miep Gies, one of the family's helpers while they were in hiding, had kept Anne's diary. First published in 1947, it has since been translated into 55 languages, with some 20 million copies sold. For many, Anne symbolizes the six million Jews murdered by the Nazis in World War II. The diary is a moving portrait of a little girl growing up in times of oppression.

This monument to the homosexual men and women who lost their lives during World War II provides a quiet place of contemplation amid the bustle of the Westermarkt. The pink triangular badge that gay men were forced to wear in Nazi concentration camps later became a symbol of gay pride, and provided the inspiration for Karin Daan's 1987 design. The monument consists of three large pink granite triangles, one of which bears an engraving from a poem by Jacob Israël de Haan (1881–1924). On Remembrance Day (4 May), hundreds of gay men and women from all over the Netherlands join delegates from the city council, police, the military and social organisations to lay wreaths and flowers.

Built as part of the development of the Canal Ring, this church has the tallest tower in the city at 85 m (279 ft), and the largest nave of any Dutch Protestant church. It was designed by Hendrick de Keyser, who died in 1621, a year after work began.

Rembrandt was buried here but his grave has never been found. The organ shutters (1686) were painted by Gerard de Lairesse, with lively scenes showing King David and the Queen of Sheba.

The tower carries the crown bestowed on Amsterdam in 1489 by Maximilian, the Hapsburg emperor. The stunning views justify the climb.

☞ 13, 14, 17. 🕒 to the public.

Built in 1622, the Huis met de Hoofden (house with the heads) is one of the largest double houses of the period. It has a fine step gable and takes its name from the six heads placed on pilasters along the façade. Legend has it that they commemorate a housemaid who, when alone in the house, surprised six burglars and cut off their heads. The sculptures are in fact portrayals of six Classical deities (from left to right):

Apollo, Ceres, Mars, Minerva, Bacchus and Diana. The design of the building is sometimes attributed to Pieter de Keyser (1595–1676), son of Hendrick de Keyser. The Huis met de Hoofden has been bought by JR Ritman, owner of the Bibliotheca Philosophica Hermetica. This library of books on alchemy and mysticism will move during 2011.

Built for poor settlers in the Jordaan, the North Church was the first in Amsterdam to be constructed in the shape of a Greek cross. Its layout around a central pulpit allowed the congregation seated in the encircling pews to see and hear well.

The church, designed by Hendrick de Keyser, was completed in 1623, in time to hold its inaugural service at Easter. It is still well attended by a Calvinist congregation. By the entrance is a sculpture of three bound figures, inscribed: "Unity is Strength". It commemorates the Jordaan Riot of 1934. On the south façade, a plaque recalls the 1941 February Strike, protesting the Nazis' deportation of Jews.

Since 1627, the square that surrounds the Noorderkerk has been a market site. At that time, it sold pots and pans and vodden (old clothes), a tradition that continues today with a flea market. Since the 18th century, the area has been a centre for bed shops. Bedding, curtains and fabrics are still sold on Monday morning along the Westerstraat; you can buy anything from net curtain material to buttons. On Saturday mornings, the vogeltjes (small birds) market sells chickens, pigeons, small birds and rabbits. At 10am, the boerenmarkt takes over, selling health foods, ethnic crafts and candles.

Haarlemmerpoort 6

Haarlemmerplein 50. Map 1 B1.
 3. to the public.

Originally a defended gateway into Amsterdam, the Haarlemmerpoort marked the beginning of the busy route to Haarlem. The present gateway, dating from 1840, was built for King William II's triumphal entry into the city and named Willemspoort. However, as the third gateway to be built on or close to this site, it is still called the Haarlemmerpoort by Amsterdammers.

Designed by Cornelis Alewijn (1788–1839), the Neo-Classical gatehouse was used as tax offices in the 19th century and was made into flats in 1986. Traffic no longer goes through the gate, since a bridge has been built over the adjoining Westerkanaal.

Brouwersgracht 7

Map 1 B2. 3.

Brouwersgracht (brewers' canal) was named after the breweries established here in the 17th and 18th centuries. Leather, spices, coffee and sugar were also processed and stored here. Today, most of the warehouses, with their spout gables and shutters, are residences that look out on moored houseboats.

Western Islands 8

Map 1 C1. 3.

This district comprises three islands built on the IJ in the early 1600s to quarter warehouses and shipyards. Some of these are still in use and many period houses have survived.

Merchant and developer Jan Bicker bought Bickerseiland in 1631. Today, the island is a mix of colourful apartment blocks and a jumble of houseboats.

Realeneiland has the pretty waterside street of Zandhoek. A row of 17th-century houses built by the island's founder, Jacobsz Reaal, overlooks the moored sailboats.

Prinseneiland is dominated by characterful warehouses, many now apartments.

DUTCH HOFJES

Before the Alteration, the Catholic Church often provided subsidized housing for the poor and elderly, particularly women.

During the 17th and 18th centuries, rich merchants and Protestant organizations took on this charitable role and built hundreds of almshouse complexes, which were planned around courtyards and known as hofjes. Behind their street façades lie pretty houses and serene gardens. Visitors are admitted to some but asked to respect the residents' privacy. Many hofjes are found in the Jordaan and some still serve their original purpose.

Leidseplein 9

Map 4 E2. 1, 2, 5, 7, 10.

Amsterdam's liveliest square, Leidseplein is also a busy tram intersection and centre of night-time transport.

The square developed in the 17th century as a wagon park on the outskirts of the city – farmers and peasants would leave their carts here before entering the centre. It takes its name from the Leidsepoort, the massive city gate demolished in 1862, which marked the beginning of the route out to Leiden.

During the day, the square is buzzing with fire-eaters, buskers and other street performers playing to café audiences. It is also popular with pickpockets. At night, it is the focal point for the city's youth, who hang out in the many bars, cafés, restaurants, nightclubs and cinemas in and around the square.

American Hotel 10

Leidsekade 97. Map 4 E2.
Tel 020-5563000. 1, 2, 5, 7, 10.

Leidseplein was fast becoming a fashionable entertainment area when the American Hotel was built overlooking it in 1882. The hotel got its name because its architect, W Steinigeweg, studied hotel design in the United States, and adorned his Neo-Gothic creation with a bronze eagle, wooden figures of native Indians and murals of American landscapes. Within 20 years it was deemed passé and the hotel was demolished. The present building is by Willem Kromhout (1864–1940) and was completed in 1902.

His design marked a radical departure, interpreting the Art Nouveau style in an angular Dutch fashion. The building's turreted exterior and elaborate brickwork anticipated the progressive Amsterdam School (see pp142–3).

The Art Deco-style Café American is one of the most elegant in Amsterdam. It retains its period furnishings and stained-glass windows. The rest of the hotel was redecorated in the 1980s. Samples of the original furnishings are in the Rijksmuseum (see pp122–5).

This Neo-Renaissance building is the most recent of the city's three successive municipal theatres, its predecessors having burned down. The theatre was designed by Jan Springer and AL van Gendt, who was responsible for the Concertgebouw (see p120) and for part of the Centraal Station (see p90). The planned ornamentation of the theatre's redbrick exterior was never carried out because of budget cuts. This, combined with a hostile public reaction to his theatre, forced a disillusioned Springer into virtual retirement. Public disgust was due, however, to the management's policy of restricting use of the front door to patrons who had bought expensive tickets.

The former home of the Dutch national ballet and opera companies, the theatre today stages plays by local drama groups such as the resident Toneelgroep, as well as international companies, including many English-language productions. A new auditorium opened in 2009.

An impressive Neo-Gothic church, the Krijtberg (or chalk hill) replaced a clandestine Jesuit chapel in 1884. It is officially known as Franciscus Xaveriuskerk, after St Francis Xavier, one of the founding Jesuit monks.

Designed by Alfred Tepe, the church was built on the site of three houses; the presbytery beside the church is on the site of two other houses, one of which had belonged to a chalk merchant – hence the church's nickname. The back of the church is wider than the front, extending into the space once occupied by the original gardens. The narrowness of the façade is redeemed by its two magnificent, soaring, steepled towers.

The ornate interior of the building contains some good examples of Neo-Gothic design. The stained-glass windows, walls painted in bright colours and liberal use of gold are in striking contrast to the city's austere Protestant churches. A statue of St Francis Xavier stands in front and to the left of the high altar; one of St Ignatius, founder of the Jesuits, stands to the right.

Near the pulpit is an 18th-century wooden statue of the Immaculate Conception, which shows Mary trampling the serpent. It used to be housed in the original hidden chapel.

The Stadsarchief, the city's municipal archives, moved from its former location in Amsteldijk to this monumental building. Designed by KPC de Bazel, one of the principal representatives of the Amsterdam school of architecture, the edifice was completed in 1926 for the Netherlands Trading Company. In spite of much renovation work at the end of World War II and in the 1970s, the building retains many attractive original features, such as colourful floor mosaics (designed by de Bazel himself). There is a permanent display of treasures from the archives in the monumental vaults.

ON THE CANALS

Though Amsterdam's canals were built for moving goods, today they provide a marvellous means of viewing the city's sights and its everyday life. There are many operators in the city offering canal tours with foreign-language commentaries; boats depart from an embarkation point, mainly from opposite Centraal Station, along Prins Hendrikkade, the Damrak and along the Rokin. Other canal-sightseeing options include the popular canalbus and the Museum Boat. The former runs along three routes, with 14 stops near the major museums, shopping areas and other attractions, while the Museum Boat takes in and stops near all the major city sights. If you feel energetic, try a canal bike, which is really a two- or four-seater pedal-boat that can be picked up and left at any of the canal-bike moorings in the city centre.

Rembrandtplein 16

Map 5 A2. ☑ 4, 9, 14.

Formerly called the Botermarkt, after the butter market held here until the mid-19th century, this square acquired its present name when the statue of Rembrandt was erected in 1876.

Soon afterwards, Rembrandtplein developed into a centre for nightlife with the opening of various hotels and cafés. The Mast (renamed the Mille Colongnes Hotel) dates from 1889, and the Schiller Karena hotel and the Café Schiller both opened in 1892. De Kroon, which epitomizes a typical grand café, dates from 1898. The popularity of Rembrandtplein has endured, and the café terraces are packed during summer with people enjoying a pleasant drink and watching the world go by.

Named after the building's last residents, the museum now housed here allows visitors a glimpse into the lives of the merchant class who lived in luxury along the Grachtengordel (Canal Ring). The house was built in 1685 and became the property of coal magnate Pieter Holtuysen (1788–1858) in 1855.

Interior of Willet-Holthuysen

Two of the many outdoor cafés on Rembrandtplein

It passed to his daughter Louisa and her art-connoisseur husband, Abraham Willet – both fervent collectors of paintings, glass, silver and ceramics. When Louisa died childless in 1895, the house and its many treasures were left to the city. Room by room, the house is gradually being restored to appear as it did during the time when Abraham and Louisa lived here.

The Blue Room, hung with heavy blue damask and boasting a chimney piece by Jacob de Wit, was the exclusive preserve of the men of the house.

The wallpaper in the dining room today is a careful copy of the 18th-century silk original. The elaborate 275-piece Meissen dinner service provided up to 24 places.

The 18th-century kitchen has been restored using items salvaged from similar houses, including the sink and pump.

On the second floor is a full-length portrait of Willet.

Magere Brug 18

Amstel. Map 5 B3. ☑ 4.

Of Amsterdam's 1,400 or so bridges, Magere Brug (skinny bridge) is the best-known. The original drawbridge was built in about 1670. According to legend, it was named after two sisters called Mager, who lived either side of the Amstel. It is more likely that the name comes from its narrow (mager) design.

Magere Brug, a traditional double-leaf Dutch drawbridge

The present drawbridge was put up in 1969 and, though wider than the original, it still conforms to the traditional double-leaf style. Constructed from African azobe wood, it was intended to last 50 years. Every 20 minutes, the bridge master has to let boats through. He then jumps on his bicycle and opens up the Amstelsluisen and Hoge Sluis.

The Van Loons were one of Amsterdam's most prestigious families in the 17th century. They did not move into this house on the Keizersgracht, however, until 1884. Designed by Adriaan Dortsman, No. 672 is one of a pair of symmetrical houses built in 1672 for Flemish merchant Jeremias van Raey. In 1752, Dr Abraham van Hagen and his wife, Catharina Elisabeth Trip, moved in.

In 1973, after many years of restoration, it opened as a museum, retaining the house's original character. Its collection of Van Loon family portraits stretches back to the early 1600s. The period rooms have fine pieces of furniture, porcelain and sculpture. Outside, the 18th-century coach house has been restored and houses the van Loon carriages and servants' livery.

Abraham Tuschinski's cinema and variety theatre caused a sensation when it opened in 1921. Until then, Amsterdam's cinemas had been sombre places; this was an exotic blend of Art Deco and Amsterdam School architecture (see pp142–3). Built in a slum area known as Devil's Corner, it was designed by Heyman Louis de Jong and decorated by Chris Bartels, Jaap Gidding and Pieter de Besten. In its heyday, Marlene Dietrich and Judy Garland performed here.

Now a six-screen cinema, the building has been meticulously restored, inside and out. The best way to appreciate its opulence is to see a film. For a few extra euros, you can take a seat in one of the exotic boxes that make up the back row of the huge semi-circular auditorium.

MUSEUM QUARTER

Until the late 1800s, the Museum Quarter was little more than an area of farms and small-holdings. At this time, the city council designated it an area of art and culture and plans were conceived for constructing Amsterdam's great cultural monuments: the Rijksmuseum, the Stedelijk Museum and the Concertgebouw. The Van Gogh Museum followed in 1973, its striking extension being added in 1999. The Museumplein has two memorials to the victims of World War II. The plein is still used today as a site for political demonstrations. To the north and south are late 19th- and early 20th-century houses, where the streets are named after artists and intellectuals, such as the 17th-century Dutch poet Roemer Visscher. To the west, the Vondelpark offers a pleasant, fresh-air break from all the museums.

The green expanse of Museumplein was once bisected by a busy main road known locally as the “shortest motorway in Europe”. But dramatic renovation between 1996 and 1999 has transformed it into a stately park, fringed by Amsterdam’s major cultural centres. The district is one of the wealthiest in the city, with wide streets lined with grand houses. After the heady delights of the museums, it is possible to window-shop at the many up-market boutiques along the exclusive PC Hooftstraat and Van Baerlestraat, or watch the diamond polishers at work in Coster Diamonds.

One of Amsterdam's oldest diamond factories, Coster was founded in 1840. Twelve years later, Queen Victoria's consort, Prince Albert, honoured the company by giving them the task of repolishing the enormous Kob-i-Noor (mountain of light) diamond. This blue-white stone is one of the treasures of the British crown jewels and weighs in at 108.8 carats. A replica of the coronation crown, which incorporates a copy of the fabulous stone, is found in Coster's spacious entrance hall.

More than 1,000 people visit the factory each day to witness the processes of grading, cutting and polishing the stones. The goldsmiths and diamond-cutters work together in the factory to produce customized items of jewellery, in a range of styles, which are available over the counter. In the Diamond Museum, the history of the diamond is traced, from its creation deep in the earth to the dazzling stones that are a girl's best friend.

Following an open architectural competition held in 1881, AL van Gendt (1835–1901) was chosen to design a vast new concert hall for Amsterdam. The resulting Neo-Renaissance building boasts an elaborate pediment and colonnaded façade, and houses two concert halls. Despite van Gendt's lack of musical knowledge, he managed to produce near-perfect acoustics in the Grote Zaal (main concert hall), which is renowned the world over.

The inaugural concert at the Concertgebouw was held on 11 April 1888, complete with an orchestra of 120 musicians and a choir of 600. A resident orchestra was established at the hall seven months later.

The building has been renovated several times over the years, most recently in 1983, when some serious subsidence threatened the building's entire foundation. To remedy this, the whole superstructure had to be lifted up off the ground while the original supporting piles, which rested on sand 13 m (43 ft) underground, were removed and replaced by concrete piles sunk into the ground to a depth of 18 m (59 ft). A glass extension and new entrance were added by Pi de Bruijn in 1988. The original entrance was relocated round to the side of the building. Though primarily designed to hold concerts, the Concertgebouw also hosts business meetings, exhibitions, conferences, political meetings and occasional boxing matches.

In 1864, a group consisting of prominent Amsterdammers formed a committee with the aim of founding a public park, and they raised enough money to buy 8 ha (20 acres) of land. JD and LP Zocher, a father-and-son team of landscape architects, were then commissioned to design the park in typical English landscape style. They used vistas, pathways and ponds to create the illusion of a large natural area, which was opened to the public on 15 June 1865, as the Nieuwe Park. The park's present name was adopted in 1867, when a statue of Dutch poet Joost van den Vondel (1587–1679) was erected on the grounds. The committee soon began to raise money to enlarge the park, and by June 1877 it had reached its current dimensions of 47 ha (116 acres). The park now supports around 100 plant species and 127 types of tree. Squirrels, hedgehogs, ducks and garden birds mix with a huge colony of greedy, bright green parakeets, which gather in front of the pavilion every morning to be fed. Herds of cows, sheep, goats and even a lone llama graze in the pastures.

Vondelpark welcomes about 8 million visitors a year, and is popular with the locals for dog-walking, jogging, or just for the view. Free concerts are given at the openhuchttheater (open-air theatre) or at the bandstand during summer.

The Dutch riding school was originally situated on the Leidsegracht, but in 1882 a new building was opened, designed by AL van Gendt and based on the Spanish Riding School in Vienna. The riding school was threatened with demolition in the 1980s, but was saved after a public outcry. Reopened in 1986 by Prince Bernhard, it has been restored to its former glory. The Neo-Classical indoor arena

The Vondelkerk was the largest church designed by PJH Cuypers, architect of the Centraal Station. Work began in 1872, but funds ran out by the following year. Money gathered from public donations and lotteries allowed the building to be completed by 1880. When fire broke out in November 1904, firefighters saved the nave by forcing the burning tower to fall away into Vondelpark. A new tower was added later by the architect's son, JT Cuypers. The church was deconsecrated in 1979 and converted into offices in 1985.

Vondelpark's pavilion was designed by the architects PJ Hamer (1812–87) and his son W Hamer (1843–1913), and opened on 4 May 1881 as a café and restaurant. After World War II, it reopened as a cultural centre. In 1991, the pavilion was renovated once more. The complete Art Deco interior of the Cinema Parisien, Amsterdam's first cinema, built in 1910, was moved into one of the rooms. It is now an important national film museum, showing more than 1,000 films a year. The museum also owns a film poster collection, runs a public film library at Nos. 69–71 Vondelstraat and holds free outdoor film screenings in summer.

At the end of 2011, EYE Film will move to a new building under construction on the Badhuisweg, across the IJ (behind Centraal Station); check the website for updates.

Rijksmuseum ①

The Rijksmuseum, an Amsterdam landmark, possesses an unrivalled collection of Dutch art, begun in the early 19th century. The huge museum opened in 1885 to bitter criticism from Amsterdam's Protestant community for its Neo-Gothic style. The main building is closed until 2013 for a major renovation, but a selection of the best works from the Dutch Golden Age can be seen in the Philips Wing.

Painter Hendrick Avercamp specialized in intricate icy winter scenes.

The Gothic façade of Cuyper's building is red brick with elaborate decoration, including coloured tiles.

GENRE PAINTING

For the contemporaries of Jan Steen (1625–79), this cosy everyday scene was full of symbols that are obscure to the modern viewer. The dog on the pillow may represent fidelity, and the red stockings, the woman's sexuality; she is probably a prostitute. Such genre paintings were often raunchy, but most had a moral twist (see p223) – domestic scenes by artists such as Terborch and Honthorst were symbolic of brothels, while other works illustrated proverbs. Symbols such as candles or skulls indicated mortality.

Exploring the Rijksmuseum

The Rijksmuseum is almost too vast to be seen in a single visit. It is famous for owning probably the best collection of Dutch art in the world, from early religious works to the masterpieces of the Golden Age. However, the applied art and sculpture sections, and the Asiatic artefacts, are equally wonderful. Due to renovation, only a selection of works can be seen now in the Philips Wing. The selected pieces demonstrate the enormous prosperity of Holland's Golden Age in the 17th century. Rembrandt's The Night Watch is one of the masterpieces still on display.

DUTCH HISTORY

The turbulent history of the Netherlands is encapsulated in this section. In the opening room is the medieval altar painting of St Elizabeth's Day Flood (see p122). The central room has 17th-century ship models, artefacts salvaged from shipwrecks and paintings of factories and townscapes from the days of the Dutch Empire. Later displays recall battles in naval history; exhibits from the 18th century deal with the impact of revolutionary France on Amsterdam, ending in 1815 after the Napoleonic Wars.

EARLY PAINTING AND FOREIGN SCHOOLS

Alongside a small collection of Flemish and Italian art, including portraits by Piero di Cosimo (1462–1521), are the first specifically “Dutch” paintings. These works are mostly religious, such as The Seven Works of Charity (1504) by the Master of Alkmaar, Jan van Scorel's quasi-Mannerist Mary Magdalene (1528) and Lucas van Leyden's triptych, Adoration of the Golden Calf (1530). As the 16th century progressed, religious themes were superseded by pastoral subjects; by 1552, paintings like Pieter Aertsen's The Egg Dance were full of realism, by then the keystone of much Dutch art.

17TH-CENTURY PAINTING

By the alteration in 1578, Dutch art had moved away completely from religious to secular themes. Artists turned to realistic portraiture, landscapes, still lifes, seascapes, domestic interiors, including genre work (see p123), and animal portraits. Rembrandt

Feeding the Hungry from a series of panels by the Master of Alkmaar

(see p78) is the most famous of many artists who lived and worked around Amsterdam at this time. Examples of his work hanging in the Rijksmuseum include Portrait of Titus in a Monk's Habit (1660), Self-Portrait as the Apostle Paul (1661), The Jewish Bride (see pp26–7), as well as The Night Watch (see p123). Look out too for the work of his many pupils, who included, among others, Nicolaes Maes and Ferdinand Bol.

Don't miss Jan Vermeer's (1632–75) serenely light-filled interiors including The Kitchen Maid (see p122) and The Woman Reading a Letter (1662). Of several portraits by Frans Hals (see pp186–7), the best known are The Wedding Portrait and The Merry Drinker (1630). The Windmill at Wijk by Jacob van Ruisdael (1628–82) is a great landscape by an artist at the very height of his power. Other artists whose works contribute to this unforgettable collection include Pieter Saenredam (see p53), Jan van de Capelle, Jan Steen (see p123) and Gerard Terborch.

18TH- AND 19TH-CENTURY PAINTING

In many ways, 18th-century Dutch painting merely continued the themes and quality of 17th-century work. This is particularly true of portraiture and still lifes, with the evocative Still Life with Flowers and Fruit by Jan van Huysum (1682–1749) standing out. A trend developed later for elegant “conversation pieces” by artists such as Adriaan van der Werff (1659–1722) and Cornelis Troost (1696–1750). Most had satirical undertones, like The Art Gallery of Jan Gildemeester Jansz (1794) by Adriaan de Lelie (1755–1820), showing an 18th-century salon whose walls are crowded with 17th-century masterpieces.

The Wedding Portrait (c. 1622) by Frans Hals

For hotels and restaurants in this region see pp392–395 and pp410–414

HAGUE SCHOOL AND THE IMPRESSIONISTS

The so-called Hague School was made up of a group of Dutch artists who came together around 1870 in The Hague. Their landscape work, which earned them the alternative title the “Grey School” for their overcast skies, captures the atmospheric quality of subdued Dutch sunlight. One of the prizes of the Rijksmuseum’s 19th-century collection is Morning Ride on the Beach (1876) by Anton Mauve (1838–88), painted in soft pearly colours. Alongside hangs the beautiful polder landscape View near the Geestbrug by Hendrik Weissenbruch (1824–1903). In contrast, the Dutch Impressionists, closely linked to the French Impressionists, preferred active subjects such as The Bridge over the Singel at Paleisstraat, Amsterdam (1890) by George Hendrik Breitner (1857–1923).

SCULPTURE AND APPLIED ARTS

Beginning with religious medieval sculpture, this section moves on to the splendour of Renaissance furniture and decoration. Highlights that capture the wealth of the Golden Age include the exquisite collections of glassware and Delftware (see pp28–9), and diamond jewellery. A late 17th-century, 12-leaf Chinese screen incorporates European figures on one side, a phoenix on the other; and two dolls’ houses are modelled on contemporary town houses. Some outstanding 18th-century Meissen porcelain and Art Nouveau glass complete the collection.

PRINTS AND DRAWINGS

The Rijksmuseum owns about a million prints and drawings. Although the emphasis is on Dutch works (most of Rembrandt’s etchings as well as rare works by Hercules Seghers (c.1589–1637) are here), there are prints by major European artists, including Dürer, Tiepolo, Goya, Watteau and Toulouse-Lautrec, as well as a set of coloured Japanese woodcuts. Small exhibitions are held on the ground floor of the museum, but particular prints can be viewed with special permission from the Study Collection in the basement.

ASIATIC ART

Rewards of the Dutch imperial trading past are on show in this department, which has a separate entrance at the rear of the museum. Some of the earliest artefacts are the most unusual: tiny bronze Tang dynasty figurines from 7th-century China and gritty, granite rock carvings from Java (c.8th century). Later exhibits include a lovely – and extremely explicit –

Hindu statue entitled Heavenly Beauty, luscious Chinese parchment paintings of tigers, inlaid Korean boxes and Vietnamese dishes painted with curly-tailed fish. This is a veritable hoard of delights and, above all, a monument to the sophistication and skill of craftsmen and artists in early Eastern cultures.

Van Gogh Museum 3

The Van Gogh Museum is based on a design by De Stijl architect Gerrit Rietveld (see pp 204–5) and opened in 1973. A new wing, designed by Kisho Kurokawa, was added in 1999. When Van Gogh died in 1890, he was on the verge of being acclaimed. His younger brother Theo, an art dealer, amassed a collection of 200 of his paintings and 500 drawings. These, combined with around 850 letters by Van Gogh to Theo, and selected works by his friends and contemporaries, form the core of the museum's outstanding collection.

One of Van Gogh's best-known works, this was painted to celebrate his achievement of domestic stability at the Yellow House in Arles. He was so delighted with the colourful painting that he did it twice.

The vivid yellows and greens in this version of Van Gogh's Sunflowers have been enriched by broad streaks of bright mauve and red.

AN ARTIST'S LIFE

Vincent van Gogh (1853–90), born in Zundert, began painting in 1880. He worked in the Netherlands for five years before moving to Paris, later settling in Arles. After a fierce argument with Gauguin, he cut off part of his own ear; his mental instability forced him into a psychiatric hospital in Saint-Rémy. He sought help in Auvers, where he shot himself, dying two days later.

Stedelijk Museum 4

The Stedelijk Museum was built to house a personal collection bequeathed to the city in 1890 by art connoisseur Sophia de Bruyn. In 1938, the museum became the national museum of modern art, displaying works by artists such as Picasso, Matisse, Mondriaan, Cézanne and Monet. The museum is undergoing a thorough renovation and will reopen in 2011 with a larger exhibition space, a spectacular new wing (nicknamed “the bath tub”) and a new café-restaurant.

Portrait of the Artist with Seven Fingers (1912)

Marc Chagall's self-portrait is heavily autobiographical; the seven fingers of the title allude to the seven days of Creation and the artist's Jewish origins. Paris and Rome, the cities Chagall lived in, are inscribed in the Hebrew above his head.

Solidaridad con America Latina (1970)

The Stedelijk's collection of rare posters comprises some 17,000 works, including this graphic image by the Cuban human rights campaigner Asela Perez.

THE MUSEUM BUILDING

The Neo-Renaissance building was designed by AW Weissman (1858–1923) in 1895. The façade is adorned with turrets and gables and with niches containing statues of artists and architects. Inside, it is ultra-modern. The museum is undergoing renovation.

DE STIJL MOVEMENT

The Dutch artistic movement known as De Stijl (The Style) produced startlingly simple designs which have become icons of 20th-century abstract art. These include Gerrit Rietveld's famous Red Blue Chair and Piet Mondriaan's Composition in Red, Black, Blue, Yellow and Grey (1920). The movement was formed in 1917 by a group of artists who espoused clarity in their work, which embraced the mediums of painting, architecture, sculpture, poetry and furniture design. Many De Stijl artists, like Theo van Doesburg, split from the founding group in the 1920s; their legacy can be seen in the work of the Bauhaus and Modernist schools which followed (see pp204–5).

Man and Animals (1949)

Karel Appel (b. 1921) was a member of the short-lived experimental Cobra movement (see p189). The human figure, dog, fish and mythical creature are painted in the naive style of a child.

★ KAZIMIR MALEVICH (1878–1935)

The Russian visual artist Kazimir Malevich can be counted, along with Piet Mondriaan, as one of the founders of abstract art. As well as paintings, Malevich created posters, sculptures, furniture, interior decoration and costumes.

After studying Futurism and Cubism in Moscow, he formulated a new art form called Suprematism, an abstract movement known for its experimentation with colour. Suprematism's central element is the theory of unlimited pre-eminence of free invention in the artistic process. Up until his 20s, Malevich painted abstract geometric forms. The square was his "supreme element". The Stedelijk Museum owns the largest part of the paintings and sketches from Malevich's Suprematist period. One of the most important works, Suprematisme 1920–1927, was defaced by a visitor to the museum in 1997.

In 1999, a conflict arose between the Malevich estate and the Stedelijk Museum over the ownership of the dozens of Suprematist works from the Stedelijk's collection.

AMSTERDAM

OUTSIDE THE CENTRE

Great architecture and good town planning are not confined to central Amsterdam. Parts of the Nieuw Zuid (New South) bear testament to the imagination of the innovative Amsterdam School architects (see pp142–3). Many fine buildings can be found in De Dageraad Housing complex and the streets around the Olympic Quarter. The area known as the Plantation was once green parkland beyond the city wall, where 17th-century Amsterdammers spent their leisure time. From about

Sculpture on the fountain at Frankendael

1848, it became one of Amsterdam's first suburbs. The tree-lined streets around Artis and Hortus Botanicus are still popular places to live. From the Werf 't Kromhout, once a thriving shipyard, there is a fine view of De Gooyer Windmill, one of the few in Amsterdam to survive.

The national maritime collection is kept at Scheepvaart Museum, a former naval storehouse. NEMO, an educational science centre, is nearby. Fine parks are just a short tram ride from the city centre and offer a host of leisure activities.

Once the arsenal of the Dutch Navy, this vast Dutch Classical building was designed by Daniël Stalpaert in 1655. Constructed around a massive courtyard, it was supported by thousands of piles driven into the bed of the Oosterdok. The navy occupied the building until the 20th century, and in 1973 it became the Netherlands Maritime Museum. After a major renovation it reopened in 2011; the courtyard, now covered by a vast glass roof, forms the heart of the new exhibition space.

The redevelopment of the old VOC warehouses at Entrepotdok has revitalized this dockland area. During the mid-19th century, it was the greatest warehouse area in Europe, being a customs-free zone for goods in transit. The quayside buildings are now a lively complex of homes, offices and eating places. Some of the original façades of the warehouses have been preserved, unlike the interiors, which have been opened up to provide an attractive inner courtyard. Café tables are often set out alongside the canal. On the other side, brightly coloured houseboats are moored.

Situated side by side in the eastern docklands of the city are the islands of Java-eiland, which is long and narrow, and the broader KNSM-eiland. Java-eiland, designed by Sjoerd Soeters during the 1990s, demonstrates a wide variety of architectural styles. By combining these styles with a number of canals across the island, the architect succeeded in creating a very credible

Amsterdam canal atmosphere. This is compounded by the many shops and small cafés. KNSM-eiland is slightly broader, giving architect Jo Coenen the space to create a central avenue flanked on either side by tower blocks.

Funenkeade 5. Map 6 F2. 📍 10, 14. 🏠 to the public.

Of the six remaining windmills within the city's boundaries, De Gooyer, also known as the Funenmolen, is the most central. Dominating the view down the Nieuwevaart, the mill, built around 1725, was the first corn mill in the Netherlands to use streamlined sails.

It first stood to the west of its present site, but the Oranje Nassau barracks, built in 1814, acted as a windbreak, and the mill was then moved piece by piece to the Funenkeade. The octagonal wooden structure was rebuilt on the stone foot of an earlier water-pumping mill, demolished in 1812.

By 1925, De Gooyer was in a very poor state of repair and was bought by the city council, which fully restored it. Since then, the lower part of the mill, with its neat thatched roof and tiny windows, has been a private

The Werfmuseum 't Kromhout is one of the oldest working shipyards in Amsterdam and is also a museum. Ships were being built here as early as 1757. In the second half of the 19th century, production changed from sailing ships to steamships. As ocean-going ships got bigger, the yard, due to its relatively small size, turned to building lighter craft for inland waterways. It is now used only for restoration and repair work.

In 1967, the Prince Bernhard Fund bought the site, saving it from demolition.

The Amsterdam Monuments Fund later became involved to safeguard the shipyard's future as a historical site and helped turn it into a museum.

The museum is largely dedicated to the history of marine engineering, concentrating on work carried out at the shipyard, with steam engines, maritime photographs and ephemera. Another point of interest is the shipyard's forge featuring a variety of interesting tools and equipment. Some impressive historical ships are moored at the quay-side. The museum's eastern hall is sometimes used for receptions and dinners.

During the 19th century, the annual visit of the Carré Circus was a popular event. In 1868, Oscar Carré built wooden premises for the circus on the banks of the Amstel river. The city council considered the structure a fire hazard, so Carré persuaded them to accept a permanent building modelled on his other circus in Cologne. Built in 1887, the new structure included both a circus ring and a stage. The Classical façade is richly decorated with sculpted heads of dancers, jesters and clowns.

The Christmas circus is still one of the annual highlights at the theatre, but for much of the year the stage is taken over by concerts and blockbuster musicals.

The Amstelsluisen, a row of sturdy wooden sluice gates spanning the Amstel river, form part of a complex system of sluices and pumping stations that ensure Amsterdam's canals do not stagnate. Four times a week in summer and twice a week in winter, the sluices are closed while fresh water from large lakes north of the city is allowed to flow into Amsterdam's canals. Sluices to the west of the city are left open, allowing the old water to flow, or be pumped, into the sea.

The Amstelsluisen date from 1673, and were operated manually until 1994, when they were mechanized.

Science Center NEMO 9

Science Center NEMO, an educational centre for science and technology, is housed in a striking modern building by the Italian architect Renzo Piano. Designed in the form of a ship, it overhangs the water by 30 m (99 ft); the view from the roof is breathtaking. There are five floors of constantly changing things to do and discover including interactive exhibitions, theatre shows, films, workshops and demonstrations.

The motorway approach to the tunnel under the IJ is beneath the building.

NEMO: THE PHILOSOPHY

The word "nemo" is Latin for "no one" and refers to a world between fantasy and reality. At NEMO visitors can become a scientist or technician for a day. The name has been used by a number of important writers over the centuries to describe events and people who find themselves on the thin line between reality and fantasy. For example, Nemo turns up in the Latin translation of Homer's Odyssey, when the protagonist Ulysses adopts the name to deceive the Cyclops. And Jules Verne, in his 1870 novel 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea, enlists Nemo as the mystical captain of the underwater Nautilus, which journeys in the shadowy world between reality and fantasy. He crops up again in 1905, when American cartoonist Winsor McCay creates Little Nemo, a young boy whose dreamland adventures once again suggest a mingling of fact and fiction.

Artis Royal Zoo 10

Elephant in Artis

Amsterdam's royal zoo is in Plantage, an elegant Amsterdam neighbourhood of broad tree-lined streets with elegant painted sandstone houses. Some 750 different animal species live in Artis Zoo. Visitors can see the historic nature of the zoo as soon as they pass through the entrance gates, which have been decorated since 1854 with two "golden" eagles. The Artis complex includes a planetarium, where you can learn about the heavens and stars, and the fine Neo-Classical aquarium, containing a wide variety of marine life, from tropical fish and sharks to huge moray eels.

★ Planetarium

The planetarium explores the relationship between humans and the stars. The night sky is recreated on the dome, and interactive exhibitions show the positions of the planets. Model spacecraft are on display in the hall around the auditorium. The interesting slide show is specially designed for youngsters.

Macaws

These birds are a highly endangered species which Artis helps preserve. The zoo is renowned for its breeding programmes.

During the early part of the 18th century, many of Amsterdam's wealthier citizens built country retreats south of Plantage Middenlaan on reclaimed land called the Watergraafsmeer. The elegant Louis XIV-style Frankendael is the last survivor. The house is closed to the public; the best views of the ornamented façade are from Middenweg. This is also the best place to view the fountain made in 1714 by Ignatius van Logteren (1685–1732), a sculptor who, along with his son, played a central role in the development of Amsterdam's Louis XIV style.

The rear gardens have been restored and are open to the public. Behind the house is a small formal garden, and beyond lies a landscaped, English-style garden. There are also allotment gardens. The coach house is now home to café-restaurant Merkelbach.

One of the best examples of Amsterdam School architecture (see pp142–3), De Dageraad (the Dawn) housing project was developed for poorer families following the Housing Act of 1901, by which the city council condemned slums and rethought housing policy. Architect HP Berlage drew up plans for the suburbs, aiming to integrate rich and poor by juxtaposing their housing. After Berlage's death, Piet Kramer and Michel de Klerk adopted his ideas. From 1918–23, they designed this complex for the De Dageraad housing association.

Previously based in a former synagogue in Nieuw Zuid (New South), now at a site in the Plantage, the Resistance Museum holds a fascinating collection of memorabilia recording the activities of Dutch Resistance workers in World War II. It was set up by former members of the Resistance and focuses on the courage of the 25,000 people actively involved in the movement. False documents, weaponry, film clips, photographs and equipment are on display.

By 1945 there were 300,000 people in hiding in the Netherlands, including Jews and anti-Nazi Dutch. Subsequent events organized by the Resistance, like the February Strike against the deportation of the Jews, are brought to life by exhibits showing where the refugees hid and how food for them was smuggled in.

Amsterdam RAI is one of the largest exhibition and conference centres in the country. It hosts over 1,000 events annually, from cabaret to horse shows and trade fairs. The present complex opened in 1961. It has since undergone several extensions.

The Albert Cuypmarkt began trading in 1904. Described by the stallholders as “the best-known market in Europe”, it attracts some 20,000 visitors on weekdays and often twice as many on Saturdays. Goods on sale at the 325 stalls range from fish, poultry, cheese, fruit and vegetables to clothes; prices are among the cheapest in the city.

The Amsterdam School

The industrial revolution at the end of the 19th century led to a boom in the growth of towns. New districts grew around Amsterdam to accommodate the growing number of factory workers. The architects of these districts, who sought new elements for decorating building façades, became known collectively as the Amsterdam School. Their designs were characterized by exotic rooflines, ornamental brickwork, cornices, window frames and corner formations which gave the façades “movement”.

The Scheepvaarthus was erected on the spot where in 1595 Cornelis Houtman set off on his first voyage to the East Indies.

HP BERLAGE (1856–1934)

Berlage studied at the technical college of Zurich from 1875 to 1878, where he came into contact with architects such as Semper and Viollet-le-Duc. Inspired by their ideas, he developed his own style, which incorporated traditional Dutch materials. It later evolved into the Amsterdam School style of architecture. Berlage designed not only buildings but also interiors, furniture and graphics. In 1896, he was appointed to design the Beurs, the new stock exchange in Amsterdam (see p91).

Completed in 1903, it is an austere building whose structure is clearly visible. Berlage was also active as a town planner. His design of Amsterdam-Zuid (“Plan Zuid”) consists of monumental residential blocks. At its centre stands JF Staal’s Wolkenkrabber (skyscraper).

THE ARCHITECTURE OF THE AMSTERDAM SCHOOL

From 1911 to 1923, the members of the Amsterdam School built a large number of office and residential complexes. One of the greatest examples of this is the Scheepvaarthuis (1913–16 and 1926–8), which is today the head office of the Gemeente Vervoerbedrijf (municipal traffic directorate). It is the first building to be completed entirely in the Amsterdam School style. It was designed by the Van Gendt brothers and JM van der Meij. Michel de Klerk, who later designed Het Schip, was also involved in the project.

Michel de Klerk

Street furniture was among the repertoire of the Amsterdam School architects. In the Spaarndammerbuurt in particular, many examples can still be seen, including fire alarms, cable boxes and post boxes.

SHOPPING IN AMSTERDAM

Amsterdam has a huge range of shops and markets. Most of the large clothing and department stores are to be found in the Nieuwe Zijde, especially along Kalverstraat, but there are many other shopping areas to discover. The narrow streets crossing the Canal Ring, such as Herenstraat and Hartenstraat, contain a diverse array of specialist shops selling everything from ethnic fabrics and beads to unusual games and handmade dolls. The best luxury fashion is to be found on PC Hoofdstraat and Van Baerlestraat. However, if you are looking for a bargain, take time to explore the street markets and numerous second-hand shops.

The northern end of the Waterlooplein, home to the famous flea market

OPENING HOURS

Shops are usually open from 9am to 6pm Tuesday to Saturday, from 1pm to 6pm Mondays. Many are open Sundays. In the city centre, shops stay open until 9pm on Thursdays.

HOW TO PAY

Cash is the most popular method of payment. If you intend to use a credit card, ask first if it is accepted. Cards are becoming more widely accepted, but department stores may require purchases to be paid for at a special till, and smaller shops may accept them only for non-sale items and goods costing more than 45 euros. Most shops accept travellers' cheques. Some tourist shops take foreign currency but usually offer a poor rate of exchange.

VAT EXEMPTION

Most Dutch goods are subject to value added tax (BTW) of 19 per cent for clothes and other goods, and 6 per cent for books. Non-EU residents may be entitled to a refund. Shops that stock the relevant customs forms post a "Tax free for tourists" sign.

SALES

Sales occur mainly in January and July but smaller shops and boutiques may offer discounts at any time. Uitverkoop describes anything from a closing-down sale to a clearance sale; korting merely indicates that discounts are offered. Towards the end of a sale, further discounts are often calculated at the till. Beware of clothes rails marked, for example, VA 40 or Vanaf 40, as this sign means "From 40", not exactly 40 euros.

DEPARTMENT STORES AND MALLS

Amsterdam's best-known department store is De Bijenkorf. It has a huge perfumery and stocks a wide range of clothing. Maison de Bonneterie is more exclusive. Among the less expensive stores, Hema is popular for household goods, children's clothes and underwear. Also popular for basic items is Vroom & Dreesmann. The only shopping malls in central Amsterdam are the Kalvertoren (Kalverstraat, near Singel) and Magna Plaza (see p90), containing up-market boutiques and shops.

A shop selling kitchen gadgets

MARKETS

Amsterdammers' love of street trading is best illustrated on Koninginnedag (see p32), when the city centre becomes the world's biggest flea market as locals sell off their unwanted junk.

Each district in Amsterdam has its own market. The best-known is the Albert Cuypmarkt (see p141). There are also many specialist markets. Visitors and residents alike are drawn to the array of seasonal flowers at the Bloemenmarkt. Another market popular with tourists is Waterlooplein flea market (see p79), where bargains can be found among the bric-à-brac; new and second-hand clothes are also for sale.

Browsers will be fascinated by the dozens of stalls at the Looier Kunst en Antiekcentrum (see p113), selling anything from antique dolls to egg cups. On Wednesdays and Saturdays on Nieuwezijds Voorburgwal there is a stamp and coin market. Gourmets should head for the Noordermarkt (see p111), for the Saturday organic food market. The best prices, however, are to be found about 25 km (16 miles) northwest of Amsterdam at the weekend Beverwijkse Bazaar, one of Europe's largest indoor flea markets. Next door you will find Oriental merchandise.

SPECIALIST SHOPS

Specialist shops are dotted throughout the city. The unusual Condomerie Het Gulden Vlies, located in a former squat, sells condoms from all over the world. Christmas Palace sells festive adornments year round, and Party House has a vast collection of paper decorations. Capsicum Natuurstoffen has a huge selection of silks and linens, while Copenhagen 1001 Kralen offers over 1,000 types of beads. It is also worth exploring Joe's Vliegerwinkel for kites, Simon Levelt for tea and coffee and Jacob Hooy & Co. for herbs.

BOOKS AND NEWSPAPERS

English-language books are easily available, particularly at The American Book Center, Waterstone's and The English Bookshop. They can also be picked up cheaply at second-hand shops, such as De Slegte. Comics collectors should not miss Lambiek. Het Financieel Dagblad has a daily business update in English and a weekly English-language edition, and there is the monthly Time Out listings magazine.

ENTERTAINMENT IN AMSTERDAM

Amsterdam offers a diverse array of world-class entertainment. A wide variety of performances are staged in hundreds of venues throughout the city, ranging from the century-old Concertgebouw (see p120) to the sleek modern Muziekgebouw on the IJ river. There is a huge choice of plays and films throughout the year, and plenty of free performances are given by a multitude of street performers and live bands in late-night bars and cafés. The city's hottest annual events include the Holland Festival and the Uitmarkt (see pp33–4). Clubgoers are in their element in the canal city, which offers club-nights to meet most tastes in music and skilled DJs, such as Tiësto, who are renowned around the globe.

INFORMATION

Amsterdam's various tourist offices are a good starting point for what's going on in the city. They can usually provide copies of free listings magazines, including the AUB/Uitburo and the monthly Uitkrant, the definitive source of entertainment information. The monthly Time Out Amsterdam is an English-language magazine with entertainment listings, and the Amsterdam daily newspaper Het Parool publishes a supplement on Saturday with a cultural calendar and performance reviews.

The AUB/Uitburo has a last-minute window (open noon–7:30pm daily) selling tickets for same-day shows.

CLASSICAL MUSIC, OPERA AND DANCE

Amsterdam is the country's touchstone for classical music and opera, and the principal venues host some of the world's finest events. The open-air theatre in the Vondelpark (see pp120–21) stages free concerts, and in summer, the Grachtenfestival features mainly classical music on floating canal stages.

The city's musical centrepiece is the Concertgebouw (see p120), renowned for its acoustics and home to the celebrated Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra. International orchestras and soloists perform here regularly, and it hosts the Robeco Summer Concerts, a showcase of young talent. The Beurs van Berlage (see p91), originally the city's stock exchange, is now a concert venue.

The Netherlands Opera stages performances in the 1,600-seat Muziektheater (see p79), whose classical and modern repertoire is without parallel. The iconic Muziekgebouw is the place to go for anything from chamber music to the avant-garde.

The Netherlands is home to two world-class ballet companies. The Dutch National Ballet, based in the Muziektheater, puts on classical ballet but also daring works by contemporary Dutch choreographers, while the Nederlands Dans Theater (NDT) specializes in works by its Czech artistic director, Jiří Kylián. Modern companies to look out for include Introdans, which combines jazz with flamenco and other ethnic dance, Dansgroep Amsterdam, which offers a platform for young choreographers and designers, and De Meervaart for experimental dance.

JAZZ, POP AND WORLD MUSIC

The Dutch are avid jazz fans, and big names such as Wayne Shorter, Branford Marsalis and Nicholas Payton show up regularly on local stages.

The foremost jazz club is the Bimhuis, housed in a purpose-built hall of the Muziekgebouw. The Concertgebouw also hosts regular jazz concerts. Keep an eye out for local talent such as saxophonists

Bourbon Street, one of the city's jazz cafés

Disco in the Heineken Music Hall

Hans and Candy Dulfer. Good jazz cafés can be found along Zeedijk and around Leidseplein, namely Jazzcafé Alto and Bourbon Street.

For most Amsterdammers, rock and pop are synonymous with two venues. Paradiso, which has hosted the Rolling Stones, is housed in a converted church just off Leidseplein, while Melkweg occupies a former dairy nearby. Both offer a varied and entertaining diet of rock, pop, dance, rap and world music.

Mega-concerts are booked into the 50,000-seat Amsterdam Arena, and headline acts sometimes play at the more intimate Heineken Music Hall.

As a multi-cultural society, the Netherlands is a natural breeding ground for world music. Traditions from West Africa and the West Indies, Indonesia, Surinam and Turkey come together in this fascinating melting pot. Akhnaton is a cultural centre with a potent cocktail of Caribbean, African and Arabic music. De Badcuyp, in the lively Pijp district, plays with salsa, tango, African music and other dance options. In bars like Café Nol and De Twee Zwaantjes you can hear traditional Dutch folk music.

THEATRE AND CABARET

The heart of the country's lively theatre scene is in Amsterdam. The premier venue is the Stadsschouwburg (see p112), home to the Amsterdam Theatre Group and led by the imaginative director Ivo van Hove. The annual highlight for opera, theatre and dance is the Holland Festival, held from late May to June. It overlaps with the International Theatre School Festival, whose experimental drama pops up at De Brakke Grond and Frascati.

The chief musical theatre is the Koninklijk Theater Carré (see p135). It stages box-office hits such as Les Misérables and Miss Saigon. De Kleine Komedie, a magnificent 17th-century building on the Amstel river, is a favourite venue for cabaret groups. Stand-up comedy has gained in popularity, led by the hilarious English-language routines of Boom Chicago.

Experimental theatre can be found at a range of venues including Westergasfabriek, a converted former gas works in a lovely park setting. The company De Dogtroep stages offbeat street theatre, while Theatergroep Hollandia has won great acclaim with its performances in large halls and aircraft hangars. The musical dramas of Orkater appear mainly at the Stadsschouwburg and the Bellevue Theater. Summer outdoor theatre can be seen in the Vondelpark (see pp120-1) and the Amsterdamse Bos (see p189), a sprawling woodland park on the edge of town.

CINEMA

Film fanatics are well looked after, with more than 40 cinemas in town. Foreign-language films are shown in the original language with subtitles. The leading Dutch filmmaker is Amsterdam-born Paul Verhoeven (of Basic Instinct fame). He returned to his homeland to shoot Black Book, the highest-grossing Dutch film ever.

Cinema programmes change every Thursday, so check [www.film ladder.nl](http://www.film ladder.nl) or the Wednesday newspapers for listings. De Filmkrant is a free monthly film magazine with complete listings. The most stunning cinema in town is the Tuschinski, an Art Deco masterpiece with a luxurious foyer and stained-glass windows (see p115). Some cinemas such as the mainstream Pathé de Munt, City Theater and the arthouse Kriterion show children's films at weekends. The Uitkijk is a cosy, 158-seat venue dating from 1913 that shows mainly classics.

Musicians providing entertainment in the Vondelpark

CLUBS AND DISCOS

Amsterdam's nightclubs are famous for their variety and high energy. The scene throbs hardest in and around Leidseplein, Rembrandtplein and Reguliersdwarsstraat. Most clubs open at 11pm and are at their busiest from around 1am; closing time is 4am during the week and 5am on Friday and Saturday.

Jimmy Woo is famous for its tough door policy. Inside, it's Hong-Kong hip, with lots of black leather and a great sound system. Escape draws a young, trendy crowd to its huge split-level complex on Rembrandtplein, and another large, popular venue is Club Roses. On the opposite side of the square, Rain spins Latin and World beats.

The leading non-house club in town is Sugar Factory, with its diverse menu of soul, funk and jazz-dance. The other discos around Leidseplein are basically extended bars with small dance floors, catering to tourists. At Odeon near Spui Square, you can party your way up from the basement brasserie to the dance palace on the third floor. Amsterdam's students have established their own club, Dansen Bij Jansen. The two sweaty dance floors are always packed at weekends, and you'll need a student card to get in. The college crowd also gravitates to the dancehall of Hotel Arena, located in a former orphanage.

The bright lights of Amsterdam Arena, a premier sporting venue

Clubbing is also at the heart of Amsterdam's gay scene. Crowds are often mixed and most gay clubs will rarely turn away women or straight men. Exit is a slick bar with three levels and a balcony for viewing the dance scene below. Practically next door, ARC is a combination of bar and grand café, good for drinks during the day or for hooking up with the dance crowd later, and the nearby café Reality plays disco. A mixed lesbian/gay disco is Club Roque, while Saarein II is a friendly, relaxed bar tucked away in a small street in the Jordaan. Details of other venues are available from the Pink Point kiosk next to the Westerkerk (www.pinkpoint.org).

SPECTATOR SPORTS

The Dutch are a sport-mad nation, and nothing makes their pulses race faster than

Two footballers clashing at an Ajax game football. Three teams enjoy international standing: Ajax Amsterdam, Feyenoord Rotterdam and PSV Eindhoven (see p362). They sometimes face off at the spectacular Amsterdam Arena.

For something completely different, try watching a game of korfbal, which was invented by Amsterdam teacher Nico Boekhuysen over 100 years ago. It mixes elements of basketball, netball and volleyball, and is the only unisex sport played professionally. Each team has four men and four women. Top-level matches are played on the indoor courts of the Olympic Stadium, built for the Games held in 1928.

STREET FINDER

The page grid superimposed on the Area by Area map below shows which parts of Amsterdam are covered in this Street Finder. Map references given for all sights, hotels, restaurants, shopping and entertainment venues described in this guide refer to the maps in this section (the road map is to be found on the book's inside back cover). An index of street names and places of interest marked on the maps is on pages 158–9. The key below indicates the maps' scale and other features marked on them, including transport terminals, emergency services and information centres. All major sights are clearly marked.

Exploring Western Netherlands

The landscape of the Western Netherlands is strongly influenced by the old ports and commercial towns, which claim a prosperous past. During the 20th century, the most important ones have grown together to form the Randstad (see pp166–7). But you can still find plenty of quiet outside the cities – in Europe's biggest coastal dune area, boasting its distinct flora and fauna; along the Vecht, with its pretty country houses; and along rivers such as the Vlist and the Linge. Main watersports areas are Zeeland, on the IJsselmeer and the lakes in the peat region.

The gothic Sint Bavo Church in Haarlem (see p184), known colloquially as the Grote Kerk, was built between 1400 and 1550. This gigantic building dominates the Grote Markt. Sint Bavo has one of the finest organs in Europe, built by Christiaan Müller.

The Mauritshuis at The Hague (see pp222–3) was built by Pieter Post in 1644 as instructed by Joban Maurits van Nassau, in the style of North Netherlands Neo-Classicism. Since 1821 it has been the home of the royal painting collection. This compact collection includes a number of first-rate works by old masters, including Rembrandt, Jan Steen and Johannes Vermeer.

The Hague

Construction of the Oosterschelde Stormvloedkering (storm surge barrier) (see pp246–7) was prompted by the disastrous floods of 1953. To combat the water ubile preserving the unique mud-flat bed of the Oosterschelde, a half-open multiple buttress dam with 62 sliding gates was built.

Middelburg

(pp242–55)

The Zuiderzeemuseum in Enkhuizen (see pp176–7) is dedicated to the history of the fishing ports of the Zuiderzee. Access to the North Sea was closed off in 1932 by the Afsluiddijk (barrier dam). Enkhuizen is enjoying renewed prosperity with the opening of the museum and the conversion of the fishing port to a marina.

Gouda (see p238) is one of the many commercial towns in the Western Netherlands that also has its prime position on the waterways to thank for its period of prosperity. The spirit of liberalism prevalent in Gouda during the 16th and 17th centuries protected the magnificent St Janskerk from the Iconoclasm, meaning that the Gouda stained glass is still here to be enjoyed today.

The Rietveld Schröderhuis in Utrecht (see pp204–5) is a famous example of “nieuwe bouwen” (new building). It was Rietveld’s first complete architectural work and reveals his background as a furniture maker. At the time it was considered to be radically modern. Visitors nowadays are struck by the modesty and human proportions of the house.

Reclaimed Land

The Netherlands is continually increasing in size. Various methods of reclaiming land have been employed as far back as the 11th century. One fairly simple method was to build a dyke around a marshy area. Later, deep lakes were drained with the help of windmills. The far-reaching IJsselmeer polders – fertile farmlands – were created after the Zuiderzee was closed off using ingenious reclamation methods. Even now, huge efforts are being made to extend areas of reclaimed land – hence the new Amsterdam residential area of IJburg, which has sprung up from the IJmeer.

To create a polder, a ditch was first dredged. The dredgings were used to build up the dyke.

GRADUAL DRAINAGE

To overcome the height difference between the polder and the ring canal, which is sometimes large, the water is continually raised metre by metre by three windmills placed in a row, known as a driegang or row of three.

Because a polder lies some metres below sea level, the ground water level is always very high and has to be continually drained.

LAND RECLAMATION

About 3,000 years ago, houses were built on mounds so that they would not be flooded when the water rose. As far back as the 4th to 8th centuries, dykes were built around the houses and land. Land reclamation was carried out on a large scale from the 11th century, when the population increased sharply. In the 17th and 18th centuries, deeper lakes were drained with the help of rows of windmills. The steam engine meant a new phase of land reclamation: it was now finally possible to control the Haarlemmermeer. It is thought that, in Leeghwater's time (see p165), at least 160 windmills were necessary for this. In 1891, the engineer C Lely put forward a plan to close off the treacherous Zuiderzee. This only actually happened in 1932, when the Afsluitdijk (barrier dam) was completed. Construction of the IJsselmeer polders then got underway.

Many dyke houses are facing a threat to their continued existence because of the raising of the river dykes.

The old port of Schokland (see p326) now lies firmly on the mainland

An artificial island in the North Sea is being considered for the site of a new airport, as Schiphol airport proves to be both inconvenient and with limited opportunities for expansion. Technical and financial problems, however, are delaying construction plans.

This view is of the oldest polder in North Holland (anonymous, c. 1600). The West Friesland Omringdijk, which runs around Het Grootslag, is 126 km (78 miles) long and was completed as far back as 1250. North Holland ceased to exist to the north of the dyke.

In the 16th century, Jan Adriaansz. Leegwater invented a system that used windmills to drain a lake after a ring canal had been constructed around it. This meant that it became relatively easy to pump dry deeper and larger lakes, giving rise to the first pieces of reclaimed land.

CONQUERING THE SEA

God created the earth – except Holland, for the Dutch did that. This statement by the French poet Voltaire comes close to the truth. This is because since the 14th century, the surface area of the Netherlands has increased by approximately 10 per cent, thanks to land reclamation. Land continues to be extended today, with the construction, for example, of IJburg, a new area of Amsterdam, which was built on an island in the IJmeer.

1860 Land could be drained only by using windmills. Limited areas were reclaimed.

1900 Thanks to the steam engine, increasingly lower-lying polders, such as the Zuidplaspolder, at -6.74 m (-22 ft), could be drained.

2000 The new Amsterdam district of IJburg is built in the IJmeer using the most modern methods available.

The Randstad

It appears that the term Randstad (literally, “rim city”) was introduced by Albert Plesman, managing director of Dutch airline KLM, which was established in 1919. Apparently he pointed out to the passengers on one of his airplanes the horseshoe-shaped band of towns formed by Utrecht, Amsterdam, Haarlem, Leiden, The Hague, Rotterdam and Dordrecht. The relatively undeveloped area in the middle was quickly named the Groene Hart (“green heart”).

By 2015, 500,000 new houses are to be built in the Randstad.

GROENE HART

The Groene Hart is a man-made landscape formed from an association with water that has lasted for centuries. It is characterized by elongated pieces of reclaimed land, peat lakes and river landscape with marshes and pools. The most important agrarian activity is dairy-cattle breeding; the cheese produced here is world-famous. Environmental organizations are dedicated to developing and protecting natural resources and historical landscapes. In de Venen, which surrounds the Nieuwkoopse and Vinkeveense lakes, a project is underway to combine extensive arable farming, natural development of the environment, and recreation facilities. It is hoped that this type of project will provide a balance to urbanization.

Hiking and cycling paths have been erected throughout the Groene Hart. They pass dairy farms, windmills and old villages. Visit the local VVV (tourist board) for more information on recreational paths.

Congestion is a major problem.

During rush hour periods, the Randstad is clogged by traffic jams. The government is trying to reduce congestion on the roads by improving public transport and introducing other measures, such as road pricing. Up until now, this has not met with much success. The number of cars in the Randstad is constantly increasing. Transferiums, or park-and-rides, are meant to free up the town centres, which often still have old infrastructure and are not geared to a lot of traffic.

Car-pooling is another way of reducing the number of cars. Over 750,000 people have car-pooled in the last few years.

IJburg is a new district, built on the IJmeer to the east of Amsterdam. Another plan for municipal expansion into the water is Nieuw Holland, a long, narrow piece of land in front of the coast between Scheveningen and Hoek van Holland.

Schiphol was, in the last decade, the fastest-growing airport in Europe. It benefits from a central location – close to many of Holland's major cities – and good rail and road connections. Expansion of the airport was halted by the objections of residents and environmental groups, but after considering other locations, such as an artificial island in the North Sea, Schiphol will indeed expand into adjacent areas.

GROWTH OF THE RANDSTAD

As far back as the end of the 15th century, the Western Netherlands was one of the most urbanized regions of Europe. It was only during the 20th century that the borders between the towns became blurred and what is now known as the Randstad emerged. At present 6.5 million people live here.

Randstad around 1900

Randstad around 1950

Randstad around 2000

In contrast, the Groene Hart has only 600,000 inhabitants. Earnings in the Randstad account for half of the gross national product. The main product is provision of services, with Amsterdam as the financial centre, The Hague as the administrative centre, Hilversum as the focus of the audio-visual media and Rotterdam-Rijnmond and Schiphol as an important port and airport respectively.

Dunes

The Dutch coast is famous for its dunes. These natural sea walls, with a vegetation of their own, were used in earlier times as common ground for cattle grazing (the oerol, see p274) in the absence of sufficient grassland. They now play an important role in the purification of water. The dunes are also a particularly popular recreational area – many of the protected dune areas are open to ramblers and cyclists.

A catamaran on the beach

The sea supplies the sand from which the dunes are built.

On the beach, the dry, white sand drifts and piles up.

A sea inlet is formed when the sea breaks through the row of dunes.

NATURE RESERVES

The dunes are being used less and less as areas for water collection, meaning that the groundwater level is rising again and the damp dunes can once again be established. Protected against such environmentally damaging influences as industry and land development, they are becoming important nature reserves where there is a great deal for hikers and cyclists to enjoy. Vegetation includes gorse, spindle trees, creeping willow and hawthorn. Resident and migratory birds, such as curlews, tawny pipits and sometimes ospreys, inhabit the dunes. During World War II, anti-tank trenches with steep banks were built in the Midden-Heeren dunes (in Nationaal Park Zuid-Kennemerland). Today, even the rare kingfisher feels at home there.

Marram grass is a sturdy plant whose root system holds new dunes together. It plays an important role in the formation and protection of Holland's dunes.

Water collection is done by way of the dunes, which retain the fresh water that falls inside them in the form of precipitation. Drinking water has been collected since the 19th century from the dunes of North and South Holland (such as at Meyendel, near Wassenaar; pictured above), helping to eliminate diseases like cholera from densely populated cities.

The Dutch coast seriously damaged by storms

The first row of dunes, golden in colour because of the overgrowth, has higher summits.

The dune valleys have their own particular vegetation.

The sea inlet surface is home to many types of bird.

The dune overgrowth becomes richer as it moves inland, as limestone is replaced by humus.

Rabbits may look cute, but they have been known to seriously undermine the dunes with their intricate network of burrows.

ORIGINS

Dunes are created by a process which can be seen time and time again during a stormy day on the country's long, flat beaches. The sand carried by the sea dries on the surface of the beach and is then dragged by the wind like a white shroud over the beach. Held back by any obstacles in its way, the sand starts to accumulate. If the obstacle is a plant, a dune begins to form. Plants involved in forming dunes are called pioneer plants. They must be able to tolerate being buried by the sand and also be able to grow back through the sand. Sand couch grass (Elymus farctus) is renowned for being one such plant. After the initial dune formation, marram grass often begins to stabilize the new dune with its enormous root system. Dunes along the coast of the Netherlands can become as high as 10 m (33 ft). The dunes here – new dunes – were formed after 1200. When the sea breaks through dunes which have collapsed or have been cut through, it creates a sea inlet, or channel, around which an entire vegetation system develops, attracting all types of birds.

Sea holly and bee

Common sea buckthorn

Bulb fields are evidence that the bulbs thrive in the sandy dune soil. The blooms' vivid colours are a pretty contrast to the yellowish-grey colour of the dunes.

The beachcomber gazes out to sea near the North Holland Camperduin, at the start of the Hondsbossche sea wall. The wall was constructed in the 19th century when the sea broke through the dunes. The lessons learned from this were used when building North Holland's Noorderkwartier (north district).

NORTH HOLLAND

Although North Holland's landscape is mainly flat, it is by no means featureless. Low-lying polders, with windmills and grazing cows, give way to market gardens and colourful bulb fields. Around Amsterdam the land is more built-up, with lively towns and picturesque villages almost cheek by jowl.

North Holland has always been one of the most important areas of the Netherlands economically, due to its industry, fishing and commerce. The Zuiderzee ports played a major part in the voyages of the Dutch East India Company (see p48) and their merchants became wealthy from the trade in exotic imports. They built splendid houses and filled them with expensive furniture and fine art, much of which has found its way into the province's leading museums.

This part of the country has learned to live with and profit from water. The province has it on three sides, with the unpredictable North Sea to the west and the vast IJsselmeer (formerly the Zuiderzee) to the east. The flat land in between is bisected by two major canals; one connects Zaandam to Den Helder in the north, while the other, the important North Sea Canal, gives Amsterdam's busy port access to the North Sea at IJmuiden. Land reclamation, in which the Dutch excel, has been going on since the 14th century, and many historical island communities are now surrounded by dry land.

Tourism is a major industry in North Holland, with Schiphol, the country's major airport, at its heart. The North Sea coast has a string of delightful resorts and sea-front hotels among the dunes, while in the communities on the IJsselmeer such as Edam, famous for its cheese, and picturesque Volendam, you can still find villagers wearing traditional costume and the famous Dutch wooden clogs.

Enkhuizen, a fine historical fishing town on the IJsselmeer

Exploring North Holland

The landscape of North Holland is varied and contains many old buildings and fine museums. The province can be easily explored on day trips from Amsterdam but areas such as West Friesland and Het Gooi, a woodland east of Amsterdam, are worth a longer visit. You can also alternate sightseeing with more relaxing activities such as walking in the beautiful nature reserve de Kennemerduinen (Kennemer dunes) near Zandvoort, sailing on the IJsselmeer or sunbathing on one of the many beaches. Round trips through towns or on rivers are also good ways of exploring the province.

The working windmills on the Zaanse Schans

GETTING AROUND

During rush hour, roads around the large towns in the southern part of the province are fairly congested. Parking is also difficult to find in most of the larger towns and as bus and train connections in the area are good, it's often better to leave the car behind. The northern part of North Holland is also easily reached by public transport or by car on the A7 and A9 motorways. The natural landscape of North Holland lends itself to countless footpaths and cycle routes, each with different characteristics. Bicycles can be hired from most of the region's train stations.

For almost eight centuries, Marken was a fishing community that saw little change. The construction of a causeway link to the mainland in 1957 put an end to its isolation. The island, however, has kept its original atmosphere, retaining its wooden houses built on mounds and piles to guard against flooding. Het Paard Lighthouse is a famous landmark. Marker Museum, located in six historic houses, gives a flavour of past and present life in Marken. There is also a cheese factory and clog-making workshop.

This old fishing village on the IJsselmeer is world-famous, attracting a huge number of tourists. The village is built along a dyke; at its small harbour, you can still buy all sorts of fish. Traditional costume is one of this town's biggest attractions: the women wear tight bodices, lace caps and brightly striped skirts; the men, loose trousers and jackets. You too can dress up and have your photo taken. On the other side of the dyke is a different Volendam: an ancient, atmospheric maze of narrow streets, wooden houses and little canals.

Edam is known worldwide for the rounds of cheeses covered with red wax it exports. (Yellow wax is used if for local consumption.) Visit the kaasmarkt (cheese market) on Wednesday mornings in July and August to see how they are sold. Founded in the 12th century, the town has many historical buildings, including the brightly painted Waag (weigh house). The 17th-century stained-glass windows in the Grote Kerk are considered some of the finest in Holland.

The Edams Museum is located in a 16th-century merchant's house. Here you can see 17th-century portraits of famous Edammers, such as Trijntje Kever, who was supposedly 2.8 m (9 ft) tall.

The old whaling village of Jisp, on one of the many former Zuiderzee islands, has a 17th-century feel. The stadhuis (town hall) and dorpskerk (village church) are worth a visit. The village lies in the middle of the Jisperveld, a nature reserve which is home to many different birds, such as lapwings, black-tailed godwits, redshanks, ruffs and spoonbills. This is a lovely spot to cycle, row, fish or, in the summer, visit on an excursion. The tourist office, VVV, has information about the various excursions offered.

The Zaanse Schans is the tourist heart of the Zaan region. This open-air museum, created in 1960, has typical Zaan houses, windmills and buildings. When it's windy, you will be able to see the windmills working. The products (oil, paint, mustard) are for sale. All the houses are built from timber, as stone houses would sink at once into the soft peat earth. Also, at the time they were built, wood was readily available from local sawmills.

A visit to Zaanse Schans will also reveal Albert Heijn's first shop from 1887, a baking museum and cheese factory. The Zaans Museum showcases the history of the region. Pleasure boats offer trips on the Zaan.

In 1697, the Russian Peter the Great visited the shipyards of Zaandam in order to learn how the local people built ships. He lodged with Gerrit Kist, a tradesman whom he had employed in St Petersburg. The tsar paid another visit to the town in 1717. The first mention of "Tsar Peter's house" in an official document was in 1780. This led to the tiny wooden house being supplied with a stone casing and foundations for protection. Every year, this humble house attracts a great number of tourists. (Krimp 23, Zaandam, tel. 075-6810000. Open 1-5pm Tue-Sun; closed 1 Jan, 25 Dec.)

Zuiderzeemuseum 8

Enkhuizen was one of the towns whose economy was based on fishing and which was devastated when its access to the North Sea was blocked in 1932 by the construction of a barrier dam, the Afsluitdijk (see p164). Enkhuizen is today enjoying renewed prosperity with the opening of the Zuiderzeemuseum complex and the restructuring of the fishing port into a marina. The museum consists of an open-air section in the form of a museum-park, and an indoor area with a large number of exhibition spaces for permanent displays and temporary presentations.

Broek in Waterland's status in the 17th century – as a retreat for sea captains of the East India Company – can still be seen everywhere in the village's crooked streets. The ornate clapboard villas are colour-coded: the captains lived in the pastel-tinted houses and non-seafarers in the ones painted grey. Along the Havenrak, the road winding along the lake, fine examples of kralentuinen, mosaics made from blue glass beads brought back by merchants from the East Indies, can be seen in several of the gardens. To explore the village and surroundings from a different perspective, canoes and motorboats can be rented from Kano & Electroboot Waterland (Drs. J. van Disweg 4, 020-4033209).

Windmills

Dutch miller

Since the 13th century, windmills have been an inseparable part of the landscape of Holland. They have been used for a variety of purposes, including milling corn, extracting oil and sawing wood. One of their most important uses was to pump away excess water from the polders (see pp164–5). Windmills consist of a fixed tower and a cap which carries the sails. The cap can be turned so that the sails face the wind. The sails can be very dangerous when they are turning – hence the Dutch saying, “Een klap van de molenwiek hebben” (“To be struck by a windmill”), that is, to have a screw loose. The Netherlands had thousands of windmills in earlier times, but since the arrival of modern machines, their number has dropped to just over 1,000. Many of these windmills are still working and are open for visits. See also pp24–5.

Watermill in the Schermer polder

Modern wind turbines are common in Holland. They supply electricity without the pollution caused by burning oil or coal.

Polder mills for draining became common during the 17th century. Standing in groups, they were each responsible for part of the pumping, through the use of an Archimedes' screw.

Drive shaft

Archimedes' screw

Lattice and canvas sail

Upper reservoir

The cogs are turned by the sails. A rotating spindle makes a cog move, causing the water pump to start working.

FLOUR MILLS

Flour mills were covered with reeds and looked like enormous pepper mills. The millstones were linked to the sails by the spindle and gear-wheels and milled wheat, barley and oats.

Rolled-up canvas

The upper section could be turned on its axis in the wind.

Main spindle

Grain was ground by two millstones.

The sails were covered with canvas to catch more wind.

West Friesland 14

During Holland's golden age, West Friesland played a major part in the Dutch economy as an important centre for trade and shipping. Nowadays the main inland activity is farming. Watersports bring in the most money on the IJsselmeer coast. If you take the route in spring, you will travel alongside blooming bulb fields and orchards. There is a pleasant bustle along the IJsselmeer in the summer, and part of the route is great for cycling.

This old town has at least 400 monuments, and the street layout has barely changed over the centuries. Along the canals, old merchants' houses and small courtyards can still be seen. The Stedelijk Museum depicts the history of the town through paintings, videos and models. It also has a collection of paintings from the Bergen School of the 1920s and 1930s.

Alkmaar is famous for its traditional kaasmarkt (cheese market), which is held every Friday morning from early April to early September. The large yellow wheels of cheese arrive by barge. They are tossed from the barges by four groups of seven porters from the 400-year-old cheese porters' guild. The porters are dressed in white and divided into guild groups by the colour of their hats. The cheese is loaded onto sledges, which the porters run with to the waagegebouw (public weigh house), where the cheese is weighed. Once tasting has taken place, the cheese is auctioned off by a system called bandjeklap, with sellers clapping each other on the hands. The Kaasmuseum (cheese museum) at the waagegebouw shows both modern and traditional methods of dairy farming. A little north of the cheese market is the Nationaal Biermuseum De Boom. Housed in an impressive 17th-century building, in what had formerly been the biggest brewery in the town, the museum explores a millennium of beer drinking in the Netherlands. The museum illustrates, for example, how in the middle ages Alkmaar lacked a supply of safe drinking water, so brewers would ship barrels of clean water from the surrounding dunes and streams, and then make it into beer. The collection of equipment shows the beer-making process over the last 100 years, from copper vats, kettles, barrels and bottles to examples of the modern laboratory technology that breweries now use. There is also a reconstruction of an old café interior. Under the same roof is a lovely waterside café and "tasting house" where 86 different beers, many of them Dutch, can be sampled.

South of the kaasmarkt, on the corner where Mient meets Verdrakenoord, is the vismarkt or fish market, which dates back to the 1500s and was still in use until 1998. The low, colonnaded stalls are covered to protect traders and their wares from the elements, and contain brick and stone benches where catches of fish were displayed to customers.

The current buildings date back to the mid-18th century. Further along Verdrakenoord is the Sint Laurentiuskerk or Grote Kerk. This 15th-century church has one of the most important organs in Europe, built from 1639–46, and is noteworthy for its fresco depicting the Miracle of Alkmaar. In 1429, a priest taking mass knocked wine onto the altar cloth; it transformed into blood and, although the priest cut out the stained cloth and burned it, the blood kept re-appearing in the cloth. A relic containing three red droplets is kept in the church.

Misericord in the Grote Kerk

Haarlem is the commercial capital of North Holland province and the eighth largest city in the Netherlands. It is the centre of the Dutch printing, pharmaceutical and bulb-growing industries, but there is little sign of this in the delightful pedestrianized streets of the historic heart of the city. Most of the sights of interest are within easy walking distance of the Grote Markt, a lively square packed with ancient buildings, cafés and restaurants. Old bookshops, antique dealers and traditional food shops are all to be discovered in nearby streets.

Exploring Haarlem

Haarlem became a city in 1245, and had grown into a thriving clothmaking centre by the 15th century. But in the Spanish siege of 1572–3, the city was sacked, and a series of fires wreaked further destruction in 1576. The town's fortunes changed in the 17th century, when industrial expansion ushered in a period of prosperity lasting throughout the Golden Age. The centre was largely rebuilt by Lieven de Key (1560–1627) and still retains much of its character. The Grote Kerk continues to overlook the city's hoffes (almshouses), and the brick-paved lanes around the Grote Markt are little changed.

The enormous Gothic edifice of Sint Bavo's great church, or Grote Kerk, was a favourite subject of the 17th-century Haarlem School artists Pieter Saenredam (1597–1665) and Gerrit Berckheijde (1639–98). Built between 1400 and 1550, the church and its ornate bell tower dominate the market square. Clinging on to the exterior of the south wall is a jumble of 17th-century shops and houses. The rents raised from these ramshackle, untidy buildings contributed to the maintenance of the church.

Today, the entrance to the Grote Kerk is through one of the surviving shops, a tiny antechamber that leads straight into the enormous nave. The church has a high, delicately patterned, vaulted cedarwood ceiling, white upper walls and 28 supporting columns painted in greens, reds and golds. The intricate choir screen, like the magnificent brass lectern in the shape of a preening eagle, was made by master metal worker Jan Fyrens in about 1510. The choirstalls (1575) are painted with coats of arms, and the armrests and misericords are carved with caricatures of animals and human heads. Not far away is the simple stone slab covering the grave of Haarlem's most famous artist, Frans Hals.

The Grote Kerk boasts one of Europe's finest and most flamboyant organs, built in 1735 by Christiaan Müller. In 1738 Handel tried the organ and pronounced it excellent. It also found favour with the infant prodigy Mozart, who shouted for joy when he gave a recital on it in 1766. The organ is still often used for concerts, recordings and teaching.

Stadhuis

Grote Markt 2. Tel 023-5115115.

by appt only.

Haarlem's Stadhuis (town hall) has grown rather haphazardly since 1250 and is an odd mixture of architectural styles. The oldest part of the building is the beamed medieval banqueting hall of the counts of Holland, originally known as the Gravenzaal. Much of this was destroyed in two great fires in 1347 and 1351, but the 15th-century panel portraits of the counts of Holland can still be seen.

The wing of the town hall bordering the Grote Markt was designed by Lieven de Key in 1622. It is typical of Dutch Renaissance architecture, combining elaborate gables, ornate painted detail and Classical features, such as pediments over the windows.

In a niche above the main entrance is a plump allegorical figure of Justice, bearing a sword in one hand and scales in the other as she smiles benignly upon the pavement cafés in the market below. To the left, in Koningstraat, an archway leads to the university buildings behind the Stadhuis, where there is a 13th-century cloister and library.

The Verweyhal (museum for modern art) and the Vleeshal (exhibition space), both in the Grote Markt, are part of the Frans Hals Museum (see pp186–7). The Verweyhal accommodates exhibitions of Dutch Expressionism, the Cobra School (see p189), Impressionism and contemporary works. It is named after the painter Kees Verwey, whose Impressionist still lifes are an important feature of the collection. The heavily ornamented Vleeshal (meat market), just to the west of the church, houses temporary exhibitions of modern art. It was built in 1602 by the city surveyor, Lieven de Key, and has a steep step gable which disguises the roof line. The extravagantly over-decorated miniature gables above each dormer window bristle with pinnacles. A giant painted ox's head on the façade signifies an earlier function of the building.

The Amsterdamse Poort was one of a complex of 12 gates guarding strategic transport routes in and out of Haarlem. The gate was built in 1355, though much of the elaborate brickwork and tiled gables date from the late 15th century.

The city defences were severely tested in 1573, when the Spanish, led by Frederick of Toledo, besieged Haarlem for seven months during the Dutch Revolt. The city fathers agreed to surrender the town on terms that included a general amnesty for all its citizens. The Spanish appeared to accept the terms, but once the city gates were opened, they marched in and treacherously slaughtered nearly 2,000 people – almost the entire population of the city.

This was the first major public museum to be founded in the Netherlands. It was established in 1778 by the silk merchant Pieter Teyler van der Hulst to encourage the study of science and art. The museum's eccentric collection of fossils, drawings and scientific paraphernalia is displayed in Neo-Classical splendour in a series of 18th-century rooms.

The two-storey Oval Hall was added in 1779 and contains bizarre glass cabinets full of minerals and cases of intimidating medical instruments. A significant collection of sketches by Dutch and Italian masters, including Rembrandt and Michelangelo, is shown a few at a time.

Haarlem is well known for its hoffes (almshouses), set up to minister to the poor and sick (see p111). They first appeared in the 16th century and were run by rich guild members, who took over the role traditionally filled by the monasteries until the 1578 Alteration.

St Elisabeth's Gasthuis was built in 1610 around a courtyard opposite what is now the Frans Hals Museum. A 1612 plaque above the main doorway depicts an invalid being carried off to hospital. After restoration, the almshouse was opened in 1995 as Haarlem's principal historical museum.

The first railway line in the Netherlands opened in 1839 and ran between Haarlem and Amsterdam. The original station, built in 1842, was refurbished in Art Nouveau style between 1905 and 1908. It is a grandiose brick building with an arched façade and rectangular towers. The interior is decorated with brightly coloured tiles depicting various modes of transport. Other highlights are the woodwork of the ticket offices and the highly decorative wrought ironwork, particularly on the staircases.

Frans Hals Museum

Celebrated as the first “modern” artist, Frans Hals (c.1582–1666) introduced a new realism into painting. Although his contemporaries strove for perfect likenesses, Hals knew how to capture his models’ characters by using an impressionistic technique. Even at the age of 80, he still painted impressive portraits, such as De regentessen van bet Oude Mannenhuis in Haarlem (Regentesses of the Old Men’s Home in Haarlem) (1664). The Oude Mannenhuis (old men’s home) became the Frans Hals Museum in 1913. It also has on show many paintings by other artists from the Dutch Golden Age.

In the Middle Ages, the pretty town of Muiden was an outpost for Utrecht but later became part of the defence system of the Stelling van Amsterdam (see p188), together with forteiland Pampus. The town is mainly known for its castle, the Muider slot, which is more than 700 years old and was built by Floris V. After his death it was demolished and rebuilt. The most famous inhabitant was the 17th-century poet PC Hooft, who formed the Muiderkring (Muiden circle), a circle of friends occupied with literature and music. Most of the castle rooms are furnished in 17th- and 18th-century style. The garden and orchard also retain their former glory. Boats once left from the castle jetty for the fortified island of Pampus.

The church's wooden vaulted ceiling has been beautifully decorated with pictures from the Old and New Testament. Around 400 years ago, Czech priest Comenius fled to the Netherlands, and now lies buried in the 15th-century Waalse kapel (Walloon chapel). The Spaanse Huis (Spanish house), which was converted into the Waaag (weigh house), is now home to the Comeniusmuseum, which explores the life and ideas of the Czech scholar Jan Amos Comenius (1592–1670), who is buried here. The Nederlands Vestigmuseum (fortress museum) is in one of the six bastions of the fortress and has an exhibition of the Hollandse Waterlinie, a strip of land flooded as a defence line in Holland, and of Naarden's eventful past. Costumed gunners regularly demonstrate the ancient artillery. There is a nice walk around the town along the footpaths on the walls.

This dynamic centre in Het Gooi (see p172) is known as the media centre of the Netherlands, because of the large number of broadcasting companies that have been established here.

Hilversum boasts a busy shopping centre and attractive residential areas with a lot of greenery. Here and there you will see houses and buildings designed by architect Willem Dudok (1884–1974), a representative of the Nieuwe Bouwen. One of his most famous creations is the 1931 Raadhuis (town hall), with its towers and beautiful interior (tours are given on Sundays). Its basement holds an exhibition on Dudok and temporary architectural exhibitions. The Museum Hilversum combines the Goois Museum and the Dudok Centrum, illuminates the past of Het Gooi and features an archaeological collection. The Neo-Gothic Sint-Vituskerk, designed by PJH Cuypers (see p90), with its 98-m (322-ft) tower, dates from 1892 and is worth a visit.

THE ERFGOOIERS

During the Middle Ages, the farmers of Het Gooi (see p172) joined together in a group to regulate the use of the heathland and meadows. Since 1404, their rights were held in plough share notes. Members of the group were known as erfgooiers, men living in Het Gooi who were descendants of these medieval farmers. The right of use was later converted into common property. The erfgooiers had to constantly fight for their rights. From the 19th century onwards, the government strived to disband the group. In 1932, the heathland was sold, as were the meadows after 1965. The Association of Erfgooiers was disbanded in 1971.

UTRECHT

The province of Utrecht, with the lively university city of the same name at its heart, has a vast range of attractions for visitors, including farmhouses, mansions, museums and castles, all set in a varied and attractive wooded landscape, and with a fascinating history dating back to Roman times.

The city of Utrecht has its origins in AD 47, when the Romans built a camp by a ford (trecht) at the river Rhine, which followed a different course in those days. In 695, Bishop Willibrord established himself here to promote the spread of Christianity. From the 11th century, the church authorities enjoyed not only spiritual but also secular power in this region, which has seen much conflict: over the centuries the counts of Holland, the dukes of Burgundy, the Spaniards, the French and the Germans have all tried to make their mark here.

The region's proximity to Amsterdam has meant that it has been able to share in the capital's prosperity as wealthy merchants and landowners built their mansions and estates along the river Vecht (see p198).

In more recent times, the University of Utrecht has been a great source of economic and artistic development, and the city is home to a modern manufacturing industry and major Dutch corporations.

Visitors will enjoy the pretty countryside – ideal for car or cycle touring – the country houses and historic buildings, the street markets and a great variety of attractions ranging from eclectic furniture and old steam locomotives to barrel-organs and Australian Aboriginal art. But in this eco-conscious country, with its awareness of the need for conservation, it may be the outdoors, with its sparkling lakes and possibilities for leisurely country walks, that will appeal the most.

Exploring Utrecht

The city of Utrecht is the central point of the province and is therefore the ideal base for sight-seeing in the surrounding area. The Vinkeveense Plassen (Vinkeveense Lakes) are popular for water-sports, and nature lovers will appreciate the woodland area of the Utrecht Heuvelrug. There are castles in Amerongen and Wijk bij Duurstede and numerous imposing country houses along the Vecht. Windmills and working farms can be spotted here and there in the countryside. Many defence points, such as in Woerden, serve as reminders of the turbulent past of this province, which has been at stake during fierce battles more than once.

GETTING THERE

Larger towns have railway stations; smaller ones can be reached easily by bus. Utrecht, the capital of the province, is the biggest railway junction in the Netherlands and so train connections from this town are excellent. There is also a regional bus station. Utrecht has a highly developed road network and is served by important main roads such as the A2 (north-south) and the A12 (east-west), but there is also a large number of minor roads, tourist routes and cycle paths in the area.

Vinkeveense Plassen ①

Road map C3.

De Vinkeveense Plassen (Vinkeveense Lakes) came about through human intervention – this site was once marsh. The thick peat layers have been excavated over the centuries. The large towns in the surrounding area needed peat; sales of this fuel meant that the people here started to earn a decent living. The peat was therefore dug up more and more extensively, eventually leading to a large area of lakes.

Today, the Vinkeveense Lakes attract many water-sports lovers, as well as cyclists and walkers. When it's not the breeding season, you can take a rowing boat through the nature reserve of Botshol, which is home to marsh and grassland birds.

Loenen on the Vecht is famous for its rural atmosphere as well as for its castles and country estates complete with coach houses, summer-houses and boathouses, built over the centuries by wealthy citizens. It is now a protected village.

Kasteel Loenersloot, built on the bank of the Angstel, is one of the oldest country estates. The building dates back to the 13th century, though only the round defence tower remains; the rest dates from the 17th and 18th centuries. The castle is not open to the public.

The original U-shaped castle was built around 1520 on the remains of a medieval residential tower. At the beginning of the 16th century, a new castle was built on the foundations of the old house and the gateway was added. Up to the 18th century, extensive rebuilding brought the castle into line with contemporary architectural style.

The author Belle van Zuylen (1740–1805) was one of the castle's most famous inhabitants. She was famous for her correspondence at home and abroad, which she cleverly used to show her modern attitude. Several rooms are furnished as they were when she resided here.

The serpentine wall that runs alongside the castle is interesting because its unique shape provides so much protection that even in this cool sea climate, subtropical fruits such as peaches and grapes can flourish here.

Woerden came into being on the dykes along the Rhine and Lange Linschoten. Granted its town charter in 1372, it has been besieged many times but always managed to hold out. Between 1575 and 1576, during the 30 Years War, the Spaniards tried to conquer Woerden, as did the French in 1672, but neither invader succeeded in capturing the town. Impenetrable kasteel van Woerden (Woerden castle), built between 1405 and 1415, was extensively restored around 1990.

In the 18th century, the Oude Hollandse Waterlinie (old Holland waterline) – a strip of land flooded as a defence line – was extended, thereby strengthening Woerden.

This little town, thanks to its favourable position on the IJssel and the Linschoten, became a prosperous town early on and, by 1265, had been granted its city charter.

Nesting storks in Oudewater

The counts of Holland and the bishops of Utrecht fought fiercely for Oudewater, which was converted into a border stronghold by Floris V. In 1349, Oudewater was captured by Jan van Arkel, the Bishop of Utrecht. In 1572, Oudewater sided with the Prince of Orange and, as a result, the town was seized in 1575 by the Spanish. They exacted a bloody revenge by burning the town to the ground. Oudewater flourished again during Holland's Golden Age.

The town's most famous attraction is the scales, dating from the 16th century, better known as the heksenwaag (witches' scales). Women who were suspected of witchcraft came here to be weighed. If their weight and their outward appearance tallied, they were given a certificate as proof of their innocence. Oudewater was the only place where "witches" could be legally weighed in public.

The Nieuwe Hollandse Waterlinie (New Dutch Inundation Line), laid out from 1815 to 1940, is comprised of 68 forts and public works, from Muiden and Naarden in North Holland to Werkendam in North Brabant. Utrecht has 27 installations, more than any other province. The Waterlinie was intended as a defence against invading armies; a wide strip of land would simply be flooded. Utrecht's installations are now being protected, and have been put forward for UNESCO's World Heritage Site register. The original reconnaissance positions and unimpeded lines of fire will hopefully be preserved. The best installations are at Rijnauwen, Groenekan en Tull and 't Waal.

Country Estates along the Vecht 7

Plaque with coat of arms

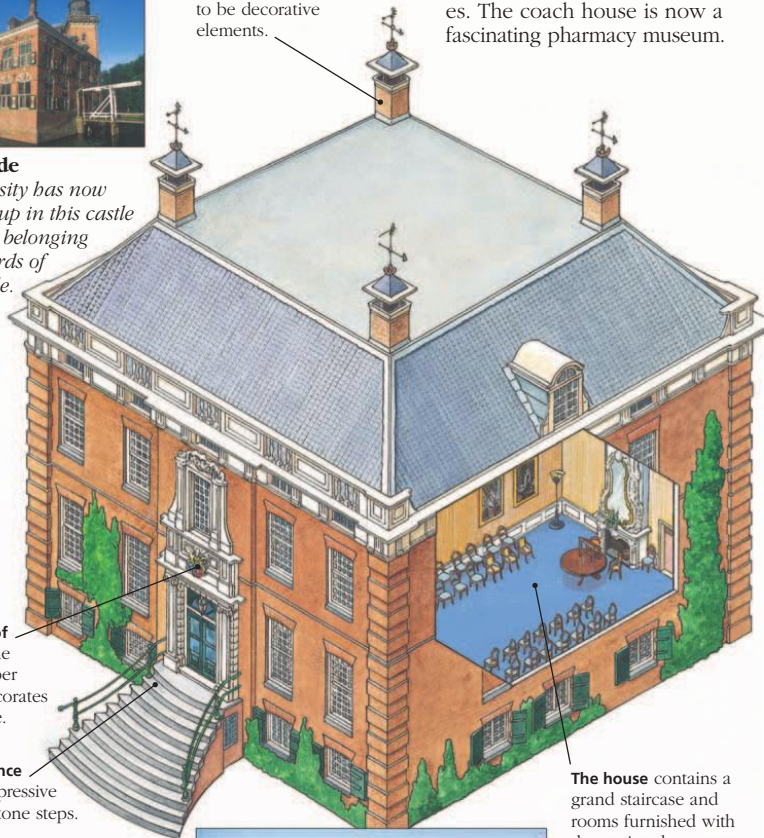

Country estate houses, with their summerhouses, magnificent railings and extensive gardens, can be seen threaded along the Vecht, especially between Maarssen and Loenen. They were built in the 17th and 18th centuries by wealthy Amsterdam inhabitants who wanted to escape the noise and stench of the city in the summer. The estates were status symbols, places where city-dwellers could devote themselves to hobbies such as tree cultivation, hunting and still-life painting.

Nijenrode

The chimneys were considered to be decorative elements.

The coat of arms of the Huijdecoper family decorates the façade.

The entrance has an impressive flight of stone steps.

The house contains a grand staircase and rooms furnished with decorative drapes. One of the rooms is now used for wedding ceremonies.

Between Breukelen and Loenen the Vecht resembles an architectural museum. The country estates (Vechtvliet is shown here) are surrounded by established parks and ornamental outbuildings.

Over the years, the towns of Bunschoten and Spakenburg have merged into one another. Livestock farming was the traditional livelihood in Bunschoten, and there are still some pretty farms to see here. Bunschoten, granted its town charter in 1383, is older than Spakenburg, which came into being in the 15th century. It was once an important fishing town; its smoke-houses, fishermen's houses and shipbuilding yard are reminders of this time. When the Zuiderzee was closed in 1932 because of partial land reclamation, the inhabitants had to look for other work.

Some of the women in the town still wear traditional dress. Museum Spakenburg brings the fishing activities of the past back to life.

Street-by-Street: Utrecht 12

Museum van Speelklok
tot Piereмонт

The area to the south of the centre gives one a good idea of how people once lived in Utrecht. Rich citizens lived in the stately houses on the Nieuwegracht, with its typical Utrecht wharves, and built almshouses for their less fortunate neighbours. No doubt because of the great number of museums in this area, it came to be called Museumkwartier (museum district). The old city walls gave way to a magnificent park which was designed by landscape gardener Zocher.

★ Oudegracht

The Oudegracht represented a vital transport route for the economy of Utrecht in the 13th century. When the water level fell, cellars were built along the wharves. These were used as warehouses or workshops. Today, some of them house cafés and restaurants.

Exploring Utrecht

A euro coin from the Mint

Utrecht, founded by the Romans in AD 47, has been a bishopric and university town for centuries. It has grown into a lively city, thanks to its central position. Utrecht was very prosperous during the 16th and 17th centuries, when many of the magnificent canalside houses were built. These houses are a characteristic feature of the town centre, as are the medieval churches and monasteries. The city centre is compact so is very suitable for exploring on foot.

The first thing you will see from the distance is the Domtoren (cathedral tower) rising above the town. The Dom (cathedral) has become the symbol of the town. Utrecht came into being on the Domplein (cathedral square), where the Romans had a settlement in the 1st century AD. In 695, Bishop Willibrord established himself here. In 1040, Bishop Bernold ordered a “cross of churches” to be built, which meant four churches with the later Domkerk in the centre. Work began on building the Domkerk in 1254 and in 1321 on the tower. The Gothic tower was finally finished in 1382.

Collegiate churches usually have two towers, but the Domkerk has only one. The nave of the church was connected to the tower by an arch, allowing the bishop to move safely to and from the church. In 1674, the nave was destroyed by a hurricane. The tower has stood on its own since then. The interior of the church, with its stained-glass windows, Neo-Gothic organ (1831) and magnificent chancel, is worth a visit.

Extensive rebuilding and renovations were carried out in 1999, giving rise to an interesting combination of old and new. The museum has the largest collection of Gerrit Rietveld furniture in the world. Works by Utrecht artists such as Van Scorel and Bloemaert, as well as 20th-century artists such as Pyke Koch and Dick Bruna – creator of the children’s character Nijntje (Miffy) – are also showcased. Bruna’s works are shown in the Brunahuis across the road. The varied exhibitions range from traditional art to fashion and historical costumes, to modern art and applied art and design, to the local history of Utrecht.

Rietveld Schröderhuis

Gerrit Rietveld and his employees

When designing this house, architect Gerrit Rietveld worked closely with his client, Mrs Schröder, who lived here from 1924 until her death in 1985. The house was to epitomize all that was “modern” and broke with many of the architectural standards of the time. This can be seen in the design of the top floor, which may be divided in different ways by sliding partitions, according to the requirements of the inhabitants. The house was declared a World Heritage Site by UNESCO in 2001.

★ Sliding Partitions

Using sliding partitions, the top floor could be divided into separate rooms for Mrs Schröder's children.

Telephone Seat

The house was to reflect the modern times in which it was designed, and so functional items like the telephone and fuse box were given a prominent location.

DE STIJL

This Dutch artistic movement, founded in 1917, aimed to integrate art further into everyday life. Proponents wanted to bring painting and architecture closer together in a new way. The use of colour in the Rietveld Schröderhuis is one expression of this idea. Rietveld was a member of De Stijl from 1919, though he disagreed with certain ideas held by others in the group (see p128).

De Stijl member Theo van Doesburg was mainly interested in straight lines and primary colours. The geometric surfaces of this painting do not depict reality but offer a glimpse of universality.

The old town centre of Amersfoort contrasts sharply with the districts that surround it, which reflect a contemporary architectural style. The centre is defined by small streets with old houses and gardens. The Muurhuizen (wall houses) were built on the site of the old defence ring. The Onze Lieve Vrouwetoren (Tower of Our Lady) is difficult to miss. The contours of this old chapel can still be seen in the stones of the pavement. In 1787, the chapel, which was used to store gunpowder, was blown up.

The Amersfoortse kei boulder appeared in the town in 1661, when a nobleman bet he could drag the stone from the Leuserdeide. Ever since, Amersfoort has held the annual Keistadfeest (Keistad festival) in celebration of the event.

The Museum Flehite gives an overview of the history of Amersfoort from the Middle Ages. The town was the birthplace of the abstract painter Mondriaan, the leading light of the De Stijl and Neo-Plasticist movements. The house where he was born is now home to the Mondriaanhuis voor Constructieve en Concrete Kunst, a study centre and archive of the artist's life and work, including several of his paintings. Another artist who lived in the town was

The church housing the collection burned down in 2007, and the surviving works are currently displayed in the Rietveldpaviljoen De Zonnehof.

Environs

Some 4 km (2 miles) away, in the village of Leusden, Kamp Amersfoort is a grim reminder of the area's history. A Dutch army barracks was transformed in 1941 into a work camp for more than 35,000 people, including Jewish prisoners and Jehovah's Witnesses. Many were later transported to concentration camps. The camp also held American and Russian prisoners of war. The site is now a national monument. Several commemorative ceremonies are held each year.

Dorestad was an important trade centre in Carolingian times. Plundering Vikings and a shift in the river basin of the Rhine led to its decline. Then soon after, in the 13th century, Wijk (near Dorestad) emerged and became the home of the Utrecht bishops around 1450. They brought prosperity and influence to the town until, in 1528, the bishop lost his secular power. The impressive Kasteel Duurstede dates from the 13th century, when it was originally built as a donjon, the castle's fortified inner tower. This was extended in 1500, and bishops lived here until 1580. The castle's park was laid out in 1850 by Jan David Zoicher.

The Amerongense Berg marks the highest point in the ridge and has earned the name “mountain”, despite being just 69 m (225 ft) high. The town lay originally on the Via Regia, the “royal route” from Utrecht to Cologne. From the 17th to 19th centuries, tobacco was grown in this area, as is evident by the drying sheds which are still standing. You can have a proper look at an old drying shed in the Tabakteelt Museum. In 1672, the town's castle, Kasteel Amerongen, was destroyed by the French. Rhenen lies on the north bank of the Rhine, at the border between the flat Betuwe and the Utrecht Heuvelrug. This area was inhabited as far back as the Iron Age. Many of the town's historic buildings were destroyed during World War II, but the Late Gothic Cuneratoren (Cunera tower), built between 1492 and 1531, escaped the bombs. The Raadhuis (town hall) dates from the Middle Ages. May 1940 saw a fierce battle on the 53-m (174-ft) Grebbeberg, a long-time strategic point in the surrounding area. The victims lie buried in the military cemetery.

East of the town, on the road to Wageningen, is the Ouwehands Dierenpark. This zoo contains all the favourites, like tigers, monkeys and elephants. There is also a large “bear wood”, the berembos, 20,000 sq m (66,000 sq ft) of forest-like landscape, where brown bears and wolves wander free. Other attractions include a tropical aquarium and plenty of children's activities, from a huge, jungle-themed adventure playground called RavotAapia, to special weekends dedicated to particular animals, and educational programmes.

SOUTH HOLLAND

For tourists, South Holland is pure delight. Although densely populated, the province still has plenty of open space and offers a remarkable range of attractions for visitors of all kinds. The landscape is typically Dutch, with large areas of reclaimed land dotted with windmills and grazing cattle.

From Roman times on, South Holland was principally a low-lying swampy delta as the various courses of the river Rhine reached the sea. The influence of the counts of Holland (9th–13th centuries), who took up residence in The Hague, attracted trade with Flanders, Germany and England, and settlements became towns. Leiden's university, the oldest in the country, was founded as long ago as 1565. Peat extraction for fuel created lakes, reclaimed land (see pp22–3) was turned into productive farmland, and the Dutch dairy industry flourished. Other products in international demand included beer and textiles and, in more recent times, year-round flowers and the famous Dutch bulbs. Overseeing all this activity is the port of Rotterdam, one of the largest in the world, and The Hague, home of the Dutch government, the royal family, and the International Court of Justice. Delft is famous for its exquisite hand-painted porcelain and china, while Gouda is renowned for its cheese. The North Sea coast has charming resorts, from busy Scheveningen, with its attractive pier, to the smaller seaside towns of Katwijk and Noordwijk, with long sandy beaches. It is an ideal region for family holidays and for children of all ages.

Visitors in spring are in for a treat when they tour the north of the province. Bulb fields erupt in a riot of colour, and the Keukenhof's flower gardens are simply unforgettable.

Exploring South Holland

In the north of the province of South Holland are the colourful bulb fields and the Keukenhof, while to the south in a semi-circle lie the old university town of Leiden, bustling The Hague, cosy Delft and the modern port city of Rotterdam. The islands of South Holland bear witness to the country's military history in Hellevoetsluis and Brielle. Ramblers will find all they wish for in the dunes by Wassenaar or in the river countryside at Leerdam, which is best known for its glass-blowing industry. From Gorinchem you can take a passenger ferry to the 14th-century castle of Slot Loevestein, which played a key role in the history of Holland.

GETTING AROUND

South Holland has a comprehensive system of roads, and both big cities and small towns can be reached equally quickly. However, during the morning and afternoon rush hours you should watch out for traffic jams. In the centres of the big cities it is best to leave your car in a car park, as finding an on-street parking space can often be a problem. Trains are a fast way of getting from A to B. As a rule you will find a train for your particular destination departing every quarter or half hour. Lisse and the bulbfields, Nieuwpoort and the towns on South Holland's islands can be reached only by local bus. VVV and ANWB tourist information offices provide information on cycling routes.

Bulb Fields ①

The Bollenstreek, a 30-km (19-mile) stretch between Haarlem and Leiden, is Holland's primary bulb-growing area. From March, the polders are aglow with glorious colours – the crocuses are the first to flower and the season culminates around mid-April with the majestic tulips. The lilies then follow at the end of May. Visitors without cars can obtain information about cycle routes from the tourist information office, the VVV, at Lisse (see p213). Bikes can be hired at railway stations in Haarlem and Heemstede-Aerdenhout.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Starting point: Haarlem.

Distance: approximately 30 km (19 miles).

Stopping-off points: along with the places discussed below, where various cafés and restaurants are to be found, Noordwijk aan Zee is worth a short detour. This lively coastal town, with its wonderful beach and dunes, makes an ideal place for a stopover.

FLOWERING BULBS

Flowers such as gladioli, lilies, narcissi, hyacinths, irises, crocuses and dahlias are mainly grown in the Bollenstreek. By far the most important, though, is the tulip, which originally came from Turkey and was cultivated by Carolus Clusius in 1593 for the first time in the Netherlands.

The best time to see Lisse is at the end of April, when the colourful Bloemen Corso (flower parade) takes place (see p32). A vibrant procession of floats passes from Noordwijk to Haarlem, where they are brightly illuminated at night and can still be seen the next day. On the two days before the parade, you can see close-up how the floats are decorated in the Hobabo halls in Lisse.

The Museum De Zwarte Tulp (black tulip museum) covers the history of bulb growing and illustrates the life cycle of bulbs. It also touches upon the "tulipomania" from 1620–37 (see pp30–31), when investors pushed up the demand for rare tulip bulbs to such an extent that they were worth their weight in gold.

Lying in a wooded park of 32 ha (79 acres) close to Lisse, the Keukenhof is one of the most spectacular public gardens in the world. It was set up in 1949 as a showcase for bulb-growers and currently has around 6 million bulbs planted in it. Fields are full of dazzling narcissi, hyacinths and tulips in bloom from the end of March to the end of May. You can also see the white blossom of the Japanese cherry tree in the park early in the season and, later, the bright flowers of the azaleas and rhododendrons.

Street-by-Street: Leiden 4

Statue of Justice on Stadhuis wall

Leiden is a thriving university town which dates from Roman times. The town developed because of its position on a branch of the Rhine and is still an important trade centre. Some excellent museums chart Leiden's eventful past, including the Golden Age, when the town was a centre for world trade (see pp48–9). Rembrandt van Rijn (see pp26–7) was born here in June 1606 – a plaque on the façade of a Weddesteeg house marks his birthplace. During term time, the streets of Leiden are busy with students cycling between lectures or frequenting the cafés and bookshops.

Exploring Leiden

Leiden is famous for its university, which is the oldest in the country. It was founded in 1575, one year after the Beggars of the Sea (see p241) freed the town from a protracted siege by the Spanish (see p49). As a reward for their endurance, William of Orange offered the people of Leiden the choice between a university and the abolition of taxes. The people made a shrewd choice and the town went on to become a centre of intellectual progress and religious freedom. English Puritan dissidents, victims of persecution in their homeland, were able to settle here in the 17th century before undertaking their journey to the New World.

In the 17th century, the lakenhal (cloth merchants' hall) was the centre of the Leiden textile industry. Arent van 's Gravesande designed the building in 1640 in Dutch Classical style. The municipal museum has been here since 1874. The showpiece of the collection, which was rescued from the Pieterskerk (St Peter's Church) during the religious disputes of 1566 (see pp52–3) is The Last Judgment (1526–7), a triptych in Renaissance style by Lucas van Leyden. Other Leiden artists, from Rembrandt to Theo van Doesburg, are also featured. The museum has displays of silver, glass, tin and tiles and explores the history of Leiden. Not to be missed is the large bronze cooking pot said to have been left by the Spaniards during the relief of Leiden in 1574. The spicy casserole it contained is recreated as a stew cooked every year on 3 October to commemorate Dutch victory over the Spanish.

THE PILGRIM FATHERS

In the 17th century, the Netherlands was a refuge for English Puritans. Minister John Robinson (1575–1625) founded a church in Leiden in 1609, where he inspired his congregation with his dream of the New World. The Pilgrim Fathers set out in 1620 from Delfshaven aboard the Speedwell, but the ship proved to be unseaworthy. They then crossed the Atlantic from Plymouth, England, on the Mayflower, but Robinson stayed behind, too ill to travel. He died in Leiden in 1625.

The Mayflower crossing the Atlantic Ocean

the 15th century, stands in the middle of a shady square that seems to be from a different age. It is worth a visit for its austere interior and the carefully restored Van Hagerbeer organ (1639–43), one of the few meantone-tuned organs. The floor of the nave is covered with worn stones which mark the graves of famous 17th-century intellectuals such as Puritan leader John Robinson, physician Hermanus Boerhaave and Golden Age artist Jan Steen.

Street-by-Street: The Hague ⑤

Jantje

The village of Die Haghe (“the hedge”) grew around the Binnenhof (inner courtyard), which has been an important political centre since the 13th century. The princes of Orange, the upper classes and an extensive diplomatic corps gave instructions for palaces and mansion houses to be built, and a stroll across the Voorhout or along the Hofvijver will still evoke its aristocratic charm.

The Hague today is represented by the new Spuikwartier (Spui district), with the city hall by Richard Meier and the Lucent Danstheater by Rem Koolhaas. To the west, the dunes and many parks and woods are still reminiscent of the country estate it once was.

The Hague has numerous attractions and museums, of which the Mauritshuis (see pp222–3) and the Gemeentemuseum (municipal museum) (see p224) are the most famous. There are many bookshops, antique shops and cafés on and around the Denneweg, which comes out onto the Lange Voorhout, as well as luxury boutiques on the promenade beginning at Paleis Noordeinde (see p221). Behind the Mauritskade lies the stately late 19th-century Willemspark, which is still almost completely intact, with the Panorama Mesdag (see p224). You can admire the peaceful Japanese garden in Park Clingendael (see p224). The old fishing village of Scheveningen has expanded to become a lively seaside resort but the dunes all around still offer peace and quiet.

The historic Binnenhof is a series of buildings erected around the hunting lodge of the counts of Holland. In 1247, William II was proclaimed Holy Roman Emperor; he later had the gothic Ridderzaal (Hall of the Knights) built as a banqueting hall. The Binnenhof has since then been the residence of stadholders, princes and governments. The court of Holland has administered justice since 1511 in the Rolzaal (roll court). The northern provinces of the Netherlands broke free from Spanish rule in 1581 with the Plakkaat van Verlatinge (“Decree of Abandonment”); they held a huge feast for William of Orange in the Ridderzaal. The Binnenhof was one of the most important European centres of diplomacy in the Golden Age. The magnificently ornate meeting hall dates from this period and is where the Upper House currently sits. The Lower House met in William V’s old ballroom until 1992, when it was moved to a new location. Tours of the building begin in the medieval cellars and pass through the Ridderzaal and debating chambers of the Upper or Lower House.

Mauritshuis

After he was recalled as captain general of Brazil, Johan Maurits of Nassau commissioned this house. It was completed in 1644 by Pieter Post in the North Dutch Classical style with influences from the Italian Renaissance and has a marvellous view of the Hofvijver. After the death of Maurits in 1679, the house passed into state hands and, in 1822, became the home of the royal painting collection. Though the collection is not large, it contains almost exclusively superior works by old masters. The Mauritshuis closes mid-2012–14 for renovation, during which time some works will tour while others will be housed elsewhere in The Hague – check the website for details.

MUSEUM GUIDE

The three floors of this little museum are hung with paintings from top to bottom. To feature all aspects of the collection, the exhibited artwork is constantly changing. The masterpieces are always on view, although not always hanging in the same location. Presentation is pleasantly haphazard, but all the paintings are labelled with the artist, title and year.  fishing village of Scheveningen.
 It is a breathtaking moment when, after climbing the creaking stairs leading up to the panorama, you suddenly emerge into daylight, to be surrounded by the dunes and the sea. The illusion is strengthened by genuine sand and pieces of wreckage laid at the foot of the painting.
 The painting was done in 1881 by members of the Haag School, led by HW Mesdag (1831–1915) and his wife Sientje (1834–1909).
 George Hendrik Breitner (1857–1923) painted the cavalymen on the sand.

 collection of paintings by Mondriaan in the world, with works from all his various periods. One of the high points of the collection is Victory Boogie Woogie (1943). Other works exhibited here include paintings by JH Weissenbruch and brothers Maris and Josef Israëls, all of whom were representatives of the Haag School, which was profoundly inspired by the coastal landscape. The main feature of the applied art section is the antique Delftware and oriental porcelain. An exhibit of clothing from the 18th century onwards is displayed in an annex. Another major attraction is the stunning collection of musical instruments from the 15th to the 19th centuries. Part of the Gemeente-museum, with its entrance next door, is the Fotomuseum, which stages temporary

Madurodam depicts the Netherlands in miniature – it consists of replicas of historically significant buildings like the Binnenhof in The Hague (see p220), canalside houses in Amsterdam and the Euro-mast tower in Rotterdam (see p232), built to a scale of 1:25. Other models here include Schiphol Airport, windmills, polders, bulb fields and some intriguing examples of the country's modern architecture. At night time the streets and buildings are illuminated by 50,000 tiny lamps.

Madurodam was opened in 1952 by Queen Juliana. JML Maduro designed the town in memory of his son George, who died at Dachau concentration camp in 1945. Profits go to children's charities.

This pleasant seaside resort is just 15 minutes by tram from the centre of The Hague. Like so many of the North Sea beach resorts, Scheveningen had its heyday in the 19th century. Nowadays it is a mixture of faded charm and modern garishness, though it remains a popular holiday resort because of its long sandy beach and the Pier. There are many places to eat, including good seafood restaurants.

The impressive Kurhaus, designed in the Empire style and now a luxurious hotel, was built in 1885, when Scheveningen was still a major spa town. Not far from the Kurhaus is Sea Life

Scheveningen, where you can look through transparent tunnels at stingrays, sharks and many other fascinating sea creatures. Muzee Scheveningen is devoted to the history of the fishing village and the spa. Tours of Scheveningen lighthouse can also be booked.

Designed by Wim Quist,

Museum Beelden aan Zee (seaside sculpture museum) can be found on the boulevard, half-hidden by a sand dune. Contemporary sculptures on the theme of the human figure are shown in the light, airy rooms, on the terraces and in the garden.

Although the seaside resort has all but swallowed up the original fishing village, there is still a harbour and a large fish market. Fishing boat trips can be booked on the southern side of the harbour – a fun outing for the afternoon.

Street-by-Street: Delft

19th-century
Delftware

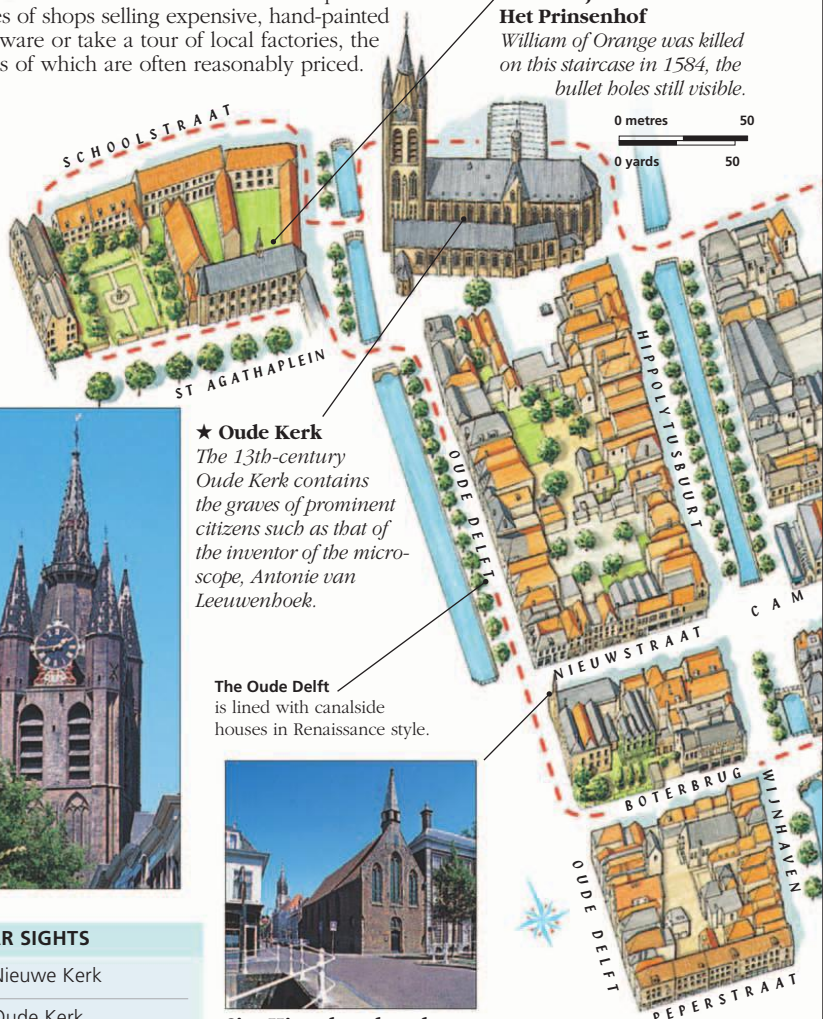

Delft dates back to 1075, its prosperity based on the weaving and brewing industries. In October 1654, however, an enormous explosion at the national arsenal destroyed much of the medieval town. The centre was rebuilt at the end of the 17th century and has remained relatively unchanged since then – houses in Gothic and Renaissance styles still stand along the tree-lined canals. Town life is concentrated on the Markt, which has the town hall at one end and the Nieuwe Kerk at the other. Visitors can dip into the scores of shops selling expensive, hand-painted Delftware or take a tour of local factories, the shops of which are often reasonably priced.

Exploring Delft

Attractive Delft is world-famous for its blue-and-white pottery and is renowned in Holland as being the resting place of William of Orange (1533–84), the “father of the Netherlands”. William led the resistance against Spanish rule in the 80 Years War (see p49) from his Delft headquarters; his victory meant religious freedom and independence for the Dutch. Delft was the Republic’s main arsenal in the 17th century; an explosion of gun-powder destroyed a large part of the town in 1654. Artist Johannes Vermeer (1632–75) was born and lived in Delft.

The original 13th-century church on this site has been extended many times. The beautifully carved clock tower, with its eye-catching steeple, dates from the 14th century. The Gothic north transept was added in the early 16th century by architect Anthonis Keldermans. Inside, the most striking feature is the wooden pulpit with canopy. The floor is studded with 17th-century gravestones, many beautifully decorated, including those for Johannes Vermeer and admiral Piet Hein (1577–1629).

The Nieuwe Kerk was built between 1383 and 1510 but needed large-scale restoration after the fire of 1536 and the massive explosion of 1654 in the arsenal. In 1872, PJH Cuypers (see p371) added the 100-m (328-ft) tower to the Gothic façade. Inside, the most noticeable feature is William of Orange’s imposing mausoleum, designed in 1614 by Hendrick de Keyser. In the middle stands a statue of William, impressive in his battledress. Not far from him is the lonely figure of his dog, which died a few days after his master. The tombs of the royal family lie in the crypt.

This peaceful former convent was the scene of William of Orange’s assassination. It now houses Delft’s history museum, with pottery, tapestries and portraits of royalty. In 1572, during the uprising against the Spanish, William commandeered the convent as his headquarters. In 1584, a fanatical Catholic, Balthasar Geraerts, shot and killed him on the instructions of Philip II of Spain.

DELFTWARE

Delftware (see pp28–9) stems from majolica, introduced to the Netherlands in the 16th century by Italian immigrants who had settled around Delft and Haarlem and begun producing wall tiles with Dutch designs, such as birds and flowers. By the next century, however, Dutch traders had started to deal in delicate Chinese porcelain; this eventually led to the collapse of the market for the less refined Dutch earthenware. Towards 1650, though, the Chinese example was adopted in the Netherlands and craftsmen designed plates, vases and bowls with pictures of Dutch landscapes, biblical tableaux and scenes from everyday life. De Porceleynse Fles factory, which dates from 1652, is one of the several Delftware potteries open to the public for tours.

Rotterdam is not only a symbol of post-war economic recovery – it has more to offer than endless stretches of thriving docklands and industrial areas. Rotterdam has increasingly become one of the most important cultural centres of the Netherlands. Although the city was a wasteland immediately after World War II, it quickly recovered and now boasts one of the country's largest universities, a park containing a number of interesting museums and a large zoo.

Rotterdam Zoo, often called Dierraarde Blijdorp, is in many ways a unique zoo. Its predecessor, De Rotterdamse Dierraarde (Rotterdam zoo), was built in 1857 in the town centre. In 1937, the zoo was moved to Blijdorp polder, outside the centre. The architect Van Ravesteyn designed the new zoo and Blijdorp became one of the first zoos to be designed by one architect.

Blijdorp is also one of the few European zoos to have its own research department. It plays an important part in breeding programmes for rare and endangered species, such as the black-footed penguin.

For the last few years, attempts have been made to convert Blijdorp to the type of zoo which tries to present the animals in the most natural habitat possible. Another addition at the zoo is the gorilla island. The huge, extremely popular, Oceanium is a theme park showcasing sea creatures, including sharks.

One of the most famous symbols of Rotterdam, Euromast is the tallest building in the town. Before its construction began, in 1960, the mayor at the time, Van Walsum, complained that there was only enough money to build a 50 m (165 ft) tower. This caused an uproar, because the mast was meant to be higher than the Utrecht Domtoren (cathedral tower), which was, at 112 m (367 ft), the highest building in the country. That same evening, the mayor was called by rich Rotterdam port barons wanting to contribute money to the construction of the building. These donations in part enabled the tower to reach 110 m (361 ft). A space tower was later added to the top of the building for the Communicatie-'70 show in 1970, bringing the tower to a total height of 185 m (607 ft).

After being bombed in 1940 and then ravaged by fire, the old city centre was a wasteland. Because of large-scale rebuilding after the war, Rotterdam now has more modern architecture than any other town in the Netherlands. This includes famous structures such as the paalwoningen (cube-shaped apartments). ## Museum Boijmans Van Beuningen

The museum is named after two art experts, FJO Boijmans and DG van Beuningen, who presented their own private collections to the town. The museum thus ended up with one of the finest collections in the Netherlands. Although it is particularly renowned for its unique collection of old masters, the museum also represents all aspects of art and design, from medieval works by Jan van Eyck to imaginative exhibitions of contemporary artists' work. The museum's layout is currently being re-worked.

One of Rotterdam's biggest and busiest attractions is its port, one of the largest ports in the world. Various operators organize daily tours around the port area, where you will see container ports, shipyards and dry docks. The sheer scale of the port and related industrial areas, which have a turnover of billions of euros, is quite staggering. Europe's largest container port, the Europoort alone stretches for 40 km (25 miles) along the river banks.

Rotterdam

The port sees approximately 30,000 vessels docking each year. Germany's Ruhr district is the main destination for the transported goods.

THE PORT OF ROTTERDAM

The port of Rotterdam, of which only a fraction is shown by this map, stretches from the town centre to the North Sea coast and is divided into nine areas. These are, from east to west, the Stadhavens, the Vierhavens, Merwehaven, Waalhaven, Eemhaven, Vondelingenplat, Botlek, Europoort and the Maasvlakte. The port is still expanding and will soon run out of available space. Land reclamation from the North Sea is considered the most appropriate solution.

St Janskerk, Gouda

Benefactor's coat of arms (1601)

This former Catholic church dating from 1485 was rebuilt in the Gothic style after it was struck by fire in 1552. The church received a number of unusual stained-glass windows from rich Catholic benefactors, such as Philip II of Spain, between 1555 and 1571. After the Reformation (see pp52-3), the church became Protestant, but even the fanatical Iconoclasts did not have the heart to destroy the windows.

Prominent Protestants, including Rotterdam aldermen, donated stained-glass windows to the church up to 1604. The stained-glass windows are heavily symbolic of the politics of the time – Bible stories had to be covered after the conflict between the Catholics and Protestants, which led to the 30 Years War between Spain and the Netherlands.

In 1272, Floris V granted Gouda its city charter. Thanks to its strategic position on the Hollandse IJssel and the Gouwe, the town developed into a flourishing centre for beer brewing and the textile industry in the 15th century. However, Gouda became economically and politically isolated during the 30 Years War. The town recovered in the 17th and beginning of the 18th century due to its trade in cheese, candles and pipes.

Gouda is still famous today for its cheese and cheese markets. The markets are held on an enormous three-sided square around the Stadhuis, which dates from 1450 and is one of the oldest in the Netherlands. With its many pinnacles and turrets, the building gives the impression of being in the Flemish Gothic style.

The Gouda Museum (municipal museum) is in the former Catharina Gasthuis (St Catherine's hospital), which dates from the 14th century and later. The museum features paintings from the Hague School and unusual 16th-century altar pieces.

The Reeuwijk lake district was formed through peat excavation. Narrow roads pass through the rectangular lakes, which owe their shape to former parcels of land. In the summer months you can also take a boat trip through this typically Dutch lakeland scenery.

The whole of this magnificent fortified town, which obtained its city charter in 1283, has been declared a listed area. The 17th-century street layout is practically intact. The city walls, which are also intact, were originally built to ward off attacks from the French but served mainly to protect the town against flooding. The town hall, built over the inundation lock, dates from 1696, while the arsenal dates from 1781. Restoration work was carried out in 1998.

Gorinchem, situated on the Linge and the Waal, was the property of the Lords van Arkel in the 13th century. They were driven out by Count William VI and the town was then absorbed into Holland. Fortifications built at the end of the 16th century are still partially intact and offer marvellous views over the water meadows and the Waal. Of the four town gateways, only the Dalempoort remains. The Linge harbour, in the heart of the town, is still mostly authentic, especially the narrow part.

Environs

On the other side of the Waal is the 14th-century Slot Loevestein. It has a very eventful history as a toll castle, a defence point along the Hollandse Waterlinie (a strip of land flooded as a defence line) and a state prison in the 17th century. A ferry for foot passengers runs between Gorinchem and the castle between May and September.

Goedereede was an important port in the 14th and 15th centuries. This town, where Pope Adrian VI was born, began to decline when it began to silt up. The early harbour houses are reminiscent of the livelier days of old.

THE BEGGARS OF THE SEA

The Beggars of the Sea were a pirate fleet which consisted of minor Dutch and Flemish nobles who had fled at the beginning of the Inquisition and sailed across the North Sea. They plundered other ships and caused trouble in English and German ports. They were forced to leave England, where some of their ships were berthed, in spring 1572. Without any clear plan, they entered Den Briel on 1 April under the command of van Lumey, which they then held "for the Prince". Other towns joined the Beggars of the Sea or were forcibly occupied by them. Their pursuits represented the first steps towards Dutch independence from Spain and the creation of Dutch sea power.

ZEELAND

The tiny province of Zeeland, as its name implies, is inextricably linked with water and the sea. From earliest times, the power of the North Sea and the flooding deltas of the Maas and Schelde rivers have shaped the landscape, encouraging resilience in the inhabitants and the desire to control the elements.

From earliest times, storms and floods have taken their toll here. In the last century, the devastation of two world wars was followed by the disastrous floods and storm surges of 1953. Although there are a number of fine churches and public buildings dating as far back as the 14th century, in places near the coast there are very few houses more than 50 years old. As a result, determination to keep the waters at bay has spawned massive construction and canal building, with giant dams and land reclamation schemes offering a level of security that has changed the landscape forever.

The storms were not all bad news. Traces of Roman settlements were uncovered, and lakes and inland waterways have become a haven for wildlife and a playground for lovers of watersports. Towns such as Middelburg, Zierikzee and Veere and villages such as Nisse, St Anna-ter-Muiden and Dreischor have lots of old buildings, some of which have been restored to their 17th-century grandeur, with attractive features such as bell towers and frescoes.

The close relationship with water and the sea is well documented in a variety of small museums. The tangible benefits are perhaps twofold: an abundance of seafood for the province's restaurants, and marvellous opportunities for watersports. Few regions in Europe offer as much scope for sailing, windsurfing, water skiing and diving as does little Zeeland.

Exploring Zeeland

Memorial plaque

Touring around Zeeland, you cannot ignore the sea. The journey becomes a small adventure as you encounter bridges, dams and ferry docks. Sometimes you will travel along a straight ribbon of a road, sometimes a windy lane. The ever-present and often turbulent water is never the same colour for long: it can quickly change from a grey green reflecting the vivid blue sky to the white of wave crests beneath leaden skies.

Passing over one of the many dams, you will reach the next island, with its own special character. Tholen, for example, is quiet – almost morose – whereas Walcheren is full of surprises and has a wonderful atmosphere. Travelling through Zeeland is a journey of discovery.

GETTING AROUND

The best way to visit all the islands of Zeeland is by car. The roads here are excellent – the A58 or the N57 will quickly bring you to the centre of the province, where you can choose one of the smaller roads to take you to your destination. The through train will take you from Amsterdam to Middelburg and Vlissingen in just two and a half hours. If you want to explore other islands, you will need to continue on a regional bus – though this can be quite time-consuming. There are many cycle paths and it is great fun cycling over the dykes.

Oosterschelde Stormvloedkering ❶

Throughout the centuries, the history of the Netherlands has been dominated by its people's struggle against the sea. After the disastrous floods of 1953, which hit Zeeland heavily, the battle to remove the danger of the sea once and for all was undertaken in earnest. Now the Dutch seem to have minimized the threat of flooding by building dykes and dams and closing off tidal inlets, all of which has had a major impact on the landscape.

Storms

Storms are a part of everyday life in Zeeland: storms on the beach or over the flat polders, storms which blow the cobwebs away and storms which make you fear for your life.

The Windsock

When the windsock is full, a warning is sounded, and people are advised to avoid driving over the dams and bridges between the islands. Vigilance saves lives.

A road has been built over the dam.

The sliding gates are closed only when the water is high.

Concrete piers bear the sea wall.

The Fateful Night of 1953

On the night of 31 January 1953, an event considered impossible in modern times occurred. A combination of spring tides and storms breached the dykes and washed them away as loose sand. A total of 1,835 people lost their lives.

DELTAPARK NEELTJE JANS

This attraction has been built on an artificial island, Neeltje Jans, on which the piers for the Oosterschelde Stormvloedkering (storm surge barrier) were assembled, then taken by special barges to their positions. Now that task is finished, the island is being used mainly for recreational and informative purposes. At the Deltapark you can find out about the Delta projects and about how the barrier works. You can see the barrier from the inside, and then take a boat trip to view it from the outside. There is an aquarium here, as well as a seal show; you can also experience a simulated hurricane in the "hurricane machine".

Luctor et Emergo

This Latin motto meaning "I struggle and emerge victorious" is on Zeeland's coat of arms, which depicts the Netherlands lion half in the water. This was wholly appropriate for 1953.

Concrete Piers

The piers were made on the artificial island of Neeltje Jans and then transported by special barges to their destination. This mighty task attracted a great deal of attention.

The Delta Works

The Delta Works have had far-reaching consequences for the landscape and environment. The Zeeland islands, having been joined to the mainland, are no longer isolated.

HALF-OPEN BUTTRISS DAM

It took 13 years and €3.6 billion (two-thirds of the cost of the Delta Works) to build the Oosterscheldekering. After much deliberation, the decision was made to keep open the estuary and to preserve the salty estuary habitat. A half-open multiple buttress dam was built, with 62 sliding gates, which are closed on average once a year during heavy storms. This keeps the water salty and has preserved the unique salt marshes and mud flats of the Oosterschelde.

Ground protection prevents the earth from being washed away.

The piers rest on solid foundations.

The Terps

Man-made mounds, such as these near Borssele, were built in the 11th and 12th centuries to protect farms and villages from the water.

Street-by-Street: Middelburg

Detail from Middelburg's
Stadhuis

Middelburg suffered heavy Nazi bombing in 1940. A lot of what is to be seen in the town today has been rebuilt, including the Stadhuis (town hall) and the abbey. The town is still redolent with the atmosphere of the Golden Age, an era during which the Dutch East India Company thrived in the port area along the quay. Middelburg is a pretty town and there is plenty to be seen on a walk around the centre. Children will be kept busy by Miniatuur-Walcheren.

Middelburg Abbey dates back to 1100, when it was inhabited by Norbertine monks from the monastery of St Michiel of Antwerp. These very powerful monks were driven away in 1574 by William of Orange, after which the abbey was secularized. The renovated Zeeuws Museum is situated in the wing of the building that was once the monks' quarters. The most impressive sight in Westkapelle is its sea wall, the history of which is fascinating. In former times, this town lay securely behind the dunes, but these were washed away in the 15th century. This meant that the access route to the island shifted. A dyke was built, which was completed in 1458. The lighthouse also dates from this time; it was once a church tower, until the demolition of the church in 1831. In 1944, the dyke was bombed by the Allies in order to flood Walcheren so it could be liberated. In 1987 the dyke was built to the height of the delta.

The many terraces on the Havenplein offer a marvellous view of the two harbour entrances and ornate mansion houses on Oude Haven (old harbour), and the trickle of the Gouwe, the creek that brought trading prosperity to Zierikzee. The Gothic Gravensteen (1524–6), once the home of the Count of Holland, is now the Maritiem Museum (maritime museum).

The Zierikzee skyline shows the still unfinished Dikke Toren (great tower), construction of which began in 1454. At 130 m (425 ft), it must have been the highest point of the colossal 12th-century St-Lievenskerk, which burnt to the ground in 1832.

an interesting reminder of Zeeland's industrial past. The cultivation of the madder plant and processing of its root into a red dye was, until the 19th century, one of the main livelihoods of the region. It was brought to an end in 1868 by the invention of artificial dyes.

St Maartensdijk 12

Road map B5. 3,300.

Haven 10 (0166-663771).

St Maartensdijk has been the “capital” of Tholen since 1971. This town has much to remind us of its patrons, the powerful Lords van Borssele. The remains of the tomb of Floris van Borssele (who died in 1422) and his wife are still to be seen in a burial chapel of the slender 14th- to 15th-century church. Much of the original carving and fragments of the old painting have been preserved. The foundations and moat of the van Borssele castle, which was demolished in 1820, can still be found outside the town.

The most impressive part of the town itself is the Markt, with its 16th-century houses and elegant Stadhuis.

Tholen 13

see St Maartensdijk.

Tholen is a Zeeland town with a Brabant flavour. Two buildings dominate the town – the marvellous Stadhuis (1452) with its robust battlements and the ornate OL-Vrouwkerk (Church of Our Lady), dating from the 14th to 16th centuries. The kapel van het St-Laurengasthuis (St Laurengasthuis chapel), which has been rebuilt into a residential home, stands opposite the church. Even though Tholen became a fortified town in the 16th century, it has retained its old character. Gothic façades are everywhere to remind us of its former prosperity.

Goes 14

Road map A5. 24,000.
 Singelstraat 13 (0113-235990).
 Tue, Sat.

Some of the historical towns of Zeeland are charming but sleepy, but Goes is wide-awake. Every Tuesday there is an old-fashioned market featuring fabrics and groceries which takes place on a square full of Brabant atmosphere, the Grote Markt. The Raadhuis (town hall), dating from 1463 (rebuilt between 1771 and 1775), stands at the front of the square, representing the magistrates' power with all its bulk and loftiness. The rococo interior with its grisailles and stucco ceiling is particularly attractive. The majestic St-Maria-Magdalenakerk (Church of Mary Magdalen) (15th to 16th century) rises up behind the town hall. The cruciform basilica has been restored.

As they say in Zuid-Beveland, "De een zijn dood de ander zijn brood" ("One man's meat is another man's poison"). Yerseke came to be situated on the Oosterschelde following the St-Felixstormvloed

Imposing heraldic ornament on Goes Raadhuis

(St Felix storm flood) of 1530. So began a tradition of oyster farming and mussel fishing that has continued until the present day.

The nature reserve Yerseke Moer to the west of the village shows how the island used to look: a desolate patchwork of inlets, hamlets, rough pasture lands, coves, castles, peat moors and water holes. To the east of Yerseke lies the submerged land of Zuid-Beveland, lost in 1530 along with Reimerswaal, at the time the third largest Zeeland town.

Nisse 16

Road map A5. 580.
 see Goes.

Nisse is a typical Beveland village with square, ford and church. The church is worth a visit; though it does not look like much from the outside, inside you will be surprised by unique, 15th-century frescoes depicting the saints, scenes from the life of Mary and the coats of arms of the Lords van Borssele. Carvings on the choir vault and stalls are also from the 15th century.

OYSTER FARMING

Oysters apparently have all sorts of beneficial side effects, improved virility being the most well known. Whether this is true or not, this slippery delicacy makes any meal seem festive. Oyster farming began in 1870 when suitable parts of the river bed were no longer available for free fishing and were transferred to private use. Oyster farming flourished along the Oosterschelde, particularly in Yerseke, but the oysters were vulnerable to disease and harsh winters. Concern that oyster farming would be impossible when the Grevelingen was changed from an open estuary to a lake after the completion of the Delta Works (see pp246-7) has so far proved unfounded – the oysters already are less prone to disease.

Nearby is the former village of Hulsterloo, famous from the medieval epic Reynard the fox.

Terneuzen has an important port. The mighty sea locks in the Kanaal van Gent naar Terneuzen (Gent-Terneuzen canal), built between 1825 and 1827, are also impressive. The town has industrial areas to the north and nature reserves to the west (de Braakman) and the east (Otheense Kreek).

Sluis 19

Road map A5. 2,100. St Annastraat 15 (0117-461700). Fri.

The Zeeland-Flanders landscape is scarred by the effects of floods and the dykes built to deal with them. Both polders and inner dykes bear witness to the constant struggle with the sea. The liberation of Zeeland-Flanders in 1944 was also hard-fought, devastating towns and villages such as Sluis. The 14th-century Stadhuis, with its belfry, the only one existing in the Netherlands, was restored in its former style after 1945, including the bell tower with the statue which has the nickname Jantje van Sluis.

Environs

St-Anna-ter-Muiden, 2 km (1.5 miles) to the west of Sluis is a village beloved by artists. ## Exploring the Northern and Eastern Netherlands

The Northern and Eastern Netherlands are comparatively sparsely populated. They encompass the West Frisian Islands (Waddeneilanden) and the provinces of Groningen, Friesland, Drenthe, Overijssel, Flevoland and Gelderland. Agriculture has always played a predominant role here. This part of Holland has many natural and recreation areas, such as the Waddenzee mud flats, Frisian coast, coastal Lauwersmeergebied, Hondsrug, Nationaal Park De Hoge Veluwe, Sallandse Heuvelrug and the Oostvaardersplassen.

The waddengebied (see pp268–9) provides a habitat for many species of birds. It is an important area for annual and migrating birds. The worms, molluscs and crustaceans are an ideal source of food for ducks, seagulls and wading birds.

The Batavia (see p327) was owned by the Dutch East India Company. This three-masted was 45 m (148 ft) long and had room for 350 men. A replica of the Batavia was built between 1985 and 1995 at the Batavia-Werf (Batavia wharf) in Lelystad, which is now working on a replica of Michiel de Ruyter's 17th-century flagship, De Zeven Provinciën.

De Elfstedentocht (see pp294–5) has been held 15 times during the last century. Over 16,000 skaters have skated the Tocht der Tochten, a 200-km (124-mile) stretch.

Environmental Policy

The ermine

In the 1990s, the Dutch government drew up the Natuurbeleidsplan, a programme designed to make nature reserves accessible to the public. This is of great importance to the northern and eastern Netherlands, with their many lakes, woods and polders. The region's ecosystem has been divided into core areas, development areas and connecting zones in an attempt to give permanence to the natural environment. The connecting zones join the areas together. When the policy is fully implemented, it will aid in the survival of many plant and animal species.

The Waterleidingduinen (water supply dunes) are only partly open to the public.

The osprey was a rare sight in Holland for many years. Thanks to the Natuurbeleidsplan, sightings of this bird of prey have become more frequent in recent years.

Special road signs have been designed to warn motorists of migrating toads during that animal's mating season. Usually shy, toads come out en masse when mating.

READ THE SIGNS!

Most natural areas (or parts of them) in the northern and eastern Netherlands are freely accessible. However, some parts are open only from sunrise (zonopkomst) to sunset (zonsondergang), and it is therefore important to read the signs. It goes without saying that you should not make excessive noise, cause damage or leave litter in the area. Further information is available at VVV offices, the ANWB and the Vereniging Natuurmonumenten (tel. 035-6559933).

The adder is the only venomous snake in Holland and is very rare here. However, this small, distinctive snake can still be found in sandy regions and peat moors. In order to feed properly, adders require an extensive habitat.

The otter can no longer be found in Holland, but there are plans to re-establish it in the provinces of Flevoland, Friesland and Overijssel, although the areas required for this must meet quality requirements, since otters are very sensitive to pollution.

The golden plover, a rare wading bird which has been put under pressure by the reclamation of peat bogs and beatland, is the object of a special plan that will enable it to recover its numbers in the Netherlands.

Connecting zones in Flevoland linking various natural areas are now being set up for, among others, the common and edible frog, the polecat, the European water shrew, the pond bat, the grass snake and the beaver. Specific corridors are being developed for butterflies.

The common hamster and other protected animals cause headaches for developers. The Nature Protection Act prevents building on or the use of areas they inhabit.

Connections between core areas and development areas in some cases consist of "ecoducts". The vegetated passages atop the tunnels are designed to allow wildlife access to either side of the road, thereby linking two areas of great importance for flora and fauna without exposing them to road hazards.

Distinctive Landscapes

The northeast of the Netherlands has a number of distinctive landscape types, such as the unique mud flats, or Waddenzee, where the sand and clay is exposed at low tide; the peat moors in southeast Groninger; the enchanting heathland of Drenthe; the endless polder landscape of Flevoland; the splendid forests of Gelderland (Hoge Veluwe and Posbank) and the magnificent riverscapes and seascapes in the northeast of Overijssel.

Heath spotted-orchid

Glasswort is a wild plant which grows in mud flats and on silt deposits. It is a prized culinary delicacy.

Water crowfoot occurs in both flowing and standing water.

Rapeseed plantations are used for land improvements in new polders. The yellow fields seem to stretch endlessly to the horizon.

Bulrushes were once common in the region. The "cigars" grow only by fresh water and are now protected.

The Oostvaardersplassen (lakes), between Lelystad and Almere, make up a unique natural landscape. It is a breeding ground and feeding area for hundreds of species of birds.

WEST FRISIAN ISLANDS

The Waddenzee (see pp270-1) is an area of mud flats which is largely dry at low tide. It attracts many species of birds that come here to forage and to feed. The island of Texel features the peat walls of the Hoge Berg.

POLDER LANDSCAPE

Forests (het Knarbos), lakes (the Oostvaardersplassen) and coastal lakes (the Veluwemeer) distinguish the flat polder landscape of the "new" province of Flevoland (see pp322-9).

Boletus edulis is a delicious edible mushroom. Picking it, however, is no longer allowed.

Bracken fern grows in sparse woodland on lime and nutrient-poor sand and loamy ground, and on dried peat moors.

Common polypody occurs in juniper brush and in woodlands on poor sandy soil.

Mosses thrive in humid environments such as forest floors. Shady areas with acidic soil are ideal for sphagnum moss.

FORESTS

One of the best-known and largest forest areas in the Netherlands is at Hoge Veluwe in the province of Gelderland (see pp330–45), where a variety of animals, such as wild boar and red deer, are to be found.

HEATHLAND

The northeastern Netherlands abounds with delightful heathland. Some of the most picturesque heathland can be found at Drenthe (see pp302–11); herds of sheep still graze in the region of Ellertsveld.

The cranberry grows in sphagnum moss on peat moors and in fens.

Common sundew, an insect-eating plant, grows on beatbland and in the fenland of Groningen and Drenthe.

Cross-leaved heath

thrives on nutrient-poor, dry, sandy soil and in the troughs of dunes.

Heather occurs mainly in sand and peat bogs, typically poor in nutrients.

THE WEST FRISIAN ISLANDS

Perhaps the least known part of the Netherlands despite their natural beauty, the West Frisian Islands form a barrier protecting the north of the country from the worst of the North Sea. Comprising five main islands and a few sandbanks, they are among Europe's last areas of wilderness.

The West Frisian Islands are the remaining fragments of an ancient sandbank that once stretched from Cap Gris Nez in France to Esbjerg in Denmark, a remnant of the last Ice Age. Since Roman times the sea has been eroding this sandbank, creating the shallow Waddenzee behind and washing away much of the peat soil that lay beyond the dunes. The islands of Griend and Rottumeroog were threatened to such an extent that they were abandoned. Rottumerplatt, too, is uninhabited.

Monks established the first settlements as far back as the 8th century; islanders made a living from farming, fishing and collecting shellfish. On Texel and Terschelling, the two largest islands, churches dating from the 15th century still stand. Later, the islands prospered from links with the Dutch East India Company and, in the 19th century, from whaling. Vlieland and Ameland are quieter islands, good for bird-watching. Schiermonnikoog is the most isolated, with rare plant life.

Nowadays the islands, reached by ferries from the mainland, have much to offer the visitor in search of peace and quiet, with nature rambles over dunes and salt marsh, and seal- and bird-watching, especially in summer. The islands' quaint museums are strong on ecology and conservation. The best way to get around is by bicycle and visitors will find a wide range of hotels and guesthouses, excellent seafood restaurants, and some of the best sunsets anywhere.

Exploring the West Frisian Islands

Cranberry

The history of the West Frisian Islands (Waddeneilanden) has been shaped by the wind and the sea. It was not until the 17th century that the larger islands were stabilized by dykes. Den Burg on Texel, the largest village on the islands, is a historic fortification with a pleasant old centre. Nearby is Hoge Berg, with its characteristic peat walls; in the west, the distinctive tower of Den Hoorn can be seen. To the north is the unique natural area of De Slufter. The crown of the Frisian Islands, Vlieland, has the prettiest village of the islands. Terschelling, Ameland and Schiermonnikoog are typical Frisian islands, with wide beaches, partly forested dunes, villages and polders or mud flats on the Waddenzee side.

GETTING AROUND

The West Frisian Islands are reached by ferries from the mainland. Texel is served by TESO (tel. 0222-369600); no cars allowed, no reservations. Foot passengers can take a bus to De Koog or De Cocksdorp via Den Burg, or order a taxi-bus when buying their ticket. Vlieland is served by Rederij Doeksen (tel. 0900-3635736); cars not permitted. On arrival, a bus takes passengers to Posthuis, where there are taxis. Terschelling is served by Rederij Doeksen (0900-3635736); reservations recommended for cars. There is a bus service on the island, and taxis are available on arrival. Ameland is served by Rederij Wagenborg (tel. 0519-546111); reservations recommended. There are bus services to all villages. Schiermonnikoog is served by Rederij Wagenborg (tel. 0519-349050); foot passengers only. Bus service and taxi-buses connect the dock and village. Bicycles can be hired easily.

Birds of the Waddenzee

The extensive wetlands of the Waddenzee are an important area for breeding and migratory birds. The North Sea coasts of the islands are sandy, with little animal life; the Waddenzee coasts of the islands, however, consist of fine sand and clay which are rich in minerals and nutrients. The innumerable worms, molluscs and crustaceans that live here are an ideal source of food for a huge variety of ducks, seagulls and wading birds. At the peak of the migratory season (August), the number of birds here runs into millions.

Bird-watching Hide

There are many hides for bird-watchers on the mud flats of the Waddenzee, allowing the birds to be observed without disturbance.

BIRD CATCHERS

Bird catchers, whose interests in The Netherlands have gone far beyond mere hunting, have become an important pressure group for the protection of birds and the natural environment. Their organization is Vogelbescherming Nederland, based in Zeist.

Curlew

This is the largest European wading bird and is easily recognizable by its long, curved beak.

BEAK SHAPES

People are often surprised at the many varieties of birds that feed on the mud flats. The different species, however, have managed to avoid competing with one another. The various shapes and lengths of their beaks are suitable for the assorted types of food that can be found in the water and in the sand. Ducks get their food from the surface or dive for it, whereas wading birds get their food from underground – what prey at which depth underground depends on the shape of the beak. Other birds catch fish (spoonbills, cormorants or terns), shellfish (eider ducks) or even other seabirds (the white-tailed eagle), or steal their food from other birds.

The ringed plover feeds from the surface.

The lapwing feeds on small crabs in the mud.

The silver plover catches small sea-worms.

The oyster-catcher pulls shellfish out of the sand.

The black-tailed godwit feeds on worms living underground.

The curlew, with its curved sharp beak, can reach invertebrates living deep in the sand.

Arctic Tern

This extremely rare bird, which breeds in the West Frisian Islands, spends the winter in the Antarctic. This gives it the longest migratory path of all birds.

Sandwich Tern

This bird has its largest breeding colony in Holland on Griend. Its dwindling numbers mean it requires careful protection.

Oystercatcher

BIRD SPECIES

The wealth of bird species – including diving birds, petrels, cormorants, spoonbills, ducks, birds of prey, waders, scavengers, seagulls, terns, razorbills and songbirds – that occur in the Waddenzee is a good reason to ensure that the area is carefully protected. For many of the birds, these are the only breeding grounds in the Netherlands, as they are the only wetlands remaining in the Netherlands. Various parts are closed to visitors, and it is important to observe the regulations in order to help preserve the bird population.

Avocet

This magnificent wading bird has an upward-curving bill and black and white plumage.

Black-Tailed Godwit

This wading bird, with fiery red-brown plumage, is a bird of passage but spends the winters and summers in the Waddenzee.

Large numbers of oystercatchers can be seen both in winter and in summer.

Ringed Plover

This is an active bird that rarely breeds here but passes through in large numbers.

Eider Duck

The eider duck has breeding colonies on Texel, Vlieland and Terschelling. The male is far more impressive in appearance than the brown-coloured female.

Herring Gull

The herring gull is just one of the many varieties of gull that occur here. At more than half a metre (1.5 ft) long, it is an impressive bird.

Red Knot

This bird of passage stops over sometimes in summer and sometimes in winter. It is a robust bird, one that is always on the move.

The Waddenzee

Cockle

The Waddenzee is a tidal area whose sand or mud flats (wadden) are mainly exposed at low tide and disappear at high tide.

Together with the West Frisian Islands, the Waddenzee forms the last extensive wild part of Holland. The entire area has an extremely rich ecosystem because of the large sources of nourishment. It is a feeding and breeding ground for many species of birds. Two species of seal, 30 species of fish, shrimps and crabs live in the Waddenzee or come here to breed.

The VVVs (tourist offices) on the West Frisian Islands offer all kinds of sailing trips around the islands, including romantic luxury cruises on a three-master. Rederij Vooruit (tel. 0515-531485) arranges sailing trips on local boats.

Sea Lavender (Limonium vulgare), along with sea purslane and sea aster, grows in the higher parts of the salt marshes. Fields of blue-violet sea lavender flowers make a very pretty sight.

Exposed Sections of the Mud Flats

Much of the Waddenzee mud flats is exposed during low tide. This leaves places like the marina pictured below high and dry. Mooring places that are inaccessible at low tide are increasingly being dredged as marinas.

Cockles (Cardium edule), which form the diet for many bird species, are intensively harvested using mechanical methods. The catch is exported.

FLORA IN THE WADDENZEE

Because of the diversity of the Waddenzee landscape, with its changing environment (salt water and fresh water, lime-rich soil and lime-poor soil, wet land and dry land, clay ground and sandy ground), almost 900 plant species grow here. Many of them grow on the island-side of the old dunes in the dune valleys. Amongst the flowers to be found here are autumn gentian and creeping willow, as well as grasses and weeds such as black bog-rush, fragrant orchid and grass of Parnassus. Lavender is among the plants which grow on the higher ground.

Lavender (Salicornia europaea) is one of the first plants to colonize the mud flats and the low-lying parts of the salt marshes. When the land has silted up completely, the salt marsh grass establishes itself.

Cracks in the dried silt provide a good foothold for lavender, as well as for other plants.

WADLOPEN (WALKING THE MUD FLATS)

A walk on the Waddenzee takes you through salt marshes and past the uantij, a place below an island where two tidal flows meet. Since the mid-1970s, walking on the mud flats has been a popular hobby. There are now six major mud-flat walking societies: De Fryske Waedrinners (Leeuwarden, tel. 06-53359622; Dijkstra's Wadlooptochten (Pieterburen, tel. 0595-528345); Lammert Kwant (Ezinge, tel. 0594-622029); Stichting Uithuizer Wad (only for Rottumeroog; tel. 0511-522271), Stichting Wadloopcentrum Friesland (Holwerd, tel. 0519-242100) and Stichting Wadloopcentrum Pieterburen (tel. 0595-528300).

THREATS TO THE WADDENZEE

According to the Dutch oil company NAM, there are between 70 and 170 billion cubic metres (2,500 and 6,000 billion cubic feet) of natural gas beneath the Waddenzee. The value of this gas runs into many billions of euros. The Waddenzee Society is completely opposed to any gas drilling in the Waddenzee on several grounds: first, because there is no social need for it and second, because the environmental effects of drilling – in particular, the consequences the falling ground level would have on life in the Waddenzee – have not been properly investigated. For the time being, therefore, drilling on the Waddenzee is banned, pending further environmental impact studies. But the Waddenzee is also threatened by the harvesting of mussels and cockles. Since 1992, the Dutch government has scaled this back, and is considering closing the area to the shellfish industry.

Road map B2. none. district Den Helder (0223-671333).

Noorderhaaks, also known as Razende Bol (raging ball), is a fairly bleak sandbank west of Den Helder, 2.5 km (1.5 miles) offshore. The sea currents cause the island to shift eastwards towards Texel, after which another “raging ball” appears at the same point off Den Helder. The Dutch air force occasionally uses the island for target practice, but it is not off-limits for visitors. Rowing and swimming here are risky because of the powerful currents. Adventure-seekers regularly visit Noorderhaaks by boat or by helicopter, unable to resist this piece of total wilderness, where mirages are common.

Den Burg ②

Road map B2. 6,000. Emmalaan 66 (0222-314741). Mon am.

Den Burg is the main town of Texel and situated right in its centre. Around 1300, the village was fortified by a circular rampart with a moat, which are now marked by the Burgwal and Parkstraat Streets. A sheep market was once held in April and May at the Groeneplats, Den Burg's main square with the present-day town hall. Today, a sheep day is held on the first Monday of September. Further on, by the Binnenburg, or inner castle, stands the 15th-century

Late Gothic Hervormde kerk (Protestant church). The Kogerstraat runs the length of the Binnenburg. Located here is the Oudheidkamer, an antiquities museum set up in a picturesque 16th-century building, which used to be a doss-house. Today it contains period rooms, a display of artefacts and works of art in the attic, and a herb garden.

Along and around the town wall are several interesting shopping streets, such as the Weverstraat. A number of excellent restaurants are to be found on the Warmoesstraat.

In 1900, the former fishing settlement of De Koog consisted of a church (built in 1415) and a few houses and farms. The first tourist facility was the Badhotel, later the Hotel Prinses Juliana, with a garden overlooking the sea. Today, Den Koog has accommodation for 20,000 visitors in hotels, pensions and camp sites. The centre of De Koog is the Dorpsstraat, which has cafés, snack bars and discos. De Koog's attractions for visitors are the Calluna waterpark and Eco Mare, an information centre for the Waddenzee and the North Sea (see p449).

Vlieland 6

Road map C1. 1,150.

Havenweg 10 (0562-451111).

Vlieland is the smallest of the Waddenzee Islands. In some places, less than one kilometre (half a mile) separates the Waddenzee and the North Sea. Unlike the other islands, Vlieland consists only of dunes, covered with a purple haze of heather, marram grass and sea buckthorn. In the east, the woods planted just after 1900 provide a bit of variety in the landscape.

In the south is the only village, Oost-Vlieland, where the boat from Harlingen docks. Many old buildings line the main street. One of them, the Tromp's Huys (1576), used to belong to the Amsterdam Admiralty. Today it houses a museum with 19th-century paintings. The houses are separated by alleys known as "gloppen". There is no room for cars here, not even for those of the islanders.

The best way to explore Vlieland is by bicycle; the island can be covered in one day. From Oost-Vlieland, you can cycle westwards along tracks through the dunes or along the Waddenzee shoreline to the Posthuys (post house), where in the 17th century the overseas mail was brought from Amsterdam to be loaded onto ships waiting to sail. Further westwards is de Vliehors, an area of natural interest which can be explored if no military exercises are taking place here. Beware, though: you run the risk of getting stuck in the soft drifting sand. This is also where the wealthy village of West-Vlieland once stood. It was consumed by the waves after it was abandoned in 1736.

Half-way through the boat trip from Harlingen to Terschelling or Vlieland, one will come across Griend. The island was abandoned by its inhabitants after the St Lucia Flood of 1287. For centuries it seemed about to disappear beneath the waves. In 1988, the Natuurmonumenten trust, which has leased Griend since 1916, had a dam built to prevent further erosion. At high tide, the highest part of the island is just 1 m (3 ft) above the water. Access to Griend is forbidden, save for a handful of bird wardens and biology students. This is Holland's largest breeding ground for great tern.

West is a real mud-flat village, with old houses and a famous lighthouse, the Brandaris, dating from 1594. It is closed to visitors, but the same view can be enjoyed from the high dune known as the Seinpaalduin behind the village. Het Behouden Huys is a local history museum dedicated to famous islanders such as Willem Barentsz; there is also the educational Centrum voor Natuur en Landschap, where you can learn about the ecology of the mud flats.

The two largest villages in the west are Midsland and Hoorn. Midsland is surrounded by small hamlets with intriguing names such as Hee, Horp and Kaart, which date back to when the Frisians settled on the islands. The hamlet with the kerkhof van Striep cemetery is where the first church on the island was built, in the 10th century. Its outline is still visible. Further eastwards is Hoorn, with 13th-century Gothic-Romanesque St Janskerk standing on the site of the original church.

The region is best explored by bicycle; there is a cycle track to a scenic spot on a 24-m (79-ft) dune. In the mud flats in the south there are four villages. The largest of these is Nes, where the boat from Holwerd calls. Commandeurshuizen (commodores' houses) in the old centre recall the days when many islanders made their living from whaling.

Schiermonnikoog, or Lytje Pole (small land), was a farm belonging to Cistercian monks during the Middle Ages. The village of Schiermonnikoog, which is named after them, has many exquisitely restored houses. The island as a whole is a national park and under the protection of Natuurmonumenten. The beach of Schier is one of the widest in Europe. The eastern side of the island (Het Balg, Kobbbeduinen and the salt marshes) in particular make for wonderful walking areas, with their varied flora (including many orchids) and bird life. No cars at all are allowed on the island.

Nature has been left to her own devices with the 900 ha (2,225 acre) uninhabited island of Rottumerplaat. This protected nature reserve is jointly managed by the Ministry of Agriculture, Waterways and Planning, and the Friends of Rottumeroog and Rottumerplaat Society (SVRR). Outsiders are rarely admitted to the island. This has had a good effect on Rottumeroog as well as on Rottumerplaat, which has been expanding quickly. Dunes many metres in height and an impressive salt marsh are its characteristic features. The island also belongs to the seals and birds.

This most eastern of the West Frisian Islands is due to disappear into the mouth of the Ems soon. Since 1991 it has been left in the hands of nature. Attempts over many years to prevent it from drifting eastwards were unsuccessful. In 1998, the northern dunes collapsed, after which the last traces of human settlement were removed by the state forestry commission. The island is now less than 300 ha (740 acres) in size and shrinks with each storm. Walkers are prohibited in the area.

GRONINGEN

The Netherland's northernmost province is distinguished by its rich cultural history and unusual landscape, where you often see terps or small areas of elevated land. To the north and west it is bounded by the shallow Waddenzee and to the east by the Ems river estuary and the border with Germany.

The terps originated centuries ago, when the inhabitants of this region needed to protect themselves from high water levels. The elevated land is sometimes crowned by a solitary Romanesque church, visible for miles across the fens. Elsewhere in the province you will see straight roads and canals, often evidence of reclaimed land. The region grew rich during the Middle Ages from agriculture and peat extraction, and the medieval port of Appingedam, nowadays a little town inland from the port of Delfzijl, was once a member of the powerful Hanseatic League.

Groningen province is also noted for its windmills, castles and moated manor houses and, in the east, for its restored fortified towns, such as picturesque Bourtange, which is right on the border with Germany. Conservation areas abound. Close to Lauwersoog, where you can catch a ferry to Schiermonnikoog, one of the West Frisian Islands (see p275), a vast nature reserve has been established. Nearby Pieterburen has a seal sanctuary.

Groningen, the provincial capital, is proud of its glorious past and boasts a wealth of world-class museums, historic buildings and other attractions. A number of Dutch corporations have their headquarters in this thriving university city, and a further boost to the economy arrived in the 1960s after the discovery in nearby Slochteren of some of the world's largest natural gas deposits.

Exploring Groningen

Some of the most attractive and historically interesting castles, or borgs, are in the Groningen region: the medieval Fraeylemaborg in Slochteren, Menkemaborg in Uithuizen and the charming Verhildersum in Leens. The natural area around the Lauwersmeer is particularly suitable for rambling. Not far from here, in Pieterburen, is a famous refuge for seals. Ter Apel, which is on the province's eastern boundary, is a magnificent medieval monastery. Groningen itself (see pp280–85) has much to offer, including the peaceful Prinsenhof, with its beautiful gardens, and the ultra-modern Groninger Museum (see pp284–5), which houses collections that range from archaeology to oriental porcelain to modern art.

GETTING AROUND

Groningen can be reached from the south along the A28 motorway; the A7 crosses the province from Friesland in the west to Germany in the east. The best way to see the town of Groningen is on foot. From Groningen there are rail links to Roodeschool in the north, Delfzijl in the northeast and to Nieuweschans in the east. Most of the countryside is accessible by regional (interlokal) or local (buurt) buses. The Groningen region is well suited for cycling and rambling, especially the area around the Lauwersmeer, the mud-flat region (waddengebied) and Westerwolde, in the south.

Street-by-Street: Groningen ❶

The town of Groningen has for centuries been the cultural and historical capital of the province. Its glory was at its height in the 15th century, when the town was freed from the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Utrecht and was able to extend its influence into the present-day province of Friesland. In 1614, the Groninger Academie was founded, which was the precursor of the Rijksuniversiteit. Thus, in addition to being a centre of trade and government, the town also became an academic centre.

The Grote Markt is the old city centre. Many of the buildings standing on the square were badly damaged by air raids near the end of World War II. When it was rebuilt, the market was enlarged on the northern and eastern sides, and new buildings of a modern character were added.

The famous Martinitoren (St Martin tower) was also damaged but still standing, and it was possible to rebuild it. The carillon of d'Olle Griezee ("The Old Grey"), whose bells were cast by the Hemony brothers, has since been enlarged and now has four octaves and 49 bells. The Martinikerk (St Martin's Church), dating from the 13th century, still retains traces of the original building: both the northern and southern façades of the transept and the ornamental brickwork of the windows and window niches of the northern side are recognizably 13th century. During the 15th century, when the city was at the height of its development, the church was extended in Gothic style. The choir, which features sumptuous murals from 1530 illustrating the life of Christ, had been completed before 1425. The central part of the church became a hall-type church. East of the Grote Markt is the Poelestraat, which on fine days comes to life with outdoor cafés and restaurants.

The Chinese garden ("Het verborgen rijk van Ming", or "The hidden Ming Empire") is well worth a visit. It is a faithful reconstruction of a real garden owned by a 16th-century high Chinese official of the Ming Dynasty (1368–1644). It features original Chinese pagodas, which have been painstakingly restored by Chinese craftsmen into fine pavilions and then beautifully decorated with carvings of lions and dragons. Het verborgen rijk van Ming also has a waterfall and a tea house where visitors can enjoy Chinese refreshments.

Another interesting theme garden is the Ogham Gardens, a Celtic garden whose main attractions is the Horoscope of Trees, consisting of an earth-and-stone circular wall, which is a replica of the enclosures the ancient Celts built to live within. Inside the circle is a labyrinth representing life; at its centre is a small garden and the Well of Wisdom.

In summer, a variety of exhibitions and events are held on the grounds, attracting locals and tourists alike.

MUSEUM GUIDE

Groninger Museum was designed by Alessandro Mendini (1931). He based the design around the collections of the museum, which consisted of archaeology, applied arts and early and modern pictorial arts. The focus of the building is the 30-m (98-ft) tower in the middle.

ABEL TASMAN (1603-59)

Abel Janszoon Tasman was born in Lutjegast in 1603 but lived in Amsterdam from an early age. In 1633, as a navigating officer for the Dutch East India Company (see pp48-9), he travelled to Asia. In 1642, he sailed on the yacht De Heemskerck and then with the cargo ship Zeebaen in search of the legendary southern continent. Tasman charted some of the coast and later reached New Zealand's South Island. On 13 June 1643, he arrived in Batavia (now Jakarta), which he called home until his death 16 years later. From 1644 to 1648, he sat on the Batavian council of justice; during this time he also joined trading missions to Sumatra (1646) and Siam (1647). Tasman died on 10 October 1659, having bequeathed his money to the poor of Lutjegast.

seemed to be taking a turn for the worse. In 1846, the then owner, Ferdinand Folef Kniphausen, nicknamed "the mad squire", burned all the family portraits in a drunken fit. Later, the orangery and part of the upper floor were destroyed by fire. In 1950, the municipality bought the castle. Eight years later, the Nationaal Rijtuigmuseum, featuring horse-drawn vehicles, was established here. It contains a unique collection of royal coaches, gigs, mail coaches and hackney carriages.

This seal nursery was founded by Lenie 't Hart and others as a reception centre for sick and disabled seals from the nearby Waddenzee, where some 1,750 seals live. Half of these owe their lives to care they received here.

This town, a member of the Hanseatic League in the Middle Ages, was granted its charter in 1327. Standing at a junction of waterways as it once did and with a seaport, it quickly grew into a major international trading city. The medieval layout of the city has remained largely unchanged. The hanging kitchens, visible from the Vlienterbrug bridge, were built this way to create more space in the houses. Directly over the water are doors from which people drew water for their household needs.

In the 18th century, the town again prospered, as the Ebenaëzerhuis well illustrates. Appingedam, with over 65 listed buildings, has a preservation order as a town of historical interest.

When a natural gas field was discovered here in 1959, Slochteren gained overnight national renown. The "Slochteren Dome" appeared to be the largest in the world when it was first discovered, and the revenue it brought in made Holland rich.

The past of this historic town is closely associated with the lords of the Fraeylemaborg. The Reformed Church in Slochteren consists of the remnants of a 13th-century Fraeylemaborg is one of the most imposing castles of Groningen. It dates back to the Middle Ages. Three embrasures in the kitchen and the hall above it bear silent witness to the defensive functions the castle once had. In the 17th century, two side wings were added, and in the 18th century it was given its present form with the addition of the monumental main wing. The castle is surrounded by a double moat.

The extensive wooded park just beyond the castle is an interesting combination of the 18th-century Baroque garden style and the 19th-century English landscape gardens.

Parkstad Veendam (Veendam Garden City) is so called for the lush greenery in the town, which for centuries was the industrial heart of the peat colonies.

However, at the end of the 19th century, peat-cutting fell into decline. Although shipping grew in importance – Veendam even had its own maritime school – the town retained its character as a peat-cutting town.

The Veenkoloniaal Museum (peat colony museum) offers a permanent exhibition illustrating the history of peat-cutting, navigation, agriculture and industry in the Groningen peatlands.

The most renowned inhabitant of Veendam was Anthony Winkler Prins (1817–1908), who wrote the famous encyclopaedia which is still associated with his name.

The defence works were continuously upgraded, until the fort gradually lost its defensive functions. It has now been painstakingly restored to its 18th-century appearance. Museum “De Baracquen” exhibits artifacts excavated in the fort.

FRIESLAND

Friesland, or Fryslân as it is officially called, is a remarkable province perhaps best known outside the Netherlands for its distinctive Frisian cows. Parts of it are below sea level, and its size has increased since historic times as a result of land reclamation schemes on the former Zuiderzee.

Much of the province is fenland, a feature which no doubt helped the freedom-loving Frisians fight off invaders. The 1345 battle of Warns, when the Frisians beat the Dutch army, is still commemorated every year. In the 7th century, the Frisians under their king Radboud inhabited an independent territory that stretched all the way to Flanders and Cologne (see pp44-5), and they have preserved their distinctive language to this day. Other features peculiar to this province are unique sports and recreations like sailing and racing in skûltjes (traditional Frisian boats), hunting for plovers' eggs, fierljeppen (pole-vaulting), keatsen (a ball game), and the famous Elfstedentocht, a winter ice-skating marathon around 11 Frisian towns.

The provincial capital of Leeuwarden has some interesting and unique museums, while elsewhere in the province visitors can enjoy collections consisting of items as diverse as historic costumes and hats, ceramics, letters, ice skates and sledges, vernacular paintings, bells, model boats and human mummies. Outside the towns, the landscape is interesting too, from the mud flats on the Waddenzee to the forests and heathland of the Drents-Friese Woud National Park, away to the east. Tourism is becoming increasingly important in Friesland nowadays and its inhabitants less insular. Visitors are greeted with open arms and Jo binne tige welcom – “You are heartily welcome.”

Exploring Friesland

Frisian flag

Friesland is famous for its vast meadows and its distinctive farmhouses of the kop-bals-romp and stelp types. It also boasts a varied landscape. In the south-west are the popular Friese meren (Frisian lakes), while the north is typified by undulating dykes, terp villages and church steeples with pitched roofs. Gaasterland in the south has rolling woodlands and cliffs, whereas the Friese wouden (Frisian woods) in the province's southeastern corner, with their forests, heathland and drifting sands, are more reminiscent of Drenthe.

GETTING AROUND

Friesland is convenient and easy to get to. It is crossed by the A7 (east-west) and the A32 (north-south) motorways. Rail and bus links are unproblematic. Most of the larger villages and towns have a railway station; those which don't can be reached by bus. From Harlingen, Holwerd or Lauwersoog, the islands are only a short boat ride away. The province also has a good network of minor roads, walking routes and cycle tracks.

The Elfstedentocht

1909: the first official tocht

The Elfstedentocht, or 11-town race, is a 200-km (124-mile) ice-skating marathon which passes through Leeuwarden, Skeeen, IJlst, Sloten, Stavoren, Hindeloopen, Workum, Bolsward, Harlingen, Franeker, Dokkum and back to Leeuwarden. Participants are awarded the famous Elfstedenkruisje only when they have collected all the stamps on their starter's card and provided they get back to Leeuwarden before midnight. The winner of the race is guaranteed eternal fame.

The "Elfstedenkruisje"

(Elfsteden cross) is in the shape of a Maltese cross. In the middle is an enamel coat of arms of Friesland and the inscription "De Friesche Elf Steden" – "The 11 Frisian towns".

THE TOCHT DER TOCHTEN

The Tocht der Tochten (literally, "Race of Races"), as the Elfstedentocht is known, is a combination of race and touring marathon and has acquired almost mythical status in the Netherlands. The race is a real media event, keeping millions glued to their television screens. Although the marathon has been held only 15 times in the last century, the entire country falls under the spell of the event as soon as the mercury falls even slightly below zero. If there is a lasting frost, the area supervisors measure daily the thickness of the ice, as it has to be at least 15 cm (6 in) thick for the race to be held. When the magic words It sil beve (It shall happen) are uttered by the supervisors, Friesland is transformed, overflowing with excited crowds. Trains are packed, the roads are jammed with cars and entire villages are mobilized to provide hot tea and oranges for the skaters. Wandering musicians whip the crowd into a frenzy of enthusiasm. The Dutch language has been enriched with the Frisian word klúnen, which means to walk overland on skates past places where the ice is impassable.

Franeker in a festive mood

Dropping out is a common occurrence during the race. Despite being affected by snow blindness and symptoms of frostbite, many participants in the race attempt to complete the course. Some break down in tears when they realize that they will be unable to collect the much-coveted Elfstedenkruisje (Elfsteden cross).

The hamlet of Bartlehiem is famous for its foot-bridge over the Finkumervaart. Bartlehiem is the best-known skating area in all of Holland and is a psychological milestone for the skaters. Those who still must get to Dokkum may pass skaters travelling in the opposite direction, having already won their stamp from the northernmost point on the route. Many skaters have to take the Bartlehiem-Dokkum section in the dark. The Northern Lights seen at this time of year also attract thousands of spectators.

Long before sunrise, tens of thousands of skaters start off from the FEC (Frisian Exhibition Centre) in Leeuwarden.

Two-time winner Evert van Benthem

All winners of the Elfstedentocht are national heroes, but Evert van Benthem even more so. A farmer from Sint-Jansklooster, he managed to cross the finishing line at the Bonkevaart in Leeuwarden in first place twice in a row (1985 and 1986). Van Benthem's double victory gave him a legendary status throughout the Netherlands. The prize itself is a laurel wreath, both for men and for women. The names of the winners are engraved on the Elfstedenrijder monument in Leeuwarden.

THE EERSTE FRIESE SCHAATSMUSEUM

The Eerste Friese Schaatsmuseum (first Frisian skating museum) in Hindeloopen (see p298) has among its exhibits such items as antique skates, original workshops, sleds and historical documents covering the 90 or so years that the Elfstedentocht has been held. Displays on innumerable winners, including Reinier Paping, Jeen van den Berg and Henk Angenet, are also featured here. Among the highlights of the museum's collection are the skating packs of various heroes of the event, the skates of two-time winner Evert van Benthem and the starter's card of WA van Buren. One of the most moving exhibits in the collection is the right big toe of Tinus Udding, which he lost to frostbite during the harsh race in the cold winter of 1963.

Frisian capital and home to Mata Hari, Peter Jelles Troelstra and Jan Jacob Slauerhoff, Leeuwarden was also the residence of the Frisian Nassau (1584–1747). The town park and gardens of the Prinsentuin and Stadhouderslijk Hof date back to this period.

Characteristic of Leeuwarden is the statue of Us Mem (our mother), honouring the famous Frisian cattle. The Fries Museum, situated in an 18th-century patrician house, has a large collection of items excavated from terps, as well as collections of clothes, art and applied arts.

The same building also houses the Verzetsmuseum Friesland, a collection and educational facility dedicated to the resistance movement in the province, where more than 600 Jewish people were killed, and nearly 300 members of the resistance also lost their lives. There is a chronological exhibition on the Second World War and its aftermath, explorations of contemporary wars and racism, and documents and artifacts from the time.

On Oldehoofsterkerkhof, the leaning tower of the Oldehove dominates the skyline. When building began in 1529, the church tower was going to be the tallest in the Netherlands. Unfortunately, the foundations began to sink, and so the work stopped just three years later. The tower has remained incomplete ever since. The top of the tower offers an excellent view over Leeuwarden and its environs, reaching as far as the coast.

The museum Het Prinsessehof, housed in a palace which was formerly the residence of Maria Louise van Hessen-Kassel (also known as Marijke Meu), contains a unique collection of ceramics

The trading and garrison town of Dokkum was the headquarters of the Frisian Admiralty between 1596 and 1645, though it owes its fame above all to the killing here of St Boniface by pagan Frisians in AD 754 (see pp44–5). The local history museum, the Admiraliteitshuis, has an exhibition on the life of the saint. Other exhibits include artifacts excavated from terps, costumes, silverware, handicrafts and folk art. In addition to the Bonifatiuskerk, Dokkum has a park for religious processions with the stations of the cross and a chapel. Water drawn from the well of Bonifatiusbron is believed to have therapeutic qualities. Near the well is a statue of the saint after whom it is named. Saint Boniface was actually an Englishman, born in 675, who came to the region on a mission to convert the Frisians. Heathens attacked Boniface and his companions. Despite holding a bible in front of his face, Boniface was killed by a sword.

In the centre, Natuurmuseum Dokkum explores all aspects of the natural world in Friesland, both living and inanimate. There are cabinets of rocks, stones, shells and insects, and there is a “sound cabinet” that plays the songs of various birds from the area.

Franeker was a university town from 1585 to 1811. Today, it is the centre of skating in Friesland. In and around the Voorstraat are several monumental buildings, including the 15th-century Martenahuis. The Cammingahuis, which dates from the 14th century, now houses the Kaatsmuseum (skating museum). The Museum Martena, in a fine 18th-century building, has a collection about the former university. The Renaissance Stadhuis (town hall) has an ornate façade. Opposite is the Planetarium Friesland (1781), built by wool industrialist Eise Eisinga. For two centuries, the planets have rotated around its ceiling. Beside the Sjukelân, a sacred place for Frisian skating, is the Bogt fen Guné (16th century), Holland's oldest student residence.

MATA HARI

Margaretha Geertruida Zelle (1876–1917), who became known to all the world as Mata Hari (Malaysian for “eye of the day”), grew up in Leeuwarden. Her life came to a tragic end in Vincennes outside Paris, where she was executed by firing squad after a French tribunal found her guilty of spying for the Germans. The Fries Museum tells you more about this legendary woman, who has gained international notoriety through films and books about her life. The house where she lived with her parents from 1883 to 1890 on Grote Kerkstraat 212 now houses the Frysk Letterkundig Museum (Frisian museum of letters).

The elongated Zuiderzee town of Workum flourished around 1300. Workum is known for the fine façades of its houses and its unfinished 16th-century church, the Grote of Gertrudiskerk. Beside the lock is the centuries-old wharf of de Hoop, where traditional boats are still built. The most popular attraction in Workum is Jopie Huisman Museum, which is the most-visited museum in Friesland. It features the autodidactic art of painter and scrap metal merchant Jopie Huisman (1922–2000). His drawings and paintings tell the stories of the daily grind and poverty, the drudgery and toil of the tradesman, the housewife and the ordinary person.

The picturesque 17th-century weigh house contains the Museum Warkums Erfskip. This museum delves into the history of Workum, and, principally, that of its shipping and pottery industries.

Hindeloopen plays a special role in Friesland. This picturesque old town of sea-farers and fishermen has its own dialect, its own costume and its own style of painting. The town is full of little canals with wooden bridges and a variety of pretty captains' houses, with their characteristic façades. One of the most distinctive spots is the picturesque 17th-century lock-keeper's house by the port, with its wooden bell-tower.

In the Museum Hidde Nijland Stichting (museum of the Hidde Nijland foundation), the life of the wealthy citizens of Hindeloopen during the 18th century is showcased. Well-appointed period rooms show the colourful clothes and the now-famous painted furniture of the time. A substantial exhibition of paintings vividly illustrates the development of painting in Hindeloopen.

The Eerste Friese Schaatsmuseum (first Frisian skating museum) (see p295) offers a unique collection of old skates. It also has a fine exhibition dedicated to the Elfstedentocht and various traditional workshops (such as a smithy and a carpenter's), as well as a comprehensive collection of sledges and historical material such as old tiles and prints.

Gaasterland 8

Road map C2. De Brink 4, Oudemirdum (0514-571777).

This area of fine, rolling woodlands in the southwest-ern corner of Friesland offers many opportunities for walking and cycling. The region's name comes from the word "gaast", which refers to the sandy heights formed during the last two Ice Ages.

At the edge of Gaasterland are a number of steep cliffs, such as the Rode Klif and the Oudemirdumerklif, formed when the Zuiderzee eroded the coastline. On the Rode Klif at Laaxum is an enormous boulder bearing the inscription Leaver dea as slaef, or, Rather dead than a slave, a memento of the 1345 Frisian victory over the Dutch.

A cyclist in Gaasterland

The Rijsterbos wood, with its abundant bracken, dates from the 17th century and once consisted mainly of oak. The little river of Luts, which is now known because of the Elfstedentocht, was used for the transport of oak logs and oak bark for tanneries. In the village of Oudemirdum is a hostel, shops and an old pump. Informatiecentrum Mar en Klif (Sea and Cliff Information Centre) has information about how the landscape was formed and about local flora and fauna. Special attention is paid to badgers, and in the wild garden, a bat tower has been built.

The Luts river in Balk, flanked by linden trees, inspired the poem Mei by Herman Gorter (1864–1927).

On either side of the town are old cannons. The old fortress mill at the Lemsterpoort is an octagonal bovenkruijer-type mill from 1755. The Museum Stedhús Sleat houses the Laterna Magica, a museum of magic lanterns, an antique museum and a collection of costumes, hats, fans and bells.

SCHUITJE SAILING

Schuitje sailing, or skûtsjesilen, is a sport which has gained great popularity in the lakes of Friesland, skûtje being the name of the typical local spritsail barges. Originally used for the carriage of goods and as ferries, these boats are raced by representatives of various towns and villages. The result is a series of spectacular events held in July and August in various places, each time on a different lake and from a different base. Every day certain prizes are won, and on the last day, in Sneek, the champion of the year is announced and fêted. The races are held over the course of 11 racing days and three rest days.

The Thialfstadion ⑩

The Thialfstadion in Heerenveen, completely renovated in 2001, is regarded as the temple of Dutch ice-skating and has international renown. The exuberant crowds that converge on the stadium for international events create a unique atmosphere. Skating heroes such as Marianne Timmer, Gunda Niemann and Rintje Ritsma have all experienced emotional highlights in their sporting careers here.

THE ART OF ICE-MAKING

Making a good ice surface is an art. The Thialf ice-makers strive to strike a balance between deformation – the extent to which the ice breaks down under the pressure of the skate – and the smoothness of the ice.

Underneath the ice are 70 km (43 miles) of cooling elements.

Thialf Spectators

The fans here are famous for their colourful garb and their imaginative banners.

The great hall covers an area of 15,000 m<sup>2</sup> (17,950 sq yd) and can accommodate 13,000 spectators.

The ice hockey hall is 1,800 m<sup>2</sup> (2,150 sq yd) and has room for 4,000 spectators.

Hinged Skates

Skates which have a hinge between the shoe and the blade give significantly better results. All new world records have been achieved with the help of klap-schaatsen (hinged skates).

Triumph

The climax of every major skating event in the Thialfstadion is the procession of winners through the stadium on a special sleigh drawn by a Frisian horse.

This region, whose name literally means “the old fens”, is a fine area of peat-marshes with reedlands, swampy woodlands and sunken polders between Earnewâld and Grou. The lakes were formed in the 17th and 18th centuries by peat-cutting and now offer a home to over 100 species of birds and approximately 400 plant species. There is a large colony of great cormorants and various rare birds such as the spotted crane, the purple heron, the white-fronted goose, the barnacle goose, the Eurasian wigeon and the ruff, all of which are best watched in spring.

In and around the water are water lilies, yellow water lily, marsh lousewort and cotton-grass. The area's hayfields are yellow with marsh marigold in spring.

Reidplûm visitors' centre of It Fryske Gea at Earnewâld provides information on the surrounding area and is a good starting point for hiking and sailing expeditions. Beside the centre is the Eibertshiem, a breeding centre for storks.

A great deal of attention has been paid to water cleanliness in the region, and now otters have returned to breed. In winter, the area hosts many skating tours.

Beetsterzwaag 13

Road map D2. 3,700.

This village was once one of the seats of the Frisian landed gentry and so has a number of stately homes and gardens. Fine examples of these are Lauswolt, the Lycklamahuis and the Harinxmastate. Beetsterzwaag is surrounded by a varied countryside, with coniferous and deciduous forests, heath and fens offering ample opportunities for a leisurely afternoon of rambling and cycling.

Appelscha 14

Road map D2. 4,500.
 Boerestreek 23 (0516-431760).

The vast coniferous forests, drifting sands and colourful heath and fen areas around Appelscha form stunning surroundings. The village was created in the 19th century when the main industry was peat-cutting and is now on the edge of the Nationaal Park Drents-Friese Woud.

A favourite place with visitors is the Kale Duinen area of drifting sands. On the Bosberg – at 26 m (85 ft) above sea level, the highest spot in the area – is a viewing tower and information centre.

A distinctive phenomenon in southeast Friesland is the Klokkenstoel (bell stool). This “poor men’s church tower” was a provisional church tower built when funds were low; it was usually situated in the churchyard. In Appelscha you will find a klokkenstoel dating from 1453. Langedijke is home to what is presumed to be the oldest bell in the Netherlands, dating from 1300.

DRENTHÉ

Drenthé was once a free republic of farmers, and its inhabitants have always lived close to the land. Although the region has no cities and few towns, the rural poverty that once prevailed is no more, and tourists, especially those interested in archaeology and nature, are arriving in increasing numbers.

Drenthé, whose landscape is a product of the last Ice Age, has managed to keep time at bay by holding on to its character, reputed by the rest of the country to have been born of peat, gin and suspicion. Moraines and megaliths dot the countryside. The extensive woodland, heathland and peat bogs have a primeval atmosphere, although this does not mean that there has been no human intervention. The top level of peat has been largely removed, while the traditional esdorps, the local hamlets, have modern outskirts. However, peat moors and forests, ancient burial mounds, canals, flocks of sheep and green fields are the principal features here.

There are more than 50 megaliths in Drenthé, the remains of tombs dating from the Neolithic era; information about this period, with archaeological finds, is displayed in the museum at Borger. Other museums in the region feature glass blowing, artworks, natural history and paper-cutting. Orvelte boasts a fine open-air museum with Saxon farmhouses and traditional crafts, while Dwingeloo looks to the future at the Planetron observatory and planetarium.

Visitors come to Drenthé for peace and quiet after the rigours of city life. But this does not mean there are no facilities – local centres such as Assen, Emmen and Hoogeveen are urbanized areas that grew out of villages, and there is a variety of hotels, guesthouses and restaurants throughout the region.

Exploring Drenthe

The finest natural areas of Drenthe are the Hondsrug ridge, between Zuidlaren and Emmen, and the Ellertsveld region between Assen and Emmen. The areas around Diever, Dwingeloo and Norg are a resplendent green (or purple, when the heather is in bloom). The eastern part of the region, with its endless excavated peatlands and the wilderness of the Amsterdamsche Veld, is relatively unknown. The provincial capital of Assen is also a regional centre, as is Emmen, where Noorder Dierenpark Zoo, in the middle of the town, has become one of the most-visited attractions in Holland. The megaliths are concentrated around Emmen, along the Hondsrug and at Havelte.

GETTING AROUND

Every year in July, Drenthé is the venue of the Rijwielvierdaagse, a four-day cycle tour that attracts more than 25,000 participants. There are 500 km (310 miles) of marked cycle routes in the region. The A28 motorway crosses the province through Meppel, Hogeveen and Assen, and the railway follows the same route. Other motorways include the N371 from Meppel to Assen along the Drentse Hoofdvaart, the N37 Hogeveen-Emmen and the N34 Emmen-Zuidlaren. Emmen is also the last stop on the railway to Zwolle via Coevorden. Bus service is limited, particularly in the evenings.

The Megalith Route ①

Of the 54 Megaliths in Holland, 52 are in Drenthe and the remaining two are in Groningen. These megaliths, or bunebedden, are the remains of ancient tombs built of boulders some 5,000 years ago by the Neolithic Beaker Folk. What can be seen today are only the frameworks of the tombs, which were all hidden underneath sandhills. It is still not known whether these were common graves or the tombs of prominent individuals.

At Diever and Havelte are three megaliths which are not on the route described here. The largest consists of 23 upright stones, 9 top stones, 2 keystones and a gate of 4 uprights and 2 top stones. At least 665 ancient pots have been found here. In World War II, the megalith was demolished to make way for an airfield. It was reconstructed in 1950.

Megalith at Loon ⑨ One of the best-preserved megaliths in Holland is at Loon, northeast of Assen. Before 1870 it was in even better condition, when the original top stone was still in place.

Witte Wieven ① are ghosts that inhabit the tumuli, such as the Negen Bergen at Norg. They come out at midnight – particularly when it is misty – to dance.

The Great Megalith ⑧ of Balloo is at the end of a sandy path in the Tumulibos woods, an area which abounds with tumuli.

BUILDING THE MEGALITHS

Until the 19th century, it was believed that the megaliths were built by the buynen, giants of great strength and after whom the bunebedden are named. Modern historians believe that the boulders were placed with their flat edges on rollers, which thus allowed them to be moved to the site of the tomb. The upright stones were placed in pits dug beforehand. A gentle slope of earth was then made to allow the top stones to be dragged up. There is, however, no explanation of how the people of the Stone Age managed to organize such large-scale projects.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Length: 95 km (60 miles)

Stopping-off places: All villages on the route offer refreshments and meals. To see most megaliths you will need to leave your car and walk, as only a few are by the roadside. They are almost invariably well sign-posted and make excellent picnic spots.

Anloo ② is one of the most picturesque Drenthe villages.

The largest megalith in Holland ③ measures 22.5 m (74 ft), has 9 top stones and 26 upright stones. Excavations were carried out in Borger in 1685, but none of the finds has been preserved.

Het Flint'n Hoes, the Nationaal Hunebedden Informatiecentrum ④, (National Megalith Information Centre), has been set up beside Holland's largest megalith.

The Exloo Necklace ⑤ was found in the peat in 1881. It is made of beads of tin, faience, bronze and amber, which is evidence of trading links between prehistoric Drenthe and the Baltic countries, Cornwall and even Egypt.

Flint was the main material used by the hunter-gatherers of prehistoric Drenthe to make such items as knives, axes, scrapers and arrowheads.

MEGALITHS (HUNEBEDDEN)

There are no longer any complete megaliths. Until 1734, when trading in boulders was forbidden, thousands of megaliths were hacked up to be used as building material. There are definite traces of 88 megaliths, 82 of them in Drenthe. The 54 surviving megaliths are all restorations. The most common finds from excavations are pottery shards. Scrapers, axes, arrowheads, and amber and copper jewellery – all extremely valuable trading goods in Drenthe in 3000 BC – are much rarer finds.

De Papeleze Kerk (the Popeless Church) ⑥
This megalith is so called because of the Calvinist sermons that were held here in the 16th century against the "popish" (Catholic) faith. In 1959, the megalith was restored to its original state, to the extent of covering half of the tomb with sand.

Assen 2

Road map D2. 61,500.

Marktstraat 8 (0900-2022393).

Wed, Sat.

Assen is the capital of Drenthe, although it was only upgraded from a village to a town in 1809. The cloister of the abbey church of Maria in Campis (1258–1600) now forms part of the Rijksarchief (national archive) of the Brink. Also on the Brink is the Drents Museum of local history, which is housed in the abbey church, the Ontvangershuis (1698), the Drostenhuis (1778) and Provinciehuis (1885). The museum contains a wealth of exhibits on prehistoric times and the town's history as well as collections of local art and a "discovery room" for children. There are also collections of local art, including works by Bernard Von Dülmen-Krumpelmann (1897–1987).

The controversial finds of Tjerk Vermaning (1929–87), who in the 1960s single-handedly extended the history of human habitation in Holland by tens of thousands of years, are in a separate display case: disputes on the genuineness of the flint tools he found have not yet been resolved.

Outside the formal gardens of the Drostenhuis is the town's trademark Bartje, a statue of the little peasant boy from Dutch author Anne de Vries' book (1935) who did not want to pray before his daily meals of brown beans.

The Vaart and the Markt have the characteristic stately white houses of Assen, which were built in the late 18th to the early 19th century.

Between Markt and Brink is the commercial centre with its pedestrian precinct and excellent facilities. Modern-day Assen comes to life when the circuit van Assen TT motorcycle racing event is held here each year on the last Saturday in June. Around 100,000 spectators descend on the town, which is home to the only remaining circuit from the championship's inaugural season in 1949.

Younger children who have gained a taste for speed and bikes at the TT circuit will enjoy a visit to Verkeerspark Assen (see p435). This is a "traffic park" for children, where they can learn the rules of the road while driving miniature cars and scooters around an artificial town, complete with traffic lights, road signs and traffic police. Older children can use quad bikes and go-karts. Other attractions include a boating lake, mini-golf and a climbing tower.

The Romanesque church on the Brink dates from the 13th century. The unique frescoes in the choir have barely survived through the centuries and are in very poor condition.

Environs

The area around Norg is steeped in prehistory. Three megalithic tombs are to be found there, while in the Noorderveld are Bronze Age tumuli (the Negen Bergen). Norgersholt is the name given to the oak woods where the local people used to assemble during the Middle Ages.

Eelde-Paterswolde 4

Two villages merge together at Eelde-Paterswolde and are squeezed between the Paterswoldse Meer lake and Groningen Airport, which despite its name is in Drenthe not Groningen. The lake is popular among water sports enthusiasts. The airport serves mainly domestic flights (it is a half-hour flight to Schiphol) and flying enthusiasts.

The distinctive modern brick building housing the Museum voor figuratieve Kunst De Buitenplaats (De Buitenplaats museum of figurative art) was designed by the architects Alberts and Van Huut. It is a fine example of their organic architecture. In addition to hosting changing exhibitions, the museum is used as a concert hall. There are also formal and landscape gardens, the former fronting the 17th-century curator's residence, the Nijsinghuis. Since 1983 the house has been painted by figurative artists and is periodically opened to visitors by arrangement.

The Eelde part of town is home to the Klompennuseum Gebroeders Wietzes. Named in honour of the last two clog-makers to live in the village, the museum gives an overview of the development of the clog. It displays examples of clogs from around the world. Most visitors, however, come to see the world's largest clog, which is 6.5 m (21 ft) long.

The colourful Zuidlaren horse market, now the largest in Western Europe, predates even the 13th-century church which stands on the Brink. The market is held in April and October. The 17th-century Havezathe Laarwoud was built on the remnants of the fortified residence of the counts of Heiden, who ruled the region in the 14th century. Today it is the town hall. The Zuidlaardermeer lake offers everything that watersports enthusiasts may require. Children will especially enjoy the subtropical swimming complex of Aqualaren as well as De Sprookjeshof recreation centre with playpark; they can be combined on a round tour.

Between the Drentse sand plateau in the west and the Drents-Groningen peat moors in the east lies the Hondsrug ridge. Prehistoric people found it a safe place to settle, and it is the area where the megaliths now stand (see pp306–7).

The Drentse Aa river basin, the old villages of Gieten, Gasselte, Exloo and Odoorn, the drifting sand areas of the Drouwenerzand and the heathland of Ellertsveld are particularly attractive hiking areas, with plenty of streams in which to cool off.

In the centre of Eexloo, the Bebinghehoes is a cultural museum in a beautiful 18th-century, thatched farmhouse. The house itself gives an impression of farming life 200 years ago, while the coach house presents a display of carriages from the age of horse-drawn transport. There is also a children's farm, with goats, sheep, chickens and ducks, and a petting area.

Onder de Molen, Grote Brink 22 (0900-2022393).

Rolde was important for a considerable time. There are prehistoric tumuli (in the Tumulibos woods), and three megaliths, two of which are on the mound directly behind the church. During the Middle Ages, people were tried at the Ballooërkuil; if guilty they were held prisoner in the 15th-century church, a magnificent Gothic edifice. Forests, peatland and drifting sands surround the village. Sheep graze on the Ballooërveld.

Borger is the capital of the hunebeddengebied, or megalith region. There are eight megaliths in and around the town, including the largest in Holland. Nearby is the Nationaal Hunebedden Informatiecentrum ('t Flint'n Hoes), with a fine exhibition about the Beaker Folk and a stone casket from the most recently excavated megalith, which was discovered in 1982 in Groningen.

The Hoofdstraat (main street) features a Late Gothic 14th-century church, which now houses the Museum voor Papierknipkunst (paper-cutting museum) and Saxon farmhouses which bear witness to a prosperous past. However, Westerbork is visited primarily for its more recent history. In World War II, the Westerbork Transit Camp stood here. It was from this camp that 107,000 Jews, Gypsies and resistance fighters were held before deportation to the Nazi extermination camps. Anne Frank (see pp108–9) was one of its inmates.

The first thing that strikes visitors about Dwingeloo is the deformed dome of the 14th-century church tower (the Siepelkerk). You can read about the legend behind this oddity on the information board located nearby.

There is some impressive countryside around the town. The Dwingelderveld is a national park and the krentenbossen (currant plantations) which flower in April and May – the fruit ripening in July or August – are delightful in every respect: they are pleasant to the eye and to the taste buds. At the edge of the Dwingelose Heide heath is a radio-telescope.

Diever was an important centre from prehistoric times to the Middle Ages. Tumuli, megaliths and remains of the 9th-century wooden foundations of the village church lend it historical importance. The church features a 12th-century Romanesque tower of tufa stone. Diever is in the middle of the Nationaal Park Het Drents-Friese Woud: the town is now synonymous with cycling and rambling.

In summer, the Shakespeare-markten (Shakespeare fair) is held during performances of the playwright's works in the open-air theatre.

OVERIJSSSEL

Overijssel, a province in the east of Holland, has many areas of natural beauty and lovely old towns. In a sense it is a province of two halves, divided by the heathland and woods of the Sallandse Heuvelrug near Nijverdal, which separate the eastern district of Twente from the rest of the province.

This division is noticeable in many ways. The two halves differ in their spoken dialect, and they each have their own cultural traditions. There are also religious differences, with Twente being mainly Catholic while the rest of the province is strictly Protestant. Twente, with its larger towns, has a more modern appearance, and Enschede, for example, is livelier than western towns like Zwolle and Deventer.

Zwolle, however, is the capital of the province, a charming town dating back to the 13th century, when its port at a busy river junction led it to join the powerful Hanseatic League, growing rich from trade with England and the Baltic. Kampen and Deventer, on the IJssel river, were later members of the same league.

Overijssel's numerous unique museums and attractions highlight local history and printing, tobacco, salt and farm-houses, as well as traditional costumes, tin soldiers, Dutch painting and modern art. For children, the Hellendoorn adventure park (see p434), the Los Hoes open-air museum and Ecodrome Park are always popular.

Apart from these activities, however, the principal attraction in Overijssel is the countryside, which is ideal for walking, hiking and touring by bicycle. In places like Giethoorn you can tour the rivers, lakes and canals by boat, while the Weerribben wetlands in the northwest offer opportunities for nature rambles and watersports.

Exploring Overijssel

The impressive historical monuments of Deventer and Kampen recall their prosperous pasts as Hanseatic cities. However, Overijssel has plenty to offer those who are interested in more than splendid old buildings. Those who enjoy peace and natural surroundings will find some of the finest spots in Holland. The peaceful countryside of the Sallandse Heuvelrug is ideal for rambling walks, while De Weerribben is suitable for yachting. There are many picturesque spots, such as Ootmarsum, Delden and Giethoorn, and children will love the amusement part at Hellendoorn (see p434). In addition to this, Overijssel also has many interesting museums, such as the national tin figure museum in Ommen.

GETTING AROUND

Overijssel can be explored easily by car, bicycle or on foot. Large parts of the region are also well connected by public transport. Note, however, that bus timetables are different on weekends than on weekdays. Areas of natural beauty such as De Weerribben, for example, are not easy to reach by public transport on weekends. In some places, too, buses operate only during the daytime.

Zwolle ①

Road map D3. 107,000.

Grote Kerkplein 15 (0900-1122375). Fri (cattle market), Sat.

In the middle ages, Zwolle, capital of the province of Overijssel, was, along with towns such as Deventer, Kampen and Zutphen, a city of the Hanseatic League, a network of trading cities. Its past is evident in the relatively large historical centre. The finest buildings in Zwolle, which was granted its city charter in 1230, are largely to be found in the area that used to fall within the city fortifications, which can still be seen in the form of a moat. However, only a few dozen metres of these ancient fortifications are left standing, along with the fine Sassenpoort gate, dating from 1406, and the Late Gothic 15th-century Pelsertoren tower.

On one side of the Grote Kerkplein is a sculpture by Rodin entitled Adam, while on the Grote Markt stands the magnificent building of the Hoofdwacht (guard house), which dates from 1614. Today it houses a police station.

The Grote Kerk, also known as St Michaelskerk, is worth a visit as well. The original Romanesque church, built in 1040, was enlarged in 1370 and again in 1452 to become the present-day three-naved Gothic church.

The most recent addition to Zwolle's cultural landscape is the Paleis aan de Blijmarkt, a contemporary art museum that opened in 2005. Housed in a grand Neo-Classical building dating from 1838, the renovated light-filled galleries hold works by the likes of Van Gogh, Picasso and Mondrian.

The Stedelijk Museum Zwolle (Zwolle local history museum) features, among its other interesting exhibits on local history, an 18th-century kitchen and a Renaissance room from Blokzijl. The fine façade of the old part of the building, which dates from 1741, is impressive.

The town is also home to the Ecodrome Park, which is dedicated to the natural environment in the past, present and future.

The work is spread throughout meadows and landscaped gardens, and exploring them makes for a pleasant afternoon's stroll.

Kampen, known for its theological university where Protestant theologians are educated, is a pleasant and lively town containing 500 monuments. The beauty of this former Hanseatic city is immediately apparent from the IJssel riverfront. The fact that the town used to be well fortified is evident from the three remaining town gates: the Koormanspoort, the Broederpoort and the Celrebroederspoort. The area inside the old fortifications features the magnificent Dutch Reformed church

St Nicolaaskerk, and the Gotsche Huis, which now houses the Stedelijk Museum Kampen, the town's local history museum. Particularly noteworthy is the old town hall, or Oude Raadhuis, with a façade decorated with fine sculptures.

Kampen, which is first mentioned in documents in 1227, is also famed for its cigars, which explains why the Kamper Tabaksmuseum (Kampen tobacco museum) is located here. A rather more surprising find is the Ikonomuseum, a collection of religious icons and the only museum of its kind in the Netherlands. The museum is housed in a former cloister, and is home to 150 mainly Russian and Greek Orthodox painted icons, spanning the 16th to 19th centuries. It also hosts temporary exhibitions.

Kampen was at the height of its development between 1330 and 1450. It revived its fortunes only when the Flevo-land and Noordoostpolder regions were reclaimed and it acquired the function of regional centre. However, Kampen was never a mighty city because it did not have any powerful ruler. Kampen did not apply to join the Hanseatic League until relatively late – 1440. At that time, the Netherlands was involved in a war with the Hanseatic League, and Kampen joined the powerful league for the sake of security.

Street-by-Street: Giethoorn 5

If any village were to be given the title “prettiest village in Holland”, quaint Giethoorn would be the one. This well-deserved accolade is due to the village’s picturesque canals which are flanked by numerous farmhouse-style buildings. Many of these buildings now contain interesting, if small, museums. The village of Giethoorn can be easily explored both by boat and by bicycle. Founded in 1230 by religious refugees, the village’s distinctive form came about from peat-cutting, eventually resulting in the formation of ponds and lakes. The small canals were used for transporting peat.

Giethoorn is also known as the Green Venice because of its abundant natural beauty. Several ponds and lakes surround this charming town. The best way to enjoy the area is by hiring a small boat.

Staphorst is known throughout Holland as a stronghold of strict Christian beliefs. The lovely old farmhouses, painted in a characteristic green and blue, are often monumental buildings. To get an idea of what they once looked like, visit the Museumboerderij (farmhouse museum).

The village of Ootmarsum is one of the prettiest places in all of Holland. On the map since 900, Ootmarsum was granted its town charter in 1300. It has grown little since then; indeed, not much has changed here at all, making it quite suitable for an open-air museum. Places of interest not to be missed are the Roman Catholic church, the only Westphalian hall-type church in Holland, built between 1200 and 1300. Here you can see the burial vaults and some impressive works of art. The rococo former town hall dates from 1778 and is now the VVV (tourist) office. There are also some interesting old draw-wells.

The Openluchtmuseum Los Hoës (Los Hoës open-air museum) showing what life was once like in Twente is also worth a visit.

The viewing point on the Kuiperberg affords a stunning vista over the entire Twente region and provides the place names of the various sights.

FLEVOLAND

Flevoland is Holland's youngest province, created by the Dutch entirely out of water, sandbanks and mud flats, thanks to massive reclamation schemes which created dykes and polders (reclaimed land, sometimes below sea level) from the turbulent Zuiderzee following an Act of Parliament in 1918.

This act provided funds for damming the northeastern part of the Zuiderzee and reclaiming the land behind the dykes. When the Afsluitdijk was completed in 1932, drainage works on the Noordostpolder began and, with the seawater pumped out, the islands of Urk and Schokland and the town of Emmeloord became by 1942 a part of the mainland. Further schemes to the south and southwest were completed in 1957 and 1968 respectively, and since 1986 these three new polders have officially constituted the Netherlands' newest province, named Flevoland after "Flevo Lacus", the original name given to the Zuiderzee by the Roman historian Pliny nearly 2,000 years ago.

Initially, the idea had been to use the polders as farmland only, with the occasional village here and there.

However, as the built-up areas around Amsterdam and Utrecht became increasingly congested, new towns have grown up. The conurbation around Almere, with its highly impressive modern architecture, is among these. Other towns include Lelystad, with its several modern museums, and Dronten, where the Walibi World amusement park proves an irresistible magnet for younger visitors. Lelystad, whose name honours Cornelius Lely, the genius behind the massive land creation project (see p326), is the provincial capital. There are many other attractions for visitors to this compact and attractive region, including a number of fascinating museums featuring subjects as varied as archaeology and World War II.

Exploring Flevoland

Urk villager

The Noordoostpolder, which is the northernmost part of Flevoland, is distinguished by its polder landscape and its rich farmland, fruit orchards and bulb fields. There are also many young forests, which are good for walking in. Apart from the main town of Emmeloord, there are a number of small new villages, as well as the old fishing village of Urk. Oostelijk (eastern) and Zuidelijk (southern) Flevoland are relatively sparsely populated and have a lot of greenery. Between Almere, the largest town of Flevoland, characterized by modern architecture, and Lelystad, the provincial capital, there stretches a fine nature reserve known as the Oostvaardersplassen, or Oostvaarder lakes. The coastal lakes have inviting sand beaches and marinas.

GETTING AROUND

Flevoland has an efficient road network. All the municipalities in the region are easily accessible by car or bus. Interliner coaches cover both the Lelystad-Emmeloord and Lelystad-Dronten routes. Almere and Lelystad can also be reached by train, and a ferry links Urk and Enkhuizen during July and August. The flat expansive landscape of Flevoland also makes exploration by bicycle ideal. Numerous excellent cycling and hiking routes have been laid out throughout the province.

When the oldest polder in Flevoland was drained, Emmeloord sprang up like a pioneer settlement. Over the years it has developed into a pleasant town. It is the main town of the municipality of Noordoostpolder, encompassing groendorps (green villages). Emmeloord is known mainly for its octagonal Poldertoren built in 1959, a 65-m (214-ft) water tower topped by a 5-m (16-ft) wind vane in the shape of an old merchant ship. The carillon, one of Holland's biggest, has 48 chimes. The viewing platform (open in summer) offers a view of the polder.

The fishing village of Urk attracts many tourists with its sloping alleys and charming fishermen's cottages. Until its land was reclaimed, Urk was an island. Some 1,000 years ago, the island was much larger and had five villages; flooding gradually reduced its size. The townspeople moved to the highest point on the island, a hill of boulder clay. Even after the polder was drained, Urk managed to retain its character in the middle of the new land surrounding it. Some of the older residents wear the traditional dress, though this is increasingly rare.

Beside the old village centre the fishing quay, the lighthouse (1844) and the little church (1786) are worth a look. In the Museum Het Oude Raadhuis, situated in the old town hall, you can find out about the history of Urk and the fishing industry.

CORNELIS LELY (1854-1929)

Flevoland has come into existence thanks largely to the plans and ambitions of civil engineer Cornelis Lely. From 1885 to 1891, as a member of the Zuiderzeevereniging (Zuiderzee Society), he was responsible for studying the possibility of closing off and draining the Zuiderzee. His appointment as minister for trade and industry in 1891 gave him the chance to convince the government and parliament how necessary it was to tame the unpredictable Zuiderzee, though it was not until his third term in office (1913-18) that the law for retaining and draining the Zuiderzee was finally passed. Apart from the Zuiderzee projects, Lely worked to improve the Noorzeekanaal. From 1902 to 1905 he was governor of Suriname. He died in 1929, but his name lives on in that of Flevoland's capital, Lelystad.

Oostvaarders- plassen 9

Between Lelystad and Almere is internationally renowned marshland covering 6,000 ha (14,825 acres). The land was originally earmarked as an industrial area. When Zuidelijk Flevoland was drained, the low-lying area beyond the Oostvaardersdijk remained a wetland. Plans to drain this area were put forward but were ultimately dismissed because the place had by this time become an area of unique natural interest.

The nature reserve includes lakes, mud flats, marshes, willow thickets and grasslands and serves as a port of call for hundreds of species of birds that come here to forage and feed. Indeed, some birds which have been unable to settle elsewhere have found their place here, including the hen harrier (the symbol of Flevoland) and the great cormorant. Other birds seen here include the great bittern, the Eurasian spoonbill, heron, rail and, more recently, the sacred ibis. The many grey geese that forage here, along with the wild cattle, wild horses and red deer that occur here, have helped the region's vegetation to proliferate.

The marshland is largely off-limits to visitors, but some fine views are to be had from the edge of the swamp, the Oostvaardersdijk and the Knardijk.

Additionally, the region of De Driehoek has a 5-km (3-mile) walking route, open sunrise to sunset. The route starts at the information centre and passes by natural woodland, lakes and observation huts.

Knardijk 10

Road map C3. f Staatsbosbeheer (0320-254585).

The Knardijk marks the border between Oostelijk and Zuidelijk Flevoland (eastern and southern Flevoland). It was built in the 1950s between the island of Lelystad-Haven and Harderwijk to enable the entire area to be placed within a polder at one time. After Oostelijk Flevoland had been dried out, it formed the southwestern ring dyke of this polder. The Knardijk is of great interest to nature lovers, as it offers a fine view of the Oostvaardersplassen lakes. A great many birds live at the foot of the dyke, including hen harriers and marsh harriers. Two bird-watching huts can also be reached along the dyke. The dyke leads in a southeasterly direction along the nature reserve known as the Wilgenreservaat, which has evolved naturally into a mixture of woodland and clearings. Many songbirds, woodland birds, and birds of prey are to be found here, as are deer, foxes, polecats and ermines. Part of the reserve can be seen via a circular path. Nearby is the Knarbos forest, also boasting a variety of flora and fauna. A 6-km (4-mile) hiking route has been marked out.

With its picturesque marina, this village on the Wolderwijd coastal lake is a popular recreational spot. Zeewolde is the youngest village in Flevoland, having officially become a municipality in 1984. Its youth is evident from the imaginative architecture, particularly that of the town hall, library and church. An enjoyable 7-km (4-mile) walking route has been laid out in and around Zeewolde, with landscape art along the way (for information, call De Verbeelding, 036-5227037).

Almere is Holland's fastest-growing town. Its name recalls the 8th-century name

Almere, a laboratory for modern architects for the Zuiderzee. The earliest signs of habitation date from 65 centuries earlier. Almere today consists of three centres: Almere-Stad, which is undergoing major renovation and is where all the facilities are; Almere-Buiten, which is a green suburb; and Almere-Haven, with its lovely marina. If you are interested in modern and unusual architecture, the districts to visit are Muziewijk, Filmwijk and Stedenwijk in Almere-Stad, and the colourful Regenboogbuurt (rainbow neighbourhood) in Almere-Buiten. Also worth a visit are the town hall, and the Almeers Centrum Hedendaagse Kunst ACHK – De Paviljoens (Almere centre for modern art), with works by late 20th-century Dutch and foreign artists.

Environ

Near Almere are many recreation areas and nature reserves: the Weerwater; the Leegwaterplas lake; the Beginbos forest, with walking, cycling and bridleways; the Buitenhout; the Kromslootpark, with its polder vegetation; the lakes of Noorderplassen; Lepelaarsplassen, where rare wading birds occur; and the Oostvaardersplassen.

LANDSCAPE ART

In the countryside around Flevoland you will come across the odd works of "landscape art". These are associated with various features of the landscape. East of Almere-Haven, for instance, is the Groene Kathedraal (Green Cathedral) (top photo), designed by Marinus Boezem and consisting of 178 Lombardy poplars planted to re-create the outline and pillars of Reims Cathedral. The Observatorium Robert Morris (bottom photo) consists of two round earth embankments, with three notches in them from which the sunrise can be observed when the seasons change. On the Ketelmeerdijk, you will find Cyriel Lixenberg's Wachters op de Dijk (Watchmen on the Dike), consisting of a circle, a triangle and a square. Piet Slegers' Aardzee (Earth Sea), situated between Zeewolde and Lelystad, consists of a series of elongated artificial ridges resembling waves.

GELDERLAND

Gelderland is The Netherland's largest province. Its name derives from the 11th-century county of Gelre, which was linked with the town of Geldern, just over the border in Germany. The town was the fiefdom of Gerard de Rossige, whose grandson Gerard II of Wassenberg pronounced himself Count of Gelre in 1104.

Succeeding counts skilfully expanded their territory to include the Veluwe region to the north, the Betuwe in the southwest and the county of Zutphen (see p341). When in 1248 the imperial town of Nijmegen was annexed, Gelre became a power to be reckoned with. A number of its towns joined the Hanseatic League, and in 1339 the county was promoted to a duchy by the German emperor. The increasing power of the Burgundians threatened the independence of the Gelders, eventually leading to the duke having to cede the territory in 1543 to Charles V. Gelderland thus became part of the Netherlands.

This colourful history is manifest today in the number of medieval buildings, churches, castles and fortified towns that welcome visitors throughout the province. In more recent times, the region, and especially the strategically located towns of Arnhem and Nijmegen, saw heavy fighting towards the end of World War II. The heroic action at Arnhem is remembered in the town's Airborne Museum, while the museum in Nijmegen recalls this town's long history from pre-Roman times to the tyranny of the Holy Roman Empire.

While visitors can enjoy many modern attractions, perhaps Gelderland's greatest asset is its contrasting natural scenery, which ranges from heaths and woodlands in the north to the beautiful Betuwe river valley and the pretty agricultural region of the Achterhoek.

Exploring Gelderland

Gelderland is made up of three distinct regions. In the north is the Veluwe, an extensive natural area of woodland, heaths and large tracts of drifting sand, where those looking for peaceful natural surroundings can find exactly that. To the east is the Achterhoek. This region, too, is rich in natural beauty but has a completely different character: it consists of small fields with wooden fences, old farms, stately homes and castles. In the southwest of the province, between the Rhine, the Maas and the Waal rivers, is the river-valley region with the Betuwe. This area is distinguished by its many small dykes and river banks, which offer ample opportunities for cycling and walking.

GETTING AROUND

Gelderland has an excellent road network. A number of major motorways pass through the province, including the A2 and the A50. Public transport is also good. Many towns have rail links, and the bus will even take you deep into the Nationaal Park De Hoge Veluwe. The numerous bicycle tracks and footpaths allow the province to be conveniently explored either on foot or by bicycle. Cycling routes of varying lengths are well marked, and there are several walking routes across the province, including the very scenic Maarten van Rossum route.

Paleis Het Loo ❶

The Stadholder William III built the elegant palace of Het Loo in 1692 as a hunting lodge. For generations, the Orange family used it as a summer residence. Its pomp and splendour have led to its being dubbed the "Versailles of the Netherlands". Its main architect was Jacob Roman (1640–1716); the interior and the gardens were designed by Daniel Marot (1661–1752). The severe Classical façade belies the ornate interior. After intensive restoration work was carried out, the palace is now open as a museum.

THE FORMAL GARDENS

When the formal gardens on the land behind the palace were reconstructed, garden designers based their designs on old illustrations, prints, documents and plans. In the 18th century, the original ornamental gardens had been grassed over. In 1983, the intricate patterns of the original gardens were restored and planting began. The Het Loo gardens are typical of a formal garden in the 17th century in which the ideal was the harmonization of art and nature.

bear witness to Hattem's eventful and prosperous past. St Andreaskerk (St Andrew's Church) is particularly remarkable, its oldest part dating from 1176. The Anton Pieck Museum is dedicated to the Dutch painter and graphic artist Anton Pieck (1895–1987); it has been merged with the Voerman Museum, which showcases the IJssel painter Jan Voerman and his son, who illustrated the famous Verkade card albums.

Elburg is the best-preserved fortified town on the former Zuiderzee. The prosperity of this old town is illustrated in the 14th-century St Nicolaaskerk, with its imposing Quellhorst organ. From the 38-m (125-ft) tower you can clearly make out the medieval rectangular street pattern.

Beside the Vischpoort (fish gate), a former defence tower, is the oldest ropemaker's workshop in Holland. Elburg was once much nearer to the coast, but in the late 14th-century the flood-plagued town was moved well away from the sea. The interesting local

The eel-smoking frames may have disappeared from the streets, but the Zuiderzee town of Harderwijk is still a pleasant place to wander around. The town has an interesting history. In the 13th century it had become so important through fishing and the trade in dyes that in 1221 Count Otto II of Gelre granted it a town charter and ordered fortifications to be built. Remnants of the old fortifications are still intact in places, including the Vischpoort gate. Between 1647 and 1811 Harderwijk even had a university, from which the Swedish scholar Linnaeus graduated in 1735. Harderwijk's main attraction is the Dolfinarium (see p434), Europe's largest zoo for marine animals. Here visitors can stroke a ray or even a hound fish. The Veluws Museum of local history in the Donkerstraat is also worth visiting.

Wageningen, at the south-western edge of the Veluwe, is a pleasant town that is home to the local Landbouww Universiteit (agricultural university). The university's botanical gardens are open to the public. The town played an important role at the end of World War II; the Germans signed the official surrender in the Hotel de Wereld.

Kröller-Müller Museum 10

This museum owes its existence above all to one person: Helene Kröller-Müller (1869–1939). In 1908, with the support of her industrialist husband Anton Kröller, Helene Kröller-Müller started to collect modern art. In 1935, she donated her entire collection to the state, and a special museum was built to house it. As well as its large collection of modern art, which includes 278 works by Vincent van Gogh, the museum is renowned for its unique sculpture garden, the Beeldentuin.

★ Beeldentuin

Mondriaan

In addition to old Flemish masters, the Kröller-Müller also has a major collection of 19th- and 20th-century French paintings and a dozen abstract paintings by Piet Mondriaan.

Like the Kröller-Müller Museum, De Hoge Veluwe is also the result of a collector's ambition. The Kröller-Müllers collected plots of unused land in the Veluwe until they possessed one single tract of natural land. They even bought, in 1914, the public road between Otterlo and Hoenderlo. The 5,500 ha (13,600 acres) of woodland, marshland, heath and drifting sand now make up the largest nature reserve in Holland. The park is a treasure trove for all kinds of wildlife: rare birds, butterflies, plants and fungi. Red deer, roe deer and mouflon sheep still live freely here. If you are lucky, you may be able to catch a glimpse of a wild boar or a stag (they are very shy animals). Bicycle and pedestrian paths have been laid out everywhere, and at the visitors' centre you can borrow a white bicycle free of charge.

Underneath the visitors' centre is the world's first underground museum, the Museonder, giving visitors an idea of what life is like below the earth's surface. You can see the roots of a 140-year-old beech tree, experience a re-created earthquake and drink ancient Veluwe groundwater. The park has two restaurants: the Rijzenburg at the Schaarsbergen entrance and the De Koperen Kop café-restaurant located in the visitors' centre.

Arnhem, the capital of the province of Gelderland, was declared the centre of the regional government back in 1544 by Charles V. In September 1944, the town suffered serious damage in the Battle of Arnhem, one of the most notorious battles of World War II. All the townspeople were forced to abandon their homes and were not able to return until 1945, when the peace treaty was signed. Arnhem rose again from the ashes and is now sprucing itself up rapidly. The monuments that have been restored include the

Eusebiuskerk from 1560, which was almost totally destroyed during the war. The tower, at 93 m (305 ft), is now taller than it ever was and has a glass lift which affords visitors a stunning view of the Rhine valley. The Duivelshuis, built in 1545 by Maarten van Rossum (see p345), is an outstanding example of Dutch Renaissance architecture. Arnhem is also known for its monumental parks, such as the Sonsbeek, a romantic landscape park, and Zypendaal. In Bronbeek, a home for ex-servicemen, there is an exhibition dedicated to the former Dutch Indies. It is also worth allowing time for a visit to the Burgers' Zoo (see p344) and Openluchtmuseum (open-air museum), where the staff, dressed up in traditional costume, illustrate the rural way of life, handicrafts and industry in the Netherlands of the 19th century.

Stationsplein 39 (0575-519355).

Thu morning, Sat.

The hanseatic town of Zutphen is one of the Netherlands' first historical towns. One of the most distinctive features of the town, which is first mentioned in 1030, is the preserved medieval street layout. The main sights of Zutphen are the St Walburgskerk, the church square and the remains of the fortifications. They include the Drogenapstoren tower, which dates from 1444.

Zutphen has a number of interesting museums, including the informative Stedelijk Museum (local history museum) and the Grafisch Museum (graphic art museum), which is highly recommended.

Definitely worth visiting is the reading room of the unique Librije (library) of the St Walburgskerk. All of the 750 books in it date from before 1750 and include 80 incunabula printed before 1500. The books in the library, which was built in 1564, are chained to the desks. This is because it was a public library which was unsupervised at the time. There are only four other libraries of this kind in the world: two are in England and two are in northern Italy.

Bronkhorst 14

Road map D4. 160. 52 from Zutphen train station.

Bronkhorst's 160 inhabitants make it the smallest town in the Netherlands. The lords of Bronkhorst were granted a town charter in 1482. This very rural town, which once stood in the shadow of a castle (the castle no longer exists), never really flourished and has remained a village of farmsteads. It has many restored farmhouses, has no new buildings and prohibits motor vehicles, which means cars must be left in a car park outside the town. All that remains of the once-mighty castle of the Lords of Bronkhorst, which had fallen into disrepair by the 17th century, is the kasteelbeuvel (castle hill).

The Lords of Bronkhorst, together with the noble Bergh, Baer and Wisch families, belonged to the Baanderberen. They were nobles who were allowed to wage war under their own flag, which was an old hereditary right.

There is mention of a Huis Vorden (Vorden house) as early as 1208; the first record of the family dates from 1315. The Nederlands-herformde kerk, which dates from around 1300, is well worth a visit. The best-known figure to come from Vorden is the poet of Achterhoek ACW Staring (1767–1840), who lived in De Wildenborch castle from 1791 until his death.

Environs

Around Vorden are eight castles in very picturesque surroundings. A bicycle trip of the area, passing farms and country estates, is definitely worth the effort.

Lochem, one of the oldest villages in the Achterhoek to have its own parish church, was granted its town charter in 1233. During the 80 Years War, the town was often besieged. It was razed to the ground in 1615. Only the Grote kerk, also known as St Gudulakerk, with its 56-m (185-ft) steeple, was spared. This 14th-century hall-type church has fine murals from Catholic times (it is now a Reformed Church). The Stadhuis (town hall) across from the church dates from 1615.

The 20th century was not kind to the town of Winterswijk and the grand railway station bears witness to better times. There is now only a single railway track, although it is evident that in the past the rail traffic was much heavier. The Museum Freriks is pleasant with its exhibits relating to the textile industry that flourished here after World War II. The museum also has prints by Pieter Mondriaan Sr, whose famous painter son Piet spent his childhood in Winterswijk.

On the outskirts of the town lies a pleasant sculpture park, De Beeldtuin. Set out in the shady mature orchards of an old farm, there are also meadows and wooded areas. The works of art, by contemporary, mainly Dutch sculptors, are dotted all over the grounds, and represent just about every genre, from Pop Art to traditional to highly abstract. The park also hosts changing temporary exhibitions of 3D art.

Nijmegen 21

Road map D4. 152,000.

Keizer Karelplein 32h (0900-1122344). Mon, Sat.

Nijmegen is one of the oldest towns in Holland. Archaeological remains show that the Batavians were settled here even before the first millennium, while the Romans had a fort here from 12 BC. In AD 104, the emperor Trajan granted trading rights to a new settlement west of present-day Valkhof. The town's ancient name of Ulpia Noviomagus Batavorum is presumably also from this time.

Nijmegen owes its existence to its strategic position on the river Waal. A fort has stood here since early times, and even in World War II, the town was an important battle scene. The most important sights include the Valkhof, with its new museum, which stands on the spot where the fort of the Batavians, Roman engineering works and, later, one of Charlemagne's palaces stood. All that remains of the palace which was rebuilt by Frederick Barbarossa is the St Maartenskapel from 1155 and the St Nicolaaskapel, one of the earliest stone buildings in all of Holland. This chapel (part of which dates back to 1030) is a rare example of Byzantine architecture in northern Europe. Other noteworthy buildings include the St Stevenskerk, the construction of which began in 1254, the Waal (weigh house) and the Kronenburgerpark, with the remnants of fortifications (the Kruittoren tower).

A fascinating insight into the Dutch national obsession with all things two-wheeled can be found at Velorama, the bike museum. Spread over two floors, there are examples from the entire history of cycling, from the earliest "hobby horse"-type bikes that date back to 1817. The upstairs room is devoted to the bicycle's modern incarnation, with beautifully shiny examples of racers, recumbants and everyday bikes. Star of the show, however, is the bicycle that belonged to Queen Wilhelmina in the 1940s and 1950s.

Nijmegen is perhaps best known for its annual four-day rambling meet, the Wandeldierdaagse, in which tens of thousands of rambblers take part. With its many cafés, the town also has a vibrant nightlife.

Each July, de-Affaire, a week-long festival of music, accompanies the Vierdaagse long-distance marches (see box). Events take place all over town, but many are focused around the Waalpark.

Featuring around 100 acts, international cutting-edge rock and pop bands play alongside DJs and world musicians. There are also workshops on such activities as Latin music and dancing.

In mid-July thousands of people from all around the Netherlands (and beyond) descend on the city to take part in the annual De Vierdaagse, the Four Days Marches. This is a series of hikes in and around Nijmegen, divided into daily legs of 30 km (20 miles) to 50 km (30 miles). The walks began in 1909 as a military exercise for soldiers, who marched from Nijmegen's garrison to Breda's, where they participated in a sports tournament. In that year, 309 soldiers completed the 150 km route. After a few years, civilians began to join in, until the march became a highlight of the national sporting calendar. In recent years, the number of participants has topped 45,000. Those who complete the walk receive a commemorative medal.

The old “Driestadje” (triple town) of Culemborg, formerly consisting of three walled towns, is picturesquely situated on the River Lek. It is a great place to wander around. If you enter the former fortress through the old Binnenpoort gate, you’ll reach the Markt. Here is the Late Gothic Stadhuis (town hall), built by Flemish masterbuilder Rombout Keldermans for Vrouwe Elisabeth van Culemborg (1475–1555). Her estate was sufficient to finance the Elisabeth Weeshuis (1560), which is now operated as a historical museum.

Other well-preserved buildings in Culemborg are the Huize de Fonteyn in the Achterstraat and the house where Jan van Riebeeck, who founded Cape Town, South Africa, was born. The large clock in the Grote Kerk was a gift from South Africa. Even today, the “papklok” bell, which is used to announce the closing of the town gates, is tolled each and every evening at 10 o’clock.

Bommel, as its inhabitants say, is more than 1,000 years old. During the 80 Years War (see p49), it was an important mainstay of the Republiek der Zeven Verenigde Nederlanden (Republic of the Seven United Netherlands). The town is surrounded by two well-preserved sets of walls, which have now been laid out as a park. Within the town walls, the first building worth mentioning is the 15th-century St Maartenskerk, whose low towers give the town its distinctive skyline. The interior of the church is worth a look.

Another worthwhile stop is at the house of the Gelderland commander-in-chief Maarten van Rossum (1478–1555), who is known for plundering The Hague in 1528. The house is now an intimate museum with a large collection of drawings and prints from the region; it also hosts visiting exhibitions.

SOUTHERN NETHERLANDS

INTRODUCING
SOUTHERN NETHERLANDS 348-353
NORTH BRABANT 354-365
LIMBURG 366-381

Exploring the Southern Netherlands

South of the great rivers lie the provinces of North Brabant and Limburg, whose ambience is quite different from that of the northern provinces. The atmosphere here is more easygoing, more sociable. Both eating and drinking well are held in high regard here. Visitors to the Southern Netherlands will also find cities with historical centres, such as Den Bosch, Breda, Thorn and Maastricht; the beautiful countryside of Kempen, Peel and the hills of Zuid Limburg; thriving modern towns; and peaceful rural villages.

The Gothic Church of Sint Jan (see pp360–61) in Den Bosch was started in the late 14th century and completed in the 1500s.

The construction of the Grote or Onze Lieve Vrouwe-kerk (Church of Our Lady) (see p362–3) in Breda began in 1410. The church, which is finished in the Brabant Gothic style, has a 97-m (318-ft) tower, offering a stunning view over the town and the surrounding countryside.

The Van Abbemuseum (see p364) in Eindhoven has undergone extensive renovation. Architect Abel Caben has preserved the old building while creating light-filled spaces in the angular, slanting new wing. A large collection of modern art, including video and other installations, is on display.

The Kasteeltuinen, the gardens of the 17th-century Castle Arcen (see p370), in the town of the same name on the river Maas, have a lovely rose garden, as well as subtropical gardens, a forest of Scots pines and a golf course.

The Bonnefantenmuseum (see pp374–5) in Maastricht is housed in a striking building designed by the Italian architect Aldo Rossi. The collections of old works of art and contemporary international art are impressive.

The route through the Heuvelland (see pp380–81) passes among hills and dales and by meandering rivers, their banks dotted with old castles. Outstanding examples of these are the 17th-century Kasteel Eijsden and Kasteel Schaloen in Valkenburg.

Catholicism and Devotion

Crucifix

One of the main reasons for the differences between Holland's southern and northern provinces is the marked presence of Catholicism in the south, even in these secular times. Religious imagery is a common sight here. The churches in the Brabant Gothic or Neo-Gothic style are decorated flamboyantly and many hold traditional processions throughout the year.

Religious images, usually of the Madonna and Child, are a common roadside sight in Limburg. This one is set into the façade of a house in Mechelen.

The Maria Magdalena Chapel (1695) in Gemert is also known as the Spijkerkappelleke ("nail chapel") because people made offerings of nails here in the hopes of having their skin disorders cured. Every 22 July, which is the day of Mary Magdalene, an open-air mass is held here.

Detail from the retablo of the Holy Family in the Basilica of the Holy Sacrament in Meerssen, Limburg. It depicts Mary, Joseph and the infant Jesus fleeing from Egypt. This fine altar is richly decorated with scenes from the life of the Holy Family. The Holy Sacrament is honoured in the church. The hosts are kept in the Unieke Sacramentstoren (sacrament tower) in the choir. The church itself is an example of Maasland Gothic and part of it (the nave and the choir) dates from as far back as the 14th century.

Decorative carving

Candles abound around images of St Mary.

This tomb in the Late Romanesque/Early Gothic Onze-Lieve-Vrouwemunsterkerk (Minster Church of Our Lady) in Roermond dates from the 13th century. Inside the tomb lies Count Gerard van Gelre and his wife Margaretha van Brabant. At the time, Roermond was part of the duchy of Gelre.

St Anna-te-Drieën

– the trinity of Anna, her daughter Mary and the infant Jesus – is a familiar image in religious art. This statue from Mechelen incorporates the town's coat of arms.

The Basiliek van de HH Agatha en Barbara

(Basilica of SS Agatha and Barbara) in Oudenbosch is a copy of St Peter and St John of the Laterans in Rome. The picture on the right shows the façade, based on St John of the Laterans. The church is richly decorated in the interior, though appearances are deceiving: what appears to be marble is actually painted wood.

Statue of St Mary in the Onder de Linden Chapel in Thorn (Limburg).

ONDER DE LINDEN CHAPEL IN THORN

The Onder de Linden Chapel, located just outside the town of Thorn in Limburg, was founded in 1673 by Clara Elisabeth van Manderscheidt-Blankenheim, who lies buried in the parish church of Thorn. This chapel, dedicated to St Mary, is opulently decorated with carvings and Baroque paintings depicting scenes of the life of the Mother of God. Shown in the picture on the left is the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebeeld (statue of Our Lady). St Mary's Chapel is also called the Loretokapel, after the Holy House of Nazareth in the Italian town of Loreto, on which the earlier 17th-century part of the chapel is based.

The 15th-century tower of the Michielskerk is all that remains of the North Brabant Sint-Michiëlsgestel.

The medieval church was built in honour of the archangel Michael. The village, also named after the saint, grew up around the church. Neglect and the elements have meant that the church building itself has been levelled to the ground, but the solid tower has withstood the ages.

The church of Rolduc, a former canon's abbey at Kerkrade which today houses a Catholic middle school and a training school for priests, has a fine altar depicting the Lamb of God. The Lamb of God represents Christ, who was sacrificed in the same way as a lamb, in order to take away the sins of the world.

Carnival

Carnival-goers

Every year in February, in the week before Ash Wednesday, carnival breaks out along the great rivers. While life goes on as usual in the north of the country, people in the south celebrate this old tradition, which is also honoured in other parts of the Catholic world. A festive mood abounds everywhere, with the best-known celebrations being held in Den Bosch, Bergen op Zoom and Maastricht. For days on end, there is drinking, singing and dancing all over Brabant and Limburg.

Carnivalsstokken (carnival rods) are brightly decorated. They are carried by the Prince of the Carnival when he passes through the streets on his float.

Music plays an important role at carnival time. Every year, the associations choose the official carnival anthem that will be played over and over again. The Zaate Herremienekes of Maastricht (pictured left) are among the better-known bands. Dozens of its members march through the streets blaring out enthusiastically; what their music may lack in elegance is made up for by their verve. On Shrove Tuesday they compete in the Herremienekes competition.

CARNIVAL – PUTTING YOUR WORRIES ASIDE

The carnival season officially starts on 11 November – the eleventh of the eleventh – or “day of fools”, when the Council of Eleven names the Prince of the Carnival. From then on, the municipalities are busy with preparations, and on the Sunday (in many places now on the Friday) before Ash Wednesday, the festivities begin. Wild celebrations are held throughout North Brabant and Limburg, and most public institutions are closed. Long processions with floats parade through the towns. People dress up festively: the more colourful and exuberant the costume, the better. “Dansmarietjes” (dancing girls) accompany the floats in their colourful costumes, and the mood everywhere is upbeat. All the merriment comes to an end after Shrove Tuesday, the climax of the carnival.

Although in high spirits, his question is profound (the sign on the pram reads “where are we going?”)

CARNIVAL FLOATS

At carnival time, long processions with extravagantly decorated floats wind their way through the main streets of towns and villages. Months of preparation often go into creating the floats, and secrecy prevails during their preparation. The decoration of the float is usually on an upbeat and amusing theme, but current events are sometimes illustrated in imaginative ways.

A festive float

When leading politicians are featured, they are more often than not caricatured mercilessly, and social ills are exposed, often using costumed participants in tableaux vivants.

The Raad van Elf (Council of Eleven) is the central office of the local carnival organization. Every year, the council appoints a Prince of the Carnival, who holds power in a municipality on the days of the carnival. The council's ritual number is 11, which is considered the number of fools. From 11 November onwards, the Raad van Elf is busy preparing carnival events. At the lively meetings, many a beer is drunk to a call of "Alaaf!" ("Eleven!").

Silly clothes are mandatory at carnival time. In earlier times it was customary to put on masks, whereas today the trend is to dress up in as unusual a way as possible. The northerners' belief that it is enough to put on a peasant's smock to be properly dressed is a misconception.

NORTH BRABANT

The Netherland's second largest province is distinguished primarily by its natural beauty. In the south and south-east are the relatively high elevations of Kempen and the Peel; in the northwest, the watery Biesbosch. Here, arms of the Waal and Maas rivers converge through a wilderness of sandbanks.

North Brabant has been inhabited by humans since the earliest times. The Celts settled here in the 7th century BC and stayed for many centuries. They were defeated by Julius Caesar (see p43), who describes them as the "Belgae" in his writings. The Rhine became the northern frontier of the Roman Empire and Roman remains have been found in the area. When the Romans left, the Franks took charge of Toxandria, as the region was known in those days. Under Charlemagne (see p45), this region grew in importance as new towns expanded at points along trade routes, and in the 12th century became part of the Duchy of Brabant. The Dukes of Brabant, among them Godfried III and Henry I, expanded their territory and founded towns such as Breda and 's-Hertogenbosch. The Duchy flourished until the 16th century, when the 80 Years War left the south of Brabant under Spanish rule and the north under the rule of the Netherlands. Although North Brabant has its fair share of commerce and industry, and Eindhoven is a major manufacturing centre, tourism has become increasingly important. The region's colourful history is evident from the medieval buildings and bastions in many of the towns, and the castles dotted around the countryside, with a range of fine exhibits in churches and museums. For younger visitors the highlight is the fairytale theme park De Efteling at Kaatsheuvel, northeast of Breda.

Exploring North Brabant

North Brabant's rich historic past and unspoiled countryside have given the province its unique character. The centres of 's-Hertogenbosch and Breda and the picturesque fortified towns of Heusden and Willemstad are of great historical interest. The beautiful natural areas of the Loonse and Drunense dunes, Peel, Kempen and Biesbosch areas provide opportunities for various tours. Van Abbemuseum in Eindhoven, De Wieber in Deurne and the many other museums in the region offer a great deal of cultural interest. De Efteling is one of Europe's best-known theme parks.

GETTING AROUND

North Brabant has an excellent transport infrastructure. All the larger towns, as well as many smaller towns and villages, can be reached easily by train. There is an extensive network of long-distance coaches which will take you to even the smallest village. The province can be explored by car with great ease thanks to its dense motorway network, which includes the A2, and the A58, as well as its many good major roads. Areas of natural beauty such as the Peel and Kempen are ideal countryside for cycling.

In 1185, Henry I of Brabant founded the town of 's-Hertogenbosch. The strategically positioned town – usually called Den Bosch – grew rapidly. From the 16th century its prosperity waned, when the States General (see p50) ignored Brabant and chose to favour other regions. Its prestige rose again after 1815, when it became the capital of North Brabant. Today, it is a vibrant, lively town.

Sint Jan

There was a church of Sint Jan (St John) in Den Bosch as early as the beginning of the 13th century, although nothing of the original Romanesque church exists today. The present-day Gothic church was built from the late 14th to the 16th century. The majestic cathedral survived the iconoclastic riots of 1566 (see p52) and a devastating fire in 1584. The damaged building is undergoing continuous restoration.

Statue of St Mary

The 13th-century miracle-working figure of the Zoete Lieve Vrouw of Den Bosch (Our Good Lady of Den Bosch) was for centuries kept in Brussels but was returned to Sint Jan in 1853.

Exploring 's-Hertogenbosch

Along with a large number of historical buildings and interesting museums, the town of 's-Hertogenbosch offers a wide choice of fine restaurants. The excellent Noordbrabants Museum has an excellent exhibition of art from the Southern Netherlands from 1500 to the present. The most striking building in 's-Hertogenbosch is the majestic Gothic church of Sint Jan. The historic district of Uilenburg offers ample opportunities to while away the time with a drink or a bite to eat in a café.

The splendid church of Sint Jan (see pp360-1) is Den Bosch's crowning glory. In the Markt stand historical buildings such as De Moriaan (parts of which date back to the 12th century) and the town hall, dating from 1670. A statue of the great painter Hieronymus Bosch (c.1453-1516) stands between the two grand buildings. Born in 's-Hertogenbosch, Bosch spent most of his life here. In the town's historical district of Uilenburg, beyond the Markt, are plenty of good cafés and restaurants. The Binnen-Dieze, the city's inner canal, surfaces at this point; houses here stand directly in its water. Right by Sint Jan is the majestic Zwanenbroedershuis (see p359), as well as the Museum Slager, which showcases paintings by the Slager family.

That Heusden fell victim to the redevelopment craze of the 1960s matters little. Walls, houses, moats, the Veerpoort (ferry gate) and the Waterpoort have all been restored in the old style. As advertising is banned in Heusden, it is easy to imagine that time has stood

THE SURRENDER OF BREDA

During the 80 Years War, Breda was kept under siege by Spain for ten months, before finally surrendering to Ambrosio Spinola's troops on 5th June 1625. The moment of capitulation is captured in Velázquez's painting, known as both The Surrender of Breda and Las Lanzas – the lances – after the line of weapons that dominate the background. Velázquez, the great court painter of King Philip IV, is said to have painted the scene from memory. His picture shows the moment when the commander of the Dutch troops, on the left of the picture in a supplicating position, hands the key of the Dutch fortress to a straight-backed Spinola. The painting is famous for its composition, with the canvas divided into two balanced parts: left and right contain a group of soldiers and a horse, while the fore- and background are split into human activity and the smouldering city behind. The work is also noted for the lively way it portrays the men, several of whom look the viewer directly in the eye. The painting now hangs in Madrid's Museo del Prado.

Eindhoven 8

Road map C5. 198,000.

Stationsplein 17 (0900-1122363). Mon-Sat.

The old market town of Eindhoven was merged with the villages of Strijp, Woensel, Tongelre, Stratum and Gestel in the 19th century. The municipality of Eindhoven grew enormously in the last century when Philips, the electronics company, sited its factory there. Philips's best-known building, the distinctive Witte Dame (White Lady) was built in 1922 by architect Dirk Rozenberg; it has now been sold and converted into a design college, library and centre for artists. The former Philips area in Strijp is also being developed into a residential area with shops, restaurants and theatres.

On an industrial estate on the fringes of the city (easily reachable by bus 401 or 402), the Philipsmuseum holds a fascinating collection of electrical objects dating back to the earliest days of the company. On display are dozens of examples of the very first light bulbs dating from the 19th century, beautiful bakelite radios and hulking television cabinets from the birth of broadcasting.

In the city centre, the Philips light bulb even has a museum all to itself, at the Philips Gloeilampenfabriekje. Visitors can learn about the history of light-bulb making, from hand-made to mass-produced, and how the light bulb transformed Eindhoven from a small town into an industrial giant.

A rather more surprising find in the centre of the industrial city is the Historisch Openlucht Museum Eindhoven. This open-air museum in the middle of the Gennepark contains reconstructions of an iron-age village, a Viking settlement and a medieval town. Actors in costume people the scene, and are on hand to answer questions. There's also a restaurant where visitors can eat meals based on ancient recipes, like grain stew and lentil paté.

Looming over the railway station is the space-age Philips Stadion, home of the PSV Eindhoven football team. The stadium, although ultra-modern these days, still stands in the spot where the first pitch was laid out for the team in 1913. Guided tours allow visitors to enter the players' changing rooms and to walk down the tunnel onto the pitch.

Eindhoven's most important sight, however, is the Van Abbemuseum, which is devoted to modern art. The original building was designed in 1936 by AJ Kropholler and has been described as a "brick castle". In the 1990s, architect Abel Cahen was commissioned to expand the museum. Cleverly integrating the existing building into a large new wing, he quadrupled the exhibition space and added a restaurant and multimedia centre. Queen Beatrix opened the museum in January 2003. The collection contains works by Chagall, Lissitzky and Beuys, and is particularly known for Picasso's Woman in Green (1909).

VAN GOGH IN BRABANT

Vincent van Gogh was born in 1853 in Zundert, south of Breda. There, in the Cultureel Centrum, you can learn about his childhood. In 1883, he moved to Nuenen, where his father was rector. He stayed there until 1885, when he moved on to Antwerp. The Nuenen period was very prolific for van Gogh. Rural life in Brabant inspired him, and he painted farms, labourers and weavers in the blue and brown tones that are so characteristic of his Nuenen work. A famous painting dating from this period is The Potato Eaters (1885).

LIMBURG

Limburg is The Netherland's southernmost province, squeezed by the course of history into its present unusual shape bounded partly by Belgium to the west and to the south and by Germany on the eastern flank. Yet its outline is not the only remarkable thing about this delightful multilingual province.

From a geological point of view, Limburg is much older than the rest of Holland, sitting on coal deposits that are around 270 million years old. In the mining museum at Kerkrade, east of Maastricht, you can see how coal used to be mined in this region. The caves that can be seen in many places in South Limburg are also mines, albeit for the local limestone laid down between 60 and 70 million years ago. The best-known cave systems, parts of which date from the Roman era, are at Valkenburg and at St Pietersberg near Maastricht.

The Maas river valley has been attractive to settlers since the last Ice Age. There is evidence of early nomads, followed by sedentary society like the "Bandkeramikers" and the Beaker Folk (see p42). The Romans were here for around 400 years and Maastricht, which they founded, has much evidence of their impressive buildings. Heerlen was also an important Roman crossroads and the bathhouse museum here makes an excellent and informative visit. In the Middle Ages, Limburg was split up and fought over at various times by the German Empire, Gelder, Liège, Brabant and the Spanish. It acquired its present borders in the 19th century. Nowadays it has plenty to offer visitors, from historic towns with fine architecture, shops and nightlife to countryside dotted with half-timbered houses, farms, water mills in the rivers, and countless castles and country houses.

Exploring Limburg

Noord Limburg is made up of the Peel and the Maas regions. Between the river Maas and the German border are nature reserves with fens, woodland, heathland and river dunes. The former wilderness known as the Peelgebied is on the border with North Brabant. Middle Limburg is the section from the Maasplassen lakes, which were created by the digging of gravel pits. It is now one of the most important watersports areas in the country. Zuid Limburg consists of Maastricht, the Mijnstreek (mining country) and the pretty chalk-hill landscape to the south.

National park of De Grote Peel

GETTING AROUND

Limburg is easily reached by rail and by road, which are also the best ways to explore it. The motorways and railways invariably follow the same routes, that is to say: Nijmegen-Venlo-Roermond-Geleen-Maastricht, Weert-(Roermond)-Geleen-Maastricht and, finally, the triangle Maastricht-Geleen-Heerlen. For cyclists there are long sections of cycle paths along the Julianakanaal and the Zuid-Willemsvaart. The south of Zuid Limburg in particular is simply ideal for cycling (including racing) and rambling. The tourist railway or "environmental line" from Schin near Geul to Kerkrade via Wijlre, Eys and Simpelveld operates from April to October on Sundays and Wednesdays, with two steam-trains and a "rail-bus".

Henseniusplein 13, Venray (0900-0400216).

The village of Mook is on the river Maas in the very north of Limburg. On 14 April 1574, the Prince of Orange's army was routed on the nearby Mookerhei by the Spanish. The star-shaped fortifications of the Heumense Schans from the 80 Years War stand atop a 43-m (141-ft) ridge from the Saalian Ice Age. It offers a fantastic vantage point from which to view the Maas valley.

South of Mook is the recreation area of the Mookerplas lake and the fine estate of Sint Jansberg, where the Bovenste Plasmolen, an ancient watermill, has been restored.

During World War II, Noord Limburg was the scene of heavy fighting. An English and a German (at Ysselsteyn) military cemetery lies near the town. Nearby Overloon is home to the Oorlogs-en Verzetmuseum (war museum). In 1944, Venray was largely destroyed. The 15th-century basilica of St Petrus Banden, with its magnificent interior, was given a new 80-m (262-ft) tower in restoration works. The Geijsteren estate on the Maas, where old Maas terraces are visible in the terrain, is an outstanding rambling area.

Arcen 3

Road map D5. 9,000. 83.

Nieuwstraat 40-42, Venlo (0900-0400216).

The main attraction of Arcen, picturesquely located on the Maas, is the finely restored 17th-century Arcen castle with its Kasteeltuinen (castle gardens). They incorporate a rose garden, subtropical gardens, Eastern gardens, a pine forest and a golf course. You can also take the waters at the Thermaalbad Arcen spa; its mineral-rich water is extracted from 900 m (2,955 ft) underground. Other local delights include special Arcen beer, asparagus (with an asparagus market on Ascension Day), and the drink distilled by the Branderij De IJsvogel, housed in the 17th-century Wijmarsche water mill. Outside Arcen is the Nationaal Park Landgoed de Hamert.

The combined city of Venlo/Blerick began as a Roman settlement. In the Middle Ages it grew rich on trade. The 15th-century St Martinuskerk, a Gothic hall-type church, and Ald Weishoes, a Latin school dating from 1611 built in the Gelderland Renaissance style, are among the few historical buildings to survive World War II. The town hall was designed between 1597 and 1600 by Willem van Bommel. The local Museum Van Bommel-Van Dam features modern art; the Limburgs Museum, archaeological finds.

 🕒 Sat.

The jewel of Weert is the St Martinuskerk, one of the few Late Gothic hall-type churches in Holland (in hall-type churches, the side aisles are equal in height and width to the nave). When restoration works were carried out around 1975, paintings from the 15th and 16th centuries were discovered beneath the layers of whitewash on the vaulted ceilings. Before the high altar (1790) by Italians Moretti and Spinetti lies the tomb of the lord of Weert, beheaded in 1568 on the order of Alva in Brussels. Not far from the church is the Ursulinenhof, an example of a new building successfully integrated into a historical centre.

Surrounding areas such as Weeterbos forest and the Nationaal Park De Grote Peel are remnants of a region of peat moors.

DR PJH CUYPERS

Architect Pierre Cuypers was born in Roermond in 1827. He lived and worked both in his hometown and in Amsterdam. One of Cuypers' sons and one of his nephews also became renowned architects. Considered one of the prime representatives of the Netherlands Neo-Gothic, Cuypers designed the Central Station and the Rijksmuseum in Amsterdam, and De Haar castle in Haarzuilens. He was also the architect and restorer of countless churches, including the munsterkerk (minster church) in Roermond.

Street-by-Street: Maastricht 6

Gevelsteen

Maastricht emerged in Roman times at a point along the river Maas which could be crossed on foot (Mosae Traiectum), on the Roman road that led from Colonia Agrippina (Cologne) to Bononia (Boulogne). The founder of Christian Maastricht was St Servatius, bishop of Tongeren, who died in AD 384 in Maastricht and was buried in the cemetery then located outside the town walls. The magnificent basilica of St Servaas was built over his tomb. In addition to the basilica, another fine church is the Romanesque Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebasiliek.

Exploring Maastricht

Maastrichter Gees

Maastricht is considered to be one of the oldest towns in Holland. It was the country's first bishopric and an impressive fortress. It has some outstanding historical monuments, including the Romanesque Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebasiliek (Basilica of Our Lady); the Romanesque St Servaas Basilica, with a very old crypt and a carved Gothic portal (early 13th century); six Gothic churches; a Baroque church formerly belonging to the Augustine order (1661); and a Walloon church from 1733. A great deal remains of the fortifications, including Roman foundations, part of the medieval wall system, a 17th-century bastion, and 18th- and 19th-century fortification works.

In the courtyard of the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwebasiliek you can see the foundations of a Roman tower which was once part of the Roman castellum. The castellum stood on the banks of the river Maas, just south of the St Servaasbrug bridge, where the Romans settled in 50 BC and where the district of Stokstraat, with its medieval and Golden Age buildings, now lies. The pavement of Op de Thermen, a small and peaceful square in this district where the original Roman fort once was, has been marked with the outlines of the old Roman baths. The first medieval wall around Maastricht dates from around 1229. Of these, the Onze-Lieve-Vrouwewal – which has cannons standing in front of it – and the Jekertoren tower can still be seen.

The Helpoort gate, dating from the early 13th century, also forms part of the early medieval town fortifications. It stood at the southern end of the town and is the oldest surviving town gate in Holland, and the only one still standing in Maastricht.

Other structures from this period can be seen across the river Maas in Wyck: the Waterpoortje gate, the Stenen Wal (wall) along the river, and the Maaspuntoren. The second medieval fortifications, made necessary by the rapid growth of the city, were built around 1350. Of these, the Pater Vinktoeren near the Helpoort gate, and the romantic embankment wall and the semicircular towers known as De Vijf Koppen and Haet ende Nijt continue to survive to this day.

Construction on St Servatius Basilica began around the year 1000 on the spot where the saint was buried (upon which stood an earlier church). The nave, the crypt, the transept and the chancel are the oldest parts of the basilica, dating back to the 11th century. The apse and the two chancel towers were built in the following century. The western end also dates from the 12th century. The southern Bergportaal gate dates from the early 13th century, and is one of the earliest Gothic buildings in the Maasland region. This portal is dedicated to St Mary, with representations of her life, death and Assumption in the arch. The side chapels and the Gothic transept date from approximately 1475.

Highlights of the basilica's treasury are the 12th-century reliquary containing the relics of St Servatius and St Martin of Tongeren, and the golden bust of St Servatius. The latter was donated to the town by the Duke of Parma when Maastricht was taken over by the Spaniards in 1579.

During the 19th century, thorough restoration works were undertaken by Pierre Cuypers. He restored the western end to its original Romanesque splendour, as well as commissioning new murals and ceiling paintings. These were repainted during a subsequent restoration which was completed in 1990.

Once this was completed, work began on the nave and transept. The chancel followed in the 12th century, built over an 11th-century crypt. The apse pillars, made from limestone, are crowned with lavishly sculpted capitals, such as the renowned Heimokapiteel.

THE RELIQUARY OF ST SERVATIUS

The magnificent restored reliquary is a monumental shrine containing the relics of St Servatius and St Martin of Tongeren. It is made of wood covered with embossed gilded copper plate in the shape of a house. It dates from about 1160 and was built by artists from the Maasland region. The front of the reliquary depicts Christ, with the 12 apostles along the sides, and St Servatius surrounded by angels on the back. The “roof” of the “house” is decorated with scenes from the Last Judgement.

In the 13th century, Sittard was granted its town charter and built its defensive walls, of which considerable sections remain intact, including Fort Sanderbout. The Grote Kerk, or St Petruskerk, built around 1300, is worth a visit. The 80-m (262-ft) tower is built of layers of alternating brick and limestone blocks, or “speklagen” (bacon layers). In the Markt is the 17th-century Baroque St Michielskerk; Our Lady of the Sacred Heart basilica stands in the Oude Markt. The oldest house in Sittard is the half-timber house built in 1530 on the corner of the Markt and the Gats and containing the De Gats coffee house. The Jacob Kritzraedhuis, a patrician house, was built in 1620 in Maasland Renaissance style.

Heuvelland 18

In the Zuid Limburg region of Heuvelland, the hills, and the valleys cut through them by the river, are covered with fertile loess soil, which occurs nowhere else in Holland. In the peaceful rolling countryside, with its stunning views, is a region of wooded banks, orchards and fields, dotted with picturesque villages and castles, and criss-crossed by narrow roads passing through cuttings with roadside shrines and field chapels. Heuvelland just may be one of the prettiest parts of Holland.

The Basilica of the Holy Sacrament ② in Meerssen, built in the late 14th century of limestone in Maasland Gothic style, is one of the most elegant churches in all of Holland. The chancel features a lavishly decorated tabernacle.

Kasteel Eijsden ③ was built in the Maasland Renaissance style in 1636. This style is easily distinguished by its combined use of brick and stone masonry, with stone being used to frame doors and windows.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Length: 80 km (50 miles). Part of the route passes through hilly areas with narrow roads.

Stopping-off points: especially good viewing points are to be found at Noorbeek, Slenaken and Epen.

The orchid garden ③ in the traffic-free Gerendal, a dry valley between Schin op Geul and Scheulder, is the pride of the region. The garden was laid out by the national forestry commission and is situated behind the forester's lodge. Twenty varieties of wild orchid grow here.

GRAPE-GROWING IN ZUID LIMBURG ①

In the past, grape-growing and wine-making was more widely practised in Zuid Limburg than it is today. For example, in the 18th century, there were at least 200 ha (495 acres) of vineyards on and around St-Pietersberg. Today, a few small professional vineyards can still be found in the region, the most famous being the Apostelhoeve. On this vine-growing estate situated to the south of Maastricht on the Louwberg above the de Jeker valley, white wine is made from Müller-Thürgau, Riesling, Auxerrois and Pinot Gris grapes.

WHERE TO STAY

The Netherlands offers a variety of accommodation to suit every traveller's taste and needs, ranging from cheap budget accommodation to expensive luxury. You can stay in one of the luxury hotels of international chains, although there is also good accommodation to be had in old castles, farms, historical buildings and houses that have been converted into hotels, pensions, youth hostels or B&Bs. Campers, too, will be spoiled for choice in the Netherlands, with numerous campsites and caravan parks, which are often situated in stunning locations. Camping is an especially economical way to stay in a particular area over a longer period of time. If you need more spacious or convenient accommodation over a longer period, you can book into one of the 350-odd bungalow parks in the country, or rent an apartment in one of the many coastal towns. The hotels listed on pages 392–405 vary in both class and price, and are considered either the best or the most pleasant hotels in that particular area or town.

HOTEL TYPES

There is a huge difference in the price, quality and facilities offered by different hotels. The choice is greatest in Amsterdam and the larger cities, where there is something to suit every traveller's pocket. But even further afield there is also plenty of choice. After hotels, bed-and-breakfast (B&B) accommodation is becoming increasingly plentiful in the Netherlands. This type of accommodation varies greatly, as these lodgings are provided by individuals rather than by chains. One night you might be staying in an ordinary family home, and the next you might be staying in an old historical building. Bed & Breakfast Nederland can help with reservations at specific B&Bs.

Traditional pensions are now fewer in Holland than they were some decades ago. The main difference between a pension and a bed-and-breakfast is that in a pension everybody eats the same meal and guests tend to stay slightly longer. You will find pensions mainly in the south of the country. You can also stay in a farmhouse. Farmhouses offering accommodation are usually members of Hoeve-Logies Nederland, and they often provide stabling for horses, or you can help with the farm work. For slightly more upmarket farm accommodation, you can visit the Hotel de Boerenkamer in

The hotel Groot Warnsborn in Arnhem, a country manor until 1950

North Holland. The least expensive form of overnight accommodation is the youth hostel (jeugdberberg). Stay-okay runs no fewer than 30 youth hostels throughout the country. They are no longer exclusively reserved for young people. Accommodation is usually in dormitories of four to six people, and you have to bring your own bed linen, or you can rent it for the night.

HOTEL CHAINS

Just about all major hotel chains are represented in the Netherlands. You will find most of them, such as the Hilton, Mercure, Golden Tulip, Marriott, Best Western, Holiday Inn and Ramada in the big cities, although some like the Bilderberg are situated in country areas. The hotels range from good to luxury, both for tourists

Château Hotel De Havixhorst in Schiphorst

◀ The restaurant d'Vijff Vlieghen in Amsterdam dating back to 1627 and for business travellers.

The scale of these hotels and the often internationally recognized style means that they are less personal than small hotels, but when you spend the night in one of them you get what you pay for and are assured of excellent service and a high level of comfort.

CATEGORIES

Hotels are classed by a variety of systems. Some hotels, for instance, are recognized by the ANWB. ANWB sets store by the management of the hotel and the quality of the facilities. Regular checks are carried out on these hotels. You can recognize them by the blue ANWB sign, and they are listed in a guide which is available from the ANWB office and bookshops. After ANWB-recommended hotels, there are those listed by Holland Hotels Hartverwarmend which are characterized by the personal atmosphere they offer. Lists of these hotels are available for a small charge from places such as the VVV offices. All hotels in the Netherlands have to be categorized under the Benelux Hotel Classification system, which awards each hotel with between one and five stars. The number of stars given depends on the minimum facilities on offer.

The more stars a hotel has, the more luxurious it is. A one-star hotel is simple and may or may not offer breakfast. In two-star hotels, at least 25 per cent of the rooms will have their own bathroom or shower and WC. These hotels will also have a guest lounge, and it will have a lift if it is more than three storeys high. A three-star hotel is considered middle of the range. Their rooms have central heating and at least half have their own bathrooms. Four-star hotels will have a night bar, 80 per cent of the rooms will have ensuite bathrooms, and all of them will have telephones. A five-star hotel will be of deluxe category, having 24-hour service, large rooms with ensuite facilities, a restaurant and so on. One slight drawback of this classification, which looks mainly at the facilities provided and ignores both the hotel's location and atmosphere, is that many simple but pleasant little hotels do not score well.

The hotel's star rating is displayed on a blue and white sign by its main entrance.

APARTMENTS

The number of self-catering apartments in the cities is limited, and you will usually have to pay a considerable deposit. VVV will inform you of organizations which rent out apartments, or you can look in the Visitors' Guide section of the Yellow Pages (Gouden Gids). If you hire an apartment through an agency, you will generally be required to stay for at least one week. It is also possible to hire apartments through some hotels, for example, the Renaissance Amsterdam Hotel.

Along the Dutch coast, in Zeeland and on the West Frisian Islands, there are many "apartment-hotels", which are apartment buildings with hotel facilities, such as bars, swimming pools and reception areas.

PRICES

Room prices generally include the toeristenbelasting (tourist tax) as well as breakfast. In the larger and more expensive hotels, breakfast is usually charged separately. Obviously, a hotel which provides more than the average facilities will be pricier than a basic hotel. Hotels in larger cities, particularly in Amsterdam, are relatively more pricey than those further afield, although in large towns it is easier to find hotels in wider-ranging price categories.

People travelling alone usually end up paying only 20 per cent less than the same accommodation would cost two people sharing. People travelling in larger groups can stay more cheaply by sharing a meerpersoonskamer (multiple room).

BOOKING ACCOMMODATION

The springtime, when the tulips are in bloom, is the busiest time for tourists in the Netherlands. If you wish to book a hotel room at this time, you should do so several weeks ahead, particularly if booking in the major cities and along the coastline. For popular hotels along Amsterdam's canals, book well in advance all year round.

Bookings can be made by telephoning the hotel directly. It is a good idea to ask for written confirmation of your booking in order to avoid problems upon your arrival.

You can also select and book hotels online over the Internet. There is a wide range of hotel booking websites both in Dutch and in English. As well as general websites featuring a variety of hotels, many hotels and hotel chains also have their own websites where you can find information about them and online booking forms. Some useful websites are www.hotels-holland.com, www.hotelnet.nl, www.booking.com, www.anwb.nl (hotels listed by ANWB) and ase.net (a search engine which allows you to search for hotels all over the world). The best way of searching for individual hotels or major hotel chains is by name. Stayokay hostels can be found through www.stayokay.com. Another way of booking hotel rooms anywhere in Holland is through the Amsterdam Tourist Board Offices (VVV), which also arranges bed and breakfast in private homes, for which it charges a small commission. You will have to pay the VVV for the first night's accommodation, the hotel for the remaining nights. The Netherlands Reservations Centre will help you book just about any form of accommodation by phone or via the Internet, at www.hotelres.nl. At Schiphol airport KLM runs a counter where travellers can book hotels; of course, most agents can also help you to book hotel accommodation.

PAYMENT

Major credit cards are accepted at most hotels. When you give your credit card number when booking a hotel, payment is often required in advance. Smaller hotels, pensions, B&Bs and youth hostels do not generally accept credit cards, and usually require cash payment.

DISCOUNTS

Discounts are often available with many hotels for accommodation booked well in advance. This applies particularly to the major US hotel chains. Many hotels which cater to business travellers during the week often offer reductions at the weekends in order to attract more customers. Conversely, hotels which are usually full with tourists at the weekends may offer reductions on weekdays.

Children under the age of 12 can usually stay free of charge if they share their parents' room (sometimes this means sharing a bed with their parents) or can in any case stay at a greatly reduced rate. Parents who are members of the Stayokay usually get a free membership card for children under the age of 15.

PACKAGES

In addition to overnight accommodation, many of the hotels in the Netherlands, including the major chains, offer special packages of one or two nights, with breakfast and dinner included. These packages are often based on a particular theme; for example, a cycling or rambling package may include cycle hire, or a beauty package may include treatment by beauty experts. More detailed information is available from the hotels themselves or from the VVV.

TRAVELLERS WITH DISABILITIES

The hotel listings in this book state whether a hotel has wheelchair access, has other facilities for disabled travellers and whether it has a lift. This information is based on the information provided by the hotels themselves. Some hotels which have wheelchair access but no lifts will have some bedrooms on the ground floor. It is best to check when making your reservation.

Some hotels post the international disabled access symbol (a pictogram of a person in a wheelchair), which is recognized by the provincial disabled department. These hotels provide independent disabled access.

ANWB has many publications specifically for disabled travellers, and the VVV's hotels folder also shows which hotels have access and facilities for people with disabilities. International hotel booking websites like www.booking.com and [www.late rooms.com](http://www.late rooms.com) have search features to select hotels that have rooms suitable for disabled travellers, including a growing selection in The Netherlands.

GAY HOTELS

Most gay-oriented hotels are in Amsterdam; indeed, a gay couple is unlikely to produce a raised eyebrow in this tolerant city. One advantage of gay-oriented hotels, which include the Black Tulip and The Golden Bear, is that they provide a great deal of information on gay hangouts and events. Then there are hotels which are not specifically gay-oriented but make special provision for gay clients, or are gay-friendly. One of these is the Quentin, which is popular with women, and the Waterfront which attracts mainly male guests. The Pulitzer and the Grand, among others, have been classed as "gay-friendly" by the International Gay and Lesbian Travel Association. This organization can provide information on gay-friendly accommodation over the Internet (www.iglta.com). The Gay & Lesbian Switchboard (also accessible over the Internet) provides further information about hotels.

English-language publications offering comprehensive listings are available and can be found in some bookshops.

Bungalow Parks

The Netherlands has at least 350 "bungalow parks", which is not surprising considering that they provide an excellent way of enjoying the country in all types of weather. These parks are holiday villages with dozens to hundreds of bungalows or cabins, many designed for four to eight persons, together with numerous facilities such as supermarkets and restaurants. They also provide many recreation facilities, some open-air and others indoors for days when the weather is not at its best. Rental is usually by the week. The parks are often situated in areas of natural beauty and offer plenty to do in the surrounding area. A selection of the best parks in the country is given here.

Camping

Many people regard camping as the ideal way to take a holiday. It's cheap, you are in the open air and generally in beautiful natural locations. Camping can take many different forms: moving from one location to another, or settling on one site for the whole holiday; you can camp in a tent, a caravan, a tent-trailer or a camper van; you can camp in natural surroundings, on a farm or on a campsite. The Netherlands, with its many different types of campsites, has something for everyone.

TYPES OF CAMPSITE

Campsites in the Netherlands fall into two main categories. There are natuurterreinen, (nature sites), which are small or medium-sized campsites with basic facilities, often situated in the most spectacular countryside that the Netherlands has to offer. The other group consists of larger campsites with a good range of facilities, often near recreation areas or other attractions. Both types of campsite are to be found throughout the Netherlands. On both types of campsite you can either set up your own tent or caravan or you can rent accommodation. The advantage of renting, of course, is that you can travel lighter.

Camping at one of Holland's many nature sites

NATURE CAMPING

Camping off designated campsites is prohibited by law. However, there are plenty of campsites which give you the feeling that you are camping in nature.

These campsites are known as natuurkampeertreinen. They are situated in breathtaking locations with plenty of countryside around for exploring on foot or by bicycle.

You can pitch a tent or park your caravan, tent-trailer, camper or motorhome here. There are no fixed pitches. Sanitary arrangements are fairly basic but good. The campsites are usually equipped with children's playgrounds. Using these facilities requires having a Natuurkampeerkaart membership card, which is available from the Stichting Natuurkampeertreinen.

De Roos campsite at Beerze, located on the river Vecht

This organization will also provide you with a booklet containing the addresses of more than 100 campsites.

The campsites of the Vereniging Gastvrije Nederlandse Landgoederen en Kastelen (LKC) combine the attraction of natural surroundings with that of cultural history. These sites are privately owned and are situated on private estates, usually by forests or a castle or stately home. The association's 16 sites are distinguished by their peace, atmosphere and wide spaces. Camping on a farm means you will be assured of a tranquil rural atmosphere. LKC campsites are almost invariably near areas of natural beauty which provide abundant opportunities for rambling, cycling or horse-riding. Farms offer a variety of experiences. For example, you will often be able to help the farmers feed the animals or harvest the crops.

Camping in Zeeland, popular among Dutch and foreign holidaymakers alike

Another excellent way of experiencing the countryside is by using trekkersbutten, or hikers' huts. These huts are designed for use by walkers on hiking-trips. They offer very basic accommodation for up to four people at a time. They are often situated at campsites whose facilities are available to the hikers. It is necessary to bring your own bedding.

LARGE FAMILY CAMPSITES

Large Gezinscampings (family campsites) are popular among Dutch holidaymakers taking a break in their own country. The most important aspect of these camping sites is the social life. The management of the sites, be they individually owned or part of a chain of sites, organizes various events, such as barbecue evenings, karaoke, games and competitions, and sports events. In this way people quickly get to know their fellow campers.

Hangng the laundry to dry among the fragrant blossoming trees

This form of camping is also ideal for the children, as they can meet others of their age and there is plenty of room for running around and playing. The largest campsites have extensive sanitary facilities and hot water. They also provide electrical hook-ups for caravans, as well as running water and sewage connections. Campsite shops mean that you can do most of your shopping on-site, and if you don't feel like cooking your own food, there is frequently a restaurant or snack-bar where you can get something to eat. Launderettes and dry-cleaning services are also often available. Many have a swimming pool and other recreation facilities such as tennis courts, mini-golf and so on.

The ANWB has classed the best campsites in Europe as "Eurotopcampings". These offer excellent sanitary facilities and have large pitches. Their other facilities are also top of the range. Thirteen of these campsites are located in the Netherlands. You will find these in the organization's camping guides or on the Internet at www.anwb.nl/verblijven/campings/home.jsf.

A plain name for a lovely hotel nesting on a beautiful Jordaan canal. Rooms are not full of luxuries, but they are very stylish, painted in neutral tones with 1920s-influenced furniture. They are also spacious and have enormous windows. Room number 8, at the very top, is on a split level and sleeps five. www.thotel.nl

Map 1 C3

A small, two-roomed, romantic bolt hole in the heart of Amsterdam's most interesting shopping area. It is simple and stylish; although there is no breakfast (you are spoiled for choice nearby), there are considerate touches like wine, water and fresh flowers in the rooms. www.truelove.be

WESTERN CANAL RING Hotel de Looier3e Looiersdwarsstraat 75, 1016 VD Tel (020) 625 1855 Fax 627 5320 Rooms 27

Map 4 D1

The building was once a diamond factory; now it is a comfortable hotel that is a good base for exploring the Jordaan's markets. The De Looier antiques market is directly opposite, and the Noordermarkt a short stroll away. Although fairly characterless, rooms are ensuite, spotless and have in-house movies. www.hoteldelooier.com

WESTERN CANAL RING Hotel The TorenKeizersgracht 164, 1015 CZ Tel (020) 622 6352 Fax 626 9705 Rooms 96

Map 1 C4

A stylish place decorated in tasteful pastel hues and stripes, Hotel Toren boasts a fascinating history: it has been a merchant's house and a university, and it was also used to hide Jews during World War II. On the downside, standard rooms are small, so spend a little extra on a superior: you get extra legroom and a spa bath. www.hotelthetoren.nl

Map 5 B2

A chain hotel situated on the Amstel, close to Rembrandtplein and the sights. It is handy for travellers with mobility problems: most rooms are wheelchair accessible, and one has full disabled facilities. For individuality, pay extra for an "art room" designed by students from the Rijveld art school. www.edenhotelgroup.com

CENTRAL CANAL RING Hotel BrouwerSingel 83, 1012 VE Tel (020) 624 6358 Fax 620 6264 Rooms 8

Map 1 C4

This hotel has been in the same family's hands since 1917. The eight rooms, all named after Dutch artists, are individually decorated and well maintained, and the canal views are lovely. All rooms are ensuite and there is even a lift, making the Brouwer all-round great value. www.hotelbrouwer.nl

Map 4 D1

A cosy place ideal for exploring the Jordaan, Wiechmann combines its old-fashioned charm with modern touches like free Wi-Fi Internet access. The comfortable rooms have chintzy decor, and eccentric knick-knacks abound. The teapot-lined breakfast room has huge windows looking onto the canal. www.hotelwiechmann.nl

CENTRAL CANAL RING Dikker & Thijs Fenice HotelPrinsengracht 444, 1017 KE Tel (020) 620 1212 Fax 625 8986 Rooms 42Map 4 E1

Owned by a publisher, this hotel is proud of its literary connections and the authors who stay here. The 18th-century warehouse building is magnificent, and the decor is smart. Although just moments from Leidseplein, the atmosphere here is resolutely upmarket. All the sights are within walking distance. www.dtfh.nl

CENTRAL CANAL RING Mercure Hotel Arthur FrommerNoorderstraat 46, 1017 TV Tel (020) 622 0328 Fax 620 3208 Rooms 93Map 4 F2

Within walking distance of the sights, Rembrandtplein and restaurant-lined Utrechtsestraat, this is one of the best placed hotels in Amsterdam. It is pleasantly arranged around a courtyard, and rooms look out onto quiet residential streets. Rooms are comfortable, smart and fairly spacious. www.mercure.com

CENTRAL CANAL RING Ambassade HotelHerengracht 341, 1016 AZ Tel (020) 555 0222 Fax 555 0277 Rooms 59Map 1 C5

With its long literary associations, this is the bookworm's choice of lodgings: the library is lined with signed copies from the numerous authors who have stayed here. Arranged across ten buildings, rooms are furnished in an unfussy, classic way, and bathrooms, though small, are marbled. Staff are discreet and attentive. www.ambassade-hotel.nl

EASTERN CANAL RING ArmadaKeizersgracht 713-715, 1017 DX Tel (020) 623 2980 Fax 623 5829 Rooms 26Map 5 A3

On a quiet part of Keizersgracht, near Utrechtsestraat's great shops and restaurants and close to the bright lights of Rembrandtplein, this hotel has one major selling point: location. Rooms have been renovated and have ensuite facilities. A good budget bet if you want to save your euros for shopping or clubbing. www.armada-hotel.com

EASTERN CANAL RING NH SchillerRembrandtplein 26-36, 1017 CV Tel (020) 554 0700 Fax 624 0098 Rooms 92Map 5 A2

Fun-seekers should look no further than this hotel, with its commanding view over Rembrandtplein. The rooms at the back are not so noisy, and all are decorated with smart furnishings. Brasserie Schiller is very cosy, while the eponymous next-door bar has Art Deco fittings and attracts a media crowd. www.nh-hotels.com

EASTERN CANAL RING Albus GrandVijzelstraat 49, 1017 HE Tel (020) 530 6200 Fax 530 6299 Rooms 74Map 4 F1

The former breakfast room here has been transformed into a hip little café. Standard rooms are bright, though rather cramped; pay extra for superior or deluxe ones, which have slick fitted furnishings and chocolate hues. There are three apartments for long stays. www.albusgrandhotel.com

MUSEUM QUARTER HestiaRoemer Visscherstraat 7, 1054 EV Tel (020) 618 0801 Fax 685 1382 Rooms 18Map 4 D2

On an architecturally fascinating street between Leidseplein and the museums, this small, private hotel is aimed at families and small groups. Rooms, sleeping up to five, offer nothing fancy but are spotlessly clean and have comfortable beds. There is a small garden for guest use; room 15 has a balcony overlooking it. www.hotel-hestia.nl

MUSEUM QUARTER Stayokay City Hostel VondelparkZandpad 5, 1054 GA Tel (020) 589 8996 Fax 589 8955 Rooms 105Map 4 D2

The second Amsterdam outpost of a worthy organization, this hostel on the edge of the Vondelpark is ideal for families and nature lovers. Accommodation ranges from double rooms to 20-bed dorms. There is a TV room, and Brasserie Backpackers has a lovely terrace looking onto the park. www.stayokay.com

MUSEUM QUARTER OwlRoemer Visscherstraat 1, 1054 EV Tel (020) 618 9484 Fax 618 9441 Rooms 34Map 4 D2

Close to Leidseplein, but on a quiet street ensuring a restful sleep, this enduring, family-run favourite is housed in an attractive villa. There is a bar and a relaxing conservatory overlooking a garden. Rooms are not spacious or particularly stylish, but they are well-looked after, as are guests, many of whom come back. www.owl-hotel.nl

MUSEUM QUARTER Piet HeinVossiusstraat 52-53, 1071 AK Tel (020) 662 7205 Fax 662 1526 Rooms 36Map 4 D3

A stylish hotel that has been refurbished in soothing caramel and cream tones. The rooms are pleasing on the eye and gentle on the wallet, and rather spacious for Amsterdam. The most popular ones overlook Vondelpark. There is a late-opening bar and relaxing lounge area, and the staff are helpful. www.hotelpiethe.nl

MUSEUM QUARTER Sandton Hotel De FilosoofAnna van der Vondelstraat 6, 1054 GZ Tel (020) 683 3013 Fax 685 3750 Rooms 38Map 3 C2

A much-loved hotel on a street off the Vondelpark. Every room here is individually decorated according to a different philosopher or treatise. There is Passion, Wittgenstein or local boy Spinoza, for example. It is a favourite of brooding intellectuals, who make use of the lovely garden and, of course, the library. www.sandton.eu/amsterdam

PLANTAGE Bridge HotelAmstel 107-111, 1018 EM Tel (020) 623 7068 Fax 624 1565 Rooms 43Map 5 B3

In a former stonemason's workshop, this hotel stands in splendid isolation right on the river bank, looking towards Rembrandtplein. All of the rooms are simple and bright, but those looking onto the water cost extra. There are apartments with kitchenettes for stays of three nights or longer. www.thebridgehotel.nl

PLANTAGE RembrandtPlantage Middenlaan 17, 1018 DA Tel (020) 627 2714 Fax 638 0293 Rooms 17Map 5 C2

One of the few cheaper options in this area, this hotel is good for families intent on visiting nearby Artis zoo. Public spaces are covered in flamboyant murals that recall the hotel's namesake, and have dark, wooden furniture. The bedrooms, meanwhile, are brighter and more modern, and all are ensuite. www.hotelrembrandt.nl

PLANTAGE Ibis StoperaValkenburgerstraat 68, 1011 LZ Tel (020) 531 9135 Fax 531 9145 Rooms 207Map 5 C1

One of two central branches of this useful chain, the Stopera lies on a busy road just behind the opera house. Nevertheless, it is ideally placed for the old Jewish quarter and the Eastern Docklands. The air-conditioned rooms, with Wi-Fi Internet access, deliver no surprises, but are none the worse for it. Pets are welcome. www.ibishotel.com

NORTH HOLLAND*BROEK IN WATERLAND De SchaapskooiMolengouw 34, 1151 CJ Tel (020) 403 8317 Fax 403 8318 Rooms 4Road map C3

On the edge of the beautiful Golden age village in the middle of the wildlife-filled Waterland landscape, this friendly hotel is part of a working sheep farm. Rooms are functional and plainly decorated, but come fitted with kitchenettes, fridges and spa baths – ideal for relaxing after a long day's exploring. www.hoteldeschaapskooi.nl

EGMOND AAN ZEE Hotel de VassyBoulevard Ir. de Vassy 3, 1931 CN Tel (072) 506 1573 Rooms 28Road map B3

This attractive white, wooden hotel with balconies overlooks the long expanse of beach and the town's landmark lighthouse. It's a good base for exploring the North Sea dunes and coast. Inside, rooms are spacious, decorated in plaids and pastels. Free coffee, tea and hot chocolate is available in the guests' lounge. www.vassy.nl

HAARLEM Haarlem HotelsuitesKleine Houtstraat 13, 2011 DD Tel (023) 540 7146 Fax 551 8923 Rooms 3Road map B3

On a restaurant-lined street at the heart of the city, the apartments here are spacious and stylish. They have large living rooms with squashy sofas, and bedrooms have comfy big beds; some apartments have private roof terraces. Breakfast is served in the nearby Boulangerie café, or delivered to the apartment. www.haarlem-hotelsuites.nl

HEEMSKERK Stayokay HeemskerkTolweg 9, 1967 NG Tel (0251) 232 288 Fax 251 024 Rooms 32Road map B3

This branch of the reliable hostel chain is within an atmospheric, 13th-century castle, Slot Assumburg. Renovated rooms and dormitories are minimally furnished, but the moated surroundings and facilities retain many old features: the restaurant and public spaces are in beamed-ceilinged rooms. Closed Nov–Mar. www.stayokay.com

HUIZEN Hotel NewportLabradorstroom 75, 1271 DE Tel (035) 528 9600 Fax 528 9611 Rooms 61Road map C3

Overlooking the yacht harbour and Goomeer lake, this upmarket hotel offers deluxe rooms and suites, all decorated in inviting neutral shades, with the latest designer furniture and technology (flatscreen televisions), and large bathrooms (most have showers) with Aveda products. The 8th-floor penthouse has a roof terrace. www.hotelnewport.nl

SANTPOORT Hotel Duin en KruidbergDuin en Kruidbergerweg 60, 2071 LE Tel (023) 512 1800 Fax 512 1888 Rooms 75Road map B3

A country retreat, in the middle of a national park, that's ideal for hiking and cycling through dunes and woods. The estate was built between 1907 and 1909. Reception rooms and bedrooms show an eclectic mix of styles; public spaces look particularly opulent. As well as a gym, there's a Finnish sauna. www.duin-kruidberg.nl

VOLENDAM Hotel Restaurant Van den HogenHaven 106, 1131 EV Tel (0299) 363 775 Fax 369 498 Rooms 5Road map C3

This small hotel is right on the waterfront, close to all the fishing boats, and near the bars and restaurants. Most rooms have views over the IJsselmeer, and are clean and tidy, though decorated in plain, functional style, and all are ensuite. There's a cosy, traditional fish restaurant downstairs. www.hogen.nl

WEESP Boerenhofstede de Overhorns-Gravelandseweg 50–51, 1381 HK Tel (0294) 455 888 Fax 430 830 Rooms 2Road map C3

Accommodation here, in a beautiful 19th-century farmhouse, is in either a large room under wooden beams overlooking the Vecht river, or a smaller room at the back of the farmhouse. Both rooms share bathroom facilities. www.overhorn.nl

ZANDVOORT AAN ZEE Pension Zandvoort aan ZeeBrederodestraat 56, 2042 BH Tel (06) 2697 9645 Rooms 8Road map B3

This pension offers rooms, apartments and studios. Bedrooms are functional but stylish, with bright bed linen. They are equipped with kettles and fridges. The larger studios are similar, but with kitchenettes, and apartments are equipped for a longer stay. www.zandvoortpension.nl

AMERSFOORT Logies de Tabaksplant

Coninckstraat 15, 3811 WD Tel (033) 472 9797 Fax 0842 151030 Rooms 25Road map C4

This town-centre hotel occupies a row of 17th-century houses, one of which was built by the owner of a tobacco plantation. The façade maintains many original features, while the rooms are furnished in contemporary style. Larger rooms come with kitchenettes, luxury ones with saunas, and there are also big apartments. www.tabaksplant.nl

BREUKELEN Hotel Breukelen A2

Stationsweg 91, 3621 LK Tel (0346) 265 888 Fax 262 894 Rooms 141Road map C3

Although in an uninspired location near a main road, this hotel is rather surprising: it's a copy of the Imperial Palace in Beijing. The interior is less extravagant, but the quiet rooms are decorated in bright colours and swathes of fabric. The restaurant and breakfast are good, and staff are courteous. www.hotelbreukelen.nl

BUNNIK Stayokay Utrecht

Rijnnauwenselaan 14, 3981 HH Tel (030) 656 1277 Fax 657 1065 Rooms 23Road map C4

This branch of the family-friendly hostel chain is beautifully situated in a 19th-century house, next to a little river in woodland. Accommodation is Stayokay standard: dorms and private rooms, all clean and well-maintained. The bar and restaurant are pleasant, and there's a lovely terrace. Closed Nov–Feb. www.stayokay.com

DRIEBERGEN De Bergse Bossen

Traaij 299, 3971GM Tel (0343) 528 150 Fax 521 973 Rooms 65Road map C4

At the heart of the rolling Heuvelrug, this hotel and conference centre is a good base after a day's exploring. The quiet rooms are decorated in appropriate woodland shades, with wicker furniture and hung with modern prints, though some can be dark. More expensive rooms have baths. Staff are pleasant. www.debergebossen.nl

LAAGE VUURSCHE De Kastanjehof

Kloosterlaan 1, 3749 AJ Tel (035) 666 8248 Fax 666 8444 Rooms 11Road map C3

In a lovely little village in the middle of a forest, this hotel makes an ideal romantic hideaway. Rooms are decorated in a homely, relaxed style with sofas, paintings and ornaments; many have balconies and some pricier ones are two storey. Bathrooms, however, can be cramped. The staff are helpful. www.dekastanjehof.nl

UTRECHT B&amp;B Utrecht

Lucas Bolwerk 4, 3512 EG Tel (06) 504 34884 Rooms 8Road map C4

Popular with the international backpacking crowd for its cheap rates, friendly atmosphere and free breakfast, lunch and (self-cooked) dinner, there are private rooms here as well as dorms. The kitchen and public spaces are bright and clean. The rooms are basic with decorative flourishes, though they can be a bit careworn. www.hostelutrecht.nl

UTRECHT Hotel Oorsprongpark

F.C. Dondersstraat 12, 3572 JH Tel (030) 271 6303 Fax 271 4619 Rooms 38Road map C4

In a nice old house, on a quiet street of a residential district away from the centre, this hotel's secret is the lovely waterside garden at the back (open to guests). Rooms, though small and simple, are clean and neat, the breakfast room is cosy, and breakfast itself is tasty and filling. www.oorsprongpark.nl

UTRECHT NH Utrecht

Jaarbeursplein 24, 3521 AR Tel (030) 297 7977 Fax 297 7999 Rooms 276Road map C4

Handy for the railway station and centre, this hotel is part of a reliable Dutch chain. Rooms are spacious and pleasantly turned out, and bathrooms have high-powered showers. The breakfast buffet is particularly good, with a wide choice of food. There are also two restaurants and a bar. www.nh-hotels.com

UTRECHT Grand Hotel Karel V

Geertebolwerk 1, 3511 XA Tel (030) 233 7555 Fax 233 7500 Rooms 121Road map C4

The best hotel in the city is housed in a former military building filled with historical detail. The luxurious rooms and suites have great bathrooms, and are arranged across different wings. Amenities are tip-top: a Michelin-starred restaurant, a brasserie, a wine bar and huge gardens. Breakfasts are excellent. www.karelv.nl

VINKEVEEN Motel Café Restaurant De Plashoeve

Baambrugse Zuwe 167, 3645 AG Tel (0294) 291 381 Fax 293 556 Rooms 14Road map C3

This hotel is part of a busy café and restaurant, and so sometimes gets noisy. However, it's wonderfully situated right on a lake, with a large terrace on the water (there's even a hotel boat for hire). Rooms are plain but well cared for, quite large and have comfortable beds. www.plashoeve.nl

ZEIST Bilderberg Kasteel 't Kerckebosch

Arnhemse Bovenweg 31, 3708 AA Tel (030) 692 6666 Fax 692 6600 Rooms 30Road map C4

This atmospheric hotel is located a 15-minute walk out of the town centre, in a Gothic castle, one of the oldest in the country. Public areas reflect the building's history, with stained-glass windows, candelabra and heavy wooden furniture. Rooms, meanwhile, are bright, modern and stylish, in neutral and pastel shades. www.bilderberg.nl

SOUTH HOLLAND

DELFT Hotel de Koophandel Beestenmarkt 30, 2611 GC Tel (015) 214 2302 Fax 212 0674 Rooms 25Road map B4

On a charming old square near all the tourist sights, this attractive 16th-century townhouse was the birthplace of Vermeer's father. Rooms, decorated in muted colours with huge prints of paintings by famous Dutch artists, have big windows and thoughtful touches like tea/coffee-makers. Breakfasts are ample and tasty. www.hoteldekoophandel.nl

DELFT Hotel de Ark  Koormarkt 65, 2611 EC Tel (015) 215 7999 Fax 214 4997 Rooms 38Road map B4

Arranged across four houses beside a bustling canal, De Ark is convenient for the station and city centre. Rooms, in bright, fresh colours are well-sized (as are bathrooms), with lovely touches like Delft-tiled fireplaces. The bridal suites boast two-person whirlpool baths and saunas, and there are also apartments for longer stays. www.deark.nl

DORDRECHT Aan de Haven Bed and Bread  Achterhakkers 71, 3311 JA Tel (078) 648 3332 Fax 648 3331 Rooms 4Road map B4

Near the railway station, overlooking a lively working harbour, this cheerful B&B offers friendly, value-for-money accommodation. There are just four rooms, two with garden views. One has a carved fireplace and an ornate ceiling, another a large terrace, a third water views; all come with fridge and microwave. www.bedandbread.nl

GORINCHEM Bed & Breakfast Gorinchem  Vissersdijk 45, 4201 ZB Tel (06) 3058 6184 Rooms 3Road map C4

In an atmospheric town house in the centre of the pretty harbour town, accommodation here is made up of two rooms and a studio. The latter is nicely decorated in scrubbed wood, with DVD player and kitchenette. The rooms, in chocolates and beiges, are spacious and comfortable, with big bathrooms. www.slapeningorinchem.nl

GOUDA Hotel de Keizerskroon  Keizerstraat 11-13, 2801 NJ Tel (0182) 528 096 Fax 511 777 Rooms 10Road map B4

In this compact hotel, convenient for all of Gouda's sights, accommodation is divided into luxury and budget. All rooms are clean, tidy and simply furnished; cheaper ones share bathrooms, pricier ones have private bathrooms, though these are rather small. The filling breakfast offers extensive choice. Staff are helpful. www.hotelkeizerskroon.nl

LEIDEN Hotel Mayflower Beestenmarkt 3, 2312 CC Tel (071) 514 2641 Fax 512 8516 Rooms 27Road map B3

A short walk from the railway station, this clean, central hotel is on a large, café-lined square near several canals. A good unpretentious family-orientated place, rooms are large, if a little dated; those at the front get a bit noisy. There are also separate apartments for long stays. www.hotelmayflower.nl

LEIDEN Pension De Witte Singel Witte Singel 80, 2311 BP Tel (071) 512 4592 Rooms 6Road map B3

This simple, unpretentious little guesthouse occupies a lovely townhouse overlooking a canal. There are just six rooms; the ones at the back have views over the chestnut trees in the garden, while the front-facing ones overlook the water. Accommodation is clean and tidy, with either private or shared facilities. www.pension-ws.demon.nl

RIJSWIJK The Grand Winston     Generaal Eisenhowerplein 1, 2288 AE Tel (070) 414 1500 Fax 414 1510 Rooms 252Road map B4

In a quiet residential suburb south of The Hague, this designer hotel is decorated with huge prints of Winston Churchill. Although thoroughly modern, with acres of plate glass and inventive lighting, leather armchairs and high ceilings give a gentleman's club feel. There are two restaurants, a bar and a wine-cellar. www.grandwinston.nl

ROTTERDAM Hotel Bazar     Witte de Withstraat 16, 1073 BL Tel (010) 206 5151 Fax 206 5159 Rooms 27Road map B4

Cheap, cheerful and exotic sums up this souk-style hotel in Rotterdam's fashionable bar and gallery district. It's not intimidatingly trendy, however, and children will have great fun in the no-frills, North Africa- and South America-themed rooms painted in sizzling shades. The attached Middle Eastern restaurant is pleasant. www.bazarrotterdam.nl

ROTTERDAM Hotel New York      Koninginnenhoofd 1, 3072 AD Tel (010) 439 0500 Fax 484 2701 Rooms 72Road map B4

This monumental hotel in a former shipping-line HQ feels gloriously isolated, though it's near the centre. Most rooms are decorated in bold modern designs with lovely bathrooms; the more expensive ones, in the directors' boardrooms, remain untouched, with wood-panelling and chandeliers. The grand restaurant is unreliable. www.hotelnewyork.nl

ROTTERDAM Stroom      Lloydstraat 1, 3024 EA Tel (010) 221 4060 Fax 221 4061 Rooms 5Road map B4

This funky hotel gives guests a slice of decadent loft-style living. Flatscreen TVs, surround-sound, designer bathrooms (pricier rooms with two-person showers) and the latest in interior design are standard here. Healthy breakfasts are eaten in the trendy café or on the roof terrace. There's also a restaurant and bar. www.stroomrotterdam.nl

WHERE TO EAT

The Dutch are innovative people, and this quality comes out in their cooking. There is a growing number of chefs who are demonstrating an artistic approach to their profession; in recent years the number of ethnic restaurants has been growing, particularly in larger towns. Whereas previously you would find only one Chinese, one Italian and one Indonesian restaurant in these towns, now you can also enjoy dishes from countries as varied as Spain, Turkey, Greece, Morocco, Israel, Lebanon, Ethiopia, India, Thailand, Japan, Korea and Vietnam.

Chef

Among the cafés and bars you will find eetcafés, cafés where you can order meals. Not only will you be able to enjoy your meal in a livelier atmosphere but you will find that a lot of the food served here comes close in quality to that of established restaurants. Bars where you can have traditional snacks such as a broodje kroket (a deep-fried croquette in a bun) are now rarer, giving way to healthier options. The restaurants listed on pages 410–23 have been selected on the basis not only of the quality of food served but also of the atmosphere and service.

Eating out is an increasingly popular pastime in the Netherlands

TYPES OF RESTAURANT

The Netherlands boasts a wide variety of restaurants, and as the Dutch are eating out with increasing frequency, this means that the range of restaurants they can choose from is increasing as well. Because of the historical ties with Indonesia, Indonesian ("Indisch") restaurants are numerous in the Netherlands. Amsterdam is one of the best places in Europe to try the diverse flavours of that country. For purists, much of the cooking may lean too heavily towards the Chinese style, but it is still possible to sample genuine Indonesian recipes. Chinese restaurants and pizzerias have also spread far and wide across the country.

Traditional Dutch cooking is best described as frugal. As a maritime nation, the Netherlands does have large numbers of fish restaurants, particularly along the coast. There is an overwhelming number of restaurants serving French cuisine. Their numbers are increasing steadily, and quality is also improving constantly. The chefs frequently add some local ingredients to the French recipes, such as fennel or asparagus. This means that in the Netherlands you can eat wild duck on endive stamppot (mashed potato and cabbage), a combination which is as yet unheard of in France. Nobody looks askance at tuna tartare, deep-fried celeriac or green asparagus and guacamole. It is in areas such as these that Dutch chefs are showing increasing inventiveness.

There has also been an increase in the number of ethnic restaurants in the country.

The quality varies, and the range of foods on offer is vast, from Vietnamese to Lebanese, Thai to Greek, Indian to Turkish, Moroccan to Japanese. Indeed, it is difficult to find a country whose cuisine is not represented by some restaurant in the Netherlands. There is also an infinite variety in the range of food, contents, presentation and price. The majority of ethnic restaurants are situated in larger towns and cities, but even in the countryside their numbers are steadily increasing.

EETCAFÉS

Eetcafés (eating cafés) are a popular phenomenon in Dutch eating. Initially, some cafés and bars sold snacks to go with their drinks, such as an appetizer, a sandwich or a meatball. These snacks have since been refined to a growing extent. Bars and cafés have gradually evolved into *eatcafé*s where you can enjoy sandwiches at lunch time and cheap, often very decent, meals in the evenings. They vary from very simple dishes such as soups, sandwiches, salads, omelettes and French fries to exceptionally good three-course menus. Many such cafés are now concentrating increasingly on the food aspect. The prices charged at these cafés are in many cases much lower than those in traditional restaurants.

Inter Scaldes in Kruijningen, one of the best restaurants in the country

An eatcafé, one of the many in Holland serving increasingly refined meals

VEGETARIAN RESTAURANTS

Most restaurants have a number of vegetarian dishes on their menus. This applies both to Dutch/French restaurants and to ethnic restaurants. There are also an increasing number of restaurants which cater exclusively to vegetarian diners.

OPENING HOURS

The Netherlands has not had a tradition of lunching, but this is also gradually changing, with increasing numbers of restaurants now opening at lunch time. In the evenings the majority of restaurants open at 6pm; the kitchens usually stop serving food at 10pm or 10:30pm. Also – and in particular in the large towns and cities – there is a growing number of night restaurants, with the kitchens staying open until after midnight. This allows you to round off a visit to the theatre, movies or café with a late dinner.

Traditionally, many restaurants do not open on Mondays, though this is also changing.

A snack bar, ideal for a quick but satisfying bite to eat

RESERVATIONS

Anybody wishing to eat in one of the country's more renowned restaurants would do well to book, and sometimes booking a few days in advance is advisable. It can get crowded in cafés and other informal restaurants in the evenings, but reservations are usually accepted only for large groups if at all.

TIPPING

A service charge of 15 per cent is included on the bill at most Dutch bars, cafés and restaurants. However, it is customary to round up the amount. The tip should be left as change rather than included on a credit-card payslip.

ETIQUETTE

The atmosphere at most Dutch restaurants is fairly informal, and you can generally wear what you like; smart casual or semi-formal dress is suitable almost everywhere. There are some exceptions, however: in some very upmarket restaurants dressing smartly is considered very important. It is illegal to smoke in all restaurants.

PRICES

Most Dutch restaurants display a menu giving the prices of various dishes or set meals on the wall or the front door so that you can get an idea of whether the prices suit you or not before going in. The prices are given inclusive of VAT (BTW) and service. Prices can vary markedly, and a restaurant can be found in each price class: you can find many establishments where you can eat for less than €22.50; in top restaurants, however, you should not be surprised if your bill comes to €70, excluding wine. The cost of drinks is invariably extra and the mark-up levied by a restaurant, especially on cheap wine, can be high.

TRAVELLERS WITH DISABILITIES

Most restaurants at ground floor level are accessible for wheelchairs. Toilet facilities, however, tend to pose a problem, with many of them reached via steep stairs and therefore not easily accessible.

DRINKS

In recent times a growing number of restaurants has been paying more attention to the wine list: in many of them, you can choose from a range of outstanding, often French, wines to accompany your meal. The list of often exotic aperitifs available is also growing in many establishments. However, beer is the drink of preference in most Dutch cafés and bars, and all have a wide selection of local and imported brews.

The Flavours of The Netherlands

The typical Dutch menu offers good, solid fare. Pork, hams and all kinds of sausages are popular, while the North Sea provides plenty of fresh fish, especially cod, herring and mackerel, as well as its own variety of tiny brown shrimps. Leafy green vegetables, such as cabbage, endive (chicory) and curly kale make regular appearances, frequently mashed with the ubiquitous potato. Sauerkraut arrived from Germany long ago and is now considered a native dish. The world famous Gouda and Edam cheeses are sold at various stages of maturity, and with flavourings such as cloves, cumin or herbs.

AMSTERDAM'S CULINARY INFLUENCES

Traditional Dutch cuisine may be simple, wholesome and hearty, but the variety of food on offer in Amsterdam is huge and influenced by culinary styles from across the globe. The Netherlands was once a major colonial power and its trading ships brought back exotic ingredients, ideas and people from former colonies to settle. Dutch chefs branched out and tried new flavours, and as such, "fusion" food has long been a feature of Amsterdam's menus. From its street-corner fish-stalls to its cafés and top-flight gourmet restaurants, eating out in Amsterdam can be full of surprises. Over 50 national cuisines are represented, offering a sometimes bewildering variety of choice and good value for money.

THE MELTING POT

Amsterdam has long had a reputation for religious and political tolerance. Refugees who found a safe haven there brought along their own styles of cooking. In the 16th century, Jews fleeing persecution in Portugal and

Selection of typical rijsttafel dishes

LOCAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Brown shrimp

Dining out in the Netherlands is almost guaranteed to come up with some curious quirks. Cheese, ham and bread are standards at breakfast, but you may also find ontbijtkoek (gingerbread) and bagelslag (grains of chocolate) to sprinkle over bread. Ham and cheese are also lunchtime staples, often served in a bread roll with a glass of milk, though more adventurous sandwiches and salads are also common nowadays. In Amsterdam, pancake houses provide both sweet and savoury snacks throughout the day. The evening is the time when Amsterdam's eateries have the most to offer. The soups and mashed vegetables of Dutch farmhouse cooking sit alongside spicy Indonesian delights, as well as innovative cuisine from some of Amsterdam's fine chefs.

Erwtensoep is a thick pea and smoked sausage soup, wich is often served with rye bread and slices of bacon.

Baskets of wild mushrooms at an organic market

Antwerp were some of the first foreigners to make their home in the city. Today, Amsterdammers count as their own such Jewish specialities as pekelvlees (salt beef), pickled vegetables (often served as salad) and a variety of sticky cakes, now found mostly in the more old-fashioned tea-rooms.

The 20th century saw an influx of immigrants from Turkey and several North African countries. Large Arab and Turkish communities have become established in Amsterdam. As a result, restaurants with menus that feature Middle-Eastern style stuffed vegetables, succulent stews and couscous, are almost everywhere. Falafel (fried chickpea balls) are readily available from roadside take-aways and are one of the city's favourite late-night snacks. Ethiopians, Greeks, Thais, Italians and Japanese are among other waves of immigrants to make their culinary mark, and most recently traditional British fare has become popular.

INDONESIAN LEGACY

The Dutch began colonizing Indonesia in the 17th century and ruled the south-east Asian archipelago right up until 1949. Indonesian cuisine has had a marked influence on eating habits in The Netherlands. Ingredients once regarded as exotic have crept into Dutch dishes. It is now common-place to spice up apple pies and biscuits with cinnamon, which is sometimes even used to flavour vegetables. Coconut and chillis are very popular flavourings, too, and sampling a rijsttafel (see below) is considered one of the highlights of any trip to the country.

THE RIJSTTAFEL

Dutch colonialists in Indonesia often found that the modest local portions failed to satisfy their hunger. To match their larger appetites, they created the rijsttafel (literally "rice-table"). It consists of around 20 small spicy dishes, served up with a shared bowl of rice or noodles. Pork or chicken satay (mini kebabs with peanut sauce) and kroepoek (prawn crackers) usually arrive first. A selection of curried meat and vegetable dishes follows, with perhaps a plate of fried tofu and various salads, all more or less served together. A sweet treat, such as bananas fried in batter, rounds it all off.

Shrimp croquettes are shrimps in a creamy sauce, coated in breadcrumbs and deep-fried.

Stamppot is a hearty dish of curly kale or endive (cbicory) and crispy bacon mixed with mashed potato.

Nasi goreng, an Indonesian-style dish of egg-fried rice with pork and mushrooms, is also popular for a rijsttafel.

Choosing a Restaurant

The restaurants in this guide have been selected across a range of price categories for their location, good value and exceptional food. The restaurants are listed area by area; entries are alphabetical within each price category. For Amsterdam street map references, see pp150–7 and for Road Map references, see the back inside cover.

Zeedijk 72–74, 1011 HB Tel (020) 620 1442

Map 2 E4

The best Thai eatery in town is spacious, with authentic decor and impeccable service from the staff. It is also great value for money. Bird is renowned for its sublime red- and green-curry sauces, which are combined with fish, beef, chicken, pork and tofu. Alternatively, pop over to the tiny, typically Thai snack bar opposite. Closed lunch.

OUDE ZIJDE Café Bern

Nieuwmarkt 9, 1011 JR Tel (020) 622 0034

Map 2 E5

This cheap and cheerful brown bar-restaurant specializes in Swiss cheese fondues, served alongside simple salads and desserts. It is particularly popular with locals, many of whom eat at the bar, so advance reservations are recommended. A wide range of spirits and house wines is available. Closed lunch.

OUDE ZIJDE De Jaren

Nieuwe Doelenstraat 20–22, 1012 CP Tel (020) 625 5771

Map 5 A2

This huge, high-ceilinged grand café serves simple soups and sandwiches on the ground floor, and heartier meat, fish and vegetarian dishes in the first-floor restaurant (which also features a large salad bar). Both areas have pleasant outdoor terraces. On the downside, when things get busy (and they often do), service can be slow.

OUDE ZIJDE Éenvistwéévis

Schippersgracht 6, 1011 TR Tel (020) 623 2894

Map 5 C1

Located near Kilimanjaro (see below), this small, charming restaurant is a paradise for fish lovers. The chef transforms the catch of the day – be it plaice, sea bass, oysters or tuna – into simple, no-frills dishes, not drowned in unnecessary sauces. A modest pavement terrace allows al fresco dining in summer. Closed lunch; Mon.

OUDE ZIJDE Kilimanjaro

Rapenburgerplein 6, 1011 VB Tel (020) 622 3485

Map 5 C1

This warm and friendly pan-African restaurant specializes in dishes from across the vast continent. Additional delights include the Alligator cocktail, Mongozo beer (served in a bowl) and Ethiopian coffee, which comes with popcorn. In warm weather, there is an outdoor terrace. Closed Mon; lunch.

OUDE ZIJDE Hemelse Modder

Oude Waal 11, 1011 BZ Tel (020) 624 3203

Map 2 E4

This spacious, modern and gay-friendly restaurant, on one of the city's oldest canals, offers international cuisine with strong French and Italian influences, and an eclectic wine list. The pièce de résistance, however, is its charming terrace at the back. It is wise to book outdoor tables in advance. Closed Mon.

OUDE ZIJDE Blauw aan de Wal

Oudezijds Achterburgwal 99, 1012 DD Tel (020) 330 2257

Map 2 E5

This stylish restaurant is hidden at the end of a tiny alley. Refined palates will enjoy the imaginative Mediterranean fusion delights and excellent wine list. Blauw's reputation means that advance reservations are necessary, especially to eat on its peaceful terrace in summer. Closed lunch; Sun.

OUDE ZIJDE In De Waag

Nieuwmarkt 4, 1012 CR Tel (020) 422 7772

Map 2 E5

In De Waag is set in a castle-like building dating from 1488. Above the restaurant, which is lit entirely by candles, is where Rembrandt made sketches for The Anatomy Lesson of Dr Tulp, his first group portrait. On the menu are eclectic, if a little expensive, meat and fish dishes and vegetarian options. Desserts are also divine. Book ahead.

OUDE ZIJDE Vermeer (NH Barbizon Palace Hotel)

Prins Hendrikkade 59–72, 1012 AD Tel (020) 556 4885

Map 2 E3

Set within four adjoining 17th-century buildings, this Michelin-starred restaurant produces rich gastronomic delights from France. Start the adventure in the intimate cocktail lounge, then enjoy dishes such as seared lobster with cranberries, and turnips flavoured with lemon verbena. Inspired wine list. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

NIEUWE ZIJDE Keuken van 1870Spuistraat 4, 1012 TS Tel (020) 620 4018Map 2 D3

Something of an Amsterdam institution, this former soup kitchen (dating from 1870) still maintains its policy of providing cheap meals – though its patrons these days are office workers, students and pensioners. The set daily changing menu of “homely Dutch cooking” (meat and vegetable dishes) is cheap. Closed lunch; Sun.

NIEUWE ZIJDE Brasserie HarkemaNes 67, 1012 KD Tel (020) 428 2222Map 4 F1

A classic Parisian brasserie with a stylish New York sensibility, Harkema serves haute cuisine at affordable prices. It is immensely popular, especially in the evenings, so it is wise to book ahead. Feast on delights such as sautéed venison steak on toast with fried chanterelle mushrooms, followed by chocolate tart with a Bastogne biscuit base.

NIEUWE ZIJDE CataláSpuistraat 299, 1012 VS Tel (020) 623 1141Map 1 C5

A tapas bar close to Spui square, Catalá serves all the Spanish dishes you'd expect. The interior is rustic and authentic, but a seat on the pavement terrace in summer is a great spot for people-watching. It's also practically next door to Harry's – one of the finest cocktail bars in Amsterdam.

NIEUWE ZIJDE 1e KlasStationsplein 15, 1012 AB Tel (020) 625 0131Map 2 E3

The former first-class waiting room on platform 2B of Centraal Station is now a grand café-restaurant exuding Art Nouveau elegance throughout its stunning interior. The menu offers a wide range of dishes, from standard fare, such as soup and salads, to first-class fare in the form of traditional French dishes. Breakfast is served from 8:30am.

NIEUWE ZIJDE Kapitein ZepposGebed Zonder End 5, 1012 HS Tel (020) 624 2057Map 4 F1

Tucked down a tiny alley, lit by fairy-lights, this bar-restaurant (with Belgian ceramic-tile tables and eclectic ornaments) was once a coach stable, then a cigar factory. The kitchen turns out delicious French-Mediterranean cuisine, with Italian, Moroccan and Spanish influences. Ideal for a romantic evening.

NIEUWE ZIJDE SupperclubJonge Roelensteeg 21, 1012 PL Tel (020) 344 6400Map 1 C5

Remove your shoes and recline on cushioned beds at this restaurant-club. DJs spin upbeat lounge music as you graze on culinary delights from the open kitchen – all spread out over five courses. Fine wines, video art, massage and offbeat performances complete this assault on the senses. There is also a lounge bar downstairs. Closed lunch.

CENTRAL CANAL RING WagamamaMax Euweplein 10, 1017 MB Tel (020) 528 7778Map 4 E2

Fast food but relaxed service are the norm at this Japanese noodle restaurant with a designer canteen-style interior. Good for a quick lunch or dinner meal. Service is fast and food is fresh. Practically next door to the Paradiso music venue, and close to the cinemas and theatres on Leidseplein, it's a good place to start your night out.

CENTRAL CANAL RING Balthazar's KeukenElandsgracht 108, 1016 VA Tel (020) 420 2114Map 1 B5

A clutter of pots and pans hangs from the open kitchen here. In fact, it is so cosy, you will feel as though you're eating at the home of owners Karin and Alain, not least because there is no menu: guests are simply given a weekly changing, three-course international meal. Closed lunch; Mon, Tue, Sat & Sun.

CENTRAL CANAL RING Los PílonesKerkstraat 63, 1017 GC Tel (020) 320 4651Map 4 E1

A small cantina run by two Mexican brothers who serve authentic dishes. Los Pílones offers some of the best Mexican food in the whole of Amsterdam. Expect the occasional unusual combination such as enchiladas with a chocolate sauce. The pièce de résistance is their huge range of tequilas (around 35). Closed lunch; Mon.

CENTRAL CANAL RING MayurKorte Leidsedwarsstraat 203, 1017 RB Tel (020) 623 2142Map 4 E2

Authentic tandoori dishes cooked in a wood-fired clay oven are the speciality of this spacious restaurant just off the Leidseplein. Preparation of food is also given special attention: meats are marinated for 24 hours in yoghurt and spices, resulting in dishes that are spicy but not eye-wateringly hot. Closed lunch.

CENTRAL CANAL RING EnvyPrinsengracht 381, 1016 HL Tel (020) 344 6407Map 1 B5

The menu here consists of tiny Italian delicacies that can be chosen individually, at your leisure. The Envy chefs expertly combine flavours in an open kitchen by the tall window of this narrow, designer warehouse space. An absolute must for foodies, this is one of Amsterdam's finest offerings. Closed lunch Mon & Tue.

CENTRAL CANAL RING NomadsRozengracht 133, 1016 LV Tel (020) 344 6401Map 1 A5

This first-floor restaurant is inspired by Arabic nomad culture. Kick off your shoes and lounge on beds in a scene straight out of Arabian Nights, while Eastern food is served from bronze platters. DJs at weekends. Late-opening kitchen (11:30pm) and bar (1am weekdays; 3am weekends). Closed lunch.

CENTRAL CANAL RING Proeverij 274Prinsengracht 274, 1016 HH Tel (020) 421 1848Map 1 B5

Popular with both locals and visitors to the city, this warm and romantic two-floored restaurant serves classic international dishes made with organic ingredients. Book the round table by the door for a delightful view over the canal. Groups of up to 25 people can be catered for in the downstairs basement. Closed lunch.

CENTRAL CANAL RING Blue PepperNassaukade 366, 1054 AB Tel (020) 489 7039Map 4 D1

Flawless and inspired contemporary Indonesian cuisine (with Chinese and Filipino influences), with extraordinary combinations of flavours. The rijsttafel (rice table – a selection of small dishes) created by the Javanese chef is utterly unique. No wonder this small, chic restaurant is adored by foodies. Impressive wine list. Closed lunch.

CENTRAL CANAL RING VinkesKeizersgracht 384, 1016 GB Tel (020) 530 2010Map 4 E1

The intimate gourmet restaurant at this stunning boutique hotel offers international cuisine with an inspired choice of traditional and contemporary dishes. Service is attentive and the wine menu eclectic. Outdoor dining is on offer in the beautiful courtyard when the weather is good. A must for the discerning diner. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

EASTERN CANAL RING ZushiAmstel 20, 1017 AA Tel (020) 330 6882Map 5 A2

A large, bright, high-ceilinged modern sushi restaurant where you can take your sushi straight from the oval conveyor belt, while chefs in the middle of the belt prepare additional goodies. Each plate is colour-coded according to price. Wash the wasabi down with Japanese beers like Sapporo, Kirin or Asahi.

EASTERN CANAL RING BazarAlbert Cuypstraat 182, 1073 BL Tel (020) 675 0544Map 5 A5

Eastern-style restaurant within a former church located halfway up the bustling Albert Cuyp street market. On the menu is a mouth-watering choice of North African, Moroccan, Iranian and Turkish dishes for breakfast, lunch or dinner (during the week, it opens at 8am; 9am at weekends). Great for vegetarians.

EASTERN CANAL RING Bouchon du CentreFalkstraat 3, 1017 VV Tel (020) 330 1128Map 5 A4

You will feel like you are having dinner at a friend's house here. Hostess-chef Hanneke Schouten creates a fixed three-course meal using produce she has bought fresh from the market and specialist shops. The cuisine is traditional, but with a twist. Organic wines are chosen to match the food. Closed Sun–Tue; last orders 6:30pm.

EASTERN CANAL RING De WaaghalsFrans Halsstraat 29, 1072 BK Tel (020) 679 9609Map 4 F3

A superb vegetarian restaurant that will leave even the most hardened of carnivores sated. Each month, the menu focuses on a different country. Organic produce is used wherever possible; even the beer is locally brewed and the wines organic. In summer, ask for a table in the charming garden at the back. Book ahead. Closed lunch; Mon.

EASTERN CANAL RING Rose's CantinaReguliersdwarstraat 38–40, 1017 BM Tel (020) 625 9797Map 4 F2

A sprawling, long-established Mexican restaurant with a terrific atmosphere and delicious food (though a limited choice for vegetarians). Its success is due to a combination of friendly service, great value and a classic menu: choose fillings for your taco, enchilada or quesadilla. Great cocktails, too. Small patio terrace at rear. Closed lunch.

EASTERN CANAL RING Garlic QueenReguliersdwarstraat 27, 1017 BJ Tel (020) 422 6426Map 4 F2

A small, quaint restaurant with a dark interior located on Amsterdam's trendy gay street. Its novel speciality is garlic. Every dish contains it – from the starters to the desserts – yet it complements rather than overwhelms the flavours. Friendly service and a pleasant, relaxed ambience complete the experience. Closed Mon & Tue.

EASTERN CANAL RING Beddington'sUtrechtsedwarstraat 141, 1017 WE Tel (020) 620 7393Map 5 B3

One for discerning taste buds and those in search of slow-paced dining in sober, stylish surroundings. From the open kitchen, British owner/chef Jean Beddington produces seamless French and Asian fusion, with a sprinkling of British sensibility. Delightful desserts and friendly service. Closed lunch; Mon & Sun.

MUSEUM QUARTER Café ToussaintBosboom Toussaintstraat 26, 1054 AS Tel (020) 685 0737Map 4 D1

This absolute gem is well worth the five-minute stroll from the busy Leidseplein across to this quiet street. It is a small but charming café with an open kitchen where healthy international fare, such as sandwiches, soups and tapas (with plenty for vegetarians), is created. Cosy and romantic at night, with a peaceful terrace and no mobile telephones.

MUSEUM QUARTER PompaWillemsparkweg 6, 1017 HD Tel (020) 662 6206Map 4 D3

In an area short of restaurants – let alone inexpensive ones – this tapas bar is a real find, especially after an evening at the nearby Concertgebouw, when most restaurants are filled to the brim. Split-level, warm and friendly, this eatery has a broad, value-for-money menu offering Mediterranean dishes and tapas; great salads, too.

MUSEUM QUARTER VertigoVondelpark 3, 1071 AA Tel (020) 612 3021Map 4 D2

Resembling a wine cellar, this spacious and comfortable international restaurant is within Amsterdam's historic Filmmuseum, at the top of the Vondelpark. Warm and candlelit in the winter, it has one of the city's most popular terraces in summer, when they also sell picnics that you can take into the park.

MUSEUM QUARTER Brasserie van BaerleVan Baerlestraat 158, 1071 BG Tel (020) 679 1532Map 4 E4

This French-style brasserie is particularly popular with Dutch celebrities, especially for lunch and Sunday brunch (when it opens at 10am). Mouth-watering dishes include grilled sea bass with home-made crab mayonnaise and a roast-pepper dressing. Exceptional wine list and gorgeous garden terrace. Booking recommended. Closed Sat lunch.

MUSEUM QUARTER PulpoWillemsparkweg 87, 1071 GT Tel (020) 676 0700Map 4 D3

Just east of the Vondelpark, near the Museumplein, is this popular, relaxed and unpretentious restaurant. The Mediterranean cuisine is occasionally imbued with subtle African and Middle Eastern hints, such as stewed lamb with artichoke, nutty bulghur wheat and chilli yoghurt. Delicious desserts. Dinner only; closed Sun.

MUSEUM QUARTER Le GarageRuysdaelstraat 54-56, 1071 XE Tel (020) 679 71 76Map 4 E4

A favourite haunt of Dutch celebrities is this elegant bistro with red plush seating and mirrors. The food is French-international, and organic ingredients are used whenever possible. Le Garage is renowned for its three-course menu and superb wine list featuring classic and lesser-known wines from all over the world. Closed Sat & Sun lunch.

MUSEUM QUARTER The College HotelRoelof Hartstraat 1, 1071 VE Tel (020) 571 1511Map 4 E5

Head to this training hotel for catering students before (for breakfast) or after a day's shopping on nearby PC Hooftstraat. The renovated gymnasium of an 1895 school building is home to an elegant gourmet restaurant where classic Dutch dishes are given a contemporary twist. Closed Sun.

PLANTAGE PlanciusPlantage Kerklaan 61a, 1018 CX Tel (020) 330 9469Map 6 D2

A gay-friendly restaurant in a former fire station opposite the main entrance to Artis Royal Zoo. Although the designer decor is stark, it is comfortable and friendly. The menu is French-oriented, with an accent on meat and fish, but there are also tempting vegetarian options. On Saturdays and Sundays they also serve breakfasts.

PLANTAGE La Rive (Amstel Hotel)Professor Tulpplein 1, 1018 GX Tel (020) 520 3264Map 5 B4

This Michelin-starred restaurant within the Amstel Hotel is one for connoisseurs. Outstanding cuisine from its modern French-Mediterranean kitchen is matched by an excellent wine list. Reserve the chef's table in the kitchen (four to eight people) for an unusual twist to your dining experience. Dress code is elegant. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

WESTERN CANAL RING De BolhoedPrinsengracht 60-62, 1015 DX Tel (020) 626 1803Map 1 B3

A charming vegetarian restaurant with a delightful canal-side terrace, great for sunny afternoons and balmy evenings. Chefs whip up imaginative international dishes from mostly organic ingredients. The daily vegan dish is superb. Plates overflow, but be sure to leave room for the delicious desserts. Service can be slow. Reservations recommended.

WESTERN CANAL RING FoodismOude Leliestraat 8, 1015 AW Tel (020) 627 6424Map 1 C4

Down a small street in the Jordaan, minutes from the Dam, this bright and endearing restaurant serves anything from New York-style breakfasts to hearty soups and sandwiches for lunch, and wild-basil pasta for dinner. Or pop in for a mid-afternoon coffee and cake. No alcohol. Opens 11:30am (12:30pm Sun); closed Mon & Tue evenings.

WESTERN CANAL RING Chez GeorgesHerenstraat 3, 1015 BX Tel (020) 626 3332Map 1 C4

This restaurant is a veritable tour de force of Burgundian cuisine. It is a must for gourmands, who will delight in owner/chef Georges' superb meat and fish dishes (opt for the five-course or seven-course menus). It is also great value for money, though the fine wines could push up the price. Book ahead. Closed lunch; Wed & Sun.

WESTERN CANAL RING De Gouden ReaelZandhoek 14, 1013 KT Tel (020) 623 3883Map 1 C1

This 1648 building used to be a herring warehouse and then a 19th-century jenever (Dutch gin) bar. Located in one of the most picturesque parts of Amsterdam, this low-key bar-restaurant is popular with lovers of French and Alsatian cuisine. There's a good wine list, and great waterfront views from the small terrace. Dinner only.

WESTERN CANAL RING Spanjer & Van TwistLeliegracht 60, 1015 DJ Tel (020) 639 0109Map 1 C4

Close to the Anne Frank Huis, this split-level café-restaurant opens at 10am for breakfasts and offers a seasonally changing menu of soups, sandwiches and other dishes. It features a reading table and a charming canal-side terrace. The kitchen closes at 10:30pm. Snacks served until closing time.

WESTERN CANAL RING LofHaarlemmerstraat 62, 1013 ES Tel (020) 620 2997

Map 2 D3

Lof is a firm favourite of many of the city's most discerning diners. The daily changing offerings revolve around seasonal fish, meat and game. There is no menu: the staff come to your table and simply describe what is on offer to you. For intimate, lingering dining, book the small backroom. Closed lunch; Mon.

WESTERN CANAL RING Stout!Haarlemmerstraat 73, 1013 EL Tel (020) 616 3664

Map 2 D3

A hip restaurant offering creative international fusion fare, with inspired combinations of flavours. The speciality dish (Plateau Stout; for a minimum of two people) allows you to sample ten small, varied dishes. The restaurant is also renowned for its wine list.

WESTERN CANAL RING ToscaniniLindengracht 75, 1015 KD Tel (020) 623 2813

Map 1 C3

Despite its huge size, this Italian restaurant gets booked up quickly. Formerly a coach house, then a blacksmith's forge, the venue retains its original 19th-century glass roof. Chefs create regional dishes in the open kitchen, while the wine list affords the chance to drink both classic and lesser-known wines from Italy. Closed lunch; Sun.

WESTERN CANAL RING BordewijkNoordermarkt 7, 1015 MV Tel (020) 624 3899

Map 1 C3

Renowned for its superb French cuisine with Italian and Asian influences, and for service that will make you feel truly pampered, Bordewijk is one of the best restaurants in town. The chef will come to your table in person to describe the day's menu. Book ahead. Closed lunch; Mon & Sun.

WESTERN CANAL RING ChristopheLeliegracht 46, 1015 DH Tel (020) 625 0807

Map 1 C1

This canalside establishment makes for an exceptional and intimate dining experience. The inventive, pure, full-flavoured dishes have earned the restaurant a well-deserved Michelin star every year for more than a decade. Closed lunch; Mon & Sun.

FURTHER AFIELD AmsterdamWatertorenplein 6, 1051 PA Tel (020) 682 2666

Within a former water-pumping house dating from 1897, this huge, industrial-style restaurant near the Westerpark serves simple, well-priced European food – from steak and fries to grilled wild-boar cutlets. There is a relaxing grass terrace at the back, which makes it great for families. The kitchen is open until 11:30pm on Friday and Saturday.

FURTHER AFIELD Gare de L'EstCruquiusweg 9, 1019 AT Tel (020) 463 0620

Within the former coffee house of an old railway station built in 1901, this unique, romantic restaurant is hugely popular with locals and those who have wandered through the redeveloped Eastern Docklands area, where Gare de L'Est is located. Reservations for the daily changing, four-course global dinners are a must. Closed lunch.

FURTHER AFIELD Star FerryPiet Heinkade 1, 1019 BR Tel (020) 788 2090

Named after the Hong Kong ferry company, and located within the architecturally stunning Muziekgebouw aan 't IJ, this spacious, glass-walled cafe-restaurant specializes in Asian-influenced international cuisine. There are incredible views across the busy waterfront behind Centraal Station, but avoid the unshaded terrace on hot days.

FURTHER AFIELD De OdessaVeerkade 259, 1019 CZ Tel (020) 419 3010

Head to this enchanting Ukrainian fishing boat as the sun sets and enjoy cocktails on the deck, while snacking on oysters. De Odessa's international menu of mainly fish and meat dishes is well presented and reasonable – but the draw is the experience itself. DJs play on the lounge-style deck below. Closed lunch; Mon & Tue in winter.

FURTHER AFIELD FifteenJollemanhof 9, 1019 GW Tel (0900) 343 8336

British celebrity chef Jamie Oliver's open-plan restaurant is situated within a renovated waterfront warehouse. Book ahead for the set four-course modern Italian tasting menu (with vegetarian options), or just turn up for pasta, risotto or ravioli in the cheaper trattoria. The waiting staff and sommelier are very attentive. Closed Sun lunch.

Fnidsen 107, 1811 NE Tel (072) 515 2606

Road map B3 €€

Brightly coloured Mexican restaurant that offers a reasonably priced and filling menu full of the classics. Alongside favourites like tacos, enchiladas and fajitas, there are burgers and more refined dishes such as blackened fish and duck breast with tamarind. To accompany, there is a varied menu of cocktails and Mexican beers. Closed lunch.

BERGEN Gusto

Breelaan 2, 1861 GE Tel (072) 582 1800

Road Map B3 €€€€

Stylish restaurant, decorated in purples and velvets, with garden dining for warm weather. Food is ambitious modern European, with a dash of Asian influence: tuna with soya gelée and lemon ketchup or tournedos with salsa verde, and strong on fish and seafood. Good wine list. There's also a cheaper grand café.

BLOEMENDAAL Restaurant Terra

Kerkplein 16A, 2061 JD Tel (023) 527 7856

Road Map B3 €€€€€

Highly rated lunch and dinner in upmarket yet informal surroundings. Terracotta floor-tiles and wicker chairs give a feel of the Mediterranean, which is reflected in the menu. Saffron ravioli with fennel and shellfish, and fig and almond sabayon are typical dishes. Set menus represent good value for money. Closed Wed; lunch Sat & Sun.

ENKHUIZEN Restaurant De Admiraal

Havenweg 4, 1601 GA Tel (0228) 319 256

Road Map C2 €€€€€

A large outdoor terrace overlooks Enkhuzen's beautiful harbour. Inside the restaurant, the nautical theme continues with ship's mirrors, lanterns and dark, polished wood. The mainly French menu is strong on fish (salmon mousse with tarragon, local bass with curry sauce), but also good for meat-lovers (pork with wild mushrooms and truffle).

HAARLEM De Eetkamer van Harlem

Lange Veerstraat 45, 2011 DA Tel (023) 531 2262

Road Map B3 €€€€

This intimate restaurant is set in Harlem's lively culinary street, near the Grote Markt. Dishes are a delight to the eye as well as the palate: the chef prides himself on his artful presentation. The menu features French and international cuisine; the crisply fried lamb sweetbreads in Calvados sauce are recommended. Dinner only; closed Mon & Tue.

HAARLEM Lambermons

Korte Veerstraat 1, 2011 CL Tel (023) 542 7804

Road Map B3 €€€€

Housed in an old brewery building, Lambermons dispenses with the usual formula of choosing three courses from a printed menu. Instead, diners in this "cooking theatre" are presented with a dish every half hour, and can choose as many (or as few) as they wish. Dishes change daily: French-inspired meat and fish dominates. Closed lunch; Mon.

HOORN Brasserie Cosy

Nieuwland 1, 1621 HJ Tel (0229) 215 403

Road Map C3 €€€

A simple, bright and modern brasserie not far from the train station, offering plain and reasonably priced international food. Meat-eaters will be satisfied with the choice of burgers, mixed grills and satays, but there are also healthy salads and vegetarian dishes such as stuffed aubergine. Good children's menu with pancakes and spaghetti.

HUIZEN De Haven van Huizen

Havenstraat 81, 1271 AD Tel (035) 524 0369

Road Map C3 €€€

This informal restaurant in a former herring smokers sits right on the harbour's edge, and has plenty of outside seating. The long menu includes international favourites such as carpaccio and steaks and, fittingly, has an emphasis on fish. Indulgent puddings include brandy and raisin ice cream with advocaat and cream. There's a lighter lunch menu.

LOOSDRECHT Dunne Dirk

Oud Loosdrechtsedijk 238, 1231 NH Tel (035) 582 3306

Road Map C3 €€€

A long-standing and popular restaurant in a charming, traditional green and white building. The airy beamed interior is furnished with rattan chairs, and there's a pretty garden. The menu is Mediterranean-influenced and unpretentious, with the likes of paella and saltimbocca; vegetarians have a good choice too. Dinner only; closed Mon.

MUIDEN Restaurant De Doelen

Sluis 1, 1398 AR Tel (0294) 263 200

Road Map C3 €€€

Authentic French cuisine is the speciality at this waterside restaurant in the fishing town of Muiden. Chandeliers, dark wood and drapes create a smart setting for the formal but unstuffy food, such as truffled duck liver with mini-pizza, fish pot au feu and fig tartlets with cream. In fine weather, diners can eat on the terrace.

NAARDEN-VESTING Het Arsenaal

Kooltjesbuurt 1, 1411 RZ Tel (035) 694 9148

Road map C3 €€€€

In the former arsenal in the fortified part of Naarden is one of the region's leading restaurants. Chef Paul Fagel cooks inventive, modern food, with a menu that offers his own established classics alongside new dishes using ingredients like calf's liver, eel and parsnips, herbed and sauced to perfection. There is also a brasserie. Closed lunch Sat & Sun.

OUDERKERK AAN DE AMSTEL Ron Blaauw RestaurantKerkstraat 56, 1191 JE Tel (020) 496 1943Road Map C3

Considered by some to be the best in the country, this restaurant just outside Amsterdam boasts two Michelin stars. The food is formal French, and set menus allow diners to get a good taste of the breadth of creativity of the chefs. The sommelier, Timo Honig, is full of advice. Closed Mon & Sun; Sat lunch.

ZANDVOORT AAN ZEE Vooges StrandBoulevard Paulus Loot 1a, 2042 AD Tel (023) 571 6959Road Map B3

This informal beach café comes into its own in warm weather, though it is open most of the year. There's a terrace with sun umbrellas, while indoors is decorated with bleached wood. Food is light and suited to summer days: minted tabbouleh, bouillabaisse or chicken with sofrito are typical of the Mediterranean-influenced dishes. Closed Nov–Jan.

UTRECHT*AMERSFOORT Restaurant MWestsingel 48–9, 3811 BB Tel (033) 448 0990Road Map C4

"M" stands for meat – organic meat and poultry feature prominently on the menu here, but vegetarians and fish lovers are also catered for. The restaurant is in a picturesque corner of Amersfoort, its modern, spacious interior a pleasant contrast with the historic surroundings. There is a quiet courtyard terrace. Closed lunch; Tue.

BREUKELEN 't BoothuysPort Brocledde 26, 3621 VP Tel (0346) 265 287Road Map C4

This rustic-looking yet chic restaurant, with subtle nautical decor, overlooks the Loosdrecht lakes. Food is French-influenced and meat-heavy, often using local ingredients, while also reworking local classics with such dishes as gorgonzola bitterballen (meatballs). The wine list and the service are highly thought of. Closed lunch; Mon & Tue.

DEN DOLDER Anak DèpokDolderseweg 85, 3734 BD Tel (030) 229 2915Road Map C4

This smart restaurant offers authentic Indonesian dishes to appreciative regulars who enjoy babi pangang (rich, marinated pork) and atjar (home-made pickles). Those with hearty appetites should indulge in one of the multi-coursed rijsttafels or the set four-course menu. The kitchen closes at 9:30pm. Closed lunch; Mon & Tue.

HOUTEN Kasteel HeemstedeHeemstedeweg 20, 3992 LS Tel (030) 272 2207Road Map C4

A grand, romantic experience can be had in this formal restaurant in a 17th-century castle. The menu offers an exciting take on classic French cooking, with the likes of wild Bloody Mary oysters, pigeon with foie gras and tonka bean crème brûlée. There are also good-value set menus. The summer dining terrace overlooks the moat. Closed Mon & Sun.

MAARSSSEN 3 VriendenSchoutenstraat 5, 3601 BK Tel (0346) 567 390Road Map C4

This attractive restaurant on the river Vecht offers a good-value, informal food experience, dispensing with the three-course formula. All dishes are priced the same and diners can choose as many as they want from the international menu, which includes options such as confit de canard and salmon kebab with wasabi mayonnaise. Closed lunch.

MAARSSSEN AugusteStraatweg 144, 3603 CS Tel (0346) 565 666Road Map C4

Chef Karl van Baggem's Michelin-starred restaurant prides itself on the freshness of its ingredients and creativity of its dishes. The menu changes daily, offering delicate dishes like celeriac with quail's egg or lobster soup with tomato foam. Set menus represent a good price-quality ratio, and service is attentive. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

MAARTENSDIJK Restaurant Zilt & ZoetDorpsweg 153, 3738 CD Tel (0346) 212 627Road Map C4

Set in a quiet farming village between Utrecht and Hilversum, this converted farmhouse beckons after a day exploring the surrounding woodlands. "Zilt & Zoet" translates as "salty and sweet": the menu is inspired by the Mediterranean, with hints of Asia and Holland. Local organic produce, fish and seafood, are well represented. Closed lunch; Mon & Sun.

UTRECHT Le BibelotOudegracht 181, 3511 NE Tel (030) 231 3353Road Map C4

Traditional French food served in the unpretentious surroundings of a friendly, cosy restaurant with canal views in the city centre. All the favourites are present, from onion soup to delicious crêpes Suzettes, and unusually for this kind of restaurant, there is a good choice for vegetarians. The three-course set dinner is excellent value. Closed lunch; Mon.

UTRECHT GoestingVeeartsenijpad 150, 3572 DH Tel (030) 273 3346Road Map C4

This building was a stable, but is now an upmarket restaurant, with low ceilings and tables nestled in arches. The short menu shows off the kitchen's skills in innovating around formal dishes, using the best ingredients: air-dried ham from Ruurlo served with rhubarb jam, tournedos with Fryske Hynder whisky from Bolsward. Closed Mon & Sun.

SOUTH HOLLAND

DELFT MaleeVoldersgracht 29, 2611 EV Tel (015) 212 0781Road Map B4

A pleasant, unpretentious Thai restaurant in the city centre that's loved by locals for its fresh, authentic food and low prices. A la carte dining offers more choice, still very well priced, of dishes like spicy pork with green beans. Many rate this as the best Thai food in the region. Closed lunch.

DELFT Stadscafé de WaagMarkt 11, 2611 GP Tel (015) 213 0393Road Map B4

In the beautiful medieval weigh house overlooking the main square, this "city café" is an informal, good-value place for a snack or full meal, eaten by candlelight among relics from the building's long history. Lunchtime offers well-priced eetcafé standards like croquettes and chips, with more upmarket evening fare: prawn mousseline with pesto gnocchi.

DELFT Le Vieux JeanHeilige Geestkerkhof 3, 2611 HP Tel (015) 213 0433Road Map B4

This lovely, understated little place near the Nieuwe Kerk looks – and tastes – like a real French restaurant. Polished wood, white linen table cloths and fine crockery are a fitting setting to show off classics like coquilles St. Jacques and lamb chops in butter, rounded off with cheese and a glass of 20-year-old port. Closed Sat lunch; Mon & Sun.

GEERVLIEET Bernisse MolenSpuikade 1, 3211 BG Tel (0181) 661 292Road Map B4

It's not often that diners have the opportunity to eat gourmet food inside a windmill, but here you can do just that. The white and cream interior is circular, giving a feeling of privacy and seclusion. The chef uses local organic produce wherever possible, compiling menus with an emphasis on seasonal, fresh ingredients. Closed Sat lunch; Mon & Sun.

GORINCHEM HipperTorenstraat 1a, 4201 GN Tel (0183) 666 695Road Map C4

A fun, trendy restaurant in an attractive harbour town. Diners sit in a bright pink and purple dining room, on chairs swathed in velvet, or in the spacious, tree-filled garden in summer. The menu offers fashionable international dishes and children are well cared for: they get their own menu and a special corner for play. Closed lunch; Mon–Wed.

GOUDA TapasLange Groenendaal 57, 2801 LR Tel (0182) 523 035Road Map B4

A good range of tasty, well-priced dishes are available at this informal tapas bar in the town centre. A fun, kitsch atmosphere prevails – guitars hang on walls and there is live music – but food is taken seriously. Vegetarians get an entire menu to themselves alongside the more usual Serrano ham and sardines. Closed lunch; Mon.

LEIDEN City HallStadshuisplein 3, 2311 EJ Tel (071) 514 4055Road Map B3

A well-priced staple in the basement of the town hall, attracting a cross-section of Leiden's population, from students to businesspeople. The interior is slick, white and space age, and food imaginative Mediterranean: swordfish carpaccio, mesclun and goat's cheese salad, giant profiterole with nutty ice cream. Also popular for breakfast and lunch.

LISSE Il MulinoHeereweg 194, 2161 BP Tel (0252) 625 420Road Map B3

A stylish venue that's convenient for post-Keukenhof refuelling. The restaurant is decorated in soothing colours with comfortable banquettes, and food is a sophisticated mix of Italian, Asian and Dutch influences: stir-fried gambas with tagliatelle and a spicy Thai sauce, for example. Cheap special dishes on Wednesday. Closed lunch; Mon.

RHOON BiggoDorpsdijk 63, 3161 KD Tel (010) 501 8896Road Map B4

There are several places to eat within the castle of Rhooen, but Biggo offers the full-on gourmet experience. The freshest of ingredients – many of them local and organic – are turned into dishes from the classical repertoire, accompanied by excellent wines. Multi-course set menus allow diners to sample the chefs' skills. Closed Sat lunch.

ROTTERDAM Kade 4Spaansekade 4, 3011 ML Tel (010) 270 9001Road Map B4

On the water's edge in the beautiful Old Harbour in the shadow of the expressionist cube houses, "Quay 4" comes into its own in summer when diners can eat on the water's edge (and it's also pleasant inside). Lunch offers light wraps and salads, while evening meals include Dutch favourites such as mustard soup and North Sea shrimps.

ROTTERDAM MastikaEendrachtsweg 25, 3012 LB Tel (010) 214 2463Road Map B4

Despite its large population of Turkish immigrants, there are few places in Rotterdam selling high-quality Turkish cuisine. Mastika, a smart but unstuffy restaurant in a handsome town house, redresses the balance with its focus on Ottoman food. Smokers can enjoy an after-dinner hubble-bubble. Closed Mon; lunch Sat & Sun.

STREEFKERK De LimonadefabriekNieuwe Haven 1, 2959 AT Tel (0184) 689 335Road Map B4

Named after Georges Blanc's restaurant in the South of France, this floating restaurant is stylish and modern. Food is up-to-the-minute and influenced by world flavours: lemongrass and black sesame sit alongside piccalilli and tarragon. Good value set menus. There is an outside terrace and views over the river Lek. Closed Mon & Tue; lunch Sep–May.

THE HAGUE DayangPrinsestraat 65, 2513CB Tel (070) 364 9979Road Map B4

This tiny "toko" is thought by many to have some of the best Indonesian food in The Hague – a real accolade, as the city is famed for that country's cuisine. The authentic food is cheap, but nothing is sacrificed to quality: meat and fish are juicy, and anything served with the spicy peanut sauce is recommended. Closed Mon.

THE HAGUE Bistro MerJavastraat 9, 2585 AB Tel (070) 360 7389Road Map B4

Fish, lobster and oysters are the speciality at this restaurant in The Hague's refined embassy district. An abundance of mirrors and the airy conservatory overlooking the courtyard (with outside seating) enhance the experience of the French-influenced food. For dessert, crêpes Suzettes with ginger are recommended. Closed Mon; lunch Sat & Sun.

ZEELAND*DOMBURG Strandpaviljoen De BoomerangStrand Domburg 60, 4357 XZ Tel (0118) 584 129Road Map A5

This casual café-restaurant overlooking the beach looks like a log cabin inside, making for a cosy evening of informal Dutch standards such as pancakes, chicken satay and sausages, or the Italian chef's pizza, pasta and heartier meat and fish dishes like veal alla milanese and fritto misto. The home-made tiramisu is delicious. Closed Nov–Feb.

KRUININGEN Manoir Restaurant Inter ScaldesZandweg 2, 4416 NA Tel (0113) 381 753Road Map A5

Two Michelin stars adorn this upmarket hotel and restaurant that even has its own helipad. It's not at all stuffy, however, and feels rather like being a guest at a country house. The outstanding, again unpretentious, offerings from Jannis Brevet's kitchen include poached egg with spinach and the added luxury of caviar. Closed Mon & Tue; lunch Sat.

MIDDELBURG Restaurantje Nummer 7Rotterdamsekaai 7, 4331 GM Tel (0118) 627 077Road Map A5

This handsome restaurant in an 18th-century villa near the harbour retains many original features. Food is good value and simple: free-range Limburg pork stew and crêpes with caramelized apples. Lobster features heavily and affordably, too. Some diners complain that portions are a bit small. Closed lunch; Mon.

SLUIS Oud SluisBeestenmarkt 2, 4524 EA Tel (0117) 461 269Road Map A5

People travel from all over the Netherlands to eat Sergio Herman's exquisite seasonal food, in what's thought to be one of the country's best restaurants. Oysters and langoustines are prepared in several ways, and local ingredients are transformed into something out of this world. Prices reflect its three Michelin star status. Closed Mon & Tue.

TERNEUZEN Het ArsenaalNieuwstraat 29, 4531 CV Tel (0115) 613 000Road Map A5

This atmospheric restaurant and wine cellar in the town's old fortifications serves a menu of ambitious international food using seasonal ingredients. Classics such as scampi with cream and Pernod sit alongside duck with vanilla and clove. Desserts feature fruit from the restaurant's own gardens. Closed Mon & Sun; lunch Sat.

VLISSINGEN Restaurant WaterfrontBoulevard Bankert 108a, 4382 AC Tel (0118) 415 555Road Map A5

At this restaurant with stunning views across the Westerschelde and the North Sea, chef Pedro Ventevogel uses local seasonal produce and fish in French-Mediterranean style dishes with occasional Asian touches. Try tartare of herring, sea bass with lobster sauce and Dutch shrimps, and to finish, ice-cream puff with advocaat and chocolate sauce.

WEST FRISIAN ISLANDS*AMELAND/HOLLUM The SunsetOranjeweg 61, 9161 CB Tel (0519) 554 280Road Map C1

This trendy yet family-friendly restaurant in the dunes beneath Hollum's lighthouse is perfect for summer evenings and has a log fire for chillier ones. Food is suitably seaside, with plenty of fish, chips and light food like soups and salads. Vegetarians and children get their own menus. Hearty meat-eaters won't feel left out with the big mixed grills.

TERSCHELLING/WEST TERSCHELLING Amsterdamsche KoffijhuisWillem Barentszstraat 17, 8881 BP Tel (0562) 442 700Road Map C1

This simple, friendly place decorated with dark wood, polished brass and potted plants looks like it could have come from another era. Prices are also refreshingly old-fashioned, but the food is up-to-date: tapas, vegetarian meals from South Africa and tacos. More nostalgic dishes include liverworst and huge plates of steak and chips. Closed Jan.

TEXEL/OUDESCHILD t PakhuusHaven 8, 1792 AE Tel (0222) 313 581Road Map B2

Light pours through the glass ceilings in this beautifully converted warehouse overlooking the working harbour on the eastern side of Texel. The decor of abstract paintings, fresh flowers and white linen combines the same elements of modern and classic as the menu. Local seasonal ingredients, seafood and lamb in particular, are specialities.

GRONINGEN*ADUARD Herberg Onder de LindenBurgemeester van Barneveldweg 3, 9831 RD Tel (050) 403 1406Road Map D1

This beautiful 18th-century inn deep in the countryside has been a gourmet destination since 1991. The kitchen applies current trends to fresh local ingredients, resulting in dishes like asparagus with free-range egg, pata negra and chervil or chicory in caramel sauce. For warm weather, there's a lovely garden terrace. Closed lunch; Sun–Tue.

GRONINGEN WagamamaVismarkt 54, 9711 KV Tel (050) 313 0783Road Map D1

This branch of the UK noodle bar chain is popular with students for its cheap and nourishing meals. The formula is healthy fast food in sleek surroundings. Not a place to linger over a romantic dinner for two, the long tables and benches are shared, and once you've eaten ramen, gyoza and seaweed salad, it's time to pay and go.

GRONINGEN De PawwGelkingestraat 52, 9711 NE Tel (050) 318 1332Road Map D1

White walls, linen and furnishings, and plenty of polished silverware add up to a classic eating experience at this restaurant in the city centre. Both starters and puddings are chosen from a trolley; mains range from retro (lamb cutlets with spring vegetables) to modern (quail and pigeon with tarte tatin and pine kernel mousseline). Closed lunch.

HAREN Villa SassoMeerweg 221, 9752 XC Tel (050) 309 1365Road Map E2

With a large terrace on the Patersvolder lake and well-spaced tables, this is a relaxing place for coffee, lunch or dinner. Local ingredients are transformed into fashionable versions of classics: asparagus as mousse and in tempura, or lamb stew. Set menus are good value, and lunch is a scaled-down version of dinner. Closed Mon & Sun; Sat lunch.

FRIESLAND*APPELSCHA Het Volle LevenOude Willem 5, 8426 SM Tel (0516) 430 091Road Map D2

In a welcoming farmhouse in the middle of the countryside, chef and owner Yt van der Ploeg cooks up outstanding vegetarian food. Everything is organic and many of the ingredients are harvested from the land outside the same day. The daily changing, no-choice set menu might include beetroot carpaccio and roast vegetable lasagne. Closed lunch.

DRACHTEN KorianderBurgermeester Wuiteweg 18, 9203 KK Tel (0512) 548 850Road Map D2

A light, modern dining room with exposed brickwork and restored wood is the setting for the kitchen's beautifully presented cooking. Local ingredients figure large on the short menu – fish from Wergae, for example – and combine with Mediterranean herbs and flavours. Puddings and cheeses are a speciality. Closed Mon & Sun.

JOURE t PleinDouwe Egbertsplein 1a, 8501 AB Tel (0513) 417 070Road Map D2

This stylish restaurant decked out in stark black and white, with ornate touches such as carved mirrors and fresh flowers, is a stylish spot for lunch or dinner. It's a favourite with regulars for the menu filled with local recipes, like skinkespek and Fryske sûkerbôle. Book the table in the kitchen to watch the action. Closed Mon & Sun.

LEEWARDEN Eetcafé SpinozaEewal 50–52, 8911 GT Tel (058) 212 9393Road Map D2

Unpretentious, good value eetcafé with a philosophical theme – there's a second branch in the town called Descartes. The menu offers simple, hearty favourites from around the world, christened with humorous names: "Italy v. Portugal" combines sardines with pasta, while "chop chop" is stir-fried beef and vegetables. Closed lunch.

PIAAM De Nynke PleatsBuren 25, 8756 JP Tel (0515) 231 707Road Map C2

This converted 18th-century farmhouse in the countryside makes a pleasant stop for lunch, dinner, or just a coffee and snack. There's a terrace with rustic views, but indoors, the chandeliered barn is an equally impressive setting for the fresh, well-priced local specialties like Frisian onion soup, or local cheese with pea mousse. Call for opening times.

SLOTEN Het BolwerkVoorstreek 116, 8556 XV Tel (0514) 531 405Road Map C2

This attractive restaurant in an 18th-century townhouse has low, beamed ceilings and simple decor. It's popular for its good prices and ample, filling portions of classic Dutch food served all through the day. Lunchtime might bring a big plate of local cheeses, with warming dishes like duck in a raspberry beer sauce for dinner.

DRENTHE*ASSEN Pacific PlazaTransportweg 2, 9405 PR Tel (0592) 462 463Road Map D2

Those seeking a light, healthy alternative to meat and dairy-heavy Dutch food will appreciate this restaurant's pan-Asian dishes. Food is good quality, fresh and tasty. Japanese teppenyaki (cooked at the table) and sushi sit alongside Chinese standards like char sui pork. A wide range of set menus make it particularly good for groups.

DE SCHIPHORST De HavixhorstSchiphorsterweg 34–36, 7966 AC Tel (0522) 441 487Road Map D3

A landmark restaurant, both for food and the château it's housed in. Attention to detail are keywords here, from presentation to service. Inventive amuse bouche excite the tastebuds, followed with the likes of monkfish with poached egg and vandoovan curry, and chocolate tart with sweet woodruff mousse and cardamom. Reservations only.

DWINGELOO Hof van DwingelooDrift 1, 7991 AA Tel (0521) 593 094Road Map D2

At the heart of a much-visited, attractive village, this informal café-restaurant with a large outside terrace overlooks a pretty pond. Inside, the decor is traditional Dutch, as is the family-friendly menu: pancakes, croquettes and satay for lunch, beefsteak, ribs and sweet waffles for dinner. Snacks and drinks available all day. Closed Tue (except school hols).

EMMEN De KamerMarktplein 7, 7811 AM Tel (0591) 618 180Road Map E2

This attractive restored farmhouse in the town centre is now home to a restaurant and art gallery in one. This theme carries through to the menu, with dishes given artistic names: "watercolour soup" is tomato soup with sour cream and basil, while "in fire and flame" is pork medallions in wine-caramel sauce.

NORG Bospaviljoen De NorgbergLangeloërweg 63, 9331 VA Tel (0592) 614 266Road Map D2

This café-restaurant in a forest is equally good as a resting place after exploring, or a destination in itself. Outside there's a large terrace, inside is rather romantic, with lots of candles. The food is hearty but made with finesse: schnitzel and guinea-fowl confit are typical. Child- and senior-sized portions available. Closed Sep–May: Mon & Tue.

WESTERVELDE De Jufferen LunsinghHoofdweg 13, 9337 PA Tel (0592) 612 618Road Map D2

This restaurant in a tall, white, shuttered building looks rather French in appearance, and the Gallic influence carries onto the menu of very local ingredients – they breed their own cattle and sheep. Although smart, the restaurant is also very walker-friendly: you are invited to explore their acres of land and they even provide picnics and bikes.

OVERIJSSSEL*ALMELO Dock 19Haven Noordzijde 19, 7607 ER Tel (0546) 578 819Road Map E3

This restaurant is highly thought of for its modern, New York-style interior with velvet walls and picture windows, as well as its fusion food. Begin with a delicious cocktail and move onto meals that embrace world cuisine on one plate, such as beef sashimi with olive tapenade and Ceylon curry. Closed Mon & Sun.

DEVENTER Engel en BengelGrote Overstraat 55–57, 7411 JB Tel (0570) 614 754Road Map D3

A kitsch and colourful little place that's quickly become a local favourite for both its bright flowery interior and honest, fairly priced food. Dishes include standards like carpaccio, trout cooked in foil and several old-fashioned Dutch dishes like liquorice and aniseed ice cream. Closed Mon; Tue–Fri lunch.

ENSCHDE De Fusting DowntownZuiderhagen 16.18, 7511 GL Tel (053) 436 7787Road Map E3

There are two branches of this popular eetcafé in Enschede, and this one is right in the town centre, on one of the main shopping streets. Those refuelling post-spending spree will appreciate the hearty fare and cheap prices. The menu includes soups, sandwiches, salads and tapas. Closed Mon; Sun lunch.

HOLTEN Bistro de HolterbergForthaarsweg 1, 7451 JS Tel (0548) 363 849Road Map D3

Set in a pretty village in a nature reserve, this informal bistro affords great views from the large terrace (40 km/25 miles on a clear day). Inside is cosy, with a roaring fire. Customers also come for the unpretentious local and international menu, where shrimp croquettes sit alongside salmon with pasta and pesto. Closed lunch; Mon.

ZWOLLE De LibrijeBroerkerklein 13, 8011 TW Tel (038) 421 2083Road Map D3

One of the best restaurants in the country, people come from all over the Netherlands (and beyond) for the culinary experience created by husband-and-wife team Jonnie and Thérèse Boer. It's one of the few Michelin-starred places that offers a gourmet vegetarian set menu. Sweet-toothed diners will delight in the soufflés, a house speciality.

FLEVOLAND*ALMERE WaterfrontEsplanade 10, 1315 TA Tel (036) 845 5777Road Map C3

This restaurant overlooking the Gooimeer is part of the town's municipal theatre, serving dinner only on performance nights and every Thu–Sat. Locals are delighted by its sleek interior and the fashionable fusion food such as tuna with seaweed and wasabi or rabbit stewed with cherry beer. Some diners might find the portions on the small side.

ALMERE-HAVEN Brasserie BakboordVeerkade 10, 1357 PK Tel (036) 540 4040Road Map C3

This modern, glass-fronted restaurant in the harbour is unsurprisingly popular with yachters and pleasure cruisers, who relax on the lovely terrace's wicker chairs, and dine on well-executed classics which are rather difficult to get in the region: lobster thermidor, oysters, and roast duck breast and duck liver are washed down with good wines.

URK De KaapWijk 1–5, 8321 EK Tel (0527) 681 509Road Map C3

This fish specialist and eetcafé at the heart of an ancient fishing village is decked out in an appropriately nautical style, with model boats, lamps and anchors. The menu (available in Braille) lists lots of seafood and fish dishes: smoked eel is popular. There are also hearty steaks and schnitzels.

GELDERLAND*AALST De FuikMaasdijk 1, 4926 SJ Tel (0418) 552 247Road Map C4

This destination restaurant is built directly over a tributary of the Maas, giving beautiful views from the terrace and outside balcony. Dining here is a full-on gourmet experience, with Dutch ingredients transformed into French-style classics such as trio of foie gras or halibut with smoked beetroot. Cheese is a speciality. Closed Mon; Sat lunch.

APELDOORN Restaurant Jules VerneRaadhuisplein 3, 7311 LJ Tel (055) 521 7394Road Map D3

On a busy square at the heart of the city, Jules Verne will take you around the world on a plate of fusion food: tempura prawns with ratatouille and pesto is one example. Vegetarians are well-served here. Set menus range from four to six courses and the changing monthly four-course menu is good value.

ARNHEM Arnhems ProeflokaalSpijkerstraat 3, 6828 DA Tel (026) 351 8485Road Map D4

This cheerful and unpretentious eetcafé offers a real slice of Dutch life, from the low brass lamps and dark wood furnishings, to the simple, filling and very cheap – but seldom boring – food. It's usually busy all day with locals enjoying the likes of smoked chicken salad and vegetable soup with chorizo from the daily changing menu. Closed lunch; Mon.

DOESBURG De WaagKoepoortstraat 2–4, 6981 AS Tel (0313) 479 617Road Map D4

The oldest Dutch café has also been voted among the best 100 in the country. This "beer-house", bar and restaurant is situated in a gorgeous medieval building overlooking a square. The café is upstairs, while there's more formal dining in the basement. Food includes local favourites (mustard soup, Belgian waterzooi) and innovations (tempura salmon).

HARDERWIJK t'NonnetjeVischmarkt 38, 3841 BG Tel (0341) 415 848Road Map C3

Diners uniformly sing the praises of "the little nun", an atmospheric restaurant on a beautiful town square near the harbour. The set and à la carte menus both feature plenty of fish and Dutch ingredients. Wadden Sea cockles and Kamper lamb are treated with the latest techniques creating delicious and surprising results. Closed lunch; Sun.

NIJMEGEN Het HeimweeOude Haven 76-80, 6511 XH Tel (024) 322 2256Road Map D4

Choose from set menus based on daily changing, fresh ingredients in this handsome townhouse restaurant overlooking the old harbour. Helpful staff talk diners through the choices, which may include poached egg with samphire and truffles. Meats come with sophisticated additions like apple chutney and morelle jus. Closed lunch; Mon.

NORTH BRABANT*'S-HERTOGENBOSCH Brasserie Pilkington'sTorenstraat 5, 5211 KK Tel (073) 612 2923Road Map C4

Visitors who sit beneath the shady trees or inside among the teapots and jam jars may think they're at an English country house. From English breakfast through to ploughman's lunch, high tea with scones and Earl Grey, and onto dinners of shepherd's pie, Pilkington's keeps the Union Jack flying. Closed Mon dinner.

BREDA Landgoed WolfslaarWolfslaardreef 100-102, 4834 SP Tel (076) 560 8000Road Map B5

In the countryside on the outskirts of the city, Wolfslaar is a 17th-century villa whose restaurant is in the former coach house. The chef's native province, Limburg, influences the menu, with stews, asparagus and root vegetables. Service is outstanding and the restaurant's fine cuisine has been awarded a Michelin star. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

EINDHOVEN Taj MahalGeldropseweg 27-29, 5611 SC Tel (040) 211 9440Road Map C5

Good Indian food is often difficult to come by in the Netherlands, which is why this restaurant is popular with an international crowd of regulars, particularly British expats. Chicken tikka masala, lamb jalfrezi and butterfly prawns are all consumed with nostalgic delight. There are also filling, value-for-money set dinners. Closed lunch.

EINDHOVEN Avant-Garde van GroeningenFrederiklaan 10d, 5616 NH Tel (040) 250 5640Road Map C5

Soothing beiges, browns, leather and marble create an opulent background for the kitchen's creations at this upmarket restaurant. Innovation and creativity are at the top of the chefs' agenda, resulting in lobster cooked in vanilla oil with sabayon, salsify confit, and fried, spiced pineapple with coconut curry sorbet. Closed Sat lunch; Sun.

OSS BuitengewoonKerkstraat 12, 5341 BK Tel (0412) 643 248Road Map C4

The name of this restaurant translates as "unusual" and, run as it is by youngsters with learning difficulties, it probably is. There's nothing unusual about the well-made bistro-style food, however, and regulars enjoy sophisticated dishes like taleggio and mushroom lasagne. Discount with De Lievenkamp theatre ticket. Closed dinner Mon & Tue; lunch Sun.

SLEEUWIJK Boven de RivierenHoekende 24, 4254 LN Tel (0183) 307 353Road Map C4

This restaurant in an attractive yacht harbour actually floats on the water and, although it looks rather shed-like outside, the light interior is stylishly decked out in deep reds. Lunch might consist of tapas or salad, while dinner offers plenty of simple fish dishes or grilled meat served with seasonal vegetables. Closed Mon.

TILBURG BreexzSporlaan 47, 5038 CB Tel (013) 542 5255Road Map C5

This bright and modern brasserie in the city's railway station attracts more than just commuters: many residents also head to what's considered the trendiest restaurant in Tilburg. There's a simple dinner menu of pastas, steaks and stir-fries, as well as more sophisticated finger-food like crab cakes and yakitori chicken, to accompany cocktails.

UDEN 't RaadhuisMarkt 1a, 5401 GN Tel (0413) 257 000Road Map C4

This classy restaurant is situated in the former town hall (raadhuis). While you can order à la carte, the speciality here is seasonal, themed set menus of four or more elegant courses: the gastronomic keukenmenu has seven. When in season, the asparagus menu is a must. There's a large terrace for outdoor lunching. Reservations recommended.

WILLEMSTAD FrascatiVoorstraat 50, 4797 BH Tel (0168) 476 080Road Map B4

This unpretentious little trattoria, near the yacht harbour in a fortified village, serves honest home-style Italian cooking. Alongside decent versions of vitello tonnato, and a wide range of tasty pasta and pizza, there are a few interesting takes on Dutch dishes, such as an uitsmijter made with brioche, duck liver and quail's eggs. Closed Mon; Tue-Fri lunch.

LIMBURG

BEEK De Lindenboom

Burgemeester Janssenstraat 13, 6191 JB Tel (046) 437 1237

Road Map D6

This long-standing restaurant has reinvented itself as a crisp, slick place selling fusion food created with ingredients from around the world: Scottish salmon and Breton potatoes rub shoulders with North Sea cod and Limburg abbey-raised pork. Three hundred wines are available, one hundred by the glass. Closed Mon, Tue; lunch Sat, Sun.

EPEN Panorama Restaurant Gerardushoeve

Julianastraat 23, 6285 AH Tel (043) 455 1722

Road Map D6

Perched on the edge of a hillside, the lovely covered terrace here probably has the best view in the country, overlooking Dutch, Belgian and German landscapes. At lunch, Limburg bread is used to make sandwiches, and local influences carry through to dinner. In season, asparagus features in many dishes. Closed dinner Mon–Thu in Jan.

GULPEN l'Atelier

Markt 9, 6271 BD Tel (043) 450 4490

Road Map D6

This restaurant on a pretty market square is valued by customers for its good service, good wine and accessible French food. Set menus offer particular value for money, providing a whirlwind tour of the kitchen's craft and incorporating the best local ingredients, such as grotto-aged cheese. Closed Tue–Wed; Sat lunch.

HEERLEN Geleenhof

Valkenburgerweg 54, 6419 AV Tel (045) 571 8000

Road Map D6

This lovely country house with a shady, tree-lined courtyard offers quality Limburg cuisine with Mediterranean flourishes. The menu is short and reflects the season's harvest, and always offers a fish, meat and vegetarian choice for each course. The locally grown asparagus features large in springtime. Closed Mon, Tue; lunch Sat, Sun.

MAASTRICHT Rekkó

Vrijthof 10, 6211 LC Tel (043) 321 9956

Road Map C6

There are few cheap and cheerful places to eat in Maastricht, so this eetcafé on the main square is welcome for its all-day kitchen and affordable prices. It opens early for breakfast and continues through lunch and dinner and onto evening snacks and nibbles. The menu holds no surprises, just honest food of the salads, steak and chicken sort.

MAASTRICHT Ginger

Tongersestraat 7, 6211 LL Tel (043) 326 0022

Road Map C6

Those on the look out for a light alternative to the heavy Bourgandische local fare will welcome the clean, healthy flavours at this trendy pan-Asian restaurant. Thai, Korean and Japanese-style rice and noodle dishes predominate, and the range for vegetarians goes beyond just tofu. There are cocktails, wines and beers to drink. Closed lunch Sat & Sun.

MAASTRICHT Eetkamer de Bissjop

Luikerweg 33, 6212 ET Tel (043) 459 9202

Road Map C6

The walls of this little restaurant hang with paintings that are all for sale – it also doubles as an art gallery. The menu changes weekly, and consists of five courses; diners choose as many or few as they want, from the likes of tomato bouillon with wild garlic, John Dory with marinated fennel and chocolate mousse with advocaat. Closed lunch; Mon, Tue.

MAASTRICHT Au Coin des Bons Enfants

Ezelmarkt 4, 6211 LJ Tel (043) 321 2359

Road Map C6

This upmarket restaurant has long been a favourite among Maastricht's elite and epicures; in fact, people travel from Belgium and Germany to indulge in its delicacies. Calf's tongue stuffed with veal kidneys and foie gras, Aquitaine caviar, Bresse pigeon – all these opulent ingredients are present. Particularly interesting puddings. Closed Tue–Wed.

ROERMOND L'Union

Markt 21, 6041 EL Tel (0475) 317 187

Road Map D5

On an attractive square lined with bars and restaurants and overlooked by the cathedral, l'Union is a safe bet for a decent lunch or dinner. There's a large terrace on the square. Inside looks like a French bistro, with food to match: bouillabaisse, mixed grill, salmon mousse. Coffee comes with a glass of advocaat and whipped cream. Closed Mon.

SCHINNEN Aan Sjuuteeānjd

Dorpsstraat 74, 6365 BH Tel (046) 443 1767

Road Map D6

Customers travel from all over the region to taste the outstanding, affordable cuisine from Limburg born-and-bred chef, Jean Thoma. He recreates the recipes of his home with modern twists: trout "zure zult" (brawn), chicken pot-au-feu with Limburg wine and unusual puddings. Closed Tue–Wed; lunch Sat & Sun.

VENLO Grand Café Dante

Parade 5e, 5911 CA Tel (077) 321 1651

Road Map D5

This attractive, split-level restaurant in a red-brick town house also has a walled garden for summer eating. The international menu offers well-executed standards such as spicy chicken satay with Indonesian pickles and fries, warming pasta dishes and meal-sized salads. Try the creamy home-made tiramisu for dessert. Closed Mon.

SHOPPING IN THE NETHERLANDS

Throughout the Netherlands you will find a huge range of shops and markets. Many towns will have large retail chains, but you will also find unique independent shops selling clothes, everyday goods and knick-knacks. Large specialized shops such as furniture stores, factory outlets and garden centres are usually on the outskirts of towns and sometimes grouped together in retail parks with parking facilities, child-care facilities and a cafeteria. Most are open, and at their busiest, on public holidays. Recent fashion items can often be picked up cheaply at street markets and second-hand shops.

MARKETS

Practically every town and village holds a general market at least once a week. There are also specialized markets, for example, the farmers' markets, where you can buy fresh farm produce, as well as antique markets and book fairs. Famous specialized markets include the cheese markets of Alkmaar, Edam and Gouda. Then there are also flea markets, where traders and individuals alike sell second-hand goods.

The Netherlands' biggest flea market takes place on Koninginnedag (Queen's Day) (see p32), when practically half of the country tries to get rid of unwanted goods on the street. Fairs are also popular and are held twice a year. Most markets start at 9:30am and shut at 4pm or 5pm, while some are open either in the mornings or the afternoons only.

ANTIQUES

Antique collectors will find plenty to occupy themselves with in the Netherlands. If you are fortunate, you may strike it lucky in second-hand shops or at flea markets, but likely your best bet is to go to an authentic antique dealer. Many antique dealers specialize in a particular period or a field – prints or clocks, for instance. If you prefer buying antiques at auctions, you would probably do best to visit the branches of the international auctioneers Sotheby's or Christie's.

In smaller auction houses too, interesting pieces often go under the hammer. Another way of buying antiques is to visit the antique markets and fairs that are held regularly throughout the country.

Amsterdam's Nieuwe Spiegelstraat is the place for antique collectors. Vendors include antique dealers specializing in ceramics, glass, antique prints, paintings and nautical memorabilia.

Haarlem, Middelburg and 's-Hertogenbosch have large numbers of antique shops; these are often located in old farmhouses. The most common pieces on sale are pine or oak furniture. The MECC in Maastricht and the Brabant-hallen in 's-Hertogenbosch are the venues of annual antique fairs, such as the renowned TEFAF, the world's biggest art and antique fair. Antique dealers from around the world come here to trade.

FASHION

The Dutch are spending more and more of their incomes on good-quality fashionable clothing. Besides internationally renowned couturiers, many up-and-coming fashion designers set up their own boutiques. Their clothes are often handmade and fairly pricey. More affordable clothes are available at the larger fashion retailers, both home-grown and international. A typical Dutch way of being fashionable is to combine a new and expensive garment with second-hand clothes.

Antique dealer's shop sign

To see the designs of the most famous couturiers, it is best to go to Amsterdam.

On the PC Hoofstraat you will find clothes by Hugo Boss, Armani and Yves Saint-Laurent, Classical English clothing and shoes are to be found in the shops on the Haagse Noor-deinde in The Hague. Chains such as Vera Moda sell everyday and durable clothing.

RETAIL STORES AND SHOPPING CENTRES

The most upmarket retail store in the Netherlands is the Bijenkorf, which offers contemporary furniture, the latest names in fashion, a huge book department and all major cosmetics brands. The Vroom & Dreesmann department stores are slightly smaller and offer lower prices than the Bijenkorf. One step lower on the prices scale is Hema, which offers a wide and remarkably trendy range of things such as lighting accessories and household goods. At most shopping centres you will find the same names, although some centres are reserved for more exclusive shops. One of these is the Magna Plaza in Amsterdam, where you will find upmarket boutiques and jewellers' shops. De Groene Passage in Rotterdam is a covered shopping centre dedicated to the environment, selling items ranging from organic meat to New Age books. La Vie in Utrecht has a good range of shops; in The Hague, De Passage is the prime shopping centre. Batavia Stad Outlet Shopping centre in Lelystad is a shopping village built to resemble a 17th-century town. Here manufacturers of expensive brands sell end-of-line products, in particular clothes, at heavy discounts. The designer outlet park in Roermond is a similar place to find bargains.

FURNITURE

The Netherlands' top furniture designer, Jan des Bouvrie, has his own shop in a converted arsenal in Naarden called Studio het Arsenal. At Van Til Interior in Alkmaar you can buy designer furniture. In Amsterdam-Zuidoost, you can spend a day viewing furniture in the 75 shops of the Villa Arena. Woonthema centrum De Havenaer in Nijkerk and Palazzo Lelystad also offer interesting collections. You will find "meubelboulevards", shopping streets of furniture stores, throughout the country.

AUCTION AND SALES HOUSES

The famous British auction houses Sotheby's and Christie's have branches in Amsterdam, where international collections in particular are auctioned. The Eland De Zon Loth Gijsselman in Diemen, as well as antiques and art, also auctions furniture and estates. Holbein in Rijssen sells art and antiques, the Veilinghuis de Vonst in Zwolle specializes in stamps and coins.

GARDEN CENTRES

Dutch garden centres sell plants, seeds, bulbs, soil, compost, and garden furniture. For more unusual plants go to specialist growers, of which there are many in the Netherlands. Garden centres are usually on the edge of towns or just outside them. They are usually open for business on Sundays and public holidays.

An abundance of flowers at a Dutch garden centre

CHOCOLATE

Verkade and Droste are the Netherlands' best-known chocolate makers, and you can find their products everywhere. Many towns now have specialized confectioners' shops. The renowned Belgian confectioner Leonidas has numerous outlets in the country. Puccini Bomboni produce exceptional chocolates, sold individually.

TEA AND COFFEE

The Netherlands has been a tea and coffee importer for centuries, and you can find specialist tea and coffee shops everywhere; many still roast their own coffee. Simon Levelt always has at least 25 varieties of coffee and 100 tea blends on sale. Geels & Co, an old family business, has a roasting house and museum.

Magna Plaza (see p90), open for Sunday shopping

What to Buy in Holland

In the cities and tourist resorts, souvenir shops are not difficult to find. But if you are looking for something out of the ordinary, either for yourself or as gifts, you can often find something in more specialized shops, or even in a supermarket. Flowers and Delftware never fail to delight. For other things worth taking home, for example, local delicacies such as Dutch cheese and speculaas or drinks such as jenever gin, see page 426.

Miniature Houses

Painted miniature pottery houses (often Delft blue) are a popular souvenir. Some are designed to be filled with jenever gin, while others are purely ornamental.

Souvenir Dolls

Dutch national costume is hardly worn in the Netherlands any more, except by souvenir dolls such as this trio from Volendam.

Painted Wooden Clogs

The traditional wooden clog has come to symbolize Holland. They can be bought in all colours and sizes. They can also be ordered via the internet at <http://www.woodenshoes.com>

Dutch bulbs

Flowers

Bulbs and cut flowers are available all the year round in the innumerable flower shops, flower stalls and garden centres to be easily found throughout the Netherlands.

Red Coral

Necklaces of red coral are often part of traditional costume in places such as Volendam. However, they also add a nice touch when worn with modern clothing.

Gouda Pipes

Long-necked clay pipes from Gouda, known as Grouwenaars (see p239), have been made here since the beginning of the 17th century and make a nice gift for smokers and non-smokers alike.

Prints of Dutch windmills

Old Maps and Prints

Amsterdam in particular has made its mark in the field of cartography. Many antique shops sell atlases and books of prints.

Reproductions of maps of Amsterdam and Russia

Diamond's

Diamonds were cut in Amsterdam as early as the 16th century, and the town continues to be one of the main diamond centres of the world. Many jewellers sell uncut diamonds and second-hand diamond rings.

Diamonds of different colours

Delftware mugs

Modern Delftware

Modern blue Delftware items decorated with windmills or other images of Holland are available in the form of tea sets, sculptures, vases and even royal Delft ashtrays. When buying, make sure that there is a certificate of authenticity (see p28) to go with it.

Makkum Pottery

This colourful earthenware, primarily tiles, plates and bowls, is still produced by the Tichelaar factory (see p29) at Makkum in Friesland.

Speculaas

Speculaas

These biscuits, flavoured with cinnamon, cloves and ginger, are eaten mainly around St Nicholas' day.

A distinctive Edam cheese

Edam Cheese

The world-famous Edam cheese (see p174) has an excellent taste and makes a good souvenir.

Speculaas Board

Mould your own speculaas biscuits in these biscuit moulds, or use them for attractive wall ornaments.

Butter candies

Zeeland Butter Candies

These butter-flavoured sweets from Zeeland, made of glucose sugar syrup and butter, are delicious.

Hopjes

Haage Hopjes

These coffee-flavoured sweets were first made at the end of the 18th century at the inspiration of a Baron Hop of The Hague.

Dutch Beer

The Dutch are renowned beer-drinkers. In addition to the three brands depicted here, there are countless other varieties available.

Jonge grain jenever

Sonnema herenburg

Zwarte Kip advocaat

Zaans Mustard

This coarse mustard is made at De Huisman mustard plant on the Zaanse Schans (see p175).

Gingerbread

Gingerbread

This scrumptious bread comes in a variety of regional variations, and is excellent at breakfast or even as a snack – especially with a thick layer of butter.

Liquorice Drops

The ubiquitous liquorice drops are sold either salted or sweet.

Spirits

Renowned Dutch spirits include jenever, a kind of gin sold in glass or stoneware bottles (there is jonge and oude clear jenever, as well as that with berbs), burenburg (see p297), the Frisian distilled herbal drink and advocaat, made of brandy and eggs.

ENTERTAINMENT IN THE NETHERLANDS

Cultural life in the Netherlands is not confined to the Randstad. Outside the big cities there is also plenty to do. There is a theatre or a cultural centre in just about every town, where theatre groups, cabaret artists, orchestras and rock bands perform. There is also a growing number of entertainment complexes, such as the Miracle Planet Boulevard centre in Enschede. You can find out what's on either by contacting the relevant venue or through the local VVV (tourist) offices; another option is the AUB Ticketshop (see p149) in Amsterdam. Here you can usually book tickets centrally, or obtain more information about performances. You can also get tickets and information via the Uitlijn (0900-0191). The major national dailies publish a list of events each week. Most cities publish a weekly uitkrant, or entertainment guide, while the internet is another source of information.

THEATRE

The Netherlands boasts a large number of theatres, most located in Amsterdam. That city's top theatre is the Stadsschouwburg (see p149), where many touring theatre companies put on performances. The Netherlands' largest theatre company, Amsterdam Theatre Group, is based here and is now directed by Ivo van Hove.

The annual highlight for opera, theatre and dance is the Holland Festival. The best in international cultural offerings is to be had during the Amsterdam Festival. During the International Theatre School Festival in June, experimental drama is performed at venues such as De Brakke Grond (see p149) and Frascati. The Soeterijn, on the other hand, specializes in theatre from developing countries. The theatre company frequently wins prizes under the inspired leadership of Theu Boermans. De Dogtroep is a company that stages spectacular street theatre, while the Theatergroep Hollandia has also won great acclaim with its performances in large halls and aircraft hangars. The musical dramas of Orkater can be seen in various parts of the country at different times of the year, but mainly at the Stadsschouwburg and Bellevue. De la Mar stages big box-office hits, comedy and concerts by Dutch solo artists and groups. Youth-focused theatre is put on in De Krakeling. For years now the performances by the Toneelschuur in Haarlem have won critical acclaim. The De Appel group stages both experimental and repertory theatre at the Appeltheater in The Hague. Throughout the Netherlands there are numerous excellent theatre groups. Het Zuidelijk Toneel of Eindhoven in the south always packs theatre halls, as do the Theater van het Oosten from Arnhem in the east of the country and the Noord Nederlands Toneel from Groningen in the north.

Every year in May, the Festival aan de Werf in Utrecht presents an appealing smorgasbord of theatre and cabaret performances.

MUSICALS AND CABARET

The Netherlands' most outstanding musical theatres are the Fortis Circustheater of The Hague, the Beatrix Theater in Utrecht and the Koninklijk Theater Carré (see p149) in Amsterdam. These stage Dutch versions of big box-office hits such as Les Misérables and Miss Saigon.

De Kleine Komedie (see p149), a magnificent 17th-century building on the Amstel river opposite the Muziektheater, is a favourite venue for cabaret groups. Stand-up comedy has also gained popularity mainly through this venue. Other comedy venues in Amsterdam are Comedy Café, Toomler and Boom Chicago (see p149).

DANCE

The Netherlands is the proud home of two world-famous ballet troupes: the Nationale Ballet and the Nederlands Dans Theater (NDT). The Nationale Ballet is based in the Musiektheater (see p149), which is commonly known among Amsterdam theatre-goers as the "Stopera". This contemporary building can accommodate 1,600 people and is a significant centre both for dance and for opera. The foyer affords a spectacular view of the river Amstel.

The Nederlands Dans Theater, which is based in the Lucent Danstheater in The Hague, puts on works primarily by its former artistic director Jiri Kylian, who was succeeded by Marianne Sarstadt in 1999. Under the direction of the company's present choreographer Ed Wubbe it has staged sold-out performances with live music. Introdans of Arnhem performs an exciting combination of jazz, flamenco and ethnic dance. The country's biggest choreographers use the Holland Festival as a platform to present their new creations to the public. During the Internationale Theaterschool Festival, which also takes place in June, the proportion of dance performed is growing. The festival venue is the Nes, one of Amsterdam's oldest streets. Julidans is the name given to a summer dance festival in Amsterdam in which contemporary dance by various international dance companies is performed.

De Dogtroep performing lively and spectacular street theatre

FILM

Going to the movies continues to be a popular pastime in the Netherlands, and you will find at least one or more cinemas in almost every town. Amsterdam alone has more than 45 cinemas. Foreign-language films are shown in the original language with subtitles. The most magnificent cinema in Amsterdam is Tuschinski, an Art Deco masterpiece built from 1918–21, with a stylish foyer and generous seating (see p115). The major premieres are held here: if you want to see famous faces, the best time is Wednesday evenings at the cinema entrance. There is a list of all films that are showing at the box office of every cinema, and such lists are also displayed in cafés and restaurants. Cinema programmes change every Thursday, so you will find a list of films that are on in Wednesday's evening papers and in Thursday's morning papers. De Filmkrant is a much-respected movie magazine that is published every Monday, which in addition to the week's film listings also provides background information on major films. Major film events in the Netherlands are the Nederlands Film Festival, which is held in Utrecht in September and October, where Dutch films are premiered. The IDFA (International Documentary Film Festival Amsterdam) is the biggest of its kind, held every year in November/December. The renowned International Film Festival in Rotterdam takes place each January.

ORCHESTRAL, CHAMBER AND CHOIR MUSIC

The Concertgebouw (see p149) in Amsterdam is traditionally the most important venue for concert music. The Grote Zaal hall is famous for its acoustics, and its resident musicians are the Koninklijk Concertgebouworkest. During summer the orchestra puts on special concerts. The Beurs van Berlage (see p149), formerly the stock exchange, has for some time now been the home of the Nederlands Philharmonisch Orkest. Many of the country's better orchestras and choirs perform here.

The Golden Calf

De Ysbreker is situated in a magnificent building on the Amstel, and since 1979 has been the prime venue in Amsterdam for modern classical music.

The Amsterdamse Koninklijk Concertgebouworkest performing

An outstanding orchestra is the Rotterdam Philharmonisch Orkest, which since 1995 has been conducted by the Russian conductor Valeri Gergiev. The orchestra is based in De Doelen in Rotterdam. The Residentie Orkest, whose history goes back almost 100 years, performs regularly at the Anton Philipszaal in The Hague and is not to be confused with the Muziekcentrum Frits Philips in Eindhoven, where the Brabants Orkest is based.

The Gelders Orkest makes regular appearances in the Musis Sacrum concert hall in Arnhem. Another venue offering a rich programme of music is the Muziekcentrum Vredenburg.

CHURCH MUSIC

Of the many organs in the Netherlands, that of the Grote Kerk in Elburg is probably the best known. Every year it is used in the national amateur organist competition. The instruments in the Oude Kerk and the Nieuwe Kerk are the most famous of Amsterdam's 42 church organs. Organ concerts can also be heard at the Waalse Kerk and also on Tuesdays at lunch time in the Westerkerk.

The programme of the 17th-century Engelse Kerk contains a wide variety of music, ranging from Baroque to modern. In the Domkerk in Utrecht, concerts are performed on a regular basis.

OPERA

Established in 1988 in Amsterdam, the Muziektheater is the home of the Nederlandse Opera. One of Europe's most modern opera theatres, its stage has been graced by many established international companies, although it is also used for experimental works. The Stadsschouwburg (see p112) on the Leidseplein is also host to a great deal of opera, although if experimental opera is your thing, the Westergasfabriek is probably the best venue. The Twentse Schouwburg in Enschede, in conjunction with the Nationale Reisopera, organizes the Twents Opera Festival each year in July and August.

ROCK AND POP

Two venues in particular have established themselves as the most important rock venues in the Netherlands: Ahoy' in Rotterdam and Vredenburg in Utrecht, although international rock stars now perform in many parts of the Netherlands. With a capacity of over 5,000, the easily accessible Heineken Music Hall is Amsterdam's prime rock venue. It has been used for concerts by megastars such as the late Michael Jackson and the Rolling Stones. However, for locals, there are only two real rock venues: Paradiso and De Melkweg. Paradiso, in a former church near the Leidseplein, enjoys the greatest respect. The Melkweg (Milky Way), which is also near the Leidseplein, owes its name to the fact that the building in which it is located used to be a dairy. The programme in both of these respected venues changes constantly, and all rock and pop enthusiasts will eventually find something to their taste.

Every Sunday in summer there are free open-air concerts in the Vondelpark, often with renowned bands on the line-up. Programmes are displayed at the entrances to the park. In June the world's largest free pop festival, the Haagse Zuiderpark Parkpop, is held in The Hague. Another annual festival which attracts visitors from near and far is the Pinkpopfestival in Landgraaf (Limburg).

JAZZ

The foremost venue of the jazz scene in Amsterdam is the Bimhuis. Although the casual visitor might find the atmosphere a tad pretentious, the music here is of top quality, and the Bimhuis enjoys a reputation that goes far beyond the country's borders. There are good jazz cafés to be found all over Amsterdam, most of them featuring local jazz bands.

Around the Leidseplein are the Alto Jazz Café and Bourbon Street, which is open until 4am on weekdays and until 5am on weekends. Alto is best on Wednesdays, when the "godfather" of Amsterdam jazz, Hans Dulfer, performs. His daughter Candy, who has gained international renown, sometimes plays in De Heeren van Aemstel. De Engelbewaarder is a venue for Sunday jazz. Meanwhile, in Rotterdam, the annual North Sea Jazz Festival takes place in the Congresgebouw. Dizzy jazz café has become a household name among jazz-lovers in Rotterdam, hosting over 100 jazz concerts every year.

Amusement and Theme Parks

The Netherlands offers a great variety of amusement and theme parks. Whether you want to see frolicking dolphins, take a white-knuckle ride, go back to Roman times or spend the day splashing in a swimming pool, there is something for everyone. And because the Dutch weather doesn't always play along, most parks have attractions indoors. Listed below is a sample of the parks to be found in the country.

AQUA ZOO FRIESLAND

This watery domain near Leeuwarden shows beavers, minks, polecats, storks and other animals in their natural surroundings. Otters are a highlight here, having disappeared from the Netherlands due to pollution of their freshwater habitat. A path winds its way through the entire terrain, leading at one point through a glass tunnel that provides visitors with a close-up of the otters' underwater antics.

ARCHEON

This open-air archaeological park brings the past to life in captivating fashion. Visitors wander from prehistoric times, the Roman period and the Middle Ages, aided by the recreations of actors. You can see how the hunter-gatherers lived and how farmers tilled their fields. You then explore a Roman town complete with bath-house, temple and theatre, followed by a medieval city with working craftsmen. The hands-on fun includes a trip in a prehistoric canoe.

HET ARSENAAL

A large attraction with a maritime theme has been set up at Het Arsenaal in Vlissingen. First visitors watch a naval review with models of famous ocean liners, including the Titanic. For those hooked on adrenaline there is a shipwreck simulator and a scary pirate cave on a treasure island. In Onderwaterwereld you can observe sharks, lobsters and other creatures of the deep. The 64-m (210-ft) tower of Het Arsenaal gives a fine view of the Westerschelde estuary.

AVONTURENPARK HELLEDOORN

This place offers a vast range of attractions, including the Canadian River log-ride with a 12-m (39-ft) drop in a tree trunk, the Sungai Kalimantan rafting-ride, the Tornado and Rioolrat (underground) rat ride, a monorail over a dinosaur park and Montezuma's Revenge (prepare to get wet!). Younger children will enjoy Dreumesland (Dreamland) with its play castle and much more.

Hellendoorn Adventure Park

BURGERS' ZOO

This unusual park allows you to see animals from all over the world in their natural environments, which have been carefully re-created here.

In Burger's Desert, in a vast hall with 20-m (65-ft) ceilings, you can wander through a rocky cactus desert with birds and an oasis. There is also a dense tropical jungle and a safari park with giraffes, rhinoceroses and lions. In the ocean section, you can stand on a tropical coral beach and peer through the glass at an undersea world.

DOLFINARIUM

Frolicking dolphins and seals always draw large crowds, but the Dolfinarium does one better with its Lagune, a large bay where dolphins, sea lions and fish live. On the Roggenrif you can mingle with the seals and stroke sharks, while in Fort Heerewich you learn how stranded dolphins are cared for. An underwater show and a 3D film provide additional excitement.

DUINRELL

Nestled in the sandy woodlands of the Wassenaar region, this park has rides such as the Waterspin, toboggan runs, a frog roller coaster and a monorail. In summer there are elaborate shows such as the Music Laser Light Show. For the little ones there is a fairy-tale wonderland, a large playground and numerous kids' shows. A big draw is the Tikibad, an indoor pool with spectacular slides, a surf pool and a water ballet show.

Suspension bridge through the tropical rainforest in Burgers' Bush

ECOMARE

Located on the island of Texel, this is an information centre for the tidal flats of the West Frisian islands and the North Sea. There is a display about the creation of Texel, its habitat and the local fauna. The Waterzaal is full of aquariums, plus a basin of rays for petting. There's also a centre for stranded seals and seabirds.

DE EFTELING

This theme park in Kaatsheuvel draws on the world of fantasy. In the fairytale forest you may bump into Little Red Riding Hood, Snow White or Sleeping Beauty. The Fata Morgana is a simplified take on the Arabian Nights; here you can view the Stranded seals recovering their health in EcoMare on Texel

The splash ride in Duinrell entire park from a 45-m (148-ft) Flying Temple.

Extreme thrills are provided by the Python, the Pegasus and the underground Vogel Rok roller coasters and many other rides. It's worth checking the website for "busy" days.

If a day isn't enough, you can stay in the Efteling Hotel.

LINNAEUSHOF

This playground claims to be Europe's largest, with more than 350 different pieces of equipment, including a super slide, cable rides, a skate-rail, trampolines, a climbing wall, pedaloes and 360-degree swings. In the "spider's web", you risk tumbling into the water as you climb nets to the pirates' crow's nest.

Toddlers have their own special playground with a huge sandpit and road village where they can ride tricycles and toy aeroplanes. For wet weather there's an indoor playground.

NOORDWIJK SPACE EXPO

This sprawling display about the wonders of outer space is a treat for all ages. Some of its rockets and satellites are the real thing (as is the piece of moon rock 4 billion years old), but the replicas, such as a model lunar module, are convincing. You can visit a space station and watch multimedia presentations. Children will especially like the treasure hunt and weight-free simulator.

VERKEERSPARK ASSEN

This park offers an enormous circuit of roads, roundabouts and traffic lights where children aged between 6 and 12 can drive around and learn to deal with various traffic situations. Someone keeps an eye on participants from the traffic control tower. There's a play area and suitable rides for toddlers, while older children can ride motorized jeeps and "bouncy bikes".

Sports Holidays

With its abundance of water, the Netherlands lends itself to all kinds of watersports such as boating, sailing and canoeing; however, there are also plenty of opportunities for sporting activities on dry land, whether you want to kick a ball about or play golf or tennis, or even go riding. Most VVV-gidsen (see p440) tell you where there are golf courses and tennis courts in the locality, and they give the addresses of angling clubs, stables, boatyards, sailing schools and so on.

Holland offers much in the way of watersports, such as canoeing

WATERSPORTS

The favourite places in the Netherlands for watersports are the Frisian seas, the coastal lakes, the Plassegebied (lakelands), the southwest river delta, and the lakes of the Vechtplassen, the Maasplassen, the IJsselmeer and, of course, the North Sea. Everywhere there are abundant marinas and watersports centres, often with equipment for hire. The ANWB publishes the Wateralmanakken, available at ANWB and VVV offices and in bookshops, which give details of sailing regulations, bridge and lock opening times, port information and so on. The ANWB/VVV waterkaarten (navigation charts) are also used by many people. You can obtain information on sailing and surfing organizations at institutions such as the Commissie Watersport Opleidingen (watersports training commission) and the ANWB. Surfers will find plenty to do on the North Sea and IJsselmeer coast (surfing beaches, equipment hire), and it is also possible to surf on many inland waters, including the Reenwijkse Plassen, the Randmeren and the Frisian lakes. For further information on sailing, boating and windsurfing, ask at the Koninklijk Nederlands Watersport Verbond (royal watersports association). Good places for diving include the Oosterschelde and Grevelingenmeer; for more information apply to the Dutch underwater-sports association, the Nederlandse Onderwatersport Bond.

Ramblers in the Heuvelrug of Utrecht

For canoeing, your first port of call should be the Nederlandse Kano Bond (canoeing association). Dozens of round trips in various craft organized in lakes, rivers and the sea are also available. The local VVV tourist office will be able to direct you further.

RAMBLING AND CYCLING

Ramblers' guides and maps can be obtained in many places, including the VVV, ANWB and bookshops. The VVV also provides information on walking tours and local events. The Er op Uit! booklet published by the Dutch Railways contains rambling routes from one station to another. The majority of them are 15 to 20 km (9 to 12 miles), though some two-day hikes are also described. You will find route maps at the station where the hike begins. Around 30 long-distance hiking trails have been marked out in the Netherlands. These routes, which

SAILING

Sailing courses suitable for all ages and experience levels are widely available along the Dutch coast for practically all types of vessel. Taking lessons at a CWO registered sailing school will give you an internationally recognized CWO sailing certificate. More experienced sailors can explore the North Sea, the IJsselmeer (watch out for strong winds), the Waddenzee (where you have to watch the shallows) or the Westerschelde (which has strong tidal currents). However, you can also go for a more relaxing experience on the Vinkeveense Plassen lakes. Cruises are also widely available. Hollands Glorie (tel. 010-4156600) offers cruises on traditional sailing craft on waterways such as the IJsselmeer, the Waddenzee and the Frisian lakes.

Golfers on the Lauswolt Estate in Friesland are at least 100 km (62 miles) in length, follow mainly unmetalled tracks. A popular hiking trail is the Pieterpad (LAW 9), stretching 480 km (300 miles) from Pieterburen in Groningen to the Sint-Pietersberg at Maastricht.

Wandelplatform-LAW publishes guides to the routes, with and without accommodation details. Many natural areas are criss-crossed by footpaths and cycle tracks, among them the Nationaal Park Hoge Veluwe (see p339). You can find out about accessibility of various areas and about enjoyable routes or excursions at VVV or ANWB tourist information offices, at the Staatsbosbeheer (forestry commission) (tel. 030-692 6213) or the Vereniging Natuurmonumenten (see p260). For details on cycling, see pages 456-7.

GOLF AND TENNIS

The Netherlands has some 160 golfing clubs, all members of the Nederlandse Golf Federatie (NGF). Many clubs also provide opportunities for non-members to play, although some may require proof of golfing proficiency. Many of them also offer training courses. Golf courses in the Netherlands are in dunelands, woodland and polderland.

In many areas you will find tennis clubs with outdoor and indoor courts. Most bungalow parks have tennis courts for the use of residents.

FISHING

Fishing is a popular sport in the Netherlands. In the inland waterways you can angle for bream, carp and pike, while flatfish and mackerel can be caught along the coast and in the sea. Local angling associations will give you information on when and where to fish. Don't forget to obtain a fishing permit (which is compulsory for inland waters). The permits are available at post offices, VVVs or angling associations. Sometimes you also need a permit for a particular lake or river. Along the coast, angling trips are organized on the North Sea and in the Waddenzee.

HORSE RIDING

There are many stables where you can hire horses for pony-trekking. Some stables hire out horses only if you have a riding permit or if you are on a guided tour (information is available from the SRR). For some nature reserves which allow riding you will need to get a riding permit from the organization managing the area, and you will have to keep to the bridleways. Beach riding is an unforgettable experience, but keep an eye on the signs, because some sections of beach – especially in summer – are closed to horses.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 440-449
TRAVEL INFORMATION 450-457

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

The Netherlands is relatively small and has a dense road and motorway network with good public transport so getting around is quick and easy. Whether you are going to Amsterdam, the Veluwe, Maastricht or Zandvoort, you can get there from anywhere in the country very quickly by car or by train. The flat landscape with its many canals and dykes means that holidaymakers have plenty of opportunity to explore the countryside by bicycle (see pp456–7) or by boat (see p455). Another option is to take a trip by steam train. The best place to find out what's available in your area – and in the country as a whole – is the local VVV (tourist information) office.

The logo of the Amsterdam Tourist Board

TOURIST INFORMATION

The best source of information for tourists is the local or regional VVV office. Many towns and places of interest have VVV offices where you can drop in and ask for advice and brochures about places of interest, local events, walks, cycle routes and excursions in the town or region. In addition, they can provide maps and books about other parts of the Netherlands. The VVV-gidsen series in Dutch is very practical, with information and facts about individual provinces and regions.

At VVVs you can also book domestic excursions, hotels, short breaks and theatre tickets anywhere in the country. Annual museum cards and CJs are also on sale here. Smaller VVV outlets, although providing comprehensive information about their local area, do not provide other services.

ANWB offices in the Netherlands also have a selection of cycling, rambling and motoring guides, tickets, camping guides and road atlases. ANWB members have access to specialized membership information about various subjects and holiday offers. In many cases the VVV and the ANWB share the same premises.

If you are travelling to the Netherlands from abroad you can obtain information in advance from the Netherlands Board of Tourism (NBT) in your own country.

LANGUAGE

The Dutch have been linguists for centuries, and most students learn English, some German and French. English is certainly very widely and fluently spoken in Amsterdam. However, it's always appreciated if you can handle a few niceties: greeting a Dutch person with "Dag" ("good day"), for example, before asking whether they speak English. The Phrase Book on pages 479–80 is a useful place to start.

ENTERTAINMENT

Many VVV-gidsen guides have an annual review of events in a particular region or province. For up-to-date information on events, exhibitions, performances and films, it is worth looking in the entertainment supplements issued by daily papers (see p146), or ask at the local VVV office. Plays, concerts, special events and festivals are usually advertised on billboards or in cafés. Special regional and local entertainment guides are also a good source of information; for example, the monthly Uitkrant tells you what's on in Amsterdam in the way of theatre, while the weekly Uitloper is Utrecht's entertainment guide. These guides are distributed at many sites free of charge.

Tickets for concerts and events are available not only at the box office of the venue itself but also via the national Ticket Service and at VVV offices. Some towns also have their own booking bureau; for instance, in Amsterdam you can book your tickets at the AUB (see p149), and in The Hague you can get your tickets at the Bespreekbureau Haagsche Courant (tel. 070-3656806).

Museum Card

MUSEUM CARD

The Annual Museum Card (Museumjaarkaart) has quickly risen to huge popularity. It costs €39.95 for people over the age of 25, and €19.95 for under-25s. It gives the holder free entry to over 440 museums in the country. However, you usually have to pay a supplement for special exhibitions. The card is available at all participating museums and at VVVs, and requires a passport photograph. It can also be ordered from the Stichting Museumjaarkaart (also available over the Internet).

TRAVELLERS WITH DISABILITIES

Most public buildings have good facilities for travellers with disabilities. Museums, art galleries, cinemas and theatres generally are wheelchair-accessible. Only some establishments in very old buildings are less accessible, but there are always staff who are able to lend a hand. If you require assistance it's a good idea to phone in advance. Accessibility information for hotels is given on page 387.

In Amsterdam and other major cities, all main pedestrian crossings are equipped with sound for the blind. For disabled people travelling by train, the NS has issued a pack entitled Gehandicaptten. This contains information on Dutch railway stations and what facilities they have, and also lists the stations (there are approximately 150 of them) where people in wheelchairs can get assistance when boarding and alighting from trains. Many trains have wheelchair-accessible doors, and most new double-decker trains have wheelchair-accessible toilets. If you need help, it's best to contact the Bureau Assistentieverlening Gehandicaptten three hours before travelling.

Wheelchair-accessible tourist office

OPENING HOURS

Although until recently just about every shop in the country was open from 9am to 6pm, today there is an increasing variety in shop opening hours. Many retail stores and supermarkets are open until 7pm or later. In the cities, shops tend to stay open longer. Many towns have a "shopping evening" (koopavond) once a week, when most shops remain open until 9pm: Thursday in Amsterdam and The Hague, Friday in Utrecht. In an increasing number of towns shops open on Sundays at least once in the month. Many shops have half-day closing one day a week, usually Monday, but varying from one region to another.

Banks are usually open on weekdays from 9am to 5pm, and VVVs are also open on Mondays to Fridays from 9am or 10am to 5pm (sometimes on koopavond until 9pm). On Saturdays they close early or even all day, and most are closed on Sundays. Some VVVs are closed during the winter.

Many museums are shut on Mondays, and open from 10am to 5pm for the rest of the week. On Sundays and public holidays they tend to open later. Practically all museums are closed on Christmas and New Year's Day. Open-air museums and small museums tend to close for the winter.

VISAS AND CUSTOMS

Travellers from other EU countries can travel freely in and out of the Netherlands provided they have a valid passport or European identity card. For a stay lasting up to three months, travellers from Australia, New Zealand and North America need only a valid passport.

EU residents may bring an unlimited quantity of goods into the country provided they are for their personal use. For tobacco and alcohol, the following quantities are considered limits for personal use: 800 cigarettes, 400 cigars, 1 kg of tobacco, 10 litres of spirits, 20 litres of liqueurs, 90 litres of wine (or 60 litres of fortified wine) and 110 litres of beer. Duty will be charged on quantities exceeding these specified limits.

For travellers from outside the EU, the limits are 200 cigarettes, 100 cigarillos, 50 cigars or 250 g of tobacco, 2 litres of unfortified wine plus 1 litre of spirits or 2 litres of fortified wine or liqueur wine or spirits, 50 g of perfume, 0.25l of eau de toilette and other items up to a value of €175. Residents of other EU countries may no longer import goods on which VAT has not been paid. If you are entering or leaving the EU, you can take non-VAT paid goods with you. More details are available from the Customs Helpline (Douanetelefoon), which gives precise information on customs regulations. Travellers from outside the Netherlands may be able to obtain information at the local embassy.

TIME

Like all its neighbouring countries, the Netherlands is on Central European Time, which is 1 hour ahead of Greenwich Mean Time in winter and 2 hours ahead in the summer. Summer time starts on the first weekend in April and continues until the last week of October.

Sydney is 9 hours ahead in winter (8 hours in summer), Johannesburg 1 hour (the same as the Netherlands in summer), New York is 6 hours behind, Los Angeles 9 hours behind.

TIPPING

Taxi drivers expect a tip of around 10 per cent, except on longer journeys. Although a service charge is included on restaurant bills,

Customers showing their appreciation with a tip it is customary to round the bill up slightly (see p407).

In hotels you may if you like leave something for the chambermaid after a longer stay, even though it is not generally the rule.

PUBLIC TOILETS

There is a limited number of public conveniences in the Netherlands. In some cities you will find toilets where you have to insert money into a slot to open the door. Popping into a café to use the toilets there is accepted practice in the Netherlands; some establishments have an attendant who should be paid a small amount. Large retail stores and stations also have toilets, and you generally need to pay a small fee to use these. The latter also have nappy-changing facilities for babies. On motorways you will find toilets at all service stations.

ELECTRICITY

In the Netherlands the electrical voltage is 220/230 volts. Dutch plugs are of the two-

Standard continental plug pin type, and adapters are available for visitors from countries with different plugs (for example, Great Britain).

TELEVISION AND RADIO

The television programmes on offer in the Netherlands are undergoing a great deal of development at the moment. The traditional system was to have a large number of broadcasting networks, each with their own political or religious leanings, being given a certain amount of air-time on each of the three public TV stations (Nederland 1, 2 and 3). More recently, however, commercial television stations have emerged to compete with Hilversum (the town where the Netherlands' main networks are based, see pp190-1).

As well as national TV networks, the Netherlands has a number of regional and local providers, such as Omrop Fryslân, Omroep Flevoland, Omroep Gelderland and the Amsterdam local network AT5. In addition, large numbers of foreign programmes can be received on cable TV, the range varying depending on the local cable company.

The Netherlands has five national radio stations, each of them with their own "personality": Radio 1 deals mainly with current affairs and sport, Radio 2 broadcasts light music and various information programmes, Radio 3 rock and pop and Radio 4 classical music. 747 AM is a news channel.

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

The Netherlands has five national morning newspapers (De Telegraaf, de Volkskrant, Algemeen Dagblad, NRC Next and Trouw) and two national evening papers (Het Parool and NRC Handelsblad). These tend to focus on the west of the country. Regionally the more popular papers are the Nieuwsblad van het Noorden, Friesch Dagblad, Tubantia, De Gelderlander, Utrechts Nieuwsblad, Provinciale Zeeuwsche Courant, Brabants Dagblad and Dagblad De Limburger, which contain information on local holiday activities and events. The more famous Dutch weekly news magazines include HP/De Tijd, Elsevier and Vrij Nederland.

The major bookshops in the large cities (as well as the main railway stations) sell many major international newspapers and magazines.

PETS

If you bring your dog or cat to the Netherlands from abroad, you need to be able to prove that your pet has been immunized against rabies. This is shown by a valid pet's passport provided by your veterinarian which indicates when the animal was last vaccinated.

EMBASSIES AND CONSULATES

If you are visiting from abroad and your passport happens to be lost or stolen, you should report the loss immediately either to your consulate or embassy. Most embassies are situated in the administrative capital, The Hague. A number of countries, including the UK, USA, France, Germany and Italy, also have consulates, and these tend to be located in Amsterdam.

Personal Security and Health

If you keep to a few basic safety rules, you should have a trouble-free stay in the Netherlands. Obviously it is better not to carry large amounts of cash or valuables around, and not to keep passports, cheques and credit cards together in one place. Visitors from abroad can always insure themselves against losses of money and personal items from theft. It is also a good idea to insure yourself against medical expenses. For those who do find themselves in trouble on holiday, the country has efficient emergency services and facilities.

The police logo

EMERGENCIES

The national emergency number for the police, fire brigade and ambulance is 112. This number must only be dialled in emergencies.

For less urgent help, it is best to contact the nearest police station, hospital or a local doctor. If your car breaks down, members of the ANWB can call out the roadside assistance service of the ANWB Wegenwacht 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, using the roadside emergency phones or by dialling a toll-free phone number. The same also applies to members of associated organizations, such as the AA and RAC, as long as you have a letter showing you are entitled to compensation for the costs of repair and recovery (up to a certain limit).

PERSONAL BELONGINGS AND SAFETY

It is as true of the Netherlands as elsewhere in Europe that opportunity makes the thief. When in busy shopping streets or on public transport, do not leave your wallet in your back pocket, and if you need to go to the lavatory on the train or when in a restaurant, take your handbag or wallet with you. Do not leave any valuables in your car, and always make sure it has been properly locked. Large cities, particularly Amsterdam, have a big problem with bicycle theft, so a decent lock is a good investment. Muggings are rare, but at night it is better to avoid unlit areas and parks. Women can visit cafés in the evening without risk.

REPORTING CRIME

If you have been the victim of theft or a mugging, report it to the nearest police station (some smaller municipalities do not have their own police station). You will need to make a verbal report describing any loss and, if necessary, injury. Many insurance companies require you to report within 24 hours of the incident taking place. If your passport is stolen, you should report this to your embassy (see p443) as well as to the police.

MEDICAL TREATMENT AND INSURANCE

Minor medical problems can usually be dealt with at a pharmacy, though the prescription of drugs is very strict. The majority of drugs are available only on prescription. Pharmacies – which are recognizable by their snake symbol – are open on weekdays from 8:30 or 9am to 5:30 or 6pm.

If the pharmacy is closed, you will find on the door a list of the nearest pharmacies that are open. Local newspapers also give details of duty doctors, pharmacies and other health services in the town or region. In an emergency you can get treatment in hospitals, which are open 24 hours a day.

Visitors from abroad who will be carrying prescription drugs with them should ask their doctor for a medical passport. This is a document stating your condition and the medication you require for it. The passport can be shown at the customs as evidence that you are bringing the medication in for your personal use.

Travellers from European Union countries can apply for a European Health Insurance Card (EHIC). You can do this online or at post offices in the UK before you leave. It will enable you to claim for state health service treatment in EU countries.

It is also a good idea to purchase comprehensive medical insurance if it is not included in your travel insurance.

MOSQUITOES

Attracted by the canals, mosquitoes can be a real irritant. Residents and regular summer visitors deal with them in various ways. Burning coils, ultra-violet tubes, mosquito nets, repellent sprays and anti-histamine creams and tablets are available from large pharmacies and supermarkets.

LOST PROPERTY

If you lose any valuables, you can check at the police station to see whether anyone has handed them in. Local police stations usually keep articles that have been handed in before passing them on to the central police station for the district. If you lose your passport you must also inform your consulate (see p443). If you lose something on a train, inform the station first. Small stations keep lost the office of the local or regional transport organization (look for "openbaar vervoer" (public transport) in the Yellow Pages). Schiphol Airport has a special lost property number.

DRUGS

Although the use of soft drugs is officially illegal in the Netherlands, the police will not take action if you have a small quantity of hashish or marijuana in your possession. It is worth remembering that not every restaurant or café owner will take kindly to tourists lighting up on the premises. People caught with hard drugs will be prosecuted.

Banking and Local Currency

Cash is still the most popular form of payment in the Netherlands, though cash cards and other forms of plastic money are becoming increasingly common. Many hotels, shops and restaurants accept major credit cards in payment. Other means of payment are traveller's cheques (with identification), and, occasionally, US dollars (particularly at antique and souvenir shops). In 2002, the Netherlands began to use the euro. The best place to change money is at a bank. You can take an unlimited amount of currency into the Netherlands, and you can withdraw limited amounts of cash at an ATM.

BANK OPENING HOURS

Banks are generally open on Mondays to Fridays from 9am to 4 or 5pm. Some banks remain open longer on koopavond, or shopping evening, often a Thursday.

These bureaux can still be found at the now unguarded border crossing points, at Amsterdam Schiphol Airport and at major railway stations. Most GWK bureaux are open daily and have extended opening hours.

GWK (grenswisselkantoor), the Netherlands' official exchange bureau

CHANGING MONEY

Foreign currency can be changed at banks, post offices and American Express offices. A small commission is charged on these transactions.

In small bureaux de change (often open outside business hours), located throughout the major cities and in larger towns, you can exchange money from non-Eurozone countries, though often at unfavourable rates.

The Netherlands' official bureaux de change, GWK (grenswisselkantoor), is a privatized state enterprise, which gives reasonable rates of exchange and charges relatively low commissions, as well as providing various other services for travellers.

BANK AND CREDIT CARDS

You can use your bank card to withdraw money at any Dutch bank displaying your card's logo, but usually there is a substantial commission charge. You can also use bank cards to withdraw cash at ATMs 24 hours a day. These machines usually also accept Eurocard/MasterCard, American Express, Diners Club and Visa cards. When a foreign card is inserted, most ATMs will offer a choice of languages, and so should be simple to use. ATMs are plentiful and can be found outside post offices, banks and GWK offices, and within main railway stations.

Shops, restaurants and hotels post signs stating whether you can pay by credit card, switch card or chipknip/chipper (top-up cards available from Dutch banks or the Postbank). Most payphones (see pp448-9) accept credit cards for calls.

Cash machine with logos

Credit cards are increasingly becoming an accepted means of payment in the Netherlands, but always check first as not all businesses (in particular taxis) accept them, especially outside major towns and cities.

CHEQUES

The advantage of traveller's cheques is that you are protected against loss and theft. You can also use traveller's cheques to pay at hotels and restaurants, although often you will not be given change from them if the value of the cheque is greater than that of the bill.

It is usually best as well as more convenient to obtain traveller's cheques in euros before you leave home.

THE HISTORY OF DUTCH CURRENCY

Before the introduction of the guilder, the Dutch national currency unit before the euro, duiten, stuivers, rijders, schellings and ducats made out of various metals were used. Until 1847 there was a double standard where the value of the coin was equal to the value of the gold or silver in it. Silver coins were minted until 1967, when nickel or bronze coins were minted. Gold and silver coins from earlier centuries are now valuable collector's items.

THE EURO

The euro (€) is the common currency of the European Union (EU). It went into general circulation on 1 January 2002, initially for 12 participating countries. The Netherlands was one of those 12 countries. EU members using the euro as sole official currency are known as the Eurozone. Several EU members have opted out of joining this common currency. Euro notes are identical throughout the Eurozone countries, each including designs of fictional architectural structures and monuments. The coins, however, have one side identical (the value side) and one side with an image unique to each country. Both notes and coins are exchangeable in each of the participating euro countries.

Bank Notes

Euro bank notes have seven denominations. The €5 note (grey in colour) is the smallest, followed by the €10 note (pink), €20 note (blue), €50 note (orange), €100 note (green), €200 note (yellow) and €500 note (purple). All notes show the 12 stars of the European Union. Not all businesses in the Netherlands accept the €200 and €500 notes.

Communications

Before 1989, telephone and postal services in the Netherlands were part of the same state-run company, PTT. This has now been separated into two companies – KPN Telecom and TNT Post. Both services are among the most forward-looking and efficient in Europe. For some years, Telfort public telephones have also been appearing beside the KPN boxes. The Telfort telephones are mostly found at train stations.

kiosk

USING THE TELEPHONE

You will find the green KPN telephone kiosks in the streets, in post offices and outside many railway stations. Most KPN telephone kiosks take both phonecards and most major credit cards (the logo on the telephone will tell you which credit cards are accepted). If you use a credit card, you need to remove it from the slot before speaking (phonecards are only removed when you have finished your call), and you have to pay a surcharge of €1.15. In KPN booths, locals can also use their bank or giro card to make phone calls, if these are fitted with a “chipper” or “chipknip” (which means you can top them up).

ANWB members can also use KPN telephone kiosks to call the roadside assistance patrol (see p445).

There are no longer any solely coin-operated pay-phones. KPN phone boxes accept only KPN phonecards or special kiosk-cards, available at some train stations. KPN phonecards can be purchased at post offices,

Storefront of an Amsterdam tobacconists, train stations and department stores, as well as at the GWK, and come in various denominations.

At train stations you will often find Telfort phone boxes, painted blue and orange. These accept Telfort phonecards, available at ticket windows and in the Wizzl station shops and also at the GWK. Telfort phones also accept coins (10, 20 and 50 cent, €1 and €2) but do not give change, credit cards (with a €1.15 surcharge) and special kiosk-cards.

Instructions on how to use KPN and Telfort telephones can be found in the booths in Dutch, English and other west European languages.

MOBILE PHONES

There are four main GSM frequencies (Global System for Mobile Communications) in use, so if you want to ensure your phone will work while you are away you should have a quad-band phone. Tri-band phones from the EU will usually work in the Netherlands, but USA mobile phones may not. Contact your service provider for clarification. Check your insurance policy to see if you are covered in case your phone gets stolen, and keep your network operator's helpline number handy.

To use your mobile phone abroad, you may need to enable the “roaming” function on it. It is also more expensive to make and receive calls while abroad, despite efforts to decrease roaming charges. A cheaper option is often to purchase a local SIM card to use in your phone. You can only do this if your handset is “sim free” or unlocked. KPN

FINDING THE RIGHT NUMBER

- Directory enquiries for phone and fax numbers in Holland dial 0900-8008 or 118 (only one number per call on either service).
- Directory enquiries for phone and fax numbers abroad dial 0900-8418, or visit www.detelefoon.gids.nl.
- National or international calls through the operator dial 0800-0410.
- Collect calls in Holland or abroad dial 0800-0101.
- National dialling codes are: Australia 61, New Zealand 64, South Africa 27, the United Kingdom 44, and the USA and Canada 1.

Hotspots gives Internet access for smart phones; send an SMS to: HOTSPOTS, number 4222 and you can log on for 15 minutes for a small fee, which is charged to your phone.

PHONING ABROAD

From the Netherlands you can direct-dial almost all destinations abroad. First you need to dial the international number 00, followed by the country number, and then the local number without the first digit (usually a 0), and finally the individual number. Many country codes are listed in telephone booths. Telephone directories have more detailed lists. Directories for the whole of the country are available. Calls made from hotel rooms are usually expensive.

Internet access at OBA (Amsterdam Public Library)

INTERNET

Faster than a letter and cheaper than a phone call, sending and receiving email has never been easier or more convenient. As most people in the Netherlands have either ADSL or a cable connection at home, the number of Internet cafés has decreased. Also, more and more hotels offer Wi-Fi for guests with laptops, though this is not always free, so check before you run up a hefty bill.

However, in most tourist areas you'll still find plenty of places to read and send email. Most are bars, cafés and coffee (smoking) shops, offering PCs with Internet services. Opening hours vary, but cafés are often open late into the night. Not all offer headsets, so using Skype or other VoIPs to make cheap phone calls is not always possible. The website www.easyinternetcafe.com has up-to-date addresses of Internet cafés worldwide, plus useful reviews from customers.

A recent development are modern and trendy coffee bar franchises, like Coffee Company and Bagel and Beans, offering Wi-Fi for customers who bring their laptop. You either buy minutes or go online for a limited time for each beverage you order, using the code on your receipt to gain access.

Visitors to Amsterdam will find www.iamsterdam.com worth a look. Financed by Amsterdam city council, it offers listings and reviews in English about cultural events in the city, plus useful information on things like doctors and dentists. It also has information for expats living in the city. Time Out Amsterdam is a monthly listings magazine, also in English, aimed at tourists and available from newsgagents in the city centre of the capital. Apart from comprehensive listings about what's on, it also offers reviews and features.

POSTAL SERVICES

Post offices in the Netherlands can be recognized by the TNT logo. In addition to buying stamps, sending telegrams and sending mail, you can also change money and traveller's cheques, make phone calls and send faxes. Larger post offices also have photocopy services and sell stationery. Smaller municipalities sometimes have only a sub post office (in a supermarket, for example) providing only basic services. There are no longer post offices in most villages.

SENDING MAIL

Most TNT postboxes have two slots. The right slot is for local mail (post codes are given above the slot), the left one is for other destinations. A sign on the

Slot for all other destinations

Slot for local

box indicates when the mail is collected (a red sign means 5pm or 6pm, a blue board means 7pm). There is no Saturday mail collection.

Postcards and letters weighing less than 20 g (1 oz) cost €0.44 (or one "Nederland 1" stamp) to send to destinations within the Netherlands; those sent to European destinations cost €0.77, or one "Europe 1" stamp; these new "standard" stamps are widely available in small shops, for example those selling postcards. For heavier letters or to post to other parts of the world, visit a post office – but be prepared for queues. Most post offices are open from 9am to 5pm weekdays; some also open on Saturdays until 1pm.

Postcards and letters weighing less than 20 g (1 oz) to destinations within Europe are sent by priority mail. For other international mail which you want to send priority, pay extra for a priority sticker at the post office. Important documents may be sent by insured or registered mail. Urgent mail can be sent by TNT's courier service.

POSTE RESTANTE

If you do not know where you'll be staying, you can have mail sent to Poste Restante, addressed to the Central Post Office. You will need some sort of identification with a photograph, such as a passport or a driving licence, to pick up your mail.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Almost every major European country. Major stations are served by international trains, including the Schiphol, but this modern international airport southwest of Amsterdam also has direct connections with other airports around the world, including many in the United States. The Netherlands also has efficient rail links with neighbouring Thalys, the high-speed train from Paris. The country's comprehensive road network makes the Netherlands ideal for exploring by car or by public transport (see pp454-5). Many packages and special-interest holidays are on offer, so it's worth shopping around.

BY AIR

Schiphol airport handles some 175,000 flights a year by many international carriers. To increase this volume further, there are serious plans to expand the airport. KLM (Royal Dutch Airlines) and its airline partners have flights to Amsterdam from over 350 cities worldwide. Northwest Airlines offers non-stop flights from Boston, Detroit and Washington, Delta Air Lines from Atlanta and New York (JFK) and United Airlines from Newark. There are many flights a day from the UK and the Irish Republic. Low-cost airline easyJet serves Amsterdam from Luton, and bmi british midland from East Midlands and London Heathrow. To get the lowest fare, generally you must book well in advance.

SCHIPHOL AIRPORT

Schiphol has only one terminal. The airport signs are colour-coded, with yellow signs indicating transfer desks and gates, green ones amenities such as coffee bars, restaurants and shops. Lounge South is designated for passengers travelling to countries in the Schengen agreement. At Schiphol Plaza you can find shops, book hotels, hire a car or buy a railway ticket. Beneath it are the platforms of Schiphol railway station. From the car park there are transfer buses to take you to the terminal. The long-stay car park is served by an automatic bus, the Parking Hopper, that takes you to the transfer bus.

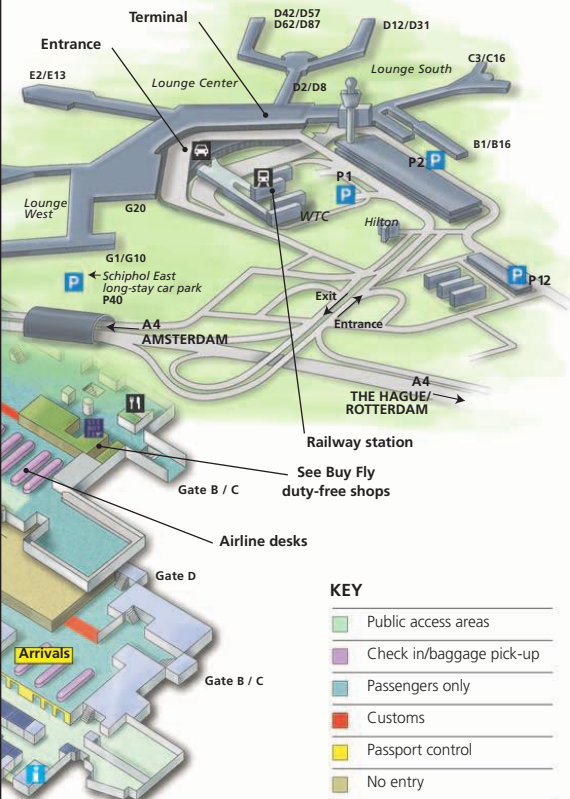

Planes at Amsterdam Schiphol Airport

SHOPPING

If you are leaving the country by plane, you will find the large See Buy Fly shopping centre when you leave customs control. Although travellers to other EU member states are not permitted to buy duty-free goods at the airport (see p442), it is still possible to find some bargains with the low See Buy Fly prices; only alcohol and tobacco is sold here at the same price as in local shops. Passengers to destinations outside the EU can still purchase duty-free alcohol and tobacco. The centrally located Schiphol Plaza is open to everyone, but the goods stocked here are not sold at See Buy Fly prices.

GETTING TO AND FROM SCHIPHOL

Every major city in the Netherlands can be reached by train from Schiphol Station. The journey to Amsterdam Centraal Station takes 20 minutes. Schiphol is also on the night-train network of the Western Netherlands (see p454). In addition, the airport has good bus connections with many towns. KLM runs a bus service (the KLM Hotel Shuttle), linking the airport with some 20 hotels in central and south Amsterdam. There are also abundant taxis waiting at the airport. Ask for a quote before getting in as tourists are often overcharged.

REGIONAL AIRPORTS

Eindhoven, Maastricht, Rotterdam and Groningen are all served by domestic flights, with flights between Eindhoven and Schiphol, Maastricht and Schiphol, Groningen and Rotterdam and Eindhoven and Rotterdam. There are direct international flights between Rotterdam and Eindhoven and Manchester and London, and between Maastricht and Munich, Berlin and London.

Information screens at Schiphol

BY RAIL

The Netherlands can easily be reached by train from most European countries, although visitors from further afield may have to change trains several times en route.

Eurostar runs from London via the Channel Tunnel; passengers for Amsterdam must change at Brussels.

There are direct trains from a number of European stations. For example, Brussels, Paris, Berlin, Zurich, Vienna and (seasonally) Milan have direct rail links to Amsterdam Centraal Station (CS) and Utrecht CS. From Brussels and from Antwerp there are trains to Amsterdam all day, stopping at Roosendaal, Rotterdam, The Hague and Schiphol, including five journeys daily by the Thalys high-speed train from Paris.

Many other towns, particularly those in the border regions of Belgium and the Netherlands, can easily be reached by train. Hook of Holland is connected by trains which connect with ferries from the UK port of Harwich.

SPECIAL TICKETS

Tourists from other EU countries can purchase cards in their countries that will entitle them to special reductions. An Interrail card for people aged 26 and under, along with a slightly dearer version for the over-26s, allows travellers to use the entire European rail network at a discount. A Eurodomino card allows 3, 5 or 8 days of unlimited travel in the country of your choice and is available at a reduction for under-26s. Eurail Selectpass offers unlimited travel on the national rail networks of any three to five bordering countries out of 18 European nations, including the Netherlands.

BY COACH

For travellers from many European countries the cheapest way to reach the Netherlands is by coach. Most long-distance coaches have toilets and make regular stops. In summer in particular there are large numbers of coaches from other countries serving a whole range of towns in the Netherlands.

Eurolines offers a very extensive network of coach connections. It has coaches running from many European cities to the Netherlands at least once per week. Dozens of points in the Netherlands (depending on the point of departure and route) are served by them. From Brussels and Antwerp there are coaches to places such as Breda, Rotterdam, The Hague, Utrecht and Amsterdam.

FERRIES

A number of ferry companies serve routes between Britain and the Netherlands. P&O North Sea Ferries sails between Hull and Rotterdam/Europoort, while Stena Line sails between Harwich and Hook of Holland (by seacat). DFDS Seaways serves Newcastle and IJmuiden. Other convenient ferry ports for visitors from Great Britain are Zeebrugge (from Hull) and Oostende (from Dover) in Belgium, and Calais and Boulogne (from Folkestone and Dover) in France. Crossing times by ferry range from 16 hours (Newcastle-IJmuiden) to 75–90 minutes (Dover-Calais). Ticket prices depend on the speed of crossing. In summer it is a good idea to book in advance.

MOTORING IN HOLLAND

The Netherlands' good system of roads makes all parts of the country easy to reach by car. Beware, however, in the Randstad region: you may have to put up with traffic jams during the rush hour.

To drive in the Netherlands you need to have a valid national driving licence, but many car-hire firms prefer to see an international driving licence. In addition, if in your own car, you will need to have your vehicle log book and insurance papers with you.

Roads in the Netherlands are divided into three categories. Provincial roads are designated with the letter "N" before the road number, national motorways are designated with an "A" before the number and international highways have the letter "E" before the number. All Dutch motorways are equipped with emergency telephones from which motorists can call the ANWB road assistance service (see p444) if their car breaks down. A non-member can pay for the ANWB's services, or become a temporary ANWB member. Unless otherwise sign-posted, the maximum speed for cars in Holland is 120 km/h (75 mph) on motorways, 100 km/h (62 mph) on major roads, 80 km/h (50 mph) on secondary roads and 50 km/h (30 mph) in built-up areas. At unmarked junctions, give way to traffic coming from the left, except for trams, which always have right of way (except when you are driving along a road which has right of way). In built-up areas motorists must give way to buses that are leaving bus stops.

Finding somewhere to park is often a problem in the cities. As clamping is prevalent and theft rife, it is often best to look for a car park rather than to try to find street parking. When you enter a car park, take a ticket from the machine at the barrier, and pay at the payment machine before leaving. Avoid out-of-order street meters as you could get fined or your car clamped. You may not park on yellow lines, and on yellow broken lines you may not park even to load or unload. If you stop on a blue line, you will need to have a parking disc.

Emergency phone

CAR HIRE

To hire a car you need to be at least 21 years old and have a valid driving licence. Some hire companies also require at least one year's driving experience. The main international car-hire companies such as Avis, Budget, Europcar and Hertz have offices at Schiphol and in all major cities. Local car-hire firms are often substantially cheaper. When hiring a car without a credit card, you may have to pay a hefty deposit.

Public Transport

The Netherlands has a comprehensive and efficient public transport system. Major cities can be easily reached by train, while towns and villages are served by local buses. The Randstad in particular gets fairly snarled up in the morning and evening rush hour. If you need to travel at that time, the best thing to do is to leave the car and take the train.

The luxury Interliner long-distance coaches connect destinations without fast rail links.

Interliners cover an expanding number of routes

BY BUS

The Netherlands has a good network of local buses and inter-city coaches. Booklets are available giving detailed information on routes, timetables and fares, although it is also possible to get information from Openbaar Vervoer Reisinformatie (0900-9292).

Interliners are luxury long-distance coaches. They usually follow direct routes between places and stop less frequently than local buses (streekbussen). In the evenings they do not operate as late as the local buses. The timetables for buses are based on the railway timetable. Tickets are available from the driver or in advance at Interlinerverkooppunten (Interliner sales offices) and at many railway and bus stations. They can also be ordered by telephone from Interliner Services at 0900-8998998. Interliner stops are green and have an information display.

BY TRAM

There are trams in Amsterdam, Rotterdam, Utrecht and The Hague. They generally run from 6am to midnight. On Sundays they start one or one-and-a-half hours later. Tram stops display the name of the stop, the tram numbers that stop there and show the other stops on the route. Tram shelters display maps of the tram network.

You can board or alight from any door, unless there is a conductor on the tram, when the rear door is for boarding only. Tram stops are normally announced, but if you aren't sure where to get off, you can always ask the driver to call out the stop.

BY TRAIN

The Dutch national railway company, Nederlandse Spoorwegen, or simply NS, runs a busy network which is considered one of the best in the world. Trains are clean and generally run on time, and tickets are reasonably priced. Timetables are displayed on yellow boards in stations. Rail tickets are available at ticket offices, Wizzl station shops and from ticket machines in stations, or, with a substantial supplement, from the conductor aboard the train. Dutch Railways has a wide variety of fare discounts on offer, including Railrunner tickets for children, and other offers for people regularly

Dieren-Apeldoorn steam train

STEAM TRAINS

There are many places in the Netherlands where you can take a ride in a steam train. There is, for example, the 22-km (14-mile) Dieren-Apeldoorn line, the 16-km (10-mile) Kerkrade-Schin op Geul, (the "million line", see p368), the 15.5-km (9.5-mile) Goes-Oudelande, around the Valkenburgse Meer lake and through the Hoogoverterrein at IJmuiden (21 km/13 miles, departing from Beverwijk Station, see p188). A steam train runs the 20 km (12 miles) between Hoorn and Medemblik in summer (see p178). Check with the VVV, as schedules vary.

using the same route. Combined season tickets for the train and local or urban transport are also available. For information it is best to ask at ticket offices, or telephone 0900-9292.

Many railways in Friesland, Groningen and the Achterhoek are run by NordNed and Syntus. NS cards are also valid on these lines. Night trains run on the Utrecht CS-Amsterdam CS-Schiphol-Leiden Centraal-The Hague CS-Delft-Rotterdam CS lines.

An NS double-decker train speeding past tulip fields

METRO

Amsterdam and Rotterdam are the only towns in the Netherlands with a metro. Both networks are fairly extensive. Amsterdam's metro has three lines, two of which begin at the Centraal Station, and the third at Station Sloterdijk. They go as far as Gaasperplas and Gein. From Centraal Station there is also a suburban tram to Amstelveen. The Rotterdam metro system comprises two lines which cross one another, the north-south line going from Centraal Station to Spijkenisse, and the west-east line from Marconiplein to Capelle, with a branch to Ommoord-Zevenkamp. The first metro leaves the terminus at around 6am (around 7:45am on Sundays), and the last train arrives at its destination at approximately 0:15 or 0:30am.

Always swipe your OV-chipkaart to validate your journey

TRAM, BUS, METRO AND TRAIN TICKETS

To travel on buses, trams and metro systems throughout the Netherlands you must have an OV-chipkaart: a "smart-card" that works much like a pay-as-you-go phone card, deducting the cost of each trip from the available credit. It can also be used for train journeys, although separate train tickets are still available.

Disposable, one-time-use cards for durations of either 1 (€2.60) or 2 hours (€5), or one to seven days (€7–29), are available from metro and train stations, and from tram and bus drivers. For €7.50 you can buy a reloadable pass, usable for five years, which you top up as necessary. These are available from stations, Tourist Board offices and newsagents, and can be topped up at ticket offices (only Dutch bank card holders can use the automated ticket machines). In order to validate a journey, users need to hold the OV-chipkaart in front of the grey card reader at metro or platform gates and on boarding a bus or tram; remember to swipe again on disembarking, or you will be charged the full fare to the terminus. Children under 4 travel free; seniors and 4–11-year-olds can claim a discount if they buy their cards in advance.

Visitors to Amsterdam arriving at Schiphol can buy the "Amsterdam All-in-One" tickets, which include a return train ticket to the airport plus a 24/46/72/96-hour metro, tram and bus pass for the city.

TAXIS

If you need a taxi, the best thing is to either go to a taxi-stand or phone a Taxicentrale: numbers can be found in the phone directory and in the Yellow Pages. It is less common to hail a taxi in the street, although it can be done. Taxis are metered and after an initial charge, the fare depends on the distance travelled and the time. Taxi cost more at night.

A treintaxi

RAIL TAXIS

Around 100 Dutch railway stations operate a rail taxi, or treintaxi, service which enables you to travel cheaply to a destination in the same or nearby district. A ticket costs €3.80 at the station or €4.80 from the driver and is valid whatever the length of the journey. The taxi will also take other passengers to their destinations, and so will usually take a roundabout route.

Rail taxis operate from 7am (8am on Sundays and public holidays) until just after the arrival of the last train. You can book by phoning 0900-TREINTAXI/8734682. At the station, book by pressing the button on the blue-yellow column. Information on places covered by the service is given in the NS leaflet Treintaxi-stations op een rijtje.

SPECIAL OUTINGS

The Museumboot in Amsterdam is a river boat that stops near almost all the main sights of the capital (tel. 020-5309010). In the summer it departs every half hour from opposite the Centraal Station from 10am to 5pm, and in other seasons operates every 55 minutes. Tickets are available at the Centraal Station VVV office, or at one of the boat stops. An all-day Museumboot-dagkaart (day ticket) gives you reductions of 10 to 50 per cent on admission to most museums. Another boat, the Artis Express, takes you from Centraal Station to Artis Royal Zoo. This boat also runs every half hour (tel. 020-5309010). A boat tour of the canals of Amsterdam, Utrecht, Leiden and Delft gives you an entirely different view of the inner cities. Most of the boats have transparent roofs which are opened in fine weather. Tours in horse-drawn trams are available in some towns in Holland, such as Delft (April to September, departing from the Markt). In Gouda you can take a sightseeing tour in a horse-drawn carriage from late June to August (departing at the Agnietenkapel, behind the Waag). Details are available from the local VVV office. The OV-chipkaart cannot be used on the Museumboot.

Cycling

The flat landscape of the Netherlands makes it a boon for cyclists. At least 85 per cent of the population has a bicycle. However, there is no shortage of maps and guidebooks with interesting cycling routes. You can use the LF-routes (see p457) to plan your own daytrip or cycling holiday. Another possibility is to take part in an organized cycle tour, where you are awarded a souvenir medal at the end.

ROAD SAFETY

The large number of cycle paths and cycle lanes, often equipped with traffic lights for cyclists, make cycling in the Netherlands a safe and enjoyable activity. However, it's worth keeping a look-out for mopeds, which frequently make use of cycle paths. Cycling in the peaceful countryside and cycling in the busy city are two quite separate experiences. In Amsterdam particularly, the traffic is fairly chaotic – mostly because of the large number of cyclists, who tend to ignore the traffic regulations. If you are unaccustomed to this, it's worth taking extra care. Front and rear lights, a rear reflector and reflective strips or reflective circles are compulsory at night. Many cyclists ride without this equipment, often leaving them almost invisible.

CYCLE HIRE

There are plenty of cycle hire shops in the Netherlands. You can either go to private cycle hire places or hire a bike from some 100 railway stations with a Rijwielshop or Fietspoint. Cycle hire usually costs around €5.40 per day. Cycle hire shops also offer weekly tariffs that work out relatively cheaper. Many of them require a deposit, which can range from €30 to €145, and often want proof of identity. Tandems are also sometimes available, though they cost more, and their lack of manoeuvrability does not make them very suitable for use in city traffic.

Sign for the Rijwiel cycle hire shop, found at nearly 100 railway stations

If you are planning to make a train journey and hire a cycle from your destination, it is worth buying a buurfietskaartje (cycle hire ticket) when setting out. It is a good idea to reserve the bicycle by telephone in advance.

Guides showing cycling routes

The NS publishes a special pamphlet, Fiets en Trein, which lists stations where you can hire bicycles. The VVV and ANWB can also direct you to cycle hire shops.

SECURITY

Even if your bicycle is equipped with a rear-wheel lock, it's a good idea – particularly in the big cities – to secure your bicycle to a post or a bicycle rack by the front wheel. Cycle hire shops will often provide you with a lock for the bike, especially in cities where bicycle theft is a problem. At many railway stations you can leave your bicycle in a secure bicycle-park for around €1.00. Do not leave any luggage on your bicycle if you park it somewhere, not even in a guarded bicycle park.

BICYCLES AND PUBLIC TRANSPORT

For an additional payment you can take your bicycle on the train, except during rush hours (Sep–Jun: 6:30–9am and 4:30–6pm Mon–Fri). To do this, you need to buy a Dagkaart fiets (bike ticket) from a train or metro station in addition to your ordinary train ticket. These tickets cost €6.00 and are valid for the whole day regardless of the length of your journey. Places for bicycles on trains are marked with stickers on the carriage. Folding cycles, when folded, may be taken on trains free of charge. Bicycles may be taken on metros and suburban (fast) trams, provided that you have a bike ticket, but they are not allowed on buses and city trams.

CYCLING TOURS

If you want to get from point A to point B by the quickest possible route, just follow the white-and-red ANWB cycle route signposts. Maps and guides for cyclists describing routes of various lengths are available from the VVV, the ANWB and many bookstores. They often contain a variety of local background information, as well as the addresses of cycle hire shops and places to stay, such as pensions, camping sites and hiking huts (see also p391). Useful examples are the regional ANWB/VVV Toeristenkaarten, which suggest some particularly enjoyable routes, and the Dwaarsstap-fiets-mappen, which give descriptions of cycle routes, often in the area surrounding big cities, and also contain topographical maps. The regional ANWB/VVV fietsgiden have maps and provide descriptions of hundreds of enjoyable cycling trips of around 25 km (15 miles), from the Amelandroute to the Maasdalroute in Limburg. Many of these routes are marked with hexagonal signs. Around 45 railway-based routes are also offered under the name NS-Fietstocht. Maps of the route are on sale at the relevant railway stations. NS publishes a booklet, entitled Er op Uit!, describing these routes. Long-distance tours of at least

Cyclists on tour stopping to enjoy an ice cream

200 km (125 miles) in length (for example, the 230-km/143-mile Elfstedenroute in Friesland) are described in guides such as the ANWB/VVV Lange Fiestronde. These routes are also signposted. Another organization, the Stichting Landelijk Fiets- platform, or national cycling association (see p437), has a network of some 6,000 km (3,730 miles) of numbered National Cycle Routes (Landelijke Fiestroutes, or "LF").

Cycle lane sign

These often follow quiet byroads and cycle tracks and are described in two of the LF-basisgiden. Some are marked with square signs, such as LF-15, which is the Boerenlandroute (farmland route) from Alkmaar to Enschede. Guides to individual routes are also available. The Fietsideeënkaart, a map available from the VVV and ANWB, also provides brief descriptions of LF and other marked cycling routes around the country. To take part in an organized cycle tour, contact organizations such as Cycletours or the Fietsvakantiewinkel (see p437), some of the main VVV offices and the ANWB (members only). These organizations can arrange cycle tour packages, including accommodation and luggage transfer. For information on cycling in nature reserve areas, see page 437.

CYCLING EVENTS

Meimaand Fietsmaand is the year's biggest bicycle event: a whole month (May) packed with bicycle rides, meets and races throughout the Netherlands. In 2010, about 570,000 cyclists participated. Information on the various routes and events can be found at the national cycling association's website: www.fietsplatform.nl. Local cycle touring clubs organize regular non-competitive tours through picturesque or interesting areas, although you have to pay a fee to join. For further information, apply at the Dutch cycle tour society (Nederlandse Toer Fiets Unie, or NFTU, see p437). In addition, dozens of local tours lasting several days are organized locally, such as the Drentse Rijwielvierdaagse in July. Participants can often choose between routes of lengths varying from 25 to 100 km (15 to 60 miles) per day. You will find an overview of these in the NFTU pamphlet Fiestmeerdaagsen, available from the VVV.

For International Book Productions

PROOFREADER Maraya Radhwa

Main Author

Gerard ML Harmans graduated in biology and philosophy at the Vrije Universiteit (Amsterdam), and then chose to work in publishing. He edited an encyclopaedia for Het Spectrum before setting up an independent business with Paul Krijnen in 1989 called de Redactie, boekverzorgers.

Other Contributors

All contributors were selected from de Redactie, boekverzorgers in Amsterdam. The team of authors, translators and editors share a broad field of expertise. Every member of the team made an invaluable contribution.

Anneliet Bannier graduated in translation studies from Amsterdam University. She works as a translator and sub-editor on travel guides. She lives in Zaanstreek.

Hanneke Bos is an editor and translator in the fields of linguistics, cultural history and travel literature.

Jaap Deinema, from Eindhoven, is an expert in the field of the Netherlands. He has made numerous contributions to travel guides. He was responsible for the ATO/VVV edition Infopocket Amsterdam.

Jérôme Gommers, born in Paris, is a freelance author and lover of the Dutch landscape and its poetry. Among other things, he has conducted a comprehensive study of the construction and development of the Noorddoostpolder.

Ron de Heer studied philosophy in Amsterdam. For ten years he has been working as a translator/editor, primarily of travel guides, novels and culinary publications.

Marten van de Kraats writes and translates texts in the fields of travel and automation. Every year he edits the Dutch edition of the Rough Guide Travels on the internet, the best-selling internet book on Holland and Belgium.

Paul Krijnen is a social geographer who has specialized in medieval mark organizations of the Netherlands, such as the Erfgoeiers. His great passion is the Dutch borderlands.

Frans Reusink studied Dutch language. After working as a copywriter, he has been active as a photographer, written travel reports for magazines, and edited travel guides.

Theo Scholten is a Dutch scholar. He has worked on many literary publications but is currently active in non-fiction as an editor and translator. He has made previous contributions to travel guides on Belgium and France.

Ernst Schreuder, a Frisian editor, won the Elfsteden Cross for completing the Tocht der Tochten in 1986 and 1997. Travel and travel guides are his occupation and his hobby.

Catherine Smit studied Dutch language and letters at Utrecht and has contributed as editor and translator to many books, including travel guides.

Jacqueline Toscani graduated in European Studies from Amsterdam University. Since 1992 she has been working as an editor and translator of travel guides, including many titles from the Capitool and Marco Polo series. In the latest series she was co-author of the Vakantieplanner (holiday planner).

Willemien Werkman is a historian and, after studying the history of the Vecht estates, has devoted herself to translation and editing.
