HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

THIS GUIDE helps you to get the most from your visit to Australia. Introducing Australia maps the whole country and sets it in its historical and cultural context. The 17 regional chapters, including Sydney, describe important sights with maps, pictures and illustrations, as well as introductory features on subjects of regional interest. Suggestions on restaurants, accommodation, shopping and entertainment are in Travellers' Needs. The Survival Guide has tips on getting around the country. The cities of Sydney, Melbourne and Brisbane also have their own Practical Information sections.

SYDNEY

The centre of Sydney has been divided into four sightseeing areas. Each area has its own chapter which opens with a list of the sights described. All the sights are numbered and plotted on an Area Map. Information on each sight is easy to locate within the chapter as it follows the numerical order on the map.

Sights at a Glance lists the chapter's sights by category: Historic Streets and Buildings, Museums and Galleries, Parks and Gardens etc.

All pages relating to Sydney have red thumb tabs.

2 Street-by-Street Map

This gives a bird's-eye view of the heart of each sightseeing area.

A suggested route for a walk covers the more interesting streets in the area.

1 Area Map

Sights are numbered on a map. Sights in the city centre are also shown on the Sydney Street Finder (see pp140–47). Melbourne also has its own Street Finder (see pp404–411).

A locator map shows where you are in relation to other areas of the city centre.

Stars indicate sights that no visitor should miss.

3 Detailed Information on Each Sight

All the sights in Sydney are described individually. Useful addresses, telephone numbers, opening hours and other practical information are provided for each entry. The key to all the symbols used in the information block is shown on the back flap.

ADELAIDE AND THE SOUTHEAST

The southeast is a region rich with green hills, vineyards and a spectacular coastline. The state capital, Adelaide, is a beautiful city whose surrounding hills abound with vineyards, from the Barossa Valley to McLaren Vale. To the east, the great Murray River meanders from the Victorian border down to the Southern Ocean. Just off the Flinders Peninsula lies Kangaroo Islands in the Gulf of St. Vincent. In 1836, when Governor John Hindle arrived, the area was a blank slate. Within 10 years, the Governor General had the land divided into sections. The settlement was founded a theory of five colonization (each colony by land sales, and to encourage settlement in Germany. They worked in light-colored penitentiaries, created on property and gardens, so as to be ready for the government. Within 10 years, the area had a population of 10,000. The city of Adelaide was founded in 1836, and the beautiful coastline, vineyards, and wine country were established. Kangaroo Islands were named after the kangaroo, which was the first animal to be introduced to the island.

1 Introduction
The landscape, history and character of each region is described here, showing how the area has developed over the centuries and what it offers to the visitor today.

AUSTRALIA AREA BY AREA
Apart from Sydney, Australia has been divided into 16 regions, each of which has a separate chapter. The most interesting towns and places to visit are numbered on a Pictorial Map at the beginning of each chapter.

Each area of Australia can be identified quickly by its own colour coding, which is shown on the inside front cover.

2 Pictorial Map
This shows the main road network and gives an illustrated overview of the whole area. All interesting places to visit are numbered and there are also useful tips on getting around the region.

3 Detailed Information
All the important towns and other places to visit are described individually. They are listed in order, following the numbering on the Pictorial Map. Within each town or city, there is detailed information on important buildings and other sights.

Putting Australia on the Map

AUSTRALIA LIES in the southern hemisphere and covers 7,772,535 sq km (3,842,675 sq miles) of land. A continent, it is bordered by the Pacific Ocean to the east and the Indian Ocean to the west. More than 70 per cent of its 20 million people reside along the coastline with its more hospitable climate. The capital, Canberra, is in the Australian Capital Territory, but the most populous city is Sydney. Tasmania, an island state, lies 240 km (150 miles) off the south tip of the country, across the Bass Strait.

A PORTRAIT OF AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIA IS the world's oldest continent, inhabited for more than 60,000 years by Aborigines. It was settled by the British just over 200 years ago, in 1788, and since then has transformed from a colonial outpost into a nation with a population of about 20 million people. For visitors, its ancient, worn landscape contrasts with the vitality and youthful energy of its inhabitants.

Covering an area as large as the United States of America or the entire European continent, Australia's landscape is highly diverse, encompassing the dry Outback, the high plateaus of the Great Dividing Range, the lush woods of Tasmania, the rainforests and coral reefs of the tropical north and almost 18,000 km (11,000 miles) of coastline. The Great Dividing Range forms a spine down eastern Australia, from Queensland to Victoria, separating the fertile coastal strip from the dry and dusty interior.

Dominating the vegetation is the eucalypt, known as the "gum tree", of which there are some 500 varieties.

Australian trees shed their bark rather than their leaves, the native flowers have no smell and, with the exception of the wattle, bloom only briefly.

Australia has a unique collection of fauna. Most are marsupials, such as the emblematic kangaroo and koala. The platypus and echidna are among the few living representatives in the world of mammals that both lay eggs and suckle their young. The dingo, brought to Australia by the Aborigines, is considered the country's native dog.

Australia's antiquity is nowhere more evident than in the vast inland area known as the Outback.

Once a huge inland sea, its later aridity preserved the remains of the creatures that once inhabited the area. Some fossils found in Western Australia are 350 million years old – the oldest forms of life known on earth.

THE ABORIGINES

The indigenous inhabitants of Australia, the Aborigines, today constitute almost 1.6 per cent of the national population. Their situation is currently high on the nation's political agenda.

The early days of European colonialism proved disastrous for the Aborigines. Thousands were killed in hostilities or by unfamiliar diseases.

During the 1850s, many Aborigines were confined to purpose-built reserves in a misguided attempt to overcome widespread poverty.

Since the 1950s there have been serious efforts to redress this lack of understanding. Conditions are improving, but even today, in almost every aspect of life, including health care, education and housing, Aborigines are worse off than other Australians. In 1992, a milestone occurred when the

Aboriginal Australian

High Court overturned the doctrine of terra nullius – that Australia belonged to no one at the time of British settlement. The Native Title Act followed, which, in essence, states that where Aborigines could establish unbroken occupancy of an area, they could then claim that land as their own.

Almost all Australians support this reconciliation and are increasingly aware of the rich heritage of the Aborigines. The Aboriginal belief in the Dreamtime (see pp26–7) may never be completely assimilated into the Australian consciousness, but an understanding of ancestral beings is an invaluable guide to traditional lifestyles. Aboriginal painting is now respected as one of the world's most ancient art forms and modern Aboriginal art began to be taken seriously in the 1970s. Aboriginal writers have also come to the forefront of Australian literature. Younger Aborigines are beginning to capitalize on this new awareness to promote equal rights and, with Aboriginal cultural centres being set up throughout the country, it is unlikely that Australia will dismiss its native heritage again.

The kangaroo, a famous icon of Australia

SOCIETY

Given Australia's size and the fact that early settlements were far apart, Australian society is remarkably homogeneous. Its citizens are fundamentally prosperous and the way of life in the major cities and towns is much the same however many miles divide them. It takes a keen ear to identify regional accents.

However, there is some difference in lifestyle between city dwellers and the country people. Almost 90 per cent of the population lives in the fast-paced cities along the coast and has little more than a passing familiarity with the Outback. The major cities preserve pockets of colonial heritage, but the overall impression is modern, with new buildings reflecting the country's youth. In contrast, the rural communities tend to be slow-moving and conservative. For many years, Australia was said to have "ridden on the sheep's back", a reference to wool being the country's main money-earner. However, the wool industry is no longer dominant. Much of Australia's relatively sound economy is now achieved from natural coal and wheat, and as the largest diamond producer in the world. Newer industries such as tourism and wine making are also increasingly important. Australians are generally friendly and relaxed, with a self-deprecating sense of humour. On the whole, Australia has a society without hierarchies, an attitude generally held to stem from its convict beginnings.

Yet, contrary to widespread belief, very few Australians have true convict origins. Within only one generation of the arrival of the First Fleet in 1788, Australia had become a nation of immigrants. Originally hailing almost entirely from the British Isles, today one in three Australians comes from elsewhere. Australia's liberal postwar immigration policies led to an influx of survivors from war-torn Europe, most notably Greeks, Italians, Poles and Germans.

The emphasis has shifted in recent years and today the majority of new immigrants hail from Southeast Asia. Although some racism does exist, this blend of nations has, on the whole, been a successful experiment and Australia is justifiably proud to have one of the most harmonious multicultural communities in the world.

POLITICS

Since 1901, Australia has been a federation, with its central government based in the purpose-built national capital, Canberra. Each state also has its own government. The nation inherited the central parliamentary system from England, and there is a two-party system consisting of the left (Labor) and the right (a coalition of Liberal and National Parties). The prime minister is the head of federal government, while the heads of states are premiers. Australia is a self-governing member of the British Commonwealth and retains the English monarch as its titular head of state. At present, the national representative of the monarch is the governor general, but the nation is involved in an ongoing debate about its future as a republic. There is opposition from those who argue that the system currently in place has led to one of the most stable societies in the world, while others believe that swearing allegiance to an English monarch has little meaning for the current population, many of whom are immigrants. A referendum in November 1999 saw the monarchy retained with some 55 per cent of the votes. The debate continues.

Indonesian satay stall at Parap Market in Darwin in the Northern Territory

The nation's character has always been shaped by its sparsely populated island location, far distant from its European roots and geographically closer to Southeast Asia. Today there is a growing realization that the country must look to the Pacific region for its future. Closer ties with Asia, such as business transactions with Indonesia and Japan, are being developed.

ART AND CULTURE

Blessed with a sunny climate and surrounded by the sea, outdoor leisure is high on the list of priorities for Australians – going to the beach is almost a national pastime. Australians are also mad about sport: football, cricket, rugby, tennis and golf are high on the national agenda.

Yet despite this reputation, Australians actually devote more

Australian Rules football match in Melbourne

Young boogie boarder

of their time and money to artistic pursuits than they do to sporting ones, and as a result the national cultural scene is very vibrant. It is no accident that the Sydney Opera House is one of the country's most recognizable symbols. The nation is probably best known for its opera singers, among whom have been two of the all-time greats, Dame Nellie Melba and Dame Joan Sutherland. Opera Australia and the Australian Ballet, both in Sydney, are acknowledged for their high standards. Every state also has its own thriving theatre company and symphony orchestra. Major art galleries abound throughout the country, from the many excellent state galleries exhibiting international works to a multitude of small private galleries exhibiting local and contemporary Australian and Aboriginal art.

The Australian film industry has also come into its own since the 1970s. The best-known Australian film is possibly Crocodile Dundee (1985), but lower budget productions such as Shine (1996) and Muriel's Wedding (1994) have an attractive, understated quality which regularly wins them international film awards.

This is not to say that Australia's cultural pursuits are entirely high-brow. Low-budget television soap operas such as Neighbours have become high-earning exports. Rock bands such as AC/DC also have an international following.

In almost all aspects, it seems, Australia lives up to its nickname of "the lucky country" and it is hard to meet an Australian who is not thoroughly convinced that this young and vast nation is now the best country on earth.

Australia's Landscape

GEOLOGICAL STABILITY has been largely responsible for creating the landscape of the earth's oldest, flattest and driest inhabited continent. Eighty million years ago, Australia's last major bout of geological activity pushed up the Great Dividing Range, but since then the continent has slept. Mountains have been eroded down, making it difficult for rain clouds to develop. Deserts have formed in once lush areas and today more than 70 per cent of the continent is arid. However, with some of the oldest rocks on earth, its landscapes are anything but uniform, and include rainforests, tropical beaches, glacial landforms, striking coastlines and flood plains.

Australia's drift towards the equator has brought a northern monsoon climate, as in Kakadu National Park (see pp268–9).

Cradle Mountain (see p455) in southwest Tasmania was created by geological upheaval, glaciation and erosion. Here jagged mountain ranges, ravines and glacial lakes have formed a landscape that is quite unique in Australia.

KATA TJUTA (THE OLGAS)

Geological remnants of an immense bed of sedimentary rock now almost covered by sand from erosion, Kata Tjuta's weathered domes may once have been a single dome many times the size of Uluru (see pp278–81).

There are three main geological regions in Australia: the coastal plain including the Great Dividing Range; the Central Lowlands; and the Western Plateau. The Great Dividing Range is a relatively new feature in geological terms. It contains Australia's highest mountains, deep rivers, spectacular gorges and volcanic landforms. The Central Lowlands subsided when the continental margins on either side rose up – a result of rifting caused by continental drift. The Western Plateau contains many of Australia's large deserts and is composed of some of the most ancient rocks in the world.

The area to the east of Queensland was flooded at the end of the last Ice Age, creating ideal conditions for a coral reef. The Great Barrier Reef (see pp204–9) now forms one of the world's most stunning sights.

The Nullarbor Plain (see p359) was created by the upthrust of an ancient sea floor. Today, sheer cliffs drop away from this desert landscape dotted with sinkholes and plunge into the sea below, creating one of Australia's most startling coastlines.

THE AUSTRALIAN CONTINENT

The Australian continent finally broke away from its last adjoining landmass, Antarctica, 40 million years ago and embarked on a long period of geographical isolation. During this time Australia's unique flora and fauna evolved and flourished (see pp20–21). Aboriginal people lived undisturbed on this continent for at least 40,000 years, developing the land to their own needs, until the arrival of Europeans in 1770 (see pp42–7).

Two hundred million years ago, the area of land that is now continental Australia was attached to the lower half of the earth's single landmass, Pangaea.

Between 200 and 65 million years ago, Pangaea separated to form two supercontinents, Gondwanaland in the south and Laurasia in the north.

Fifty million years ago, Gondwanaland had broken up into the various southern continents with only Antarctica and Australia still attached.

Today, the drifting of the continents continues and Australia is moving northwards towards the equator at the rate of 8 cm (3 ins) a year.

Flora and Fauna

FORTY MILLION YEARS of isolation from other major land masses have given Australia a collection of flora and fauna that is unique in the world. Low rainfall and poor soil has meant meagre food sources, and animals and plants have evolved some curious adaptations to help them cope. Surprisingly, these adverse conditions have also produced incredible biodiversity. Australia has more than 25,000 species of plants, and its rainforests are among the richest in the world in the number of species they support. Even its desert centre has 2,000 plant species and the world's greatest concentration of reptile species.

The platypus lives in an aquatic environment like a fish, suckles its young like a mammal, lays eggs and has the bill of a duck!

The lush rainforest is a haven for many endemic species of flora and fauna.

Epiphytes, ferns and vines abound around this rainforest creek.

At least 30 species of spinifex cover many of Australia's desert plains.

RAINFORESTS

The east coast rainforests are among the most ancient ecosystems on earth. At least 18,000 plant species exist here. Some trees are more than 2,500 years old, and many are direct descendants of species from Gondwana (see p19).

The golden bowerbird of the rainforest builds spectacular bowers out of sticks as a platform for its mating displays. Some bowers reach well over 2 m (6.5 ft) in height.

The Wollemi pine was discovered in 1994 and caused a sensation. It belongs to a genus thought to have become extinct between 65 and 200 million years ago.

ARID REGIONS

The vast reaches of Australia's arid and semi-arid regions teem with life. Desert plants and animals have developed unique and specific behavioural and physical features to maximize their survival chances in such harsh conditions.

The boab (baobab) tree sheds its leaves in the dry season to survive.

Spinifex grass, found across the desert, stores water and needs frequent exposure to fire to thrive.

The thorny devil feeds only on ants and can consume more than 3,000 in one meal.

MAMMALS

Australian mammals are distinctive because the population is dominated by two groups that are rare or non-existent elsewhere. Monotremes, such as the platypus, are found only in Australia and New Guinea, and marsupials, represented by 180 species here, are scarce in other parts of the world. In contrast, placental mammals, highly successful on other continents, have been represented in Australia only by bats and rodents, and more recently by dingos. Mass extinctions of larger placentals occurred 20,000 years ago.

Red kangaroos are the most common of many species of this marsupial found in Australia.

The dingo was introduced into Australia by migrating humans c. 5,000 years ago.

Eucalypt trees

provide food for possums and koalas.

Moist fern groundcover

shelters a variety of small mammals and insects.

This coral garden is home to many molluscs, crustaceans and brightly coloured fish.

OPEN WOODLAND

The woodlands of the eastern seaboard, the southeast and southwest are known as the Australian bush. Eucalypt trees predominate in the hardy vegetation that has developed to survive fire, drought and poor-quality soil.

SEALIFE

Australia's oceans are poor in nutrients but rich in the diversity of life they support. Complex ecosystems create beautiful underwater scenery, while the shores and islands are home to nesting seabirds and giant sea mammals.

Koalas feed only on nutrient-poor eucalypt leaves, and have evolved low-energy lives to cope, such as sleeping for 20 hours a day.

Seagrass beds have high-saline conditions which attract many sea creatures. Shark Bay shelters the highest number of sea mammals in the world (see pp318–19).

Kookaburras are very efficient breeders: one of the young birds is kept on in the nest to look after the next batch of hatchlings, leaving both parents free to gather food.

The Australian sealion is one of two seal species unique to Australia. Its extended breeding cycle helps it contend with a poor food supply.

World Heritage Areas of Australia

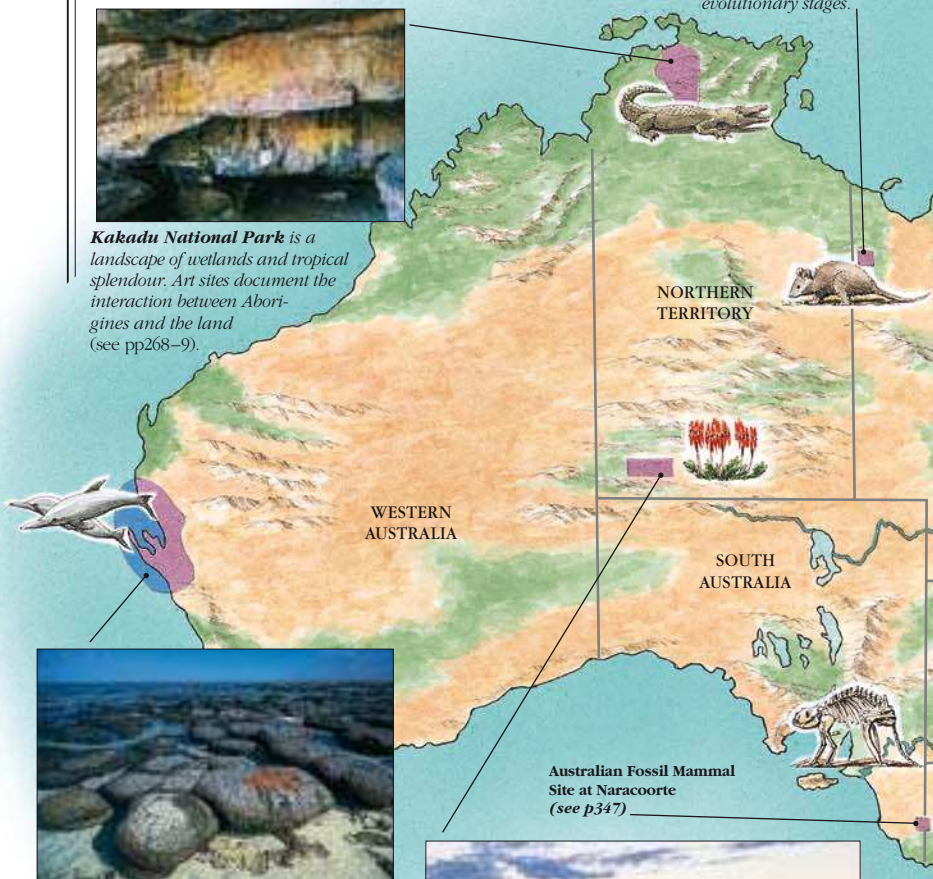

THE WORLD HERITAGE CONVENTION was adopted by UNESCO in 1972 in order to protect areas of universal cultural and natural significance. Eleven sites in Australia are inscribed on the World Heritage List and include unusual landforms, ancient forests and areas of staggering biodiversity. Four of the locations (Kakadu National Park, Willandra Lakes, the Tasmanian wilderness and Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park) are also listed for their Aboriginal cultural heritage.

Fossil sites in Riversleigh (see p249) and Naracoorte chart Australia's important evolutionary stages.

Kakadu National Park is a landscape of wetlands and tropical splendour. Art sites document the interaction between Aborigines and the land (see pp268–9).

Shark Bay is home to a vast colony of sea mammals. The bay's stromatolites (algae-covered rocks) are the oldest form of life known on earth (see pp318–19).

Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park contains two major Aboriginal sites (see pp278–81). The world's largest monolith is an extraordinary geological phenomenon in the flat desert plains.

The wet tropics of Queensland (see pp244–5) contain a near complete record of plant evolution on the Australian continent. Some 50 per cent of all bird species and 30 per cent of marsupial species found in the country are sheltered here.

Fraser Island

The Willandra Lakes are the site of archaeological finds dating back 40,000 years. The area is also remarkable for its semi-arid landscape and ghostly lunettes (see p173).

Lord Howe Island, a crescent-shaped island, and its nearby rocky outcrops represent a chain of volcanic structures. Home to the rare woodhen, banyan trees and kentia pines, Lord Howe's isolation provides key information about the evolution of these species.

The Tasmanian wilderness, Australia's largest conservation zone, satisfies all four natural criteria for World Heritage listing. Its rocks represent every geological period, including the Ice Age, the wide range of plants are unique to the area, and it is home to some of the oldest trees and the longest caves in the world (see pp442–3).

The Australian Outback

Perentie goanna in the Outback

THE OUTBACK is the heart of Australia and one of the most ancient landscapes in the world. It is extremely dry – rain may not fall for several years. Dramatic red rocks, ochre plains and purple mountains are framed by brilliant blue skies.

Development is sparse: “towns” are often no more than a few buildings and facilities are basic. There may be hundreds of miles between one petrol station and another. The Outback isn’t easy to explore, but it can be a rewarding experience. Make sure you are well equipped (see p550), or take an organized tour.

LOCATOR MAP

 The Australian Outback

Camels were brought to Australia in the 1870s from the Middle East, as a means of desert transport. The Outback is now home to the only wild camels in the world. Camel safaris for tourists are available in many places.

Saltbush, which gets its name from its ability to withstand saline conditions, is a typical form of vegetation.

OUTBACK LIFE

The enduring image of Australia’s Outback is red dust, solitary one-storey shacks and desert views as far as the eye can see. Although small areas of the Outback have seen towns spring up over the past 100 years, and many interstate roads are now suitable for most vehicles, this image remains true to life across vast stretches of the interior landscape. Most of the Outback remains pioneering country far removed from the modern nation.

Camping in the bush is one of the highlights of any trip into Australia’s Outback, whether independently or with an organized tour. You will need a camping permit, a swag (canvas-covered bed roll), a mosquito net and a good camping stove to eat and sleep in relative comfort under the stars.

The film industry has long been a fan of the Outback's vast open spaces and dramatic colours. Films such as the 1994 comedy The Adventures of Priscilla, Queen of the Desert made spectacular use of the Red Centre's sparse and dusty landscape.

Australian "hotels" in Outback areas often operate only as public houses, re-named hotels to counteract Australia's once strict licensing laws.

A solitary building set against vast areas of open desert landscape can be an evocative landmark in the Outback.

PIONEERS AND EXPLORERS

Many European explorers, such as Edward Eyre and John Stuart, ventured into the Outback during the 19th century. The most infamous expedition was Robert O'Hara Burke's from Victoria to the Gulf of Carpentaria (see p49). Ironically, it was the rescue missions due to his inexperience which brought about the pioneers' most significant investigations of Australia's interior.

The Birdsville Races in Queensland are the biggest and best of the many horse races held in the Outback, where locals gather to bet and socialize.

Opal mining in towns such as Coober Pedy (see p360) is one source of the Outback's wealth. Tourists need a miner's permit, available from state tourist offices, to hunt for gems.

Aboriginal Culture

Ancient stone axe

FAR FROM BEING one homogeneous race, at the time of European settlement in the 18th century, the estimated 750,000 Aborigines in Australia had at least 300 different languages and a wide variety of lifestyles, depending on where they lived. The tribes of northern coastal areas, such as the Tiwis, had most contact with outsiders, especially from Indonesia, and their culture was quite different from the more isolated Pitjantjatjaras of Central Australia's deserts or the Koories from the southeast. However, there were features common to Aboriginal life and these have passed down the centuries to present-day traditions.

Aboriginal artifacts and tools, decorated in traditional ornate patterns

TRADITIONAL ABORIGINAL LIFESTYLES

FOR THOUSANDS of years, the Aborigines were a race of hunters leading a nomadic existence. They made lightweight, versatile tools such as the boomerang, and built temporary mud dwellings. The extent of their wanderings differed from region to region – people who lived in areas with a plentiful supply of food and water were relatively more static than those in areas where such essentials were scarce.

Through living in small groups in a vast land, Aboriginal society came to be broken up into numerous clans separated by different languages and customs. Even people with a common language would live apart in “core” family groups, consisting of a husband, wife, children and perhaps some close friends to share the responsibilities of daily life. Groups would come together from time to time to conduct religious ceremonies, arrange marriages and settle inter-clan disputes. Trade was an important part of social life. Shell, ochre and wood were some of the goods exchanged along trade routes that criss-crossed the entire country.

The nomadic way of life largely ended when English settlers claimed vast tracts of land, but other aspects of traditional life have survived. In Aboriginal communities, senior members are still held in great respect, and are responsible for maintaining laws and meting out punishments to those who break them or divulge secrets of ancient rituals. Such rituals are part of the Aboriginal belief system called “Dreamtime”.

Men's Dreaming by Clifford Possum Tjapaltjarri

THE DREAMTIME

THE DREAMTIME (or Dreaming) is the English term for the Aboriginal system of laws and beliefs. Its basis is a rich mythology about the earth's creation. “Creation ancestors” such as giant serpents are believed to have risen up from the earth's core and roamed the world, creating valleys, rivers and mountains. Other progenitors caused the rain and sun, and created the people and wildlife. Sites where ancestral beings are thought to have emerged from the earth are sacred and are still used as the locations for ceremonies and rituals today.

The belief in the Dreamtime is, in essence, a religious ideology for all Aborigines, whatever their tribe, and forms the basis of Aboriginal life. Every Aborigine is

THE BOOMERANG

Aboriginal boomerang

Contrary to popular belief, not all boomerangs will return to the thrower. Originally, “boomerang” simply meant “throwing stick”. They were used for hunting, fighting, making fire, stoking the coals when cooking and in traditional games. A hunter did not normally require a throwing stick to return since its purpose was to injure its target sufficiently to enable capture. Over time, intricate shapes were developed that allowed sticks to swirl in a large arc and return to the thrower. The returning boomerang is limited to games, killing birds and directing animals into traps. Light and thin, with a deep curvature, its ends are twisted in opposite directions.

The lower surface is flat and the upper surface convex.

believed to have two souls – one mortal and one immortal, linked with their ancestral spirit (or totem). Each family clan is descended from the same ancestral being. These spirits provide protection: any misfortune is due to disgruntled forebears. As a consequence, some clan members have a responsibility for maintaining sacred sites. Anyone failing in these duties is severely punished.

Each Dreamtime story relates to a particular landscape; as one landscape connects with another, these stories form a “track”. These “tracks” are called Songlines and criss-cross the Australian continent. Aborigines are able to connect with other tribes along these lines.

ABORIGINAL SONG AND DANCE

ABORIGINAL SONGS tell stories of Dreamtime ancestors and are intrinsically linked to the worship of spirits – the words of songs are often incomprehensible due to the secrecy of many ancestral stories. Simple instruments accompany the songs, including the didgeridoo, a 1-m (3-ft) long wind instrument with a deep sound.

Aborigines also use dance as a means of communicating with their ancestors. Aboriginal dance is experiencing a cultural renaissance, with new companies performing both traditional and new works.

ABORIGINAL ISSUES

ALTHOUGH FEW Aborigines now maintain a traditional nomadic lifestyle, the ceremonies, creation stories and art that make up their culture remain strong.

The right to own land has long been an issue for present-day Aborigines; they believe that they are responsible for caring for the land entrusted to them at birth.

The Land Rights Act of 1976 has done much to improve these rights. The Act established Aboriginal Land Councils which negotiate between the government and Aborigines to claim land for its traditional owners (see pp54–5). Where Aboriginal rights have been established, that land cannot be altered in any way.

In areas of large Aboriginal inhabitation, the government has also agreed that white law can exist alongside black law, which allows for justice against Aboriginal offenders to be meted out according to tribal law. In many cases, this law is harsh and savage, but it allows for Aborigines to live by their own belief system.

The revival of Aboriginal art was at the forefront of seeing Aboriginal culture in a more positive light by Australians. Aboriginal artists such as Emily

Kame Kngwarreye combine traditional materials such as bark and ochre with acrylics and canvas, while telling Dreaming stories in a modern idiom (see pp26–7).

Many Aborigines have now moved away from their traditional lifestyle and live within the major cities, but they remain distinctly Aboriginal and generally choose to live within Aboriginal communities. Within designated Aboriginal lands (see pp254–5), many still follow bush medical practices and perform traditional rituals.

It cannot be denied that Aborigines are still disadvantaged in comparison with the rest of Australia, particularly in terms of housing, health and education. But the growing awareness of their culture and traditions is gradually leading to a more harmonious coexistence.

Aboriginal Art

Aboriginal rock art sign

AS A NOMADIC PEOPLE with little interest in decorating their temporary dwellings, Aborigines have long let loose their creativity on landscape features such as rocks and caves (see pp43–4).

Many art sites are thousands of years old, although they have often been re-painted over time to preserve the image. Rock art reflects daily Aboriginal life as well as religious beliefs. Some ancient sites contain representations of now extinct animals; others depict human figures with blue eyes, strange weapons and horses – evidently the arrival of Europeans. Aboriginal art is also seen in everyday objects – utensils and accessories such as belts and headbands.

Bark painting, such as this image of a fish, has disappeared from southern areas, but still flourishes in Arnhem Land and on Melville and Bathurst islands.

The outline style of rock engraving was developed most fully in the Sydney-Hawkesbury area, due to vast areas of soft Hawkesbury sandstone. More than 4,000 figures have been recorded, often gigantic in size – one whale engraving is more than 20 m (65 ft) long. Groups of engravings can cover more than 1 ha (2.5 acres).

Figures showing the human anatomy are often depicted in basic but exaggerated, stylized forms.

Cave rock was a popular “canvas” for traditional Aboriginal art, particularly when tribes took cover during the rainy season.

MAJOR ABORIGINAL ART SITES

- Arnhem Land, Northern Territory
- Central Desert
- Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park
- Laura, Queensland
- Melville and Bathurst islands
- Sydney-Hawkesbury area

Quinkans are stick-like figures found in far north Queensland's Laura region. They represent spirits that are thought to emerge suddenly from rock crevices and startle people, to remind them that misbehaviour will bring swift retribution.

Burial poles are an example of how important decoration is to Aborigines, even to commemorate death. These brightly coloured Pukumani burial poles belong to the Tiwi people of Melville and Bathurst islands (see p266).

The crocodile image personifies the force of nature, as well as symbolizing the relationship between humans and the natural environment. Both are common themes within Aboriginal art.

Bush Plum Dreaming (1991) by Clifford Possum Tjapaltjarri is a modern example of ancient Aboriginal techniques used by the Papunya tribe (see p30).

"X-ray art", such as this figure at Nourlangie Rock in Kakadu National Park (see pp268–9), shows the internal and external anatomy of living subjects, including a range of animals.

ARNHEM LAND ROCK ART

Arnhem Land is the 80,285-km (49,890-mile) Aboriginal territory which stretches from east of Darwin to the Gulf of Carpentaria (see pp254–5). Magnificent rock art "galleries" in this region date from 16,000 BC (see p43) – some of the oldest Aboriginal art in the country.

Totemic art at Uluru (see pp278–81) is thought to portray the beings in Aboriginal culture who are believed to have created the rock.

Australian Artists and Writers

Frederick McCubbin

THE FIRST EUROPEANS to paint Australia were those who arrived in the Endeavour (see pp46–7), but it was not until the prosperity generated by the 1850s gold rushes that art gained any public recognition. There had been colonial artists, of whom Conrad Martens (1801–78) was the best known, but in a country where survival was the most immediate problem, art was not a high priority. The first writings were also journals of early settlers; it was 100 years before Australia could claim the beginnings of a literary tradition, when Rolf Boldrewood (1826–1915) wrote Robbery Under Arms (1888), a heroic tale of the bush.

ARTISTS

THE SO-CALLED “Heidelberg School”, named after an area around Melbourne, was the first distinctive Australian school of painting at the end of the 19th century. Its mainstays included Tom Roberts (1856–1931), Charles Conder (1868–1909), Frederick McCubbin (1855–1917) and Arthur Streeton (1867–1943). The group drew strongly on the plein air methods of the French Impressionists to capture the distinctive light and openness of the Australian landscape. Then, in the early 1900s, Hans Heysen captured the national imagination with his delicately coloured gum trees and his view of the Australian landscape. Sir Sidney Nolan (1917–92), best known for his “Ned Kelly” series of the 1940s based on the country’s most notorious bushranger (see p386), also produced landscape paintings which propelled Australian art on to the international scene for the first time.

Kelly in Spring (1956), one of Sir Sidney Nolan’s “Ned Kelly” series

The best known of the talented Boyd family, Arthur Boyd (born in 1920), is another great on the Australian art scene; his “Half-Caste Bride” series catapulted him into the art world in 1960.

Probably the greatest interpreter of Australia’s Outback is Sir Russell Drysdale (1912–81), whose paintings depict the harshness of this landscape. Brett Whiteley (1939–92) is a more recent talent whose sensual work reflects his view of the world.

Winner of the Archibald Prize for portraiture, William Dobell (1899–1970) is often regarded as the figurehead of the Sydney Modernist movement. He achieved some level of notoriety when, in 1944, two fellow artists mounted a legal challenge to the granting of the Archibald for his portrait of Joshua Smith, claiming it was “not a portrait but a caricature”. The action was unsuccessful, but all Dobell’s further work generated publicity for the wrong reasons.

Sir Russell Drysdale

Possibly the most popularly recognized Australian artist is Ken Done. Often dismissed for blatant commercialism, his brilliantly coloured work has achieved sales of which most artists only dream.

The most significant collection of Australian art can be seen at Canberra’s National Gallery (see pp194–5).

Toberua (1994) by Ken Done

THE ANTIPODEANS

FORMED IN MELBOURNE in 1959, the Antipodeans consisted of seven of Australia’s best-known modern artists, all born in the 1920s: Charles Blackman, Arthur Boyd, David Boyd, John Brack, Robert Dickerson, John Perceval and Clifton Pugh. The aim of the group was to support figurative painting rather than abstraction. The group denied that they were creating a national style and the name Antipodeans was adopted to avoid too narrow a focus on Australia, as the group aimed for international recognition at exhibitions in London. Ironically, it later came to apply to Australian art in general.

Portrait of Miles Franklin by Marie McNiven

Australia's most celebrated novelist is undoubtedly Patrick White (1912–90), who won the Nobel Prize in 1973 with The Eye of the Storm. White had made his mark in 1957 with Voss, the story of the explorer Ludwig Leichhardt, while his later novels include A Fringe of Leaves (1976) and The Twyborn Affair (1979).

Campaigner for women's suffrage, Louisa Lawson (1848–1920), is credited with Australia's first feminist journal, Dawn, written between 1888 and 1905. At the same time, another feminist, Miles Franklin (1879–1954), defied traditional women's roles of the time by pursuing an independent life in Australia, England and the USA. Her life was documented in several autobiographies, beginning with My Brilliant Career (1901).

For descriptions of pre- and postwar Sydney life in the slums, the novels of Ruth Park (born in 1922), such as Harp in the South (1948) and Fence around the Cuckoo (1992), are unbeatable. Novelist Thomas Keneally (born in 1935) won the 1982 Booker Prize with Schindler's Ark, later made by Steven Spielberg into the acclaimed film Schindler's List.

Aboriginal writer Sally Morgan (born in 1951) has put indigenous Australian writing on the map with her 1988 autobiography My Place.

POETS

AUSTRALIA'S EARLY poets were mostly bush balladeers, articulating life in the bush and the tradition of the Australian struggle. "The Man from Snowy River" and "Clancy of the Overflow" by AB "Banjo" Paterson (1864–1941) are 19th-century classics still committed to memory by every Australian schoolchild. Writing from the late 1800s until his death in 1922, Henry Lawson similarly wrote some enduring bush verse, but his poetry also had a more political edge. His first published poem in the Bulletin literary magazine in 1887 was the rallying "Song of the Republic".

Poets such as Judith Wright (born in 1945) and, in particular, Oodgeroo Noonuccal (1920–93), have sensitively and powerfully expressed the anguish of Aboriginal people in verse.

Henry Lawson

PLAYWRIGHTS

AUSTRALIA'S MOST prolific contemporary playwright is David Williamson, born in 1942. A satirist exploring middle-class life and values, Williamson has been an international success and several of his plays, such as Dead White Males (1995), have been performed both in London and New York.

Ray Lawler gained renown in 1955 with Summer of the Seventeenth Doll, which challenged the deep-rooted Australian concept of male friendship. The play has been adapted as an opera, with music by Australian composer Richard Meale.

Other notable contemporary playwrights are Nick Enright, Stephen Sewell and Louis Nowra.

WRITERS

MUCH OF Australian fiction is concerned with the difficulties Europeans experienced in a harsh land, or the relationship between white settlers and Aborigines. The themes can be traced back to an early Australian novelist, Henry Handel Richardson, the pseudonym of Ethel Robertson (1870–1946). Her trilogy, The Fortunes of Richard Mahoney (1929), was published to great acclaim, including a nomination for the Nobel Prize for Literature. Contemporary novelist David Malouf (born in 1934) continues to explore these issues in Remembering Babylon (1993), winner of the Prix Baudelaire, and Conversations at Curlow Creek (1996).

The Wines of Australia

Penfold's Grange

GRAPES AND WINE HAVE BEEN produced in Australia virtually since European settlement in 1788 (see pp46–7). The first vineyards were planted in Sydney in 1791 and over the next 40 years vines were planted in the Hunter Valley (1827), the Barossa Valley at Jacobs Creek (1847), the Yarra Valley (1930), and Adelaide (1937). John and Elizabeth Macarthur became Australia's first commercial wine producers with a small vintage in 1827 from their Sydney farm (see p123). In the 1960s, with the introduction of international grape varieties, such as Chardonnay, small oak-barrel maturation and modern wine-making technology, the wine industry really developed. Since the 1990s Australia has earned an excellent reputation for high-quality wines and there are about 1,465 wineries operating today.

THE FATHER OF AUSTRALIAN WINE

James Busby

James Busby is often regarded as the father of the Australian wine industry. Scottish-born, he arrived in Sydney in 1824. During the voyage to Australia he wrote the country's first wine book, detailing his experiences of French vineyards. He established a property at Kirkton in the Hunter Valley, New South Wales, and returned to Europe in 1831, collecting 570 vine cuttings from France and Spain.

These were cultivated at Kirkton and the Sydney and Adelaide Botanic Gardens. In 1833, having founded Australia's first wine-producing region, he emigrated to New Zealand.

Mount Hurtle winery produces distinctive white table wines. It is located in one of South Australia's main wine regions, McLaren Vale (see pp330–31).

WINE REGIONS OF AUSTRALIA

Since signing a trade agreement with the European Union, Australia has had to implement a new classification system for its wine producing regions. The whole of Australia has 28 wine zones, which can be whole state (Tasmania) or parts of states Balmoral House is part of the Rosemount Estate in the Upper Hunter Valley (see pp154–5). The house gives its name to the winery's excellent Balmoral Shiraz.

VISITING A WINERY

Wine tourism is increasingly popular in Australia and information and maps are readily available at information bureaux. Most wineries are open daily (but you should ring ahead to avoid disappointment) and if they charge for tastings it will be refunded against a purchase. Winery restaurants are also popular and some have barbeques and entertainment for children while others have a wine-food paired menu. With strict drink-drive laws it may be better to take a guided tour – these can be by bus or tailor-made by limousine.

Surfing and Beach Culture

Lifeguard and her surfboard

AUSTRALIA IS the quintessential home of beach culture, with the nation's beaches ranging from sweeping crescents with rolling waves to tiny, secluded coves. Almost all Australians live within a two-hour drive of the coast, and during the hot summers it is almost second nature to make for the water to cool off. The clichéd image of the sun-bronzed Australian is no longer the reality it once was, but popular beaches are still packed with tanned bodies basking on golden sands or frolicking in deep blue waves. Fines levied for inappropriate behaviour mean that the atmosphere is calm and safe at all times. Surfing has always been a national sport, with regular carnivals and competitions held on the coastline. There are also opportunities for beginners to try their hand at this daring sport.

Baked-brown bodies and sun-bleached hair were once the epitome of beach culture.

Surf carnivals attract thousands of spectators, who thrill to races, "iron man" competitions, dummy rescues and spectacular lifeboat displays.

SURFER IN ACTION

Riding the waves is a serious business. Wetsuit-clad "surfies" study the surfing reports in the media and think nothing of travelling vast distances to reach a beach where the best waves are running.

Crouching down into the wave's crest increases stability on the board.

WHERE TO SURF

The best surfing to be found in Australia is on the New South Wales coast (see pp170–71), the southern Queensland coast, especially the aptly named Surfer's Paradise and the Sunshine Coast (pp230–31) and the southern coastline of Western Australia (pp304–305). Tasmania also has some fine surfing beaches on its northwestern tip (pp454–5). Despite superb north Queensland beaches, the Great Barrier Reef stops the waves well before they reach the mainland. In summer, deadly marine stingers (jellyfish) here make surf swimming impossible in many areas, unless there is a stinger-proof enclosure.

Surf lifesaving is an integral part of the Australian beach scene. Trained volunteer lifesavers, easily recognized by their red and yellow swimming caps, ensure that swimmers stay within flag-defined safe areas and are ready to spring into action if someone is in trouble.

BEACH ACTIVITIES

Australian beaches are not only the preserve of surfers. Winter temperatures are mild in most coastal areas, so many beach activities are enjoyed all year. Weekends see thousands of pleasure boats, from small runabouts to luxury yachts, competing in races or just out for a picnic in some sheltered cove. The sails of windsurfers create swirls of colour on gusty days. Kite-flying has become an art form, with the Festival of the Winds a September highlight at Sydney's Bondi Beach (see p36). Beach volleyball, once a knockabout game, is now an Olympic sport.

Festival of the Winds

Takeaway snack food at the beach is an Australian tradition, since many sunlovers spend entire days by the ocean. Fish and chips, kebabs and burgers are on sale at beach cafés.

Surfboards, once made out of wood, are now built of light fibreglass, often in bright colours, improving speed and visibility.

The Australian crawl revolutionized swimming throughout the world in the 1880s. For most Australians, swimming is an everyday sport, learned at a very early age.

SAFETY

Beaches are safe provided you follow a few guidelines:

- Always swim "between the flags".
- Don't swim alone.
- Note signs warning of strong currents, blue bottles or stingers.
- If you get into difficulty, do not wave but signal for help by raising one arm straight in the air.
- Use Factor 30+ sunscreen and wear a shirt and hat.

AUSTRALIA THROUGH THE YEAR

THE SEASONS IN AUSTRALIA are the exact opposite of those in the northern hemisphere. In the southern half of the country spring comes in September, summer is from December to February, autumn runs from March to May, while winter begins in June. In contrast, the tropical climate of the north coast is more clearly divided into wet and dry seasons, the former between November and April. Australia's vast interior has a virtually unchanging desert climate – baking hot days and cool nights. The weather throughout Australia is reliable enough year-round to make outdoor events popular all over the country.

SPRING

WITH THE WARM weather, the profusion of spring flowers brings gardens and national parks to life. Food, art and music festivals abound in cities. Footballers finish their seasons, cricketers warm up for summer matches and the horse-racing fraternity gets ready to place its bets.

AUTUMN

AFTER THE humidity of the summer, autumn brings fresh mornings and cooler days that are tailor-made for outdoor pursuits such as bushwalking, cycling and fishing, as well as outdoor festivals. There are numerous sporting and cultural events to tempt the visitor. Many of the country's wineries open their doors during the harvest season and hold gourmet food and wine events. Lavish Easter parades take place in all the major cities and towns across the country. Anzac Day (25 April), observed annually since 1916, is a national holiday on which Australians commemorate their war dead.

MARCH

Australian Formula One Grand Prix (first weekend), Melbourne. Top Formula One drivers compete, while the city celebrates with street parties (see p395).

Yarra Valley Grape Grazing (early Mar). Grape pressing, barrel races, good food and wine.

Begonia Festival (first two weeks), Ballarat. Begonia displays in the Botanical Gardens (see p425).

Moomba Festival (second week), Melbourne. International aquatic events on the Yarra River (see pp392–3), as well as cultural events throughout the city.

St Patrick's Day Parade (17 Mar or Sun before), Sydney. Pubs serve green beer and a flamboyant parade travels from Hyde Park.

APRIL

Melbourne International Comedy Festival (end Mar–early Apr). Comedy acts from around the world perform in theatres, pubs and outdoors.

Royal Easter Show (week preceding Good Fri) Sydney. Agricultural shows, funfair rides, local arts and crafts displays and team games.

International Surfing Competition (Easter weekend), Bells Beach. Pros and amateurs from all over the world take part in this premier competition (see p418).

WINTER

WINTER IN THE EAST can be cool enough to require warm jackets, and it is often icy in Victoria and Tasmania. Many festivals highlight the change of climate in celebration of freezing temperatures. Other events, such as film festivals, are arts-based and indoors. The warm rather than sweltering climate of the Outback in winter offers the opportunity for pleasurable outdoor events.

JUNE

Three-day Equestrian event (first weekend), Gawler. Spectacular riding skills are displayed at Australia's oldest equestrian event. Sydney Film Festival (two weeks mid-Jun). The latest blockbusters film releases are combined with retrospectives and showcases. Laura Dance & Cultural Festival (odd-numbered years), Cape York. Celebration of Aboriginal culture.

Darling Harbour Jazz Festival (mid-Jun), Sydney. Hugely popular festival featuring jazz bands.

JULY

Yulefest (throughout Jun, Jul, Aug), Blue Mountains. Hotels, guesthouses and some restaurants celebrate a mid-winter "traditional Christmas" with log fires and all the usual yuletide trimmings.

Brass Monkey Festival, (throughout Jul), Stanthorpe. Inland Queensland turns the freezing winter temperatures into an opportunity for celebration (see p232).

Alice Springs Show (first weekend). Agricultural and historical displays combined with arts, crafts and cookery demonstrations.

Cairns Show (mid-Jul). A cultural celebration of historical and contemporary life in the Australian tropics (see p246).

Melbourne International Film Festival (last week Jul–mid-Aug). The largest and most popular film festival.

The Climate of Australia

THIS VAST COUNTRY experiences a variable climate. Three-quarters of its land is desert or scrub and has low, unreliable rainfall. The huge, dry interior is hot year-round during the day but can be very cold at night. The southern half of Australia, including Tasmania, has warm summers and mild winters. Further north, seasonal variations lessen and the northern coast has just two seasons: the dry, and the wet, with its monsoon rains and occasional tropical cyclones.

THE HISTORY OF AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIA is a young nation in an ancient land. It is a nation of immigrants, past and present, forced and free. The first European settlers occupied a harsh country; they explored it, exploited its mineral wealth and farmed it. In so doing, they suffered at the hands of nature, as well as enduring depressions and wars. Out of all this, however, has emerged a modern and cosmopolitan society.

The first rocks of the Australian landscape began to form some four-and-a-half billion years ago. Over time many older rocks were covered by more recent rocks, but in places such as the Pilbara region of Western Australia erosion has exposed a landscape 3,500 million years old (see pp322–3). About 500 million years ago Australia, together with South America, South Africa, India and the Antarctic, formed a supercontinent known as Gondwanaland. This landmass moved through a series of different climatic zones; today's desert interior was once a shallow sea (see pp18–19).

food. The early tools, known today as core tools, were very simple chopping implements, roughly formed by grinding stone. By 8,000 BC Aborigines had developed the sophisticated returning boomerang (see p26) and possibly the world's first barbed spear. So-called flaked tools of varying styles were in use 5,000 years later, finely made out of grained stones such as flint to create sharp cutting edges.

Beneath the apparently simple way of life, Aboriginal society was complex. It was based on a network of mainly nomadic bands, comprising between 50 and 100 people, bound by kin relationships, who lived according to strictly applied laws and customs. These laws and beliefs, including the spiritual significance of the land, were upheld through a tradition of song, dance and art (see pp26–9). With no centralized or formal system of government, individual groups were led by prominent, generally older men, who were held in great respect. Across the continent there were more than 200 languages spoken and approximately 800 dialects. In many respects, Aboriginal life

Australia was first settled by Aboriginal people who arrived by sea from Asia more than 60,000 years ago. On landing, they quickly adapted to the climatic and geographical conditions. Nomadic hunters and gatherers, the Aborigines moved with the seasons and spread across the continent, reaching Tasmania 35,000 years ago. They had few material possessions beyond the tools and weapons required for hunting and obtaining was also very advanced: excavations at Lake Mungo provide fascinating evidence of ancient burial rituals, including what is believed to be the world's oldest cremation 25,000 years ago (see p173).

THEORIES OF A SOUTHERN LAND

In Europe, the existence of a southern land was the subject of debate for centuries. As early as the 5th century BC, with the European discovery of Australia some 2,000 years away, the mathematician Pythagoras speculated on the presence of southern lands necessary to counterbalance those in the northern hemisphere. In about AD 150, the ancient geographer Ptolemy of Alexandria continued this speculation by drawing a map showing a landmass enclosing the Atlantic and Indian oceans. Some scholars went so far as to suggest that it was inhabited by "antipodes", a race of men whose feet faced backwards. Religious scholar St Augustine (AD 354–430) declared categorically that the southern hemisphere contained no land; the contrary view was heretical. But not all men of religion agreed: the 1086 Osma Beatus, a series of maps illustrating the works of the monk Beatus, showed the hypothetical land as a populated region.

It was not until the 15th century, when Europe entered a golden age of exploration, that these theories were tested. Under the patronage of Prince Henry of Portugal (1394–1460), known as Henry the Navigator, Portuguese sailors crossed the equator for the first time in 1470. In 1488 they sailed around the southern tip of Africa, and by 1502 they claimed to have located a southern land while on a voyage to explore South America. The Italian navigator, Amerigo Vespucci, described it as Paradise, full of trees and colourful birds. The location of this land is not clear but it was definitely not Australia.

In 1519 another Portuguese expedition set off, under the command of Ferdinand Magellan, and was the first to circumnavigate the world. No drawings of the lands explored survive, but subsequent maps show Tierra del Fuego as the tip of a landmass south of the Americas. Between 1577 and 1580 the Englishman Sir Francis Drake also circumnavigated the world, but his maps indicate no such land. Meanwhile, maps prepared in Dieppe in France between 1540 and 1566 show a southern continent, Java la Grande, lying southeast of Indonesia.

East Indies (Indonesia), was the new power and responsible for the eventual European discovery of Australia.

Willem Jansz, captain of the ship Duyfken, was in search of New Guinea, a land thought to be rich in gold, when he sailed along the Cape York Peninsula in 1606. He found the coast inhospitable and left the area quickly. In 1616 Dirk Hartog, commanding the Eendracht, was blown off course on his way to the East Indies. He landed on an island off Western Australia and nailed a pewter plate to a pole (see p318).

Dutch navigator Abel Tasman charted large parts of Australia and New Zealand between 1642 and 1644, including Tasmania which he originally named Van Diemen's Land in honour of the Governor-General of the East Indies. The island eventually took Tasman's name in 1855.

The Dutch continued to explore the country for 150 years, but although their discoveries were of geographic interest they did not result in any economic benefit and they ceased exploring the land any further.

THE FIRST ENGLISHMAN

The first Englishman to land on Australian soil was the privateer and buccaneer William Dampier in 1688. Similarly unimpressed as his Dutch rivals with what he found, he nevertheless published a book of his journey, New Voyage Round the World, in 1697. Britain gave him command of the Roebuck, in which he explored the northwest Australian coast in great detail. His ship sank on the return voyage. The crew survived but Dampier was court martialled for the mistreatment of his subordinates.

THE FORGOTTEN SPANIARD

In 1606, the same year that Willem Jansz first set foot on Australian soil, Luis Vaez de Torres, a Spanish Admiral, led an expedition in search of "Terra Australia". He sailed through the strait which now bears his name between Australia and New Guinea (see p244). His discovery, however, was inexplicably ignored for 150 years. He sent news of his exploration to King Felipe III of Spain from the Philippines but died shortly after. Perhaps his early death meant that the news was not disseminated and the significance of his maps not realized.

The Colonization of Australia

Hat made from cabbage palm

BY THE MID-18TH CENTURY England had taken over as the world's main maritime power. In 1768 Captain James Cook set off to find Australia in the Endeavour and in 1770 King George III formally claimed possession of the east coast, named New South Wales. Overcrowding of jails and the loss of American colonies in the War of Independence led the English to establish a penal colony in the new land. The First Fleet, consisting of two men-of-war and nine transport ships, arrived in Sydney Cove in 1788. The initial settlement consisted of 750 convicts, approximately 210 marines and 40 women and children. Faced with great hardship, they survived in tents, eating local wildlife and rations from England.

England Takes Possession

In 1770 the Union Jack was raised on the east coast of Australia, and England finally claimed possession of this new-found land.

This idyllic image, drawn by Edward Dayes and engraved by F Jukes in 1804, shows the Aboriginal peoples living peacefully within the infant colony alongside the flourishing maritime and agricultural industries. In reality, by the end of the 18th century they had been entirely ostracized from the life and prosperity of their native land. The first settlement was founded at Port Jackson, renamed Sydney Cove.

EXPLORING THE COASTLINE

Once the survival of the first settlement was assured, both the government and the free settlers began to look beyond its confines. Faced with a vast, unknown continent and fuelled by desires for knowledge and wealth, they set out to explore the land. The 19th century was a period of exploration, discovery and settlement.

Between 1798 and 1799 the English midshipman Matthew Flinders and surgeon George Bass charted much of the Australian coastline south of Sydney. They also circumnavigated Tasmania, known at that time as Van Diemen's Land (see p45). In 1801 Flinders was given command of the sloop Investigator and explored the entire Australian coastline, becoming the first man to successfully circumnavigate the whole continent.

EXPLORING THE INTERIOR

Inland New South Wales was opened up for settlement in 1813, when George Blaxland, William Wentworth and William Lawson forged a successful route across the Blue Mountains (see pp162-5). In 1824 explorers Hamilton Hume and William Hovell opened up the continent further when they travelled overland from New South Wales to Port Phillip Bay, the present site of Melbourne.

Between 1828 and 1830 Charles Sturt, a former secretary to the New South Wales Governor, led two expeditions along Australia's inland river systems. On his first journey he discovered the Darling River. His second expedition began in Sydney and followed the Murray River to the sea in South Australia. This arduous task left Sturt, like many such explorers before and after him, suffering from ill health for the rest of his life.

NEW COLONIES

Individual colonies began to emerge across the continent throughout the 19th century. First settled in 1804, Tasmania became a separate colony in 1825; in 1829 Western Australia became a colony with the establishment of Perth. Originally a colony of free settlers, a labour shortage led to the westward transportation of convicts.

In 1835 a farmer, John Batman, signed a contract with local Aborigines to acquire 250,000 ha (600,000 acres) of land where Melbourne now stands (see p373). His action resulted in a rush for land in the area. The settlement was recognized in 1837, and the separate colony of Victoria was proclaimed in 1851, at the start of its gold rush (see pp50-51). Queensland became a separate colony in 1859.

South Australia was established in 1836 as Australia's only convict-free colony. Based on a theory formulated by a group of English reformers, the colony was funded by land sales which paid for public works and the transportation of free labourers. It became a haven for religious dissenters, a tradition that still continues today.

CROSSING THE CONTINENT

Edward John Eyre, a sheep farmer who arrived from England in 1833, was the first European to cross the Nullarbor Plain from Adelaide to Western Australia in 1840.

In 1859 the South Australian government, anxious to build an overland telegraph from Adelaide to the north coast, offered a reward to the first person to cross the continent from south to north. An expedition of 20 to 40 men and camels left Melbourne in 1860 under the command of police officer Robert O'Hara Burke and surveyor William Wills. Burke, Wills and two other men travelled from their base camp at Cooper Creek to the tidal mangroves of the Flinders River which they mistook

THE RUM REBELLION

In 1808, the military, under the command of Major George Johnston and John MacArthur (see p123), staged an insurrection known as the Rum Rebellion. At stake was the military's control of the profitable rum trade. Governor William Bligh (1754–1817), target of a mutiny when captain of the Bounty, was arrested after he tried to stop rum being used as currency. The military held power for 23 months until government was restored by Governor Lachlan Macquarie.

for the ocean, before heading back south. They returned to the base camp only hours after the main party, who now believed them dead, had left. Burke and Wills died at the base camp from starvation and fatigue.

The crossing from south to north was finally completed by John McDouall Stuart in 1862. He returned to Adelaide sick with scurvy and almost blind.

The 1850s Gold Rush

19th-century
gold decoration

GOLD WAS DISCOVERED near Bathurst in New South Wales and at Ballarat and Bendigo in Victoria in 1851. Established towns were almost deserted as men from all over the country, together with immigrants from Europe and China, rushed to the gold fields. Some became extremely wealthy, while others returned empty-handed. By the 1880s, Australia was a prosperous country and cities were lined with ornate architecture, some of which was constructed by the last waves of convict labour. Despite gold found in Western Australia in the 1890s, however, the final decade of the 19th century was a period of depression, when wool prices fell, Victoria's land boom collapsed and the nation suffered a severe drought.

Lamp

Gold Mining Utensils

Mining for gold was initially an unskilled and laborious process that required only a few basic utensils. A panning dish to swill water, a pick axe to loosen rock and a miner's lamp were all that were needed to commence the search.

Eureka Stockade

In 1854 an insurrection took place just outside the town of Ballarat when miners rebelled against costly licences and burned them at a stockade (see p424).

Edward Hargraves

In 1851 Hargraves made his name by discovering gold in Bathurst, New South Wales.

DIGGING FOR GOLD

Edwin Stocqueler's painting Australian Gold Diggings (1855) shows the varying methods of gold mining and the hard work put in by thousands of diggers in their quest for wealth. As men and their families came from all over the world to make their fortune, regions rich in gold, in particular Victoria, thrived. Previous wastelands were turned into tent settlements and gradually grew into impressive new cities.

Might versus Right (c.1861)

ST Gill's painting depicts the riots on the Lambing Flag gold fields in New South Wales in 1861. Chinese immigrants, who came to Australia in search of gold, were met with violent racism by European settlers who felt their wealth and position were in jeopardy.

Tent villages covered the Victoria landscape in the 1850s.

Gold panning was the most popular extraction method.

Prosperity in Bendigo

The buildings of Williamson Street in Bendigo (see p422) display the prosperity that resulted from gold finds in Victoria.

Chinese Miners' Medal

Racism against the Chinese eventually subsided. This medal was given by the Chinese to the district of Braidwood, Victoria, in 1881.

Miners wore hats and heavyweight trousers to protect them from the sun.

The sluice was a trough which trapped gold in its bars as water was flushed through.

Gold Prospecting Camel Team

Just as the gold finds dried up in Victoria, gold was discovered in Western Australia in the 1890s. Prospectors crossed the continent to continue their search.

Souvenir handkerchief of the Australian Federation

FEDERAL BEGINNINGS

Following the economic depression at the end of the 19th century, Australia entered the 20th century on an optimistic note: the federation of its six colonies formed the Australian nation on 1 January 1901. Within the federation, there was one matter on which almost everyone agreed: Australia would remain “European” with strong ties to Britain. One of the first acts of the new parliament was to legislate the White Australia Policy. The Immigration Restriction Act required anyone wishing to emigrate to Australia to pass a dictation test in a European language. Unwanted immigrants were tested in obscure languages such as Gaelic. Between 1901 and 1910 there were nine different governments led by five different prime ministers. None of the three major political groups, the Protectionists, the Free Traders and the Labor Party, had sufficient support to govern in its own right. By 1910, however, voters were offered a clear choice between two parties, Labor and Liberal. The Labor Party won a landslide victory and since then the Australian government has come solely from one of these two parties.

WORLD WAR I

When Britain entered World War I in 1914, Australia followed to defend the “mother land”. Most Australians supported the war, but they would not accept conscription or compulsory national service.

Enlisting poster

Australia paid a very high price for its allegiance, with 64 per cent of the 331,781 troops killed or wounded. Memorials to those who fought and died are found throughout the country, ranging from the simple to the impressive such as the Australian War Memorial in Canberra (see pp192–3). World War I was a defining moment in Australia’s history. Anzac Day, rather than Australia Day, is felt by many to be the true national day. It commemorates the landing of the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps at Gallipoli in Turkey on the 25th April 1915, for their unsuccessful attempt to cross the Dardanelles and link up with the Russians. This was the first battle in which Australian soldiers fought as a national force and, although a failure, they gained a reputation for bravery and endurance. It is an event which many believe determined the Australian character and saw the real birth of the Australian nation.

BETWEEN THE WARS

During the 1920s, Australia, boosted by the arrival of some 300,000 immigrants, entered a period of major development. In 1920 Qantas (Queensland and Northern Territory Aerial Service Ltd) was formed, which was to become the national airline, and made its first international flight in 1934. Building of the Sydney Harbour Bridge began in 1923 (see pp 76–7). Australia’s population reached 6 million in 1925, but this new optimism was not to last.

In 1929 Australia, along with much of the world, went into economic decline. Wool and wheat prices, the country’s major export earners, fell dramatically. By 1931, a third of the country was unemployed. People slept in tents in city parks; swagmen (workers with their possessions on their backs) appeared as men left cities in search of work in the country.

Prices began to increase again by 1933 and manufacturing revived. From 1934 to 1937 the economy improved and unemployment fell. The following year, however, Australia again faced the prospect of war.

WORLD WAR II

Though World War II was initially a European war, Australians again fought in defence of freedom and the “mother land”. However, when Japan entered the war, Australians felt for the first time that their national security was at risk. In 1942 Darwin, Broome and Townsville were bombed by the Japanese, the first act of war on Australian soil. The same year two Japanese midget submarines entered Sydney Harbour.

Britain asked for more Australian troops but for the first time they were refused: the men were needed in the Pacific. This was a major shift in Australian foreign policy away from Britain and towards the USA. Australians fought alongside the Americans in the Pacific and nearly 250,000 US troops spent time in Australia during the war. This led, in 1951, to the signing of Australia's first defence treaty with a foreign country: the ANZUS treaty between Australia, New Zealand and the United States.

Again, war affected most Australian communities and towns. Nearly one million of Australia's seven million population went to fight: 34,000 were killed and 180,000 wounded.

POSTWAR IMMIGRATION

The proximity of the fighting in World War II left Australia feeling vulnerable. The future defence of the country was seen to be dependent upon a strong economy and a larger population.

The postwar immigration programme welcomed not only British immigrants but also Europeans. Almost two million immigrants arrived in Australia in the 20 years following World War II, 800,000 of whom were not British. In 1956, the status of "permanent resident" allowed non-Europeans to claim citizenship. In 1958, the dictation entry test was abolished. Yet until 1966 non-Europeans had to have 15 years' residence before gaining citizenship, as opposed to five years for Europeans.

THE MENZIES ERA

From 1949 until 1966, Prime Minister Robert Menzies "reigned", winning eight consecutive elections. The increasing population and international demand for Australian raw materials during this time provided a high standard of living.

MABO AND BEYOND

In 1982, Edward Koiki (Eddie) Mabo, a Torres Strait Islander, took action against the Queensland government claiming that his people had ancestral land rights. After a ten-year battle, the High Court ruled that Aborigines and Torres Strait Islanders may hold native title to land where there has been no loss of traditional connection. This ended the concept of terra nullius – that Australia belonged to no one when Europeans arrived there – and acknowledged that Aborigines held valid title to their land. Subsequent legislation has provided a framework for assessing such claims.

Anti-Vietnam demonstrations as US President Johnson arrives in Australia

In 1972, the Labor Party, under Edward Gough Whitlam, was elected on a platform of social reform. It abolished conscription, introduced free university education, lowered the voting age from 21 to 18 and gave some land rights to Aborigines. In 1974, an immigration policy without any racial discrimination was adopted. At the same time, however, inflation was Menzies understood his people's desire for peace and prosperity, and gave Australians conservatism and stability. increasing and there was talk of economic mismanagement.

RETURN TO CONSERVATISM

In 1975, the Liberal leader Malcolm Fraser won the election. Subsequent governments, both Liberal under Fraser (1975–83) and Labor under Bob Hawke and Paul Keating (1983–96), were more concerned with economic rather than social agendas.

SOCIAL UNREST AND CHANGE

Opposition to conscription and the Vietnam War increased in the late 1960s and led to major demonstrations in the capital cities. At the same time there was concern for issues such as Aboriginal land rights and free education. In 1967, a constitutional referendum was passed by 90.8 per cent of the voters, ending the ban on Aboriginal inclusion in the national census. It also gave power to the federal government to legislate for Aborigines in all states, ending state discriminations.

Australia emulated most of the Western world with an economic boom in the 1980s, followed by recession in the 1990s. During this period Australia shifted its focus from Europe towards Asia and, by 1986, all legislative ties with Great Britain were broken.

Central Sydney

THIS GUIDE DIVIDES the centre of Sydney into four distinct areas, and the majority of the city's main sights are contained in these districts. The Rocks and Circular Quay are the oldest part of inner Sydney. The City Centre is the central business district, and to its west lies Darling Harbour, which includes Sydney's well-known Chinatown. The Botanic Gardens and The Domain form a green oasis almost in the heart of the city. To the east are Kings Cross and Darlinghurst, hub of the café culture, and Paddington, an area that still retains its charming 19th-century character.

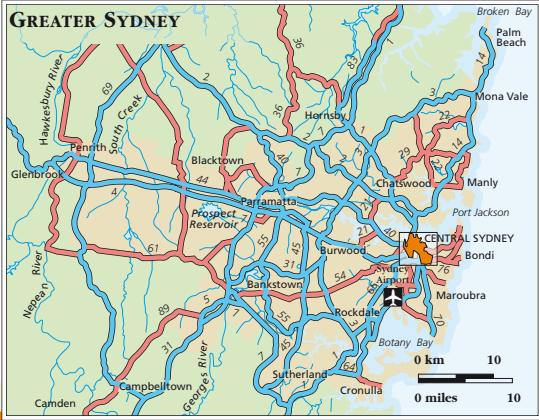

The Lord Nelson Hotel is a traditional pub in The Rocks (see p467) which first opened its doors in 1834. Its own specially brewed beers are available on tap.

Queen Victoria Building is a Romanesque former produce market, built in the 1890s. It forms part of a fine group of Victorian buildings in the City Centre (see p86). Now a shopping mall, it retains many of its original features, including its ornate roof statues.

The Art Gallery of New South Wales is the city's premier art gallery, set amid the parkland of the Botanic Gardens and The Domain district (see pp106–107). It houses an excellent collection of early and contemporary Australian, Aboriginal and European art.

Elizabeth Bay near Potts Point is a picturesque bay with fine views across Sydney Harbour. It is situated in the heart of colonial Sydney, at the northern end of the Kings Cross, Darlinghurst and Paddington area (see pp116–17).

Sydney's Best: Museums and Galleries

Bima figure,

Museum

SYDNEY IS WELL ENDOWED with museums and galleries, and, following the current appreciation of social history, much emphasis is placed on the lifestyles of past and present Sydneysiders. Small museums are also a feature of the Sydney scene, with a number of historic houses recalling the colonial days. Most of the major collections are housed in architecturally significant buildings – the Classical façade of the Art Gallery of NSW makes it a city landmark, while the MCA or Museum of Contemporary Art has given new life to a 1950s Art Deco-style building at Circular Quay.

The Museum of Sydney includes The Edge of the Trees, an interactive installation (see p88).

The Justice and Police Museum illustrates Sydney's early legal and criminal history. It includes some macabre relics of notorious crimes.

The Museum of Contemporary Art has an excellent Aboriginal art section, with works such as Mud Crabs by Tony Dhanyula Nyoka, a Ramifying artist (see p74).

The National Maritime Museum is the home port for HMB Endeavour, a replica of the vessel that charted Australia's east coast in 1770, with Captain Cook in command (see pp96–7).

The Powerhouse Museum, set in a former power station, uses both traditional and interactive displays to explore Australian innovations in science and technology (see pp98–9).

The Art Gallery of New South Wales includes colonial watercolours in its Australian collection, which, to avoid deterioration, are only shown for a few weeks each year. Charles Meere's Australian Beach Pattern (1940) is a recent work (see pp106–109).

Elizabeth Bay House is elegantly furnished to the 1840s period, when the Colonial Secretary Alexander Macleay briefly lived in the house that ultimately caused his bankruptcy (see p116).

The Hyde Park Barracks were originally built by convicts for their own incarceration. They were later home to poor female immigrants. Exhibits recall the daily life of these occupants (see p110).

The Australian Museum is Australia's largest natural history museum. Dinosaurs such as this large mammal or "megafauna" Diprotodon skeleton are a major attraction (see pp90–91).

The Sydney Jewish Museum documents the history of the city's Jewish community. Exhibits include reconstructed scenes, such as George Street in 1848, a Jewish business area (see p74).

Sydney's Best: Architecture

FOR SUCH A YOUNG CITY, Sydney possesses a great diversity of architectural styles. They range from the simplicity of Francis Greenway's Georgian buildings (see p161) to Jørn Utzon's Expressionist Sydney Opera House (see pp80–81). Practical colonial structures gave way to elaborate Victorian edifices such as Sydney Town Hall. The same passion for detail is seen in Paddington's terraces. Later, Federation warehouses and bungalows introduced a uniquely Australian style.

Contemporary architecture abounds in Sydney, including Governor Phillip Tower. The Museum of Sydney is at its base (see p88).

Colonial Georgian buildings include St James Church (see p111). Francis Greenway's design was adapted to suit the purposes of a church.

American Revivalism took up the 1890s vogue of arcades connecting many different streets. The Queen Victoria Building is a fine example (see p86).

Victorian architecture abounds in the city. Sydney Town Hall includes a metal ceiling, installed for fear that the organ would vibrate a plaster one loose (see p89).

Colonial convict structures were simple with shingled roofs, based on the English homes of the first settlers. Cadman's Cottage is an example of this style (see p74).

THE ROCKS AND CIRCULAR QUAY

CITY CENTRE & DARLING HARBOUR

Contemporary Expressionism's main emphasis is roof design and the silhouette. Innovations were made in sports stadiums and museums, such as the National Maritime Museum (see p96–7).

Interwar Architecture encapsulates the spirit of Art Deco, as seen in the Anzac Memorial in Hyde Park (see p89).

0 metres 500

Modern Expressionism

includes one of the world's greatest examples of 20th-century architecture. The construction of Jørn Utzon's Sydney Opera House began in 1959. Despite the architect's resignation in 1966, it was opened in 1973 (see pp80–81).

Early Colonial's first buildings, such as Hyde Park Barracks (see p110), were mainly built for the government.

Australian Regency was popular during the 1830s. The best-designed villas were the work of John Verge. The beautiful Elizabeth Bay House is considered his masterpiece (see p116).

BOTANIC GARDENS AND THE DOMAIN

Colonial military buildings were both functional and ornate. Victoria Barracks, designed by engineers, is a fine example of a Georgian military compound (see p120).

KINGS CROSS, DARLINGHURST & PADDINGTON

Victorian iron lace incorporated filigree of cast-iron in prefabricated patterns. Paddington's verandas are fine examples of this 1880s style (see pp118–19).

Colonial Grecian and Greek Revival were the most popular styles for public buildings designed during the 1820–50 period. The Darlinghurst Court House is a particularly fine example (see p117).

Sydney's Best: Parks and Reserves

Flannel flower

SYDNEY IS ALMOST completely surrounded by national parks and intact bushland. There are also a number of national parks and reserves within Greater Sydney itself. Here, the visitor can gain some idea of how the landscape looked before the arrival of European settlers. The city parks, too, are filled with plant and animal life. The more formal plantings of both native and exotic species are countered by the indigenous birds and animals that have adapted and made the urban environment their home.

One of the highlights of a trip to Sydney is the huge variety of birds to be seen, from large birds of prey such as sea eagles and kites, to the shyer species such as wrens and tiny finches.

Lane Cove National Park is an open eucalypt forest dotted with grass trees, as well as fine stands of blue gums and apple gums. The rosella, a type of parrot, is common in the area.

Garigal National Park is made up of rainforest and moist gullies, which provide shelter for superb lyrebirds and sugar gliders.

North Arm Walk

is covered in spring with grevilleas and flannel flowers blooming profusely.

Bicentennial Park is situated at Homebush Bay (see p139). The park features a mangrove habitat and attracts many water birds, including pelicans.

Hyde Park is situated on the edge of the city centre (see p89). The park provides a peaceful respite from the hectic streets. The native iris is just one of the plants found in the lush gardens. The sacred ibis, a water bird, is often seen.

Middle Head and Obelisk Bay are dotted with gun emplacements, tunnels and bunkers built in the 1870s to protect Sydney from invasion. The superb fairy wren lives here, and water dragons can at times be seen basking on rocks.

North Head is covered with coastal heathland, with banksias, tea trees and casuarinas dominating the cliff tops. On the leeward side, moist forest surrounds tiny, secluded barbour beaches.

Grotto Point's paths, winding through the bush to the lighthouse, are lined with bottlebrushes, grevilleas and flannel flowers.

Bradleys Head is a nesting place for the ringtail possum. Noisy flocks of rainbow lorikeets are also often in residence. The views across the barbour to Sydney are spectacular.

South Head contains unique plant species such as the sundew.

Nielsen Park is inhabited by the kookaburra, easily identified by its call, which sounds like laughter.

The Domain features palms and Moreton Bay figs. The Australian magpie, with its black and white plumage, is a frequent visitor (see p105).

Moore Park is filled with huge Moreton Bay figs which provide an urban habitat for the flying fox.

Centennial Park contains open expanses and groves of paperbark and eucalypt trees, bringing sulphur-crested cockatoos en masse. The brushtail possum is a shy creature that comes out at night (see p121).

Garden Island to Farm Cove

Waterlily in the Royal Botanic Gardens

SYDNEY'S VAST HARBOUR, also named Port Jackson after a Secretary in the British Admiralty who promptly changed his name, is a drowned river valley which was transformed over millions of years. Its intricate coastal geography of headlands and secluded bays can sometimes confound even lifelong residents. This waterway was the lifeblood of the early colony, with the maritime industry a vital source of wealth and supply. The legacies of recessions and booms can be viewed along the shoreline: a representation of a nation where an estimated 70 per cent of the population cling to the coastal cities, especially in the east.

The city skyline is a result of random development. The 1960s' destruction of architectural history was halted, and towers now stand amid Victorian buildings.

Two harbour beacons known as "wedding cakes" because of their three tiers, are solar powered and equipped with a fail-safe back-up service. There are around 350 buoys and beacons now in operation.

The barracks for the naval garrison date from 1888.

Sailing on the harbour is a pastime not exclusively reserved for the rich elite. Of the several hundred thousand pleasure boats registered, some are available for hire while others take out groups of inexperienced sailors.

Garden Island marks a 1940s construction project with 12 ha (30 acres) reclaimed from the harbour.

Mrs Macquaries Chair is a carved rock seat by Mrs Macquaries Road (see p104). In the early days of the colony this was the site of a fruit and vegetable garden which was farmed until 1805.

The Andrew (Boy) Charlton Pool is a favourite bathing spot for inner-city residents, and is named after the 16-year old who won an Olympic gold medal in 1924. It was erected in 1963 on the Domain Baths' site, which had a grandstand for 1,700.

Woolloomooloo Finger Wharf was a disembarkation point when most travellers arrived by sea.

Harry's Café de Wheels, a snack van, has been a Sydney culinary institution for more than 50 years. Photographs of celebrity customers are pinned to the van, attesting to its fame.

The Royal Botanic Gardens display both flowering and non-flowering plants. Here the first trees were planted by the new European colonists; some of these trees survive today (see pp102–103).

Farm Cove has long been a mooring place for visiting naval vessels. The land opposite, now the Botanic Gardens, has been continuously cultivated for over 200 years.

Sydney Cove to Walsh Bay

IT IS ESTIMATED that over 70 km (43 miles) of harbour foreshore have been lost as a result of the massive land reclamation projects carried out since the 1840s. That the 13 islands existing when the First Fleet arrived in 1788 have now been reduced to just eight is a startling indication of rapid and profound geographical transformation.

Detail from railing at Circular Quay

Redevelopments around the Circular Quay and Walsh Bay area from the 1980s have opened up the waterfront for public use and enjoyment, acknowledging it as the city's greatest natural asset. Sydney's environmental and architectural aspirations recognize the need to integrate city and harbour.

The Sydney Opera House was designed to take advantage of its spectacular setting. The roofs shine during the day and seem to glow at night. The building appears as a visionary landscape to the onlooker (see pp80–81).

Harbour cruises regularly depart from Circular Quay, taking visitors out and about both during the day and in the evening. They are an incomparable way to see the city and its waterways.

Government House, a Gothic Revival building, was home to the state's governors until 1996.

The Sydney Harbour Bridge was also known as the "Iron Lung" at the time of its construction. During the Great Depression it provided on-site work for approximately 1,400, while others worked in specialist workshops (see p76–7).

Conservatorium of Music

The Rocks, settled by convicts and troops in 1788, is one of Sydney's oldest neighbourhoods. Rich in heritage, many of its old sandstone buildings have been restored and house speciality and craft shops.

The Tank Stream, the colony's first water supply, now runs underground and spills into the quay.

LOCATOR MAP

Circular Quay, originally and more accurately known as Semi-Circular Quay, was the last and arguably greatest convict-built structure. Tank Stream mudflats were filled in to shape the quay, and sandstone from The Rocks formed the sea wall.

Cahill Expressway

The Wharf Theatre resides on a pier that took six years to build, mostly due to the diversion of labour and materials during World War I. The theatre was opened in 1984.

The wharves were completed in 1922.

Imports and exports to and from the city were stored in these wharves until 1977.

The wharves' design included a rat-proof sea wall around the port. This was an urgent response to the 1900 bubonic plague outbreak, attributed to rats on the wharves.

THE ROCKS AND CIRCULAR QUAY

CIRCULAR QUAY, once known as Semi-Circular Quay, is often referred to as the “birth-place of Australia”. It was here, in January 1788, that the First Fleet landed its human freight of convicts, soldiers and officials, and the new British colony of New South Wales was declared. Sydney Cove became a rallying point whenever a ship arrived bringing much-needed supplies from “home”. Crowds still gather here whenever there is a national or civic celebration. The Quay and The Rocks are focal points for New Year’s Eve festivities. Circular Quay was the setting for huge crowds when, in 1994, Sydney was awarded the year 2000 Olympic Games. The Rocks area offers visitors a taste of Sydney’s past, but it is a far cry from the time, less than 100 years ago, when most inhabitants lived in rat-infested slums, and gangs ruled its streets. Now scrubbed and polished, The Rocks forms part of the colourful promenade from the Sydney Harbour Bridge to the spectacular Sydney Opera House.

Governor Arthur Phillip

NAMED FOR THE RUGGED CLIFFS that were once its dominant feature, this area has played a vital role in Sydney's development. In 1788, the First Fleeters under Governor Phillip's command erected makeshift buildings here, with the convicts' hard labour used to establish more permanent structures in the form of rough-hewn streets. The Argyle Cut, a road carved through solid rock using just hammer and chisel, took 18 years to build, beginning in 1843. By 1900, The Rocks was overrun with disease; the street now known as Suez Canal was once Sewer's Canal. Today, the area is still rich in colonial history and colour.

THIS TERRACE of four brick and sandstone houses dating back to 1844 has a rare history of continuous domestic occupancy from the 1840s through to 1990. It is now a museum examining the living conditions of its former inhabitants. Rather than re-creating a single period, the museum retains the renovations carried out by different tenants.

Built for Edward and Mary Riley, who arrived from Ireland with their niece Susannah in 1838, these houses have basement kitchens and backyard outhouses. Piped water and sewerage were probably added by the mid-1850s.

The terrace escaped the wholesale demolitions that occurred after the outbreak of bubonic plague in 1900, as well as later clearings of land to make way for the Sydney Harbour Bridge (see pp 76–7) and the Cahill Expressway. In the 1970s it was saved once again when the Builders Labourers' Federation imposed a “green ban” on The Rocks, temporarily halting all redevelopment work which was destructive to cultural heritage.

BUILT IN 1816 as barracks for the crews of the governor's boats, this sandstone cottage is Sydney's oldest surviving dwelling and now serves as the information centre and shop for the Sydney Harbour National Park.

The cottage is named after John Cadman, a convict who was transported in 1798 for horse-stealing. By 1813, he was coxswain of a timber boat and later, coxswain of government craft. He was granted a full pardon and in 1827 he was made boat superintendent and moved to the four-room cottage that now bears his name.

Cadman married Elizabeth Mortimer in 1830, another convict who was sentenced to seven years' transportation for the theft of one hairbrush.

They lived in the cottage until 1846. Cadman's Cottage was built on the foreshore of Sydney Harbour. Now, as a result of successive land reclamations, it is set well back from the water's edge.

BBUILT IN 1864 as lodgings for visiting sailors, the building now houses The Sydney Visitors' Centre.

At the time it was built, the Sailors' Home was a welcome alternative to the many seedy inns and brothels in the area, saving sailors from the perils of "crimping". "Crimps" would tempt newly arrived men into bars providing much sought-after entertainment. While drunk, the sailors would be sold on to departing ships, wading miles out at sea and returning home in debt.

Sailors used the home until 1980. In 1994, it opened as a tourist information and tour-booking facility. On the third floor, a re-creation of a 19th-century sleeping cubicle gives visitors an impression of the spartan nature of the original sailors' accommodation.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, a prominent Scottish merchant in the early days of Sydney, purchased this land on Sydney Cove in 1799. In 1802 he began constructing a private wharf and storehouses in which to house the tea, sugar, spirits and cloth he imported from India. Campbell was the only merchant operating in Australia who managed to infiltrate the monopoly held by the British East India Company. The first five sandstone bays were built between 1839 and 1844. A further seven bays were built between 1854 and 1861. The full row of storehouses were finally completed in 1890, including a brick upper storey. Part of the old sea wall and 11 of the original stores are still standing. The pulleys that were used to raise cargo from the wharf can be seen near the top of the preserved buildings.

The area fell into disrepair during the first half of the 20th century. However, in the 1970s the Sydney Cove Redevelopment Authority finalized plans and began renovating the site. Today the bond stores contain a range of fine restaurants catering to all tastes, from contemporary Australian to Chinese and Italian. THIS PICTURESQUE old inn is especially welcoming in the winter, when its log fires are burning.

Built in 1844, this was a favourite drinking place for the nearby garrison's soldiers. Some sea captains were said to use the hotel to recruit. Patrons who drank too much were pushed into the cellars via a trapdoor. Tunnels then led to the wharves and on to waiting ships.

Sydney Harbour Bridge 7

Ceremonial scissors

COMPLETED IN 1932, the construction of the Sydney Harbour Bridge was an economic feat, given the depressed times, as well as an engineering triumph. Prior to this, the only links between the city centre on the south side of the harbour and the residential north side were by ferry or a circuitous 20-km (12-mile) road route which involved five bridge crossings. The single-span arch bridge, colloquially known as the “Coathanger”, took eight years to build, including the railway line. The bridge was manufactured in sections on the latter-day Luna Park site. Loans for the total cost of approximately 6.25 million old Australian pounds were eventually paid off in 1988.

The 1932 Opening

The ceremony was disrupted when zealous royalist Francis de Groot rode forward and cut the ribbon, in honour, he claimed, of King and Empire.

The deck, 59 m (194 ft) above sea level, was built from the centre.

The arch spans 503 m (1,650 ft) and supports the weight of the bridge deck.

BUILDING THE BRIDGE

Planted in solid sandstone, the foundations are 12 m (39 ft) deep. The arch was built in halves with steel cable restraints initially supporting each side. Once the two halves met, work began on the deck.

Anchoring tunnels are 36 m (118 ft) long and dug into rock at each end.

Support cables were slackened over a 12-day period, enabling the two halves to join.

The Bridge Design

The steel arch of the bridge supports the deck, with binges at either end bearing the bridge's full weight and spreading the load to the foundations. The binges allow the structure to move as the steel expands and contracts in response to wind and extreme temperatures.

BridgeClimb

Thousands of people have enjoyed the spectacular bridge-top views after a 3.5-hour guided tour up ladders, catwalks and finally the upper arch of the bridge.

Over 150,000 vehicles cross the bridge each day, about 15 times as many as in 1932.

Bridge Workers

The bridge was built by 1,400 workers, 16 of whom were killed in accidents during construction.

NORTH SHORE

Maintenance

Painting the bridge has become a metaphor for an endless task. Approximately 30,000 litres (6,593 gal) of paint are required for each coat, enough to cover an area equivalent to 60 soccer pitches.

The vertical hangers support the slanting crossbeams which, in turn, carry the deck.

FATHER OF THE BRIDGE

Chief engineer Dr John Bradfield shakes the hand of the driver of the first train to cross the bridge. Over a 20-year period, Bradfield supervised all aspects of the bridge's design and construction. At the opening ceremony, the highway linking the harbour's south side and northern suburbs was named in his honour.

Paying the Toll

The initial toll of sixpence helped pay off the construction loan. The toll is now used for maintenance and to pay for the 1992 Sydney Harbour Tunnel.

A FLAGPOLE ON THE MUDFLATS

The modest flagpole on Loftus Street, near Customs House, flies a flag, the Union Jack, on the spot where Australia's first ceremonial flag-raising took place. On 26 January 1788, Captain Arthur Phillip hoisted the flag to declare the foundation of the colony. A toast to the king was drunk and a musket volley fired. On this date each year, the country marks Australia Day with a national holiday (see p39). In 1788, the flagpole was on the edge of mudflats on Sydney Cove. Today, due to land reclamations, it is set back from the water's edge.

OFFICIALLY NAMED the Holy Trinity Church, this was dubbed the Garrison Church because it was the colony's first military church.

Henry Ginn designed the church and, in 1840, the foundation stone was laid. In 1855, it was enlarged to hold up to 600 people. Regimental plaques hanging along interior walls recall the church's military associations. A museum contains Australian military and historical items.

Other features to look out for are the brilliantly coloured east window and the carved red cedar pulpit.

The building began life in the 1850s as a time-ball tower. At 1pm daily, the ball on top of the tower dropped to signal the correct time. At the same time, a cannon was fired at Fort Denison. This custom continues today (see p104).

During the 1880s Sydney Observatory became known around the world when some of the first astronomical photographs of the southern sky were taken here. From 1890 to 1962 the observatory mapped some 750,000 stars as part of an international project that resulted in an atlas of the entire night sky.

GOVERNOR MACQUARIE created this park in 1810 on what was once the vegetable garden of the first Government House. The sandstone obelisk, designed by Francis Greenway (see p161), was erected in 1818 to mark the starting point for all roads in the colony. The gas lamps recall the fact that this was also the site of the city's first street lamp in 1826.

Also in this area are the remains of the bow anchor and cannon from HMS Sirius, flagship of the First Fleet. The statue of Thomas Mort, a successful 19th-century industrialist, is today a marshalling place for the city's somewhat kamikaze bicycle couriers.

Its recalls the bygone days when trading ships berthed at Circular Quay. The building stands near the mouth of Tank Stream, the fledgling colony's freshwater supply. Among its many fine features are tall veranda columns made out of polished granite, a finely sculpted coat of arms and an elaborate clock face, added in 1897, which features a pair of tridents and dolphins.

Customs House closed for major refurbishment in 2003 and it is planned to reopen early in 2005. Facilities include a City Library with a reading room and exhibition space, and an open lounge area with an international newspaper and magazine salon, internet access and bar. THE BUILDINGS housing this museum originally comprised the Water Police Court, designed by Edmund Blacket in 1856, the Water Police Station, designed by Alexander Dawson in 1858, and the Police Court, designed by James Barnet in 1885. Here the rough-and-tumble underworld of quayside crime, from the petty to the violent, was dealt swift and, at times, harsh justice. The museum exhibits illustrate that turbulent period, as they recreate legal and criminal history. Formalities of the late-Victorian legal proceedings can be easily imagined in the fully restored courtroom. Menacing implements from knuckledusters to bludgeons are displayed as the macabre relics of notorious crimes. Other interesting aspects of policing and the justice system are highlighted in special changing exhibitions. The charge room, austere remand cell, prison uniforms, prison artifacts and slideshow evoke powerful images of the penal code of the time.

Each plaque is dedicated to a particular writer, consisting of a personal quotation and a brief biographical note. Australian writers in the series include the novelists Miles Franklin and Peter Carey, poets Oodgeroo Noonuccal and Judith Wright (see pp30–31), humorists Bary Humphries and Clive James, and the influential feminist writer Germaine Greer. Among the international writers included who visited Sydney are Mark Twain, Charles Darwin and Joseph Conrad.

NO OTHER BUILDING ON EARTH looks like the Sydney Opera House. Popularly known as the “Opera House” long before the building was complete, it is, in fact, a complex of theatres and halls linked beneath its famous shells. Its birth was long and complicated. Many of the construction problems had not been faced before, resulting in an architectural adventure which lasted 14 years. An appeal fund was set up, eventually raising A$900,000, while the Opera House Lottery raised the balance of the A$102 million final cost. Today it is the city’s most popular tourist attraction, as well as one of the world’s busiest performing arts centres.

CITY CENTRE AND DARLING HARBOUR

GEORGE STREET, Australia's first thoroughfare, was originally lined with mud and wattle huts, but following the gold rush shops and banks came to dominate the area. The city's first skyscraper, Culwulla Chambers, was completed in 1913. Hyde Park, on the edge of the city centre, was once a racecourse, attracting gambling taverns to Elizabeth Street. Today it provides a peaceful oasis,

Mosaic floor detail, St Mary's Cathedral

while the city's commercial centre is an area of department stores and arcades. The country's industrial age began in Darling Harbour in 1815 with the opening of a steam mill, but later the area became rundown. In the 1980s, it was the site of the largest urban redevelopment project ever carried out in Australia. Today, Darling Harbour contains many fine museums.

GETTING THERE
Town Hall, Wynyard, Martin Place, St James' and Museum railway stations all serve the city centre. There are numerous regular buses along Elizabeth and George streets. The Monorail stops are at City Centre, Park Plaza, World Square, Harbour-side, Convention and Haymarket. Ferries run regularly to Darling Harbour wharf.

Street-by-Street: City Centre

ALTHOUGH CLOSELY RIVALLED by Melbourne, Sydney is the business and commercial capital of Australia. Vibrant by day, at night the streets are far less busy when office workers and shoppers have gone home. The comparatively small city centre of this sprawling metropolis seems to be almost jammed into a few city blocks.

Because Sydney grew in such a haphazard fashion, with many of today's streets following tracks from the harbour originally made by bullocks, there was no allowance for the expansion of the city into what has become a major international centre. A colourful night scene of cafés, restaurants and theatres is emerging, however, as more people return to the city centre to live.

FRENCH DESIGNER Pierre Cardin called the Queen Victoria Building “the most beautiful shopping centre in the world”. Yet this ornate Romanesque building, better known as the QVB, began life as the Sydney produce market. Completed to the design of City Architect George McRae in 1898, the dominant features are the central copper dome and the glass roof which lets in a flood of natural light.

The market closed at the end of World War I. By the 1950s, the building was threatened with demolition.

Refurbished at a cost of over A$75 million, the QVB re-opened in 1986 as a shopping gallery with more than 190 shops. A wishing well incorporates a stone from Blarney Castle, a sculpture of Islay, Queen Victoria’s dog and a statue of the queen herself.

Inside the QVB, suspended from the ceiling, is the Royal Clock. Designed in 1982 by Neil Glasser, it features part of Balmoral Castle above a copy of the four dials of Big Ben. Every hour, a fanfare is played with a parade depicting scenes from the lives of various English monarchs.

Its Baroque style is evident in the foyer, with its high ceiling, mosaic floor, marble columns and statues. The auditorium is lit by a 20,000-piece chandelier. The beautiful Wurlitzer organ (under repair) rises from below stage before performances. The theatre is now one of the city’s special events venues.

by English architect John Spencer, was the finest of all. Opened in April 1892, it was lit by natural light pouring through the glass roof and the chandeliers, each carrying 50 jets of gas as well as 50 lamps.

After a fire in 1976, the building was restored to its original splendour. Shopping, followed by a visit to the Old Sydney Coffee Shop near the Pitt Street entrance, is a delight.

THE HIGHEST OBSERVATION DECK in the southern Hemisphere, the Sydney Tower was conceived as part of the 1970s Centrepoint shopping centre, but was not completed until 1981. About one million people per year admire the stunning views. On the podium level, visitors can enjoy a multimedia journey around Australia in a series of virtual reality ports with SkyTour, and as from 2005, they will be able to venture outside the tower on a SkyWalk tour.

Observation Level

Views from Level 4 stretch north to Pittwater, Botany Bay to the south, west to the Blue Mountains, and along the harbour out to the open sea.

The turret's nine levels, with room to hold almost 1,000 people at a time, include two revolving restaurants, a coffee shop and the Observation Level.

The windows comprise three layers. The outer has a gold dust coating. The frame design prevents panes falling outwards.

Construction of Turret

The eight turret levels were erected on the roof of the base building, then hoisted up the shaft using hydraulic jacks.

The shaft is designed to withstand wind speeds expected only once in 500 years, as well as unprecedented earthquakes.

The stairs are two separate, fireproofed emergency escape routes. Each year in September or October Sydney's fittest race up the 1,474 stairs.

SITUATED AT THE BASE OF Governor Phillip Tower, the Museum of Sydney opened in 1995. The history of Sydney, from the 1788 arrival of the British colonists until the present, is recalled on the site of the first Government House. This was the home, office and seat of authority

ALTHOUGH CATHOLICS arrived with the First Fleet, the celebration of Mass was at first prohibited as it was feared priests would provoke civil strife among the colony's Irish Catholic population. It was not until 1820 that the first Catholic priests were officially appointed and services were permitted. In 1821, Governor Macquarie laid the foundation stone for St Mary's Chapel on the first land granted to the Catholic Church in Australia.

The initial section of this Gothic Revival-style cathedral

HYDE PARK was named after its London equivalent by Governor Macquarie in 1810. The fence around the park marked the outskirts of the township. Though much smaller today than the original park, it is still a quiet haven in the middle of the bustling city centre, with many notable features.

The 30-m (98-ft) high Art Deco Anzac Memorial commemorates Australians who have died for their country. Opened in 1934 it now includes a military exhibition downstairs.

Sandringham Garden, filled with mauve wisteria, is a memorial to kings George V and George VI, opened by Queen Elizabeth II in 1954.

The bronze and granite Archibald Fountain commemorates the French and Australian World War I alliance. It was completed by François Sicard in 1932 and donated by JF Archibald, one of the founders of the popular Bulletin literary magazine.

The Emden Gun, on the corner of College and Liverpool Streets, commemorates a World War I naval action. HMAS Sydney destroyed the German raider Emden off the Cocos Islands on 9 November 1914, and 180 crew members were taken prisoner.

Although Jews had arrived with the First Fleet, worship did not commence until the 1820s. With its carved porch columns and wrought-iron gates, the synagogue is perhaps the finest work of Thomas Rowe, architect of Sydney Hospital (see p109). Among the interior features is a panelled ceiling, decorated with tiny gold leaf stars.

THE STEPS of Sydney Town Hall have been a favourite meeting place since it opened in 1869. Walled burial grounds originally covered the site.

Grand organ in Centennial Hall

It is a fine example of High Victorian architecture, even though the plans of the original architect, JH Wilson, were beyond the builders' capabilities. A succession of designers was then brought in. The vestibule, an elegant salon with stained glass and a crystal chandelier, is the work of Albert Bond. The clock tower was completed by the Bradbridge brothers in 1884. From 1888–9, other architects designed Centennial Hall, with its imposing 19th-century Grand Organ with over 8,500 pipes.

Some people believe this became Sydney's finest building by accident, as each architect strove to outdo the other. Today, it makes a good venue for concerts, dances and balls.

WHILE THE foundation stone for the country's oldest cathedral was laid in 1819, the building was not consecrated until 1868. THE AUSTRALIAN MUSEUM, the nation's leading natural science museum, founded in 1827, was the first museum established and remains the premier showcase of Australian natural history. The main building, an impressive sandstone structure with a marble staircase, faces Hyde Park. Architect Mortimer Lewis was forced to resign his position when building costs began to far exceed the budget. Construction was completed in the 1860s by James Barnet. The collection provides a journey across Australia and the near Pacific, covering prehistory, biology, botany, environment and cultural heritage. Australian Aboriginal traditions are celebrated in a community access space also used for dance and other performances.

DARLING HARBOUR was New South Wales' bicentennial gift to itself. This imaginative urban redevelopment, close to the heart of Sydney, covers a 54-ha (133-acre) site that was once a busy industrial terminal catering for the developing local wool, grain, timber and coal trades. In 1984 the Darling Harbour Authority was formed to examine the area's commercial options. The resulting complex opened in 1988, complete with the National Maritime Museum and Sydney Aquarium, two of the city's tourist highlights. Free outdoor entertainment, appealing to children in particular, is a regular feature, and there are many shops, waterside cafés and restaurants, as well as several major hotels overlooking the bay.

Harbourside Complex offers restaurants and cafés with superb views over the water to the city skyline. There is also a wide range of speciality shops, selling unusual gifts and other items.

The Convention and Exhibition Centre complex presents an alternating range of international and local trade shows displaying everything from home decorating suggestions to bridal wear.

The Tidal Cascades sunken fountain was designed by Robert Woodward, also responsible for the El Alamein Fountain (see p116). The double spiral of water and paths replicates the circular shape of the Convention Centre.

THE HAYMARKET DISTRICT, near Chinatown, is home to Paddy's Markets, Sydney's oldest and best-known market.

It has been in this area, on a number of sites, since 1869 (with only one five-year absence). The origin of the name is uncertain, but is believed to have come from either the Chinese who originally supplied much of its produce, or the Irish who were among their main customers.

Once the shopping centre for the inner-city poor, Paddy's Markets is now an integral part of the Market City Shopping Centre, which includes cut-price fashion outlet stores, an Asian food court and a cinema complex.

Yet despite this transformation, the familiar clamour, smells and chaotic bargain-hunting atmosphere of the original marketplace remain. Every weekend the market is filled with up to 800 stalls selling everything from fresh produce to electrical products, homewares, leather goods, and pets, including rabbits, puppies and chickens.

📍 Haymarket.

ORIGINALLY concentrated around Dixon and Hay streets, Chinatown is now expanding to fill Sydney's Haymarket area, stretching as far west as Harris Street, south to Broadway and east to Castlereagh Street. It is close to the Sydney Entertainment Centre, where some of the world's best-known rock and pop stars perform in concert and many indoor sporting events are held (see p134).

For years, Chinatown was little more than a run-down district at the edge of the city's produce markets, where many Chinese immigrants worked at traditional businesses. Today, Dixon Street, its main thoroughfare, has been spruced up to equal many of the other popular Chinatowns around the world. There are authentic-looking street lanterns and archways, and a new wave of Asian immigrants fills the now up-market restaurants.

Chinatown is a distinctive area and now home to a new wave of Sydney's Asian population. There are excellent greengrocers, traditional herbalists and butchers' shops with wind-dried ducks hanging in their windows. Asian jewellers, clothes shops and confectioners fill the arcades. There are also two Chinese-language cinema complexes, screening the increasingly popular new Chinese films.

BOTANIC GARDENS AND THE DOMAIN

THIS TRANQUIL PART of Sydney can seem a world away from the bustle of the city centre. It is rich in the remnants of Sydney's convict and colonial past: the site of the first farm and the boulevard-like Macquarie Street where the barracks, hospital, church and mint – bastions of civic power – are among the oldest surviving public buildings in Australia. This street continues to assert its dominance today as the location of the state government of New South Wales.

The Domain, an open, grassy space, was originally set aside by the colony's first governor for his private use. Today it is filled with joggers and touch footballers sidestepping picnickers and sun-bathers. In January, during the Festival of Sydney, it hosts outdoor concerts. The Royal Botanic Gardens, which with The Domain was the site of Australia's first park, is a haven where visitors can stroll around and enjoy the extensive collection of native and exotic flora.

THE ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, a 30-ha (75-acre) oasis in the heart of the city, occupy a superb position, wrapped around Farm Cove at the harbour's edge. Established in 1816 as a series of pathways through shrubbery, they are the oldest scientific institution in the country and house an outstanding collection of plants from Australia and overseas. A living museum, the gardens are also the site of the first farm in the fledgling colony. Fountains, statues and monuments are today scattered throughout. Plant specimens collected by Joseph Banks on Captain James Cook's epic voyage along the east coast of Australia in 1770 are displayed in the National Herbarium of New South Wales, an important centre for research on Australian plants.

WHEN IT WAS finished in 1821, this striking castellated Colonial Gothic building was meant to be the stables and servants' quarters for Government House, but construction of the latter was delayed for almost 25 years. That stables should be built in so grand a style, and at such great cost, brought forth cries of outrage and led to bitter arguments between the architect, Francis Greenway (see p161), and Governor Macquarie – and a decree that all future building plans be submitted to London.

Between 1908 and 1915 “Greenway’s folly” underwent a dramatic transformation. A concert hall, roofed in grey slate, was built on the central courtyard and the building in its entirety was converted for the use of the new Sydney Conservatorium of Music.

Recently added facilities include a café, which holds lunchtime concerts during the school term and an upper level with great harbour views. “The Con” continues to be a training ground for future musicians and a great place to visit.

FIRST NAMED Rock Island, this prominent, rocky outcrop in Sydney Harbour was also dubbed “Pinchgut”. This was probably because of the meagre rations given to convicts who were confined there as punishment. It had a grim history of incarceration in the early years of the colony.

In 1796, the convicted murderer Francis Morgan was hanged on the island in chains.

His body was left to rot on the gallows for three years as a warning to the other convicts.

Between 1855 and 1857, the Martello tower (the only one in Australia), gun battery and barracks that now occupy the island were built as part of Sydney’s defences. The site was renamed after the governor of the time. The gun, still fired at 1pm each day, helped mariners to set their ships’ chronometers accurately.

Today the island is the perfect setting for watching the many harbour activities, such as the New Year fireworks displays (see p37). To explore Fort Denison, book one of the daily boat tours that leave from Circular Quay.

Once the governor's private park, this extensive space is now public and has long been a rallying point for crowds of Sydneysiders whenever emotive issues of public importance have arisen. These have included the attempt in 1916 to introduce military conscription and the sudden dismissal of the elected federal government by the then governor-general in 1975.

From the 1890s, part of The Domain was also used as the Sydney version of "Speakers' Corner". Today, you are more likely to see joggers or office workers playing touch football in their lunch hours, or simply enjoying the shade.

On the vestibule floor is a mosaic replica of an old map illustrating the two voyages made to Australia by Dutch navigator Abel Tasman in the 1640s (see p45). THE CENTRAL SECTION of this building, which houses the State Parliament, is part of the original Sydney Hospital built from 1811–16 (see p109). It has been a seat of government since the 1820s when the newly appointed Legislative Council first held meetings here. The building was extended twice during the 19th century and again during the 1970s and 1980s. The current building contains the chambers for both houses of state parliament, as well as parliamentary offices.

Parliamentary memorabilia is on view in the Jubilee Room, as are displays showing Parliament House's development and the legislative history of the state.

The corrugated iron building with a cast-iron façade tacked on at the southern end was a prefabricated kit from England. In 1856, this dismantled kit became the cham-

ALTHOUGH LOCAL WORKS had been collected since 1875, the gallery did not seriously begin seeking Australian and non-British art until the 1920s, and not until the 1940s did it begin acquiring Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander paintings. These contrasting collections are now its greatest strength. The gallery also stages major temporary exhibitions regularly, with the annual Archibald, Wynne and Sulman prizes being among the most controversial and highly entertaining.

The old wing also holds paintings from the Heidelberg school of Australian Impressionism (see p30). is Margaret Preston at her most assertive during the 1920s. Sidney Nolan's works range from Boy in Township (1943) to Burke (c.1962), exploiting myths of early Australian history. There are also fine holdings of William Dobell, Russell Drysdale, Arthur Boyd, Grace Cossington Smith and Brett Whiteley (see p30).

The Yiribana Gallery exhibits Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander works. The ability of contemporary artists to apply traditional styles to new media forms while retaining "Aboriginality" is repeatedly demonstrated.

Significant early purchases were natural pigment paintings on bark and card, often containing a figurative motif of everyday life. The bark painting Three Mimis Dancing (1964) by Samuel Wagbara examines themes of ancestral spirits and the creation cycles. Pukumani Grave Posts Melville Island (1958) is a ceremonial work dealing with death. Emily Kame Kngwarreye honours the land from which she comes with very intricate dot paintings, created using new tools and technology.

EUROPEAN ART

THE EUROPEAN collection ranges from medieval to modern. British art from the 19th and 20th centuries forms a large component, including artists such as Francis Bacon.

Henry Moore's Reclining Figure: Angles (1980)

Among the Old Masters are significant Italian works. Neo-Classical works are also held. Chaucer at the Court of Edward III (1845–51) by Ford Madox Brown is a fine Pre-Raphaelite work.

The Impressionists and Post-Impressionists are represented by Pissarro and Monet. Nude in a Rocking Chair (1956) by Picasso, was bought in 1981. Among the sculptures is Henry Moore's Reclining Figure: Angles (1980).

PHOTOGRAPHY

AUSTRALIAN photography from 1975 to the present day is represented in all its various forms. Recently, however, the emphasis has been on building up a body of 19th-century Australian work. Nearly 3,000 prints constitute this collection with pieces by Charles Kerry, Charles Bayliss and Harold Cazneaux, a major figure of early 20th-century Pictorialism.

Such international photographers as Muybridge, Robert Mapplethorpe and Man Ray are also represented here.

ASIAN ART

THIS COLLECTION is one of the finest in Australia. Chinese art is represented from the pre-Shang dynasty (c.1600–1027 BC) to the 20th century. The Ming porcelains, earthenware funerary pieces (mingqi) and the sculptures deserve close attention.

The Japanese collection has fine examples by major artists of the Edo period (1615–1867). The Southeast Asian and Indian art consists of lacquer, ceramics and sculptures.

PRINTS AND DRAWINGS

THIS COLLECTION represents the European tradition from the High Renaissance to the 19th and 20th centuries, with work by Rembrandt, Constable, William Blake, Edward Munch and Egon Schiele. A strong bias towards Sydney artists of the past 100 years has resulted in an exceptional gathering of work by Thea Proctor, Norman and Lionel Lindsay and Lloyd Rees.

Egon Schiele's Poster for the Vienna Secession (1918)

CONTEMPORARY ART

THE CONTEMPORARY ART collection highlights the themes that have been central to art practice since the 1970s. Works by Australian artists such as Imants Tillers, Ken Unsworth and Susan Norrie are on display alongside pieces by international artists such as Cindy Sherman, Yves Klein and Philip Guston.

THIS IMPOSING collection of Victorian sandstone buildings stands on the site of what was once the central section of the original convict-built Sydney Hospital. It was known locally as the Rum Hospital because the builders were paid by being allowed to import rum for resale. Both the north and south wings of the Rum Hospital survive as Parliament House (see p105) and the Sydney Mint. The central wing was demolished in 1879 and the new hospital, which is still operational, was completed in 1894.

The Classical Revival building boasts a Baroque staircase and elegant stained-glass windows in its central hall. Florence Nightingale approved the design of the 1868 nurses' wing. In the inner courtyard, there is a brightly coloured Art Deco fountain (1907), somewhat out of place among the surrounding heavy stonework.

At the front of the hospital sits a bronze boar called Il Porcellino. It is a replica of a 17th-century fountain in Florence's Mercato Nuovo. Donated in 1968 by an Italian woman whose relatives had worked at the hospital, the statue is an enduring symbol of the friendship between Italy and Australia. Like his Florentine counterpart, Il Porcellino is supposed to bring good luck to all those who rub his snout. Coins tossed in the pool at his feet for luck and fortune are collected for the hospital.

THE GOLD RUSHES of the mid-19th century transformed colonial Australia (see pp50–51). The Sydney Mint opened in 1854 in the south wing of the Rum Hospital in order to turn recently discovered gold into bullion and currency.

This was the first branch of the Royal Mint to be established outside London, but it was closed in 1927 as it was no longer competitive with the mints in Melbourne (see p379) and Perth (see p297). The Georgian building then went into decline after it was converted into government offices. The Mint's artefacts are now housed in the Powerhouse Museum (see pp98–9). The head office of the Historic Houses Trust of NSW is now located here and you can look through the front part of the building. There is also a small historical display near the entrance.

DESCRIBED BY Governor Macquarie as “spacious” and “well-aired”, the beautifully proportioned barracks are the work of Francis Greenway and are considered his masterpiece (see p161). They were completed in 1819 by convict labour and designed to house 600 convicts. Until that time convicts had been forced to find their own lodgings after their day’s work. Subsequently, the building then housed, in turn, young Irish orphans and single female immigrants, before it later became courts and legal offices. Refurbished in 1990, the barracks reopened as a museum on the history of the site and its occupants. The displays include a room reconstructed as convict quarters of the 1820s, as well as pictures, models and artifacts. Many of the objects recovered during archaeological digs at the site and now on display survived because they had been dragged away by rats to their nests; today the rodents are acknowledged as valuable agents of preservation.

The Greenway Gallery on the first floor holds varied exhibitions on history and culture. Elsewhere, the Barracks Café, which incorporates the original cell area, offers views of the courtyard, today cool and attractive but in the past the scene of brutal convict floggings.

MACQUARIE STREET

Described in the 1860s as one of the gloomiest streets in Sydney, this could now claim to be the most elegant. Open to the harbour breezes and the greenery of The Domain, a stroll down this tree-lined street is a pleasant way to view the architectural heritage of Sydney.

THIS FINE Georgian building, constructed with convict-made bricks, was designed as a courthouse in 1819. The architect, Francis Greenway, had to convert it into a church in 1820, when plans to build a cathedral on George Street were abandoned. Greenway designed a simple yet elegant church. Consecrated in 1824, it is the city's oldest church. Many additions were carried out, including designs by John Verge in which the pulpit faced the high-rent pews, while convicts and the military sat directly behind the preacher where the service was inaudible. A Children's Chapel was added in 1930. Prominent members of early 19th-century society, many of whom died violently, are honoured with marble tablets. These tell the stories of luckless explorers, the governor's wife dashed to her death from her carriage, and shipwreck victims.

KINGS CROSS, DARLINGHURST AND PADDINGTON

SYDNEY'S KINGS CROSS and Darlinghurst districts are still remembered for their 1920s gangland associations. However, both areas are now cosmopolitan and densely populated parts of the city. Kings Cross has a thriving café society, in spite of the nearby red light district. Darlinghurst comes into its own every March, during the flamboyant Gay and Lesbian Mardi Gras parade. The Victorian terraces of Paddington are still admired for their wrought-iron "lace" verandas. Paddington is also famed for its fine restaurants, galleries and antiques shops. On Saturdays, people flock to the Paddington Bazaar, spilling out into the pubs and cafés of the surrounding area.

THE SUBSTANTIAL VICTORIAN houses filling the streets of this old suburb are excellent examples of the 19th-century concern with architectural harmony. New building projects were designed to enhance rather than contradict the surrounding buildings and general streetscape. Monumental structures and fine details of moulded stuccoed parapets, cornices and friezes, even the spandrels in herringbone pattern, are all integral parts of a grand suburban plan. (This plan included an 1831 order that all houses cost at least £1,000.) Cool, dark verandas extend the street's green canopy of shade, leaving an impression of cold drinks enjoyed on summer days in fine Victorian style.

These villas, from the Georgian and Victorian eras, can be broadly labelled as Classical Revival and are fronted by leafy gardens.

From 1972–4, residents of this historic street fought a sometimes violent battle against developers wanting to build high-rise towers, motels and blocks of flats 2

El Alamein Fountain ①

Fitzroy Gardens, Macleay St, Potts Point. Map 2 E5. 311.

THIS DANDELION of a fountain in the heart of the Kings Cross district has a reputation for working so spasmodically that passers-by often murmur facetiously, "He loves me, he loves me not." Built in 1961, it commemorates the Australian army's role in the siege of Tobruk, Libya, and the battle of El Alamein in Egypt during World War II. At night, when it is brilliantly lit, the fountain looks surprisingly ethereal.

AT THE POTTS POINT end, this street of 19th-century terrace houses, interspersed with a few incongruous-looking high-rise blocks, is, by inner-city standards, almost a boulevard. The gracious street you see today was once at the centre of a bitterly fought conservation struggle, one which almost certainly cost the life of a prominent heritage campaigner.

In the early 1970s, many residents, backed by the "green bans" put in place by the Builders' Labourers Federation of New South Wales, fought to prevent demolition of old buildings for high-rise development. Juanita Nielsen, heiress and publisher of a local newspaper, vigorously took up the conservation battle. On 4 July 1975, she disappeared without trace. An inquest into her disappearance returned an open verdict.

As a result of the actions of the union and residents, most of Victoria Street's superb old buildings still stand. Ironically, they are now occupied not by the low-income residents who fought to save them, but by the well-off professionals who eventually displaced them.

ELIZABETH BAY HOUSE contains the finest colonial interior on display in Australia. It is a potent expression of how the depression of the 1840s cut short the 1830s' prosperous optimism. Designed in Greek Revival style by John Verge, it was built for Colonial Secretary Alexander Macleay, from 1835–39. The oval saloon with its dome and cantilevered staircase is recognized as Verge's masterpiece. The exterior is less satisfactory, as the intended colon-nade and portico were not finished owing to a crisis in Macleay's financial affairs. The present portico dates from 1893. The interior is furnished to reflect Macleay's occupancy from 1839–45, and is based on inventories drawn up in 1845 for the transfer of the house and contents to his son, William Sharp. He took the house in return for paying off his father's debts, leading to a rift that was never resolved.

Macleay's original 22-ha (55-acre) land grant was subdivided for flats and villas from the 1880s to 1927. In the 1940s, the house itself was divided into 15 flats. In 1942, the artist Donald Friend saw the ferry Kuttubul hit by a torpedo from a Japanese midget submarine from his flat's balcony.

The house was restored and opened as a museum in 1977. It is a property of the Historic Houses Trust of NSW.

ORIGINALLY KNOWN as the Woolloomooloo Stockade and later as Darlinghurst Gaol, this complex is now part of the Sydney Institute of Technology. It was constructed over a 20-year period from 1822.

Surrounded by walls almost 7 m (23 ft) high, the cell blocks radiate from a central round-house. The jail is built of stone quarried on the site by convicts which was then chiselled by them into blocks.

No fewer than 67 people were executed here between 1841 and 1908. Perhaps the most notorious hangman was Alexander "The Strangler" Green, after whom Green Park, outside the jail, is thought to have been named. Green lived near the park until public hostility forced him to live in relative safety inside the jail.

PADDINGTON BEGAN TO FLOURISH in the 1840s, when the decision was made to build the Victoria Barracks. At the time much of it was “the most wild looking place . . . barren sand-hills with patches of scrub, hills and hollows galore.” The area began to fill rapidly, as owner builders bought into the area and built rows of terrace houses, many very narrow because of the lack of building regulations. After the Depression, most of the district was threatened with demolition, but was saved and restored by the large influx of postwar migrants.

Duxford Street's terrace houses in toning pale shades constitute an ideal of town planning: the Victorians preferred houses in a row to have a pleasingly uniform aspect.

“Gingerbread” houses can be seen in Broughton and Union streets. With their steeply pitched gables and fretwork bargeboards, they are typical of the rustic Gothic Picturesque architectural style.

PADDINGTON began its life as a working-class suburb of Sydney. The community mainly consisted of the carpenters, quarrymen and stonemasons who supervised the convict gangs that built the Victoria Barracks in the 1840s.

The 19th-century artisans and their families occupied a tight huddle of spartan houses crowded into the area's narrow streets. A few of these houses still remain. Like the barracks, these dwellings and surrounding shops and hotels were built of locally quarried stone.

The terraces of Paddington Village are now a popular address with young, up-and-coming Sydneysiders.

VICTORIA BARRACKS are the largest and best-preserved group of late Georgian architecture in Australia, covering almost 12 ha (30 acres). They are widely considered to be one of the best examples of a military barracks in the world.

Designed by the colonial engineer Lieutenant Colonel George Barney, the barracks were built between 1841 and 1848 using local sandstone that were quarried by convict labour. The barracks were originally intended to house 800 men, and they have been in continuous use ever since and still operate as a centre of military administration.

The main block is 225 m (740 ft) long and has symmetrical two-storey wings with cast-iron verandas flanking a central archway. The perimeter walls have foundations 10 m (40 ft) deep in places. A former gaol block now houses a museum tracing New South Wales' military heritage.

Paddington grew rapidly as a commuter suburb in the late 19th century and most of the terraces were built for renting to Sydney's artisans. They were decorated with iron lace, Grecian-style friezes, worked parapets and cornices, pilasters and scrolls.

By the 1900s, the terraces became unfashionable and people moved out to newly emerging "garden suburbs". In the 1960s, however, their architectural appeal came to be appreciated again and the area was reborn.

Paddington Street now has a chic atmosphere where small art galleries operate out of quaint and grand shopfronts.

ENTERING THIS 220-ha (544-acre) park through one of its sandstone and wrought-iron gates, the visitor may wonder how such an extensive and idyllic place has survived so close to the centre of the city. Formerly a common, Centennial Park was dedicated "to the enjoyment of the people of New South Wales forever" on 26 January 1888, the centenary of the foundation of the colony. On 1 January 1901, 100,000 people gathered here to witness the Commonwealth of Australia come into being, when the first Australian federal ministry was sworn in by the first governor-general (see p52).

The park boasts landscaped lawns and rose gardens as well as ornamental ponds, an Avenue of Palms with 400 trees, and a playing field. Once the source of the city's water supply, the swamps are home to many species of waterbirds. Picnickers, painters, runners as well as those on horseback, bikes and in-line skates (all of which can be hired nearby) make enthusiastic and regular use of this vast recreation area, which is located so close to the city's centre. THERE IS A VIBRANT atmosphere at Fox Studios, which is located next door to the working studios that produced some very famous movies, such as The Matrix and Moulin Rouge.

There are 16 cinema screens where you can watch the latest movies, and at the La Premiere cinema you can enjoy your movie with wine and cheese, sitting on comfortable sofas. There are four live-entertainment venues which regularly feature the latest local and international acts. You can also enjoy a game of miniature golf, bungee trampolining, bowling or seasonal ice-skating, and children love the play areas. There are many restaurants, cafés and bars offering a range of snacks, meals and drinks.

Every Wednesday you can sample fresh produce at the Farmers Market – many of the stalls offer free tastings – from pickled garlic to chilli sauce.

The weekend market is a merchandise market and there are many hand-made items as well as food. There is also an International Food Market on Friday evenings until 9pm. Shops are open until late every day, and there is a good selection of fashion, books and homewares. There is plenty of undercover parking and the Studios are a pleasant stroll from the Paddington end of Oxford Street.

BYOND SYDNEY'S INNER CITY, numerous places vie for the visitor's attention. Around the harbour shores are picturesque suburbs, secluded beaches and historic sights. To the north is the beautiful landscape of Ku-ring-gai Chase National Park. Manly is the city's northern playground, while Bondi is its eastern counterpart. Further west at Parramatta there are sites that recall and evoke the first days of European settlement.

KU-RING-GAI CHASE National Park lies on Sydney's northernmost outskirts, 30 km (19 miles) from the city, and covers 15,000 ha (37,000 acres). It is bounded to the north by Broken Bay, at the mouth of the Hawkesbury River, with its eroded valleys formed during the last Ice Age. Sparkling waterways and golden beaches are set against the backdrop of the national park. Picnicking, bushwalking, surfing, boating and windsurfing are popular pastimes with visitors.

The Hawkesbury River curls around an ancient sandstone landscape rich in Aboriginal rock art. The national park has literally hundreds of Aboriginal art sites, the most common being rock engravings thought to be 2,000 years old. They include whales up to 8 m (26 ft) long, sharks, wallabies and echidnas, as well as ancestral spirits.

To the right of the rejuvenated Manly wharf are shops, restaurants and bars on the adjacent pier and, on the left, the tranquil harbourside beach known as Manly Cove. Oceanworld is at the far end of Manly Cove, where visitors can see sharks, giant stingrays and other species in an underwater viewing tunnel. You can also dive with the sharks here if you are brave enough.

But the beach life that once defined many Australians has declined in recent times, partly due to an awareness of the dangers of sun exposure.

People now seek out Bondi for its trendy seafront cafés and cosmopolitan milieu as much as for the beach. The pavilion, built in 1928 as changing rooms, is now a busy venue for festivals, plays, films and arts and crafts displays.

THE FERTILE SOIL of this Sydney suburb resulted in its foundation as Australia's first rural settlement, celebrating its first wheat crop in 1789. The area is now an excellent place to visit to gain an insight into the city's early European history.

Elizabeth Farm, dating from 1793, is the oldest surviving home in Australia. Once the home of John Macarthur, it was also the first farm to breed merino sheep, so vital to the country's economy (see p47). With its period furnishings from 1820–50, the house is now a museum evoking the first inhabitants' life and times.

Old Government House in Parramatta Park is the oldest intact public building in Australia, built in 1799. The Doric porch, added in 1816, has been attributed to Francis Greenway (see p161). A collection of early 19th-century furniture is housed inside the National Trust building.

Sydney's early history can also be witnessed at St John's Cemetery, where many of the settlers who arrived on the First Fleet (see p46) are buried.

GETTING AROUND SYDNEY

IN GENERAL, the best way to see Sydney's many sights and attractions is on foot, coupled with use of the public transport system. Buses and trains will take visitors to within easy walking distance of anywhere in the inner city. They also serve the suburbs and outlying areas. Passenger ferries provide a fast and scenic means of travel between the city and the many harbourside suburbs. Of the many composite and multi-ride tickets available, most visitors will find it best to invest in one that includes all three modes of public transport.

Sydney taxi company sign

DRIVING IN SYDNEY

DRIVING IS NOT the ideal way to get around Sydney: the city road network is confusing, traffic is congested and parking can be expensive. If using a car, it is best to avoid the peak hours (about 7:30–9:30am and 5–7:30pm).

Overseas visitors can use their usual driving licences to drive in Sydney, but must have proof that they are simply visiting and keep the licence with them when driving.

Parking in Sydney is strictly regulated, with fines for any infringements. Vehicles can be towed away if parked illegally. Contact the Transport Management Centre if this happens. There are many car parks in and around the city. Also look for blue and white "P" signs or metered parking zones, many of which apply seven days a week, but it varies from council to council.

TAXIS

TAXIS ARE plentiful in the city: there are many taxi ranks and taxis are often found outside the large city hotels.

Meters indicate the fare plus any extras, such as booking fees and waiting time. It is customary to round the fare up to the next dollar.

Sydney has a fleet of taxis that cater to disabled passengers, including those in wheelchairs. Book these with any major taxi company.

Cycling in Centennial Park

SYDNEY BY BICYCLE

WHILE CYCLING is permitted on all city and suburban roads, visitors are advised to stay within designated cycling tracks or areas with light motor traffic. Centennial Park is a popular cycling spot. Helmets are compulsory by law. Those who wish to take advantage of Sydney's undulating terrain can seek advice from Bicycle New South Wales. Bicycles are permitted on CityRail trains (see p126) but you may have to pay an extra fare.

TRAMS

IN 1997, Sydney reintroduced trams to its transport system, after an absence of 36 years. A fleet of seven trams journey around the downtown area, from Central Station (see p126) to Lilyfield via Pyrmont, taking in a large proportion of the area's sights (see pp72–3). Tickets can be purchased at Central Station.

COMPOSITE TICKETS

SYDNEY'S TRANSPORT is good value, particularly with one of the composite tickets available from State Transit Information and Ticket Kiosks or railway stations.

TravelTen tickets, as the name suggests, entitle you to make ten bus journeys. TravelPasses allow unlimited seven-day travel on Sydney's buses, trains and ferries within stipulated zones. The SydneyPass allows three, five or seven days' travel in any seven-day period on buses and ferries.

A BusTripper allows one day's unlimited travel on all buses. DayPasses allow one day's unlimited travel on both buses and ferries.

Travelling by Bus

STATE TRANSIT'S SYDNEY BUSES provide a punctual service that links up conveniently with the city's rail and ferry systems. As well as covering city and suburban areas, there are two Airport Express services and two excellent sightseeing buses – the Sydney Explorer and the Bondi Explorer. The Transport Infoline can advise you on routes, fares and journey times for all Sydney buses. Armed with the map on the inside back cover of this book and a composite ticket, you can avoid the difficulties and expense of city parking.

Automatic stamping machine for validating composite tickets

USING SYDNEY BUSES

ROUTE NUMBERS and journey destinations are displayed on the front, back and left side of all State Transit buses. An "X" in front of the number means that it is an express bus. Only single-journey tickets can be purchased on board regular buses. Single fares are bought from the driver. Try to have coins ready as drivers are not always able to change large notes. You will be given a ticket valid for that journey only – if you change buses you will have to pay again.

If using a TravelTen ticket or TravelPass, you must insert it in the automatic stamping machine as you board. Make sure that the arrow is facing towards you and pointing downwards. If sharing a TravelTen ticket, insert it into the machine once for each person travelling.

Front seats must be given up to elderly or disabled passengers. Eating, drinking, smoking and playing music are prohibited on buses. To signal that you wish to alight, press one of the stop buttons – they are mounted on the vertical handrails on each seat – well before the bus reaches your stop. The doors are electronic and can only be opened by the bus drivers.

BUS STOPS

BUS STOPS are indicated by yellow and black signs displaying a profile of a bus. Below this symbol, the numbers of all buses along the route are clearly listed.

Timetables are usually found at main bus stops. Public holidays follow the Sunday timetable. While bus stop timetables are kept as up-to-date as possible, it is best to carry a current timetable with you. They are available from State Transit Information and Ticket Kiosks, as well as some tourist information facilities.

SIGHTSEEING BY BUS

TWO SYDNEY bus services, the red Sydney Explorer and the blue Bondi Explorer, offer flexible sightseeing with commentaries. The Sydney Explorer covers a 26-km (16-mile) circuit and stops at 22 of the city's most popular attractions. The Bondi Explorer travels through a number of Sydney's eastern suburbs, taking in much of the area's coastal scenery.

The red buses run daily every 17 minutes, the blue every 30 minutes. The great advantage of these services is that you can explore at will, getting on and off the buses as often as you wish in the course of a day. The best way to make the most of your journey is to choose the sights you most want to see and plan a basic itinerary. Be sure to note the various opening times of museums, art galleries and shops; the bus drivers can often advise you about these. Explorer bus stops are clearly marked by the colours of the bus (red or blue).

Tickets for both Explorer buses can be bought when boarding and are available from State Transit Information and Ticket Kiosks.

Travelling by Train and Monorail

CityRail logo

AS WELL AS providing the key transport link between the city and suburbs, Sydney's railway network also serves a large part of the central business district. CityRail's double-decker trains operate on seven major lines. The City Circle loop, which runs mostly underground, is the main line through the city centre, stopping at Central, Town Hall, Wynyard, Circular Quay, St James and Museum. All suburban lines connect with the City Circle at Central and Town Hall stations.

FINDING YOUR WAY AROUND CITYRAIL

PART OF STATE RAIL, Sydney's CityRail system is mainly used by commuters. It is the most efficient and economical way to travel to and from the suburbs such as Parramatta (see p122). The system is easy to follow and CityRail Information will offer all details of services and timetables.

Trains run from 4:30am to midnight. Be vigilant when using trains at night: stand in the "Nightsafe" areas and only use carriages near the train guard, marked by a blue light.

THE METRO LIGHT RAIL

The MLR is Sydney's most recent transport development and is designed to link Central Railway Station with Glebe and Lilyfield, via Darling Harbour. These efficient and environmentally friendly trains offer a quicker and quieter means of travelling around parts of the city. Tickets are available on board from the conductor.

USING THE CITYRAIL ROUTE MAP

THE FIVE CITYRAIL lines are colour-coded and route maps are displayed at all CityRail stations and inside train carriages. Simply trace the line from where you are to your destination, noting if and where you need to change and make connections. All five of the cityrail lines travel through the Central and Town Hall railway stations in central Sydney.

Note that the distances shown on the CityRail map are not to the correct scale.

COUNTRY AND INTER-URBAN TRAINS

STATE RAIL has Countrylink Travel Centres throughout the city, which provide information about rail and coach services and also take ticket bookings. There are several options for one-, three- and six-months' unlimited travel in New South Wales.

Inter-urban trains run to a variety of areas, including the Blue Mountains (see pp162-5), Wollongong (see p178) and Newcastle (see p161).

Monorail leaving the city centre, backed by Sydney Tower

SIGHTSEEING BY MONORAIL

MORE NOVEL than practical, Sydney's Monorail runs along a scenic loop through central Sydney, Chinatown and Darling Harbour. Although it only covers a short distance, the Monorail can be a convenient way to travel from the city centre to Darling Harbour.

It runs from 7am-10pm except Fridays and Saturdays, when it runs until midnight. Trains run every 5 minutes and the full circuit takes about 12 minutes. Ticket machines are found at each station. They accept most Australian notes and coins and give change.

A Monorail Day Pass allows unlimited rides for an entire day. It can be bought at any Monorail information booth.

Travelling by Ferry and Water Taxi

FOR MORE than a century, harbour ferries have been a picturesque, as well as a practical, feature of the Sydney scene. Today, they are as popular as ever. Travelling by ferry is both a pleasure and an efficient way to journey between Sydney's various harbour suburbs. Sightseeing cruises are operated by various private companies as well as by State Transit (see p124). Water taxis can be a convenient and fast alternative means of travel, although they are more expensive.

Harbour ferries coming and going at Circular Quay Ferry Terminal

USING SYDNEY'S FERRIES

THERE IS a steady procession of State Transit Sydney Ferries traversing the harbour between 6am and 10pm daily. They service most of Sydney Harbour and several stops along the Parramatta River.

Staff at the Sydney Ferries Information Office, open 7am–7pm daily, will answer passenger queries and provide ferry timetables.

All ferry journeys start at the Circular Quay Ferry Terminal. Electronic destination boards at the entrance to each wharf indicate the wharf from which your ferry will leave, and also give departure times and all stops made en route. Tickets and TravelPasses can be bought from the Sydney Ferries Information Office. You can also buy your ticket from the machines that are located on each wharf. On some ferries, tickets can be purchased on board.

Manly's ferry terminal is serviced both by ferries and the speedy JetCats. Tickets and information can be obtained from the ticket windows in the centre of the terminal. No food or drink is permitted on JetCat or Supercat ferries.

SIGHTSEEING BY FERRY

STATE TRANSIT has a variety of well-priced cruises which take in the history and sights of Sydney Harbour. They are a cheap alternative to the commercial harbour cruises. There are morning, afternoon and evening tours, all with a commentary throughout. The day cruises show aspects of the city that are rarely seen, while the evening cruises offer spectacular views of the sun setting over the city's landmarks at sunset. Food and drink are available on board, but passengers may bring their own.

The Australian Travel Specialists has information on all river and harbour cruises from Circular Quay and Darling Harbour.

A water taxi on Sydney Harbour

WATER TAXIS

SMALL, FAST taxi boats are available for hire to carry passengers around the harbour. You can flag them down like normal road cabs if you spot one cruising for a fare. Try King Street Wharf or Circular Quay, near the Overseas Passenger Terminal.

Water taxis will pick up and drop off passengers at any navigable pier. However, this novel way of getting around the harbour is certainly not cheap. Rates vary, with some drivers charging for the boat (about $40) and a fee per person (about $10).

SHOPPING IN SYDNEY

FOR MOST TRAVELLERS, shopping can be as much of a voyage of discovery as sightseeing. The variety of shops in Sydney is wide and the quality of goods is high. The city has many elegant arcades, shopping galleries and popular weekly and monthly markets. The range of merchandise available is vast and local talent is promoted. Nor does the most interesting shopping stop at the city centre; there are several "satellite" alternatives.

Gowings menswear store logo

The Tin Shed, a junk shop cum café in Balmain

SHOPPING HOURS

MOST SHOPS are open from 9am to 5:30pm during the week, and from 9am to 4pm on Saturdays. Many shops in the city stay open until 9pm on Thursdays. Some main shops are open late every evening and most of these also open on Sundays.

HOW TO PAY

MAJOR CREDIT CARDS are accepted at most shops, but there may be a minimum purchase requirement. You will need identification, such as a valid passport, when using traveller's cheques. All Goods and Services are taxed (GST). The major exception is unprocessed food, so while you won't pay GST on an apple, you will for an apple pie. The GST is included in marked prices, though it is often listed separately on your receipt.

SALES

MANY SHOPS CONDUCT sales all year round. The big department stores of David Jones and Myer have two clearance sales a year. The post-Christmas sales start on 26 December and last into January. The other major sale time is during July, after the end of the financial year.

TAX-FREE SALES

DUTY-FREE SHOPS are found in the centre of the city as well as at Sydney Airport. Some shops also have branches in the larger suburbs.

Overseas visitors can save around 30 per cent on goods such as perfume, jewellery, cameras and alcohol at shops that offer duty-free shopping. You must show your passport and onward ticket when you collect your purchases.

Most duty-free merchandise must be kept in its sealed bag until you leave the country. Cameras and video cameras are exceptions to this rule. Some duty-free shops in the city will also deliver your purchases to the airport, where you can pick them up prior to your departure.

ARCADES AND MALLS

ARCADES and shopping malls in Sydney range from the ornately Victorian to modern marble and glass. The Queen Victoria Building (see p86) is Sydney's most palatial shopping space. Four levels contain more than 200 shops.

The elegant Strand Arcade (see p86) was originally built in 1892. Jewellery, lingerie, high fashion, antiques and fine cafés are its stock in trade.

Pitt Street Mall is home to several shopping centres. Skygarden is the place for home-ware, designer fashions and art galleries of distinction. A food gallery offers everything from antipasto to Thai takeaway. The Mid City Centre is home to the HMV music store and shops selling clothes, accessories and gifts. Centrepoint has more than 140 speciality shops that stock everything from avant-garde jewellery to leather goods.

Gleebooks, popular with students and Glebe locals

Both the MLC Centre and nearby Chifley Plaza cater to the prestige shopper. Gucci, Cartier and Tiffany & Co are just some of the shops found in these arcades.

Harbourside Shopping Centre has dozens of shops and waterfront restaurants. Goods include articles of fine art, jewellery and Australiana.

BEST OF THE DEPARTMENT STORES

THE SPRING and Mother's Day floral displays in the David Jones Elizabeth Street store are legendary, as is the luxurious perfumery and cosmetics hall on the ground floor. The building has seven floors of quality merchandise, including women's clothing, lingerie, toys and stationery. The Market Street store specializes in menswear, furniture, fabrics and china. The food hall is famous for its range of gourmet food and fine wines.

Myer is a good venue for cosmetics, hats, Australian fashion, lingerie or hosiery.

Gowings, which has been in continuous operation since 1868, is a Sydney institution. This unpretentious family-owned menswear store also sells such merchandise as sunglasses, watches and Swiss army knives. Genuine Australiana, such as kangaroo leather wallets and plaited leather belts, is also for sale.

MARKETS

SCOURING MARKETS for the cheap, the cheerful and the unusual has become a popular pastime in Sydney.

Balmain Market, held each Saturday, includes a food hall selling Japanese, Thai and Indian dishes. The Bondi Beach Market on Sundays is known for its trendy second-hand clothing: expect to see the occasional pop star and stars of Australian TV among the browsers. The market is also noted for its cactus plants, glassware and tourist art.

The Rocks Market, held all weekend under a canopy, has around 140 stalls. Posters, lace, stained glass and leather are among the goods. You can watch a sculptor making art out of stone or have your portrait sketched in charcoal.

Sydney Fish Market is the ideal place to buy fresh seafood. You can choose from more than 100 species, both live and prepared. The market also has sushi bars and fish cafés. The Sydney Seafood School operates above the market, offering lessons in preparing and serving seafood.

The Tarpeian Market on Sundays displays arts and crafts in a spectacular setting next to the Opera House. It is an eclectic mix, from English porcelain thimbles to ornate wooden smoking pipes, prints of Sydney, jewellery and healing crystals. If you are lucky, you can catch performance artists.

Other good markets are Paddy's Markets (see p95), Fox Studio Markets (see p121) and Paddington Markets (see p121).

Specialist Shopping in Sydney

SMART CASUAL is a term often heard in Sydney, applied to both dress and occasion. Clothes shops do not neglect the formal dresser, however, and stylish Australian labels vie with the international designer names on offer. Sydney also offers an extensive range of gift and souvenir ideas, from unset opals and jewellery to hand-made crafts and Aboriginal art. Museum shops often have specially commissioned items on sale which are a unique reminder of your visit.

AUSTRALIANA

AUSTRALIANA has become more than just souvenirs: it is now an art form in itself. Many shops sell souvenirs that double as art, including woodwork, pottery and leather goods.

Done Art and Design has distinctive prints by Ken and Judy Done (see p30). At Weiss Art you will find minimalist designs on clothes, umbrellas, and cups. Makers Mark is a showcase for wood, glass and silver artisans. Victoria Walk in the Queen Victoria Building (see p86) is dominated by Australian shops.

The Australian Museum (see pp90–91) shop sells unusual gift items such as bark paintings, Australian animal puppets, puzzles and games.

MEN'S CLOTHES

UP-MARKET MEN'S labels, including Bally, Zegna and Gant, are available from Stewart's Gentlemen's Outfitters. Marc's carries fashionable and well-made basics and a range of excellent shirts for men. Skin Deep has retro gear for men – suits from the 1940s and 1950s, old silk ties and tie pins. Aussie Boys, popular with the gay crowd, stocks trendy gym gear and the very latest in party wear.

WOMEN'S CLOTHES

SMART DAYWEAR and casual clothes are the province of Country Road, which has shops throughout Sydney. Carla Zampatti is an Australian designer whose speciality is chic day and evening wear.

Sportsgirl and Portmans are great for accessories and up-to-the-minute fashions.

Collette Dinnigan uses Italian and French lace, silk and tulle to produce exquisite lingerie. Lisa Ho is another designer who caters for the style-conscious woman.

Chanel shop in Castlereagh Street, Sydney's "designer row"

AUSTRALIAN FASHION

AUSTRALIAN "outback fashion", from elastic-sided riding boots and Akubra hats to Driza-bone oilskin coats, are found at RM Williams.

Beach and surf wear labels can be found at Bondi Surf Co. The Mambo Friendship Store carries Mambo label surf wear and accessories. The Great Australian Jumper Company has classic knitwear made from Australian wool.

Colourful shorts for sale at Mambo Friendship Store

BOOKS AND MUSIC

THE LARGER book chains, such as Dymocks, have a range of guide books and maps on Sydney. For more eclectic browsing, there is Abbey's Bookshop and Ariel. The State Library of NSW (see p105) bookshop has a good choice of Australian books.

Further out from the CBD is Gleebooks, a firm favourite with students, academics and locals in Glebe.

Many specialist music shops can be found in the city. Red Eye Records sells collectables and alternative music. Good Groove Records has vinyl 45s and CD reissues. Central Station Records and Tapes has mainstream music. Birdland stocks blues, jazz, soul and avant-garde.

JEWELLERY

SYDNEY OFFERS a variety of gems and jewellery. Flame Opals sells gems from all the major Australian opal fields. At The Rocks Opal Mine there is a mine shaft elevator for simulated opal mining as well as gems on sale.

Long-established jewellers include Fairfax & Roberts. World-class pearls are found in the seas off the northwestern coast of Australia and examples can be found at Paspaley Pearls.

Victoria Spring Designs sells costume jewellery with filigree and glass beading worked into its pendants, rings, earrings and Gothic-style crosses.

ABORIGINAL ART

TRADITIONAL PAINTINGS, fabric, jewellery, boomerangs, carvings and cards can be bought at the Aboriginal and Tribal Art Centre. There are also several shops selling aboriginal paintings and boomerangs at Darling Harbour's shopping complex.

Souvenir boomerangs

The Coo-ee Aboriginal Art Gallery boasts a selection of limited edition prints, fabrics, books and Aboriginal music; while the Hogarth Galleries Aboriginal Art Centre holds work by Papunya Tula and Balgo artists and works from respected painters such as Kathleen Petyarre and Rosella Namok.

ENTERTAINMENT IN SYDNEY

SYDNEY HAS the standard of entertainment and nightlife you would expect from a cosmopolitan city. Everything from opera and ballet at Sydney Opera House to Shakespeare by the sea at the Balmoral Beach amphitheatre is on offer. Venues such as the Capitol, Her Majesty's Theatre and the Theatre Royal play host to the latest musicals, while Sydney's many smaller theatres are home to interesting fringe theatre,

A Wharf Theatre production poster modern dance and rock and pop concerts. Pub rock thrives in the inner city and beyond; and there are many nightspots for jazz, dance and alternative music. Movie buffs are well catered for with film festivals, art-house films and foreign titles, as well as the latest Hollywood blockbusters. One of the features of harbourside living is the free outdoor entertainment, very popular with children.

Recently built Sydney Theatre (see p135) on Hickson Road, Walsh Bay have information telephone lines and dedicated websites.

BUYING TICKETS

SOME OF THE popular operas, shows, plays and ballets in Sydney are sold out months in advance. While it is better to book ahead, many theatres do set aside tickets to be sold at the door on the night.

You can buy tickets from the box office or by telephone. Some orchestral performances do not admit children under seven, so check with the box office before buying. If you make a phone booking using a credit card, the tickets can be mailed to you. Alternatively, tickets can be collected from the box office half an hour before the show. The major agencies will take overseas bookings.

If you are desperate to see a sold-out rock concert, there may be touts selling tickets outside, but often at hugely inflated prices. If all else fails, hotel concierges have a reputation for being able to secure hard-to-get tickets.

BOOKING AGENCIES

SYDNEY HAS TWO main ticket agencies: Ticketek and Ticketmaster. They represent all major entertainment and sporting events.

Ticketek has more than 50 outlets throughout the state, open from 9am to 5pm weekdays, and Saturdays from noon to 4pm. Telephone bookings can be made from 8:30am–9pm, Monday to Saturday, and 10am–7pm Sunday. Overseas bookings can be faxed or booked online. The Ticketmaster office is open Monday to Friday, from 9am–6pm. Other offices are open from 10am–9pm

INFORMATION

FOR DETAILS OF events in the city, you should check the daily newspapers first. They carry cinema, and often arts and theatre, advertisements daily. The most comprehensive listings appear in the Sydney Morning Herald's "Metro" guide every Friday. The Daily Telegraph has a gig guide on daily, with opportunities to win free tickets to special events. The Australian's main arts pages appear on Fridays and all the papers review new films in weekend editions.

Tourism NSW information kiosks and most of the major hotels have useful free guides such as What's on in Darling Harbour, Sydney: The Official Guide and Where Magazine.

Music fans are well served by the free weekly guides Drum Media, Brag, and 3-D World, which has plenty of dance club information. They can be picked up at video and music shops, pubs and clubs. Many venues have leaflets about forthcoming attractions, while major venues and can be found at the State Theatre, Theatre Royal and the Capitol Theatre. However, you don't have to wait for a ticket office to open if you book via a website.

Ticket agencies usually accept traveller's cheques, bank cheques, cash, VISA, MasterCard (Access) and American Express. However, some agencies do not accept Diners Club. A booking fee applies, with a postage and handling charge also added if tickets are mailed out. There are generally no refunds (unless a show is cancelled) or exchanges available.

If one agency has sold out its allocation for a show, it is worth checking to see if the other agency still has tickets.

DISCOUNT TICKETS

WHEN A SHOW isn't sold out, Halfix offers half-price tickets (plus a small booking fee) for the theatre, concerts, opera and ballet on the day of the performance only (except for matinees and Sunday performances, tickets to which can be bought the day before). Bus tour, theatre restaurant, boat cruise, art gallery and film tickets are also available at half price. There is no limit on the number of tickets you can buy.

You can ring Halfix from 11am for recorded information on discounts available, and the office is open from noon until 5:30pm, Monday to Saturday. Arrive early to avoid queues during the Sydney Festival. Halfix is also a Ticketek agency for advance sales.

Mainstream cinemas sell a book of ten tickets at reduced rates, as well as lower priced tickets on Tuesdays. Some independent cinemas also have special mid-week prices.

The Sydney Symphony Orchestra and Opera Australia (see p134) offer a special Student Rush price to students under 28 years old only when surplus tickets are available. These can only be bought on the day of the performance. A student card must be shown.

CHOOSING SEATS

IF BOOKING IN PERSON at either the venue or the agency, you will be able to look at a seating plan. Be aware that in the State Theatre, row A is the back row. In Sydney, there is little difference in price between stalls and dress circle. If booking by phone with Ticketek, you will only be able to get a rough idea of where your seats are. The computer will pick the "best" tickets available.

DISABLED VISITORS

MANY OLDER VENUES were not designed with the disabled visitor in mind, but this has been redressed in most newer buildings. It is best to phone the box office beforehand to request special requirements. Ask about the best street entrance. Sydney Town Hall has a wheelchair entrance in Druitt St and the Opera House has disabled parking, wheelchair access and a loop system in the Concert Hall for the hearing impaired. Ideas Incorporated have a list of Sydney's most wheelchair friendly venues.

Entertainment Venues in Sydney

SYDNEY'S THEATRES are notable for their atmosphere and stimulating mix of productions. Comedy is also finding a strong niche as a mainstream performance art. Australian films have a fine international reputation and there are many annual film festivals. Classical music buffs cannot possibly visit Sydney without seeing a performance in the Sydney Opera House. Sydney also draws the biggest names in contemporary music.

FILM

THE CITY'S main cinema strip is on George Street, near the Town Hall (see p89). Hoyts and Greater Union show all the latest blockbusters. The Dendy cinemas show the latest art-house films and other repertory venues include Cinema Paris, Chauvel, Palace Academy Twin and the Verona cinema, located next door. The Movie Room has science fiction, cult and 3-D films. Most cinemas offer half-price tickets on Tuesdays.

The annual Sydney Film Festival (see p39) includes documentaries, retrospectives and new films from all over the globe.

THEATRE

MUSICALS are staged at the Theatre Royal, the State Theatre (see p86), the Capitol and Star City's Lyric Theatre. Smaller venues include the Seymour Theatre Centre, the Ensemble and the Footbridge Theatre. The Stables Theatre specializes in new Australian playwrights. The Sydney Theatre Company (STC) is the city's best and performs at The Wharf and the Sydney Theatre. Open-air summer events include performances by Shakespeare by the Sea at Balmoral Beach and the popular Sydney Fringe Festival which features new plays by up-and-coming playwrights (see p31).

COMEDY

SYDNEY'S BEST comedy venue is the Comedy Store. There are comics, sketches or revues Tuesday to Saturday. Monday night has comedy at both the Bridge Hotel and in the Fringe Bar in the Unicorn Hotel.

OPERA AND CLASSICAL MUSIC

THE AUSTRALIAN OPERA (AO) was formed in 1956 and its two seasons at the Opera House are January to March and June to October.

Sydney Film Festival poster

Sydney's main provider of orchestral music and recitals is the Sydney Symphony Orchestra (SSO). Concerts are held in the Sydney Opera House Concert Hall or the Sydney Town Hall (see p89). The Conservatorium of Music (see p104) performs symphony, wind and chamber concerts and jazz big bands. Concerts of the Australian Chamber Orchestra are held at the Sydney Opera House (see pp80–81) throughout the year.

The Sydney Philharmonia Choirs, the city's finest, also perform at the Opera House. The newest major classical venue is the City Recital Hall, which regularly plays host to a variety of local and international stars.

Sydney Opera House

Sydney Dance Company poster

DANCE

THERE IS AN eclectic variety of dance to be found in the city. The Australian Ballet performs at the Opera House March–April and November–December. The repertoire spans classic to modern.

Sydney Dance Company is the city's leading modern dance group and perform at their studio at The Wharf. The Aboriginal Dance Theatre is also contemporary with a traditional flavour. Its performances are often at the Seymour Theatre Centre.

ROCK, JAZZ AND BLUES

ROCK'S BIGGEST names perform at the Sydney Entertainment Centre, the Sydney Cricket Ground and the Sydney Superdome. Venues such as the Orient Hotel and Selina's at Coogee Bay Hotel also draw crowds.

For jazz, try The Basement or Soup Plus, both are long-standing venues. The blues are played at the Empire Hotel and the Cat & Fiddle Hotel.

NIGHTCLUBS

NIGHTSPOTS OFFERING a range of mainstream dance music include the larger clubs, such as Home, Gas, Tank, Cargo Bar and Jacksons on George.

Clubs into house and hip hop are Q, The Slip Inn and Goodbar. Gay clubs include D.C.M., the Oxford hotel and Midnight Shift.

Sydney's Beaches

BEING A CITY built around the water, it is no wonder that many of Sydney's recreational activities involve the sand, sea and sun. There are many harbour and surf beaches in Sydney, most of them accessible by bus (see p125). Even if you're not a swimmer, the beaches offer a chance to get away from it all for a day or weekend and enjoy the fresh air and relaxed way of life.

SWIMMING

YOU CAN SWIM at either harbour or ocean beaches. Harbour beaches are generally smaller and sheltered. Popular harbour beaches include Camp Cove, Shark Bay and Balmoral Beach.

At the ocean beaches, surf lifesavers in their red and yellow caps are on duty. Surf lifesaving carnivals are held throughout the summer. Call Surf Life Saving NSW for a calendar. Well-patrolled, safer surf beaches include Bondi, Manly and Coogee.

The beaches can become polluted, especially after heavy rainfall. The Beach Watch Info Line provides updated information on beaches and bays.

SURFING

SURFING is more a way of life than a leisure activity for some Sydneysiders. If you're a beginner, try Bondi, Bronte, Palm Beach or Collaroy.

Two of the best surf beaches are Maroubra and Narrabeen. Bear in mind that local surfers know one another well and do not take kindly to "intruders" who drop in on their waves. To hire a surfboard, try Bondi Surf Co on Campbell Parade, Bondi Beach, or Aloha Surf on Pittwater Road, Manly. If you would like to learn, there are two schools: Manly Surf School and Lets Go Surfing at Bondi Beach. They also hire out boards and wetsuits.

WINDSURFING AND SAILING

THERE ARE LOCATIONS around Sydney suitable for every level of windsurfer. Boards can be hired from Balmoral Windsurfing, Sailing & Kayaking School & Hire.

Good spots include Palm Beach, Narrabeen Lakes, La Perouse, Brighton-Le-Sands and Kumell Point (for beginner and intermediate boarders) and Long Reef Beach, Palm Beach and Collaroy (for more experienced boarders).

One of the best ways to see the harbour is while sailing. A sailing boat, including a skipper, can be hired for the afternoon from the East Sail sailing club. If you'd like to learn how to sail, the sailing club has two-day courses and also hires out sailing boats and motor cruisers to experienced sailors.

Scuba diving at Gordons Bay

SCUBA DIVING-

THE GREAT BARRIER REEF it may not be, but there are some excellent dive spots around Sydney, especially in winter when the water is clear, if a little cold. Favoured spots are Shelly Beach, Gordons Bay and Camp Cove.

Pro Dive Coogee offers a complete range of courses, escorted dives, introductory dives for beginners, and hire equipment. Dive Centre Manly also runs courses, hires equipment and conducts boat dives seven days a week.

FISHING IN SYDNEY

Surprisingly for a thriving city port, there is a wide variety of fish to be caught in the waters around Sydney. From the rocks and headlands of the northern beaches, such as Palm Beach and Bilgola, tuna, whiting and blenny abound. The Narrabeen Lakes offer estuary fishing, with a population of flathead and bream. The sheltered Middle Harbour has many angling spots and is home to more bream and mulwavy.

Triplefin blenny

SPORTING SYDNEY

THROUGHOUT AUSTRALIA sport is a way of life and Sydney is no exception. On any day you'll see locals on golf courses at dawn, running on the streets keeping fit, or having a quick set of tennis after work. At weekends, during summer and winter, there is no end to the variety of sports you can watch. Thousands gather at the Aussie Stadium (Sydney Football Stadium) and Sydney Cricket Ground every weekend while, for those who cannot make it, sport reigns supreme on weekend television.

CRICKET

DURING THE SUMMER months Test cricket and one-day internationals are played at the Sydney Cricket Ground (SCG). Tickets for weekday sessions of the Tests can often be bought at the gate, although it is advisable to book well in advance (through Ticketek) for weekend sessions of Test matches and for all the one-day international matches.

Australia versus the All Blacks

RUGBY LEAGUE AND RUGBY UNION

THE POPULARITY of rugby league knows no bounds in Sydney. This is what people are referring to when they talk about "the footie". There are three major competition levels: local, State of Origin – which matches Queensland against New South Wales – and Tests. The "local" competition fields teams from all over Sydney as well as Newcastle, Canberra, Brisbane, Perth, the Gold Coast and Far North Queensland.

These matches are held all over Sydney, although the Aussie Stadium is by far the biggest venue. Tickets for State of Origin and Test matches often sell out as soon as they go on sale. Call Ticketek to check availability.

Rugby union is the second most popular football code. Again, matches at Test level sell out very quickly. For some premium trans-Tasman rivalry, catch a Test match between Australia's "Wallabies" and the New Zealand "All Blacks" at the Aussie Stadium. Phone Ticketek for details.

GOLF AND TENNIS

GOLF ENTHUSIASTS need not do without their round of golf. There are many courses throughout Sydney where visitors are welcome at all times. These include Moore Park, St Michael's and Warringah golf courses. It is sensible to phone beforehand for a booking, especially at weekends.

Tennis is another favoured sport. Courts available for hire can be found all over Sydney. Many centres also have floodlit courts available for night time. Try Cooper Park or Parkland Sports Centre.

AUSTRALIAN RULES FOOTBALL

ALTHOUGH NOT as popular as in Melbourne, "Aussie Rules" has a strong following in Sydney. The local team, the Sydney Swans, plays its home games at the Sydney Cricket Ground during the season. Check a local paper for details.

Rivalry between the Sydney supporters and their Melbourne counterparts is always strong. Busloads of diehard fans from the south arrive to cheer on their teams. Tickets can usually be bought at the ground on the day of the game.

BASKETBALL

BASKETBALL HAS grown in popularity as both a spectator and recreational sport in recent years. Sydney has male and female teams competing in the National Basketball League. The games, held at the Sydney Entertainment

One-day cricket match between Australia and the West Indies, SCG

Aerial view of the Aussie Stadium at Moore Park

Centre, Haymarket, have much of the pizzazz, colour and excitement of American basketball. Tickets can be purchased by phone or on the internet from Ticketek.

CYCLING AND INLINE SKATING

SYDNEY BOASTS excellent, safe locations for the whole family to go cycling. One of the most frequented is Centennial Park (see p127). You can hire bicycles and safety helmets from Centennial Park Cycles.

Another popular pastime in summer is inline skating.

Total Skate, located opposite Centennial Park, hires inline skates and protective gear, and also offers lessons.

RollerbladingSydney.com runs tours starting at Milsons Point to all parts of Sydney. If you are a little unsteady on your feet, they offer private and group lessons. Or keep both feet firmly on the ground and watch skateboarders and inline skaters practising their moves at the ramps at Bondi Beach (see p137).

HORSE RIDING

FOR A LEISURELY RIDE, head to Centennial Park or contact the Centennial Parklands Equestrian Centre. They will give you details of the four riding schools that operate in the park. Samarai Park Riding School conducts trail rides through Ku-ring-gai Chase National Park (see pp154-5).

Further afield, you can enjoy the magnificent scenery of the Blue Mountains (see pp160-61) on horseback. The Megalong Australian Heritage Centre has trail rides from one hour to an overnight ride. All levels of experience are catered for.

ADVENTURE SPORTS

YOU CAN PARTICIPATE in guided bushwalking, mountain biking, canyoning, rock climbing and abseiling expeditions in the nearby Blue Mountains National Park. The Blue Mountains Adventure Company runs one-day or multi-day courses and trips for all standards of adventurer.

In the centre of Sydney, the City Crag Climbing Centre has indoor classes and walls on which you can practise.

THE PAGE GRID superimposed on the Area by Area map below shows which parts of Sydney are covered in this Street Finder. Map references given for all sights, hotels, restaurants, shopping and entertainment venues described in this guide refer to the maps in this section. All the major sights are clearly marked so they are easy to locate. The key, set out below, indicates the scale of the maps and shows what other features are marked on them, including railway stations, bus terminals, ferry boarding points, emergency services, post offices and tourist information centres. Map references are also given for hotels (see pp466–8) and restaurants (see pp498–9).

NEW SOUTH WALES AND ACT

INTRODUCING NEW SOUTH WALES
AND ACT 150-155

THE BLUE MOUNTAINS AND BEYOND 156-173

THE SOUTH COAST AND SNOWY MOUNTAINS 174-181

CANBERRA AND ACT 182-199

New South Wales and ACT at a Glance

THIS SOUTHEASTERN CORNER of the continent, around Sydney Cove, was the site of the first European settlement in the 18th century and today it is the most densely populated and varied region in Australia, and home to its largest city, Sydney (see pp56–147), as well as Canberra, the nation's capital. It also contains the country's highest mountain, Mount Kosciuszko. In the east there are farmlands and vineyards, the Blue Mountains and the ski resorts of the Snowy Mountains. To the west is a desert landscape. The coastline is tropically warm in the north, cooler in the south.

Broken Hill is one of the few 19th-century mining towns in Australia that continues to survive on its mineral resources (see p173). It is also the location of the Royal Flying Doctor Service headquarters, and tours detailing the history of the service are popular with visitors.

Bourke's major attraction is its remote location. Irrigated by the Darling River, the town is also a successful agricultural centre (see p173). A lift-up span bridge crosses the river.

(see pp156–73)

Mount Kosciuszko, in Kosciuszko National Park, is Australia's highest mountain. Panoramic views of the Snowy Mountains can be found at the Mount Kosciuszko Lookout, accessible via a walking trail or a chairlift (see pp152–3).

Tenterfield's School of Arts building has a proud history as the site of Sir Henry Parkes' Federation speech in 1889, which was followed, 12 years later, by the founding of the Commonwealth of Australia (see p52). A museum in the town details the event.

Tamworth is the heart of Australian country music. The Golden Guitar Hall, fronted by a model guitar, holds concerts (see p169).

The Three Sisters rock formation is the most famous sight within the Blue Mountains National Park. At night it is floodlit for a spectacular view (see pp162–5).

Windsor is one of the best preserved 19th-century towns in the state. The Macquarie Arms Hotel is considered to be the oldest operational hotel in Australia (see p160).

CANBERRA AND ACT
(see pp182–99)

THE SOUTH COAST AND SNOWY MOUNTAINS
(see pp174–81)

Canberra was designed as the new national capital in 1912 by architect Walter Burley Griffin. Anzac Parade offers fine views of New Parliament House, atop Capital Hill (see pp186–7).

The Snowy Mountains

THE SNOWY MOUNTAINS stretch 500 km (310 miles) from Canberra to Victoria. Formed more than 250 million years ago, they include Australia's highest mountain, Mount Kosciuszko, and the country's only glacial lakes. In summer, wildflowers carpet the meadows; in winter, snow gums bend beneath the cold winds. The Snowy Mountains are preserved within the Kosciuszko National Park and are also home to two of Australia's largest ski resorts, Thredbo and Perisher. The Snowy Mountains Scheme dammed four rivers to supply power to much of inland eastern Australia (see p175).

The Snowy River rises below Mount Kosciuszko and is now dammed and diverted to provide hydroelectricity for Melbourne and Sydney as part of the Snowy Mountains Scheme.

Blue Lake is a spectacular glacial lake, one of only a few in the country, which lies in an ice-carved basin 28 m (90 ft) deep.

Seaman's Hut, built in honour of a skier who perished here in 1928, has saved many lives during fierce blizzards.

The Alpine Way offers a spectacular drive through the mountains, best taken in spring or summer, via the Thredbo River Valley.

Dead Horse Gap is a striking pass that gives access to both the beautiful wilderness to the west and The Pilot and Coberras to the south. It was named after a group of "brumbies" (wild horses) that tragically perished in a snowdrift here during the 19th century.

PROMINENT PEAKS OF THE SNOWY MOUNTAINS

Mount Kosciuszko is Australia's highest mountain, and may be approached by gentle walks across alpine meadows from Thredbo or from Charlottes Pass. Mount Townsend is only slightly lower but, with a more pronounced summit, is often mistaken for its higher and more famous neighbour.

Charlottes Pass marks the start of the summit walk to Mount Kosciuszko. It was named after Charlotte Adams, who, in 1881, was the first European woman to climb the peak.

Downhill and cross-country skiing and snowboarding are popular in the Snowy Mountains between June and September.

Thredbo River was once known as the Crackenback River by stockmen who thought the ranges rising on either side of the valley were steep enough to break a man's back.

The Yarrangobilly Caves, about 130 km (80 miles) north of Thredbo, are a system of 70 limestone caves formed 750,000 years ago. They contain magnificent white columns, cascading frozen waterfalls and delicate underground pools.

NATURE IN THE SNOWY MOUNTAINS

The Snowy Mountains are often harsh, windswept and barren, yet myriad flowers, trees and wildlife have evolved to survive all seasons. Almost all species here are unique to the alpine regions of Australia.

The Flora

Silver snow daisies, with their white petals and yellow centres, are the most spectacular of all the alpine flowers en masse.

Mountain plum pine is a natural bonsai tree, which grows slowly and at an angle. The pygmy possum feeds on its berries.

Sphagnum moss surrounds the springs, bogs and creeks in the highest regions.

Snow gums, with their distinctive bark, can survive at higher altitudes than most trees.

The Fauna

Corroboree frogs live only in the fragile sphagnum moss bogs of the region.

Mountain pygmy possums live under the snow, high up in the mountains.

Brown and rainbow trout, both introduced species, thrive in the cool mountain streams.

Wines of New South Wales and ACT

Rosemount Chardonnay

NEW SOUTH WALES and ACT were the cradle of Australian wines. A small consignment of vines was on board the First Fleet when it landed at Sydney Cove in January 1788 (see pp46-7), and this early hope was fulfilled in the steady development of a successful wine industry. New South Wales is now the home of many fine wineries with an international reputation. The state is currently in the vanguard of wine industry expansion, planting new vineyards and developing established districts to meet steadily rising domestic and export demand.

 New South Wales wine regions

Cooraminta Estate is one of the Hilltops region wineries which benefits from rich alluvial soil and regular rainfall.

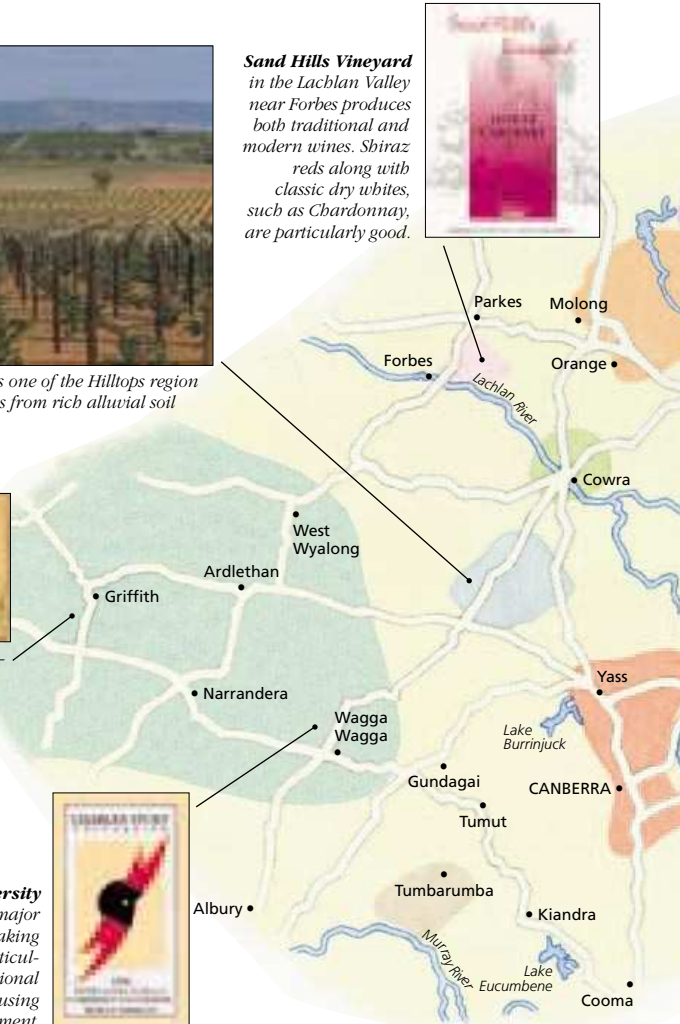

Sand Hills Vineyard in the Lachlan Valley near Forbes produces both traditional and modern wines. Shiraz reds along with classic dry whites, such as Chardonnay, are particularly good.

De Bortoli is a family-owned winery in the Riverina district. Its speciality wines, such as Dry Botrytis Semillon, are matched by its consistently reasonable prices.

Charles Sturt University Winery is a major innovator of winemaking techniques and viticultural science. Traditional wines are made using high-tech equipment.

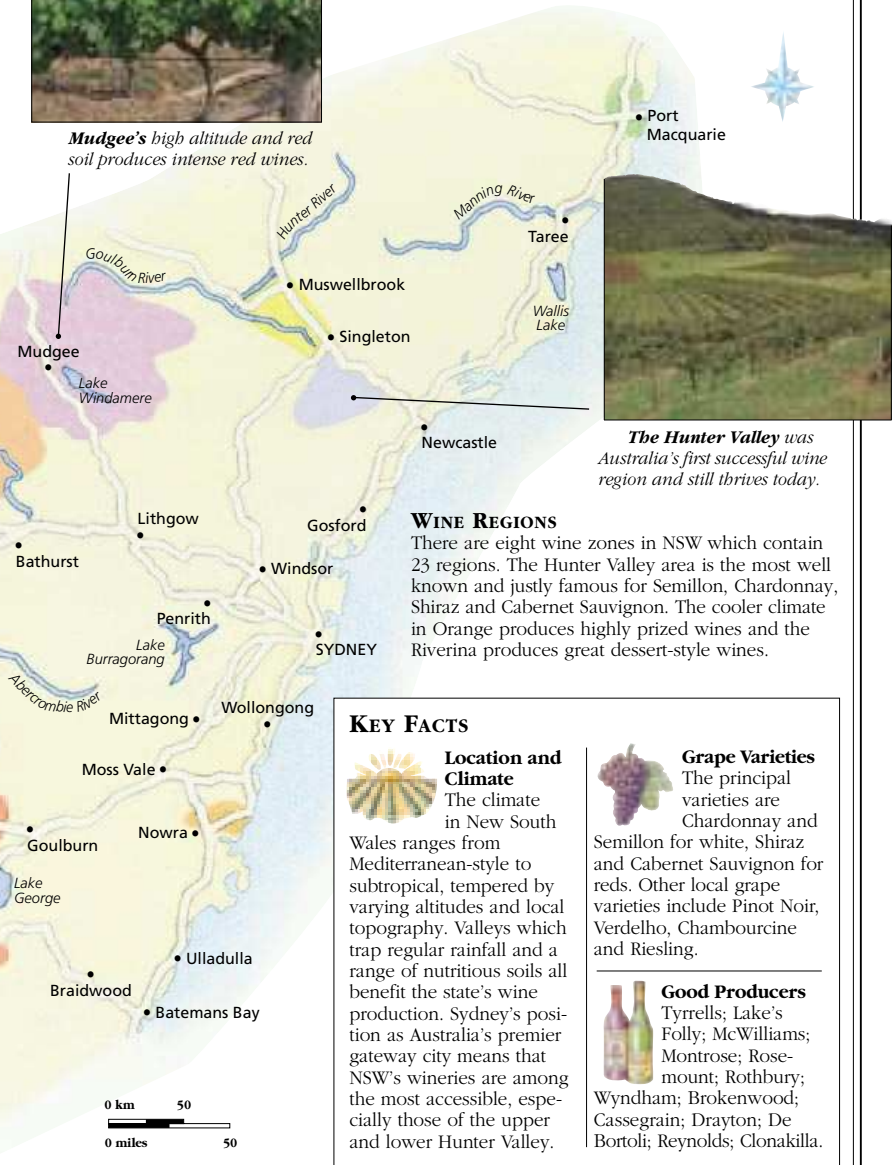

Mudgee's high altitude and red soil produces intense red wines.

The Hunter Valley was Australia's first successful wine region and still thrives today.

WINE REGIONS

There are eight wine zones in NSW which contain 23 regions. The Hunter Valley area is the most well known and justly famous for Semillon, Chardonnay, Shiraz and Cabernet Sauvignon. The cooler climate in Orange produces highly prized wines and the Riverina produces great dessert-style wines.

KEY FACTS

Location and Climate

The climate in New South Wales ranges from Mediterranean-style to subtropical, tempered by varying altitudes and local topography. Valleys which trap regular rainfall and a range of nutritious soils all benefit the state's wine production. Sydney's position as Australia's premier gateway city means that NSW's wineries are among the most accessible, especially those of the upper and lower Hunter Valley.

Grape Varieties

The principal varieties are Chardonnay and Semillon for white, Shiraz and Cabernet Sauvignon for reds. Other local grape varieties include Pinot Noir, Verdelho, Chambourcine and Riesling.

THE BLUE MOUNTAINS AND BEYOND

THINK OF NORTHERN New South Wales and vibrant colours spring to mind. There are the dark blues of the Blue Mountains; the blue-green seas of the north coast; the verdant green of the rainforests near the Queensland border; and the gold of the wheat fields. Finally, there are the reds and yellows of the desert in the far west.

Ever since English explorer Captain James Cook claimed the eastern half of Australia as British territory in 1770 and named it New South Wales, Sydney and its surroundings have been at the forefront of Australian life.

On the outskirts of Sydney, at Windsor and Richmond, early convict settlements flourished into prosperous farming regions along the fertile Hawkesbury River. The barrier of the Blue Mountains was finally penetrated in 1812, marking the first spread of sheep and cattle squatters north, west and south onto the rich plains beyond. In the middle of the 19th century came the gold rush around Bathurst and Mudgee and up into the New England Tablelands, which led to the spread of roads and railways.

Following improved communications in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, northern New South Wales now contains more towns, a denser rural population and a more settled coastline than anywhere else in the country. Fortunately, all this development has not robbed the region of its natural beauty or assets. From the grand and daunting wilderness of the Blue Mountains to the blue waters and surf of Byron Bay, the easternmost point in Australia, the region remains easy to explore and a delight to the senses. It is most easily divided into three parts: the coastline and mild hinterland, including the famous Hunter Valley vineyards; the hills, plateaus and flats of the New England Tablelands and Western Plains with their rivers, national parks and thriving farming areas; and the remote, dusty Outback, west of the vast Great Dividing Range.

The combination of urban civilization, with all the amenities and attractions it offers, and the beautiful surrounding landscape, make this region a favourite holiday location with locals and tourists all year round.

Exploring the Blue Mountains and Beyond

DISTANCES CAN BE LONG in northern New South Wales so the extent of any exploration will depend on the time available. Within easy reach of Sydney are historic gold rush towns such as Windsor, the cool mountain retreats of the Blue Mountains, the old gold towns between Bathurst and Mudgee, and the gentle, green hills of the Hunter Valley and its vineyards. The north coast and its hinterland are best explored as part of a touring holiday between Sydney and the Queensland capital, Brisbane, or as a short break to the beaches and fishing areas around Port Macquarie, Taree and Coffs Harbour.

Thompson Square (02) 4577 2310.

WINDSOR was named by Governor Macquarie and this well-preserved colonial settlement is one of the five “Macquarie towns”. Established on the banks of the Hawkesbury River in 1794, the town provided farmers with both fertile land and the convenience of river transport for their produce.

In the centre of town, St Matthew’s Church, designed by Francis Greenway, is a fine example of Georgian colonial architecture and is considered to be his most successful work. Other buildings of interest include the Macquarie Arms, which claims to be Australia’s oldest hotel, and the Hawkesbury Museum, set in a Georgian residence. The museum chronicles Windsor’s early colonial history.

ENVIRONS: One of the other five “Macquarie towns” is Richmond, which lies 6 km (3.5 miles) west of Windsor. This attractive settlement was established five years earlier, in 1789. The farmstead of Mountainview, built in 1804, is one of the oldest surviving homes in the country.

Gosford ❸

Rotary Park, Terrigal Dr, Terrigal, (02) 4385 4430.

GOSFORD is the principal town of the popular holiday region known as the Central Coast, and provides a good base for touring the surrounding area. The rural settlements that once dotted this coastline have now evolved into one continuous beachside suburb, stretching as far south as Ku-ring-gai Chase National Park (see p122). Gosford itself sits on the calm northern shore of Brisbane Waters, an excellent spot for sailing and other recreational activities. The nearby coastal beaches are renowned for their great surf, clear lagoons and long stretches of sand. The beaches here are so numerous that it is still possible to find a deserted spot in any season except high summer. ONE VISITOR to Newcastle, Australia's second-oldest city, remarked in the 1880s: "To my mind the whole town appeared to have woke up in fright at our arrival and to have no definite ideas of a rendezvous whereto to rally."

The chaos to which he referred was largely the result of the city's reliance on coal mining and vast steel works. Building progressed only as profits rose and town planning was left largely to accident.

Today this chaos only adds to Newcastle's charm. The city curls loosely around a splendid harbour and its main streets rise randomly up the surrounding hills. Industry is still the mainstay, but this does not detract from the city's quaint beauty. The main thoroughfare of Hunter Street has many buildings of diverse architectural styles. The Court-house follows a style known as Late Free Classical; the

Italianate post office in Newcastle

Court Chambers are High Victorian; the post office was modelled on Palladio's Basilica in Venice and the town's cathedral, Christ Church, is an elaborate and impressive example of Victorian Gothic.

The modern Newcastle Region Art Gallery houses works by some of the country's most prominent 19th- and 20th-century artists, including the Newcastle-born William Dobell, Arthur Boyd and Brett Whiteley (see pp30–31).

Queens Wharf is the main attraction of the harbour foreshore. It was redeveloped during the 1980s as part of a bicentennial project. There are splendid views from its promenade areas and outdoor cafés (see pp501–502). On the southern side of the harbour, Nobbys Lighthouse sits at the end of a long causeway; the vista back over old Newcastle makes the brief walk worthwhile.

Further on lies Fort Stratchley, built originally to repel the coal-seeking Russians in the 1880s. Despite constant surveillance, the fort did not open fire until the 1940s, when the Japanese shelled Newcastle during World War II. Good surfing beaches lie on either side of the harbour's entrance.

FRANCIS GREENWAY, CONVICT ARCHITECT

Until recently, Australian $10 notes bore the portrait of the early colonial architect Francis Greenway. This was the only currency in the world to pay tribute to a convicted forger. Greenway was transported from England to Sydney in 1814 to serve a 14-year sentence for his crime. Under the patronage of Governor Lachlan Macquarie, who appointed him Civil Architect in 1816, Greenway designed more than 40 buildings, of which 11 still survive today. He received a full King's Pardon in 1819, but soon fell out of favour because he charged exorbitant fees for his architectural designs while still on a government salary. Greenway eventually died in poverty in 1837.

Blue Mountains National Park ①

Kookaburra

THE LANDSCAPE of the Blue Mountains was more than 250 million years in the making as sediments built up then were eroded, revealing sheer cliff faces and canyons. Home to Aboriginal communities for an estimated 14,000 years, the rugged terrain proved, at first, a formidable barrier to white settlers (see p164), but since the 1870s it has been a popular holiday resort. The mountains get their name from the release of oil from the eucalyptus trees which causes a blue haze. Excellent drives and walking trails allow for easy exploration of the region.

The Zig Zag Railway is a steam train line between Sydney and Lithgow.

FLORA AND FAUNA IN THE BLUE MOUNTAINS

Possum

Many flora and fauna species which are unique to Australia can be easily seen in the Blue Mountains. For example, the superb lyrebird is a fan-tailed bird found in the forests, distinguishable by its high-pitched cry. The sassafras (Doryphora sassafras) tree is one of the species of the warm temperate rainforest and produces tiny white flowers. The shy brushtail possum seeks shelter in the woodlands by day and forages at night.

Jenolan Caves

Nine spectacular limestone caves are open to the public; stalactites and stalagmites can be seen in beautiful and striking formations.

The Cathedral of Ferns is an area of green foliage set amid streams, resembling tropical rainforest.

Mount Wilson

A basalt cap, the result of a now extinct volcano, provides the rich soil for the gardens of this attractive summer retreat.

Katoomba is the largest town in the vicinity of the national park and has a full range of accommodation for tourists.

Mount Tomah Botanic Garden

Cool-climate species from around the world are grown here, including rhododendrons from the Himalayas.

Exploring the Blue Mountains

THE BLUE MOUNTAINS, reaching 1,100 m (3,600 ft) above sea level at their highest point, at first made the early colonists virtual prisoners of the Sydney Cove area. Many settlers were convinced that plains suitable for grazing and crops would be found beyond the mountains, but attempts to reach the imagined pastures repeatedly failed. In 1813, however, three farmers, Gregory Blaxland, William Lawson and William Charles Wentworth, set out on a well-planned mission, following the ridge between the Grose and Cox rivers, and emerged successfully on the western side of the mountains. The construction of roads and a railway made the mountains an increasingly attractive destination, and resorts and country homes were soon established. In 1959, the Blue Mountains National Park was gazetted, ensuring the preservation of the large tracts of remaining wilderness.

Norman Lindsay, one of Australia's most recognized artists, inspired considerable controversy during his lifetime with his sumptuous nudes and risqué novels. Born in 1879, he bought his mountain retreat in 1913 and set about producing an enormous body of work, much of which reflects his rejection of the moral and sexual restraints of his era.

His beautifully preserved home is now a gallery for his many paintings, cartoons, mythological garden sculptures and children's books. There is a whole room devoted to The Magic Pudding, a perennial favourite with children and adults alike. There is also a re-creation of the interior of his original studio, and a peaceful garden set amid the mountain bushland.

Leura

I Echo Point, Katoomba. ☎ 1300 653 408. 🗓 first Sunday of the month.

This small town on the Great Western Highway, with its European gardens and Art Deco architecture, recalls the elegance of life in the 1920s. Its secluded, tree-lined main street is a magnet for fine art galleries, cafés, shops and up-market restaurants.

Six km (3.5 miles) from Leura, Everglades House is an Art Deco fantasy of curves, balconies and rose-pink walls. The Everglades gardens are considered classic examples of cool-climate design from the 1930s. They include a shaded alpine garden, a grotto pool, rhododendron stands, an arboretum and peacocks roaming around the grounds.

Some other gardens in the area are opened to the public during the Leura Garden Festival each October (see p36).

Visitors can get an overview of the surrounding landscape by taking the Cliff Drive to Katoomba. The lookout at Sublime Point, at the end of Sublime Point Road, also provides startling views across the Jamison Valley.

Scenic Skyway ride over the Blue Mountains from Katoomba

I Echo Point, Katoomba. ☎ 1300 653 408.

Katoomba is the bustling tourism centre of the Blue Mountains and a good base from which to explore the mountains. However, it still manages to retain a veneer of its gracious former self, when it first attracted wealthy Sydneysiders in need of mountain air during the 1870s. The Paragon Café, with its dark-wood panelling and mirrored walls, is a reminder of these glory days, as are the imposing guesthouses with their fresh air and beautiful views across the Jamison Valley.

Within a few minutes' drive of the town are the region's most popular attractions. Echo Point is home to a large information centre and lookout, with views across to the imposing bulk of Mount Solitary and the most famous of icons, the Three Sisters (see pp162–3). A short walk leads down to this striking rock formation, while further on the Giant Staircase – steps hewn out of the rock face – curls around its eastern side.

Picturesque tree-lined Main Street in Leura

Beyond the Staircase is the Leura Forest, a peaceful retreat and a superb example of the warm temperate rain-forest flora and fauna.

On the western side of town, the Scenic Skyway departs every ten minutes for a rope-way ride 205 m (670 ft) above the valley floor. Alternatively, the Scenic Railway offers a nerve-wracking plummet down a mountain gorge. Reputed to be the steepest rail track in the world, it was originally built in the 1880s to transport miners down to the valley's rich coal deposits.

Blackheath

F Govetts Leap Rd. C (02) 4787 8877.

Blackheath is a small village that offers a quieter prospect than many of the busy mountain towns further east. The excellent standard of restaurants and accommodation available in the town often induces visitors to stay one or two nights here, rather than make the return to Sydney the same day. But the real draw of this area is the chance to explore the mist-enshrouded rifts and ravines of the beautiful Grose Valley.

The best place to start is the Heritage Centre, 3 km (2 miles) from Blackheath along Govetts Leap Road. Displays document the geological, Aboriginal and European histories of the region and local flora and fauna, while park officers are available to offer advice on the best walks in the area. Govetts Leap, with its heady views across Grose Valley, provides a point of orientation and is the starting place for a number of tracks. A cliff-top track leads off in a southerly direction past Bridal Falls, the highest waterfalls in the Blue Mountains, and through stretches of exposed mountain heathland.

A steep and arduous 8-hour return trek into the valley leads to Blue Gum Forest, so called because of the smoky blue trunks of the eucalypt species that dominate this pretty woodland. The Grand Canyon is a destination only for the fit – this 5-hour walk, through deep gorges and sandstone canyons, sheds some light on the geological mysteries of the mountains.

Eroded gorge in Grose Valley, near the town of Blackheath

to small section of Orient Cave. The Jenolan Caves lie southwest of the mountain range. The Great Western Highway passes the grand old hotels of Mount Victoria before a south turn is taken at Hartley, the centre of the first grazing region established by Blaxland, Lawson and Wentworth from 1815 onwards. The southern stretch of the road, cutting across the escarpment of Kanimbla Valley, is one of the most scenic in the mountains.

Limestone formations in the Jenolan Caves

The Jenolan Caves were first discovered in 1838 and are remarkable for their complexity and accessibility. More than 300 subterranean chambers were formed in a limestone belt that was deposited more than 300 million years ago. The nine caves that are open to the public are replete with a variety of delicately wrought limestone formations, pools and rivers, including the ominously named Styx River.

Mount Tomah Botanic Gardens

Bells Line of Road. C (02) 4567 2154. O daily. C 25 Dec. IB W

Mount Tomah lies along the Bells Line of Road, a quiet but increasingly popular route with tourists to the area. Tomah takes its name from an indigneous word for “fern”. The Botanic Gardens were set up as an annex to Sydney's Royal Botanic Gardens (see pp102–103) in order to house species that would not survive the coastal conditions. Of special interest are the southern hemisphere plants which developed in isolation once Australia broke away from Gondwanaland into a separate continent (see p19).

The overall layout of the gardens is a feat of engineering and imagination, and the views north and south across Grose Valley are breathtaking.

A Tour of the Hunter Valley ③

THE FIRST COMMERCIAL VINEYARDS in Australia were established on the fertile flats of the Hunter River in the 1830s. Originally a specialist area for fortified wines, Tyrell's helped shift the focus towards new, high-quality modern wines. February and March are busy months with the Harvest Festival taking place from March to May and the Jazz in the Vines festival in October. With 74 wineries, mostly open daily, and a range of restaurants and hotels (see pp466–523), the Hunter Valley is a popular tourist destination.

Lake's Folly ③

Max Lake started this vineyard in the 1960s, successfully growing Cabernet Sauvignon grapes in the Hunter Valley for the first time since the 1900s.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Tour length: 60 km (37 miles). While there are no limits on the numbers of wineries that can be visited, three or four in one day will give time to taste and discuss the wines leisurely. Don't forget Australia's strict drink-driving laws (see p549).

Starting point: Cessnock is the gateway to the Hunter Valley and is home to its major visitors' centre.

Stopping-off points: Apart from the picnic areas and restaurants at the wineries, Pokolbin has plenty of cafés, a general store and a bush picnic area. The Mount Bright lookout gives a panoramic view over the region.

FLANKING THE NORTH of the Hunter Valley is the mountain range known as the Barringtons. One of the highest points in Australia, its high country, the "Barrington Tops", reaches 1,550 m (5,080 ft), and light snow is common in winter. The rugged mountains, cool-climate rainforest, gorges, cliffs and waterfalls make Barrington Tops a paradise for hikers, campers, bird-watchers and climbers. Its 280,000 ha (690,000 acres) of forest, with 1,000-year-old trees, are protected by the Barrington Tops National Park. The rainforest was declared a World Heritage Area in 1986 and a Wilderness Area in 1996 as part of the Central Eastern Rainforest Reserves (see pp22-3).

Barrington Tops has been a favourite weekend escape for Sydneysiders for more than 100 years. Tourist operators organize environmentally friendly 4WD trips into the heart of the wild forests, with camping along the Allyn River, hiking trails at Telegraphy and Jerusalem Creek and swimming in the rock pool at Lady's Well.

Some 35 buildings in Armidale are classified by the National Trust, testament to the land booms of the 19th century, including the town hall, courthouse and St Peter's Anglican Cathedral. The New England Regional Art Museum holds the A$20 million Howard Hinton and Chandler Coventry collections, with many works by Australian artists, including Tom Roberts and Norman Lindsay (see p30). SITUATED 70 km (43 miles) east of Glen Innes, Gibraltar Range National Park is known for its giant rocky tors towering 1,200 m (4,000 ft) above sea level, surrounded by heath and swamp land. The area is at its most beautiful in the summer, when wildflowers such as waratahs and Christmas bells come into bloom. The park also has good walking trails and camping facilities.

Gibraltar Range National Park is linked to Washpool National Park by a 100-km (60-mile) World Heritage walk. Washpool remains a wilderness park, accessible only to experienced walkers.

Glen Innes and its surrounding villages of Glencoe, Ben Lomond and Shannon Vale are known as Australia's "Celtic Country". Settled by Scottish, Welsh, Irish and Cornish immigrants in 1852, the area's heritage is celebrated by the annual Australian Celtic Festival (see p38). The town's Standing Stones are a traditional monument to all Celtic settlers.

Sapphire mining remains a major industry. Public digging, known as "fossicking", for sapphires, topaz, garnet and beryl is still possible near the mining villages of Emmaville and Torrington. Glen Innes hosts a gem and mineral fair in September each year.

THE RURAL TOWN of Tenterfield, to the north of the New England Tablelands, occupies a special place in Australian history. Often described as the "Birthplace of Our Nation", it was at the town's School of Arts building on 24 October 1889 that local politician and towering figure of 19th-century Australian politics, Sir Henry Parkes, made his historic

"One Nation" speech. The address explained his vision of all the colonies in Australia uniting to form one country. Parkes' Tenterfield address led to a popular movement of support, resulting in Australian Federation on 1 January 1901 (see p52). The School of Arts was the first building to be acquired by the New South Wales National Trust because of its political and historic importance.

Other historic buildings in this small town include the Victorian mansion Stannum House, the bluestone saddlers' shop (made famous in the song "Tenterfield Saddler"), and the restored courthouse with its glass ceiling.

Also not to be missed are Bald Rock and Boonoo Boonoo, about 40 km (25 miles) north of Tenterfield. Bald Rock is the second biggest monolith in Australia after Uluru (see pp278–81). It offers fine views of volcanic ranges to the east, Girraween National Park in Queensland to the north and Mount McKenzie to the south. Boonoo Boonoo Falls cascade 210 m (690 ft) into the gorge below, ideal for swimming.

TAMWORTH IS A thriving rural city, located at the centre of fertile agricultural plains. Yet despite its 150-year history, fine old buildings and claim to fame as the first Australian city with electric street lighting, it remains best known as Australia’s country music capital.

Every January, thousands of country music fans and performers flock here for the ten-day Country Music Festival, which includes country music, blue grass, busking, bush ballads, harmonica playing and the Golden Guitar Awards (see p37). Reflecting the city’s main interest there is the Tamworth Information Centre built in the shape of a horizontal guitar, the Country Music Gallery of Stars, where Australia’s country music greats are immortalized in wax, the Roll of Renown dedicated to musicians who have made a major contribution to the industry and the Country Music Hands of Fame cornerstone.

MUDGEE IS A magnificent old rural town with gardens and grand buildings, many of which are protected by the National Trust.

Situated on the banks of the Cudgong River, the town was first settled by William Lawson, who discovered its good grazing country in 1821. The settlement was surveyed and planned in 1824 by Robert Hoddle.

The design was so successful that he copied Mudgee’s grid layout 14 years later for the city of Melbourne (see pp374–5). Historic buildings not to be missed include the Regent Theatre on Church Street, the many churches, banks and civic buildings on Market Street, the railway station and the restored

West End Hotel that now houses the excellent Colonial Inn Museum.

Mudgee is also famous for its surrounding wineries and the Mudgee Wine Festival held each September (see p36). From the surrounding countryside come local gourmet foods such as yabbies, trout, lamb, peaches and asparagus.

ENVIRONS: During the 1850s and 1860s, gold was discovered to the south of Mudgee, bringing thousands of hopeful prospectors to the region (see pp50–51). The villages of Hill End, Hargraves, Windeyer and Sofala once had populations of more than 20,000 each, but became ghost towns once the boom was over. Hill End is the most famous of these and is now classed as a Living Historic Site with almost all of its buildings dating back to the 1870s. The creeks of Windeyer continued to yield alluvial gold until the 1930s. Panning for gold in the river is a popular tourist activity.

Northern New South Wales Coastline

THE NORTHERN New South Wales coastline is known for its mix of natural beauty, mild climate and good resorts. Australia's most easterly mainland point, Byron Bay, is an attractive, up-market resort which is enhanced by its unspoiled landscape and outstanding beaches. Elsewhere, clean and isolated beaches directly abut rainforest, with some national parks and reserves holding World Heritage status (see pp22–3). Sugar cane and bananas are commonly grown in the region.

Red Cliff Beach ④

Adjacent to the beautiful Yuraygir National Park, Red Cliff is one of several sandy, isolated beaches in the immediate vicinity.

Moonee Beach ⑤

A creek meandering through bush country to the ocean offers perfect opportunities for safe swimming, picnics and camping.

Urunga ⑥

Two rivers, the Bellingen and the Kalang, reach the ocean in this picturesque beach resort. Its safe waters make it a particularly popular holiday site for families.

Third Headland Beach ⑦

Like its neighbour Hungry Head Beach, 5 km (3 miles) north, Third Headland is a popular surfing beach with strong waves hitting the headland cliffs.

Grafton is a quaint 19th-century rural town, with elegant streets and riverside walks. The town is best known for its abundance of jacaranda trees, whose striking purple blooms are celebrated in a festival each October (see p37).

★ Crowdy Bay ⑫

Part of a national park, Crowdy Bay's lagoons, forests and swamps are abundant with native wildlife here. Coarse-fishing is a popular activity from the sea's edge.

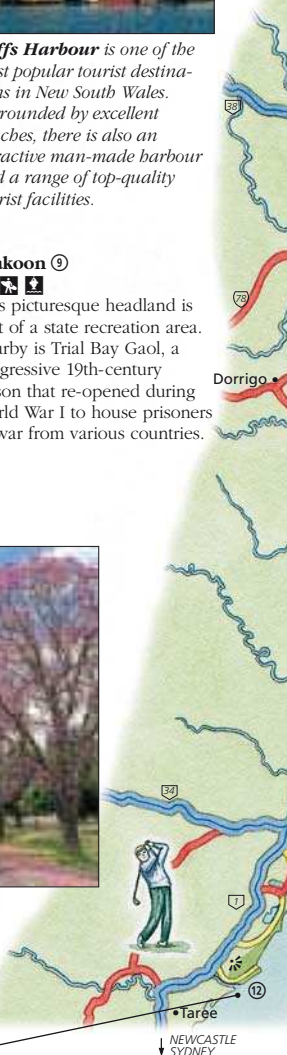

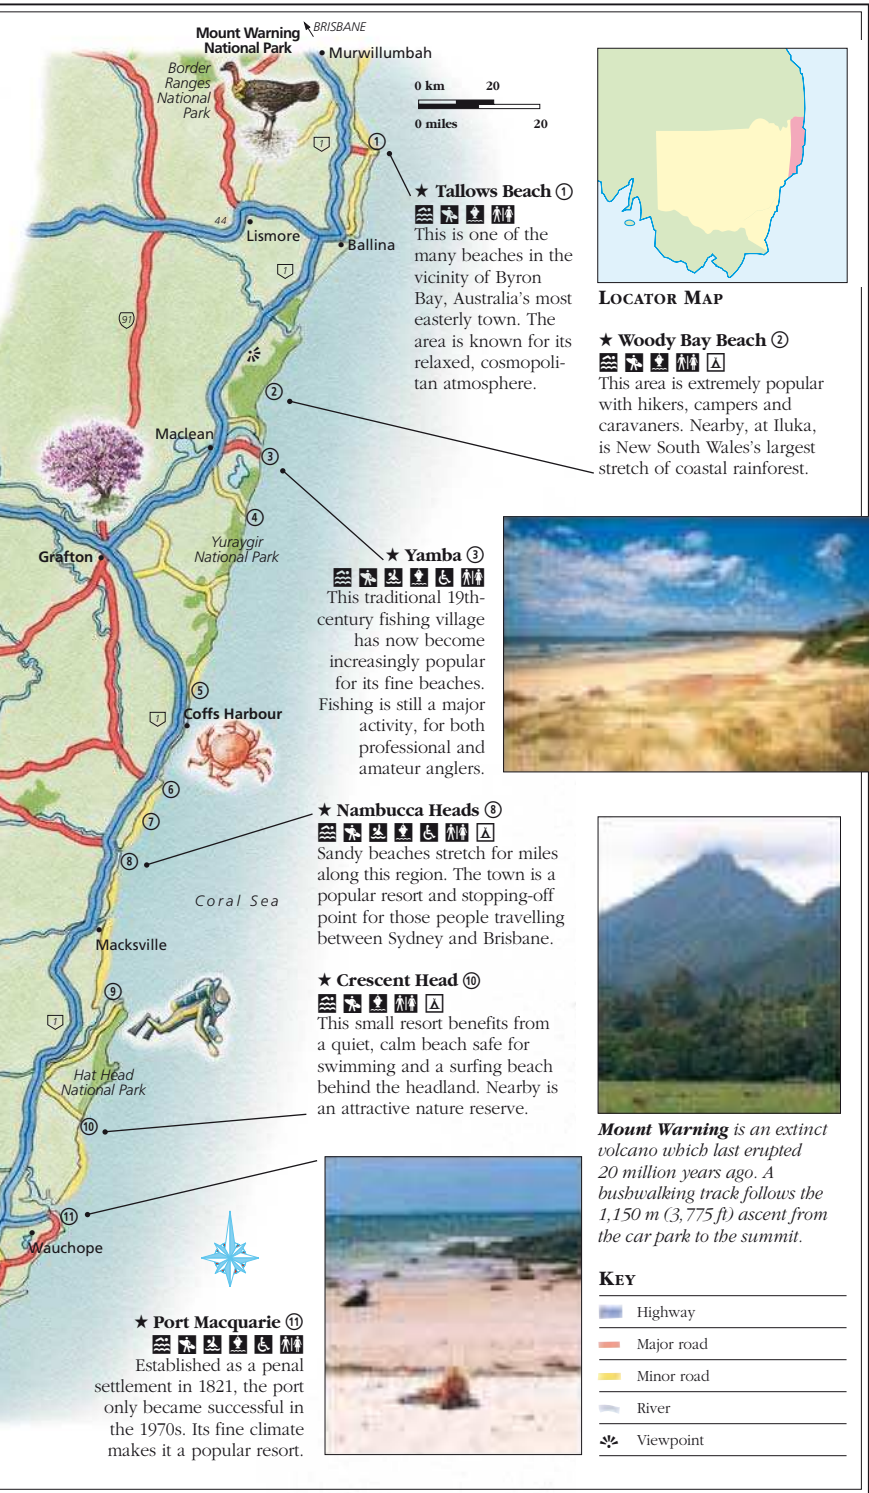

Coffs Harbour is one of the most popular tourist destinations in New South Wales. Surrounded by excellent beaches, there is also an attractive man-made harbour and a range of top-quality tourist facilities.

Arakoon ⑨

This picturesque headland is part of a state recreation area. Nearby is Trial Bay Gaol, a progressive 19th-century prison that re-opened during World War I to house prisoners of war from various countries.

★ Yamba ③

This traditional 19th-century fishing village has now become increasingly popular for its fine beaches. Fishing is still a major activity, for both professional and amateur anglers.

★ Nambucca Heads ⑧

Sandy beaches stretch for miles along this region. The town is a popular resort and stopping-off point for those people travelling between Sydney and Brisbane.

★ Crescent Head ⑩

This small resort benefits from a quiet, calm beach safe for swimming and a surfing beach behind the headland. Nearby is an attractive nature reserve.

Mount Warning is an extinct volcano which last erupted 20 million years ago. A bushwalking track follows the 1,150 m (3,775 ft) ascent from the car park to the summit.

★ Port Macquarie ⑪

Established as a penal settlement in 1821, the port only became successful in the 1970s. Its fine climate makes it a popular resort.

West of the Divide

IN STARK CONTRAST to the lush green of the Blue Mountains and the blue waters of the New South Wales coastline, the western region of the state is archetypal of Australia's Outback. This dusty, dry landscape, parched by the sun, is an understandably remote area, dotted with a few mining towns and national parks. Dubbo and Wagga Wagga are the main frontier towns, but anything beyond is commonly referred to as "Back o' Bourke" and ventured into by only the most determined of tourists. Even the most adventurous should avoid the area in high summer.

DUBBO IS LOCATED at the geographical heart of the state and is the regional capital of western New South Wales. The area was first noted for its rich agricultural potential in 1817 by explorer John Oxley, sited as it is on the banks of the Macquarie River. The city has since grown into a rural centre producing $45 million worth of food and agricultural goods annually.

Dubbo also has a strong colonial history and period architecture. Among the more interesting buildings are the 1876 Dubbo Museum, with its ornate ceilings and cedar staircase, the 1890 Italianate courthouse and the 1884 Macquarie Chambers, with their Tuscan columns and terracotta tiles.

At the Old Dubbo Gaol, visitors can hear the tragic story of Jacky Underwood, an Aborigine hung for his part in the Breeelong massacre of 1900, when eleven white settlers were killed. Dubbo magistrate Rolf Boldrewood drew on the characters of the gaol's inmates to write the classic novel Robbery Under Arms (see p30).

SITUATED ON the Darling River, part of Australia's longest river system, Bourke is a colourful town that was once the centre of the world's wool industry. It still produces 55,000 bales per year.

Bourke's heyday is evident in the colonial buildings and the old weir, wharf, lock and lift-up span bridge which recall the days of the paddle-steamer trade to Victoria (see p421). The town's cemetery tells something of Bourke's history: Afghan camel drivers who brought the animal to Australia from the Middle East in the 19th century are buried next to a number of bush-rangers and farm pioneers.

The town was established in 1883, when vast deposits of zinc, lead and silver were discovered in a 7-km (4-mile) long "Line of Lode" by the then-fledgling company, Broken Hill Pty Ltd. Broken Hill has since grown into a major town and BHP has become Australia's biggest corporation.

MUNGO WORLD HERITAGE AREA

Lake Mungo is an area of great archaeological significance. For 40,000 years, it was a 15-m (50-ft) deep lake, around which Aborigines lived. The lake then dried up, leaving its eastern rim as a wind-blown sand ridge known as the Walls of China. Its age was determined in the 1960s when winds uncovered an Aboriginal skeleton known as Mungo Man. Lake Mungo has been protected as part of the Willandra Lakes World Heritage Area since 1981 (see pp22–3).

are more pubs per head than any other city in the state and streets are named after metals.

Surprisingly, Broken Hill also has more than 20 art galleries featuring desert artists. The city is also the base of the Royal Flying Doctor Service (see p249) and School of the Air.

To the northwest of Broken Hill is Silverton, once a thriving silver mining community and now a ghost town. It is popular as a location for films such as Mad Max and Priscilla, Queen of the Desert.

The large Botanic Gardens and the Wagga Historical Museum are well worth a visit. The Widadjuri track is a popular walk along the Murrumbidgee River banks.

ENVIRONS: The gentle town of Gundagai, nesting beneath Mount Parnassus on the banks of the Murrumbidgee River, has been immortalized in the popular bush ballad "Along the Road to Gundagai". More tragic is Gundagai's place in history as the site of Australia's greatest natural disaster when catastrophic floods swept away the original town in 1852, drowning 83 inhabitants.

THE SOUTH COAST AND SNOWY MOUNTAINS

ALTHOUGH THE BUSIEST HIGHWAY IN AUSTRALIA runs through southern New South Wales, the area remains one of the most beautiful in the country. Its landscape includes the Snowy Mountains, the surf beaches of the far south, the historic Southern Highland villages and the farming towns of the Murray and Murrumbidgee plains.

Ever since European settlers crossed the Blue Mountains in 1812 (see p164), the southern plains of New South Wales around Goulburn, Yass and Albury have been prime agricultural land. Yet the wilderness of the Snowy Mountains to the east and the steep escarpment which runs the length of the beautiful South and Sapphire coasts, from Wollongong to the Victoria border, has never been completely tamed. Today, the splendour of southern New South Wales is protected by a number of large national parks.

The great Snowy Mountains offer alpine scenery at its best. In summer, the wildflower-scattered meadows, deep gorges and cascading mountain creeks seem to stretch endlessly into the distance; in winter, the jagged snow-capped peaks and twisted snow gums turn this summer walking paradise into a playground for keen downhill and cross-country skiers.

The area also has a long and colourful cultural heritage: Aboriginal tribes, gold diggers and mountain cattlemen have all left their mark here. During the 1950s and 1960s, the region became the birthplace of multicultural Australia, as thousands of European immigrants came to work on the Snowy Mountains Scheme, an engineering feat which diverted the flow of several rivers to provide hydroelectricity and irrigation for southeastern Australia.

But southern New South Wales is more than just landscapes; civilization is never far away. There are excellent restaurants and hotels along the coast, Wollongong is an industrial city and the gracious towns of the Southern Highlands offer historic attractions.

Exploring the South Coast and Snowy Mountains

THE GREAT DIVIDING RANGE, which runs from the Blue Mountains (see pp162–5) down to the Snowy Mountains and into Victoria, divides the region into three areas. There is the coastal strip, a zone of beautiful beaches, which starts at Wollongong and runs south for 500 km (310 miles) to Eden, hemmed in by the rising mountain range to its west. On the range lie the Southern Highlands, Mount Kosciuszko and the Snowy Mountains. West of the range are the farming plains of the Murrumbidgee River.

GETTING AROUND

A car is essential to do full justice to this region, with the Hume Hwy providing excellent access to the Southern Highlands and the western farming towns. Wollongong and the southern beaches are linked from Sydney to the Victoria border by the coastal Princes Hwy. From Canberra, the Monaro Hwy is the best route to the Snowy Mountains. From Bega to the east or Gundagai and Tumut in the west, take the Snowy Mountains Hwy. A train service between Sydney and Canberra stops at the Southern Highlands and Hume Hwy towns, while the coastal resorts are serviced by buses from both Sydney and Melbourne.

DESIGNATED a national park in 1879, the "Royal" is the oldest national park in Australia and the oldest in the world after Yellowstone in the USA. It covers 16,000 ha (37,000 acres) of spectacular landscape.

To the east, waves from the Pacific Ocean have undercut the sandstone and produced coastal cliffs, interspersed by creeks, waterfalls, lagoons and beaches. Sea eagles and terns nest in caves at the Curracurang Rocks, where there is also a quiet swimming hole. Heath vegetation on the plateau merges with woodlands on the upper slopes and rainforest in the gorges. The park is ideal for bushwalking, swimming and bird-watching.

THE THIRD LARGEST city in the state, Wollongong is situated on a coastline of beautiful surf beaches. Mount Kembla and Mount Keira provide a backdrop to the city.

Originally a coal and steel industrial city – the BHP steel mill at Port Kembla is still a major employer – Wollongong is fast building a reputation as a leisure centre.

Northbeach is the most famous of its 17 surf beaches. Flagstaff Point, with its lighthouse, boat harbour, beach views and seafood restaurants, is popular with visitors. The city also boasts Australia's largest regional art gallery, with an outstanding collection of 20th-century paintings and sculptures. The Nan Tien Temple, the largest Buddhist temple in the southern hemisphere, was built for the large Chinese community of greater Sydney.

QUAINT VILLAGES, country guesthouses, homesteads and beautiful gardens are scattered across the lush landscape of the Southern Highlands. The region has been a summer retreat for Sydneysiders for almost 100 years. Villages such as Bowral, Moss Vale, Berrima and Bundanoon are also ideal places in the winter for pottering around antiques shops, dining on hearty soups, sitting by open fires and taking bush walks and country drives. The region's gardens are renowned for their blaze of colours in the spring and autumn. The Corbett Gardens at Bowral are a showpiece during its Tulip Festival (see p36). Bowral is also home to the Bradman Museum, where a fascinating collection of photos and cricketing memorabilia commemorates the town's famous son, cricketer Sir Donald Bradman. Bradman is said to have first showed signs of greatness as a child, hitting a golf ball against a water tank stand with a wicket-wide strip of wood.

Visiting the village of Berrima is like stepping back in time. The settlement, now home to an abundance of antiques and craft shops, is one of the most unspoilt examples of a small Australian town of the 1830s.

Popular walks in the area include Mount Gibraltar, Carrington Falls, the magnificent Fitzroy Falls at the northern tip of Morton-Budawang National Park and the majestic Kangaroo Valley. The five Wombeyan Caves, west of the CLOURFUL COOMA has a rich history as a cattle, engineering and ski town. During the construction of the Snowy Mountains Scheme (see p175), Cooma was also the weekend base for the thousands of immigrants working up in the mountains during the week. Stories surviving from this era include tales of frontier-like shootouts in the main street, interracial romances and bush mountain feats. However, Cooma is now a sleepy rural town that acts as the gateway to the Snowy Mountains and the southern ski slopes.

The modern resort town of Jindabyne on Lake Jindabyne is home to the Kosciuszko National Park information centre, a myriad of ski shops and lodges, and plenty of nightlife. The two major ski resorts are Thredbo Village along the Alpine Way and the twin resort of Perisher Blue, linked by the ski tube train to Lake Crackenback and the Blue Cow ski fields. Take the chairlift from Thredbo in summer to walk to the summit of Australia's highest mountain, Mount Kosciuszko (see p152), or simply to stroll among the wildflowers and snow gums in the alpine meadows. Another recommended walk is to Blue Lake and the Cascades from Dead Horse Gap. Lake Eucumbene and the Thredbo and Eucumbene rivers offer excellent fly-fishing.

ENVIRONS: The ghost settlement of Kiandra has a marked historic walking trail detailing the gold rush era in the town (see pp50–51). Nearby is the gentle ski resort of Mount Selwyn and the spectacular Yarrangobilly Caves with their underground walks set among limestone stalactites and stalagmites, and hot thermal pools.

FROM NOWRA to the border with Victoria, the south coast of New South Wales is a magical mix of white sand beaches, rocky coves and coastal bush covered with spotted gums and wattles, and alive with a variety of birds. The coastline is rich in Aboriginal sites, fishing villages and unspoilt beach settlements. The 400 km (250 miles) of coast are divided into three distinct areas – the Shoalhaven Coast to the north, the Eurobodalla (“Land of Many Waters”) Coast in the centre and the Sapphire Coast in the far south.

Central Tilba is a delightful historic farming village, backed by the 800-m (2,600-ft) Mount Dromedary. The town itself is famous for its weatherboard cottages and shops, now housing some of the region’s finest cafés and arts and crafts shops, and its cheese and wine. The cheese factory and wineries are all open to visitors.

Nowra is the town centre of the beautiful Shoalhaven Coast, near the mouth of the Shoalhaven River. The name means “black cockatoo” in the local Aboriginal language. Nearby are the resorts of Culburra and Shoalhaven Heads, adjacent to Seven Mile Beach National Park.

Ulladulla is a small fishing village flanked by the dove-cote-shaped peak of Pigeon House Mountain in the Morton-Budawang National Park. A bushwalk offers breathtaking coastal views.

CANBERRA AND AUSTRALIAN CAPITAL TERRITORY

LOCATED WITHIN NEW SOUTH WALES, some 300 km (185 miles) southwest of Sydney, Canberra is Australia's capital and its political heartland. The city was planned in 1908 as the new seat of federal parliament to end rivalry between Sydney and Melbourne. The surrounding Australian Capital Territory features bush and mountain terrain.

Canberra was once little more than a sheep station on the edge of the Molonglo River. American architect Walter Burley Griffin won an international competition to design the city. He envisaged a spacious, low-level, modern city, with its major buildings centred on the focal point of Lake Burley Griffin. Canberra (its name is based on an Aboriginal word meaning "meeting place") is a city of contradictions. It consists of more than just politics, diplomacy and monuments. Lacking the traffic and skyscrapers of Australia's other main cities, it has a serenity and country charm suited to strolling around the lake, bush driving and picnicking.

Canberra is the national capital and the centre of political and administrative power in Australia, yet it is also a rural city, ringed by gum trees, with the occasional kangaroo seen hopping down its suburban streets. The city holds the majority of the nation's political, literary and artistic treasures, and contains important national institutions such as the High Court of Australia, the Australian National University and the Australian War Memorial, but it has a population of fewer than 500,000. These contradictions are the essence of the city's attraction.

Canberra's hidden delights include Manuka's elegant cafés (see pp503–5), excellent local wines and sophisticated restaurants. Special events include the annual spring flower festival, Floriade, which turns the north shore of the lake into a blaze of colour, and the spectacular hot-air ballooning festival in April.

Outside the city lie the region's natural attractions. Tidbinbilla Nature Reserve is home to wild kangaroos, wallabies, emus, koalas and platypuses. The Murrumbidgee River is excellent for canoeing, and the wild Namadgi National Park has bush camping, Aboriginal art sites, alpine snow gums and mountain creeks for trout fishing.

Exploring Canberra and ACT

CENTRAL CANBERRA lies around Lake Burley Griffin, framed by the city's four hills – Black Mountain and Mount Ainslie to the north and Capital Hill and Red Hill to the south. Most of Canberra's main sights are accessible from the lake. Scattered throughout the northern suburbs are other places of interest such as the Australian Institute of Sport. To the south lies the wilderness and wildlife of Namadgi National Park.

The Parliamentary Triangle

CANBERRA'S MAJOR MONUMENTS, national buildings and key attractions are all situated around Lake Burley Griffin within the Parliamentary Triangle. Designed to be the focal point of Canberra's national activities by the architect Walter Burley Griffin (see p189), the Parliamentary Triangle has Capital Hill at its apex, topped by Parliament House. Commonwealth Avenue and Kings Avenue fan out from Capital Hill, cross the lake and end at Parkes Way. Running at a right angle from the base of the triangle is Anzac Parade, which leads to the Australian War Memorial (see pp192–3) and completes the basic symmetry of Burley Griffin's plan.

Exploring the Parliamentary Triangle

CANBERRA, with its still lake and impressive national monuments and institutions, can at first glance appear cold and somewhat forbidding to visitors. But venture inside the various buildings dotted around Lake Burley Griffin within the Parliamentary Triangle, and a treasure trove of architecture, art, history and politics will be revealed. The lake itself, surrounded by gardens, cycle paths and outdoor sculptures and memorials, is a picturesque location for relaxing picnics and leisurely strolls. Exploring the entire Parliamentary Triangle can take one or two days. It is, however, more easily tackled by dividing it into two parts, taking in first the north and then the south of the lake.

Built in 1927 as the first parliamentary building in the new national capital, Old Parliament House was the centre of Australian politics for more than 60 years. It was replaced by the new Parliament House in 1988 (see pp190–91).

This building has witnessed many historic moments: Australia's declaration of war in 1939; news of the bombing of Australia's northern shores by the Japanese in 1942; the disappearance and presumed drowning of Prime Minister Harold Holt in 1967 and the dismissal of the Whitlam government by Sir John Kerr in 1975 (see pp54–5).

Kings Hall, the old House of Representatives and Senate chambers can all be explored. Visitors can also examine the hidden peephole with its precision lens set in the wall of the prime minister's office, discovered during renovations in 1990. A sound and light show, "Order, Order", relives the building's greatest moments. The National Portrait Gallery's main collection is held here, and they also have an annex in Commonwealth Place.

Duntroon Station, for their head ploughman. It was later occupied by bullock driver George Blundell, his wife, Flora, and their eight children.

This excellent example of a colonial cottage also conveys all the remoteness of early farming life. Blundell's Cottage once looked out over sheep paddocks, but these were flooded by Lake Burley Griffin (see pp186–7).

The rotunda housing the National Capital Exhibition, north of Lake Burley Griffin at Regatta Point, is recommended as a starting point for any tour of Canberra. Inside are models, videos and old photographs showing the history and growth of Canberra as the federal capital of Australia. These provide an excellent orientation of the city's major features before any further tour is undertaken.

From the windows of the rotunda is a clear view of Lake Burley Griffin, the Parliamentary Triangle and the Captain Cook Memorial Jet and Globe. The jet fountain and bronze, copper and enamel globe on the edge of the lake were added to the city's special features in 1970, as a bicentennial commemoration of the claiming of the east coast of Australia by

Neo-Classical façade of Old Parliament House and its impressive forecourt

British navy officer Captain James Cook in 1770 (see p46). The elegant fountain lifts a column of water 147 m (480 ft) out of the lake from 10am until noon and from 2pm until 4pm daily, provided the weather is not too windy.

Containing more than 5 million books, as well as copies of every newspaper and magazine published in Australia, thousands of cine-films, tapes, manuscripts, prints, maps and old photographs, it is the nation's largest library and leading research and reference centre.

There are also historic items on display such as Captain Cook's original journal from his Endeavour voyages. Selected old cine-films from the library's archives are regularly shown.

The building, designed by Sydney architect Walter Bunning and completed in 1972, includes some notable works of art. Foremost are the modern stained-glass windows by Australian architect and artist Leonard French, made of Belgian chunk glass and depicting the planets. There are also the Australian life tapestries by French artist Mathieu Mategot.

WALTER BURLEY GRIFFIN

In 1911, the Australian government, then located in Melbourne, decided on Canberra as the best site for a new national capital. An international competition for a city plan was launched, and the first prize was awarded to a 35-year-old American landscape architect, Walter Burley Griffin. Influenced by the design of Versailles, his plan was for a garden city, with lakes, avenues and terraces rising to the focal point of Parliament House atop Capital Hill. On 12 March 1913, a foundation stone was laid by Prime Minister Andrew Fisher, but bureaucratic arguments and then World War I intervened. By 1921, little of Canberra had begun to be constructed, and Burley Griffin was dismissed from his design post. He stayed in Australia until 1935, when, reduced to municipal designs, he left for India. He died there in 1937, although his original vision lives on in the ever-expanding city of Canberra.

PARLIAMENT HOUSE is the centre of government and democracy in Australia. Opened in 1988, the A$1.1 billion building on Capital Hill is the fourth home of the national parliament since 1901, when Australia first became a federation (see p52). The architecture of the building, with the open planning of its 4,700 rooms, reflects Australia's commitment to democratic government.

AUSTRALIAN SOCIETY is diverse, multicultural and vibrant, and the 100,000 works of art owned by the National Gallery of Australia reflect the spirit of the country. The National Gallery opened in 1982, and the core of its collection consists of Australian art, from European settlement to present day, by some of its most famous artists, such as Tom Roberts, Arthur Boyd, Sidney Nolan and Margaret Preston (see p30). The oldest art in Australia is that of its indigenous inhabitants (see pp28–9), and the Aboriginal art collection offers fine examples of both ancient and contemporary works. The gallery's Asian and international collections are also growing. Modern sculptures are on display in the gardens.

ESTABLISHED BY AN Act of Parliament in 1980, the National Museum of Australia moved to its permanent home on the Acton Peninsula in early 2001. It shares its location with the Australian Institute of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Studies. The innovative, purpose-built facility quickly became an architectural landmark. Its unique design was inspired by the idea of a jigsaw puzzle.

Before beginning a tour of the museum, visitors can experience an audiovisual introduction to the museum in the Circa, a novel rotating cinema. A huge, three-dimensional map of Australia is visible from three floors. Using digital animation and interactive media stations, it helps to place the displays in their geographical context.

The permanent exhibitions explore the people, events and issues that have shaped and influenced the country. The museum's aim is to be a focus for sharing stories and promoting debate, and interactive displays involve visitors by inviting their contributions. Many rare objects from the museum's collection are also on display.

The First Australians gallery is the largest permanent exhibition and relates the stories and experiences of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people. It not only illuminates their history but also deals frankly with contemporary social issues. Displays include a monumental public sand sculpture, used in burial ceremonies in northeast Arnhem land, and a Torres Strait Island outrigger canoe.

Nation: Symbols of Australia uses more than 700 props and artifacts to look at the way symbols help to define a sense of national identity. Exhibits include the kangaroo, as well as official symbols, such as the flag and Anzac Day. The Horizons gallery reviews the ways in which immigration has shaped the country. Since 1788 more than 10 million people have arrived in Australia as immigrants, and this gallery uses individual stories, as well as objects from the museum's collection, to look at the remarkable diversity of the Australian experience.

One of the more moving exhibitions is Eternity, in which the personal stories of 50 Australians are brought to life. The intention of this unique display is to explore history through emotion. "Your Story", an interactive exhibit, allows visitors to record their own stories, which then become part of the collection.

The museum also acknowledges the significance of the land in Australia's identity. In Tangled Destinies, the relationship between people and the environment is examined.

The landscaping of the museum is also notable and includes the striking Garden of Australian Dreams, which incorporates many symbols of Australian culture. The Backyard Café spills out into the innovative garden.

In addition, the museum hosts a range of temporary exhibitions. There are also children's galleries and performance spaces, as well as a television broadcast studio.

AUSTRALIA's second-largest state encompasses some 1,727,000 sq km (667,000 sq miles) and is the country's most popular tourist destination, after Sydney, due to its tropical climate. Brisbane, the state capital, is a modern city, with skyscrapers looking out over the Brisbane River. The southern coastline is a haven for surfers and is the region that most typifies the nation's beach culture. Further north is the Great Barrier Reef, one of the natural wonders of the world. Inland, cattle stations and copper mines generate Queensland's wealth. The Far North remains remote and unspoiled, with rainforests and savannah land abundant with native wildlife.

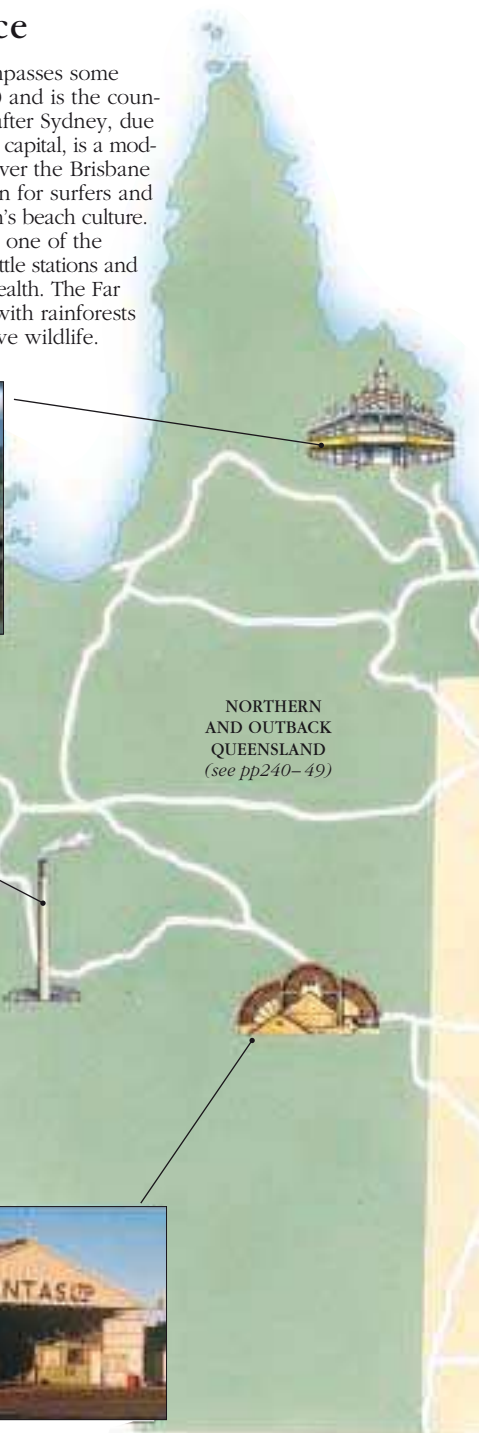

Cairns is Queensland's most northerly city and is a popular boarding point for touring the Great Barrier Reef. The city's hub is its esplanade, lined with cafés (see p246).

Mount Isa is Australia's largest inland city and revolves almost entirely around its copper, zinc and lead mining industries (see p249).

Ravenswood is now a ghost town, but its lovingly restored Victorian buildings evoke the atmosphere of its heyday during the 1860s when it was at the centre of Queensland's gold rush (see p238).

The Great Barrier Reef is the largest coral reef in the world. Hundreds of islands scatter the coastline, but only a few are developed for tourists, who come here to dive among the coral and tropical fish (see pp204–209).

Maryborough is known for its Queenslander houses, their wide verandas shading residents from the tropical sun (see p233).

Brisbane, the state capital, is a highly modern yet relaxing city. Skyscrapers blend with older edifices, such as the impressive City Hall (see pp210–25).

Surfers Paradise is the main city of the Gold Coast region and more than lives up to its name. Chic hotels, pulsating nightclubs, high fashion stores and beach poseurs can all be found here (see p231).

The Great Barrier Reef

Saddled butterfly fish

CORAL REEFS are among the oldest and most primitive forms of life, dating back at least 500 million years. Today, the Great Barrier Reef is the largest reef system in the world, covering 2,000 km (1,250 miles) from Bundaberg to the tip of Cape York and an area of approximately 350,000 sq km (135,000 sq miles). Between the outer edges of the reef and the mainland, there are more than 2,000 islands and almost 3,000 separate reefs, of differing types. On islands with a fringing reef, coral can be viewed at close hand, although the best coral is on the outer reef, about 50 km (30 miles) from the mainland.

The channel of water between the inner reef and Queensland's mainland is often as deep as 60 m (200 ft) and can vary in width between 30 km (20 miles) and 60 km (40 miles).

Coral is formed by tiny marine animals called polyps. These organisms have an external "skeleton" of limestone. Polyps reproduce by dividing their cells and so becoming polyp colonies.

Fringing reefs surround islands or develop off the mainland coast as it slopes away into the sea.

TYPICAL SECTION OF THE REEF

In this typical section of the Great Barrier Reef, a deep channel of water runs close to the mainland. In shallower water further out are a variety of reef features including coral cays, platform reefs and lagoons. Further out still, where the edge of the continental shelf drops off steeply, is a system of ribbon reefs.

Platform reefs form in shallow water, growing outwards in a circle or oval rather than upwards in a wall.

Platform reef

Coral cays are sand islands, formed when reef skeletons and other debris such as shells are exposed to the air and gradually ground down by wave movement into fine sand.

Queensland's tropical rainforest is moist and dense, thriving on the region's heavy, monsoon-like rains and rich soil.

Tidal flats consist of either dead or dying coral, since coral cannot survive exposure to air for an extended period of time.

Coral on the outer reef is built up in "walls" on ancient limestone bases. The coral survives down to a depth of about 30 m (100 ft), where enough sunlight penetrates the water and the temperature is above 17.5°C (65°F).

Ribbon reefs are narrow strips that occur only in the north along the edge of the continental shelf. Exactly why they form here remains a mystery to marine biologists.

HOW THE REEF WAS FORMED

The growth of coral reefs is dependent on sea level, as coral cannot grow above the water line or below 30 m (100 ft). As sea level rises, old coral turns to limestone, on top of which new coral can build, eventually forming barrier reefs. The Great Barrier Reef consists of thousands of separate reefs and is comparatively young, most of it having formed since the sea level rose after the end of the last Ice Age. An outer reef system corresponds with Queensland's continental shelf. Reef systems nearer the mainland correspond with submerged hills.

1 Approximately 18,000 years ago, during the last Ice Age, waters were low, exposing a range of forested hills. Coral grew in the shallow waters of the continental shelf.

2 Approximately 9,000 years ago, following the last Ice Age, the water level rose to submerge the hills. Coral began to grow in new places.

3 Over succeeding millennia, coral formed "walls" on the continental shelf (the outer reef), while an array of fringing and platform reefs, coral cays and lagoons formed around the former hills (the inner reef).

Life on the Great Barrier Reef

angelfish

MORE THAN 2,000 species of fish and innumerable species of hard and soft coral are found in the waters of the Great Barrier Reef. The diversity of life forms is extraordinary, such as echinoderms (including sea urchins), crustaceans and sponges. There is also an array of invertebrates, such as the graceful sea slug, some 12 species of sea grasses and 500 types of algae. The reef islands and coral cays support a wonderfully colourful variety of tropical birdlife. This environment is protected by the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park Authority, established by an Act of Parliament in 1975.

Diving amid the dazzling colours and formations of soft coral.

Hard coral is formed from the outer skeleton of polyps (see p204). The most common species is staghorn coral.

Soft coral has no outer skeleton and resembles the fronds of a plant, rippling in the waves.

Wobbegongs are members of the shark family. They sleep during the day under rocks and caves, camouflaged by their skin tones.

Manta rays are huge fish, measuring up to 6 m (20 ft) across. Despite their size, they are gentle creatures that are happy to be touched by divers.

Potato cod are known for their friendly demeanour and are often happy to swim alongside divers.

Great white sharks are occasional visitors to the reef, although they usually live in the open ocean and swim in schools.

Coral groupers inhabit the reef waters and grow up to 15 kg (33 lbs). They are recognizable by their deep red skin.

Giant clams, which are large bivalves, are sadly a gourmet delicacy. Australian clams are now protected by law to save them from extinction.

The sea bed of the Barrier Reef is 60 m (195 ft) deep at its lowest point.

THE FRAGILE REEF

Ecotourism is the only tourism that is encouraged on the Great Barrier Reef. The important thing to remember when on the reef is to look but not touch. Coral is easily broken; avoid standing on it and be aware that the taking of coral is strictly forbidden and carefully monitored. Camping on the reef's islands requires a permit from the Great Barrier Reef Marine Park Authority.

Beaked coralfish are abundant and some of the most attractive fish of the Barrier Reef. They often swim in pairs, in shallow waters and around coral beads.

Gobies feed on sand, ingesting the organic matter. They are found near the shoreline.

THE REEF AS A MARINE HABITAT

Hard corals are the building blocks of the reef. Together with soft corals, they form the "forest" within which the fish and other sea creatures dwell.

Goatfish

Clown anemonefish have an immunity to the stinging tentacles of sea anemones, among which they reside.

Moray eels grow to 2 m (6 ft) in length, but are gentle enough to be hand-fed by divers.

Batfish swim in large groups and colonize areas of the reef for long periods before moving on elsewhere. They mainly feed on algae and sea jellies.

BIRDS OF THE GREAT BARRIER REEF

Gulls, gannets, frigate birds, shearwaters and terns all make use of the rich environment of the islands of the Great Barrier Reef to breed and rear their young, largely safe from mainland predators such as cats and foxes. The number of sea birds nesting on some of the coral cays (see p204) is astounding – for example, on the tiny area of Michaelmas Cay, 42 km (26 miles) northeast of Cairns, there are more than 30,000 birds, including herons and boobies.

Red-footed booby

The crown of thorns starfish feeds mainly on staghorn coral. In the 1960s, a sudden growth in the numbers of this starfish led to worries that it would soon destroy the whole reef. However, many now believe that such a population explosion is a natural and common phenomenon. It contributes to reef life by destroying old coral and allowing new coral to generate.

Activities on the Great Barrier Reef

Ornate butterfly fish

FEWER THAN 20 of the Great Barrier Reef's 2,000 islands cater for tourists (see map and table below). Accommodation on the islands ranges from luxury resorts to basic camp sites. To make the most of the coral, take a tourist boat trip to the outer reef; most operators provide glass-bottomed boats or semi-submersibles to view the coral. The best way of seeing the reef, however, is by diving or snorkelling. There are numerous day trips from the mainland to the reef and between the islands.

Snorkelling is one of the most popular activities in the Barrier Reef, offering the chance to see beautiful tropical fish at close range.

DIVING ON THE GREAT BARRIER REEF

The Great Barrier Reef is one of the most popular, as well as one of the more reasonably priced, places to learn to dive in the world.

The best places to find dive schools are Townsville or Cairns, although many schools exist along the coast. Some boat trips also offer hand-held dives for complete beginners; some offer night dives.

Heron Island is one of the few coral cay resorts and is known for its excellent diving. From October to March, turtle-spotting is a popular activity as they make their way up the beach to lay their eggs. Bird-watching is also popular as the island's pisonia trees are home to thousands of birds, including terns. Guided nature walks around the cay are available.

Gorgonian fan coral grows in thickets in the deep waters of the Barrier Reef and is recognizable by its orange-yellow colour.

Scuba is an acronym for Self-contained Underwater Breathing Apparatus.

Hamilton Island is a popular resort island featuring a wide range of activities, including parasailing, skydiving, golf, tennis and children's entertainments.

BRISBANE

BRISBANE IS THE CAPITAL of Queensland and, with a population of over 1.5 million, ranks third in size in Australia after Sydney and Melbourne. Situated on the Brisbane River and surrounded by misty blue hills, the city is known for its scenic beauty, balmy climate and friendly atmosphere. Its tropical vegetation is a great attraction, particularly the bougainvillea, poinciana and fragrant frangipani.

In 1823, the Governor of New South Wales, Sir Thomas Brisbane, decided that some of the more intractable convicts in the Sydney penal settlement needed more secure incarceration. The explorer John Oxley was dispatched to investigate Moreton Bay, noted by Captain Cook on his journey up the east coast 50 years earlier. Oxley landed at Redcliffe and thought he had stumbled across a tropical paradise. He was soon disappointed, however, as the reality failed to live up to expectations – water was short, the local Aborigines were decidedly hostile when they realized their land was being purloined and the convicts proved less than willing labourers. It was therefore decided to move the colony inland up the Brisbane River.

Free settlers began arriving in 1837, although they were not permitted to move closer than 80 km (50 miles) to the famously harsh penal settlement. This set a pattern of decentralization which is still evident today: Brisbane consists of several distinct communities as well as the central area. The city's growth was rapid and, in 1859, when Queensland became a self-governing colony, Brisbane was duly named as the state capital.

As Queensland's natural resources, including coal, silver, lead and zinc, were developed, so its major city flourished. Brisbane's status as a truly modern city, however, is relatively recent, beginning with a mining boom in the 1960s. Hosting the Commonwealth Games in 1982 and the 1988 Expo were also milestones, bringing thousands of visitors to the city. Today, Brisbane is a cosmopolitan place boasting some superb restaurants, streetside cafés and a lively arts scene. Yet amid all the high-rises and modernity, pockets of traditional wooden cottages with verandas can still be found, and the relaxed manner of the locals tempers the urban bustle.

Exploring Central Brisbane

BRISBANE'S CITY CENTRE fits neatly in a U-shaped loop of the Brisbane River, so one of the best ways to get acquainted with the city is by ferry. The city centre can also be easily explored on foot. The streets follow a grid and are named after British royalty: queens and princesses run north–south, kings and princes run east–west. Brisbane's suburbs also have their own distinct feel: to the east is chic Kangaroo Point; just west of the centre is trendy Paddington; while to the northwest Fortitude Valley has a multi-cultural population and wonderful restaurants.

GETTING AROUND

Tours of the city centre are readily available and public transport is cheap and efficient. City centre bus stops are colour-coded for easy route identification and the City Circle bus No. 333 does a clockwise loop around the main city area. The best place for boarding the city's ferries is Riverside Centre.

Street-by-Street: Central Brisbane

CENTRAL BRISBANE is a blend of glass and steel high-rises co-existing with graceful 19th-century constructions. The latter fortunately managed to survive the frenzy of demolishing old buildings that took place throughout the country during the 1970s. Queen Street, now a pedestrian mall, is the hub of the city. Reflecting the city's beginnings as a port, most of the historic buildings are found near the river. Near the city's first Botanical Gardens, which border Alice Street, many old pubs have been renovated to cater for a largely business-lunch clientele.

QUEENSLAND'S Parliament House was designed in French Renaissance style by architect Charles Tiffin, who won an architectural competition. Begun in 1865, it was completed in 1868. Tiffin added features more suited to Queensland's tropical climate, such as shady colonnades, shutters and an arched roof which is made from Mount Isa copper (see p249). Other notable features are the cedar staircases and the intricate gold leaf detailing on the Council Chamber ceilings.

The building is still used for its original purpose and the public is permitted into the chambers when parliament is not in progress. Unlike other state parliaments, consisting of an Upper and Lower House, Queensland has only one parliamentary body.

Parliament House is also notable as being the first legislative building in the British Empire to be lit by electricity.

welcome haven from the city's usual bustle and high-rise buildings.

In its earliest incarnation, the area was used as a vegetable garden by convicts. It was laid out in its present form in 1855 by the colonial botanist Walter Hill, who was also the first director of the gardens. An avenue of bunya pines dates back to the 1850s, while an avenue of weeping figs was planted in the 1870s.

Hundreds of water birds, such as herons and plovers, are attracted to the lakes dotted throughout the gardens' 18 ha (44 acres). Brisbane River's renowned mangroves are now a protected species and can be admired from a specially built boardwalk.

COMPLETED IN 1930, the Neo-Classical City Hall is home to Brisbane City Council, the largest council in Australia.

Brisbane's early settlement is depicted by a beautiful sculpted tympanum above the main entrance. In the King George Square foyer, are some fine examples of traditional craftsmanship are evident in the floor mosaics, ornate ceilings and woodwork carved from Queensland timbers. City Hall's 92-m (300-ft) Italian Renaissance-style tower gives a panoramic view of the city from a platform at its top. A display of contemporary art and Aboriginal art and ceramics is housed in the Museum of Brisbane.

The attractive King George Square, facing City Hall, continues to resist the encroachment of high-rise office blocks and has several interesting statues, including Form del Mito by Arnaldo Pomodoro.

The work's geometric forms and polished surfaces, for which this Italian sculptor is noted, reflect the changing face of the city from morning through to night. The bronze Petrie Tableau, by Tasmanian sculptor Stephen Walker, was designed for Australia's bicentenary. It commemorates the pioneer families of Brisbane and depicts one of Queensland's earliest explorers, Andrew Petrie, being bid farewell by his family as he departs on an inland expedition.

RESTORED BY THE University of Queensland in 1994, Customs House, with its landmark copper dome and stately Corinthian columns, is now open to the public. Commissioned in 1886, this is one of Brisbane's oldest buildings, predating both City Hall (see p217) and the Treasury. Early renovations removed the hall and staircase, but these have now been carefully reconstructed from the original plans. Today, the building is used for numerous civic functions, and houses an art gallery and a restaurant.

Originally the colony's first industrial building, it proved unworkable without the availability of trained operators, so it was equipped with treadmills to punish recalcitrant convicts. It later served as a time signal, with a gun fired and a ball dropped each day at exactly 1pm.

The picturesque mill was also chosen as the first television image in Australia in the 1920s. The windmill is not open to the public, but it makes a striking photograph.

and 1890s. It then degenerated into one of Brisbane's seedier areas.

In the 1980s, the city council began to revive the district. It is now the bohemian centre of Brisbane, with some of the city's best restaurants (see pp505–6). McWhirter's Emporium, an Art Deco landmark, is home to a popular indoor clothes market. On Saturday mornings, there is also a busy outdoor market in Brunswick Street. The area should be avoided at night.

Also within the valley is Brisbane's Chinatown, a bustling area of Asian restaurants, supermarkets, cinemas and martial arts centres. The lions at the entrance to the area were turned around when a feng shui expert considered their original position to be bad for business.

It then became an unofficial government house until the real Government House was completed in 1862 (see p217).

The centre of the new colony's social life, Newstead House was the scene of lavish parties. A huge fig tree, under which elegant carriages once waited, still graces the drive. Restored by the Newstead House Trust from 1976, the house has been refurbished with Victorian antiques.

Mount Coot-tha Forest Park offers both spectacular views and attractive picnic areas. The Aboriginal name means "mountain of dark native honey", a reference to the tiny bees found in the area. On a clear day, from the summit lookout you can see Brisbane, snugly encircled by the river, Moreton and Stradbroke islands, the Glasshouse Mountains (so named by Captain Cook because they reminded him of the glass furnaces in his native Yorkshire) and the Lamington Plateau backing onto the Gold Coast (see pp230–31). The park also contains some excellent, easygoing walking trails through the woodland, including Aboriginal trails which detail traditional uses of native plants.

BRISBANE FOREST PARK, within the D'Aguilar Mountain Range, stretches for more than 50 km (30 miles) northwest of Brisbane city centre. Covering more than 28,500 ha (70,250 acres) of natural bushland and eucalypt forests, the park offers driving routes with breathtaking views over the surrounding countryside. The most scenic driving route is along Mount Nebo Road, which winds its way through the lush mountains.

Koala at Lone Pine Koala Sanctuary

Another scenic drive extends from Samford up to the charming mountain village of Mount Glorious and down the other side. It is worth stopping from time to time to hear the distinctive calls of bellbirds and whipbirds.

Six km (3.5 miles) past Mount Glorious is the Wivenhoe Outlook, with spectacular views down to Lake Wivenhoe, an artificial lake created to prevent the Brisbane River from flooding the city. One km (0.6 miles) north of Mount Glorious is the entrance to Maijala Recreation Area, where there are picnic areas, some wheelchair accessible, and several walking trails of varying lengths, from short walks to longer, half-day treks. These pass through the rainforest, which abounds with animal life. Other excellent half-day walks are at Manorina and at Jolly's Lookout, the oldest formal lookout in the park, which has a good picnic area. Also in the park is the Westridge Outlook, a boardwalk with sweeping views, which is totally wheelchair-accessible.

The engrossing Walkabout Creek Wildlife Centre at the park's headquarters is a re-created large freshwater environment. Water dragons, pythons, water rats, catfish and tiny rainbow fish flourish within these natural surroundings. Visitors also have the chance to see the extraordinary lungfish, a unique species which is equipped with both gills and lungs. The on-site restaurant looks out over the beautiful bush landscape.

About 4 km (2 miles) from the park headquarters is Bellbird Grove, which includes an outdoor Aboriginal collection of bark huts. It has a picnic area and swing ropes for children to enjoy. There are also play areas at Ironbark Gully and Lomandra, as well as a Ropes Adventure Course, which consists of high and low ropes and accompanying problem-solving sections.

with trained rams of various breeds going through their paces, along with commentary explaining the way different breeds are used in Australian farming. There are also performances of didgeridoo music. In a recreated outback, working sheep dogs gather sheep for demonstrations of shearing and, later, wool-spinning.

Koalas, kangaroos and other native animals roam free in the grounds. Visitors have the opportunity to hand-feed kangaroos and wallabies, or have a digital picture taken while holding a koala.

The Woolshed Restaurant is a good place to stop for lunch and, on selected dates, visitors can participate in bush dinner dances.

BRISBANE PRACTICAL INFORMATION

BRISBANE IS A SAFE, clean and welcoming city. Despite its relatively new status as a tourist destination, most of the city's facilities are well established and services are of a high standard. Top central hotels can be expensive, but there is plenty of good-quality medium and budget accommodation in and around the city (see pp472–4). There are restaurants and cafés in all price ranges which take advantage of the city's access to tropical produce and seafood (see pp505–506). Public transport is comprehensive and cheap, and a Rover ticket allows unlimited, value-for-money travel on all modes of transport. Taxis are plentiful and operate on metered fares. Tourist information centres, identifiable by the international "I" symbol, are situated throughout the city.

SHOPPING

THE HEART OF Brisbane's Central Business District shopping area is the pedestrianized Queen Street Mall (see pp212–13). The mall now showcases two state-of-the-art entertainment venues, four open-air restaurants, much public art and seasonally rotated landscape design. The large Myer Centre is at its core and contains department stores and more than 200 individual shops. There is also a dining court and food hall offering a variety of international fast food. Both are crowded with office workers at lunchtime. On the fifth floor there is an indoor roller coaster, popular with both children and adults.

Restored interior of the 19th-century Brisbane Arcade

Other shopping arcades, all in or near the Queen Street Mall, are Broadway on the Mall, Brisbane Arcade and Rose Arcade. The Wintergarden has fashion and jewellery. Inner suburbs, such as Paddington and Milton, have a range of interesting arts and crafts galleries and bookshops.

Australian opals are tax free to international visitors and are available from a few specialist stores such as Quilpie Opals. Aboriginal art and artifacts can be found in Aboriginal Creations. Eagle Street is a popular weekend market site and is the best place to go for good-value local arts and crafts.

Brisbane's shopping hours are 9am to 5:30pm, Monday to Thursday, and until 9pm on Friday. Most shops are open 9am to 5pm on Saturdays and Sundays.

ENTERTAINMENT

THE SOUTH BANK precinct is the main entertainment centre in the city: the Queensland Performing Arts Centre produces both concerts and drama (see p221). South Bank Parklands has a range of street performers, bands, shows and an outdoor cinema. Jazz can be enjoyed at various clubs, and discos are a feature in the Riverside area or Caxton Street in Petrie Terrace. For those who want to try their hand at blackjack and other gambling pursuits, the Conrad Brisbane Treasury Casino is at the Brisbane River end of Queen Street Mall.

Details of all the current entertainment events in the city can be found in free listings magazines such as This Week in Brisbane, Hello Brisbane and Time Off.

Tickets for the majority of Brisbane's events can be obtained from Ticketek.

GETTING AROUND

B R I S B A N E is a compact city which is easy to explore on foot. Maps are available from most hotels and information centres. There are excellent self-guided heritage trails and riverside pathways on both sides of the river. A mangrove walkway meanders along the Botanic Gardens riverbank (see p217).

Public transport in Brisbane includes buses, commuter trains and ferries. CityCat ferries service some of the most popular locations including South Bank, Eagle Street, Riverside, Dockside, New Farm and Kangaroo Point. The two main points of departure are in Eagle Street, but there are various stopping-off points along the river. Tour boats supply a commentary and lunch or dinner.

The most economical way to travel on all Brisbane's public transport if you are making several journeys is with a Rover ticket, available from the Administration Centre or at most newsagents. This can offer unlimited travel for a day, or at off-peak times.

Another flexible and economical way to see the city is on a City Sights Bus Tour, which runs a regular shuttle service around all Brisbane's main sights and attractions. There is a standard fare and you can get on and off whenever you choose. To get back on a Bus, simply hail one from one of the City Sights' clearly signposted stops and show your ticket.

Brisbane's Citybus service travels around the centre of the city. The Cityxpress buses service the suburbs. All buses stop at the Queen Street Bus Station near the Myer Centre.

Commercially operated tour companies also offer coach tours of the city's highlights, as well as to the surrounding areas, including Stradbroke Island, Moreton Bay and Surfers Paradise (see pp230-31) and the mountainous hinterland (see pp232-3).

SOUTH OF TOWNSVILLE

SOUTHERN QUEENSLAND is renowned for two distinct features: its fine coastal surfing beaches and, inland, some of the richest farming land in Australia. The area is the centre of the country's beef and sugar industries, and the Burdekin River Delta supports a fertile "salad basin" yielding tomatoes, beans and other small crops. Ports such as Mackay and Gladstone service some rich inland mines.

Recognizing the land's potential, pastoralists followed hard on the heels of the explorers who opened up this region in the 1840s. Sugar production had begun by 1869 in the Bundaberg area and by the 1880s it was a flourishing industry, leading to a shameful period in the country's history. As Europeans were considered inherently unsuited to work in the tropics, growers seized on South Sea Islanders for cheap labour. Called Kanakas, the labourers were paid a pittance, housed in substandard accommodation and given the most physically demanding jobs. Some Kanakas were kidnapped from their homeland (a practice called "blackbirding"), but this was outlawed in 1868 and government inspectors were placed on all Kanakas ships to check that their emigration was voluntary. It was not until Federation in 1901 that the use of island labour stopped but by then some 60,000 Kanakas had been brought to Queensland.

In tandem with this agricultural boom, southern Queensland thrived in the latter half of the 19th century when gold was found in the region. Towns such as Charters Towers and Ravenswood have preserved much of their 19th-century architecture as reminders of the glory days of the gold rush. Although much of the gold has been extracted, the region is still rich in coal and has the world's largest sapphire fields. Amid this mineral landscape, there are also some beautiful national parks.

Today, the area is perhaps best known for its coastal features. Surfers from all over the world flock to the aptly named resort of Surfers Paradise, and the white sand beaches of the Gold Coast are crowded throughout the summer months. The region is also the gateway to the southern tip of the Great Barrier Reef and visitors come to Magnetic Island to snorkel and admire the coral.

Exploring South of Townsville

WITH EASY ACCESS from Brisbane (see pp210–25), the southern coastline of Queensland is one of the most popular holiday locations in Australia, with its sunny climate, sandy beaches and good surf. Behind the fertile coastal plains are many of the 1850s gold rush “boom towns”, now notable for the insight they provide into that unique era. The Capricorn Hinterland, inland from Rockhampton, has the fascinating gem fields around Emerald and the dramatic sandstone escarpments of the Carnarvon and Blackdown Tableland national parks. To the north of the region is the busy city of Townsville, a major gateway to the many islands of the Great Barrier Reef (see pp204–209).

GETTING AROUND

The major cities of Townsville, Rockhampton and Gladstone are accessible by air, as are some of the smaller regional centres. There are frequent coach services along the Bruce Hwy and the main inland roads.

The Brisbane-Cairns railway runs alongside the Bruce Hwy with stops at all the major centres (the trip from Brisbane to Townsville takes about 25 hours). However, the best way to see the area is by car. Some companies may insist on 4WD in remote areas.

Southern Queensland Coastline

Movie World entrance sign on the Gold Coast

AN HOUR'S DRIVE either north or south of Brisbane, the southern Queensland coast is Australia's most popular beach playground. The famous Gold Coast extends 75 km (45 miles) south of Brisbane and is a flashy strip of holiday apartments, luxury hotels, shopping malls, nightclubs, a casino and, above all, 42 km (25 miles) of golden sandy beaches. To the north, the Sunshine Coast is more restrained and elegant. Inland, the Great Dividing Range provides a cool alternative to the hot coastal climate, with flourishing arts and crafts communities, superb bushwalking and wonderful panoramas.

Burleigh Heads National Park is a tiny park which preserves the dense eucalypt forests that once covered the entire region. The nutritious volcanic soil stemming from Mount Warning, 30 km (20 miles) southwest of the park, allows the rainforest to thrive.

Coomera is the site of three theme parks on the Gold Coast. Sea World has dolphin, sea lion and penguin displays; Warner Bros. Movie World features stunt shows and tours of replica film sets; Dreamworld is a family fair-ground park with wildlife attractions that include Bengal tigers.

The Sunshine Plantation is a vast pineapple plantation. Pineapples are one of Queensland's major crops. Trips around the plantation are available on a cane train. The entrance is marked by a giant fibreglass model of a pineapple.

This well-known town is in the heart of the Sunshine Coast area, with spectacular sunsets and beautiful beaches. It is also the ferry access point to Cooloola National Park.

Maroochydore Beach ⑤

An ocean beach and the Maroochy river front make the main commercial centre of the Sunshine Coast a popular holiday destination, with good hotels and restaurants.

Mooloolaba Wharf ⑥

The wharf at Mooloolaba is a popular tourist development. Underwater World, said to be the largest oceanarium in the southern hemisphere, contains crocodiles and barramundi.

Bulcock Beach, Caloundra ⑦

The central location of sandy Bulcock Beach means it is often crowded with tourists and families. Nearby Golden Beach and Shelly Beach are also beautiful, but quieter.

Moreton Bay ⑧

This is the access point to some 370 offshore islands, the most popular being Moreton, Bribie and South Stradbroke. Fishing, bird-watching and boating are the main activities.

Coolangatta ⑩

On the Queensland–New South Wales border, Coolangatta has some of the best surfing waters in the area, but relatively uncrowded beaches. Surfing tuition and boards for hire are available here.

LAMINGTON NATIONAL PARK, set within the McPherson Mountain Range, is one of Queensland's most popular parks. Declared in 1915, it contains 200 sq km (80 sq miles) of thick wooded country, with more than 160 km (100 miles) of walking tracks through subtropical rain-forests of hoop pine and red cedars. The latter were fortunate to be saved from 1890s timber merchants because of their remote location. The highest ridges in the park reach more than 900 m (3,000 ft) and are lined with Antarctic beeches – the most northerly in Australia. Some 150 species of birds, such as the Albert lyrebird, make bird-watching a popular pastime.

Nearby Macrozamia National Park has macrozamia palms (cycads) – one of the oldest forms of vegetation still growing in the world.

ONLY 90 MINUTES' drive from Brisbane, stretching west of the Great Dividing Range, is the fertile country of the Darling Downs. The first area to be settled after Brisbane, the region encompasses some of the most productive agricultural land in Australia, as well as one of the most historic areas in Queensland.

Toowoomba is the main centre of the Downs and is also one of Queensland's biggest cities. Early settlers transformed this one-time swamp into the present "Garden City", famous for its jacarandas and Carnival of Flowers (see p37).

About 45 km (28 miles) northwest of Toowoomba along the Warrego Hwy is the Jondaryan Woolshed. Built in 1849 to handle 200,000 sheep in one season, it has now been restored as a working memorial to the early pioneers of the district.

South of Toowoomba is Warwick, the oldest town in Queensland after Brisbane and known for its cheese, its roses and its 19th-century sandstone buildings. It also claims one of the oldest rodeos in Australia, dating from 1857 when £50 (a year's pay) was wagered on the outcome of the riding contest.

Today the rodeo follows the Rose and Rodeo Festival in October and offers prize money of more than A$70,000 (see p37).

About 60 km (40 miles) south of Warwick and 915 m (3,000 ft) above sea level, Stanthorpe actively celebrates its freezing winter temperatures with the Brass Monkey Festival in July (see p39). The town is at the heart of the Granite Belt, one of Queensland's few wine regions (see p33).

Queen Mary Falls National Park is a 78-ha (193-acre) rain-forest park with picnic areas and a 40-m (130-ft) waterfall.

 ⓘ 30 Ferry St (07) 4121 4111.

SITUATED ON the banks of the Mary River, Maryborough has a strong link with Australia's early history. Founded in 1843, the town provided housing for Kanakas' labour (see p227) and was the only port apart from Sydney where free settlers could enter. This resulted in a thriving town – the buildings reflecting the wealth of its citizens.

Many of these buildings survive, earning Maryborough the title of "Heritage City". A great many of the town's private residences also date from the 19th century, ranging from simple workers' cottages to beautiful old "Queenslanders". These houses are distinctive to the state, set high off the ground to catch the cool air currents and with graceful verandas on all sides.

Hervey Bay is also one of the best places for whale-watching. Humpback whales migrate more than 11,000 km (7,000 miles) every year from the Antarctic to northern Australian waters to mate and calve. On their return, between August and October, they rest at Hervey Bay to give the calves time to develop a protective layer of blubber before they begin their final run to MON REPOS BEACH, 15 km (9 miles) from Bundaberg (see p233), is one of the most significant and accessible turtle rookeries on the Australian mainland. Egg-laying of loggerhead and other turtles takes place from November to February. By January, the first young turtles begin to hatch and make their way down the sandy beach to the ocean.

There is an information centre within the environmental park which has videos and other information about these

Gladstone 8

 📍 Gladstone Marina, Bryan Jordan Drive (07) 4972 9922.

GLADSTONE is a town dominated by industry. The harbour struggles valiantly to retain its natural beauty, surrounded as it is by huge grain silos, gigantic fuel tanks and mountains of coal. The world's largest alumina refinery is located here, processing bauxite mined in Weipa on the west coast of Cape York Peninsula. Five per cent of the nation's wealth and 20 per cent of Queensland's wealth is generated by Gladstone's industries. Gladstone's port, handling more than 35 million tonnes of cargo a year, is one of the busiest in Australia.

There are, however, more attractive sights in and around the town. The town's main street has an eclectic variety of buildings, including the Grand Hotel, rebuilt to its 1897 form after fire destroyed the original in 1993. Gladstone's Botanic Gardens were first opened in 1988 as a bicentennial project and consist entirely of native Australian plants. South of Gladstone are the tiny coastal villages of Agnes Waters and the quaintly named "1770" in honour of Captain Cook's brief landing here during his journey up the coast (see p46). About 20 km (12 miles) out of town lies the popular holiday location of Boyne Island.

Gladstone is also the access point for Heron Island, considered by many to be one of the most desirable of all the Great Barrier Reef islands, with its wonderful coral and diving opportunities. Other islands in the southern half of the reef can also be accessed from Gladstone by boat or helicopter (see pp208–9).

Rockhampton was founded in 1854 and contains many restored 19th-century buildings. Quay Street flanks the tree-lined river and has been classified in its entirety by the National Trust. ENVIRONS: The heritage township of Mount Morgan is 38 km (25 miles) southwest of Rockhampton. A 2 sq km (0.5 sq mile) open-cut mine of first gold, then copper, operated here for 100 years and was one of the most important features of Queensland’s economy until the minerals ran out in 1981.

Some 25 km (15 miles) north of Rockhampton is Mount Etna National Park, containing spectacular limestone caves, discovered in the 1880s. These are open to the public via Olsen’s Capricorn Caverns and Camoo Caves. A major feature of the caves is “cave coral” – stone-encrusted tree roots that have forced their way through the rock. The endangered ghost bat, Australia’s only carnivorous bat, nests in these caves.

The stunning sandy beaches of Yeppoon and Emu Park are only 40 km (25 miles) northeast of the city. Rockhampton is also the access point for Great Keppel Island (see pp208–9).

BETWEEN Rockhampton and Emerald, along a 20-km (12-mile) untarmacked detour off the Capricorn Highway, is Blackdown Tableland National Park. A dramatic sandstone plateau which rises 600 m (2,000 ft) above the flat surrounding countryside, the Tableland offers spectacular views, escarpments, open forest and tumbling waterfalls. Wildlife includes gliders, brushtail possums, rock wallabies and the occasional dingo.

Emerald is a coal mining centre and the hub of the central highland region, 75 km (45 miles) west of the park; the town provides a railhead for the surrounding agricultural areas. Its ornate 1890 railway station is one of the few survivors of a series of fires between 1936 and 1969 that destroyed much of the town’s heritage. Near Lake Maraboon is a headstone marking the mass grave of 19 European settlers killed in 1861 by local Aborigines. At the junction of the Nagoa and Comet rivers is a tree carved with the initials of explorer Ludwig Leichhardt during his 1844 expedition to Port Essington (see p241).

More in tune with its name, Emerald is also the access point for the largest sapphire fields in the world. The lifestyle of the gem diggers is fascinating: many of them live in tin shacks and extract gems by hand, using “rigs” built from old car parts, so that the area looks like a vast junk yard.

Carnarvon National Park ①

THE MAIN ACCESS to Carnarvon National Park lies 250 km (155 miles) south of Emerald, while the park itself covers some 298,000 ha (730,000 acres). There are several sections of the park, but the stunning Carnarvon Gorge is the most accessible area to visitors. A 32-km (20-mile) canyon carved by the waters of Carnarvon Creek, the gorge consists of white cliffs, crags and pillars of stone harbouring plants and animals which have survived through centuries of evolution. The area is also rich in Aboriginal culture, and three art sites are open to the public. Comfortable cabin accommodation is available or there are various camp sites, provided you have an advance booking and a camping permit (see p465).

Upper Aljon Falls are in a cavern and only see the sun for a few moments each day.

The Amphitheatre's sheer walls were carved into the rock by water.

Cathedral Cave is a massive rock shelter, more than 30 m (100 ft) high. It is one of the major Aboriginal art sites in the park.

The Art Gallery

This important Aboriginal art site features stencil art of boomerangs, stone tomahawks and shell pendants. The stencils were painted with ochre and water.

Irrigating sugar cane fields in Mackay, near Eungella National Park

Eungella National Park 12

 (07) 4958 4552.

EUNGELLA NATIONAL PARK is the main wilderness area on the central Queensland coast and encompasses some 50,000 ha (125,000 acres) of the rugged Clarke Ranges. Volcanic rock covered with rainforest and subtropical flora is cut by steep gorges, crystal clear pools and impressive waterfalls tumbling down the mountainside.

Finch Hatton Gorge is the main destination for tourists, where indigenous wildlife includes gliders, ring-tailed possums, bandicoots and pademelons (a kind of wallaby). Broken River is one of the few places in Australia where platypuses can often be spotted at dusk.

The main access point for Eungella is the prosperous sugar town of Mackay. Somewhat low-key from a tourist point of view, Mackay boasts a balmy climate by way of the surrounding mountains trapping the warm coastal air even in winter. Thirty beautiful white sand beaches are lined with casuarinas. All around the town sugar cane can be seen blowing in the wind in the many sugar cane fields.

The town centre of Mackay also has a number of historic buildings worth visiting, including the Commonwealth Bank and Customs House, both classified by the National Trust. The second-largest coal-loader in the world is at Hay Point, where trains more than 2 km (1 mile) long haul coal from the western mines for shipping overseas.

ENVIRONS: Approximately 55 km (35 miles) north of Ayr is Alligator Creek, the access point for Bowling Green Bay National Park. Here geckos and chirping cicadas live alongside each other in this lush landscape. Within the park are idyllic, isolated rock pools, perfect for swimming, and plunging waterfalls.

RAVENSWOOD's heyday was during the gold rush of the 1860s (see pp50–51). The town then disintegrated into a ghost town with only echoes of its former glory, but it has slowly flickered back to life following the opening of a new mine in 1994. A tour of the new mine is available with advance notice.

Many of the town's original 19th-century structures are still standing, although many are in a state of disrepair. Four different heritage walks take in buildings such as St Patrick's Church, a miner's cottage and the post office, which doubles up as the town's general store. The Courthouse Museum contains a visual history of the region.

Charters Towers 15

CHARTERS TOWERS was once the second-largest town in Queensland with a population of 30,000, following the 1871 discovery of gold in the area by a 10-year-old Aboriginal boy. Gold is still mined in the area, as well as copper, lead and zinc.

The old Charters Towers Stock Exchange is a historic gem set amid a group of other splendid 19th-century buildings in the city centre. This international centre of finance was the only such exchange in Australia outside a capital city and was built during the gold-mining days.

Charters Towers fell into decline when the gold ran out in the 1920s. Its economy now depends on the beef industry and its status as the educational centre for Queensland's Outback and Papua New Guinea – school students make up one-fifth of the population.

Townsville and Magnetic Island 16

150,000. 303 Flinders Mall (07) 4721 3660.

TOWNSVILLE is the second-largest city in Queensland and a major port for the beef, sugar and mining industries. Boasting, on average, 300 sunny days a year, the beachfront is a source of local pride.

The city was founded in the 1860s by Robert Towns, who began the practice of “black-birding” – kidnapping Kanakas from their homeland and bringing them to Australia as cheap labour (see p227).

Among the city's tourist attractions is Reef HQ, a “living coral reef aquarium” and the Museum of Tropical Queensland, which displays artifacts from the Pandora. Townsville is also an access point for the Barrier Reef and a major diving centre, largely because of the nearby wreck of the steamship Yongala, which sank in 1911.

Situated 8 km (5 miles) offshore and officially a suburb of Townsville, Magnetic Island has 2,500 inhabitants and is the only reef island with a significant permanent population. It was named by Captain Cook, who erroneously believed that magnetic fields generated by the huge granite boulders he could see were causing problems with his compass. Today, almost half of the island's terrain is designated as a national park.

NORTHERN AND OUTBACK QUEENSLAND

EUROPEAN EXPLORERS who made epic journeys into the previously impenetrable area of Northern and Outback Queensland in the 1800s found a land rich in minerals and agricultural potential. They also discovered places of extreme natural beauty, such as the Great Barrier Reef and other unique regions now preserved as national parks.

Northern Queensland was first visited by Europeans when Captain Cook was forced to berth his damaged ship, the Endeavour, on the coast. The area remained a mystery for almost another 100 years, however, until other intrepid Europeans ventured north. These expeditions were perilous and explorers were faced with harsh conditions and hostile Aboriginal tribes. In 1844, Ludwig Leichhardt and his group set out from Brisbane to Port Essington, but most of the men were wounded or killed by Aborigines. In 1848, Edmund Kennedy led an expedition from Cairns to the top of Cape York. All but two of this party perished, including Kennedy, who was speared by Aborigines.

In the late 19th century, Northern Queensland found sudden prosperity when gold was discovered in the region. The population rose and towns grew up to service the mines, but by the beginning of the 20th century much of the gold had dried up. These once thriving “cities” are now little more than one-street towns, lined with 19th-century architecture as a reminder of their glory days. Today, much of the area’s wealth stems from its booming tourist trade. Luxury resorts line the stunning coastline, and tourists flock to experience the spectacular natural wonders of the Great Barrier Reef.

Queensland’s Outback region has a strong link with Australia’s national heritage. The Tree of Knowledge at Barcaldine marks the meeting place of the first Australian Labor Party during the great shearer’s strike of 1891. The town of Winton is where “Banjo” Paterson (see p31) wrote Australia’s national song “Waltzing Matilda” in 1895. Today, the vast Outback area is known for agriculture and for gold, silver and iron ore mining.

Exploring Northern Queensland

THE AREA NORTH OF TOWNSVILLE leading up to Cairns is Australia's sugar-producing country, the cane fields backed by the Great Dividing Range. Northern Queensland is sparsely populated: Cairns is the only city, while Port Douglas and Mossman are small towns. The only other villages of note in the region are Daintree and Cooktown. Cape York Peninsula is one of the last untouched wildernesses in the world, covering 200,000 sq km (77,220 sq miles) – roughly the same size as Great Britain. The landscape varies according to the time of year: in the wet season (November–March) the rivers are swollen and the country is green; during the dry winter the riverbeds are waterless and the countryside is bare and arid.

GETTING AROUND

Cairns is well served by public transport, with regular air, train and coach connections from southern Queensland and other states. It also benefits from an international airport. North of Port Douglas and the Outback region require a car unless you take an organized tour. The 326-km (202-mile) coast road from Cairns to Cooktown requires a 4WD vehicle after Cape Tribulation, although most car rental companies will insist on a 4WD all the way. During the wet season, Cape York is generally impassable.

Lakefield National Park 1

 Cooktown.  Cooktown (07) 4069 5446. Park Office Lakefield (07) 4069 5777.  Mon–Fri.

COVERING approximately 540,000 ha (1,300,000 acres), Lakefield National Park is the second-largest national park in Queensland. It encompasses a wide variety of landscapes, including river forests, plains and coastal flats. The centre of the park abounds with birds such as brolgas and egrets. Camping is the only accommodation option and a permit must be obtained from the park ranger. The park is largely inaccessible during the wet season between December and April when the rivers flood the plains.

The nearby town of Laura, at the base of the Cape York Peninsula, is a typical Australian Outback town, with a newly sealed road flanked by a pub, a general store and a few houses. During the late 19th century, Laura was the rail terminus for the Palmer River gold fields and some 20,000 people passed through here each year. Today, it is almost forgotten, but the discovery in 1959 of Aboriginal art sites of great antiquity is reviving interest in the area. One of the most notable sites is the "giant horse gallery", which contains huge horse paintings thought to record the first sightings of European explorers.

THE TORRES STRAIT divides the northern coastline of Australia from Papua New Guinea and is dotted with numerous islands. Approximately 17 of these islands are inhabited and have been governed by Queensland since 1879.

Thursday Island is the "capital" island and was once the centre of the local pearling industry. Many Japanese pearl-ers who lost their lives in this occupation are buried in the island's cemetery. In 1891, Green Hill Fort was built to prevent invasion by the Russians. Murray Island was the birthplace of Eddie Mabo, who, in 1992, won his claim to traditional land in the Australian High Court and changed Aboriginal–European relations (see pp46–7).

Chinese gravestone in Cooktown

Cooktown's proud boast, therefore, is that it was the site of the first white settlement in Australia.

Like most towns in the area, Cooktown originally serviced the gold fields and its present-day population of less than 2,000 is a far cry from the 30,000 inhabitants who once sustained its 100 pubs and a reputedly equal number of brothels. However, many of its historic buildings survive, including the Westpac Bank with its stone columns supporting an iron-lace veranda. The James Cook Museum, which houses the old anchor from the Endeavour, started life in the 1880s as a convent. In the cemetery of the town, a memorial, two crematoriums and numerous gravestones are testimony to the difficulties faced by the many Chinese who came to the gold fields in the 1850s (see p51).

Between Cooktown and Bloomfield, Black Mountain National Park is named after the geological formation of huge black granite boulders. The boulders were formed around 260 million years ago below the earth's surface and were gradually exposed as surrounding land surfaces eroded away.

from Port Douglas. Port Douglas (07) 4099 5599. Park Office Mossman (07) 4098 2188. Mon–Fri.

DAINTREE NATIONAL PARK, north of Port Douglas, covers more than 76,000 ha (188,000 acres). The Cape Tribulation section of the park is a place of great beauty, and one of the few places where the rainforest meets the sea. Captain Cook named Cape Tribulation in rueful acknowledgment of the difficulties he was experiencing navigating the Great Barrier Reef.

Today, it is a popular spot with backpackers.

The largest section of the park lies inland from Cape Tribulation. It is a mostly inaccessible, mountainous area, but 5 km (3 miles) from Mossman lies the Mossman Gorge, known for its easy and accessible 2.7-km (1-mile) track through the rainforest.

Port Douglas 5

3,500. 23 Macrossan St (07) 4099 5599.

SITUATED 75 km (47 miles) from Cairns, Port Douglas was once a tiny fishing village. Today it is a tourist centre, but it has managed to preserve some of its village atmosphere.

Typical of Australian country thoroughfares, Macrossan Street is extremely wide, harking back to the days when a turning-circle was needed for bullock-led drays. Many 19th-century buildings still line the street, such as the Court-house Hotel, and the modern shopping centres have been designed to blend with the town's original architecture.

The original port was set up during the gold rush of the 1850s, but it was superseded by Cairns as the main port of the area. A disastrous cyclone in 1911 also forced people to move elsewhere, leaving the population at less than 500. The construction of the luxurious Sheraton Mirage Resort in the early 1980s, however, heralded the beginning of a new boom, and now a range of accommodation and restaurants is on offer (see p476).

Port Douglas is also the main departure point for Quicksilver, a major Great Barrier Reef tour operator (see p209).

Green Island 6

Cairns. Cairns. from Cairns. (07) 4051 3588.

GREEN ISLAND is one of the few inhabited coral cays of the Great Barrier Reef (see pp208–9). Despite its small size (a walk around the entire island will take no more than 15 minutes), it is home to an exclusive five-star resort which opened in 1994.

Green Island's proximity to the mainland tourist areas and the consequent marine traffic and pollution means that the coral is not as spectacular as around islands further afield. But its accessibility by ferry from Cairns makes the island very popular.

Also on Green Island is the Marineland Melanesia complex, where there are crocodile enclosures and an aquarium of sea creatures.

CAIRNS IS the main centre of Northern Queensland. Despite its beachfront esplanade, it has a city atmosphere and instead of sandy beaches there are mud-flats, abundant with native bird-life. Its main attraction is as a base for exploring the Great Barrier Reef (see pp204–9), the Daintree Rainforest (p245) and the Atherton Tableland (p247). However, Cairns itself does have several places of interest to visit.

Trinity Wharf is the departure point for most cruises to the Great Barrier Reef. Some 19th-century façades nearby offer a glimpse of the city's early life.

Cairns is known as the game-fishing centre of Australia and, from August to December, tourists crowd Marlin Jetty to see big-game anglers return with their catch.

Atherton Tableland 8

Atherton. Cnr Silo & Herberton rds, Atherton (07) 4091 4222. 9am–5pm daily. 1 Jan, Good Fri, Easter Sun, 25 Dec, 26 Dec.

RISING SHARPLY from the coastal plains of Cairns, the northern landscape levels out into the lush Atherton Tableland. At their highest point, the tablelands are 900 m (3,000 ft) above sea level. The cool temperature, heavy rainfall and rich volcanic soil make this one of the richest farming areas in Queensland. For many decades, tobacco was the main crop, but, with the worldwide decline in smoking, farmers have diversified into peanuts, macadamia nuts and avocados.

The town of Yungaburra, with its many historic buildings, is listed by the National Trust. Nearby is the famed “curtain fig tree”. Strangler figs attach themselves to a host tree and eventually kill the original tree. In this case, the aerial roots, growing down from the tree tops, form a 15-m (50-ft) screen. Also near Yungaburra is the eerie, green crater lake at Mt Hypipamee. Stretching 60 m (200 ft) in diameter, its granite sides rule out a volcanic origin, and its formation remains a mystery.

Millaa Millaa contains the most spectacular waterfalls of the region. A circuit drive takes in the Zillie and Ellinjaa falls, while not far away are the picturesque Mungalli Falls.

Atherton is the main town of the region, named after its first European settlers, John and Kate Atherton, who established a cattle station here in the mid-19th century. The wealthy agricultural centre of Mareeba now stands on the site of this former ranch.

Dunk Island is perhaps best known as the setting for EJ Banfield's 1906 book, Confessions of a Beachcomber. Today it is also known for its resident artists' colony and as a convenient stepping stone to exclusive Bedarra Island, 30 minutes away by launch.

HINCHINBROOK is the largest island national park in Australia, covering 635 sq km (245 sq miles). Dense rain-forest, much of which remains unexplored, makes the island popular with bushwalkers. Hinchinbrook's highest point, Mount Bowen, rises 1,142 m (3,745 ft) above sea level and is often capped with cloud. The native wildlife includes wallabies, dugongs and the magnificent blue Ulysses butterfly. The island is separated from the mainland town of Cardwell by a narrow, mangrove-fringed channel.

Queensland's Outback

IN STARK CONTRAST to the lush green of the eastern rainforests, the northwest of Queensland is made up of dry plains, mining areas and Aboriginal settlements. The vast distances and high temperatures often dissuade tourists from venturing into this harsh landscape; yet those willing to make the effort will be rewarded with unique wildlife and an insight into Australia's harsh Outback life.

Normanton and Gulf Savannah 13

 Normanton.  Normanton (07) 4745 5177.

NORMANTON, situated 70 km (45 miles) inland on the Norman River, is the largest town in the region. It began life as a port, handling copper from Cloncurry and then gold from Croydon. The famous Gulflander train still commutes once a week between Normanton and Croydon.

En route from Normanton to the Gulf of Carpentaria, savannah grasses give way to glistening salt pans, barren of all vegetation. Once the rains come in November, however, this area becomes a wetland and a breeding ground for millions of birds, including jabirus, brolgas, herons and cranes, as well as crocodiles, prawns and barramundi. Karumba, at the mouth of the Norman River, is the access point for the Gulf of Carpentaria and the headquarters of a multi-million-dollar prawn and fishing industry. It remains something of an untamed frontier town, especially when the prawn trawlers are in.

Covering approximately 350,000 sq km (135,000 sq miles), the most northwesterly region of Queensland is the Gulf Savannah. Largely flat and covered in savannah grasses, abundant with bird and animal life, this is the remotest landscape in Australia. The economic base of the area is fishing and cattle. Prawn trawlers go out to the Gulf of Carpentaria for months at a time and cattle stations cover areas of more than 1,000 sq km (400 sq miles). Given the distances, local pastoralists are more likely to travel via light aircraft than on horseback.

IN THE LATE 1950s, Burketown found fleeting fame as the setting for Neville Shute's famous novel about life in a small Outback town, A Town Like Alice. Situated 30 km (18 miles) from the Gulf of Carpentaria, on the Albert River, Burketown was once a major port servicing the hinterland. The old wharf can still be seen, although today the town is little more than a forgotten outpost. The inhabitants of Burketown are aware of their isolation – the shire clerk once contacted the Department of Foreign Affairs, asking for his town to be included in its foreign aid programme.

About 150 km (90 miles) west of Burketown is Hell's Gate, an area so named at the beginning of the 20th century because it was the last outpost where the state's police guaranteed protection.

Mount Isa 15

25,000. 19 Marian St (07) 4749 1555.

MOUNT ISA is the only major city in far western Queensland. Its existence is entirely based around the world's largest silver and lead mine, which dominates the town both visually and psychologically. Ore was first discovered at Mount Isa in 1923 by a prospector called John Miles and the first mine was set up in the 1930s. In those early days, "the Isa" was a shanty town, and Tent House, now owned by the National Trust, is an example of the half-house-half-tents that were home to most early settlers. Also in town is the Riversleigh Interpretive Centre, which gives an insight into some of the world's most important fossil fields (see pp22–3).

One of the most popular events in town is the Mount Isa Rodeo in August (see p39). With prize money totalling more than A$100,000, riders come from all over the world to perform spectacular displays of horsemanship.

THE ROYAL FLYING DOCTOR SERVICE

The Royal Flying Doctor Service was founded by John Flynn, a Presbyterian pastor who was sent as a missionary to the Australian Outback in 1912. The young cleric was disturbed to see that many of his flock died due to the lack of basic medical care and he founded the Australian Inland Mission together with Hudson Fysh (the founder of Qantas), self-made millionaire Hugh Victor McKay, Alfred Traeger (the inventor of the pedal wireless) and Dr Kenyon St Vincent Welch. Today, the Royal Flying Doctor Service deals with some 130,000 patients a year, and most Outback properties have an airstrip on which the Flying Doctor can land. Emergency medical help is rarely more than two hours away and advice is available over a special radio channel.

ENVIRONS: Cloncurry, 120 km (75 miles) east of Mount Isa, was the departure point for the Queensland and Northern Territory Aerial Service's (QANTAS) first flight in 1921. Now Australia's national airline, Qantas is also the oldest airline in the English-speaking world.

Opened in 1988, the Stockman's Hall of Fame is a fascinating tribute to Outback men and women. Aboriginal artifacts, as well as documented tales of the early European explorers who opened up the Outback to white settlers are included in the impressive displays.

There are daily flights or a 17-hour coach ride from Brisbane to Longreach. Other access points are Rockhampton and Townsville.

The Northern Territory at a Glance

THAT MOST FAMOUS of Australian icons, the red monolith of Uluru (Ayers Rock) lies within the Northern Territory, but it is just one of the area's stunning natural features, which also include the tropical splendour of Kakadu National Park. The main centres are Darwin in the lush north and Alice Springs in the arid Red Centre. Much of the Outback land is Aboriginal-owned, enabling their ancient culture to flourish. The Northern Territory has yet to achieve full statehood owing to its low population and relatively small economy, but it has been self-governing since 1978.

Melville and Bathurst islands (see p266) lie 80 km (50 miles) off the north coast. The islands are inhabited by Tiwi Aborigines, who have preserved a culture distinct from the mainland which includes unique characteristics such as these burial poles.

Darwin (see pp262–5) is the Northern Territory's capital city with an immigrant population of more than 50 nationalities (see pp256–7). The colonial Government House is one of the few 19th-century survivors in what is now a very modern city.

Kakadu National Park (see pp268–9) is an ancient landscape of tropical rainforest and majestic rock formations. Covering 1.7 million ha (4.3 million acres), it is the largest national park in Australia. The Jim Jim Falls are the most impressive in the park, and the Aboriginal rock art sites are among the most important in the country.

Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park (see pp278–81) is dominated by the huge sandstone rock rising up out of the flat, arid desert. Nearby are the Olgas, a series of 36 mysterious rock domes.

Elsey Homestead, 110 km (70 miles) south-east of Katherine (see pp266–7), was the setting for Jeannie Gunn's novel We of the Never Never, depicting 19th-century Outback life.

Devil's Marbles (see p277) are a remarkable collection of granite boulders in the heart of the flat, sandy desert. Caused by millions of years of erosion, their huge shapes provide shade for many desert plants and birds.

Alice Springs (see pp274–5) lies at the heart of Australia. Its Old Telegraph Station Historical Reserve was the site of the area's first settlement in 1871.

Chambers Pillar Historical Reserve (see p276) is a strange, 50-m (165-ft) sandstone column which served as a landmark for explorers of the area in the 19th century.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLE are thought to have lived in the Northern Territory for between 20,000 and 50,000 years. The comparatively short 200 years of European settlement have damaged their ancient culture immensely, but in the Northern Territory more traditional Aboriginal communities have survived intact than in other states – mainly due to their greater numbers and determination to preserve their identity. Nearly one-third of the Northern Territory's people are Aboriginal and they own almost 50 per cent of the land via arrangements with the federal government (see p55). For Aborigines, the concept of land ownership is tied to a belief system that instructs them to care for their ancestral land.

This X-ray image (see p29) of the dreaming spirit Namarrgon at Nourlangie Rock in Kakadu National Park is centuries old, but was continually repainted until the 1900s.

Nourlangie Rock in Kakadu National Park is significant to Aborigines as home of the Lightning Dreaming (see pp268–9).

ABORIGINAL TOURISM

Most visitors who come to the Northern Territory are keen to learn more about the region's unique Aboriginal culture. There are now many Aboriginal organizations which take tourists into Aboriginal areas that would otherwise be inaccessible, and explain the Aboriginal view of the land. Excursions available include boat trips in Kakadu National Park (see pp268–9) with a Guluyambi guide; bush camping with the Manyallaluk community near Katherine; or a safari camp in Arnhem Land with Umorrduk Safaris. Also well worth visiting are the information and cultural centres, such as those in Kakadu and Uluru-Kata Tjuta national parks, where native owners share their creation stories and culture, adding another layer to visitors' appreciation of these special places.

Visitors climbing to the lookout at Ubirr Rock

Ubirr Rock in Kakadu National Park is one of the finest Aboriginal rock art sites in the Northern Territory. Many paintings in Ubirr's gallery depict the area's wildlife in an x-ray style (see p29), such as this barramundi. They date from 20,000 years ago to the present day.

Bush Tucker Dreaming, painted in 1991 by Gladys Napanangka of the Papunya community of the Central Western Desert, records the Dreaming or creation stories passed down to the artist through hundreds of generations (see pp26–7).

Uluru (see pp278–81) has many sites sacred to the Anangu people around its base. Almost all of these are closed to the public, but it is possible to walk around the area and learn the associated stories.

ABORIGINAL CULTURE AND LAW

Every Aboriginal tribe lives according to a set of laws linking the people with their land and their ancestors. These laws have been handed down through generations and are embedded in Aboriginal creation stories. The stories, which tell how the first spirits and ancestors shaped and named the land, also form a belief system which directs all aspects of Aboriginal life. All Aborigines are born into two groups: their family clan and a "Dreaming" totem group such as the crocodile – determined by place and time of birth. These decide their links with the land and place in the community and the creation stories they inherit.

Multicultural Northern Territory

THE NORTHERN TERRITORY, with its proximity to Indonesia and the Pacific Islands, has long served as Australia's "front door" to immigrants. Around 500 years ago, Portuguese and Dutch ships charted the waters of the northern coast and from the 1700s traders from the Indonesian archipelago visited the northern shores. From 1874, when Chinese gold prospectors arrived in Darwin, the tropical north has appealed to Southeast Asians and, being closer to Indonesia than to Sydney or Melbourne, the city markets itself as Australia's gateway to Asia. There are now more than 50 ethnic groups living in Darwin, including Greeks and Italians who arrived in the early 20th century, and East Timorese, Indonesians, Thais and Filipinos, together with the town's original mix of Aborigines and those of Anglo-Celtic stock.

Harry Chan, elected in 1966, was the first Lord Mayor of Darwin of Chinese descent.

Mindil Beach market is one of several Asian-style food markets in the Darwin area. More than 60 food stalls serve Thai, Indonesian, Indian, Chinese, Sri Lankan, Malaysian and Greek cuisine (see p264).

All Darwin children are taught Bahasa, a major Indonesian language, in recognition of Indonesia's proximity to the city.

THE CHINESE IN THE TOP END

In 1879, a small carved figure dating from the Ming dynasty (1368–1644) was found in the roots of a tree on a Darwin beach, causing much speculation that a Chinese fleet may have visited this coast in the 15th century. If so, it was the start of an association between China and the Top End which endures today. Chinese came here in search of gold in the 1870s. By 1885, there were 3,500 Chinese in the Top End, and 40 years later Darwin had become a Chinese-run shanty town with Chinese families managing its market gardens and general stores. Today, many of the area's leading families are of Chinese origin; Darwin has had two Lord Mayors of Chinese descent, and fifth-generation Chinese are spread throughout the city's businesses.

Aboriginal people are believed to have arrived in the Northern Territory 20,000 to 50,000 years ago, overland from Asia when the sea level was much lower. Here, young male initiates from an Arnhem Land tribe are carried to a ceremony to be "made men".

With a quarter of its present population born overseas and another quarter Aboriginal, Darwin's racial mix is best seen in the faces of its children.

THE CHILDREN OF DARWIN

The faces of Darwin's children show an incredible ethnic diversity, something many believe will be typical of all Australia in 50 years time. The Northern Territory, and especially Darwin, is renowned for a relaxed, multicultural society and a racial tolerance and identity rarely found in other Australian cities.

Darwin's children, whatever their ethnic origin, are united by their casual Australian clothes and relaxed attitude.

The Filipino community in Darwin preserves its traditions, as seen by these two girls in national costume at the Festival of Darwin.

Paspaley Pearls is Darwin's wealthiest local company. Founded by Greek settlers, it owns pearl farms across northern Australia.

The East Timorese community of Darwin performs traditional dancing at a city arts festival. Most of the East Timorese have arrived in the city since 1975, in the wake of Indonesia's invasion of East Timor.

DARWIN AND THE TOP END

THE TROPICAL TIP of the Northern Territory is a lush, ancient landscape. For thousands of years it has been home to large numbers of Aborigines and contains the greatest and oldest collection of rock art in the world. Its capital, Darwin, is small and colourful. The World Heritage-listed Kakadu National Park has a raw beauty combined with the fascinating creation stories of its Aboriginal tribes.

The Port of Darwin was first named in 1839, when British captain John Lort Stokes, commander of HMS Beagle, sailed into an azure harbour fringed by palm trees, sandy beaches and mangroves, and named it after his friend Charles Darwin. Although the biologist would not publish his theory of evolution in the Origin of the Species for another 20 years, it proved to be a wonderfully apt name for this tropical region, teeming with unique and ancient species of birds, plants, reptiles and mammals. The Aboriginal tribes that have lived for many thousands of years in the northern area known as the Top End are recognized by anthropologists as one of world's oldest races.

Darwin itself is a city that has fought hard to survive. From 1864, when the first settlement was established at Port Darwin, it has endured isolation, bombing attacks by the Japanese in World War II (see p262) and devastation by the force of Cyclone Tracy in 1974 (see p264). Despite having been twice rebuilt, it has grown into a multicultural modern city, with a relaxed atmosphere, great beauty and a distinctly Asian feel.

Beyond Darwin is a region of Aboriginal communities and ancient art sites, wide rivers and crocodiles, lotus-lily wetlands and deep gorges. For visitors, Kakadu National Park superbly blends sights of great scenic beauty with a cultural and spiritual insight into the complex Aboriginal culture. Also to be enjoyed are the plunging waterfalls and giant termite mounds of Litchfield National Park, the deep red-rock gorge of Nitmiluk (Katherine Gorge) National Park, and expeditions into the closed Aboriginal communities of Arnhem Land and Melville and Bathurst islands.

Exploring Darwin and the Top End

THE AUSTRALIAN TOP END is a seductive, tropical region on the remote tip of the massive dry Northern Territory. On the turquoise coast there are palm trees; inland are winding rivers, grassy wetlands, gorge pools and ochre escarpments. The Territory's capital, Darwin, has many attractions and is a good base for day trips to areas such as Berry Springs and Melville and Bathurst islands. The climate is hot, but the dry season has low humidity, making it the best time to visit. The wet season, however, compensates for its humidity and tropical downpours with the spectacle of thundering rivers and waterfalls, and lush vegetation.

GETTING AROUND

The Top End's reputation as an isolated region is long gone. Darwin is linked by the Stuart and Western hwy's to Alice Springs, Adelaide and Melbourne in the south, and along interstate hwy's to Mount Isa, Cairns and Brisbane in the east. The centre of Darwin can be explored on foot or using the open trolley Tour Tub which stops at all the main attractions in an hourly circuit. The Top End's major attractions, such as Kakadu National Park and Katherine Gorge, can be visited without driving on a dirt road. Bus connections to the main towns are regular, but a car is vital to make the most of the scenery. Distances are not great for Australia; Kakadu is 210 km (130 miles) from Darwin and Katherine 300 km (186 miles) away on the Stuart Hwy.

FOLLOWING EUROPEAN SETTLEMENT in 1864, for the first century of its life Darwin was an outpost of the British Empire, with vast cattle farms being established around it. In its short, colourful history it has experienced the gold rush of the 1890s, life as an Allied frontline during World War II and almost total destruction in 1974 by the fearful winds of Cyclone Tracy (see p264). Darwin has now emerged as a modern but relaxed town where more than 50 ethnic groups of Asian-born Australians mingle with Aborigines, Europeans, particularly Greeks, and Chinese from earlier periods of immigration.

Old Darwin Town Hall

Smith St.

The limestone ruin of the Old Darwin Town Hall lies at the bottom of Smith Street. The original council chambers, built in 1883, were damaged by a terrible cyclone in 1897. The building subsequently became a bank, and then a museum, before being destroyed by Cyclone Tracy in 1974. Curved brick paving built against the remaining wall symbolizes the fury of the cyclone's winds.

Brown's Mart

The 1884 limestone Old Police Station and Courthouse have both been restored after being damaged by Cyclone Tracy and are now administration offices.

Across the road is Survivors' Lookout, which overlooks the harbour. Here photographs and written accounts tell of Darwin's wartime ordeal as an Allied frontline. Thousands of US and Australian troops were based in the Top End, which endured 65 bombing raids by Japanese forces (see p53).

Smith Street Mall

Bennett & Knuckey sts.

The heart of Darwin's shopping area is Smith Street Mall, with its glass air-conditioned plazas shaded by tall tropical trees. Always full of buskers, tour operators offering trips, locals and visitors, the mall is a favourite meeting place. Noteworthy buildings include the 1890 Victoria Hotel, a popular landmark and one of the few old structures in the town to survive Cyclone Tracy.

This lush, green park, with its pleasant shady walks and panoramic lookouts, is home to many World War II memorials. One commemorates the attack by Japanese bombers which flew over Darwin Harbour on 19 February 1942, sinking 21 of the 46 US and Australian naval vessels in port and killing 243 people. It was the closest Australia came to war on its own soil.

Dominating the edge of Darwin's sea cliffs is the new Parliament House, which was opened in 1994. With architecture that appears to borrow from both Middle Eastern and Russian styles, this imposing building is home to the territory's 33 parliamentarians, who administer just 180,000 people. It has a granite and timber interior which is filled with Aboriginal art. Visitors may also get a glimpse of the parliamentarian chambers and use the library – the largest in the territory, with an excellent local reference section.

CYCLONE TRACY

Late Christmas Eve, 1974, a weather warning was issued that Cyclone Tracy, gathering force off the coast, had turned landward and was heading for Darwin. Torrential rain pelted down and winds reached a record 280 km/h (175 mph) before the measuring machine broke. On Christmas morning, 66 people were dead, thousands injured and 95 per cent of the buildings flattened. More than 30,000 residents were airlifted south in the biggest evacuation in Australia's history. The city ruins were bulldozed and Darwin has been rebuilt, stronger and safer than before.

THE MUSEUM AND ART GALLERY of the Northern Territory has exhibitions on regional Aboriginal art and culture, maritime exploration, visual arts and natural history.

The museum's collection of Aboriginal art is considered to be the best in the world and has some particularly fine carvings and bark paintings, along with explanations of Aboriginal culture. JUST 80 km (50 miles) north of Darwin lie the Tiwi Islands, the collective name given to the small island of Bathurst and its larger neighbour, Melville. The latter is the second-largest island off the Australian coast after Tasmania and is rich in history and Aboriginal culture. The islands' inhabitants, the Tiwi people, had little contact with mainland Aborigines until the 20th century.

With beautiful waters, sandy beaches and lush forest, the islands are a tropical paradise, but, because of their ownership by the Tiwi, only Bathurst Island is visited on tours from Darwin. Running May to October, day trips offer a glimpse of the unique blend of Aboriginal, Indonesian and Tiwi traditions. THE COBOURG PENINSULA is one of the most remote parts of Australia. It is only accessible by vehicle during the dry season and with an access permit (see p254), travelling through the closed Aboriginal Arnhem Land to the wild coastal beaches of Gurig National Park. The number of vehicles allowed to enter the region each week is restricted and there are permit fees, too, so going on a tour is sometimes a convenient option.

Gurig is a large park, with sandy beaches and the calm waters of Port Essington. Two attempts by the British to settle this area in the early 19th century were abandoned, due to inhospitable Aborigines and malaria epidemics. The ruins of Victoria Settlement can be reached by boat from Smith Point. Luxury accommodation is available at Seven Spirit Bay Wilderness Lodge (see p476), reached by plane from Darwin.

Giant magnetic termite mound in Litchfield National Park

The park has some amazing giant magnetic termite mounds. They are so-called because they point north in an effort by the termites to control temperature by having only the mound's thinnest part exposed to the sun. 11,000. Cnr Stuart Hwy & Lindsay St (08) 8972 2650.

THE TOWN OF Katherine, situated on the banks of the Katherine River, 320 km (200 miles) south of Darwin, is both a thriving regional centre and a major Top End tourist destination. Home for thousands of years to the Jawoyn Aborigines, Katherine River has long been a rich source of food for the Aboriginal people. The river was first crossed by white explorers in 1844, and the area was not settled by Europeans until 1878, with the completion of the Overland Telegraph and the arrival of the first cattle pastoralist, Alfred Giles. Giles built his home- stead, Springvale, on the banks of the Katherine River. Today it is the Territory's oldest building and a camp site.

Only 30 km (20 miles) from town lies the famous Nitmiluk (Katherine Gorge) National Park. Its string of 13 separate gorges along 50 km (30 miles) of the Katherine River has been carved out by torrential summer rains cutting through cliffs of red sandstone which are 1,650 million years old. The result is a place of deep pools, silence and grandeur.

The best way to explore the park is by boat or canoe. Canoe trips are self-guided, with nine navigable gorges and overnight camping possible. There are also boat trips operated by the Jawoyn people, who own the park and run it in conjunction with the Northern Territory's Parks and Wildlife Commission. Each gorge can be explored in a separate boat, interspersed with swimming holes and short walks. There are also 100 km (60 miles) of marked trails in the park, ranging from the spectacular but easy lookout walk to the five-day 72-km (45-mile) hike to lovely Edith Falls, which can also be reached by car from the Stuart Highway.

ENVIRONS: Just south of Katherine are the Cutta Cutta caves, limestone rock formations 15 m (50 ft) under the earth's surface and formed five million years ago. They are home to both the rare orange horseshoe bat and the brown tree snake.

Further southeast, 110 km (70 miles) from Katherine, lies the small town of Mataranka. This is "Never Never" country, celebrated by female pioneer Jeannie Gunn in her 1908 novel, We of the Never Never, about life at nearby Elsey Station at the turn of the century. The area is named Never Never country because those who live here and love it, find they can never, never leave it. About 8 km (5 miles) east of Mataranka is Elsey National Park. Visitors can swim in the hot waters of the Mataranka Thermal Pool which flow from Rainbow Springs to this idyllic spot surrounded by rainforest. The nearby Mataranka Homestead resort is an authentic replica of Jeannie Gunn's Elsey Station homestead, which was made for the 1981 film version of her novel.

LOCATED ONLY 3 km (2 miles) from the Western Australian border, Keep River National Park includes the dramatic Keep River gorge and some of Australia's most ancient rock art sites. The park, once the location of an ancient Aboriginal settlement, today has some superb walking trails for all levels of trekkers.

THE vast 20,000 sq km (8,000 sq miles) of Kakadu National Park, with its stunning diversity of stony plateaux, red escarpment cliffs, waterfalls, billabongs, long twisting rivers, flood plains and coastal flats, is one of Australia's most extraordinary places. A UNESCO World Heritage Area (see pp22–3), Kakadu encompasses both scenic wonders and huge galleries of Aboriginal rock art. The park is Aboriginal land leased back to the government (see p55) and is managed jointly. The entire catchment area of the South Alligator River lies within the park, and is home to thousands of plant and animal species. Some areas in Kakadu are not accessible during the wet season.

Yellow Water

A cruise on the wetlands of Yellow Water shows Kakadu in all its glory. Lotus lilies, crocodiles, kookaburras, magpie geese, jabirus and other bird species can be seen.

FLORA AND FAUNA IN KAKADU NATIONAL PARK

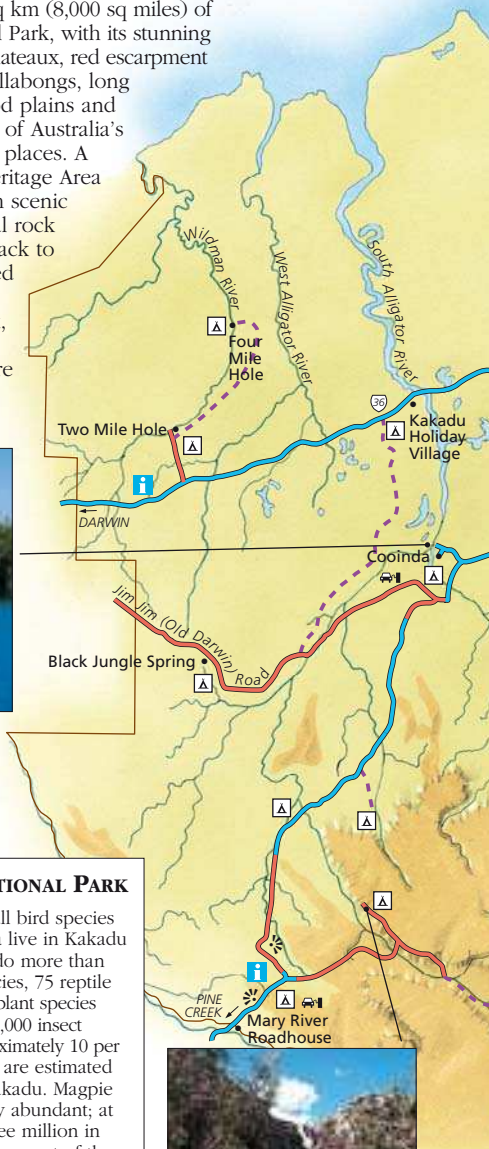

More than one-third of all bird species recorded in Australia live in Kakadu National Park; as do more than 60 mammal species, 75 reptile species, 1,200 plant species and at least 10,000 insect species. Approximately 10 per cent of the birds are estimated to be unique to Kakadu. Magpie geese are especially abundant; at times there are three million in the park, 60 per cent of the world's population.

Gunlom Waterhole

The southern and drier end of Kakadu is less visited, but holds some magical places such as the Gunlom waterhole, home to the rainbow serpent, Borlung, in Aboriginal legend.

THE RED CENTRE

THE RED CENTRE stretches roughly from Tennant Creek to the South Australian border, and is made up almost entirely of huge desert areas. The region occupies the centre of the Australian continent, with its main town, Alice Springs, at the country's geographical heart. Its signature colour is red: red sand, soil, rocks and mountains are all pitched against a typically blue sky.

The Red Centre contains some of the finest natural scenery in the world, much of it dating back about 800 million years. At that time, central Australia was covered by an inland sea; here sediments were laid down which form the basis of some of the region's best-known topographical features today. These include the huge monolith Uluru (formerly Ayers Rock), the domes of Kata Tjuta (also known as the Olgas), the giant boulders of the Devil's Marbles and the majestic MacDonnell Ranges. Between these sights are vast open spaces where remnants of tropical plant species grow beside desert-hardy stock. Verdant plants fed by occasional rains flourish next to animal skeletons.

Aboriginal people have lived in the region for more than 30,000 years, and their ancient tradition of rock painting is one of many tribal rituals still practised. By comparison, the history of white settlement here is recent. Explorers first arrived in the area during the 1860s. Alice Springs, founded in 1888, was a tiny settlement until improved communications after World War II led to the town's growth.

It is now a modern, bustling town with much to offer. Tennant Creek, the only other sizeable settlement in the area, lies on the main Stuart Highway that bisects the Red Centre.

Much of the Territory has now been returned to its Aboriginal owners (see pp254–5), and today many Aborigines are actively involved in tourism. Access to Aboriginal lands is restricted but visiting them is a rewarding encounter to add to the unforgettable experience of the Red Centre.

Trekking through the desert landscape on a camel safari near Alice Springs

Exploring the Red Centre

THE RED CENTRE'S biggest draw is its stunning array of natural features. Alice Springs is the main city, with other towns at Yulara (Ayers Rock Resort) and Tennant Creek. The best time to travel is from April to October, thus avoiding the intense summer heat.

The MacDonnell Ranges run like a huge spine on either side of Alice Springs; elsewhere the land is largely flat, formed by millions of years of erosion, and covered by spinifex grasslands. The region's gorges have been carved out by rivers, many of which flow only once or twice a year, soaking the surrounding desert plains.

GETTING AROUND

There is a wide range of transport options available in central Australia. Domestic airports serve Alice Springs and Yulara. Overland, coaches connect the region with all the state capital cities, and the famous Ghan railway (see p275) operates between Alice Springs and Adelaide. The most popular way to explore the region, however, is by car, and there are many car rental companies in the area. Standard vehicles are adequate for most journeys, but 4WD is advisable for off-road travel.

Alternatively, many guided tours are also available. The Stuart Hwy is the main road running through the area, linking Port Augusta in South Australia with Darwin in the north. Alice Springs itself has taxis, bike hire and a town bus service, but the relatively short distances within the city also make walking popular.

Alice Springs ①

ALICE SPRINGS is named after the Alice Spring permanent waterhole, near which a staging post for the overland telegraph line was built in the 1870s. The waterhole was named after Alice Todd, wife of the line's construction manager. The town developed nearby in the 1880s, but with no rail link until 1929 and no surfaced road link until the 1940s, it grew slowly. The huge increase in tourism since the 1970s, however, has brought rapid growth and Alice Springs is now a lively city with around 400,000 visitors a year, many of whom use it as a base from which to tour the surrounding spectacular natural sights.

Exploring Alice Springs

Although many of its sights are spread around the city, Alice Springs is small enough to tour on foot. Its compact centre, just five streets across running from Wills Terrace in the north to Stuart Terrace in the south, contains many of the town's hotels and restaurants, as well as the pedestrianized Todd Mall. The city's eastern side is bordered by Todd River, dry and sandy most of the time and scene of the celebrated Henley-on-Todd Regatta (see p36).

Anzac Hill

West Terrace. ♿
At the northern end of Alice Springs, Anzac Hill overlooks the city and affords fine views of the MacDonnell Ranges (see p276). Named after the 1934 Anzac memorial at the site, the hill is a perfect vantage point for visitors to familiarize themselves with the city's layout, as well as for viewing the area at sunrise or sunset, when it is bathed in a beautiful light.

CHAMBERS PILLAR, a 50-m (165-ft) high sandstone obelisk, was used by explorers as an important navigational landmark during early colonial exploration. The pillar is made of mixed red and yellow sandstone deposited more than 350 million years ago. Many of the explorers, such as John Ross who visited the area in 1870, carved their names and inscriptions into the rock.

Located 160 km (110 miles) south of Alice Springs, with the final section of the journey accessible only by 4WD vehicles, the pillar is also a sacred Aboriginal site.

The largest crater in the group is 180 m (590 ft) across and is 15 m (50 ft) deep. Signs on a trail around the craters mark all their significant features.

THE MACDONNELL RANGES are the eroded remnants of an ancient mountain chain which was once as monumental as the Himalayas. Still impressive and filled with striking scenery, the East and West MacDonnells contain gorges, waterholes and walking tracks. Running east and west of Alice Springs and easily accessible, they are popular with day-trippers. Visitors will notice the ranges' thrust-up layers of rock, evidence of geological movements more than 300 million years ago. Culturally, they contain many areas sacred to the Aranda people. In the West MacDonnells, 7 km (4 miles) from Alice Springs, is John Flynn's Memorial Grave, which honours Presbyterian minister, Rev John Flynn, who founded the Royal Flying Doctor Service (see p249).

A further 10 km (6 miles) from town, Simpsons Gap is the first of a series of attractive gorges in the MacDonnells. A pretty spot, it is home to some rare local plant species. Nearby is Standley Chasm, a narrow, deep gorge whose sheer rock-faces glow a glorious red, particularly under the midday sun.

The large 18-m (60-ft) deep permanent waterhole within Ellery Gorge at Ellery Creek Big Hole is a good swimming spot. Serpentine Gorge, 20 km (12 miles) further west, is another narrow gorge created by an ancient river. A walking track leading to a lookout gives a fine view of its winding path.

Pushed up out of Ormiston Creek, the 300-m (985-ft) high walls of Ormiston Gorge are an awesome sight. The gorge consists of two layers of quartzite, literally doubled over each other, thus making it twice the height of others in the region.

Along Larapinta Drive is the small Aboriginal settlement of Hermannsburg, site of an 1870s Lutheran Mission which predates Alice Springs. Famous as the home of the popular Aboriginal painter Albert Namatjira (1902–59), most of the town is contained within the Hermannsburg Historic Precinct, which includes a museum devoted to the mission and an art gallery.

On the other side of Alice Springs, the East MacDonnell Ranges boast some beautiful sites accessible via the Ross Highway. Close to town is Emily Gap, one of the most significant Aranda sites in Australia. Further east, Corroboree Rock, a strangely shaped outcrop, has a crevice once used to store sacred Aranda objects. Trephina Gorge is the most spectacular of the East MacDonnell sights, featuring quartzite cliffs, red river gums and a number of scenic walks.

APPROXIMATELY 104 km (65 miles) south of Tennant Creek, the Devil's Marbles Conservation Reserve comprises a collection of huge, spherical, red granite boulders, scattered across a shallow valley in the Davenport Ranges. The result of geological activity occurring 1,700 million years ago, the boulders were created when molten lava was compressed to create huge domes just below the earth's surface. Subsequent erosion of the overlying rock exposed the marbles. They are particularly beautiful at sunset.

Tennant Creek today is the second-largest town in the Red Centre. Nearly 500 km (310 miles) north of Alice Springs, it is also a major stopover along the Stuart Highway, between Darwin and South Australia. Other local attractions include the recreational Mary Ann Dam, 5 km (3 miles) out of town and ideal for boating and swimming. THE MOST INSTANTLY recognizable of all Australian symbols is the huge, red monolith of Uluru (Ayers Rock). Rising high above the flat desert landscape, Uluru is one of the world's natural wonders, along with the 36 rock domes of Kata Tjuta (The Olgas) and their deep valleys and gorges. Both sights are in Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park, 463 km (288 miles) southwest of Alice Springs, which was established in 1958 and was named as a World Heritage site in 1987 (see pp22–3). The whole area is sacred to Aboriginal people and, in 1985, the park was handed back to its indigenous owners and its sights reassumed their traditional names. As Aboriginal land, it is leased back to the Australian government and jointly managed with the local Anangu people. Within the park is an excellent cultural centre which details the Aboriginal lives and traditions of the area. Yulara, 12 km (7 miles) from Uluru, is the park's growing tourist resort (see p281).

DEHYDRATION IN THE DESERT

Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park is in the heart of Australia's vast desert region. It can experience summer daytime temperatures of more than 45°C (113°F). To avoid dehydration and heat exhaustion all visitors are advised to wear hats, long-sleeved shirts with collars and sunscreen, and to avoid any strenuous activity between 10am and 4pm. Most importantly, each person should drink one litre of water per hour while walking in hot weather.

Vegetation is sparse on this desert plain except for a few areas of greenery found in sheltered spots where rainwater collects.

This free, ranger-guided walk leads visitors to places created and used by the ancestral Mala people. It ends at Kantju Gorge, sacred to the Anangu, which contains a waterhole beneath a waterfall.

Exploring Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park

Entrance sign to Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park

IT IS IMPOSSIBLE to arrive at Uluru-Kata Tjuta National Park and not be filled with awe. The sheer size of the world's largest monolith, Uluru, rising from the flat desert plain, is a moving and impressive sight. Just as magical are the rounded humps of Kata Tjuta not far distant. All the rocks change colour from oranges and reds to purple during the day. Getting around the park, understanding some of its deep Aboriginal significance and learning about its geology, flora and fauna should not be rushed. There is much more to this fascinating area than can be seen or experienced in one day, and a two- or three-day stay is recommended.

Blue-tongued lizard basking in the sun

Uluru (Ayers Rock)
Uluru, 3.6 km (2.25 miles) long and 2.4 km (1.5 miles) wide, stands 348 m (1,142 ft) above the plains. It is made from a single piece of sandstone which extends 5 km (3 miles) beneath the desert surface. Besides its immense Aboriginal cultural significance, Uluru is an outstanding natural phenomenon, best observed by watching its changing colours at dusk and taking a guided walk at the rock's base.

There are a number of walking trails around Uluru. The three-hour, 9.5-km (6-mile) tour around the base gives the greatest sense of its size and majesty. Sacred sights en route are fenced off, and entering is an offence. The Mala (hare wallaby) walk takes in several caves, some with rock art. The Liru (snake) walk starts at the cultural centre, with Aboriginal tour guides explaining how they use bush materials in their daily lives. The Kuniya (python) walk visits the Mutijulu waterhole on the southern side of Uluru where local Anangu people tell creation stories and display art describing various legends. Details of all walks can be found at the Uluru-Kata Tjuta Cultural Centre.

Kata Tjuta (The Ongas)
Kata Tjuta, meaning "many heads", is a collection of massive rounded rock domes, 42 km (25 miles) to the west of Uluru. Beyond lies a vast, remote desert; permits from the Central Land Council (see p254), 4WDs and full travel survival kits are needed in this inhospitable land.

Kata Tjuta is not one large rock; it is a system of gorges and valleys that you can walk around, making it a haunting, quiet and spiritual place. To the Anangu people, it is of equal significance to Uluru, but fewer stories about it can be told as they are restricted to initiated tribal men. The tallest rock, Mount Olga, is 546 m (1,790 ft) high, nearly 200 m (660 ft) higher than Uluru. There are two recommended walking trails. The Valley of the Winds walk takes about three hours and wanders through several deep gorges. This walk is partially closed when the temperature exceeds 36°C (97°F).

CLIMBING ULURU

The climbing of Uluru by the chain-rope path that has been in place since the 1960s is a contentious issue. Physically, it is a steep, 1.6-km (1-mile) climb in harsh conditions, and several tourists die each year from heart attacks or falls. Culturally, the route to the top follows the sacred path taken by the ancestral Mala (hare wallaby) men for important ceremonies. The Anangu ask that visitors respect their wishes and do not climb the rock. Despite increasing numbers of visitors to Uluru, fewer people climb each year.

If you do decide to climb, the ascent takes about two hours. Climbing the rock is banned for the remainder of the day if the temperature at any point of the climb reaches 36°C (97°F). A dawn climb is most popular.

Sign warning tourists of the dangers of climbing Uluru

THE ANANGU OF ULURU

Archaeological evidence suggests that Aboriginal people have lived at Uluru for at least 22,000 years and that both Uluru and Kata Tjuta have long been places of enormous ceremonial and cultural significance to a number of Aboriginal tribes.

The traditional owners of Uluru and Kata Tjuta are the Anangu people. They believe that both sites were formed during the creation period by ancestral spirits who also gave them the laws and rules of society that they live by today. The Anangu believe they are direct descendants of these ancestral beings and that, as such, they are responsible for the protection and management of these lands.

The resort offers all standards of accommodation, from five-star luxury to backpacker accommodation and camping grounds, and is the only option for those who want to stay in the immediate vicinity (see pp478–9).

The visitors' centre at Yulara has information about the park and its geology, flora and fauna. It also sells souvenirs and helps to arrange tours with the licensed operators in the park. Every day at 7:30am there is a free, early morning guided walk through the wonderful native garden of the Sails in the Desert Hotel (see p479). Each evening at the Amphitheatre there is an hour-long concert of Aboriginal music featuring a variety of indigenous instruments, including the didgeridoo. A Night Sky Show is also available, and this describes both the Anangu and ancient Greek stories of the stars.

Yulara also has a shopping centre, which includes a post office, bank and supermarket, and many different restaurants and outdoor eating options (see p511). Other tourist facilities include a childcare centre catering for children up to the age of eight.

THE HUGE STATE OF Western Australia encompasses a land mass of more than 2,500,000 sq km (1,000,000 sq miles). In recent years, the state's popularity as a tourist destination has increased, with large numbers of visitors drawn to its many areas of extreme natural beauty. The landscape ranges from giant karri forests, imposing mountains and meadows of wildflowers to vast expanses of untamed wilderness with ancient gorges and rock formations. The coastline has an abundance of beaches, ideal for surfing, and some stunning offshore reefs. In the east, great deserts stretch to the state border. The capital, Perth, is home to 80 per cent of the state's population, but there are many historic towns scattered around the southwest, such as the gold field settlements of Kalgoorlie and Coolgardie.

Sbark Bay World Heritage and Marine Park is Australia's westernmost point. Visitors flock to this protected area to watch the dolphins swim in the waters close to the shore (see pp318–19).

Perth is Australia's most isolated yet most modern state capital. Gleaming skyscrapers, an easy-going atmosphere and its coastal setting make it a popular destination (see pp294–9).

Fremantle's heyday as a major port was at the end of the 19th century. Many of its historic buildings remain. Today the town is renowned for its crafts markets (see pp302–303).

Karijini National Park is in the Pilbara region and is a spectacular landscape of gorges, pools and waterfalls. The area is particularly popular with experienced bikers; guided tours are also available for more novice bushwalkers (see p321).

Purmululu (Bungle Bungle) National Park is one of Australia's most famous natural sights, with its multi-coloured rock domes. Access is limited, but helicopter flights offer views of the area (see p323).

Wildflowers of Western Australia

WESTERN AUSTRALIA is truly the nation's wildflower state. In the spring, from August to November, more than 11,000 species of flowers burst into brilliantly coloured blooms, carpeting deserts, plains, farmland and forests with blazing reds, yellows, pinks and blues.

A staggering 75 per cent of these flowers are unique to the state, giving it one of the world's richest floras. It is home to such remarkable plants as the kangaroo paw, the cowslip orchid and the carnivorous Albany pitcher plant, as well as giant jarrah and karri forests.

The elegant kangaroo paw looks exactly like its name suggests. The state's floral emblem, it has many different species and mostly grows in coastal heath and dry woodland areas.

WHEN AND WHERE TO SEE THE WILDFLOWERS

Bushwalking or driving among the flower carpets of Western Australia is an experience not to be missed. Most of the wildflowers bloom in spring, but exactly when depends on their location in this vast state. The wildflower season begins in the northern Pilbara in July and culminates in the magnificent flowering around the Stirling Ranges and the south coast in late October and November.

The Albany pitcher plant grows near coastal estuaries around Albany in the southwest. One of the world's largest carnivorous plants, it traps and devours insects in its sticky hairs.

The magnificent royale bakea is one of many bakea species in Western Australia. It is found on the coast near Esperance and in Fitzgerald River National Park.

Red flowering gum trees in the Stirling Ranges burst into bright red flowers every November, attracting boney bees.

The cowslip orchid is a bright yellow orchid with red streaks and five main petals. It can usually be found in October, in the dramatic Stirling Ranges region.

Much of Western Australia is arid, dusty outback country where the only vegetation is dry bush shrubs and, after rainfall, wildflowers.

Many wild flowers possess an incredible ability to withstand even the driest, hottest ground.

Leschenaultia biloba is a brilliant blue, bell-shaped flower found in jarrah forests near Collie, or in drier bush and plain country where it flowers in carpets of blue.

The boab (baobab) tree is a specimen related to the African baobab. Growing in the rocky plains of the Kimberley (see pp322–3), it holds a great deal of water in its swollen trunk and can grow many metres in circumference.

The bright daisy flowers of the everlastings come in a host of creams, pinks, yellows, oranges and reds.

EVERLASTING FLOWERS

Native to Australia, everlastings carpet vast areas in many parts of Western Australia. Especially prolific in the southeast, they can also be seen from the roadside in the north, stretching as far as the eye can see.

Everlastings are so called because the petals stay attached to the flower even after it has died.

The scarlet banksia (see p442), is one of 41 banksia species found in Western Australia. It is named after Sir Joseph Banks, the botanist who first noted this unusual tree and its flower in 1770.

GIANTS OF THE WESTERN AUSTRALIAN FOREST

It is not only the native flowers that are special to Western Australia. So, too, are the trees – especially the towering jarrah and karri eucalypts of the southern forests. A major hardwood timber industry, harvesting the jarrah and karri, remains in the state's southwest near Manjimup and Pemberton (see p307).

Today, however, thousands of trees are preserved in national parks such as Shannon and Walpole-Nornalup, which has a walkway high in the trees for visitors.

Giant karri trees grow to a height of 85 m (280 ft). They live for up to 300 years, reaching their maximum height after 100 years.

Sturt's desert pea is actually South Australia's floral emblem, but is also prolific in the dry inland areas of Western Australia. Its bright flowers spring up after rain in the deserts, sometimes after lying dormant for years.

The Kimberley

Dingo cave painting

ONE OF THE LAST truly remote regions in Australia, the Kimberley in north-western Australia covers 421,000 sq km (165,000 sq miles), yet has a population of less than 25,000. Geologically it is one of the oldest regions on earth. Its rocks formed up to 2,000 million years ago, with little landscape disturbance since. Aboriginal people have lived here for thousands of years, but this unique land has been a tourist attraction only since the 1980s.

THE BUNGLE BUNGLES

The tiger-striped beehive mountains that comprise the Bungle Bungle range were only discovered by tourists in the 1980s. These great geological and scenic wonders are now protected in Purnululu National Park (see p323). The large, weathered sandstone domes are most easily viewed by air from Kununurra or Halls Creek, but visitors who make the effort to explore this 4WD-only park will also encounter some stunning narrow gorges and clear pools.

The black and orange moulded domes of the Bungle Bungles

The Cockburn Ranges have deep, inaccessible caves and sandstone cliffs separating the summit from the surrounding plains. The ranges tower above the crocodile-infested Pentecost River on the Gibb River Road. As with many sites in the region, they hold great Aboriginal significance.

Gibb River Road is a rough highway which is used by locals and adventurous travellers.

Emma Gorge is one of hundreds of deep, cool waterholes hidden across the Kimberley. Located near El Questro Station, it was made by waterfalls cascading off the red sandstone plateau into gorges and valleys below.

THE ABORIGINES OF THE KIMBERLEY

Legend suggests that the first Aborigines arrived on the continent, near Broome, 200,000 years ago (see p43). While this view has yet to be validated by scientific evidence, the fact that many of the “songlines” (see p27) marked by landmarks and ceremonial sites all end or start around the Kimberley certainly suggests that the area has seen a very long period of human habitation.

Two-thirds of the region’s population remains Aboriginal, and Aboriginal culture here is one of the most traditional in Australia. Local Aboriginal communities equip their children with a strong identity to help them cope with the demands of living in a mixed-race society.

Aboriginal art in the Kimberley differs from most other parts of Australia. Dot art does not predominate; instead there are the outstanding Wandjina figures of the central Kimberley, and the object paintings of the Purnululu community based near the Bungle Bungles.

The mysterious Wandjina figures can be seen throughout the Kimberley region.

Aboriginal rock art in the Kimberley has now been dated back 125,000 years, 80,000 years earlier than previously thought.

PERTH AND THE SOUTHWEST

WESTERN AUSTRALIA'S PRETTY CAPITAL, Perth, is the most isolated city in the world, closer to Southeast Asia than it is to any other Australian city. The state's stunning southern region takes in magnificent forests and diverse coastal scenery. To the east, the vast Nullarbor Plain covers more than 250,000 sq km (100,000 sq miles), and rolling wheat fields lead to the arid interior and the gold fields.

Aborigines have lived in the southern region of Western Australia for at least 30,000 years. However, within 20 years of the settlement of the state's first European colony, in 1829, most Aboriginal groups had been either forcibly ejected from the region, imprisoned or stricken by European diseases.

Europeans visited the southern part of the state as early as 1696, but it was not until 1826 that British colonist Captain James Stirling arrived in the Swan River area, declaring the Swan River Colony, later Perth, in 1829. Convicts arrived in 1850 and helped to build public buildings and the colony's infrastructure, until transportation to Western Australia ceased in 1868.

In the 1890s, gold strikes in Coolgardie and Kalgoorlie led to a wave of prosperity in the region. Many ornate late Victorian-style buildings were erected, many of which are still standing.

The beginning of the 20th century saw huge changes: a telegraph cable was laid connecting Perth with South Africa and London, and, in 1917, the railway arrived to join Kalgoorlie with the eastern states. In the 1920s, immigrants and returning World War I servicemen were drafted to the area to clear and develop land under the Group Settlement Scheme. Much of the land, however, was intractable and many people abandoned it.

Today, Perth and the Southwest are fast becoming popular international tourist destinations. Blessed with superb beaches and a glorious climate, the region has everything to offer visitors from climbing the tallest fire-lookout tree in the country to whale-watching along the coast. World-class wineries abound in the Margaret River region and, in springtime, vast tracts of the south are covered with wildflowers.

Exploring Perth and the Southwest

THE CITY OF PERTH lies on the Swan River, just 10 km (6 miles) from where it flows into the Indian Ocean. The coastal plain on which it stands is bordered to the north and west by the Darling Range, beyond which lie the region's wheat fields. To the south is a diverse landscape: forests with some of the tallest trees on earth, mountains that dramatically change colour during the course of each day and a spectacular coastline. Inland are the gold fields that kept the colony alive in the 1890s; beyond lies the Nullarbor Plain, bordering the raging Southern Ocean.

GETTING AROUND

Perth's public transport is fast and reliable, and travel within the city centre is free. Westrail, Greyhound and Skywest (the state's airline) offer rail, coach and air services to many of the region's towns. Distances are not overwhelming, so travelling by car allows visits to the many national parks in the area. The arterial routes are fast roads often used by gigantic road trains. However, there are many tourist routes which lead to places of interest and great natural beauty. Some national parks have unsealed roads, and a few are accessible only by 4WD.

THE HISTORY OF PERTH has been one of building and rebuilding. The makeshift houses of the first settlers were soon replaced with more permanent buildings, many erected by convicts in the latter half of the 19th century. The gold rush of the 1890s and the mining boom of the 1960s and 1970s brought waves of prosperity, encouraging the citizens to replace their older buildings with more prestigious symbols of the state's wealth. As a result, much of the early city has gone, but a few traces remain, hidden between skyscrapers or in the city's public parks.

PERTH IS A RELATIVELY SMALL and quiet city compared with those on the east coast. Its main commercial and shopping areas can be easily explored on foot. The city's atmosphere is brisk but not hurried, and traffic is by no means congested. Redevelopment projects in the 1970s brought skyscrapers and more roads, but they also made space for city parks and courtyards lined with cafés and shady trees. The city centre is bordered to the south and east by a wide stretch of the Swan River known as Perth Water, and to the north lies Northbridge, Perth's restaurant and entertainment centre.

Exploring Central Perth

St Georges Terrace is Perth's main commercial street. At its western end stands Parliament House, and in front of this is Barracks Archway. Further east, the Cloisters, built in 1850 as a school, boast some fine decorative brickwork. Nearby is the Old Perth Boys' School, a tiny one-storey building that was Perth's first school for boys.

Perth's shopping centre lies between William and Barrack streets. It is a maze of arcades, plazas and elevated walkways. The main areas are Hay Street Mall and Murray Street Mall. On the corner of William Street and St Georges Terrace lies the Town Hall (1870), close to the site where Perth was founded.

Beyond the railway tracks is Northbridge, the focus of much of Perth's nightlife. James Street is lined with many restaurants, cafés and food halls offering a variety of ethnic cuisines. Also on this street, the ornate Brass Monkey Hotel is a perfect example of the colonial architecture of the gold rush period.

Between 1841 and 1845 Perth's first Anglican church was built, in Classical Revival style, on the site of the existing cathedral, but in 1875 it was decided that the community required a more prestigious place of worship. The old church was demolished after St George's was built, but some artifacts remain, including some of the jarrah pews and the carved eagle lectern. This Gothic Revival building has some notable features including the intricate English alabaster revedos at the base of the east window, the modernistic medallions cast for the Stations of the Cross and some original 19th-century Russian icons.

Rottnest Island 2

LESS THAN 20 km (12 miles) west of Fremantle lies the idyllic island of Rottnest. Settled by Europeans in 1831, it was used as an Aboriginal prison between 1838 and 1902. In 1917, in recognition of its scenic beauty and rich bird life, the island became a protected area and today it is a popular tourist destination. Rottnest's oldest settlement, Thomson Bay, dates from the 1840s. The island's other settlements, all built in the 20th century, are found at Longreach Bay, Geordie Bay and Kingstown. Rottnest's rugged coastline comprises beaches, coves and reefs – ideal for many water-based activities – salt lakes and several visible shipwrecks. Private cars are not allowed on the island, so the only way to get around is by bicycle or bus, or on foot.

Rocky Bay

Overlooked by the sandy Lady Edeline beach, this popular, picturesque bay also contains the wreck of the barque Mira Flores which sank in 1886.

Rottnest Lighthouse

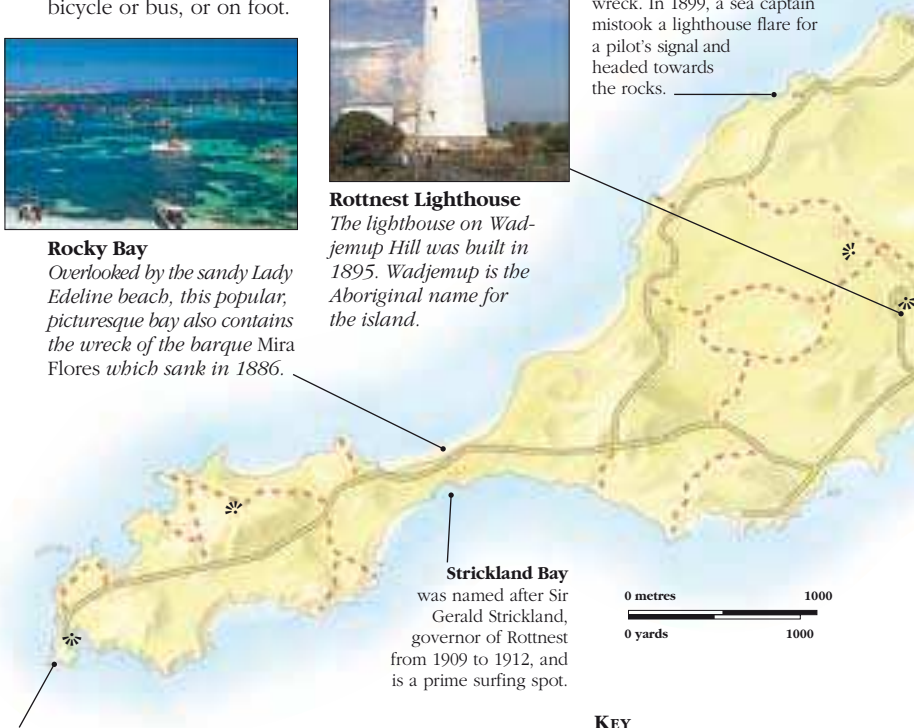

The lighthouse on Wadjemup Hill was built in 1895. Wadjemup is the Aboriginal name for the island.

Aerial View of Rottnest

Rottnest is 12 km (7.5 miles) long, 4.5 km (3 miles) wide, and is governed by strict conservation regulations.

City of York Bay was named after Rottnest's most tragic shipwreck. In 1899, a sea captain mistook a lighthouse flare for a pilot's signal and headed towards the rocks.

Cape Vlamingh Lookout

Named after Dutch explorer Willem de Vlamingh, Rottnest's most famous early European visitor, this lookout stands at the furthest tip of the island, 10.5 km (6.5 miles) from Thomson Bay. The view is spectacular.

Henrietta Rocks are a hazardous place for shipping. No less than three ships have been wrecked in the waters off this point.

THE QUOKKA

When de Vlamingh first visited Rottnest in 1696, he noted animals somewhat bigger than a cat, with dark fur. Thinking they were a species of rat, he called the island the "rats' nest". In fact the animals were a type of wallaby, called quokkas by the Aborigines. Although there is a small mainland population in Western Australia, this is the best place to see these timid creatures in areas of undergrowth. On Rottnest such habitat is scarce, and they are often visible at dusk. Quokkas are wild and should not be fed.

FREMANTLE IS ONE OF Western Australia's most historic cities. A wealth of 19th-century buildings remains, including superb examples from the gold rush period. Founded on the Indian Ocean in 1829, at the mouth of the Swan River, Fremantle was intended to be a port for the new colony, but was only used as such when an artificial harbour was dredged at the end of the 19th century.

The town still has thriving harbours and, in 1987, it hosted the America's Cup. Many sites were renovated for the event, and street cafés and restaurants sprang up.

THE AMERICA'S CUP BONANZA

The America's Cup yachting race has been run every four years since 1851. Not until 1983, however, did a country other than the United States win this coveted trophy. This was the year that Australia II carried it home. In 1987, the Americans were the challengers, and the races were run in Australia II's home waters, off Fremantle. Investment poured into the town, refurbishing the docks, cafés, bars and hotels for the occasion.

The Americans regained the trophy, but Fremantle remains forever changed by being, for once, under the world's gaze.

This museum's most prized possession is a reconstruction of part of the hull of the Dutch East Indiaman Batavia from timbers discovered at the site of its wreck off the Abrolhos Islands in 1628 (see p316). The exhibit tells the story of the shipwreck and mutiny of the vessel and gives an insight into life on board. The museum has also reconstructed a stone arch from blocks found in the coral near the wreck, apparently cut in Holland and meant to be erected in Jakarta, Indonesia, the ship's original destination.

The museum's curators research, locate and explore the many shipwrecks in this part of the Indian Ocean. On display are beautiful and sometimes valuable salvaged items.

Another exhibit tells the story of the HMS Success, which brought Captain James Stirling to survey the Swan River area in the late 1820s.

Surprisingly, this beautiful Gothic Revival mansion with its shady gardens was first conceived as an asylum for the insane. The building, used variously as an asylum, the wartime headquarters for US forces, and the home of the Western Australian Maritime Museum, was slated for demolition in 1967. But, principally through the efforts of Fremantle's mayor, it was rescued and renovated.

The Fremantle Museum is dedicated to the study of the daily lives of the people who came to Western Australia in the 19th century in search of a new life. Its exhibits describe how they lived, the obstacles they overcame and the lives and families they left behind.

The Fremantle Arts Centre showcases local contemporary artists and many of the works are for sale. It also stages open-air concerts and sponsors various arts and crafts-related events in the grounds.

In the 1850s, when the first group of convicts arrived in the Swan River Colony, the need arose for a large-scale prison. Fremantle Prison, an imposing building with a sturdy gate-house and cold, forbidding limestone cell blocks, was built by those first convicts in 1855. It was not closed until 1991. Today, visitors tour the complex, visiting cells (some have murals painted by inmates), punishment cells, the chapel and the chilling gallows room, last used in 1964.

The Southern Coastline

WESTERN AUSTRALIA'S southwest corner has diverse coastal scenery. Two oceans meet here, the Indian and the Southern, resulting in discernible climate changes: the southern coastline is often windy and cooler than the western coast, and the oceans are much less gentle. Lined by national parks, the coast incorporates limestone, reefs, granite formations, beautiful sand dunes and crags topped by low vegetation. There are also world-class surfing spots in the region.

★ Flinders Bay, Augusta ⑤

Augusta was founded in 1830 and is the third oldest settlement in the state. Only 5 km (3 miles) from Cape Leeuwin, the southwestern tip of the continent, today it is a popular holiday resort. The beautiful Flinders Bay is particularly favoured by windsurfers.

★ Hamelin Bay ④

This busy beach in the centre of Cape Leeuwin is particularly attractive to families, with its calm waters and fine swimming and fishing opportunities.

Bunker Bay, Dunsborough ①

This excellent beach in the tourist resort of Dunsborough benefits from dolphin- and whale-watching in season and fine views of Cape Naturaliste.

Smiths Beach, Yallingup ②

This popular honeymoon spot (Yallingup is indigenous word for "place of lovers") is also a haven for surfers. Nearby is the spectacular Yallingup Cave.

Boodjidup Beach, Margaret River ③

The coastline in this holiday town consists of long beaches, sheltered bays and cliff faces looking out on to the surf.

Peaceful Bay ⑦

Keen anglers and sailors can often be spotted within this aptly named inlet, which is also a popular picnic spot. Nearby Walpole is the gateway to Walpole-Nornalup National Park, with its impressive karri and eucalypt trees.

Middleton Beach, Albany ⑩

The waters of Middleton Beach are regularly filled with windsurfers and boogieboarders (surfing the waves on a short body board). A short drive around the point is Torndirrup National Park, with a multitude of natural coastal formations, including offshore islands and some excellent locations for whale-watching in season.

Lake Cave, near Margaret River, is just one of an estimated 200 underground caves along the Leeuwin-Naturaliste Ridge that runs from Busselton to Augusta. It is one of the few caves open to the public and is a fairyland of limestone formations, reflected in dark underground waters.

Leeuwin-Naturaliste National Park is a 15,500-ha (40,000-acre) protected area of scenic coastline, caves, heathlands and woodlands. Its rugged limestone coast with long beaches and sheltered bays faces the Indian Ocean. It has long been popular as a holiday destination and has excellent opportunities for swimming, surfing and fishing.

D'Entrecasteaux National Park, 40 km (25 miles) southwest of Pemberton, is a wild and rugged park with spectacular coastal cliffs, pristine beaches and excellent coastal fishing. Much of the park, including some isolated beach camp sites, is only accessible by 4WD. Inland, heathland is home to a range of animal and plant habitats.

★ Ocean Beach, Denmark ⑧

Denmark is a well-known and popular haunt for surfers from many countries. Ocean Beach, in particular, is the setting for international surfing competitions (see pp34-5).

★ Wilson Inlet ⑨

From Denmark's main street it is a relatively short walk through well-kept woodland to Wilson Inlet where there are some spectacular and varied coastal views.

★ Conspicuous Beach ⑥

Impressive cliffs face on to the beautiful white sands of Conspicuous Beach. It is also the access point for the Valley of the Giants, with its massive red tingle trees.

THE CITY OF Bunbury lies about 180 km (110 miles) south of Perth at the southern end of the Leschenault Inlet. The state's second-largest city, it is the capital of the south-west region. Since the 19th century it has grown into a thriving port and a centre for local industry. It is also a popular holiday destination, with many water sports available.

Historic buildings in Bunbury include the Rose Hotel, built in 1865, with its first-floor veranda and intricate ironwork detail (see p479). The Roman Catholic St Patrick's Cathedral contains the beautiful Pat Usher Memorial Window, in memory of Bunbury's mayor from 1972 to 1983. St Boniface (Anglican) Cathedral also contains some pretty stained glass. Nearby are the Bunbury Art Galleries, housed in the former Sisters of Mercy convent built in the 1880s. Today they are the centre for community arts events.

On the beachfront stands the Dolphin Discovery Centre, which has fascinating audio-visual exhibits. Wild dolphins regularly appear off the coast here, and visitors come to see them and swim with them.

The King Cottage Museum, is run by the Bunbury Historical Society. It exhibits local artifacts dating from the 1880s to the 1920s and a wealth of photographs documenting the area's history.

Busselton Jetty, 2 km (1 mile) long and once the longest in Australia, is a reminder of the town's beginnings as a timber port.

Some of Busselton's oldest surviving buildings are located at the Old Courthouse site, now used as an arts complex. Here, the jail cells, police offices, courthouse and bond store all date from 1856. Local crafts are sold in the old jail cells, and other outbuildings act as studio space for artists.

The 1871 Ballarat, the first steam locomotive used in the state, stands in Victoria Park.

ENVIRONS: About 10 km (6 miles) north of Busselton is Wonnerup House, a lovingly restored house built by pioneer George Layman in 1859 and now owned by the National Trust. Three other buildings share the site, the earliest being the first house Layman erected in the 1830s. Both buildings stand in pretty grounds within farmland and are furnished with Layman family memorabilia and artifacts. In 1874, Layman's son built a school and, in 1885, a teacher's house close by. These buildings also have period exhibits inside.

About 20 km (12 miles) north of Busselton is the beautiful Ludlow Tuart Forest National Park, probably the largest area of tuart trees left in the world.

LIVING ON Western Australia's southern coastline, Denmark was founded as a timber company settlement in 1895, but by the 1920s it was a fully fledged town. The town now attracts a host of visitors, many of whom come seeking the good surf of the Southern Ocean. There is also a large population of artists and artisans, and the atmosphere is distinctly bohemian.

Denmark's oldest building is St Leonard's Anglican Church, built by volunteers in 1899. Its Scandinavian-style pitched roof and interior detail are reminders of the Norwegian timber workers in the town at that time.

Nearby is Mandala Studio, one of Denmark's many craft galleries, where visitors can admire and buy stained-glass items made by local artist Andy Ducker and watch him at work.

Berridge Park, on the banks of the Denmark River, is often the scene for summertime open-air concerts.

ENVIRONS: Denmark has many beautiful beaches. A popular surfing spot is Ocean Beach; more sheltered locations for swimmers include Cosy Corner and Peaceful Bay. The coastline and Wilsons Inlet are popular with boaters and anglers.

ALBANY was first visited by Captain Vancouver in 1791, but it was not until 1826 that the British settled here. Until Fremantle harbour was constructed (see pp302–303), Albany acted as the colony's main port and the harbour is still the commercial heart of the city. Whale migrations bring them close to the city's shores, which made it a base for whalers for a large part of the 20th century.

The town includes many old buildings. St John the Evangelist Anglican Church, built in 1848, was the first Anglican church consecrated in Western Australia and is the epitome of an English country church.

Inside, the Lady Chapel contains a piece of an arch from St Paul's Cathedral in London. Much of the stained glass was brought from England at the beginning of the 19th century.

A number of old buildings stand near the western end of Stirling Terrace. The Residency Museum, originally part of the convict hiring depot built in the 1850s, details the history of the town and its surrounding area. The convict hiring depot itself and the Old Gaol now house the collection of the Albany Historical Society.

THE TOWN OF YORK WAS founded in 1831, in the new colony's drive to establish its self-sufficiency via agriculture. Now registered as a historic town, it retains many mid-19th-century buildings, the majority of which are on Avon Terrace, the main street. The cells of York's Old Gaol, in use from 1865 until 1981, provide a chilling insight into the treatment of 19th-century offenders. Other historic buildings include Settler's House (1860s), now a hotel and restaurant (see p513), and Castle Hotel, built in stages between 1850 and 1932, with its unusual timber verandas.

Nearby stands the York Motor Museum, with one of the largest collections of veteran cars and vehicles in Australia. These include the 1886 Benz (the world's first car), the very rare 1946 Holden Sedan Prototype and the extraordinary Bisiluro II Italcorsa racing car.

Also of note is the York Residency Museum, housed in the former home of York magistrate Walkinshaw Cowan, father-in-law to Edith Cowan, the state's first female Member of Parliament (see p52). This extensive collection of artifacts and photographs is justly said to be the finest small museum in the state.

York's 1892 flour mill has now been converted into the Jah-Roc Mill Gallery, which exhibits and sells furniture made from jarra wood and other arts and crafts.

AT THE HEART of the Avon Valley and the state's wheat belt, Northam is Western Australia's largest inland town. Settled as an agricultural centre early in the colony's history, the town became a gateway to the gold fields of Kalgoorlie-Boulder for prospectors in the 1890s (see p310). It retains a number of historic buildings, including the Old Girls' School (1877), now the town's Art Centre, and the beautiful St John's Church (1890). The town's jewel is Morby Cottage, built in 1836 and a fine example of the architectural style adopted by the early colonists.

Spanning the Avon River is the longest pedestrian suspension bridge in the country, offering views of the river and its population of white swans.

The Gold Fields and Nullarbor Plain

WESTERN AUSTRALIA'S southeast is a sparsely populated, flat region of extreme aridity and little fresh water. Vast stretches of its red, dusty landscape are inhabited by small Aboriginal communities and mining companies. The gold rush around Kalgoorlie in the 1890s ensured the state's success, but many places waned and ghost towns now litter the plains. Traversing the Nullarbor Plain, the Eyre Highway runs from Norseman to South Australia, 730 km (455 miles) away, and beyond. To the south is the windswept coast of the Great Australian Bight.

KALGOORLIE and the nearby town of Boulder, with which it was amalgamated in 1989, constantly remind visitors of their gold-fever past. Gold was first discovered here by Irishman Paddy Hannan in 1893, and, within weeks, the area was besieged with prospectors. Gold fields in other areas soon dwindled, but this field has yielded rich pickings to this day, bolstered by nickel finds in the 1960s. Today, gold is mined in the world's largest open-cut mine and more than 150,000 visitors a year come to see historic Kalgoorlie.

A variety of heritage trails and tours are available, and details are at the tourist office. The WA Museum Kalgoorlie-Boulder has an impressive collection of gold nuggets and jewellery, as well as natural history displays and a history of the gold rush. At the Mining Hall of Fame, visitors can go down a shaft and see gold pours and panning demonstrations.

The ornate buildings hastily erected during the boom years are best seen on Hannan Street, in the York and Exchange hotels, classic examples of gold rush architecture, and Kalgoorlie Town Hall.

Around Kalgoorlie-Boulder there are many ghost towns, such as Ora Banda and Broad Arrow, deserted by prospectors early this century in their search for new mines.

THE NULLARBOR PLAIN stretches across the southeast of the state and into South Australia (see p359). "Nullarbor" derives from the Latin meaning "no trees", and this is indeed a vast treeless plain. Only one road, the Eyre Highway, leads across the plain – one of the great Australian road journeys.

A few tiny settlements consisting only of roadhouses lie along the Eyre Hwy. Cockle-biddy, lying 438 km (270 miles) east of Norseman, has one of the world's longest caves and, at Eucla, 10 km (6 miles) from the state border, a telegraph station's remains can be seen. NORTH OF PERTH AND THE KIMBERLEY

WESTERN AUSTRALIA covers one-third of Australia, and visitors to the area north of Perth start to get a feel for just how big the state really is. The region has many treasures: Ningaloo Reef and the Pinnacles rock formations; the gorges of the Kimberley; and a host of national parks, including the amazing Bungle Bungles.

The first people to set foot on the Australian land mass, the Aborigines, did so some 60,000 years ago in the north of Western Australia. This area is rich in Aboriginal petroglyphs, and some are thought to be more than 20,000 years old. The north of Western Australia was also the site of the first European landing in 1616 (see p45). In 1688, English explorer William Dampier charted the area around the Dampier Peninsula and, on a later voyage, discovered Shark Bay and the area around Broome.

In the 1840s, the Benedictines set up a mission in New Norcia and, by the 1860s, settlements had sprung up along the coast, most significantly at Cossack, where a pearling industry attracted immigrants from Japan, China and Indonesia. In the 1880s, pastoralists set up cattle and sheep stations in a swathe from Derby to Wyndham. Gold was struck in 1885 at Halls Creek, and the northern part of the state was finally on the map. In the 1960s, mining came to prominence again with the discovery of such minerals as iron ore, nickel and oil, particularly in the Pilbara region.

Today, the region is fast becoming a popular tourist destination, particularly with those visitors interested in ecotourism (see p528). Its climate varies from Mediterranean-style just north of Perth to the tropical wet and dry pattern of the far north. Wildlife includes endangered species such as the dugongs of Shark Bay. Even isolated spots, such as the Kimberley and the resorts of Coral Bay and Broome, are receiving more visitors every year.

THE NORTH OF Western Australia is a vast area of diverse landscapes and stunning scenery. North of Perth lies Nambung National Park, home to the bizarre Pinnacles Desert. Kalbarri National Park is a region of scenic gorges on the Murchison River. The Indian Ocean coastline offers uninhabited islands, coral reefs, breathtaking cliffs and sandy beaches, none more spectacular than in Shark Bay World Heritage and Marine Park. At the tip of the region is the Pilbara, the state's mining area and home to the fascinating national parks of Karijini and Millstream-Chichester.

GETTING AROUND

Distances in the north of Western Australia are vast. A 4WD vehicle is desirable if visiting any national parks by road and essential during the wet season. The North West Coastal Hwy skirts the coast as far as Port Hedland, where it joins the Great Northern Hwy, heading towards the Northern Territory. Gunbarrel Hwy and Canning Stock Route across the Gibson Desert are only for experienced travellers. Greyhound has regular coach services between major towns, and Qantas and Virgin Blue also fly to Perth (see pp544-5).

ONE OF Western Australia's most important heritage sites is New Norcia, 130 km (80 miles) northeast of Perth. A mission was established here by Spanish Benedictine monks in 1846, and it is still home to a small monastic community who own and run the historic buildings. There are daily tours of the monastery and visitors can stay at the attached guesthouse, also run by the monks.

The town, known for its Spanish colonial architecture, has a pretty cathedral, built in 1860, at its centre. Also of note are two elegant colleges built early in the 20th century: St Gertrude's Residence for Girls and St Ildephonus' Residence for Boys. The New Norcia Museum and Art Gallery has some fine art treasures and artifacts tracing the town's history.

THIS UNUSUAL national park is composed of beach and sand dunes, with the dunes extending inland from the coast. It is best seen in spring when wildflowers bloom and the heat is not too oppressive. The park is famous for the Pinnacles, a region of curious limestone pillars, the tallest of which stand 4 m (13 ft) high. Visitors can take either a 3-km (2-mile) driving trail or a shorter walking trail which leads to lookouts with stunning views of the Pinnacles and the coastline.

Most of the park animals are nocturnal, but some, including kangaroos, emus and many reptiles, may be seen in the cool of dawn or dusk.

Geraldton 3

THE CITY OF Geraldton lies on Champion Bay, about 425 km (265 miles) north of Perth. It is known as "Sun City" because of its average eight hours of sunshine per day. The pleasant climate brings hordes of sun-seekers from all over Australia who take advantage of fine swimming and surfing beaches. It can also be very windy at times, a further enticement to windsurfers, for whom Geraldton (particularly Mahomets Beach) is a world centre.

The history of European settlement in the area extends back to the mutiny of the Dutch ship Batavia, after it was wrecked on the nearby Houtman Abrolhos in 1628. Two crew members were marooned here as a punishment. In 1721, the Dutch ship Zuytdorp was wrecked, and it is thought that survivors settled here for a brief period. Champion Bay was first mapped in 1849 and a lead mine was established shortly afterwards. Geraldton grew up as a lead shipping point, and today is a port city with a large rock-lobster fleet.

The city retains many of its early historic buildings. The WA Museum, Geraldton includes Geraldton Maritime Museum, which contains relics of the area's early shipwrecks. The Old Railway Building has exhibits on local history, wildlife and geology. Geraldton has two fine cathedrals: the modern Cathedral of the Holy Cross, with its beautiful stained glass, and St Francis Xavier Cathedral, built from 1916 to 1938, in Byzantine style.

Point Moore Lighthouse, with its distinctive red and white stripes, was shipped here from Britain and has been in continuous operation since 1878. The 1870 Lighthouse Keeper's Cottage, the town's first lighthouse, now houses Geraldton's Historical Society. Also in town, the Geraldton Art Gallery is one of the best galleries in the state, exhibiting the work of local artists and pieces from private and public collections.

A number of lookouts such as Separation Point Lookout and Mount Tarcoola Lookout give panoramic views of the city and ocean.

ABOUT 60 km (37 miles) off Geraldton lie more than 100 coral islands called the Houtman Abrolhos. The world's southernmost coral island formation, it contains some unique coral species. While it is not possible to stay on the islands, tours enable visitors to fly over them or to fish and dive among the coral.

📍 Kalbarri. 📞 Kalbarri (08) 9937 1104. ☑ sunrise–sunset daily.

THE MAGNIFICENT landscape of Kalbarri National Park includes stunning coastal scenery and beautiful inland gorges lining the Murchison River. The park has a number of coastal and river walking trails which lead to breathtaking views and fascinating rock formations. The trails vary in length, from brief two-hour strolls to four-day hikes.

Highlights of the park include Hawks Head, a picnic area with views of the gorge; Nature's Window, where a rock formation frames a view of the river; and Ross Graham Lookout, where visitors can bathe in the river pools. By the ocean, Pot Alley provides awesome views of the rugged coastal cliffs and Rainbow Valley is made up of layers of multi-coloured rocks.

The access town for the park, Kalbarri, is situated on the coast and provides good tourist facilities and a base for tours into the park. The park's roads are accessible to most vehicles, but are unsuitable for caravans or trailers. The best time to visit is from July to October, when the weather is dry and the temperatures are not prohibitive. In summer, they can soar to 40°C (104°F).

THE TOWN of Carnarvon, standing at the mouth of the Gascoyne River, acts as the commercial and administrative centre for the surrounding Gascoyne region, the gateway to Western Australia's north. Tropical fruit plantations, including bananas, melons and mangoes, line the river for 16 km (10 miles), some offering tours and selling produce.

In Carnarvon itself, One Mile Jetty on Babbage Island is a popular place for fishing, and Jubilee Hall, built in 1887, houses a fine arts and crafts centre. Carnarvon is also home to a busy prawn and scallop processing industry.

ENVIRONS: About 70 km (43 miles) north of Carnarvon lie the Blowholes, a spectacular coastal rock formation where air and spray is forced through holes in the rocks in violent spurts up to 20 m (66 ft) high.

SHARK BAY MARINE PARK was designated a World Heritage Area in 1991 (see pp22–3). The park is home to many endangered species of both plants and animals, and various unusual natural processes have, over the millennia, given rise to some astounding natural features and spectacular coastal scenery. Because this is a World Heritage Area, visitors are asked to abide by conservation rules, particularly when fishing. The only way to travel around the park is by car, and large areas are only accessible by 4WD.

At the tip of Peron Peninsula, this national park, now accessible by 4WD, was a vast sheep station until 1990.

The top of this bluff offers fine panoramic views across Freycinet Reach, with a chance of seeing the eagles that nest on the offshore islands and marine creatures in the clear ocean waters.

Ningaloo Reef Marine Park ⑧

THIS MARINE PARK runs for 260 km (162 miles) along the west coast of Exmouth Peninsula and around the tip into Exmouth Gulf. The Ningaloo Reef is the largest fringing barrier reef in the state and offers many of the attractions of the east coast's Great Barrier Reef (see pp204–9). In many places, it lies very close to the shore, and its turquoise waters are popular with snorkellers. Apart from numerous types of coral and brightly coloured fish, the marine park also protects a number of species. Several beaches at the northern end of the park are used by sea turtles as mating and breeding areas. Further offshore, it is possible to see the gentle whale shark from late March to May. Capable of growing to up to 18 m (60 ft), this is the largest fish in the world.

The best areas for snorkelling are Turquoise Bay or the still waters of Coral Bay. A number of companies offer organized scuba diving outings. Visitors can camp on the park's coastline at several sites managed by the Department of Conservation and Land Management (CALM). Fishing is another popular pursuit here, but catches are very strictly controlled.

SITUATED ON the eastern side of the Exmouth Peninsula, this small town was originally built in 1967 to service the local airforce base. A military presence is still very much in evidence, but today the town is more important as a tourist destination, used as a base for exploring the Ningaloo Reef Marine Park and the Cape Range National Park. Giant turtles and whale sharks can frequently be seen from the nearby coastline.

Slightly outside of town, at Vlaming Head, lies the wreck of the SS Mildura, a cattle transporter which sank in 1907 and is still visible from the shore. Nearby stands the Vlaming Lighthouse, on a high bluff offering striking, panoramic views across the entire peninsula.

Enviros: Cape Range National Park contains a low mountain range with spectacular gorges and rocky outcrops. This area was originally under water and it is possible to discern the fossils of ancient coral in the limestone. Local wildlife includes kangaroos, emus and large lizards. There are two main wilderness walks, but visitors should not attempt these in summer as temperatures can reach as high as 50°C (120°F).

Yardie Creek is on the western side of the park, only 1 km (0.5 miles) from the ocean. A short walk along gorge cliffs leads visitors into the spectacular canyon, where it is possible to catch sight of rock wallabies on the far canyon wall. A cruise through the gorges is also available.

DAMPPIER stands on King Bay on the Burrup Peninsula, facing the 40 or so islands of the Dampier Archipelago. It was established and still acts as a service centre and port for mining areas inland; natural gas from the nearby North-west Shelf Project is processed here for domestic and export markets. The town also has the largest desalination plant in Australia. This can be viewed from the Dampier Solar Evaporated Salt Mine Lookout. Dampier is also a popular base for offshore and beach anglers. Every August, game-fishing enthusiasts converge on the town for the Dampier Classic and Game Fishing Classic.

The Burrup Peninsula is one of the most renowned ancient Aboriginal art sites in Australia, created by the Yapurrara Aborigines.

ABOUT 14 km (9 miles) inland, Roebourne, established in 1866, is the oldest town in the Pilbara. The town retains several late 19th-century stone buildings, including the Old Gaol which now houses the tourist office and a craft gallery and the Holy Trinity Church (1894). Roebourne also marks the start of the 52-km (32-mile) Emma Withnell Heritage Trail, which takes a scenic route from here to Cossack and Point Samson. Trail guides are available at the tourist office.

Environs: Some 150 km (93 miles) inland lies the 200,000-ha (500,000-acre) Millstream-Chichester National Park with its lush freshwater pools and rich animal and plant life.

IN 1863, the town of Tien Tsin Harbour was established and quickly became the home of a burgeoning pearling industry that attracted people from as far away as Japan and China. The settlement was renamed Cossack in 1872 after a visit by Governor Weld aboard HMS Cossack. However, the town's moment soon passed. The pearling industry moved on to Broome (see p322) and by 1910 Cossack's harbour had silted up. In the late 1970s, restoration work of this ghost town began and today, under the management of the Shire of Roebourne, it has become a curiosity that continues to fascinate many visitors.

SET IN THE Hamersley Range, in the heart of the Pilbara region, Karijini National Park covers some 600,000 ha (1,500,000 acres). It is the second-largest national park in the state after Purnululu National Park (see p323).

The park has three types of landscape: rolling hills and ridges covered in eucalypt forests; arid, low-lying shrubland; and, in the north, spectacular gorges. The best times to visit the park are in winter, when the days are temperate, and in spring, when carpets of wildflowers are in spectacular bloom.

The Kimberley and the Deserts

Pearler's diving helmet, Broome

AUSTRALIA'S LAST FRONTIER, the Kimberley is a vast, remote upland region of dry, red landscape. Deep rivers cut through mountain ranges, and parts of the coastline have the highest tidal range in the southern hemisphere. Seasonal climatic extremes add to the area's sense of isolation as the harsh heat of the dry season and the torrential rains of the wet hamper access to the hostile terrain. April to September is the best time to visit, offering views of the country's best natural sights such as the Wolfe Creek Meteorite Crater and the Bungle Bungles. To the south lie the huge, inhospitable Great Sandy and Gibson deserts.

It also provided supplies, which were carried by Afghan camels, for cattle stations in the northern Kimberley. The town's Afghan cemetery is a reminder of those hardy traders who were essential to the survival of pioneer homesteads in the interior.

The part of the town known as Old Wyndham Port was the original town site and still contains a number of 19th-century buildings, including the old post office, the old courthouse and Anthon's Landing, where the first jetty was erected. The Port Museum displays a vivid photographic history of the port.

The area around Wyndham has a large crocodile population. Freshwater and saltwater crocodiles can be seen at Wyndham Crocodile Park or occasionally in the wild at Blood Drain Crocodile Look-out and Crocodile Hole. To complete the picture, a 4-m (13-ft) high concrete saltwater crocodile greets visitors at the entrance to the town. SOUTH AUSTRALIA

INTRODUCING SOUTH AUSTRALIA 326-331

ADELAIDE AND THE SOUTHEAST 332-349

THE YORKE AND EYRE PENINSULAS
AND THE FAR NORTH 350-361

South Australia at a Glance

SOUTH AUSTRALIA contains a wide range of landscapes. A striking coastline of sandy beaches and steep cliffs gives way to lush valleys, mountains and rolling plains of wheat and barley. Further inland, the terrain changes starkly as the climate becomes hotter and drier. The Far North encompasses huge areas and includes the Flinders Ranges and Coober Pedy, the opal-mining town with “dugout” homes. Most of the state’s population lives in the capital, Adelaide, and the wine-making towns of the Clare and Barossa valleys.

THE YORKE AND EYRE
PENINSULAS AND THE
(see pp350–61)

Coober Pedy’s golf course is one of the few features above ground in this strange Outback mining town. Many of the town’s houses are built underground to escape the area’s harsh, dusty climate (see p360).

Port Augusta (see p357) is a major road and rail hub that also serves as the gateway to the Far North of the state. It retains several early homesteads among its modern buildings.

Kangaroo Island (see p346) is an unspoilt haven for abundant native wildlife. At Kirkpatrick Point in the southwest lie the Remarkable Rocks, sculpted by the wind, rain and sea.

0 kilometres 100
0 miles 100

Quorn (see p361) was an important railway town at the end of the 19th century and has many reminders of its pioneering days. Today it marks the start of the Picby Ricbi Railway, a restored track running vintage trains and locomotives for tourists.

The Flinders Ranges (see p361) stretch from north of St Vincent's Gulf far into the Outback. They include some of South Australia's most rugged scenery and offer fine bushwalking.

The Barossa wine region encompasses the Barossa Valley and Eden Valley. Both are lush areas of rolling hills and home to dozens of famous wineries dating from the 19th century (see pp348–9).

Adelaide (see pp336–41) is an elegant state capital with many well-preserved colonial buildings. Its cosmopolitan atmosphere is enhanced by a lively restaurant, arts and entertainment scene.

(see pp332–49)

Mount Gambier (see p346) lies on the slopes of an extinct volcano of the same name. One of the volcano's crater lakes, Blue Lake, shows its intense blue in the summer months.

Birds of South Australia

South Australian budgerigar

THE VAST, VARIED habitats of South Australia are home to some 380 bird species.

Gulls, sea eagles and penguins live along the coast, while waders, ducks and cormorants are found in the internal wetlands. Rosellas and other parrots are common in Adelaide's parkland. The mallee scrub, which once covered much of the state, is home to the mallee fowl and an array of honeyeaters. The Flinders Ranges and the Far North are the domain of birds of prey such as the peregrine falcon and the wedge-tailed eagle. Although much land has been cleared for farming, many habitats are protected within the state's national parks.

Little penguins are the smallest penguins found in Australia. The only species to breed on the mainland, they feed on fish and squid skilfully caught underwater.

THE FLINDERS RANGES AND OUTBACK HABITAT

The rugged mountains and deep gorges of the Flinders Ranges support a wide variety of bird species. Most spectacular are the birds of prey. Wedge-tailed eagles' nests can be found in large gum trees or on rock ledges, and the eagles are commonly seen feeding on dead animals in the arid Outback regions.

Wedge-tailed eagles, with their huge wingspan of up to 2.3 m (7 ft 6 in), typically perch on dead trees and telephone poles.

Peregrine falcons do not build nests, but lay their eggs on bare ledges or in tree hollows. Magnificent in flight, they descend on their prey at great speed with wings half or fully closed.

MALLEE SCRUB HABITAT

Much of this low-level scrubland has been cleared for agriculture. Remaining areas such as Billiat National Park near Loxton provide an important habitat for several elusive species. Golden whistlers, red and brush wattlebirds and white-eared honeyeaters can be seen here by patient bird-watchers. The best seasons to visit are late winter, spring and early summer.

Mallee fowls, a wary species, stand 60 cm (24 in) tall and move quietly. They lay their eggs in a ground nest made of decomposing leaves and twigs.

Western whipbirds are scarce and extremely secretive, keeping to the undergrowth. They run and fly swiftly, and are usually first noted by their harsh, grating call.

Alert gaze of the Australian emu

THE EMU

Emus are huge flightless birds unique to Australia. Second only to the ostrich in height, they stand 1.5–1.9 m (5–6 ft 3 in) tall. They have long powerful legs and can run at speeds of up to 50 km/h (30 mph) over short distances. The females have a distinctive voice like a thudding drum. They lay their eggs on the ground on a thin layer of grass and leaves. The male incubates them for seven weeks, then broods and accompanies the young for up to 18 months. Common all over Australia, emus are found mainly in open, pastoral areas. Moving alone or in flocks, they are highly mobile and have a large home range.

Soft, grey-black plumage of the emu

WETLAND HABITAT

Wetlands such as Coorong National Park (see p343) are vital feeding and breeding grounds for a wide range of water birds. They provide essential refuge in times of drought for many endangered birds. Migratory birds, such as sharp-tailed sandpipers from Siberia, use these areas to feed and rest before continuing on their annual journeys.

Brolgas stand up to 1.3 m (4 ft 3 in) tall, with a wingspan of up to 2.3 m (7 ft 6 in). They are renowned for their impressive dancing displays, leaping, bowing and flapping.

Freckled ducks are similar to primitive waterfowl, with swan-like characteristics.

Dark, with no obvious markings, they are hard to spot. This is one of the world's rarest ducks.

WOODLAND HABITAT

Habitats in woodland areas such as the Belair National Park near Adelaide support many species such as honeyeaters, rosellas and kookaburras. There is usually an abundance of food in such places and good opportunities to nest and roost. Despite increased human settlement in these areas, the birdlife is still rich. Dawn and dusk are the best times for seeing birds.

Adelaide rosellas are commonly found in the Mount Lofty Ranges and the parklands of Adelaide. Their plumage is in brilliant shades of red, orange and blue.

Laughing kookaburras are the world's largest kingfishers. They are renowned for their loud, manic laughing call, often begun by one bird and quickly taken up by others.

Wines of South Australia

SOUTH AUSTRALIA produces almost half of Australia's wines, including many of its finest. From its numerous vineyards comes a dazzling diversity of wines – several are made from some of the oldest vines in the world. The state has a long history of wine-making and is home to some very famous producers, such as Hardys, Penfolds, Jacobs Creek and Banrock Station. Virtually all wineries welcome tourists for tastings.

Tim Knappstein, an award-winning Clare Valley winery, produces Riesling that is European in style.

Sevenhill Cellars is in the heart of the Clare Valley, one of South Australia's prime wine-producing regions.

Bridgewater Mill

Bridgewater Mill winery is renowned in the area for its excellent restaurant. Daily tastings of its own labels and Petaluma wines are offered at the cellar door.

WINE REGIONS

South Australia has eight designated wine zones and within these zones are many well-known regions. These include the Barossa Valley (see pp348–9), which has been producing wine for 150 years; the Clare Valley, which is noted for its Rieslings, Cabernet Sauvignon and Shiraz; and Coonawarra, which is Australia's best red wine region, due to its soil. McLaren Vale, the Murray Valley, the Adelaide Plains, the Riverland, the Limestone Coast, and the Adelaide Hills are the other major districts.

Cabernet Sauvignon grapes are very successful in the state, with a ripe, fruity flavour.

The Adelaide Hills are known for their excellent Pinot Noir, Chardonnay and Riesling grapes.

Wolf Blass' Barossa Black Label has a rich, oaky flavour, and is just one of this world-renowned vintner's individual wines. Blass has earned more than 2,000 international medals for his wine.

KEY FACTS

Location and Climate

The climate of Australia's central state ranges from Mediterranean-style in the Murray Valley to the cool Adelaide Hills and districts in the southeast. Vintage begins in high summer, when grapes are often picked and crushed at night to preserve the maximum flavour.

Grape Varieties

The diverse climate ensures that a wide range of grape varieties is planted. These include the whites of Riesling, Semillon, Sauvignon Blanc, Chardonnay; and the reds of Shiraz, Grenache, Pinot Noir, Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot.

Good Producers

Penfolds, Bethany, Grant Burge, St Hallett, Henschke, Seppelt, Charles Melton, Turkey Flat, Mountadam, Hardys, Orlando, Wolf Blass, Yalumba, Rockford, Willows, Petaluma, Grosset, Wendoree, Pauletts, Pikes, Wynns, Bowen, Chapel Hill, d'Arenberg, Peter Lehmann, Noons, Bridgewater Mill, Hollicks. (This list represents only a sampling of the state's quality producers.)

Barrel maturation at the Berri Renmano winery in the Murray Valley is one of the traditional techniques still used in the production of top-quality table wines.

Yalumba 'Menzies' Vineyard, founded in 1849, is one of the oldest in the Coonawarra region. The grapes are grown here, but the wine is made at the winery in the Barossa Valley (see page 349). The climate in the Coonawarra area is similar to that of Bordeaux in France.

Wynns Winery at Coonawarra is known for fine Cabernet Sauvignon and other reds. The winery itself is equally distinctive – an image of its triple gable architecture appears on the wine labels.

ADELAIDE AND THE SOUTHEAST

THE SOUTHEAST is a region rich with pine forests, wineries and a spectacular coastline. The state capital, Adelaide, is a vibrant city, whose surrounding hills abound with vineyards from the Barossa Valley to McLaren Vale. To the east, the great Murray River meanders from the Victoria border down to the Southern Ocean. Just off the Fleurieu Peninsula lies Kangaroo Island, a haven for wildlife.

Home to Aborigines for more than 10,000 years, this region was settled by Europeans in 1836 when Governor John Hindmarsh proclaimed the area a British colony. William Light, the Surveyor General, chose the site of the city of Adelaide.

The settlement was based on a theory of free colonization funded solely by land sales, and no convicts were transported here. Elegant Adelaide was carefully planned by Colonel Light: its ordered grid pattern, centred on pretty squares and gardens, is surrounded by parkland. Wealth from agriculture and mining paid for many of Adelaide's fine Victorian buildings. In the mid-20th century, the city established a significant manufacturing industry, in particular of motor vehicles and household appliances. Adelaide still has a focus on high technology.

South Australia has always had a tradition of tolerance. Many of the first settlers were non-conformists from Great Britain seeking a more open society. Other early migrants included Lutherans escaping persecution in Germany. They settled in Hahndorf and the Barossa Valley, where they established a wine industry.

With high rainfall and irrigated by the Murray River, the region is the most fertile in the state. The coastline includes the Fleurieu Peninsula and the beautiful Coorong National Park. Offshore, Kangaroo Island has stunning scenery and bountiful native wildlife.

Exploring Adelaide and the Southeast

ADELAIDE AND THE SOUTHEAST area encompass the most bountiful and productive regions of South Australia. Adelaide, the state's capital city and the most obvious base for exploring the region, lies on a flat plain between the Mount Lofty Ranges and the popular white sandy beaches of Gulf St Vincent, to the east of Cape Jervis. The city itself is green and elegant, with many historic sites to explore. To the northeast, beyond the Adelaide Hills, are quaint 19th-century villages and the many wineries of the Barossa Valley region. To the east and south lie Australia's largest river, the Murray River, and the rolling hills of the Fleurieu Peninsula. Further to the southeast the beauty of the coastal Coorong National Park and the Southern Ocean coastline contrasts with the flat, agricultural area inland. Offshore lies the natural splendour of Kangaroo Island, with its abundance of native wildlife and striking rock formations.

GETTING AROUND

The inner city of Adelaide is best explored on foot; it is compact, well laid out and flat. There is a public transport system of mostly buses, and some trains, throughout the metropolitan area, although services are often restricted at weekends. However, for those with a car, the city's roads are good and the traffic generally light. Outside Adelaide, public transport is very limited, although coach tours are available to most areas. A car provides the most efficient means of exploring the region, with a network of high-standard roads and highways. In addition, a domestic air service operates between Adelaide and Mount Gambier. Kangaroo Island is serviced by air from Adelaide and also by ferry from Cape Jervis. The predominantly flat landscape also makes this a popular area for cyclists and walkers.

ADELAIDE'S CULTURAL CENTRE lies between the grand, tree-lined North Terrace and the River Torrens. Along North Terrace is a succession of imposing 19th-century public buildings, including the state library, museum and art gallery and two university campuses. To the west, on the bank of the river, is the Festival Centre. This multi-purpose complex of theatres, including an outdoor amphitheatre, is home to the renowned biennial Adelaide Festival (see p37). To the east, also by the river, lie the botanic and zoological gardens.

Exploring Adelaide

South Australian

ADELAIDE, a city of great charm with an unhurried way of life, is easily explored on foot. Well planned on a grid pattern, it is bordered by wide terraces and parkland. Within the city are a number of garden squares and gracious stone buildings. However, while Adelaide values its past, it is very much a modern city. The balmy climate and excellent local food and wine have given rise to an abundance of streetside restaurants and cafés. With its acclaimed arts-based Adelaide Festival (see p37), the city also prides itself on being the artistic capital of Australia.

Victoria Square

Flinders & Angus sts.

Victoria Square lies at the geographic heart of the city. In its centre stands a fountain designed by sculptor John Dowie in 1968. Its theme is the three rivers from which Adelaide draws its water: the Torrens, the Murray and the Onkaparinga. Government buildings were erected around much of the square during colonial days and many of these buildings still stand as reminders of a bygone age.

On the north side of Victoria Square stands the General Post Office, an impressive building with an ornate main hall and a clock tower. Opened in 1872, it was hailed by English novelist Anthony Trollope as the “grandest edifice in the town”.

On the corner of Wakefield Street, to the east of Victoria Square, stands St Francis Xavier Catholic Cathedral. The original cathedral, dedicated in 1858, was a simpler building and plans for expansion were hampered by the lack of rich Catholics in the state. The cathedral was only completed in 1996, when the spire was finally added.

To the south of the square is Adelaide’s legal centre and the Magistrates Court. The Supreme Court, built in the 1860s, has a Palladian façade.

Ayers House

AYERS HOUSE is one of the best examples of colonial Regency architecture in Australia. From 1855 until his death in 1897, it was the home of Sir Henry Ayers, a former Premier of South Australia and an influential businessman. The original house was quite simple but was expanded over the years with the growing status and wealth of its owner. The final form of this elegant mansion is due largely to the noted colonial architect Sir George Strickland Kingston. The restored house is now run by the National Trust and also incorporates two restaurants. The oldest section is open to the public and houses a fine collection of Victorian furniture, furnishings, memorabilia and art.

THE STORY OF SIR HENRY AYERS

Sir Henry Ayers (1821–97) was born in Hampshire, England, the son of a dock worker. He married in 1840 and, a month later, emigrated with his bride to South Australia. After working briefly as a clerk, Ayers made his fortune in the state's new copper mines. Entering politics in 1857, he was appointed South Australia's Premier seven times between 1863 and 1873, and was President of the Legislative Council, 1881–93. Among many causes, he supported exploration of the interior (Ayers Rock, now Uluru, was named after him), but is chiefly remembered for his prominent role in the development of South Australia.

The Southeast Coastline

THE COASTLINE south of Adelaide is rich and varied with beautiful beaches, magnificent coastal scenery and abundant birdlife. The southern coastline of the Fleurieu Peninsula is largely exposed to the mighty Southern Ocean. Here there are good surfing beaches, long expanses of sand, sheltered bays and harbours and stark, weathered cliffs. The western side of the peninsula is more sheltered. There are very few commercial developments on the southeast's coastline and it is easy to find quiet, secluded beaches for swimming, surfing, fishing or walking. Just off South Australia's mainland, Kangaroo Island boasts both pristine swimming beaches and ruggedly beautiful windswept cliffs.

★ Kingscote, Kangaroo Island ③

Kingscote, the island's largest town has a small sandy beach with a tidal pool. There is rich birdlife in swampland south of the town.

★ Port Noarlunga ①

Port Noarlunga boasts a fantastic beach and a protected reef with marine ecosystems that can be explored by snorkellers and scuba divers on a fully marked 800-m (2,600-ft) underwater trail.

Flinders Chase National Park covers the western end of Kangaroo Island with undisturbed eucalypt forests and grassland, and seal-inhabited windswept beaches.

Waitpinga Beach ④

Waitpinga Beach, on the southern coast of the Fleurieu Peninsula, is a spectacular surfing beach with waves rolling in off the Southern Ocean. Strong, unpredictable currents make the beach unsafe for swimming and suitable for experienced surfers only. The long stretch of clean white sand is a favourite for beach walkers.

Victor Harbor ⑤

Holiday homes have been built in Victor Harbor since the 19th century. It later became a whaling station, but today southern right whales can be seen from June to October frolicking offshore.

★ Cape Jervis ②

Visitors to the tiny hamlet of Cape Jervis can see Kangaroo Island (see p346), 16 km (10 miles) away across Backstairs Passage. The cape has good boating and fishing and is a hang-gliding centre.

Port Elliot ⑥

Port Elliot, together with nearby Victor Harbor, has long been a favourite place to escape the summer heat of Adelaide. Established in 1854 as a port for the Murray River trade, the town has a safe swimming beach and a fine cliff-top walk.

Hindmarsh Island ⑦

The quiet escapist destination of Hindmarsh Island can be reached by a free ferry from the town of Goolwa 24 hours a day. On the island there are several good vantage points from which visitors can see the mouth of the Murray River.

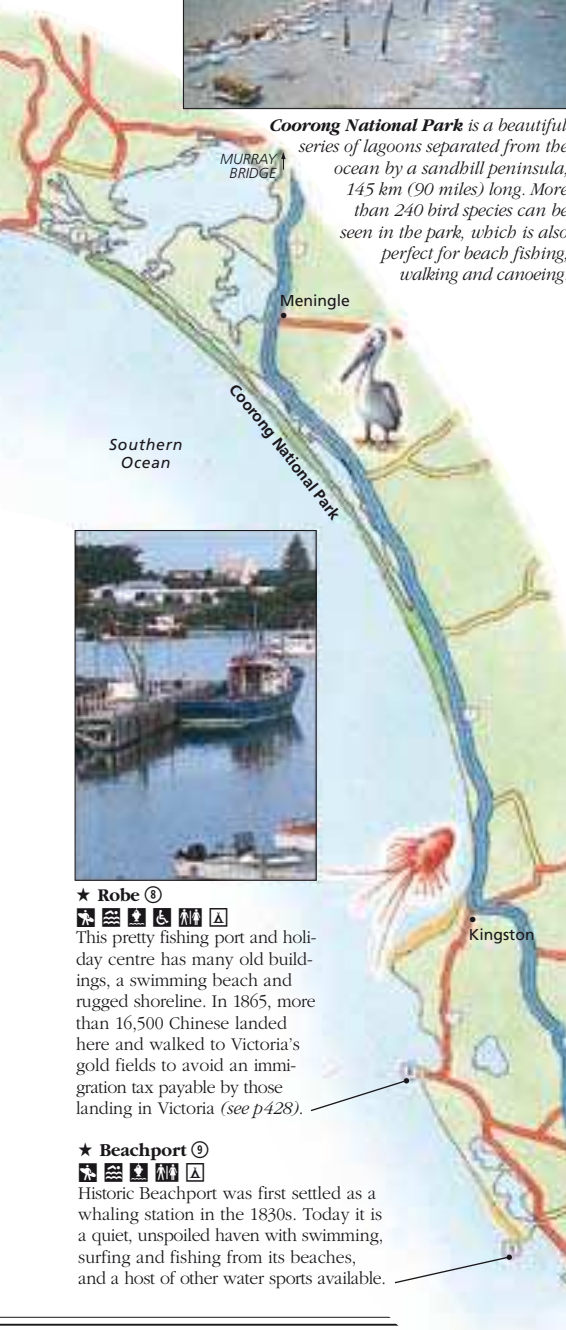

Coorong National Park is a beautiful series of lagoons separated from the ocean by a sandhill peninsula, 145 km (90 miles) long. More than 240 bird species can be seen in the park, which is also perfect for beach fishing, walking and canoeing.

THE DESIGNATED heritage town of Strathalbyn was originally settled by Scottish immigrants in 1839. Links with its Scottish ancestry can still be seen today in much of the town's architecture, which is reminiscent of small highland towns in Scotland.

Situated on the banks of the Angas River, Strathalbyn is dominated by St Andrew's Church with its sturdy tower. A number of original buildings have been preserved. The police station, built in 1858, and the 1865 courthouse together house the National Trust Museum. The prominent two-storey London House, built as a general store in 1867, has, like a number of buildings in or near the High Street, found a new use as an antiques store. As in many country towns in Australia, the hotels and banks are also architectural reminders of the past.

About 16 km (10 miles) south-east of Strathalbyn, on the banks of the Bremer River, is Langhorne Creek, renowned as one of the earliest wine-growing regions in Australia.

KANGAROO ISLAND, Australia's third-largest island, is 155 km (96 miles) long and 55 km (34 miles) wide. Located 16 km (10 miles) off the Fleurieu Peninsula, the island was the site of South Australia's first official colonial settlement, established at Reeves Point in 1836. The settlement was short-lived, however, and within just four years had been virtually abandoned. The island was then settled by degrees during the remainder of the 19th century as communications improved with the new mainland settlements.

There is no public transport on Kangaroo Island and visitors must travel on a tour or by car. Though the roads to the main sights are good, many roads are unsealed and extra care should be taken.

Remarkable Rocks at Kirkpatrick Point, Kangaroo Island

Sparsely populated and geographically isolated, the island has few introduced predators and is a haven for a wide variety of animals and birds, many protected in its 19 conservation and national parks.

At Kingscote and Penneshaw fairy penguins can often be seen in the evenings, and the south coast windswept beach of Seal Bay is home to a large colony of Australian sea lions. In Flinders Chase National Park, kangaroos will sometimes approach visitors, but feeding them is discouraged.

The interior is dry, but does support tracts of mallee scrub, and eucalypts. The coastline, however, is varied. The north coast has sheltered beaches ideal for swimming. The south coast, battered by the Southern Ocean, has more than 40 shipwrecks. At Kirkpatrick Point to the southwest stands a group of large rocks. Aptly named Remarkable Rocks, they have been eroded into weird formations by the winds and sea.

MOUNT GAMBIER is a major regional city midway between Adelaide and Melbourne, named after the extinct volcano on the slopes of which the city lies. Established in 1854, it is now surrounded by farming country and large pine plantations. The volcano has four crater lakes which are attractive recreation spots, with walking trails, picnic facilities and a wildlife park. The Blue Lake, up to 85 m (280 ft) deep, is a major draw between November and March when its water mysteriously turns an intense blue. From April to October, it remains a dull grey.

There are also a number of caves to explore within the city. Engelbrecht Cave is popular with cave divers, and the exposed Umpherston Sinkhole has fine terraced gardens.

LOCATED 12 km (7 miles) south of Naracoorte is the Naracoorte Caves Conservation Park. Within this 600-ha (1,500-acre) park, there are 60 known caves, most notably Victoria Cave, which has been placed on the World Heritage List as a result of the remarkable fossil deposits discovered here in 1969 (see pp22–3). Guided tours of this and three other caves are available.

From November to February thousands of bent wing bats come to breed in the Maternity Cave. They can be seen leaving the cave en masse at dusk to feed. Entrance to this cave is forbidden, but visitors can view the inside via infra-red cameras in the park.

AUSTRALIA'S LARGEST river is a vital source of water in this, the driest state in Australia. As well as supplying water for Adelaide it supports a vigorous local agricultural industry which produces 40 per cent of all Australian wine (see pp330–31). It is also a popular destination for houseboating, water-skiing and fishing.

The town of Renmark, close to the Victoria border, lies at the heart of the Murray River irrigation area and is home to the Riverlands' first winery. At the town's wharf is the restored paddlesteamer Industry, now a floating museum and a reminder of days gone by.

Just south of Renmark, Berri is the area's commercial centre and site of the largest combined distillery and winery in the southern hemisphere. The Murray River meanders through Berri and on to the small town of Loxton before winding up towards the citrus centre of Waikerie. Surrounded by more than 5,000 ha (12,000 acres) of orchards, Waikerie is a favourite gliding centre and has hosted the world gliding championships.

Another 40 km (25 miles) downstream, the Murray River reaches the town of Morgan, its northernmost point in South Australia, before it turns south towards the ocean. The Port of Morgan Museum, located in the old railway station, aims to recapture the river-trading days, telling the story of what was once the second-busiest port in the state. The Mayflower, the oldest surviving paddlesteamer in the state, is moored next to the museum.

Riesling grapes

THE BAROSSA, comprised of the Barossa and Eden valleys, is one of Australia's most famous wine regions. First settled in 1842 by German Lutheran immigrants, villages were established at Bethany, Langmeil (now Tanunda), Lyndoch and Light's Pass. Signs of German traditions can be seen in the 19th-century buildings, churches and in the region's food, music and festivals. The Barossa Festival takes place in April in every even-numbered year and there is a Music Festival every October. The Barossa Train provides an interesting historical travel alternative from Adelaide.

Orlando 1

Established in 1847, this is one of the largest wineries in Australia. Famous for its popular Jacob's Creek range, it is the country's top wine exporter and includes labels such as Wyndham Estate, Poet's Corner and Richmond Grove.

Grant Burge 2

Grant and Helen Burge founded this historic winery in 1988 and undertook restoration work on the buildings. The beautifully restored tasting room has custom-made chandeliers and ornamental glass. The winery produces traditional style Barossa wines – the Meshach Shiraz is one of the region's finest.

Seppelt 5

Between Tanunda and Greenoch, this winery was established in 1851 by the pioneering German family Seppelt. A historic complex of splendid stone buildings, it is reached via an avenue of palm trees planted in the 1920s.

Peter Lehmann 4

A significant producer of quality Barossa wines, this winery was established by Peter Lehmann, a well-known character in the valley. The winery was awarded International Winemaker of the Year in 2004.

Rockford 3

This winery uses 100-year-old equipment to make its famous traditional hand-crafted wines. In the summer months visitors can see the old equipment working. The winery itself is also more than a century old.

Penfolds ⑥
Established in 1844, Penfolds moved to this site on the outskirts of Nuriootpa in 1974. This major winery (home of the famous Grange) matures its range of red and white table wines and ports in barrels made on the premises. Many wines are available for tasting and buying at the cellar door.

Wolf Blass ⑦
One of the younger wineries in the Barossa, established in 1973, Wolf Blass boasts elaborate tasting rooms and a wine heritage museum. It specializes in premium red and white table wines, and sparkling and fortified wines.

Saltram ⑧
Established in 1859, this historic winery is set in beautiful gardens on a Barossa hillside outside Angaston. Popular with red and fortified wine enthusiasts, Saltram also has an excellent restaurant, which is open for lunch daily and dinner Thursday to Saturday.

SALTRAM

Collingrove Homestead, Angaston ⑨
Now owned by the National Trust, Collingrove was built in 1856 as a home for a member of the influential pioneering Angas family. It has original furnishings and is set in an English-style garden. Accommodation is available.

Henschke ⑩
This winery is one of the world's greatest producers. Their wines are made from single vineyards, some with 100-year-old vines. After visiting the cellar be sure to walk through the vineyards – with some of the oldest vines in the world.

TIPS FOR DRIVERS

Although a tour of the Barossa Valley can be made in a day from Adelaide, the region is best seen and enjoyed by taking advantage of the excellent local accommodation and restaurants. The roads are generally good, although drivers should take special care on those that are unsealed. Visitors planning to visit a number of wineries and sample the produce may prefer to take one of the many tours or hire a chauffeur-driven vehicle.

THE YORKE AND EYRE PENINSULAS AND THE FAR NORTH

FROM THE LUSH CLARE VALLEY and the dunes of the Simpson Desert, to the saltbush of the Nullarbor Plain, the land to the north and west of Adelaide is an area of vast distances and dramatic changes of scenery. With activities ranging from surfing on the coast to bushwalking in the Flinders Ranges, one is never far from awesome natural beauty.

South Australia was first settled by Europeans in 1836, but suffered early financial problems partly due to economic mismanagement. These were largely remedied by the discovery of copper at Kapunda, north of Adelaide, in 1842, and at Burra, near Clare, in 1845. As these resources were depleted fresh discoveries were made in the north of the Yorke Peninsula, in the area known as Little Cornwall, at the town of Wallaroo in 1859 and at Moonta in 1861. By the 1870s, South Australia was the British Empire's leading copper producer, and copper, silver and uranium mining still boosts the state's economy today.

The Yorke and Eyre peninsulas are major arable areas, producing more than 10 per cent of Australia's wheat and much of its barley. They also have several important fishing ports, most notably Port Lincoln, the tuna-fishing capital of the country. Both peninsulas have stunning coastal scenery. The Yorke Peninsula, only two hours' drive from Adelaide, is a popular holiday destination with excellent fishing, reef diving and surfing opportunities. The much larger Eyre Peninsula is also renowned for fishing and has many superb beaches. Despite extensive arable use, it still retains about half of its land area as parks, reserves and native bushland.

To the west, the vast Nullarbor Plain stretches far into Western Australia (see p311), with the Great Victoria Desert extending above it. Much of this region is protected Aboriginal land and the Woomera prohibited military area.

North of the Yorke Peninsula lies the rugged majesty of the Flinders Ranges. Rich with sights of deep Aboriginal spiritual and cultural significance, the ranges are also home to abundant flora and fauna, and make for superb bushwalking. Further north, the immense, inhospitable but starkly beautiful desert regions of the South Australian Outback provide a challenging but rewarding destination for adventurous travellers.

Exploring the Yorke and Eyre Peninsulas

JUST NORTH of Adelaide (see pp336–41) lie the green hills of the Clare Valley; then, further inland, as the rainfall diminishes, the countryside changes dramatically. First comes the grandeur of the Flinders Ranges with rugged mountains and tranquil gorges. West of Adelaide are two peninsulas, at the head of which is the industrial triangle of Port Pirie, Port Augusta and Whyalla. The Yorke Peninsula is Australia's richest barley growing district. Eyre Peninsula is also a wheat and barley producing area. From here the barren Nullarbor Plain runs beyond the Western Australian border.

Fishing boats moored in the harbour of Port Lincoln

GETTING AROUND

Despite the sparse population, there is an extensive road network throughout the region. The Stuart Hwy runs up from Adelaide to Coober Pedy and beyond into the Northern Territory, and the Eyre Hwy wends its way from Adelaide along the tops of the Yorke and Eyre peninsulas, across the Nullarbor Plain and into Western Australia. There is no state railway, but interstate trains running from Sydney to Perth, and Adelaide to Alice Springs and Melbourne, stop at major towns in the region. Scheduled buses serve most towns, and there are air services from Adelaide to regional airports in Port Lincoln, Ceduna, Coober Pedy, Whyalla, Port Augusta and Renmark.

(08) 8821 2333 or 1800 654 991.

YORKETOWN is the commercial centre of the earliest settled area on the southern Yorke Peninsula. It lies at the heart of a region scattered with nearly 300 salt lakes, many of which mysteriously turn pink at various times of the year, depending on climatic conditions. From the late 1890s until the 1930s, salt harvesting was a major industry in this part of South Australia.

Approximately 70 km (40 miles) southwest of Yorketown, at the tip of the Yorke Peninsula, is the spectacular Innes National Park. The park's geography changes from salt lakes and low mallee scrub inland to sandy beaches and steep, rugged cliffs along the coast. Kangaroos and emus have become accustomed to the presence of humans and are commonly seen, but other native inhabitants, such as the large mallee fowl, are more difficult to spot.

There is good surfing, reef diving and fishing in the park, especially at Browns Beach, the wild Pondalowie Bay, Chinamans Creek and Salmon Hole. Other beaches are considered unsafe for swimming. Also in the park are the rusting remains of the shipwrecked barque Ethel, which ran aground in 1904 and now lies with part of its hull protruding through the sand below the limestone cliffs of Ethel Beach.

CENTRALLY LOCATED, Minlaton is a service town to the surrounding farming community. Minlaton's claim to fame, however, is as the destination of the very first air mail flight across water in the southern hemisphere. Pilot Captain Harry Butler, a World War I fighter ace, set off on this record-breaking mission in August 1919 from Adelaide. Minlaton's Butler Memorial houses his 1916 Bristol fighter plane, "Red Devil", believed to be the only one left in the world, as well as displays detailing Butler's life.

Port Victoria ❸

350. 50 Moonta Rd, Kadina
(08) 8821 2333.

LYING ON the west coast of the Yorke Peninsula, Port Victoria is today a sleepy holiday destination, popular with anglers, swimmers and divers.

In the early part of the 20th century, however, it was a busy sea port with large clippers and windjammers loading grain bound for the northern hemisphere. The last time a square rigger used the port was in 1949. The story of these ships and their epic voyages is told in the Maritime Museum, located adjacent to the jetty in a timber goods shed.

About 10 km (6 miles) off the coast lies Wardang Island, around which are eight known shipwrecks dating from 1871. Divers can follow the Wardang Island Maritime Heritage Trail to view the wrecks, each of which has an underwater plaque. Boats to the island can be chartered, but permission to land must be obtained from the Community Council in Point Pearce, the nearby Aboriginal settlement which administers the island.

SURROUNDED BY some of the most productive farmland in Australia, Maitland lies in the centre of the Yorke Peninsula, on a ridge overlooking the Yorke Valley and Spencer Gulf. Originally proclaimed in 1872, it is now the service centre for the surrounding community.

The pretty town, laid out on a classic grid pattern, retains many fine examples of colonial architecture, including the Maitland Hotel, built in 1874, and the 1875 St Bartholomew's Catholic Church.

The Maitland Museum has an agricultural and folk collection housed in three buildings and focuses on the region's history and development.

THE THREE TOWNS of Moonta, Kadina and Wallaroo were established after copper discoveries on Yorke Peninsula in 1859 and 1861. Collectively the towns are known as "The Copper Coast" or "Australia's Little Cornwall". Many miners from Cornwall, England, came here in the 19th century seeking their fortunes. The biennial festival "Kernewek Lowender" (see p38) celebrates this Cornish heritage. The wealth created by the mines has left the towns with fine architecture.

Wallaroo, the site of the first copper ore smelting works, was also a shipping port for ore. When mining finished,

Former timber shed now home to the Maritime Museum, Port Victoria the port was important for agricultural exports. The Wallaroo Heritage and Nautical Museum is in the old post office.

Moonta, once home to Australia's richest copper mine, contains a group of sites and buildings in the Moonta Mines State Heritage Area. The 1870 Miner's Cottage is a restored wattle and daub cottage. The history museum is in the old Moonta Mines Model School. Also of interest is the Moonta Mines Railway, a restored light-gauge locomotive.

Kadina, where copper was originally found, is the Yorke Peninsula's largest town. The National Dryland Farm and Heritage Centre has interesting displays on mining and folk history of the area.

FISHING AND DIVING ON THE YORKE PENINSULA

There are fantastic opportunities for on- and offshore fishing and diving in the waters off the Yorke Peninsula. Many of the coastal towns have jetties used by keen amateur fishermen, and around Edithburgh anglers may catch tommy ruff, garfish and snook. Divers can enjoy the southern coast's stunning underwater scenery with brightly coloured corals and fish.

Offshore, the wreck of the Clan Ranald near Edithburgh is a popular dive and, off Wardang Island, eight wrecks can be explored on a unique diving trail. Angling from boats can be equally fruitful and local charter boats are available for hire.

Restored 19th-century buildings at Burra Mine near the Clare Valley

Clare Valley 6

Clare. Town Hall, 229 Main North Rd, Clare (08) 8842 2131.

FRAMED BY the rolling hills of the northern Mount Lofty Ranges, the Clare Valley is a picturesque and premium wine-producing region. At the head of the valley lies the town of Clare. This pretty, regional centre has many historic buildings, including the National Trust Museum, housed in the old Police Station, and Wolta Wolta, an early pastoralist's home, built in 1864, which has a fine collection of antiques.

Sevenhill Cellars, 7 km (4 miles) south of Clare, is the oldest vineyard in the valley. It was established by Austrian Jesuits in 1851, originally to produce altar wine for the colony. The adjacent St Aloysius Church was completed in 1875. The winery is still run by Jesuits and now produces both altar and table wines.

East of Sevenhill lies the pleasant heritage town of Mintaro, with many buildings making extensive use of the slate quarried in the area for more than 150 years. Also worth visiting is Martindale Hall, an elegant 1879 mansion situated just southeast of town.

Twelve km (7 miles) north of Clare lies Bungaree Station. This self-contained Merino sheep-farming complex was established in 1841 and is now maintained as a working 19th-century model. From the historic exhibits visitors can learn about life and work at the station.

About 35 km (22 miles) northeast of Clare is the charming town of Burra. Five years after copper was discovered here in 1845, Burra was home to the largest mine in Australia. As such it was the economic saviour of the fledgling state, rescuing it from impending bankruptcy. Once five separate townships, Burra is now a State Heritage Area.

The Burra Mine site, with its ruins and restored buildings around the huge open cut, is one of the most exciting industrial archaeological sites in Australia. An interpretive centre at the Bon Accord Mine allows visitors access to the original mine shaft. The miners' dugouts, still seen on the banks of Burra Creek, were once home to more than 1,500 mainly Cornish miners. Paxton Square Cottages, built between 1849 and 1852, are unique in Australian mining history as the first decent accommodation provided for miners and their families. Many old buildings, including the police lockup and stables, the Redruth Gaol and the Unicorn Brewery Cellars, have been carefully restored, as have a number of the 19th-century shops and houses. A museum with various displays chronicling the local history is located in Burra market square.

SITUATED at the head of Spencer Gulf, Port Augusta is at the crossroads of Australia; here lies the intersection of the Sydney–Perth and Adelaide–Alice Springs railway lines, as well as the major Sydney–Perth and Adelaide–Darwin highways. Once an important port, its power stations now produce 40 per cent of the state’s electricity. The coal-fired Northern Power Station, which dominates the city’s skyline, offers free conducted tours.

Port Augusta is also the beginning of South Australia’s Outback region. The School of the Air and the Royal Flying Doctor Service offices, both of which provide essential services to inhabitants of remote stations, are open to the public (see p249). The Wadlata Outback Centre imaginatively tells the story of the Far North from 15 million years ago when rainforests covered the area, through Aboriginal and European history, up to the present day and into the future.

Australia’s first Arid Lands Botanic Garden was opened nearby in 1996. This 200-ha (500-acre) site is an important research and education facility, as well as a recreational area. It also commands fine panoramic views of the Flinders Ranges to the east (see p361).

AT THE SOUTHERN end of the Eyre Peninsula, Port Lincoln sits on the shore of Boston Bay, one of the world's largest natural harbours. A fishing and seafood processing centre, it is home to Australia's largest tuna fleet.

Locals celebrate the start of the tuna season every January with the Tunarama Festival (see p37). This raucous event includes processions, concerts and a tuna-tossing competition.

Fishing and sailing are popular activities. Visitors can take a boat trip to Dangerous Reef, 31 km (20 miles) offshore, to view great white sharks from the relative safety of the boat or submerged cage. In the middle of the bay lies Boston

Island, a working sheep station including an 1842 slab cottage.

The Port Lincoln area has several buildings of note. South of Port Lincoln, Mikkira Station, established in 1842, is one of the country's oldest sheep stations. Today it is ideal for picnics or camping, with a restored pioneer cottage and a koala colony. The Koppio Smithy Museum, located in the Koppio Hills 40 km (25 miles) north of Port Lincoln, is an agricultural museum with a furnished 1890 log cottage and a 1903 smithy that gives a glimpse into the lives of the pioneers.

Just 20 km (12 km) south of Port Lincoln is Lincoln National Park with its rocky hills, sheltered coves, sandy beaches and high cliffs. The park is also rich in birdlife. Emus and parrots are common and ospreys and sea eagles frequent the coast. Just west of the park, Whalers

WILDLIFE OF THE EYRE PENINSULA

An enormous variety of wildlife inhabits the Eyre Peninsula. Emus and kangaroos are common, and the hairy-nosed wombat is found in large numbers on the west coast. Wedge-tailed eagles soar over the Gawler Ranges, while sea eagles, ospreys, albatrosses and petrels are all seen over the coast. In the water, dolphins, sea lions and occasional great white sharks feast on an abundance of marine life. The most spectacular sight, however, are the southern right whales which breed at the head of the Great Australian Bight every June to October. They can be seen from the cliffs at the Head of Bight, just east of the Nullarbor National Park.

There are several scenic drives through the park, but some roads are accessible to 4WD vehicles only. A favourite route for conventional vehicles is the Yangie Trail from the small town of Coffin Bay to Yangie and Avoid bays. To the east of Point Avoid is one of Australia's best surfing beaches, Almonta Beach.

Today, Ceduna is the commercial centre of the far west. Within the town is the Old Schoolhouse National Trust Museum with its collections of restored farm equipment

THE HUGE EXPANSE of the Nullarbor Plain stretches from Nundroo, about 150 km (95 miles) west of Ceduna, towards the distant Western Australia border 330 km (200 miles) away, and beyond into Western Australia (see p311).

This dry, dusty plain can be crossed by rail on the Trans-Australian Railway or by road on the Eyre Highway. The train travels further inland than the road, its route giving little relief from the flat landscape. The highway lies nearer the coast, passing a few isolated sights of interest on its way west.

Just south of the small town of Nundroo lies Fowlers Bay. Good for fishing, it is popular with anglers seeking solitude. West of here, the road passes through the Yalata Aboriginal Lands and travellers can stop by the roadside to buy souvenirs from the local people. Bordering Yalata to the west is Nullarbor National Park. This runs from the Nullarbor Roadhouse hamlet, 130 km (80 miles) west of Nundroo, to the border with Western Australia 200 km (125 miles) away. The Eyre Highway passes through the park, close to the coastal cliffs. This stretch of the plain has some spectacular views over the Great Australian Bight.

The world's longest cave system runs beneath the plain, and the border area has many underground caves and caverns. These should only be explored by experienced cavers, however, as many are flooded and dangerous.

The Far North

SOUTH AUSTRALIA'S OUTBACK is an enormous area of harsh but often breathtaking scenery. Much of the region is untamed desert, broken in places by steep, ancient mountain ranges, huge salt lakes, gorges and occasional hot springs. Although very hot and dry for most of the year, many places burst into life after heavy winter rains and hundreds of species of wildflowers, animals and birds can be seen. The area's recent history is one of fabled stock routes, now Outback tracks for adventurous travellers. Isolated former mining and railway towns now cater for Outback tourists. Vast areas in the west form extensive Aboriginal lands, accessible by permit only.

ONE OF AUSTRALIA'S most famous Outback towns, Coober Pedy, 850 km (530 miles) northwest of Adelaide, is an unusual settlement in the heart of an extremely hostile landscape. Frequent duststorms and a colourless desert landscape littered with abandoned mines contribute to the town's desolate appearance, yet the small population has a cultural mix of over 42 nationalities.

Opal was discovered here in 1915, and today Coober Pedy produces 70 per cent of the world's supply. Mining claims, limited to one per person, can measure no more than 100 m by 50 m (320 ft by 160 ft). For this reason opal mining is the preserve of individuals, not large companies, and this adds to the town's "frontier" quality.

Coober Pedy's name comes

Underground "dugout" home in Coober Pedy

from the Aboriginal kupa piti, meaning white man in a hole, and it is apt indeed. Not only the mines, but also houses, hotels and churches are built underground. This way, the residents escape the extreme temperatures of up to 50°C (122°F) during the day and 0°C (32°F) at night. Several such homes are open to the public.

The Underground Art Gallery displays Aboriginal art. It also has displays relating to opal mining, and visitors can dig for their own opals.

ABOUT 200 KM (125 miles) north of Coober Pedy lies the small town of Oodnadatta, where drivers can check the road and weather conditions before heading further north to Witjira National Park.

Witjira has dunes, salt pans, boulder plains and coolibah woodlands, but it is most famous for its hot artesian springs. Dalhousie Springs has more than 60 active springs with warm water rising from the Great Artesian Basin. These springs supply essential water for Aborigines, pastoralists and wildlife, including water snails, unique to the area.

The landscape is home to some 180 bird, 92 reptile and 44 native mammal species, some of which have developed nocturnal habits as a response to the aridity of the region.

LAKE EYRE National Park encompasses all of Lake Eyre North and extends eastwards into the Tirari Desert. Lake Eyre is Australia's largest salt lake, 15 m (49 ft) below sea level at its lowest point, with a salt crust said to weigh 400 million tonnes. Vegetation is low, comprising mostly blue bush, samphire and saltbush. On the rare occasions when the lake floods, it alters dramatically: flowers bloom and birds such as pelicans and gulls appear, turning the lake into a breeding ground.

favourite with bushwalkers, the ranges encompass a great diversity of stunning scenery and wildlife, much of it protected in several national parks.

In the southern part of the Flinders Ranges is Mount Remarkable National Park, renowned for its fine landscape, abundant wildflowers and excellent walking trails.

About 50 km (30 miles) north of here is the town of Quorn, start of the restored Pichi Richi Railway. North of Quorn lie the dramatic Warren, Yarrah Vale and Buckaringa gorges.

Much of the central Flinders Ranges are contained within the Flinders Ranges National Park. This beautiful park's best-known feature is Wilpena Pound, an elevated natural basin covering some 90 sq km (35 sq miles) with sheer outer walls 500 m (1,600 ft) high.

To the north is Gammon Ranges National Park, with mountain bushwalking for the experienced only. Just outside the park is Arkaroola, a tourist village with a wildlife sanctuary and a state-of-the-art observatory.

Victoria at a Glance

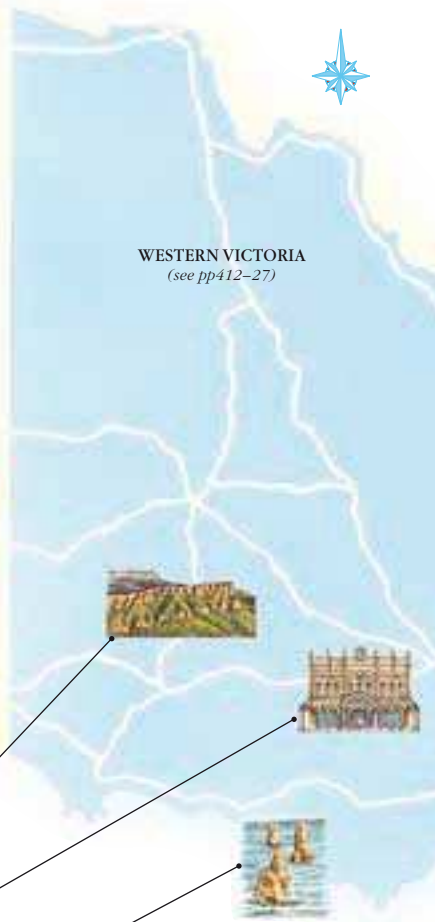

THE STATE OF VICTORIA can be easily divided into two distinct geographical halves, east and west. Western Victoria is known for its unusual landforms, including the Grampians and the Twelve Apostles. It was also the site of Australia's wealthiest gold rush during the 19th century, the legacy of which can be seen in the ornate buildings in the many surviving gold rush towns (see pp50–51). Eastern Victoria's cooler climate benefits the vineyards that produce world-class wines, while the Alps are Victoria's winter playground. The rugged coastline is known for its lakes, forests and wildlife. Melbourne, the state's capital, is the second most populous city in Australia.

Halls Gap is the only settlement within the Grampians National Park (see p417). The rest of this beautiful area is filled with dramatic rock formations, spectacular ridges and wildflowers unique to the region.

Ballarat's Arch of Victory on the Avenue of Honour commemorates the soldiers of World War I. It is also the western entrance to this provincial city, which grew up during the 1850s gold rush (see pp424–5).

WESTERN VICTORIA
(see pp412–27)

The Twelve Apostles is the evocative name given to these eroded limestone rock formations in Port Campbell National Park, seen from the Great Ocean Road (see pp418–19). Sunset is the best time to fully appreciate the view.

Chateau Tabbilk is one of the best known of all the northeastern Victorian vineyards, not only for its excellent wines but also for the pagoda-style architecture of its winery. Eastern Victoria's cool climate has led to a range of successful wineries (see pp438–9).

The Victorian Alps come into their own during the winter months as a premier ski area (see p436).

Melbourne's Best: Parks and Gardens

VISITORS TO MELBOURNE should not miss the city's magnificent public and private gardens. A large proportion of the city's parks and gardens were created in the 19th century and have a gracious quality which has earned Victoria the nickname of Australia's "Garden State". Central Melbourne is ringed by public gardens, including the outstanding Royal Botanic Gardens, visited by more than one million people each year. Melbourne also has a network of public parks which offer a mix of native flora and fauna with recreational activities. The annual Open Garden Scheme (see p36) allows visitors into some of the best private gardens in Victoria and Australia.

LANDSCAPE GARDENS

MELBOURNE ABOUNDS with carefully planned and formal 19th-century gardens, designed by prominent landscape gardeners.

A variety of trees from all over the world lines the formal avenues of Carlton Gardens, designed in 1857 by Edward La Trobe Bateman. The aim of the design was for every path and flowerbed to focus attention on the Exhibition Building, constructed in 1880 (see p387). The main entrance path leads from Victoria Street to the Hochgurtel Fountain, in front of the Exhibition Building, decorated on its upper tier with stone birds and flowers which are indigenous to the state of Victoria.

The attractive Fitzroy Gardens in the heart of the city were also first designed by Bateman in 1848. His original plans were later revised by a Scotsman, James Sinclair, to make them more sympathetic to the area's uneven landscape. The avenues of elms that lead in to the centre of the gardens from the surrounding streets create the shape of the Union Jack flag and are one of the most distinctive features of the gardens (see pp384-5). Fitzroy Gardens' Conservatory is renowned for its five popular annual plant shows.

Statue of Queen Victoria in her eponymous gardens

The Queen Victoria Gardens are considered one of the city's most attractive gardens. They were created as a setting for a new statue of the queen, four years after her death, in 1905. Roses now surround the statue. A floral clock near St Kilda Road was given to Melbourne by Swiss watchmakers in 1966. It is embedded with some 7,000 flowering plants.

Kings Domain (see p390) was the dream of a German botanist, Baron von Mueller, who designed this impressive garden in 1854. The garden is dominated by elegant statues, including one of Simpson, a stretcher bearer during World War I, with his faithful donkey. There are also fountains, silver birch and the imposing Shrine of Remembrance.

BOTANIC GARDENS

BEGUN IN 1846, the Royal Botanic Gardens now cover 36 ha (90 acres). Botanist Baron von Mueller became the director of the gardens in 1857 and began to plant both indigenous and exotic shrubs on the site, intending the gardens to be a scientific aid to fellow biologists. Von Mueller's successor, William Guilfoyle, made his own mark on the design, by adding wide paths across the gardens and an ornamental lake.

Conservatory of flowers in Fitzroy Gardens

Today, the gardens are home to more than 10,000 plant species (see pp390–91).

RECREATIONAL GARDENS AND PARKS

MELBURNIANS ARE avid sports participants as well as spectators, and many of the city's gardens offer a range of sporting facilities in attractive surroundings.

Flagstaff Gardens take their name from the site's role as a signalling station from 1840, warning of ships arriving in the Port of Melbourne. In the 1860s, with advances in communication, this role was no longer required and gardens were laid out on the land instead. Today the gardens are used for their recreational facilities, which include tennis courts, a children's playground and a barbecue area.

The Alexandra Gardens were designed in 1904 as a riverside walk along the Yarra River. Today, as well as the major thoroughfare of Alexandra Avenue, there is an equestrian path, a cycle path, boat sheds and barbecue facilities.

The Treasury Gardens were designed in 1867 and are lined along its avenues with Moreton Bay Figs, offering welcome shade in the summer heat. The location in the centre of the city makes these gardens very popular with office workers during their lunch breaks. The gardens also host regular evening concerts and other entertainment gatherings and an outdoor art show.

Established in 1856, Yarra Park is today home to the city's most well-known sports grounds, Melbourne Park, home of the Australian Open, and the Melbourne Cricket Ground (see p389). The wood and bark of the indigenous river red gums in the park were once used for canoes and shields by local Aborigines and many still bear the scars.

Fawkner Park, named after Melbourne's co-founder, John Fawkner (see pp48–9), was laid out in 1862 and became a large sports ground in the 1890s. Despite a temporary role as a camp site for the Armed Services during World War II, the 40 ha (100 acres) of the park are still used for cricket, football, hockey and softball games.

Another popular sporting area with Melburnians is Princes Park. Two sports pavilions were constructed in 1938, as were two playing fields. The park now contains a football oval and the unique "Fun and Fitness Centre", a jogging track lined with exercise equipment at stages along its 3-km (1.8-mile) route. A gravel running track was also added in 1991.

Melbourne's Best: Architecture

IN 1835, Melbourne was a village of tents and impermanent dwellings. Fed by the wealth of the 1850s' gold rush and the economic boom of the 1880s, it rapidly acquired many graceful buildings. Today, the city's architecture is very eclectic, with a strong Victorian element. The range of architectural styles is impressive, from beautiful restorations to outstanding contemporary novelties. The city's tallest building is the 1986 Rialto twin tower complex (see p379).

Early colonial Cook's Cottage

EARLY COLONIAL

In colonial days, it was quite common for small edifices, such as La Trobe's Cottage, to be shipped from England as skilled builders were in short supply. Other imported structures included timber cottages and corrugated iron dwellings.

La Trobe's Cottage is a prefabricated wooden cottage of 1839.

HIGH VICTORIAN

During the 19th century, Melbourne erected several grand state buildings equal to those in the USA and Europe. State Parliament House, begun in 1856, included a central dome in its original design which was omitted due to lack of funds (see p384). South of the city is the 1934 Shrine of Remembrance, which demonstrates the 20th century's yearning for classical roots (p390).

TERRACE HOUSING

Terrace houses with cast-iron lace balconies were popular during the Victorian era. Tasma Terrace (1868–86) was designed by Charles Webb and is unusual for its three-storey houses, double-storey being more typical.

Tasma Terrace is now home to the National Trust.

MODERNISM AND POST-MODERNISM

The latter half of the 20th century has seen a range of post-modern buildings erected in Melbourne. The National Gallery of Victoria was designed by Sir Roy Grounds (see p394) and completed in 1968. It was the first time bluestone, unique to Melbourne and widely used in the 19th century, was used in a modern structure. The stained-glass ceiling of the Great Hall was designed by Leonard French.

Unique bluestone walls of the National Gallery of Victoria

The National Gallery of Victoria has a monumental façade, impressive for its smooth simplicity and lack of ornamental details.

Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology's Building 8 façade is a complex blend of bright colours and diverse shapes.

CONTEMPORARY

Melbourne is known for its vibrant, experimental architecture scene. Some of the most radical Australian buildings of the 1990s can be found here. The Royal Melbourne Institute of Technology's Building 8 was designed by Peter Corrigan in 1994. The building's interior and façade is both gaudy and Gaudían, with its bold use of primary colours. Whatever your judgment, it cannot help but attract the attention of every visitor to the northern end of the city.

SPORTS ARCHITECTURE

Melbourne's modern architecture clearly reflects the importance of sport to its citizens. Melbourne Park, built in 1988, has a retractable roof, a world first, and seats more than 15,000 people at its centre court.

Wines of Victoria

VICTORIA HAS approximately 320 wineries located in 19 distinct wine regions, some easily reached in less than an hour by car from the state capital, Melbourne. The northeast is famous for its unique fortified Muscats and Tokays (often described as liquid toffee), while from the cooler south come silky Chardonnays and subtle Pinot Noirs. There is no better way to enjoy Victorian wine than in one of the many restaurants and bistros in cosmopolitan Melbourne (see pp517–19).

Best's is one of the oldest family-owned wineries in Australia. This producer makes excellent Shiraz, Merlot, Dolcetto and Riesling wines. Tours of its 100-year-old wooden cellar are available on request.

KEY FACTS

Location and Climate

Warm in the north, cool in the south, Victoria's climate spectrum yields a diversity of wines. Many small, high-quality producers have been in the vanguard of the Australian wine revolution, which began in the 1970s.

Grape Varieties

Victoria's varied climate and soil means it is possible to grow a full range of grape varieties.

Reds include Shiraz, Merlot, Cabernet Sauvignon and Pinot Noir. Whites include Semillon, Gewürztraminer, Riesling, Chardonnay, Marsanne, Frontignay and Pinot Gris. Victoria also produces excellent sparkling wine.

Good Producers

Morris, Campbells, Brown Bros, de Bortoli, Trentham Estate, Seppelts, Bests, Langi Ghiran, Jaspers Hill, Dalwhinnie, Yarra Yering, Coldstream, Chateau Tahbilk, Mitchelton, Craiglee.

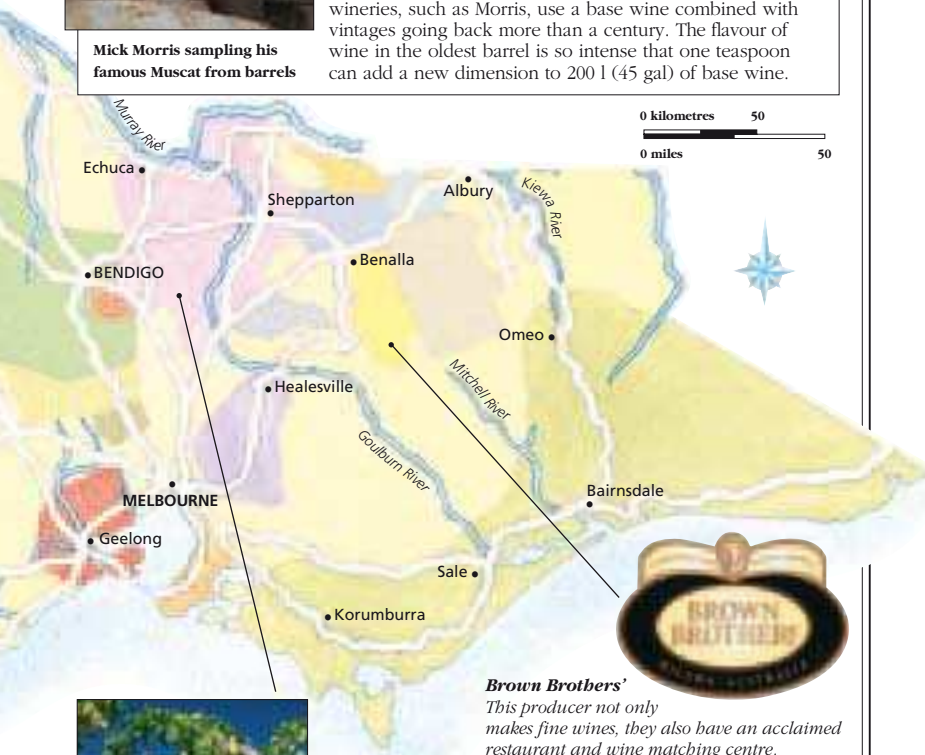

Four Sisters/Mount Langi Ghiran has established itself as a pioneer by wine-maker Trevor Mast.

HOW VICTORIA'S FAMOUS MUSCATS AND TOKAYS ARE MADE

Brown Muscat and Muscadelle grapes are picked late, when they are at their sweetest, to produce fine Muscats and Tokays respectively. Once the grapes have been crushed, the resulting juice is often fermented in traditional open concrete tanks which have been in use for generations. The wine is then fortified with top-quality grape spirit, which will give it an ultimate alcohol strength of around 18.5 per cent. The solera system, in which young vintages are blended with older ones, gives more depth to the wines and also ensures that they retain a consistent quality. Some wineries, such as Morris, use a base wine combined with vintages going back more than a century. The flavour of wine in the oldest barrel is so intense that one teaspoon can add a new dimension to 200 l (45 gal) of base wine.

Brown Brothers'
This producer not only makes fine wines, they also have an acclaimed restaurant and wine matching centre.

The vines planted at the front of Chateau Tabilk are 150 years old. Wines produced from them are rare and expensive.

MELBOURNE

JOHNN BATMAN, the son of a Sydney convict, arrived in what is now known as the Port Phillip district in 1835 and met with Aboriginal tribes of the Kulin, from whom he “purchased” the land. In just over two decades Melbourne grew from a small tent encampment to a sprawling metropolis. Today it is thriving as the second-largest city in Australia.

Melbourne’s rapid growth was precipitated in the 1850s by the huge influx of immigrants seeking their fortunes on the rich gold fields of Victoria. This caused a population explosion of unprecedented proportions as prospectors decided to stay in the city. The enormous wealth generated by the gold rush led to the construction of grand public buildings. This development continued throughout the land boom of the 1880s, earning the city the nickname “Marvellous Melbourne”. By the end of the 19th century, the city was the industrial and financial capital of Australia. It was also the home of the national parliament until 1927, when it was moved to purpose-built Canberra (see p183).

Fortunate enough to escape much damage in World War II, Melbourne hosted the summer Olympics in 1956. Dubbed the “Friendly Games”, the event generated great changes in the city’s consciousness. The postwar period also witnessed a new wave of immigrants who sought better lives here. Driven by the will to succeed, they introduced Melburnians to a range of cultures, transforming the British traditions of the city. This transformation continues today with the arrival of immigrants from all parts of Asia.

Melbourne holds many surprises: it has the most elaborate Victorian architecture of all Australian cities; it has a celebrated range of restaurant cuisines and its calendar revolves around hugely popular spectator sports and arts events (see pp36–9). While the climate is renowned for its unpredictability, Melburnians still enjoy an outdoor lifestyle, and the city possesses a unique charm that quietly bewitches many visitors.

Exploring Melbourne

MELBOURNE is organized informally into precincts. Collins Street is a business centre and the site of the city's smartest stores. To the east is the parliamentary precinct. Swanston Street contains some fine Victorian architecture. The south bank of the river is arts-orientated, including the Victorian Arts Centre. The city also devotes much land to parks and gardens.

Shrine of Remembrance near the Royal Botanic Gardens

GETTING AROUND

Despite the comprehensive transport system of trams, trains, buses and the Met, many Melburnians use cars for commuting (see pp402–403). This has resulted in a network of major roads and highways that lead in all directions from Melbourne's central grid through inner and outer suburbs. CityLink is a tollway linking several of the city's major access routes; drivers must purchase a pass in advance of travelling on CityLink roads. The city's flat landscape is also well suited to bicycles.

SWANSTON STREET, home to Melbourne's town hall and other major civic buildings, has always been a hub of the city. It is also exemplary of one of the most interesting relics of Melbourne: an ordered grid of broad, evenly measured and rectilinear streets, lanes and arcades. The street is also an eclectic illustration of the city's Victorian and 20th-century public architecture. In 1992, the area between Flinders Street and Franklin Street was converted into a pedestrian precinct until 7pm at night.

MELBOURNE'S main fresh produce and general goods market has a strange history, occupying the site of the original Melbourne General Cemetery, which was first used in 1837. In 1877, the idea of converting part of the original cemetery into a marketplace for fruit and vegetables was considered a practical one. At the time, it involved the relocation of only three graves. However, the choice created controversy which did not settle down for some time, as the market's popularity made it necessary to acquire further portions of the cemetery. In 1917, an act of Parliament granted the removal of 10,000 remains and the cemetery was razed. Exhumations continued until 1922.

The market began with the construction of the Wholesale Meat Market. In 1884, the Meat Market and Elizabeth Street shop façades were built. Further extensions continued to be built until 1936. Today the complex, occupying 7 ha (17 acres), attracts 130,000 visitors per week. Its decorative high-vaulted ceilings and open sides add to its ornate atmosphere. About 1,000 stalls sell fresh fruit and vegetables, fish, meat, cheese and organic food, that reflects the city's multicultural population. Food tours, walking tours, and cooking classes are also available.

ST FRANCIS' CHURCH today is Australia's busiest Roman Catholic church, with 10,000 visitors each week. Built between 1841 and 1845 on the site of an earlier church, it is also Victoria's oldest.

Renowned for its beauty, the church began as a simple Neo-Gothic building and has undergone many alterations. It was the target of a $2.8 million restoration appeal, and major renovations were completed in the early 1990s.

During the ceiling restoration, treasures from the 1860s, such as a painting of angels, stars and a coat of arms, were discovered and beautifully restored. Vandalized statues have since been replaced by faithful copies.

The church holds regular services, and has one of Australia's most celebrated resident choirs.

up a Supreme Court in the city. Following the Separation Act of 1850, which established the Colony of Victoria, the city set up its own Supreme Court in 1852. The court moved to the present building, with a design inspired by the Four Courts of Dublin in Ireland, in 1884.

The Supreme Court is an imposing building, with street façades on Lonsdale, William and Little Bourke streets. Its style is Classical, with a projecting portico and a double arcade with Doric and Ionic columns. Internally, a labyrinthine plan is centred on a beautiful domed library. The large bronze figure of Justice, defying tradition, is not blindfolded: rumour has it that an early Melbourne judge persuaded the authorities that Justice should be "wide-eyed if not innocently credulous". The Supreme Court is now classified by the National Trust.

The building replaced Melbourne's first Exhibition Building, erected in 1854 and subsequently destroyed by fire. When the mint opened in 1872 it processed finds from the Victoria gold fields and was a branch of the Royal Mint of London. The actual coining processes took place in an area now occupied by the car park. After the Commonwealth of Australia was founded in 1901 (see p52), new silver coinage was designed, which the mint produced from 1916 to the mid-1960s. The Melbourne site ceased production in 1967 when the Royal Mint was relocated to Canberra. Although the Royal Mint building is now closed to the general public, visitors can still take in its imposing structure from the outside.

ST JAMES' was the first Anglican cathedral in the city, used until St Paul's opened in 1891 (see p381). It was first built near the corner of Little Collins and William streets to replace a wooden hut, known as the "Pioneers' Church".

It was relocated to its present site between 1913 and 1914. The stones were numbered to ensure that the original design was replicated. However, a few changes were made, such as a lower ceiling, a shortening of the sanctuary and a reshaping of the bell tower.

St James' was designed in a colonial Georgian style. The foundations are made of bluestone and the main walls were constructed with local sandstone. The cathedral was opened for worship on 2 October 1842, but was not consecrated until 1853. Charles Perry, the city's first bishop, was enthroned here in 1848. The cathedral is still used for regular services. A small museum contains photographs, historic documents and cathedral mementos.

RIALTO TOWERS is the tallest office building in the southern hemisphere, with 58 floors above street level and 8 below. From street level up, it measures 253 m (830 ft).

The structure was built in 1986 by Australian developer Bruno Grollo, who was also responsible for the city's new casino on the Yarra River (see p393). An observation deck was opened on the 55th floor in 1994 and now draws 1,500 visitors a day to see panoramic views of the city. There is also a half-hourly screening of a 20-minute film introducing visitors to the sights of Melbourne.

The lift travels from the ground floor to the 55th floor in 38 seconds and is one of the fastest in the world.

COMPLETED IN 1991, No. 333 Collins Street is a modern office block built around an existing edifice. It is the earlier building, however, that is the most striking.

Originally constructed in the 1890s, No. 333 was the headquarters of the Commercial Bank of Australia (CBA). The bank was founded in 1866, but by the time No. 333 opened in 1893 the bank was in crisis. Following a crash in land and stock prices, the CBA called in its main overdrafts, which only helped to accelerate the decline of the economy. It was only with the acceptance of a reconstruction plan by shareholders, as well as 30 years of careful management of its debts, that the bank was able to recover.

The original building was designed by architects Lloyd Tayler and Alfred Dunn. The banking chamber and vestibule, with their domed ceiling, have been restored and are now used as the foyer of the modern complex. The CBA merged with the Bank of New South Wales in 1981 to become Westpac, one of Australia's major banks. Since 1996, No. 333 has been owned by Wing On, a Hong Kong company.

MELBOURNE'S FIRST postal service was operated from a site near the corner of Kings Street and Flinders Lane. Frequent floods, for which the area became renowned, forced a move to the current site, where the post office opened in 1841.

The present structure was begun in 1859 and completed in 1907. The first and second floors were built between 1859 and 1867, with the third floor and clocktower added between 1885 and 1890. These various stages have resulted in an unusual combination of styles, with Doric columns on the ground floor, Ionic on the second and Corinthian on the topmost level.

The building underwent a number of changes to adapt its 19th-century design to the requirements of a major postal system. This included a post-World War I redesign of its main hall under the direction of architect Walter Burley Griffin (see p189). It closed as a post office in 1993 and after many setbacks, including a fire in 2001, it opened as a beautiful shopping complex in 2004.

ROYAL ARCADE is Melbourne's oldest surviving arcade. It is part of a network of lanes and arcades which sprang up to divide the big blocks of the city grid into smaller segments. The network was designed in 1837 by the government surveyor, Robert Hoddle.

The original arcade, built in 1869 and designed by Charles Webb, runs between Bourke Street Mall and Little Collins Street. An annexe, with an entrance on Elizabeth Street, was added in 1908. A statue of Father Time, originally on the Bourke Street façade, is now located inside the arcade at the northern end.

The arcade's most famous inhabitants are statues of Gog and Magog, mythical representations of the conflict between the ancient Britons and the Trojans. They are modelled on identical figures in the Guildhall in the City of London. Between them is Gaunt's Clock, crafted by an original tenant of the arcade, Thomas Gaunt.

BUILT BETWEEN 1891 and 1893, with period details including a mosaic floor and a central dome, Melbourne's most opulent arcade was named after the promenade taken by fashionable society in the 1890s. Known as “doing the block”, the walk involved strolling down Collins Street between Elizabeth and Swanston streets.

The arcade was restored in 1988. It still includes the Hopetoun Tea-rooms, which have been in place since the structure was opened. Guided tours of the arcade are available.

MELBOURNE TOWN HALL was completed in 1870, designed by Joseph Reed's company, Reed & Barnes. The portico was added in 1887. From here there are views of Swanston Street (see pp 376–7) and the Shrine of Remembrance in the Botanic Gardens (see p390).

An adjacent administration block and the council's second chamber were added in 1908. This chamber combines a Renaissance-style interior with uniquely Australian motifs, such as a ceiling plasterwork of gum nuts.

A fire in 1925 destroyed much of the building's interior, including the main hall which had to be rebuilt. The entrance to the building shows four motifs on the young city's coat of arms: a whale, a ship, a bull and a sheep, signifying the main colonial industries. In 1942, the College of Arms ordered an inversion of the motifs according to heraldic convention. This explains the discrepancy between earlier and later coats of arms.

ST PAUL'S CATHEDRAL was built in 1866 to replace a far smaller church of the same name on the site.

Construction, however, was plagued by difficulties, with dissension between the English architect, William Butterfield, and the Cathedral Erection Board.

Butterfield was contemptuous of the board's wish to have the cathedral face Princes Bridge and their choice of stones for the construction, such as Barrabool and Hawkesbury sandstone. Building began in 1880, but Butterfield tendered his resignation in 1884. The final stages of construction were supervised by the architect Joseph Reed, who also designed many of the fittings. The cathedral was eventually consecrated in 1891.

There are many outstanding internal features, including the reredos (altar screen) made in Italy from marble and alabaster inset with glass mosaics. The organ, made by TC Lewis & Co. of London, is the best surviving work of this great organ-builder. The cathedral also has a peal of 13 bells – a rarity outside the British Isles.

WHEN THE Regent Theatre's auditorium was destroyed by fire in April 1945, the Lord Mayor of Melbourne promised the public that it would be rebuilt, despite the scarcity of building materials due to World War II. Such was the popularity and local importance of the theatre.

Known as "Melbourne's Palace of Dreams", it was first constructed and opened by the Hoyts Theatre Company in 1929. Its lavish interiors emulated both the glamour of Hollywood and New York's impressive Capitol Theater.

The building had two main venues. The auditorium upstairs, for live stage and musical entertainment, was known as the Regent Theatre. Downstairs, the Plaza Theatre was originally a ballroom, but, following the success of the "talkies", it was converted into a cinema.

Fortunately, the magnificent decor of the Plaza Theatre was not damaged in the fire of 1945. The renovated auditorium opened to the public again in 1947.

WHEN CHINESE immigrants began arriving in Melbourne to seek gold during the 1850s, many European residents were decidedly hostile. Only recent arrivals in the area themselves, they were still insecure about how strongly their own society had been established. This led to racial tension and violence.

The very first Chinese immigrants landed in Australia as early as 1818, but it was during the late 1840s that larger contingents arrived. These newcomers replaced the pool of cheap labour which had dried up with the winding down of convict settlements in the new colonies. This wave of immigration was harmonious until the vast influx of Chinese visitors who came not for labour, but to seek their fortune in the Victorian gold fields in the 1850s. The large numbers of immigrants and a decline in gold finds made the Chinese targets of vicious and organized riots.

This attitude was sanctioned by government policy. The Chinese were charged a poll tax in most states of £10 each – a huge sum, particularly as many were peasants. Even harsher was a restriction on the number of passengers that boat-owners could carry. This acted as a disincentive for them to bring Chinese immigrants to Australia. What resulted were “Chinese marathons”, as new arrivals dodged the tax by landing in “free” South Australia and walking to the gold fields, covering distances of up to 800 km (500 miles) (see pp50–51).

As an immigrant society in Melbourne, the Chinese were highly organized and self-sufficient. A city base was established during the 1850s, utilizing the cheap rental district of the city centre. As with other Chinatowns around the world, traders could live and work in the same premises and act as a support network for other Chinese immigrants. The community largely avoided prejudice by starting up traditional Asian businesses which included market gardening, laundering, green grocers and furniture-making (but work had to be stamped “Made by Chinese labour”).

Traditional gateway in Little Bourke Street, Chinatown

Today, Chinatown is known for its restaurants and Chinese produce shops, with the community's calendar culminating in its New Year celebrations in February (see p37). Ironically, in view of the early prejudices, this community is now one of Australia's oldest and most successful.

OPENED in 1985 to preserve the heritage of Australians of Chinese descent, this museum is in the heart of Chinatown. The subjects of its displays range from the influx of Chinese gold-seekers in the 1850s to exhibitions of contemporary Chinese art, thus offering a comprehensive history of the Chinese in Victoria and their cultural background. The second floor holds regular touring exhibitions from China and displays of Chinese art. On the third floor is a permanent exhibition covering many aspects of Chinese-Australian history, including elaborate costumes, furniture and temple regalia.

In the basement, another permanent exhibition traces the experiences of Chinese gold miners – visitors step into a booth which creaks and moves like a transport ship, then view dioramas of gold field life, a Chinese temple and a tent theatre used by Chinese performers to entertain miners. A guided heritage walk through Chinatown is also available.

The museum also houses the beautiful Melbourne Chinese dragon, the head of which is the largest of its kind anywhere in the world.

THE PARLIAMENT PRECINCT on Eastern Hill is a gracious area of great historic interest. Early founders of the city noted the favourable aspect of the hill and set it aside for Melbourne's official and ecclesiastical buildings. The streets still retain the elegance of the Victorian era; the buildings, constructed with revenue from the gold rush (see pp50–51), are among the most impressive in the city. The Fitzroy Gardens, on the lower slopes of the hill, date back to the 1850s (see pp366–7) and provide a peaceful retreat complete with woodlands, glades, seasonal plantings and magnificent elm tree avenues.

The Windsor Hotel, with its long and ornate façade, was built in 1884 and is the grandest surviving hotel of its era in Australia (see p486).

THE MELBOURNE Magistrate's Court, also called City Court, occupied this building until 1995. The area was formerly known as the police precinct – this is because the court lies opposite the former police headquarters, a very striking Art Deco skyscraper completed in the early 1940s, and next door to the Old Melbourne Gaol.

Built in 1911, the court's façades are made of native Moorabool sandstone. The building's intricate, Romanesque design features gables, turrets and arches. It originally contained three courtrooms and offices, with a two-storey octagonal main vestibule at the centre of its labyrinth of rooms.

The future use of the Old Court is still being decided.

VISITING THE Old Melbourne Gaol, Victoria's first extensive gaol complex, is a chilling experience, especially on a night tour. Between 1845 and 1929, it was the site of 135 executions. Today's National Trust penal museum is housed in the Second Cell Block. Behind this was the Female Ward for women prisoners, now demolished. Still in existence, though not part of the museum, is the prison chapel.

Ghosts are often reported at the gaol, which is hardly surprising given the tragic and grisly accounts of prisoners' lives and deaths. Conditions, based on London's Pentonville Model Prison, were grim: regulated, silent and anonymous. When first incarcerated, prisoners were held in solitary confinement and were not permitted to mix with other prisoners until a later date, set according to their sentence. Exhibits showing these conditions include prisoners' chains and a frame used for flogging. But perhaps the most compelling exhibits are the many accounts of prisoners who were condemned to die at the gaol, accompanied by their death masks. Ned Kelly's death mask is the most famous of those on display.

Many inmates were badly treated. Basilio Bondietto, an Italian immigrant, was convicted of murder in 1876 on circumstantial evidence. He spoke no English, had no interpreter at his trial and apparently did not understand that he was condemned to death until hours before his execution. Another case is that of Frances Knorr, hanged in 1894 amid much public controversy after being convicted of murdering three babies in her care. Knorr had been left pregnant and peniless when her husband was

NED KELLY

The most well-known execution at the Melbourne Gaol was that of Ned Kelly, Australia's most famous bushranger, on 11 November 1880. Edward "Ned" Kelly was the son of Ellen and ex-convict "Red" Kelly. At the time of Ned's final imprisonment and execution, Ellen was serving a sentence in the gaol's Female Ward after hitting a policeman over the head when he visited her house. She was therefore able to visit her son, who had been captured at Glenrowan on 28 June 1880 (see p439). A crowd of 4,000 waited outside the gaol when Kelly was executed, most of them to lend their support to a man perceived to be rightfully rebelling against the English-based law and police authorities. In one instance, the Kelly Gang burned a bank's records of outstanding loans so they no longer had to be repaid. The controversy over whether Kelly was hero or villain continues to this day.

Ned Kelly's death mask

jailed for selling furniture bought on hire purchase. Her appointed hangman committed suicide days before her execution, after his own wife threatened to leave him if he was the one to execute Knorr.

THIS ITALIAN-INFLUENCED street is one of the main café, restaurant and delicatessen areas in central Melbourne (see pp517–19).

The strong Italian tradition of Lygon Street began at the time of mass post-World War II immigration. With a general exodus to the suburbs in the 1940s, Carlton became unfashionable and new immigrants were able to buy its 19th-century houses and shops cheaply. More importantly, the immigrants were central in protecting these Victorian and Edwardian houses, which were built with post-gold rush wealth, from government plans to fill the area with low-income Housing Commission homes.

A distinctive architectural trait of Lygon Street's two-storey shops is their street verandas, built to protect both customers and merchandise from the sun. In the mid-1960s, the area became fashionable with university students, many of whom moved in to take advantage of its cheap accommodation, then stayed on after graduating to become the base of the suburb's contemporary middle-class and professional community. The street is only one block from the main University of Melbourne campus and can be reached from the city centre by foot, bus or tram. Its wide street resembles a French boulevard and is well suited to the Lygon Street Festa held here every year (see p36).

HAVING OPENED IN 2001, this museum is one of the newest in the city. Housed in an ultra-modern facility in verdant Carlton Park, it has exhibits over six levels, half of which are below ground level. Diverse displays offer insights into science, technology, the environment, the human mind and body, Australian society and indigenous cultures.

One of the highlights is Bunjilaka, the Aboriginal Centre. It combines exhibition galleries with a performance space and meeting rooms. Wurreeka, the 50-m- (150 feet) long zinc wall etching at the entrance is by Aboriginal artist Judy Watson. The Two Laws gallery, which treats the Indigenous Australians' systems of knowledge, law and property, is fascinating.

The Forest Gallery is a living, breathing exhibit, featuring 8,000 plants from 120 different species. It is also home to around 20 different vertebrate species, including snakes, birds, fish and hundreds of insects. This gallery explores the complex ecosystem of Australia's temperate forests, using plants and animals, art and multimedia installations, soundscapes and other activities.

A dedicated children's museum is in a gallery that resembles a tilted, blue cube. The Blue Box houses multi-sensory displays exploring the theme of growth. There are also Children's Pathways throughout the rest of the museum, providing activities for children in other galleries.

One of the most popular exhibits is in the Australia Gallery. This treats the life of Phar Lap, the champion Australian racehorse of the early 1930s. Exhibits include race memorabilia of the period. Phar Lap himself is seen in an Art-Deco inspired showcase. Other curiosities on show in the museum include the skeleton of a blue whale, a car from Melbourne's first tram, a windmill and the Hertel, the first car to be imported.

Adjacent to the Melbourne Museum is the Royal Exhibition Building, offering an interesting 19th-century counterpoint to the Museum's modern architecture. The Exhibition Building was built for the 1880 International Exhibition and is one of the few remaining structures from the 19th-century world fairs. It was designed by Joseph Reed, whose fine work can be found throughout Melbourne.

THE GOLD TREASURY Museum is housed within Melbourne's beautiful, 19th-century Old Treasury Building (see p384). Designed in 1857 by John James Clark, a nineteen year old architectural prodigy, it provided secure storage for gold that flooded into Melbourne from the wealthy Victorian gold fields. It also served as office accommodation for the Governor of Victoria (a role it still fulfils to this day).

As well as an opportunity to see the building itself, a visit to the museum includes a look at the gold vaults that lie beneath the building. The vaults contain a dynamic multi-media exhibition Built on Gold, which tells the story of how Melbourne developed into a city of enormous wealth in a remarkably short period of ten years. In this time it went from a small colonial outpost to a city with grand buildings and boulevards, a dynamic theatre culture, a passion for sport and political activism.

Making Melbourne, a permanent exhibition on the ground floor, explores Melbourne's history from the gold rushes of 1852 up until the present day. This more traditional exhibition, which includes a number of famous paintings of Melbourne from the National Gallery of Victoria, provides visitors with an opportunity to explore the economic, cultural and recreational aspects of the city's contemporary life.

Drawn from galleries and museums from all over Australia, the temporary exhibition gallery hosts a new exhibition every six weeks. On display are a range of visual arts including sculpture, textiles, photography and architecture.

MELBOURNE Cricket Ground (MCG) is Australia's premier sports stadium and a cultural icon. The land was granted in 1853 to the Melbourne Cricket Club (MCC), itself conceived in 1838.

The MCG predominantly hosts cricket and Australian Rules football, being the site for test matches and the first one-day international match and for the Australian Football League Grand Final, held on the last Saturday of September (see p36). Non-sporting events, such as pop concerts, are also held at the venue.

There have been numerous stands and pavilions over the years, each superseded at different times by reconstructions of the ground. An 1876 stand, now demolished, was reversible, with spectators able to watch cricket on the ground and football in the park in winter. The most recent development was the Great Southern Stand, completed in 1992; the MCG can now seat crowds of more than 100,000. The Olympic and Members stands are also under reconstruction. Guided tours usually take visitors to the members' pavilion, which includes the Cricket Museum. However, the museum is closed due to the current redevelopment of the stands, and is due to reopen late 2005.

MELBOURNE PARK (formerly known as the National Tennis Centre) on the northern bank of the Yarra River, is Melbourne's sports and large-scale concerts venue. Events include the Australian Open (see p37), one of the four Grand Slam competitions of tennis, played under Melbourne Park's unique retractable roof (see p369). There are also 23 outdoor and five indoor tennis courts for public use.

Next to Melbourne Park is the Vodafone Arena, which is home to the popular Victorian Titans basketball team. It also hosts a stadium for tennis, basketball, cycling and concerts, all covering an area of 2.4 ha (6 acres). Opposite the park is the Sports and Entertainment Centre, which was originally built for the 1956 Olympics but is now being redeveloped.

Nearby Olympic Park is the location for international and national athletics meets, as well as regular soccer and rugby competitions.

THESE ADJOINING GARDENS, established in 1852, form the green heart of Melbourne on what was originally a swamp on the edge of the city. The Botanic Gardens house one of the finest collections of botanic species in the world, as well as being highly regarded for their landscape design. William Guilfoyle, curator of the Gardens between 1873 and 1909, used his knowledge of English garden design to create a horticultural paradise. Kings Domain, once an inner-city wilderness, became instead a gracious parkland. Its civic function grew over the years, with the establishment of its monuments, statues, cultural venues and the hilltop residence of the Governor of Victoria.

★ Ornamental Lake

William Guilfoyle's lake forms the centrepiece of the Gardens. It reflects his adherence to 18th-century English garden design, which used water as a feature.

Arid Garden

Desert region plants from Australia and around the world thrive in this special garden, watered by a small stream which acts as a natural oasis.

La Trobe's Cottage was shipped from England in 1839 and was home to Victoria's first governor, Charles La Trobe. The building is now preserved by the National Trust.

The Yarra River

THE YARRA RIVER winds for 240 km (150 miles) from its source in Baw Baw National Park to the coast. The river has always been vital to the city, not just as its major natural feature, but also in early settlement days as its gateway to the rest of the world. Today, the Yarra is a symbol of the boundary between north and south Melbourne and many citizens live their whole lives on one side or the other. Since the 1980s, the rejuvenation of the central section of the river has given the south bank an important focus. The river is also used for sport: rowers in training are a daily sight and cycle trails run along much of the river.

THE MARITIME MUSEUM is also known as the “Home of Polly Woodside”, an 1885 barque built in Belfast. When she was retired from service in the 1960s, she was the only deep-water commercial ship still afloat in Australia. Even in 1885, she was rare, as only one in four ships were then built with sails. Designed as a cargo ship for the South American trade, she carried coal to Chile, returning to Great Britain loaded with nitrate fertilizer. By 1897, she had rounded Cape Horn 16 times. She continued her extensive world travels until 1904, when she was sold to New Zealand owners for whom she traded around the Tasman Sea until 1924. The last 40 years of her working life were spent as a coal hulk, servicing steamships in the Port of Melbourne. Donated to the National Trust in 1968, she has now been restored by skillful and dedicated volunteers. Visitors to the Polly Woodside can see how her crews lived on board and study old boat-building skills and various nautical models, displays and memorabilia.

FLINDERS STREET STATION is the central metropolitan train terminus of Melbourne and one of the city’s favourite meeting places. Generations of Melburnians have met each other on the corner steps of the station “Under the Clocks”. Although the original clocks are now operated by computer rather than by hand, they remain in working order. The Flinders Street site has been part of the public transport network since the city’s early days. The first steam train in Australia left Flinders Street Station, then a small wooden building at the end of Elizabeth Street, in 1854. The present station building, completed in 1910, was designed by Fawcett & Ashworth. The bronze domed building with its bright yellow brickwork was fully restored and refurbished in 1981.

MELBOURNE’S NEWEST public space, Federation Square commemorates the centenary of the federation of the Australian states and opened in October 2002. It combines open spaces – both outdoor, with Civic Plaza, and indoor, with a 100-metre glass atrium overlooking the Yarra River, which has a performance amphitheatre at one end – with new cultural institutions, and shops, restaurants and cafés. The Ian Potter Centre–NGV: Australian Art, an offshoot of the National Gallery of Victoria, displays works from the museum’s extensive collection of Australian art, with space for temporary exhibitions focusing on contemporary art. THE FIRST PUBLIC art gallery in Australia, the National Gallery of Victoria opened in 1861 and housed the original State Museum (see p377). The gallery moved to St Kilda Rd in 1968 and contains the largest and widest ranging art collection in the country. Its most significant bequest, from Melbourne entrepreneur Alfred Felton in 1904, included works by many great artists, and it is considered to have one of the finest collections of Old Masters in the world. Its collection of contemporary Australian art is also outstanding and the gallery holds major exhibitions all year round.

Following major renovations, the international collection can be seen at 180 St Kilda Road (see p392) while the Australian collection is housed at Federation Square (see p394).

SITUATED 6 km (4 miles) south of the city centre, St Kilda has long been the most popular seaside suburb of Melbourne. Given the built-up, suburban nature of many of the bay's beaches, it is the closest Melbourne comes to possessing a beach resort.

During the boom-time era of the 1880s (see pp50–51), the suburb was inhabited by many wealthy families before it became more fashionable to live in the suburb of Toorak or on the peninsulas. Other well-off Victorians would holiday in St Kilda during the summer. St Kilda Pier, still a magnet for visitors, was erected in 1857.

Today St Kilda is densely populated, with many Art Deco apartment blocks. The neighbourhood's main streets are Fitzroy and Acland. The latter, renowned as a district of Jewish delicatessens and cake shops, is packed with visitors on Sundays. Fitzroy Street is filled with up-market restaurants and shops. Rejuvenated in the 1980s, the beachside esplanade attracts crowds to its busy arts and crafts market each Sunday.

Another popular outing is a ferry trip across the bay, including a visit to the World Trade Centre on the Yarra River (see pp392–3) and destinations further afield.

ENCOMPASSING the remains of a former natural swampland, Albert Park Lake is the attractive centrepiece of a 225-ha (555-acre) parkland which includes sporting fields, a public golf course and many other recreational facilities. However, it is now predominantly known as the site of the annual Australian Formula One Grand Prix, which covers a 5,260-m (5,754-yd) circuit around the lake (see p38).

Apart from the Grand Prix, the park is used for a variety of purposes. There is a new, popular aquatic and indoor sports centre. Wetlands have also been developed to promote a diverse wildlife. One of the most popular activities at the park is sailing, whether by small yacht, rowing boat or model boat.

A large, ancient river red gum tree standing in the centre of the park is also reputed to have been the site of many Aboriginal corroborees (festive night dances).

Up-market restaurants and cafés abound and the nearby Prahran Market sells the best in fresh, delicatessen produce.

Crossing Chapel Street is Toorak Road, whose "village" is patronized by Melbourne's wealthiest community. More akin to the bohemian area of Brunswick Street (see p388) is Greville Street to the west, with its cafés, bars and chic second-hand shops.

A food and fashion festival is sometimes held on the last Sunday before the Melbourne Cup (see p37).

Rippon Lea 36

RIPPON LEA MANSION, designed by Joseph Reed and built in 1868, is now part of a National Trust estate. The house is a much loved fixture of the city's heritage. The first family of Rippon Lea were the Sargoods, who were renowned party hosts during the 1880s and 1890s. The next owner, Premier Sir Thomas Bent, sold off parts of the estate in the early 1900s. The Nathans bought Rippon Lea in 1910 and restored its reputation as a family home. Benjamin Nathan's daughter Louisa added a ballroom and swimming pool to the house, which were the venue for parties in the 1930s and 1940s. The formal gardens are a main highlight.

BEGUN IN 1847 by Edward Eyre Williams, Como House was occupied by the Armytage family for almost a century (1865–1959).

One of Como's highlights is its vast collection of original furnishings. These include pieces collected by the Armytage matriarch, Caroline, whilst on a Grand Tour of Europe during the 1870s, and include marble and bronze statues. The tour was undertaken as an educational experience for her nine children after the death of her husband, Charles Henry. It was important to this prominent Melbourne family to be seen as well educated. On their return, they held a series of sophisticated parties here.

Set in the picturesque remnants of its once extensive gardens, the house overlooks Como Park and the Yarra River. The original facets of the magnificent grounds, designed by William Sangster (who also had an input at Rippon Lea), remain: the fountain terrace, croquet lawn and hard standing area at the front of the house.

Como was managed by the Armytage women from 1876 until it was purchased by the National Trust in 1959. The house has undergone major restoration work over the years since then; the most recent efforts were in 2001.

SHOPPING IN MELBOURNE

THE CENTRAL BUSINESS DISTRICT is a magnet for the city's shoppers. Major department stores are supplemented by a network of boutiques and specialist shops, many of which are tucked away in arcades and lanes. There is also a strong network of inner-city and suburban shopping streets: fashionable clothing and retail stores abound in inner-city areas, while large one-stop shopping towns are a feature of Greater

High fashion in Chapel Street

Melbourne. There are areas known for particular products, such as High Street, which runs through Armadale and Malvern, with its proliferation of antiques stores. The city's multicultural society is also reflected in its shopping districts: Victoria Street, Richmond, has a stretch of Vietnamese stores; Sydney Road, Brunswick, is renowned for its shops selling Middle Eastern goods; and Carlisle Street, St Kilda, has many Jewish delicatessens.

SHOPPING HOURS

IN VICTORIA, most traders open seven days a week. Some small businesses close on Sundays but, increasingly, many are open, competing with the long hours of chain stores and supermarkets (some of which are open 24 hours a day). Standard hours are 9am to 5:30pm (10am to 6pm in the CBD), although some retailers have extended hours on Thursdays or Fridays. Hours can also vary at weekends. Christmas Day and Good Friday are the only days when most shops close.

DEPARTMENT STORES

THERE ARE TWO major department stores in central Melbourne: Myer, and David Jones, both of them are open for business seven days a week.

Australia's largest department store, Myer Melbourne, encompasses a full two blocks of the city centre, with seven floors in Lonsdale Street and six in Bourke Street. Its main entrance is in Bourke Street Mall. Myer have nine other stores throughout Melbourne. David Jones, known to locals as DJs, is known for its more up-market stock and high-quality service, both of which are reflected in its elegant interiors. The store has three sites within the city, with a main entrance adjacent to Myer in Bourke Street Mall; opposite is its menswear department. A third section is accessed in Little Bourke Street, again adjacent to Myer.

Two other popular stores are Target and K-mart. Both offer discounted prices on a range of goods: clothing, homewares and electrical goods. There are many branches of K-mart but they are located outside the CBD.

ARCADES, MALLS AND SHOPPING CENTRES

MELBOURNE'S BEST arcades and malls are located in the heart of the central business district. Chief among these are Bourke Street Mall, with shopfronts for the Myer and David Jones department stores. Occupied mostly by speciality stores and boutiques, other arcades and malls include the Galleria Shopping Plaza, with an emphasis on Australiana and Australian-owned stores. The ABC Shop sells merchandise of the national television and radio network, such as books and videos. Australian Geographic is an excellent shop for information on Australian landscape and geology.

Located on Collins Street, renowned for its up-market shops, clothing and shoes, are Australia on Collins, Block Arcade (see p381) and 234 Collins Street. Australia on Collins comprises 60 shops on five levels, with fashion, homeware and other retail stores. The Sportsgirl Centre is known for its designer fashion shops, located on three levels. Both complexes have food halls. Block Arcade, itself of historic interest, sells more classic clothing amid a beautifully restored 1890s interior; there is an entrance on Elizabeth Street. Also on Elizabeth Street is the GPO (see p380), which has been recently transformed into a beautiful shopping complex.

Ornate and elegant interior of the restored Block Arcade

Further up on Collins Street, past Russell Street, there are stores located in Collins Place, and in the Royal Arcade (see p380) nearby, which is also of historic and architectural interest. Running between Bourke Street Mall and Little Collins Street, further east, you will find The Walk Arcade, containing a small selection of smart and exclusive boutiques.

Little Bourke Street, above Elizabeth Street, and the intersecting Hardware Lane, are well known for a range of stores specializing in travel and adventure products.

Melbourne Central and QV (directly opposite) are two outstanding shopping centres located on Lonsdale Street. Between them, there are literally hundreds of shops to visit. Away from the city centre, the Southgate Complex, with its 40 shops on three levels, should not be missed. Products include up-market fashion and shoes, music, furniture, jewellery and ethnic products.

MARKETS

MELBOURNE HAS a number of fresh food markets. The most notable is the Queen Victoria Market (see p378).

Other kinds of market are also popular. There is a huge range of second-hand goods for sale each Sunday at the Camberwell Market. An arts and crafts market is also held on Sundays on the Upper St Kilda Esplanade. Other Sunday markets include the food market in Prahran and the arts and crafts market at the Victorian Arts Centre (see p401). One of the oldest markets is the South Melbourne Market, in operation since 1867. It is open every Friday to Sunday, and Wednesday.

Crowds gathering at the Sunday craft market on St Kilda Esplanade

SHOPPING STRIPS

VILLAGE-STYLE shopping centres abound in the many suburbs of Melbourne. Popular spots include High Street in Armadale; Sydney Road in Brunswick; Brunswick Street in Fitzroy; Bridge Road in Richmond; Chapel Street in South Yarra; and Mailing Road in Canterbury.

Another major shopping centre in South Yarra is the Como Centre, which has stores selling furniture, home-ware and fashion.

ENTERTAINMENT IN MELBOURNE

MELBOURNE COULD be defined as Australia's city of the arts. All year round there is a wealth of cultural events and entertainment on offer. The city's major festivals include the Melbourne Festival and Moomba (see pp37-8). There are also fringe festivals and many other independent events. The Victorian Arts Centre, which includes the Melbourne Concert Hall (see p392), is home to the state's theatrical companies and hosts both national and international groups. Large concerts are held at Melbourne Park Entertainment Centre or the Melbourne Cricket Ground (see p389). Cinema chains are supplemented by smaller venues devoted to arthouse and revival films.

Evening concert at the Sidney Myer Music Bowl (see p390)

INFORMATION

THE BEST GUIDE to the range of events in Melbourne is the entertainment guide in the Age, published each Friday. This has comprehensive listings, along with more information on all the upcoming highlights. The tabloid newspaper Herald Sun and both newspapers' Sunday editions are also good sources of information and reviews. There is an array of free publications covering arts, entertainment and the nightclub scene. Visitors can obtain these from retailers and cafés in main inner-city precincts such as Fitzroy (see p395) and St Kilda. The Melbourne Visitor Information Centre has a range of publications listing events.

There are also a number of websites that provide good events coverage, as well as other information helpful to visitors: www.melbourne.citysearch.com.au and www.visitvictoria.com are both worth a look. The Victorian Arts Centre (see p392) has a bi-monthly diary which it mails out free of charge worldwide, covering all up-to-date events at the complex. Most ticket agencies and some individual venues also provide information of current events taking place in the city.

TICKET BOOKING AGENCIES

BUYING TICKETS in Melbourne is reasonably straightforward. There are two major ticket booking agencies in Victoria, Ticketmaster (with more than 50 outlets) and Ticketek (with more than 30 outlets). One other agency, Save Time Services, charges a slightly higher rate for tickets, but customers can make advance bookings (before tickets are officially released) and are always provided with the best seats available. There are some venues which handle their own bookings independently, but these are rare and tickets for most major events are more easily purchased at these agencies.

Bookings can either be made in person at the various outlets, or with a credit card by phone, fax or post. The agencies also accept bookings from overseas. If not bought directly over the counter, tickets can be mailed out to customers for a small handling fee. If the event is impending, tickets can usually be picked up at the venue half-an-hour before the booked performance starts.

The hours for outlets vary according to their location, but almost all are open Monday through to Saturday, and some are open on Sundays. Neither Ticketmaster nor Ticketek offer refunds or exchanges, unless a show is

Façade of the Princess Theatre, by the Parliamentary Precinct (see p384)

Street entertainers, a regular sight throughout Melbourne cancelled. Remember that a nominal booking fee will be added to all ticket prices bought via a ticket agency.

TICKET DEALS

SOME MAJOR COMPANIES, particularly those playing at the Victorian Arts Centre, offer special "rush hour" ticket deals. These are available for tickets purchased in person after 6pm. The Half Tix booth at the Melbourne Town Hall on Swanston Street offers half-price deals for many events. Tickets must be bought in person and paid for in cash. They are also generally available only on the day of performance. Shows with tickets available are displayed at the booth.

Half Tix ticket booth sign on Swanston Street

SECURING THE BEST SEATS

IF BOOKING IN PERSON, you can usually consult a floor-plan showing the location of available seats. Over the telephone, both Ticketmaster and Ticketek have a "best available" system, with remaining seats arranged in a best-to-last order by individual venues. It is also possible to request particular seats and the booking agency will check their availability. Some seats are retained for sale at the venue itself and this can be a way of getting good seats at the last minute.

DISABLED VISITORS

THE VAST MAJORITY of venues have access and facilities for disabled visitors. Booking agencies will take this into account, so specify any special requirements when purchasing tickets. You should also enquire at individual venues to check on facilities.

OUTDOOR AND STREET ENTERTAINMENT

DESPITE ITS changeable climate, Melbourne has a strong tradition of outdoor and street entertainment. Every summer there is a broad programme of theatre and music for adults and children in most major parks and gardens. Many performances in summer are held in the evenings at sunset.

Street buskers, many travelling on an international circuit, also frequent a number of areas, the most popular being Fitzroy (see p395) and St Kilda, and appear at festivals. The main spot in the city centre for regular street performances is the Bourke Street Mall, outside Myer and David Jones department stores (see p398). Southgate and the Victorian Arts Centre also have regular programmes featuring free weekend street entertainment.

MELBOURNE PRACTICAL INFORMATION

MELBOURNE IS WELL SERVED by public transport and is easy to negotiate, given the grid structure of the city centre and the flat layout of its suburbs. The state government has upgraded many public facilities in recent years, aimed at attracting both business and tourists. Driving in the city is also easy and taxis are plentiful. Bureaux de change and automatic cash dispensers are located throughout the city. Melbourne is safe compared with many major cities, but common sense will also keep you out of trouble.

DRIVING AND CYCLING IN MELBOURNE

DRIVING IN Melbourne is straightforward. Cars queue on the left to turn right at some intersections, marked by Safety Zone signs, to accommodate trams. Cars left in No Parking zones will be towed away. The city has a long tollway system known as CityLink, which uses electronic tolling; drivers must purchase a pass before travelling.

Melbourne's flat landscape is well suited to cyclists and there are many cycle tracks. Helmets are compulsory. Information on bicycle hire and good cycle routes can be found at Bicycle Victoria.

TRAVELING BY PUBLIC TRANSPORT

MELBOURNE HAS A comprehensive system of trains, buses and trams, known as The Met. This system also provides access to country and interstate travel, operated by the CountryLink network.

The main railway station for suburban services is Flinders Street Station (see p394). Spencer Street Station is the main terminus for country and interstate trains.

The free City Circle Tram circuits the city every 15 minutes while the City Explorer is a hop-on hop-off tourist bus, departing at half-hour intervals.

TRAM ROUTES

Flinders Street Station, the city's main suburban rail terminus Details are available from the Melbourne Visitor Information Centre.

Another way to get around the city is via water taxis and cruises along the Yarra River.

TICKETS

METROPOLITAN TICKETS can be bought from railway stations, on board trams or from newsagencies. Tourists can buy a CitySaver metcard allowing travel around the centre and admission to some attractions. The SmartVisit card allows entry to more than 50 attractions and is available for 2, 3 or 7 days.

TOURIST INFORMATION

THE MAIN TOURIST information stop is the Melbourne Visitor Information Centre, which has free maps and guides to all attractions and activities. They also provide information on accommodation and arrange bookings.

There is a range of free travel publications available from information centres, covering attractions in Melbourne and Victoria.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

THE USEFUL "CBD Mobility Map" is available from the Melbourne Visitor Information Centre, showing access and facilities available in the city for people with limited mobility. The majority of public facilities in the city have disabled access and toilets. Parking zones are allocated in the city and suburbs for disabled drivers; disabled driver permits are available from Melbourne Town Hall (see p381).

MELBOURNE STREET FINDER

THE KEY MAP BELOW shows the areas of Melbourne covered in the Street Finder. All places of interest in these areas are marked on the maps in addition to useful information, such as railway stations, bus termini and emergency services. The map references given for sights described in the Melbourne chapter refer to the

WESTERN VICTORIA

THE THEME OF WESTERN VICTORIA is diversity. For nature lovers, there is the bare beauty of the mallee deserts of the north or the forested hills and coastal scenery of the south. For a sense of the region's history, 19th-century gold-mining towns lie in the centre, surrounded by beautiful spa towns which have attracted visitors for more than a century. The area's sights are all within easy reach of one another.

Just as the Aboriginal tribes of Western Victoria had their lives and culture shaped by the region's diverse landscape, so the lives of the early European settlers were inevitably determined by the region's geographical features and immense natural resources.

The discovery of gold was the single most important event in Victoria's economic history, drawing prospectors from all over the world and providing the state with unprecedented wealth. Part of the legacy of this period is seen in the grand 19th-century buildings still standing in a number of central western towns. Also of interest are the spa towns clustered nearby, which draw their therapeutic waters from the same mineral-rich earth.

To the northwest, Victoria's major agricultural region, the Murray River, supports several large townships. The area is blessed with a Mediterranean-type climate, resulting in wineries and fruit-growing areas. In the south, the spectacular Grampian mountain ranges have long been of significance to the Aborigines. Fortunately, the steep cliffs and heavily forested slopes offered little prospect for development by early settlers and this beautiful area is today preserved as a wilderness. Wheat and sheep farmers have settled in parts of the mallee region in the north of Western Victoria but, as in the Grampians, other settlers have been discouraged by its semi-arid conditions, and large areas of this stunning desert vegetation and its native wildlife have been left intact.

The southwestern coast was the site of the first settlement in Victoria. Its towns were developed as ports for the rich farmland beyond and as whaling stations for the now outlawed industry. Besides its history, this coastline is known for its extraordinary natural scenery of sandstone monoliths, sweeping beaches, forests and rugged cliffs.

Exploring Western Victoria

WESTERN VICTORIA abounds with holiday possibilities. The spa towns close to Melbourne make perfect weekend retreats, with excellent facilities set amid gentle rural scenery. By contrast, the large number of historic sites and architectural splendours of the gold fields region requires an investigative spirit and sightseeing stamina. The Grampians National Park contains trekking opportunities and rugged views, while the mallee region offers wide open spaces and undulating sandhills. The Murray River towns have their fair share of historic sites, as well as many recreational facilities, restaurants and accommodation. The Great Ocean Road is a popular touring destination – set aside several days to explore the historic towns and scenic beauty of the coastline.

GETTING AROUND

The roads in Western Victoria are well signed and offer good roadside facilities. The Western Hwy is the route to Ballarat, the Grampians and the mallee region. The Calder Hwy leads to the spa country and beyond to Bendigo, where it connects with highways to Mildura, Swan Hill and Echuca. Take the Princes Hwy to reach Geelong and the Great Ocean Road. All these places can also be reached by rail or a combination of rail and connecting coaches. However, in remoter areas, public transport may be a problem. A good solution is to take one of the many tours offered by Melbourne's private bus companies (see p403).

FROM 1860 UNTIL 1890, the wool boom made millionaires of Australia's sheep farmers, with the Chirside family of Werribee Park and later of Victoria's Western District among the richest and most powerful. Their former mansion is a striking Italianate house, built between 1873 and 1878. It has now been restored to reflect the lifestyle of wealthy pastoral families. Visitors can stroll through the sandstone mansion and see the room where renowned opera singer Dame Nellie Melba once slept. A wing added in the 1930s has been converted into a luxury hotel.

Next to Werribee Park Mansion and its formal gardens with popular picnic areas is the Victoria State Rose Garden, laid out in a symbolic Tudor Rose-shaped design. It contains more than 4,500 beautiful rose bushes of different varieties and colours that are in flower from November to April. Also attached to Werribee Park is Victoria's Open Range Zoo, containing a range of exotic animals, including giraffes and hippopotami. The State Equestrian Centre is also part of the estate. This is home to some of Australia's premier show-jumping and polo events. For bird-watchers, the nearby Werribee sewage farm and Point Cook Coastal Park provide magnificent views of some rare species from specially designated hides. Migratory birds such as the eastern curlew and tiny red-necked stint spend the whole summer in these protected wetlands before flying north to Japan and Siberia.

THE BELLARINE PENINSULA, at the western entrance to Port Phillip (see p430), is one of Melbourne's many summer resorts. The white sand beaches of Barwon Heads, Point Lonsdale and Ocean Grove mark the start of the Great Ocean Road and its famous surf beaches (see pp418–19).

The little village of Point Lonsdale lies at the entrance to the treacherous Heads – the most dangerous entry to any bay in the world due to its churning seas and whirlpools. It is only 3 km (2 miles) from Point Lonsdale, across the swirling water (known as the Rip) with its hidden rocks, to Point Nepean on the Mornington Peninsula in Eastern Victoria (see p432).

The graceful old town of Queenscliff faces Port Phillip Bay so its beaches are calm. Its fort was the largest British defence post in the southern hemisphere during the 1880s, when a Russian invasion was feared. At the time Queenscliff was also a fashionable resort for Melburnians – its elegant hotels, such as the Vue Grand, are reminders of that opulent era (see p488). St Leonards and Portarlington are also popular holiday villages.

The peninsula has around 20 wineries, most offering cellar door sales and tastings.

GEELONG is the second largest city in the state and has a rural and industrial past. Positioned on the north-facing and sheltered Corio Bay, the city has started to look once again on its port as a recreational front door, so popular in the first years of the 20th century. The wooden 1930s bathing complex at Eastern Beach, with its lawns, sandy beach and shady trees, was restored to its former Art Deco glory in 1994. Steampacket Place and Pier are part of a redevelopment project that has seen the gradual renovation of the old warehouses into a thriving waterfront quarter filled with excellent seafood restaurants, cafés, shops and hotels.

Opposite Steampacket Place are the historic wool stores. Wool was auctioned, sold and stored here prior to its being shipped around the globe from the 1880s until the 1970s. This generated Geelong's wealth. Now these buildings are being transformed; the largest houses the award-winning National Wool Museum, tracing Australia's wool heritage from the shearing shed to the fashion catwalks.

A short drive from Geelong is the Brisbane Ranges National Park, near Anakie, which has lovely walks and native wildflowers, such as grevilleas, wattles and wild orchids, in bloom between August and November. Nearby is Steiglitz, a ghost town from the 1850s gold rush. Only a few buildings remain of this once thriving town, among them the elegant 1870s courthouse.

FLORA AND FAUNA OF THE GRAMPIANS

The Grampians are a haven for a wide range of birds, animals, native wildflowers and plants. The park is home to almost one-third of all Victorian plant species, with many, such as the Grampians guinea flower and boronia, found only within its rocky walls. Koalas grunt at night around Halls Gap and the kangaroos at Zumsteins are unusually tame and friendly. The air, trees and scrub teem with beautiful blue wrens, rainbow lorikeets, gang gang cockatoos, scarlet robins and emus. In spring, various wildflowers, orchids and pink heath burst from every crevasse and valley floor, and the creeks and rivers are full of rare brown-tree frogs. Just south of the Grampians in the town of Hamilton, a surviving eastern barred bandicoot, once thought to be extinct, was recently discovered on the town rubbish tip. It was quickly rescued and has now become part of an active breeding and protection programme.

waves above the flat western plains. Within this awesome national park, the third largest in Victoria, is a diversity of natural features and wildlife.

There are craggy slopes, cascading waterfalls and sandstone mountain tops, all formed 400 million years ago by an upthrust of the earth's crust. It has been known as gariwerd for thousands of years to local Aboriginal tribes, for whom it is a sacred place, and 80 percent of Victoria's indigenous rock art is here. The Brambuk Living Culture Centre near Halls Gap is run by local Aboriginal communities who conduct tours to the many sites.

The Grampians offer many different experiences for tourists. Day trips take in the spectacular MacKenzie Falls and the Balconies rock formation. Longer stays offer bush camping, wildflower studies, exploration of the Victoria Valley over the mountains from Halls Gap and overnight hiking trips in the south of the park. Experienced rock climbers come from around the world to tackle the challenging rock forms in the park and also at the nearby Mount Arapiles.

Excellent maps of the area and guides to the best walks are all available from the park's visitors' centre.

The Great Ocean Road Coastline

THE GREAT OCEAN ROAD is one of the world's great scenic drives. Close to Melbourne, pretty holiday towns are linked by curving roads with striking views at every turn. Inland, the road cuts through the Otways, a forested landscape, ecologically rich and visually splendid. Between Port Campbell and Port Fairy is a landscape of rugged cliffs and swirling seas. The giant eroded monoliths, the Twelve Apostles, in Port Campbell National Park, are an awesome spectacle. To the far west, old whaling ports provide an insight into one of Australia's early industries; at Warrnambool, southern right whales can still be seen.

Portland, a deep-water port at the end of the Princes Highway, was the site of the first European settlement in Victoria in 1834. Stunning scenery of craggy cliffs, blowholes and rough waters can be found near the town at Cape Bridgewater.

★ Port Fairy ①

The tiny cottages of Port Fairy are reminders of the days when the town thrived as a centre for whaling in the 1830s and 1840s. Although the whaling industry has come to an end, the town is now a popular tourist destination.

This treacherous area claimed the clipper Loch Ard in 1878. Local walks focus on the shipwreck, geology and Aboriginal history of the site.

★ Johanna Beach ⑦

Another of Victoria's renowned surf beaches is backed by rolling green hills. The area is quite remote, but popular with campers in summer.

★ Lorne ⑨

Very crowded in summer, this charming seaside village boasts excellent cafés, restaurants and accommodation. Nearby forests provide a paradise for walkers.

Peterborough ③

Victoria's dairy industry is based on this stretch of coastline. A popular rock pool beneath the cliff is known as the Grotto.

Port Campbell ④

Port Campbell beach is a sandy bay, safe for swimming. The town, set on a hill, has great views of the ocean.

Moonlight Head ⑥

Massive cliffs give way to rock platforms here in the heart of Otway National Park. Embedded anchors are reminders of the many ships lost along this perilous coastline.

Aireys Inlet ⑩

The red and white lighthouse is a landmark of this tiny coastal town with its beautiful ocean views.

★ Apollo Bay ⑧

Fishing is the main activity here, and fishing trips can be taken from the town's wharf. The town itself has a relaxed village atmosphere and excellent restaurants.

Point Addis ⑪

The Great Ocean Road leads right to the headland with spectacular views from the car park of waves beating the rocks. There are also steps leading down the cliff for a more exhilarating experience of the rolling surf.

Bells Beach ⑫

An underwater rock platform is one of the natural features which contribute to the excellent surfing conditions at Bells. An international surfing competition is held here at Easter, bringing thousands of tourists to the area (see p38).

VICTORIA IS SO OFTEN seen as the state of mountains, green hills, river valleys and beaches that many visitors don't realize a large part of the west of the state is arid desert and mallee scrubland.

These are areas of beauty and solitude, with sand hills, dwarf she-oaks, lizards, snakes and dry creek systems. Big Desert Wilderness Park and Murray-Sunset Country are true deserts, with hot days and freezing nights. Murray-Sunset Country is also home to Australia's rarest bird, the black-eared minor.

To the south, Wyperfeld and Little Desert national parks are not true deserts, as they contain lake systems that support diverse flora and fauna.

UNLIKE ITS DRIER mallee region counterparts, Hattah-Kulkyne National Park is a haven of creeks and lakes that are linked to the mighty Murray River through a complex billabong (natural waterhole) overflow system.

Its perimeters are typical dry mallee country of low scrub, mallee trees and native pine woodland, but the large lakes, including Lake Hattah, Mournpoul and Lockie, are alive with bird and animal life. Ringed by massive red gums, the surrounding habitat is home to an abundance of emus, goanna lizards and kangaroos. The freshwater lakes teem with fish, while pelicans, ibis, black swans and other water birds flock on the surface.

The lakes are ideal for canoeing, and the twisting wetlands and billabongs along the Murray and in Murray-Kulkyne Park make for fine fishing, picnics, camping and bird-watching. The region is also home to Victoria's largest flower, the Murray lily.

Deakin Ave (03) 5021 4424.

IN 1887, Mildura was little more than a village on the banks of the Murray River, situated in the middle of a red sandy desert. That year, two Canadian brothers, William and George Chaffey, came to town direct from their successful irrigation project in California and began Australia's first large-scale irrigation scheme. Since then, the red soil, fed by the Murray and Darling rivers, has become a vast plain of farms stretching for nearly 100 km (60 miles).

Today, Mildura is a modern city with a thriving tourist trade. The former home of William Chaffey, the magnificent Rio Vista, is worth a visit. Built in 1890, it has now been restored with its original furnishings. Grapes, olives, avocados and citrus fruit are grown successfully in the region and the area is rapidly

THE MURRAY RIVER PADDLESTEAMERS

Old paddlesteamer on the Murray River

Between the 1860s and 1880s, Australia's economy "rode on the sheep's back" – from the Western District of Victoria to the Diamantina Plains in central Queensland, wool was king. But the only way to transport it from the remote sheep stations to coastal ports and then on to its thriving English market was by river. There were no roads other than a few dirt tracks, so the paddlesteamers that plied the Murray, Murrumbidgee and Darling river systems were the long-distance lorries of the day. Towing barges loaded with wool, they reached the Port of Echuca after sailing for days from inland Australia. Then, stocked up with supplies for the sheep stations and distant river settlements, they returned upriver. However, by the 1890s railway lines had crept into the interior and the era of the paddlesteamer was gone. Now the Port of Echuca is once again home to beautifully restored, working paddlesteamers, such as the PS Emmylou, PS Pride of the Murray and PS Adelaide.

BLACK SWANS are noisy birds, as the early explorer Major Thomas Mitchell discovered in 1836 when his sleep was disturbed by their early morning calls on the banks of the Murray River. That's how the vibrant river town of Swan Hill got its name, and the black swans are still a prominent feature.

One of the most popular attractions of Swan Hill is the Pioneer Settlement Museum, a 3-ha (7-acre) living and working re-creation of a river town at the turn of the 20th century. The settlement buzzes with the sound of printing presses, the blacksmith's hammer, the smell of the bakery and general daily life. "Residents" dress in period clothes and produce old-fashioned goods to sell to tourists. Some of the log buildings are made of Murray pine, a hardwood tree impenetrable to termites. The sound and light show at night is particularly evocative.

A large paddlesteamer, the PS Pyap, plies the Murray River, taking visitors on leisurely one-hour cruises. It runs twice daily from the pioneer settlement, past the spot where Major Mitchell spent his famous sleepless night.

EX-CONVICT and entrepreneur Henry Hopwood travelled to the Murray River region in 1853, at the end of his prison sentence. He seized upon the need for a river punt at the Echuca crossing by setting up a ferry service, as well as the Bridge Hotel. However, Echuca really came into its own in 1864 when the railway from Melbourne reached the port. Suddenly the town, with its paddlesteamers on the Murray River, became the largest inland port in Australia.

Today the port area features horse-drawn carriages, working steam engines and old-fashioned timber mills. Tours of the area are available, along with regular river trips on a paddlesteamer. Visit the Star Hotel and discover the secret tunnel that let patrons leave after hours. There is also a paddlesteamer display opposite the hotel.

Approximately 30 km (19 miles) upstream from Echuca is Barmah Forest, the largest red gum forest in the world. A drive in the forest, with its 300-year-old river red gums and important Aboriginal sites, is highly recommended, as is the wetlands ecocruise that operates out of Barmah.

BENDIGO celebrated the gold rush like no other city, and with good reason – the finds here were legendary. In 1851, the first year of gold mining, 23 kg (50 lbs) of gold were extracted from only one bucketful of dirt. When the surface gold began to disappear, the discovery of a gold-rich quartz reef in the 1870s reignited the boom.

Reflecting the city's wealth, Bendigo's buildings are vast and extravagant, often combining several architectural styles within one construction. Government architect GW Watson completed two buildings, the Law Courts and Post Office, in the French and Italian Renaissance styles. The tree-lined boulevard Pall Mall is reminiscent of a French provincial city. The elegant Shamrock Hotel opened to great fanfare in 1897 and is still in operation (see p487). The European-style building is given a distinctly Australian feel with its front veranda. Self-guided heritage walk brochures are available from Bendigo's information centre, and the Vintage Talking Tram provides an excellent commentary on the town's history.

A major part of Bendigo's gold rush history was made by its Chinese population. The Joss House, dating from the 1860s, is a restored Chinese temple. It is a reminder of the important role played by the Chinese in the history of Bendigo and continues to be used as a place of worship.

The Golden Dragon Museum also has displays that chart the history of the Chinese in the city. A ceremonial archway links the museum with the Garden of Joy, built in 1996.

Based on a traditional Asian design, the garden resembles the Chinese landscape in miniature, with valleys, mountains, trees and streams.

The Bendigo Art Gallery has a splendid collection of Australian painting, including works depicting life on the gold fields. Nearby are shops selling pieces from Australia's oldest working pottery, established in 1858.

The Central Deborah Goldmine holds tours, taking visitors down 86 m (260 ft) into the last deep reef mine in town. There are also displays on mining techniques.

Other attractions include a 70-minute round-trip ride aboard a steam train to Muckleford and Carmen's Tunnel, an old gold mine. CASTLEMAINE's elegance reflects the fact that gold finds here were brief but extremely prosperous. The finest attraction is the Market Hall, built in 1862. Architect William Benyon Downe designed this building in the Palladian style, with a portico and a large arched entrance leading into the building's restrained interior. The building is now the Visitors' Information Centre. Buda Historic Home and Garden was occupied from 1863 to 1981 by Hungarian silversmith, Ernest Leviny, and his family. The house displays an extensive collection of arts and crafts works. The property is also noted for its largely intact 19th-century garden, a unique survivor of its period.

Castlemaine is also home to many writers and artists from Melbourne and has a lively collection of museums, cafés and restaurants.

THE CHINESE ON THE GOLD FIELDS

The first Chinese gold-seekers landed in Melbourne in 1853. Their numbers peaked at around 40,000 in 1859. They worked hard in large groups to recover the tiniest particles of gold, but the Europeans became hostile, claiming that the new arrivals were draining the colony's wealth. In 1857, several Chinese were murdered. The state government tried to quell hostility by introducing an entry tax on Chinese who arrived by boat – the Chinese then landed in neighbouring states and walked overland to Victoria. At the end of the gold rush many stayed on to work as gardeners, cooks and factory hands. There is still a large Chinese community in the state.

explore a unique period of Australia's history. Blacksmiths, hoteliers, bakers and grocers in full period dress ply their trades on the main streets, amid the diggers' huts, tents, old meeting places and the Chinese Village. Among the most absorbing displays are those that reproduce gold mining methods. The town's fields produced an estimated 640,000 kg (630 tonnes) of gold before being exhausted in the 1920s.

The nearby Gold Museum is part of the Sovereign Hill complex. Its changing exhibits focus on the uses of gold throughout history and its appeal as a decorative metal.

Sovereign Hill opens in the evenings for an impressive sound and light show, which re-enacts the events of the Eureka Stockade (see p424).

Ballarat

Ballarat gold nugget

IN 1851, the cry of “Gold!” shattered the tranquillity of this pleasant, pastoral district. Within months, tent cities covered the hills and thousands of people were pouring in from around the world, eager to make their fortune. While there were spectacular finds, the sustainable prosperity was accrued to traders, farmers and other modest industries, and Ballarat grew in proportion to their growing wealth. The gold rush petered out in the late 1870s. However, the two decades of wealth can still be seen in the lavish buildings, broad streets, ornate statuary and grand gardens. Today, Ballarat is Victoria’s largest inland city.

Ornate façade of Her Majesty’s Theatre on Lydiard Street

Lydiard Street

The wealth of the gold fields attracted a range of people, among them the educated and well travelled. Lydiard Street reflects their influence as a well-proportioned streetscape, boasting buildings of exemplary quality and design.

At the northern end lies the railway station. Built in 1862, it features an arched train entrance and Tuscan pilasters. A neat row of four banks was designed by prominent architect Leonard Terry, whose concern for a balanced streetscape is clearly expressed in their elegant façades. Her Majesty’s Theatre is an elaborate 19th-century structure and Australia’s oldest surviving purpose-built theatre.

Opposite the theatre is Craig’s Royal Hotel, begun in 1852. The hotel was extensively renovated in 1867 for a visit by Prince Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh, including the construction of a special Prince’s Room and a further 22 bedrooms. In 1881, royal lanterns were constructed outside to honour a visit by the Duke of Clarence and the Duke of York (later King George V). This historic hotel is still in operation (see p487).

THE EUREKA STOCKADE

An insurrection at Eureka in 1854, which arose as a result of gold diggers’ dissatisfaction with high licensing fees on the gold fields, heralded the move towards egalitarianism in Australia. When hotel-owner Peter Bentley was acquitted of murdering a young digger, James Scobie, after a row about his entry into the Eureka Hotel, it incited anger among the miners. Led by the charismatic Peter Lalor, the diggers built a stockade, burned their licences and raised the blue flag of the Southern Cross, which became known as the Eureka Flag. On Sunday, 3 December 1854, 282 soldiers and police made a surprise attack on the stockade, killing around 30 diggers. After a public outcry over the brutality, however, the diggers were acquitted of treason and the licence system was abolished.

Ballarat has always enjoyed the spirit of benefaction. Huge fortunes were made overnight and much of these found their way into the town’s institutions. Ballarat Fine Art Gallery has been a major recipient of such goodwill, enabling it to establish an impressive reputation as Australia’s largest and arguably best provincial art institution.

More than 6,000 works chart the course of Australian art from colonial to contemporary times. Gold field artists include Eugene von Guerard, whose work Old Ballarat as it was in the summer of 1853–54 is an extraordinary evocation of the town’s early tent cities. The gallery’s star exhibit is the original Eureka Flag, which has since come to symbolize the basic democratic ideals which are so much a part of modern Australian society.

VICTORIA'S MACEDON RANGES and Spa Country lie to the northwest of Melbourne. The landscape is dotted with vineyards, small townships, craft markets and bed-and-breakfasts (see pp487–8). The tour follows the Calder Highway, once taken by gold prospectors to the alluvial fields of Castlemaine and Bendigo (see pp422–3) before heading west into the spa country around Daylesford. The region's wealthy past is reflected in the 19th-century bluestone buildings, including wool stores and stately homes.

RUPERTSWOOD AND THE ASHES

During the Christmas of 1882, eight members of the touring English cricket team were house guests of Sir William John Clarke at Rupertswood. The English won a social game between them and their hosts. Lady Clarke burnt a bail, placed the ashes in an urn and presented them to the English captain, Ivo Bligh. The urn was later presented to Marylebone Cricket Club by Bligh's widow, and thus the cricketing tradition of contesting for The Ashes began.

EASTERN VICTORIA

EASTERN VICTORIA is a region of immense natural beauty with snow-topped mountains, eucalypt forests, fertile inland valleys, wild national parks and long sandy beaches. Some of the state's finest wine-growing areas are here, set around historic towns of golden sandstone. Fast rivers popular with rafters flow through the region and ski resorts resembling Swiss villages are found in the Victoria Alps.

Eastern Victoria has a range of attractions for the visitor. The fertile plains of the north-east, crossed by the Goulburn, Ovens, King and Murray rivers, offer a feast for the tastebuds: Rutherglen red wines; Milawa mustards; local cheeses; and luscious peaches, pears and apricots from Shepparton. Historic 19th-century towns such as Beechworth and Chiltern are beautifully preserved from their gold-mining days. Glenrowan is the site where Australia's most famous bushranger, Ned Kelly, was captured. An old-fashioned paddlesteamer rides regularly on the broad Murray River near Wodonga.

But towards the Victoria Alps and the towns of Bright and Mansfield another landscape emerges. This one is wild and very beautiful. In winter, there is exciting downhill skiing among the snow gums and peaks at village resorts such as Mount Buller and Falls Creek. In summer, walk among the wildflowers in Alpine National Park, hike to the summit of Mount Feathertop, or try a rafting expedition down rivers such as the mighty Snowy.

To the east of Melbourne are the magnificent beaches of the Gippsland region. Favourite attractions here include Phillip Island with its fairy penguins, and Wilsons Promontory National Park with its wildlife, granite coves and pristine waters. Near the regional centres of Sale and Bairnsdale lie the Gippsland Lakes, Australia's largest inland waterway and an angler's paradise. Beyond, stretching to the New South Wales border, is Croajingolong National Park and 200 km (125 miles) of deserted coastline.

Exploring Eastern Victoria

EXCELLENT HIGHWAYS give access to the most popular tourist attractions and towns of Eastern Victoria. The Dandenong Ranges, Yarra Valley and Phillip Island are within an easy day trip from Melbourne; the region's coastline, which includes Gippsland Lakes, around Lakes Entrance, Wilsons Promontory and Croajingolong National Park, is further to the south and east. The mountains, ski resorts and inland farm valleys are better accessed from the northeast of the state. While most of the major sights can be reached by road, some areas of the Gippsland forests and the Victorian Alps must be explored in 4WD vehicles.

GETTING AROUND

There are regular train services to the Dandenongs and the Gippsland Lakes. Bus tours can be arranged to Phillip Island and the Yarra Valley, while regular buses run in winter to the ski resorts. However, the best way of exploring is by car. The Hume Hwy provides access to the northeast, the Princes Hwy to the Gippsland Lakes and the South Gippsland Hwy to Phillip Island and Wilsons Promontory.

THE PENGUIN PARADE ON Phillip Island is an extraordinary natural spectacle and one of Eastern Victoria's most popular tourist attractions. Every evening at sunset at all times of the year, hundreds of little penguins come ashore at Summerland Beach and waddle across the sand to their burrows in the spiny tussocks (spiky clumps of grass), just as their ancestors have been doing for generations. Once ashore, the small penguins spend their time in the dunes preening themselves and, in summer, feeding their hungry chicks, seemingly oblivious to visitors watching from raised boardwalks.

At Seal Rocks, off the rugged cliffs at the western end of the island, is Australia's largest colony of fur seals. Some 7,000 of these seals can be seen playing in the surf or feeding their pups on the rocks.

Tourists can watch them from the cliff top or on an organized boat trip. Live film footage of the seals is transmitted to the Seal Rocks Sealife Centre, an interpretive centre at The Nobbies. There is also a large koala colony on Phillip Island.

Cape Woolamai, with its red cliffs and wild ocean seas, has good walking trails, bird-watching opportunities and surfing. The peaceful town of Cowes is ideal for swimming, relaxing and dining out on the island's fine seafood (see p522).

ONLY AN HOUR'S drive from Melbourne, on the east side of Port Phillip Bay, the Mornington Peninsula is the city's summer and weekend getaway. From Frankston down to Portsea near its tip, the area is ideal for relaxing beach holidays. The sandy beaches facing the bay are sheltered and calm, perfect for windsurfing, sailing or paddling, while the rugged coast fronting the Bass Strait has rocky reefs, rock pools and surf beaches.

Arthur's Seat, a high, bush ridge, has a spectacular chairlift ride offering views of the peninsula. The surrounding Red Hill wineries are fast gaining a reputation for their fine Chardonnays and Pinot Noirs. Sip a glass of one of these wines in the historic village of Sorrento or take a ferry trip across the narrow and treacherous Rip to the beautiful 19th-century town of Queens-cliff (see p416).

Running the length of the peninsula, the Mornington Peninsula National Park has lovely walking tracks. Point Nepean, formerly a quarantine station and defence post, is now part of the national park. The beach at the tip of The Heads and Cheviot Beach, where Prime Minister Harold Holt disappeared while surfing in 1967, are both beautiful spots.

ENVIRONS: The village of Flinders is a peaceful, chic seaside resort, while Portsea is the summer playground of Melbourne's rich and famous. The atmosphere at the remote French Island, a short ferry trip from Crib Point, is unique, with no electricity or telephones. The island also teems with wildlife, including wallabies and the rare potoroo.

SINCE THE mid-19th century, the Dandenong Ranges, to the east of Melbourne, have been a popular weekend retreat for city residents. The cool of the mountain ash forests, lush fern gullies and bubbling creeks provide a welcome relief from the bay-side heat. The area abounds with plant nurseries, bed-and-breakfasts and tearooms, reached via twisting mountain roads that offer striking views over Melbourne and the bay.

The great gardens of the Dandenongs, many of which once belonged to the mansions of wealthy families, are magnificent for walks and picnics. Particularly popular is the Alfred Nicholas Memorial Garden at Sherbrooke with its oaks, elms, silver birches and Japanese maples around a boating lake. Flowers are the obvious attraction of the National Rhododendron Gardens at Olinda and Tesselaar's Tulip Farm at Silvan. A steam train, Puffing Billy, runs several times daily from Belgrave through 24 km (15 miles) of gullies and forests to Emerald Lake and on to Gembrook.

Eastern Victoria's Coastline

THE BEAUTIFUL COASTLINE of Gippsland is equal to any natural wonder of the world. Approximately 400 km (250 miles) of deserted beaches, inlets and coves are largely protected by national park status. There is the largest inland lake system in Australia, Gippsland Lakes, the pristine sands of Ninety Mile Beach and rare natural features such as the Mitchell River silt jetties. Birds, fish, seals and penguins abound in the area. With little commercial development, the coastline is a popular location with anglers, sailors, divers, swimmers and campers.

Port Albert, the oldest port in Gippsland, was used by thousands of gold diggers heading for the Omeo and Walhalla gold fields in the 1850s. Quaint buildings with shady verandas line its streets, and it is home to the oldest pub in the state.

LAKE EILDON, the catchment for five major rivers, including the Goulburn River, is a vast irrigation reserve that turns into a recreational haven in summer. Surrounded by the Great Dividing Range and Fraser and Eildon national parks, the lake is a good location for water-skiing, house-boat holidays, horse-riding, fishing and hiking. Kangaroos, koalas and rosellas abound around the lake, and trout and Murray cod are common in the Upper Goulburn River and in the lake. Canoeing on the Goulburn River is also a popular activity.

A variety of accommodation is available, from rustic cabins and camp sites in Fraser National Park to luxurious five-star lodges and guesthouses (see pp488-90).

MANSFIELD, a country town surrounded by mountains, is the southwest entry point to Victoria's alpine country. A memorial in the main street of Mansfield, near the 1920s cinema, commemorates the death of three troopers shot by the infamous Ned Kelly and his gang at nearby Stringybark Creek in 1878 – the crime for which he was hung in Melbourne in 1880 (see p386).

Blue waters of Lake Eildon, backed by the Howqua Mountain Ranges

The scenery of Mansfield became well known as the location for the 1981 film The Man from Snowy River, which was based on the poet “Banjo” Paterson’s legendary ballad of the same name (see p31). Many local horsemen rode in the film and they still contest Crack’s Cup each November (see p37). Riders traverse a mountainous track through tall mountain ash, cross rivers and descend steep hills, demonstrating traditional bush skills of both horse and rider.

ENVIRONS: The excellent downhill slopes of the Mount Buller ski resort is less than one hour’s drive from Mansfield. The Mount Stirling Alpine Resort offers year-round activities, such as mountain bike riding (see p527).

Mount Beauty 10

2,300. 119 Kiewa Valley Hwy (03) 5754 1962.

THE TOWN OF Mount Beauty was first built to house workers on the Kiewa hydro-electricity scheme in the 1940s. It has since developed into a good base for exploring the beauty of the Kiewa Valley, with its tumbling river and dairy farms. Also nearby is the wilderness of the Bogong High Plains and the Alpine National Park, with their walks, wildflowers and snow gums.

Within the national park, Mount Bogong, Victoria’s highest mountain, rises an impressive 1,986 m (6,516 ft) above the town. The sealed mountain road to Falls Creek is one of the main access routes to Victoria’s ski slopes in winter. In summer, Rocky Valley Dam near Falls Creek is a popular rowing and high-altitude athletics training camp. There are beautiful bush walks, and at the top of the High Plains in summer, there are opportunities for fishing, mountain biking, horse-riding and hang-gliding.

Bright 11

2,500. 119 Gavan St (03) 5755 2275.

BRIGHT IS a picturesque mountain town near the head of the Ovens River Valley, with the towering rocky cliffs of Mount Buffalo to the west and the peak of the state’s second highest mountain, Mount Feathertop, to its south. The trees along Bright’s main street flame into spectacular colours of red, gold, copper and brown for its Autumn Festival in April and May (see p38). In winter, the town turns into a gateway to the snow fields, with the resorts of Mount Hotham and Falls Creek in the Victorian Alps close by. In summer, swimming and fly-fishing for trout in the Ovens River are popular activities.

The spectacular Mount Buffalo National Park is also popular all year round; visitors can camp amid the snow gums by Lake Catani and walk its flower-flecked mountain pastures and peaks, fish for trout, hang-glide off the granite tors over the Ovens Valley or rock-climb the imposing sheer cliffs. The gracious Mount Buffalo Chalet, built by the state government in 1910, retains its old-world charm and regularly hosts summer musical events, such as Opera in the Alps (see p37). In winter, its cosy fires and grand dining room make it a popular hotel for skiers avoiding the jetset life of other resorts (see p489).

Beechworth 12

Ⓐ 3,500. 📍📞 Shire Hall, Ford St (03) 5728 3233.

BEAUTIFULLY sited in the foothills of the Victorian Alps, Beechworth was the centre of the great Ovens gold fields during the 1850s and 1860s (see pp50–51). At the height of its boom, the town had a population of 42,000 and 61 hotels.

Today, visiting Beechworth is like stepping back in time. One of the state's best-preserved gold rush towns, it contains more than 30 19th-century buildings now classified by the National Trust. Its tree-lined streets feature granite banks and a courthouse, hotels with wide verandas and dignified brick buildings on either side. The majority of these are still in daily use, modern life continuing within edifices of a bygone era.

Rows of grapevines in one of northeastern Victoria's many vineyards

A large majority of the old buildings are now restaurants, and bed-and-breakfasts. Dine in the stately old bank which is now the Bank Restaurant (see p521), stand in the dock of the courthouse where Ned Kelly was finally committed for his trial in Melbourne (see p386) and marvel at the old channel blasted through the granite to create a flow of water in which miners panned for gold.

The evocative Chinese cemetery is also worth a visit as a poignant reminder of the hundreds of Chinese who worked and died on the gold fields (see pp50–51).

Chiltern 13

THIS SLEEPY VILLAGE was once a booming gold mining town with 14 suburbs. Only 1 km (0.6 miles) off the Hume Highway, halfway between the major towns of Wangaratta and Wodonga, today its colonial architecture and quiet atmosphere, as yet unspoiled by large numbers of tourists, make a visit to this pleasant town a worthwhile experience.

Chiltern has three National Trust properties: Dow's Pharmacy; the Federal Standard newspaper office; and Lakeview House. The last is the former home of Henry Handel Richardson, the pen name of Ethel Robertson, who wrote The Getting of Wisdom (see p31). Chiltern was her childhood home. The house, on Lake Alexander, has been restored with period furniture, and gives an insight into the life of the wealthy at the turn of the 20th century.

An unusual sight is the Famous Grapevine Attraction museum. This shows the oldest and largest grapevine in the southern hemisphere – it once covered Chiltern's Star Hotel in its entirety.

For opening hours and other information on these attractions, check with the tourist information office in the town.

THE NORTHEASTERN area of Victoria is famous throughout the world for its vineyards and wineries (see pp370–71). In a region that now spreads south to encompass the King and Ovens valleys around Glenrowan, Milawa, Everton, Rutherglen and Whitfield, the wines produced can vary in style enormously, depending on the elevation and microclimate of each vineyard.

Rutherglen is best known for its full-bodied "Rutherglen Reds", such as Cabernet Sauvignons from 100-year-old wineries including Campbells and Chambers. The Muscats, Tokays and ports from both Rutherglen and Glenrowan are even more internationally renowned, with Bullers, Morris and Bailey's among the best. Rutherglen itself is a graceful town lined with antiques shops, and an abundance of hotels (see p489) and restaurants (see p522).

The grapes grown in the cool-climate region around Whitfield and Milawa make for crisp whites and lighter, softer reds. One of the more popular wineries in Northeastern Victoria is Brown Brothers at Milawa. The winery is open daily for both wine tasting and sales at the cellar door, and its excellent restaurant specializes in local delicacies from the region, including particularly good trout, cheese, honey and lamb. While at Milawa, visits to the Milawa Cheese Factory and Milawa Mustards to sample these two local products are recommended.

Iron effigy of Ned Kelly

Siege Street near the town's railway station, Kelly was finally captured after more than two years on the run. During this time he had earned almost hero status among Victoria's bush poor, particularly its many Irish Catholic farming families, as a Robin Hood-type character.

Kelly knew the country around Glenrowan, especially the lovely Warby Ranges, in great detail and often used Mount Glenrowan, west of town, as a lookout. He was later hanged at Melbourne Gaol.

Today Glenrowan thrives on its Kelly history as a tourist attraction. A giant iron effigy of the bush-ranger greets visitors at the entrance to the town and there are various displays, museums and re-enactments depicting the full Kelly story, including his last defeat.

THE RURAL TOWN of Benalla is where Ned Kelly grew up and first appeared in court at the age of 15. Today it is most famous for its art gallery, built over Lake Benalla, which contains a fine collection of contemporary and Australian art. A Rose Festival is held in its magnificent rose gardens each November (see p37).

The town is also known as the Australian "capital" of gliding, with excellent air thermals rising from both the hot plains and nearby mountains.

Shepparton 17

Population 30,000. 534 Wyndham St (03) 5831 4400.

THE MODERN CITY of Shepparton, at the heart of the fertile Goulburn River Valley, is often called the "fruit bowl of Australia". The vast irrigation plains around the town support Victoria's most productive pear, peach, apricot, apple, plum, cherry and kiwi fruit farms. A summer visit of the town's biggest fruit cannery, SPC, when fruit is being harvested, reveals a hive of activity.

The area's sunny climate is also ideal for grape growing. The two well-known wineries of Mitchelton and Château Tahbilk, 50 km (30 miles) south of town, are both open for tours and wine tastings (see pp370-71).

TASMANIA

INTRODUCING TASMANIA 442-443

TASMANIA 444-459

Tasmania's Wildlife and Wilderness

Tasmanian blue gum

TASMANIA'S LANDSCAPE varies dramatically within its small area. Parts of Tasmania are often compared to the green pastures of England; however, the west of the state is wild and untamed. Inland there are glacial mountains and wild rivers, the habitat of flora and fauna unique to the island. More than 20 per cent of the island is now designated as a World Heritage Area (see pp22–3).

Russell Falls at Mount Field National Park

MOUNTAIN WILDERNESS

Inland southwest Tasmania is dominated by its glacial mountain landscape, including the beautiful Cradle Mountain – the natural symbol of the state. To the east of Cradle Mountain is the Walls of Jerusalem National Park, an isolated area of five rocky mountains. To the south is Mount Field National Park, a beautiful alpine area of glacial tarns and eucalypt forests, popular with skiers in the winter months.

Cradle Mountain, looking down over a glacial lake

Deciduous beech (Nothofagus gunnii) is the only such native beech in Australia. The spectacular golden colours of its leaves fill the mountain areas during the autumn.

The Bennett's wallaby (Macropus rufogriseus) is native to Tasmania's mountain regions. A shy animal, it is most likely to be spotted at either dawn or dusk.

COASTAL WILDERNESS

Tasmania's eastern coastline is often balmy in climate and sustains a strong fishing industry. The western coast, however, bears the full brunt of the Roaring Forties winds, whipped up across the vast expanses of ocean between the island state and the nearest land in South America. As a result, the landscape is lined with rocky beaches and raging waters, the scene of many shipwrecks during Tasmania's history.

Banksia comes in many varieties in Tasmania, including Banksia serrata and Banksia marginata. It is distinctive for its seed pods.

The Tasmanian devil (Sarcophilus harrisi) is noisy, potentially vicious and one of only three marsupial carnivores that inhabit the island.

Rugged coastline of the Tasman Peninsula

Calm area of Franklin Lower Gordon Wild River

RIVER WILDERNESS

The southwest of Tasmania is well known for its wild rivers, particularly among avid white-water rafters. The greatest wild river is the 120-km (75-mile) Franklin River, protected within Franklin-Gordon Wild Rivers National Park by its World Heritage status. This is the only undammed wild river left in Australia, and despite its sometimes calm moments it often rages fiercely through gorges, rainforests and heathland.

Huon pine (Lagarostrobus franklinii) is found in the southwest and in the south along the Franklin-Gordon River. It is prized for its ability to withstand rot. Some examples are more than 2,000 years old.

Brown trout

(Salmo trutta), an introduced species, is abundant in the wild rivers and lakes of Tasmania, and a popular catch with fly-fishers.

The eastern quoll (Dasyurus viverrinus) thrives in Tasmania, where there are no predatory foxes and forests are in abundance.

PRESERVING TASMANIA'S WILDERNESS

An inhospitable climate, rugged landforms and the impenetrable scrub are among the factors that have preserved such a large proportion of Tasmania as wilderness. Although there is a long history of human habitation in what is now the World Heritage Area (Aboriginal sites date back 35,000 years), the population has always been small. The first real human threat occurred in the late 1960s when the Tasmanian government's hydro-electricity programme drowned Lake Pedder despite conservationists' protests. A proposal two decades later to dam a section of the Franklin River was defeated when the federal government intervened. The latest threat to the landscape is tourism. While many places of beauty are able to withstand visitors, others are not and people are discouraged from visiting these areas.

Protest badges

Dam protests were common occurrences in Tasmania during the 1980s, when conservationists protested against the damming of the Franklin River. The No Dams sticker became a national symbol of protest.

TASMANIA

HUMAN HABITATION of Tasmania dates back 35,000 years, when Aborigines first reached the area. At this time it was linked to continental Australia, but waters rose to form the Bass Strait at the end of the Ice Age, 12,000 years ago. Dutch explorer Abel Tasman set foot on the island in 1642 and inspired its modern name. He originally called it Van Diemen's Land, after the governor of the Dutch East Indies.

Belying its small size, Tasmania has a remarkably diverse landscape that contains glacial mountains, dense forests and rolling green hills. Its wilderness is one of only three large temperate forests in the southern hemisphere; it is also home to many plants and animals unique to the island, including a ferocious marsupial, the Tasmanian devil. Tasmanians are fiercely proud of their landscape and the island saw the rise of the world's first Green political party, the "Tasmanian Greens". One-fifth of Tasmania is protected as a World Heritage Area (see pp22–3).

The Tasmanian Aboriginal population was almost wiped out with the arrival of Europeans in the 19th century, however more than 4,000 people claim Aboriginality in Tasmania today. Evidence of their link with the landscape has survived in numerous cave paintings. Many Aboriginal sites remain sacred and closed to visitors, but a few, such as the cliffs around Woolnorth, display this indigenous art for all to see.

The island's early European history has also been well preserved in its many 19th-century buildings. The first real settlement was at the waterfront site of Hobart in 1804, now Tasmania's capital and Australia's second-oldest city. From here, European settlement spread throughout the state, with the development of farms and villages, built and worked by convict labour.

Today, Tasmania is a haven for wildlife lovers, hikers and fly-fishermen, who come to experience the island's many national parks and forests. The towns scattered throughout the state, such as Richmond and Launceston, with their rich colonial histories, are well worth a visit, and make excellent bases from which to explore the surrounding wilderness.

The historic port area of Battery Point in Hobart

Exploring Tasmania

PART, AND YET NOT A PART, of Australia, Tasmania's distinctive landscape, climate and culture are largely due to its 300-km (185-mile) distance from the mainland. The isolation has left a legacy of unique flora and fauna, fresh air, an abundance of water and a relaxed lifestyle. More than 27 per cent of Tasmania's land surface is given over to agriculture, with the emphasis on wine and fine foods. The state also benefits from vast expanses of open space, since approximately 40 per cent of Tasmanians live in the capital, Hobart. Tasmania, therefore, offers the perfect opportunity for a relaxing holiday in tranquil surroundings.

GETTING AROUND

Within this small, compact island, traffic is rarely a problem, and any visitor can journey across the diverse landscape with little difficulty. While all major cities and towns are linked by fast highways and major roads, some of the most splendid mountain, lake, coastal and rural scenery lies off the key routes, along the many alternative and easily accessible country roads. A car is recommended, but coach services run between most towns and to some of the state's natural attractions.

SPREAD OVER seven hills between the banks of the Derwent River and the summit of Mount Wellington, Australia's second oldest city has an incredible waterfront location, similar to that of her "big sister", Sydney. Hobart began life on the waterfront and the maritime atmosphere is still an important aspect of the city. From Old Wharf, where the first arrivals settled, round to the fishing village of Battery Point, the area known as Sullivans Cove is still the hub of this cosmopolitan city. Like the rest of the state, the capital city makes the most of its natural surroundings.

The main anchorage for fishing boats and yachts also serves as the finish line of the annual Sydney to Hobart Yacht Race. This famous race attracts an international field of competitors. After a Boxing Day start, most sailors dock here in time for New Year celebrations (see p37).

Constitution Dock borders the city and the old slum district of Wapping, which has now been redeveloped. Many of the old warehouses have also been restored to include restaurants and cafés. One such warehouse houses the state's most idiosyncratic seafaring restaurant, The Drunken Admiral, with its bizarre collection of maritime paraphernalia.

The old guardhouse, built in 1818, now lies within a leafy park, just a few minutes' walk from Hampden Road with its range of antiques shops, art galleries, tea-rooms and restaurants.

Battery Point retains a strong sense of history, with its narrow gas-lit streets lined with tiny fishermen's and workers' houses, cottage gardens and colonial mansions and pubs,

Hop farm on the Derwent River in New Norfolk

Richmond 2

800. Old Hobart Town,
Bridge St (03) 6260 2502.

IN THE HEART of the countryside, 26 km (16 miles) from Hobart, lies the quaint village of Richmond. This was the first area granted to free settlers from England for farming, and at its centre they established a township reminiscent of their homeland. Richmond now includes some of Australia's oldest colonial architecture. Most of the buildings were constructed by convicts, including the sandstone bridge built in 1823, the gaol of 1825 and the Roman Catholic Church of 1834.

Today, Richmond is a lively centre for rural artists and artisans. On the main street, between the old general store and post office, they occupy many of the historic homes and cottages.

New Norfolk 3

5,900. Circle St
(03) 6261 3700.

FROM HOBART, the Derwent River heads north, then veers west through the Derwent River Valley. The hop farms and oast houses along the willow-lined river are testimony to the area's history of brewing.

At the centre of the valley, 38 km (24 miles) from Hobart, is the town of New Norfolk.

Many of the first settlers in the region abandoned the colonial settlement of Norfolk

Island to come here, hence the name. One of Tasmania's classified historic towns, it contains many interesting buildings, such as the Bush Inn of 1815, which claims to be one of Australia's oldest licensed pubs.

NESTLED IN THE Clyde River Valley, Bothwell's wide streets are set along a river of the same name, formerly known as the "Fat Doe" river after a town in Scotland. The area's names were assigned by early Scottish settlers, who arrived from Hobart Town in 1817 with their families and 18-l (5-gal) kegs of rum loaded on bullock wagons.

The town's heritage is now preserved with some 50 National Trust buildings dating from the 1820s, including the Castle Hotel, the Masonic Hall (now an art gallery), Bothwell Grange Guest House and the Old Schoolhouse, now home to the Australasian Golf Museum. The stone heads above the door of the Presbyterian St Luke's Church depict a Celtic god and goddess. Even the town's golf course has a claim on history as the oldest in Australia, as it was laid out in the 1820s.

The town lies at the centre of the historic sheep-farming district of Bothwell, stretching along Lakes Hwy from the southern midlands to the famous trout fishing area of the Great Lakes. It is also the gateway to the ruggedly beautiful Central Plateau Conservation Area – a tableland which rises abruptly from the surrounding flat countryside to an average height of 600 m (nearly 2,000 ft).

 550.  Central Tasmanian Tourism Centre, 77 High St. (03) 6254 1212.

OATLANDS WAS one of a string of military stations established in 1813 during the construction of the old Midlands Hwy by convict chain gangs. Colonial Governor Lachlan Macquarie ordered the building of the road in 1811, to connect the southern settlement of Hobart (see pp448–9) with the northern settlement of Launceston (see p453). During a later trip, he chose locations for the townships en route, naming them after places in the British Isles. The road ran through the area of Tasmania corresponding in name and geography to that of the British Midlands region, giving it its original name, but since the 1990s it has been dubbed the Heritage Hwy.

Oatlands soon became one of the colonial coaching stops for early travellers. Today, it has the richest endowment of Georgian buildings in the country, mostly made of local sandstone, including the 1829 courthouse and St Peter's Church (1838). As a result,

THE FREYCINET PENINSULA ON the east coast of Tasmania is a long, narrow neck of land jutting south, dominated by the granite peaks of the Hazards Mountain Range. Named after an early French maritime explorer, the peninsula consists of ocean beaches on its eastern rim and secluded coves and inlets to the west. The fishing village of Coles Bay lies in the largest cove, backed by the Hazards.

Freycinet National Park on the tip of the peninsula is criss-crossed with walking tracks along beaches, over mountains, around headlands and across lagoons. The most popular walk is Wineglass Bay – a short, steep trip up and over the saddle of the mountains. The blue waters of the bay are cupped against a crescent of golden sand, which inspired the name.

The drive up the east coast is a highlight of Tasmania. There are ocean views, cliffs, sandy coves and marshlands inhabited by black swans. There are many small towns en route such as Orford and Swansea for overnight stays.

Bicheno 7

 750.  69 Burgess St (03) 6375 1500.

TOGETHER WITH Coles Bay, Bicheno is the holiday centre of Tasmania's east coast. In summer, the bay is very popular due to its sheltered location, which means temperatures are always a few degrees warmer than elsewhere in the state.

The area also includes Tasmania's smallest national park, the 16,080 ha (39,700 acre) Douglas Apsley National Park. It contains the state's largest dry sclerophyll forest, patches of rainforest, river gorges, waterfalls and spectacular views along the coast. This varied landscape can be taken in along a three-day north to south walking track through the park. The north of the park is only accessible by 4WD. Other attractions in the area include the Apsley Gorge Winery and a 3-km long penguin breeding colony.

SET ON THE BANKS of the Macquarie River, Ross, like Outlands (see p451), was once a military station and coaching stop along the Midlands Hwy. It lies at the heart of the richest sheep farming district in Tasmania, internationally recognized for its fine merino wool. Some of the large rural homesteads in the area have remained within the same families since the 1820s when the village was settled.

The town's most famous sight is Ross Bridge, built by convict labour and opened in 1836. It features 186 unique carvings by convict sculptor Daniel Herbert, who was given a Queen's Pardon for his intricate work. The town centres on its historic crossroads, the Four Corners of Ross: "Temptation, Damnation, Salvation and Recreation". These are represented respectively on each corner by the Man-O-Ross Hotel, the jail, the church and the town hall.

Lomond is the highest mountain in northern Tasmania and home to one of the state's two main ski slopes. The 16,000-ha (40,000-acre) national park surrounding the mountain covers an alpine plateau of barren and dramatic scenery, with views stretching over the northeast of the state. The vegetation includes alpine daisies and carnivorous sundew plants. The park is also home to wallabies, wombats and possums. From Conara Junction on the Heritage Hwy, take the Esk Main Road east before turning off towards Ben Lomond National Park.

The mountain's foothills have been devastated by decades of mining and forestry, and many of the townships, such as Rossarden and Avoca, have since suffered an economic decline. The road through the South Esk Valley along the Esk River loops back to the valley's main centre of Fingal. From here, you can continue through the small township of St Marys before joining the Tasman Hwy and travelling up the east coast.

IN COLONIAL DAYS, the coach ride between Tasmania's capital, Hobart, and the township of Launceston took a full day, but today the 200-km (125-mile) route is flat and direct. Nestling in the Tamar River Valley, Launceston was settled in 1804 and is Australia's third-oldest city. It has a charming ambience of old buildings, parks, gardens, riverside walks, craft galleries and hilly streets lined with weatherboard houses. The Queen Victoria Museum and Art Gallery has the country's largest provincial display of colonial art, along with an impressive modern collection. It also shows Aboriginal and convict relics, and has displays on minerals, flora and fauna of the region.

Penny Royal World in Paterson Street is a complex of historic windmills, corn mills and gunpowder mills, moved from their original locations stone by stone. The working replica of a 19th-century gunpowder mill has 14 barges that take visitors underground to observe the production process. All the mills are linked with museums, restaurants and accommodation via a restored tram.

Cataract Gorge Reserve is alive with birds, wallabies, pademelons, potoroos and bandicoots, only a 15-minute walk from the city centre. A chairlift, believed to have the longest central span in the world, provides a striking aerial overview.

ON THE NORTHEASTERN tip of Tasmania, in the waters of the Bass Strait, Flinders Island is the largest within the Furneaux Island Group. These 50 or so dots in the ocean are all that remains of the land bridge which once spanned the strait to the continental mainland (see pp18–19).

Flinders Island was also the destination for the last surviving 133 Tasmanian Aborigines. With the consent of the British administration, the Reverend George Augustus Robinson brought all 133 of them here in the 1830s. His aim was to “save” them from extinction by civilizing them according to European traditions and converting them to Christianity. In 1847, however, greatly diminished by disease and despair, the 47 survivors were transferred to Oyster Cove, a sacred Aboriginal site south of Hobart, and the plan was deemed a failure. Within a few years, all full-blooded Tasmanian Aborigines had died. Much of Flinders is now preserved as a natural reserve, including Strezelecki National Park, which is particularly popular with hikers. Off the island's south coast is Cape Barren Island, home to the Patriarch Sanctuary, a protected geese reserve.

Flinders Island is reached by air from Launceston and Melbourne. There is also a leisurely ferry trip aboard the Matthew Flinders from Launceston and the small coastal town of Bridport.

The town is also home to one of Tasmania's most famous historic homes open to the public. Built in 1819 on the bank of the South Esk River, the beautiful Entally House, with its gracious veranda, has its own chapel, stables, horse-drawn carriages and lavish 19th-century furnishings.

NAMED AFTER the county of Devon in England, the state's third-largest city is strategically sited as a river and sea port. It lies at the junction of the Mersey River and the Bass Strait, on the north coast. The dramatic rocky headland of Mersey Bluff is 1 km (0.6 miles) from the city centre, linked by a coastal reserve and parklands. Here Aboriginal rock paintings mark the entrance of Tiagarra, the Tasmanian Aboriginal art and culture centre, with its collection of more than 2,000 ancient artifacts.

FURTHER ALONG the northern coast from Devonport is Tasmania's fourth-largest city, founded in 1829. Along its main streets are many attractive 19th-century buildings decorated with wrought ironwork. Until recently, Burnie's prosperity centred on a thriving wood-pulping industry. One of the state's main enterprises, Associated Pulp and Paper Mills, established in 1938, was sited here. The city in recent times has shed its industrial character, although some industry survives, notably the Lactos company, which has won many awards for its French- and Swiss-style cheeses. The sampling room has tastings and a café. Burnie also has a number of gardens, including Fern Glade, where platypuses are often seen feeding at dusk and dawn. Situated on Emu Bay, the area's natural attractions include forest reserves, fossil cliffs, waterfalls and canyons and panoramic ocean views from nearby Round Hill.

Stanley's quiet main street runs towards the wharf, lined with fishermen's cottages and many bluestone buildings dating from the 1840s. Stanley also contains numerous top-quality bed-and-breakfasts and cafés serving fresh, local seafood (see p523).

Nearby, Highfield House was the original headquarters of the Van Diemen's Land

THE DISTINCTIVE jagged peaks of Cradle Mountain are now recognized as an international symbol of the state's natural environment. The second-highest mountain in Tasmania reaches 1,560 m (5,100 ft) at the northern end of the 161,000-ha (400,000-acre) this national park. The park then stretches 80 km (50 miles) south to the shores of Lake St Clair, the deepest freshwater lake in Australia.

In 1922, the area became a national park, founded by Austrian nature enthusiast Gustav Weindorfer. His memory lives on in his forest home Waldheim Chalet, now a heritage lodge in Weindorfer's Forest. Nearby at Ronny Creek is the registration point for the celebrated Overland Track, which traverses the park through scenery ranging from rainforest, alpine moors, buttongrass plains and waterfall valleys. Walking the track takes an average of five days, stopping overnight in tents or huts. At the halfway mark is Mount Ossa, the state's highest peak at 1,617 m (5,300 ft). In May, the park is ablaze with the autumn colours of Tasmania's deciduous beech Notofagus gunnii, commonly known as "Fagus" (see p442).

Boats sailing on the deceptively calm waters of Macquarie Harbour

Macquarie Harbour 19

📍 Strahan. 🏠 The Esplanade, Strahan (03) 6471 7622.

OFF THE WILD, western coast of Tasmania there is nothing but vast stretches of ocean until the southern tip of Argentina, on the other side of the globe. The region bears the full brunt of the “Roaring Forties” – the name given to the tremendous winds that whip southwesterly off the Southern Ocean.

In this hostile environment, Tasmania’s Aborigines survived for thousands of years before European convicts were sent here in the 1820s and took over the land. Their harsh and isolated settlement was a penal station on Sarah Island, situated in the middle of Macquarie Harbour.

The name of the harbour’s mouth, “Hell’s Gates”, reflects conditions endured by both seamen and convicts – shipwrecks, drownings, suicides and murders all occurred here. Abandoned in 1833 for the “model prison” of Port Arthur (see pp458–9), Sarah Island and its penal settlement ruins can be viewed on a guided boat tour available from the fishing port of Strahan.

Strahan grew up around an early timber industry supported by convict labour. It became well-known in the early 1980s when protesters from across Australia came to Strahan to fight government plans to flood the wild and beautiful Franklin River for a hydroelectric scheme. A fascinating exhibition at the visitor centre in Strahan charts the drama of Australia’s most famous environmental protest.

Strahan today is one of Tasmania’s loveliest towns, with its old timber buildings, scenic port and natural backdrop of fretted mountains and dense bushland. The town’s newest attraction is a restored 1896 railway, which travels 35 km (22 miles) across rivers and mountains to the old mining settlement at Queenstown.

Franklin-Gordon Wild Rivers National Park 11

📍 Strahan. 🏠 The Esplanade, Strahan (03) 6471 7622.

ONE OF AUSTRALIA’S great wild river systems flows through southwest Tasmania. This spectacular region consists of high ranges and deep gorges. The Franklin-Gordon Wild Rivers National Park extends southeast from Macquarie Harbour and is one of four national parks in the western part of Tasmania that make up the Tasmanian Wilderness World Heritage Area (see pp22–3). The park takes its name from the Franklin and Gordon rivers, both of which were saved by conservationists in 1983.

Within the park’s 442,000 ha (1,090,000 acres) are vast tracts of cool temperate rainforest, as well as waterfalls and dolerite- and quartzite-capped mountains. The flora within the park is as varied as the landscape, with impenetrable horizontal scrub, lichen-coated trees, pandani plants and the endemic conifers, King William, celery top and Huon pines. The easiest way into this largely trackless wilderness is via a boat cruise from Strahan. Visitors can disembark and take a short walk to see a 2,000-year-old Huon pine. The park also contains the rugged peak of

Imposing Frenchmans Cap looming over the Franklin-Gordon Wild Rivers National Park

Idyllic, deserted beach on the rugged Bruny Island

Frenchmans Cap, accessible to experienced bushwalkers. The Franklin River is also renowned for its rapids, which challenge whitewater rafters.

The Wild Way, linking Hobart with the west coast, runs through the park. Sections of the river and forest can be reached from the main road along short tracks. Longer walks into the heart of the park require a higher level of survival skills and equipment.

Russell Falls in Mount Field National Park

Mount Field National Park 21

I Lake Dobson Rd, at entrance to the Park, (03) 6288 1149.

LITTLE MORE THAN 70 km (45 miles) from Hobart along the Maydena Road, Mount Field National Park's proximity and beauty make it a popular location with nature-loving tourists. As a day trip from Hobart, it offers easy access to a diversity of Tasmanian vegetation and wildlife along well-maintained walking tracks.

The most popular walk is also the shortest: the 10-minute trail to Russell Falls starts out from just within the park's entrance through a temperate rainforest environment. Lake Dobson car park is 15 km (9.5 miles) from the park's entrance up a steep gravel path. This is the beginning of several other short walks and some more strenuous day walks.

The 10-km (6-mile) walk to Tarn Shelf is a bushwalker's paradise, especially in autumn, when the glacial lakes, mountains and valleys are spectacularly highlighted by the red-orange hues of the deciduous beech trees. Longer trails lead up to the higher peaks of Mount Field West and Mount Mawson, southern Tasmania's premier ski slope.

Truganini, the Bruny Island Aborigine

Bruny Island 22

Travel by car only – no public transport or taxis on Bruny Island. I Bruny D'Entrecasteaux Visitors' Centre, ferry terminal, Kettering (03) 6267 4494.

ON HOBART'S back doorstep, yet a world away in landscape and atmosphere, the Huon Valley and D'Entrecasteaux Channel can be enjoyed over several hours or days. In total, the trip south from Hobart, through the town of Huonville, the Hartz Mountains and Southport, the southernmost town in the country, is only 100 km (60 miles). On the other side of the channel are the orchards, craft outlets and vineyards around Cygnet.

The attractive marina of Kettering, just 40 minutes' drive from Hobart, is the departure point for a regular ferry service to Bruny Island.

The name Bruny Island actually applies to two islands joined by a narrow neck. The south island townships of Adventure Bay and Alonnah are only a half-hour drive from the ferry terminal in the north. Once home to a thriving colonial whaling industry, Bruny Island is now a haven for bird-watchers, boaters, swimmers and camel riders along its sheltered bays, beaches and lagoons.

Unfortunately, Bruny Island also has a sadder side to its history. Truganini, of the Wuenonne people of Bruny Island, is said to have been one of Tasmania's last full-blooded Aborigines. It was also from the aptly named Missionary Bay on the island that Reverend Robinson began his ill-fated campaign to round up the indigenous inhabitants of Tasmania for incarceration (see p453).

Port Arthur 23

Handcuffs from Port Arthur museum

PORT ARTHUR was established in 1830 as a timber station and a prison settlement for repeat offenders. While transportation to the island colony from the mainland ceased in 1853, the prison remained in operation until 1877, by which time some 12,000 men had passed through what was commonly regarded as the harshest institution of its kind in the British Empire. Punishments included incarceration in the Model Prison, a separate building from the main penitentiary, where inmates were subjected to sensory deprivation and extreme isolation in the belief that such methods promoted “moral reform”. Between 1979 and 1986, a conservation project was undertaken to restore the prison ruins. The 40-ha (100-acre) site is now Tasmania’s most popular tourist attraction.

Commandant's House

One of the first houses at Port Arthur, this cottage has now been restored and furnished in early 19th-century style.

The Semaphore was a series of flat, mounted planks that could be arranged in different configurations, in order to send messages to Hobart and across the peninsula.

The Guard Tower was constructed in 1835 in order to prevent escapes from the prison and pilfering from the Commissariat Store, which the tower overlooked.

★ Penitentiary

This building was thought to be the largest in Australia at the time of its construction in 1844. Originally a flour mill, it was converted into a penitentiary in the 1850s and housed almost 500 prisoners in dormitories and cells.

Asylum

By 1872, Port Arthur’s asylum housed more than 100 mentally ill or senile convicts. When the settlement closed, it became the town hall, but now serves as a museum and café.

The Separate Prison was influenced by Pentonville Prison in London. Completed in 1849, the prison was thought to provide “humane” punishment. Convicts lived in 50 separate cells in silence and anonymity, referred to by number not by name.

Trentham Cottage was owned by the Trentham family who lived in Port Arthur after the site closed. The refurbished interior is decorated with early 19th-century furnishings.

Government Cottage was built in 1853 and was used by visiting dignitaries and government officials.

WHERE TO STAY

THE WIDE RANGE of places to stay in Australia is a reflection of the country's size, diversity and emergence as a major tourist destination. There are tropical island resorts, luxury and "boutique" city hotels, ski lodges, converted shearers' quarters on vast sheep stations, colonial cottage bed-and-breakfasts, self-catering apartments, youth hostels, houseboats and, of course, all the usual international chain hotels. Whether you simply want a bed for the night or an all-inclusive holiday resort, the appropriate accommodation can always be found. The listings on pages 466–91 give full descriptions of places to stay to suit all budgets throughout the country.

Sydney hotel doorman

GRADINGS AND FACILITIES

AUSTRALIA HAS no formal national grading system. Terms such as four- and five-star are often used, but have no official imprimatur. State motoring organizations and some state and regional tourism bodies do, however, produce their own rankings and they are a useful indicator of standards and facilities.

In hotels and motels, air-conditioning in summer and heating in winter are almost always provided. Other standard features generally include coffee- and tea-making facilities, televisions, radios and refrigerators. En suite bathrooms are the norm, but specify if you want a bathtub: shower cubicles are more common. For double rooms, you will need to stipulate whether you require a double bed or twin beds. Luxury accommodation often features on-site swimming pools, exercise facilities and a hotel bar or restaurant.

PRICES

PRICES FOR accommodation vary according to location and the facilities on offer. At the top end of the scale, the presidential, or similar, suite in a luxury hotel may have a four-figure daily rate, while a bed in a backpacker hotel will generally cost less than A$20. Budget motels and the majority of bed-and-breakfasts operate within the A$50–A$100 range. Prices may be increased slightly during peak seasons, but equally many hotels offer discount rates during the low season.

BOOKINGS

PRESSURE ON room availability is increasing, especially in the capital cities and the Queensland coastal destinations. This becomes particularly acute during any major cultural and sporting events (see pp36–9). It is therefore advisable to book as far in advance as possible and also to specify if any special needs or requests are required.

State tourist offices can help with or make bookings. Major airlines serving Australia also often have discounted packages on offer to cater to all price ranges (see pp542–5).

CHILDREN

TRAVELLING WITH children is relatively easy throughout Australia. Almost all accommodation will provide a small bed or cot in family rooms, often at no extra charge – enquire about any special rates in advance. Many major hotels also offer baby-sitting services, while smaller establishments will be happy to check on a sleeping child while the parents are dining.

Hyatt Hotel near the Parliamentary Triangle in Canberra (see p472)

However, some of the country house hotels are strictly child-free zones.

Conrad Treasury luxury hotel in Brisbane (see p473)

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

Australian building codes now stipulate that any new buildings or renovations must provide facilities for the disabled. It is always advisable, however, to check on the facilities in advance.

LUXURY HOTELS AND RESORTS

The capital cities of each state are well endowed with luxury hotels. Well-known, international names such as Hyatt, Hilton, Regent, Sheraton and Inter-

Continental stand side by side with such local institutions as The Windsor in Melbourne (see p485).

Major tourist destinations abound with both luxury and budget beach resorts.

CHAIN HOTELS

There are various chain hotels and motels throughout Australia, which offer reliable and comfortable, if occasionally bland and indistinctive, accommodation.

They vary in style and price, from the luxury Parkroyal group to cheaper but also reliable and well-known chains such as Choice Hotels, and motels such as Metro Inns, Best Western, Country Comfort and Travelodge.

These hotels are popular with business travellers and often have facilities such as fax and internet connection available.

COUNTRY HOUSE HOTELS

Country house hotels, ranging from elegant mansions to simple bed-and-breakfast cottages, now exist throughout Australia. These offer personalized accommodation and an insight into the Australian way of life, in contrast to chain hotels. Many of these hotels have only one or two rooms so that stays are extremely peaceful, with many of the comforts of home.

Among the best country houses are those found in the wine regions (see pp32–3), around the old gold fields (see pp50–51) and in Tasmania (see pp440–59). The Australian Tourist Commission and state tourist offices will be able to supply full, up-to-date listings of bed-and-breakfast accommodation available in each area of the country.

Stained glass at Simpsons in Sydney (see p467)

Indoor pool at the Observatory Hotel in Sydney (see p468)

"The Grand" ballroom in the Windsor Hotel, Melbourne (see p485)

BOUTIQUE HOTELS

MANY OF THE "boutique" hotels in Australia offer high-quality accommodation, often with luxury facilities, within an intimate atmosphere and few rooms.

Most boutique hotels do not advertise in glossy brochures, but operate through recommendations. However, tourist offices can provide information and many can be found on the internet. Some of the best are also listed on the following pages.

Australian bed and breakfasts (B&Bs), many in heritage-listed premises, also tend to be of a high standard. They range from farmstays to glamorous country house hotels.

BACKPACKER HOTELS AND YOUTH HOSTELS

ONE OF THE fastest growing areas of Australia's accommodation industry is hotels for the increasing number of young backpackers.

Despite their budget prices and basic facilities, the majority are clean and comfortable, although standards can vary widely in different areas.

The internationally renowned Youth Hostel Association also has its own chain of hostels across the country, in all the major cities, ski resorts and many of the national parks. These offer clean and comfortable accommodation, particularly for those travellers on a tight budget.

Backpackers' resort sign

While it is necessary to book in advance at some hostels, others do not take bookings and beds are on a first come, first served basis. Apartments, rooms and dormitories are all available, but dormitories may be mixed sex, so check, if necessary, before arriving.

The backpacker scene changes quickly, so it is often worth asking other travellers for the latest developments and for their recommendations, as well as gathering up-to-date information from the state tourist offices.

It is also worth remembering that, despite its name, the Youth Hostel Association also caters for senior citizens.

PUB ACCOMMODATION

AUSTRALIAN PUBS are generally also referred to as hotels because historically they accommodated travellers. Many pubs still offer bed-and-breakfast accommodation. The quality can vary, but they are usually good value for money.

SELF-CATERING APARTMENTS

SELF-CATERING apartments are the latest accommodation trend in Australia. Full kitchen and laundry facilities are usually provided. Within cities, some apartments also cater for business travellers, complete with fax and other communications amenities.

Ornate Victorian Lenna of Hobart Hotel in Tasmania's capital (see p491)

Classic Australian pub accommodation at the Bellbird Hotel in the Hunter Valley (see p469)

Prices can vary, but they are generally on a par with the major chain motels.

FARM STAYS AND HOUSEBOATS

MANY LARGE sheep and cattle stations have now opened their doors to the public, and welcome visitors for farm stays. These offer a unique insight into rural Australian life. Many are situated near major cities, while others are located in the vast Outback (see pp24–5). Accommodation may be in traditional shearers' or cattle herders' quarters, or within the homestead itself. A stay usually includes the opportunity to become involved in the daily working life of the station. State tourist offices will supply all necessary details.

Another interesting and very relaxing holiday can be had on a houseboat along the vast Murray River which crosses from New South Wales and Victoria to South Australia. An international driving licence is the only requirement to be your own riverboat captain.

CAMPING AND CARAVAN PARKS

CAMP SITES for both tents and caravans are found throughout the country, with the majority dotted along the vast coastline and in the many inland national parks. This form of accommodation offers a cheap and idyllic way of enjoying the natural beauty and wildlife of Australia.

Many camp sites allow "walk in" camping without the need for booking, provided space is available. However, some areas may require a camping permit, so it is always advisable to check with state or local tourist offices in advance.

The majority of caravan parks have on-site vans for rent at relatively low prices. Facilities usually include adequate laundry and shower blocks and often a small general store for basic food and drink supplies.

WHERE TO EAT

AUSTRALIA HAS DEVELOPED its own culinary identity in the past 20 years or so and modern Australian food, often with a Mediterranean or Asian twist, is now widely available. Reflecting the country's multicultural population, there is also a wealth of ethnic restaurants. Every cuisine, from Algerian to Zambian, is on a menu somewhere in Australia, particularly in the major cities. Australian restaurants

Fresh seafood,
Chinese style

make good use of the variety of homegrown produce, especially seafood and beef. No Australian meal is complete without a glass of one of the many local wines or beers (see pp496-7). For a cheaper eating-out option, try one of the many BYO (Bring Your Own) unlicensed restaurants, where customers take their own wine, but may be charged a minimal corkage fee.

TYPES OF RESTAURANTS

ALL MAJOR Australian cities offer a wide choice of restaurants. Formal dining establishments, bistros, stylish cafés and pubs are all readily available to suit any budget. Food on offer ranges from haute cuisine to informal snacks. Outside the main cities, some of the best restaurants can be found in the many wine regions and often in the wineries themselves (see pp32-3).

Prices, however, vary widely. They tend to be highest in Sydney, Melbourne and other major tourist resorts, although prices are usually lower than in comparable places in Europe and the United States. As a general guideline, the bill at a showcase Melbourne or Sydney restaurant featuring a celebrity chef will be at least A$150 per head, including a shared bottle of wine. At a Bring Your Own (BYO) or an unpretentious Asian or Italian restaurant it may only be A$30-40 per head. A counter meal at a pub, café or at a snack bar should generally cost around A$15-20 per head, if you include the cost of a drink.

A welcome new trend in Australia is the increasing emphasis on courtyard, garden, boulevard and other outdoor eating facilities, making the most of the country's benevolent climate.

EATING HOURS AND RESERVATIONS

MOST RESTAURANTS serve lunch between 12:30pm and 3pm; dinner is served from 6:30 to 10:30pm. Many establishments, however, particularly the big city bistros and cafés, have become more flexible, opening for breakfast and closing late. Most budget and ethnic restaurants often close a little earlier, at around 9:30pm, depending on the demand. Most establishments are also open seven days a week, 365 days a year. However, it is advisable to check in advance with individual restaurants, particularly those outside the capital cities. To avoid disappointment, advance telephone bookings are generally recommended.

PAYING AND TIPPING

MAJOR CREDIT CARDS are accepted in the majority of Australian restaurants, although it is a good idea to confirm this in advance or on arrival. A General Service Tax (GST) is added to restaurant bills in Australia, but tipping is not compulsory. In recognition of outstanding service or a particularly fine meal, a small gratuity is always appreciated. How much to leave is the prerogative of the customer, but 10 per cent of the total bill would generally be regarded as generous. This can be left either as a cash tip on the table when you are ready to leave or by adding it to the total if paying your bill by cheque or credit card.

Ravesi's, one of the many eateries at Bondi Beach, Sydney

CHILDREN

FEW RESTAURATEURS will refuse admission to children as long as they are well behaved. Many restaurants also provide high chairs and a children's menu. The best budget options for families are hamburger chains or Italian or Asian eateries.

WHEELCHAIR ACCESS

SPURRED BY legislation in the various states, most restaurants now provide special wheelchair access and toilet facilities for the disabled.

However, it is still advisable to check in advance on the facilities available.

VEGETARIANS

IT IS RARE for a restaurant not to feature at least one dish for vegetarians, and a variety of choices is the norm, particularly in regions where there is an abundance of homegrown produce. There are also specialist vegetarian restaurants and cafés in the major cities. Check the vegetarian specialities column on pages 498–523, or if you have special dietary requirements, call the restaurant in advance.

ALCOHOL AND OTHER DRINKS

IF A RESTAURANT is described as licensed, it refers to its licence to sell alcohol. Australian wine lists are outstanding and generally highlight the wines of the particular state or district (see pp32–3). Wine is sold by the bottle, carafe or glass. There is usually a good choice of beers, ales, ciders and spirits as well.

BYO restaurants, which are not licensed to sell alcohol, are extremely popular in Australia and offer diners the opportunity to bring the wines they wish to drink with their meal, although beer is not usually permitted. For non-alcohol drinkers, tap water is entirely safe, but many people prefer to drink bottled still or sparkling water. Fresh fruit juices are also very popular (see pp496–7).

DRESS

DRESS CODES are virtually non-existent in Australian restaurants, although a handful of the more up-market establishments may ask men to wear a tie in the evenings. Most establishments, however, including beachside cafés, frown on scant beachwear and flip flops or sandals.

For most situations, the phrase “smart casual” sums up the Australian approach to eating out.

SMOKING

SMOKING is now banned inside restaurants and cafés, although smoking is permitted at outside tables. Fines may be levied if these regulations are disregarded. Smoking restrictions, however, are rarely applied in traditional pubs.

What to Eat in Australia

Steak pie with tomato sauce

AUSTRALIA BEGAN TO DEVELOP its own cuisine in the 1970s. Creative chefs use local ingredients, blended with the flavours of Europe, Asia and the Middle East, to make dishes with a truly Australian identity. Each area of Australia produces its own speciality: you can sample rock oysters, honey and lamb from New South Wales, olive oil from South Australia, salmon from Tasmania, dairy produce from Victoria, exotic fruit from Queensland and cheese from Western Australia. And, of course, Australians still love their traditional barbecues!

Eucalypt Honey

Imported bees seem to love the eucalypts. Leatherwood, light in colour, has the strongest flavour.

Potato Wedges

Coated with a spicy seasoning then fried in a two-step process, these chunky variations on the humble chip are usually served with sour cream and chilli sauce.

Yum Cha

Literally "drinking tea", this Chinese feast includes dim sum, or steamed dumplings stuffed with meat, fish or vegetables.

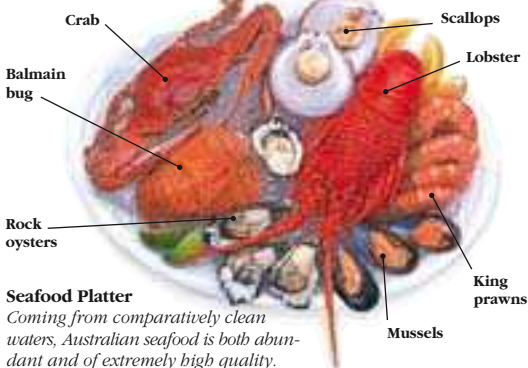

Focaccia

This Italian-style sandwich has gourmet antipasto, salad and meat slices between toasted slabs of crusty flat bread.

Lebanese Mezes

Expect an array of appetizers including pulse and vegetable dips, marinated and grilled vegetables and filled pastries.

Seafood Platter

Coming from comparatively clean waters, Australian seafood is both abundant and of extremely high quality.

Mixed Leaf Salad

Garden-fresh salad features on most menus. It is served here with feta cheese and grilled vegetables.

Char-grilled Kangaroo Fillet

A relatively recent addition to butchers' shelves, low-fat kangaroo fillet is usually served rare.

Thai Green Curry

Chicken is the favourite variety, but a tasty vegetarian version is also commonly served.

Seared Beef Fillet

Australian beef, here wrapped in paperbark, is usually served with the season's vegetables.

Barbecue

Meat, poultry and fresh seafood such as baby octopus are char-grilled on a barbecue and usually accompanied by bread and green salad.

Freshwater Crayfish

Also known as "yabbies", this main dish is usually served simply on a bed of greens with a dipping sauce such as aioli.

Blue-eyed Cod

Although known as cod, it is in fact trevalla, a deep sea fish of meaty texture and mild flavour. It is often served in thick steaks.

Lamb Loin Fillet

Thick slices of tender seared lamb served on a salad of rocket and fresh snow peas are ideal summer eating.

Baked Ricotta Cake

Indigenous Australian ingredients such as rosella buds may appear in a range of desserts.

Pavlova

This meringue dessert is topped with fresh cream and summer fruit such as passion fruit.

Mixed Berry Ice Cream

Home-made ice creams, such as raspberry or honey, are often served with seasonal fruit.

What to Drink in Australia

Semillon Chardonnay

AUSTRALIA HAS ONE OF the world's finest cuisines and part of its enjoyment is the marriage of the country's wine with great food. Australians have a very relaxed attitude to food and wine mixes, so red wine with fish and a cold, dry Riesling as an aperitif can easily be the order of the day. Also, many of the restaurants in the wine regions offer exclusive brands, or offer rare wines so these are worth seeking out. Australians also enjoy some of the best good-value wine in the world (see pp32–3). It is estimated that there are 10,000 different Australian wines on the market at any one time. Australians do love their beer, and it remains a popular drink, with a wide range of choices available. While the health-conscious can choose from a variety of bottled waters and select-your-own, freshly-squeezed fruit juices. Imported wines, beers and spirits are also readily available.

SPARKLING WINE

Domaine Chandon in the Yarra Valley (see p433) in Eastern Victoria

AUSTRALIA IS JUSTLY FAMOUS for its sparkling wines, from Yalumba's Angus Brut to Seppelts Salinger. Most recently, Tasmania has showed considerable promise in producing some high quality sparkling wines, particularly Pirie from Pipers Brook. However, the real hidden gems are the sparkling red wines – the best are made using the French Méthode Champenois, matured over a number of years and helped by a small drop of vintage port. The best producers of red sparkling wines are Rockford and Seppelts. These sparkling wines are available throughout the country from "bottle shops".

Angus Brut premium

WHITE WINE

Rhine Riesling

Botrytis Semillon

THE REVOLUTION IN WINE MAKING in the 1970s firmly established dry wines made from international grape varieties on the Australian table. Chardonnay, Sauvignon Blanc, and more recently Viognier and Pinot Gris are all popular. However, in recent years there has also been a renaissance and growing appreciation for Riesling, Marsanne and Semillon, which age very gracefully. Australia's other great wines are their fortified and desert wines. Australian winemakers use botrytis cinera, or noble rot, to make luscious dessert wines such as Muscats and Tokays.

RED WINE

AUSTRALIA'S BENCHMARK red is Grange Hermitage, the creation of the late vintner Max Schubert in the 1950s and 1960s. Due to his work, Shiraz has established itself as Australia's premium red variety. However, there is also plenty of diversity with the acknowledged quality of Cabernet Sauvignon produced in the Coonawarra. Recently, there has also been a re-appraisal of traditional "old vine" Grenache and Mourvedre varieties in the Barossa Valley and McLaren Vale.

BEER

MOST AUSTRALIAN BEER is vat fermented real ale or lager, both consumed chilled. Full-strength beer has an alcohol content of around 4.8 per cent, mid-strength beers have around 3.5 per cent, while "light" beers have less than 3 per cent. Traditionally heat sterilized, cold filtration is now becoming increasingly popular. Among the hundreds of fine lagers and stouts are James Boag and Cascade from Tasmania, Castlemaine XXXX from Queensland, Fosters and Melbourne Bitter from Victoria, Toohey's red and blue labels from New South Wales and Cooper's Sparkling Ale from South Australia. Aficionados of real ale should seek out a pub brewery. Beer is ordered by glass size: a schooner is a 426 ml (15 fl oz) glass and a middy is 284 ml (10 fl oz).

SPIRITS

AUSTRALIAN DISTILLERS produce fine dark and white rums from Queensland's sugar cane plantations (see p238). The more notable labels include Bundaberg, from the town of that name, and Beenleigh. Australia's grape vintage is also the basis of good-value domestic brandies. Popular labels are St Agnes and Hardy's.

OTHER DRINKS

WITH A CLIMATE ranging from tropical to alpine, Australia has year-round fresh fruit for juicing. Its apples are also used to make cider. Scores of still and sparkling mineral and other bottled waters now supply an annual market of nearly 200 million litres. Hepburn Spa, Deep Spring and Mount Franklin have national distribution. Coffee, prepared in a wide variety of ways, is another popular drink with Australians.

SHOPPING IN AUSTRALIA

AUSTRALIA HAS MUCH TO offer the visiting shopper beyond the standard tourist fare of koala bear purses and plastic boomerangs. The tourist shops can be worth exploring, some stock being of a high standard and including goods not available in other countries. In each state capital, especially Sydney (see pp128–31) and Melbourne (see pp398–9), there are precincts and open-air markets with a range of shops, stalls and cafés to explore. Wine and gourmet food products are a major attraction, and a wide range of reasonably priced world-class goods is available. Australian contemporary design has a refreshing irreverence for convention – look out for homewares and fashion in the inner-city precincts. In country areas, unusual items made by local craftspeople make good buys. Australia recently introduced a goods and services tax (GST), adding 10 per cent to the cost of most items.

SHOPPING HOURS

STANDARD WEEKDAY opening times are 9am–5:30pm, Monday to Friday. Late night shopping is usually available on Thursdays or Fridays, when stores stay open until 9pm. Weekend hours vary greatly. Deregulation has meant that many stores, particularly in city locations, open on both Saturday and Sunday. In most country areas, however, stores will open only until 1pm on Saturday. Many supermarkets in city and suburban areas now operate 24 hours. Bookshops and other specialist shops stay open late – until around 10pm – in downtown areas.

HOW TO PAY

MAJOR CREDIT cards are accepted by most stores, generally with a minimum purchase limit. Identification, such as a valid passport or driver's licence, is required when using traveller's cheques. Personal cheques are also accepted at the majority of larger stores, with identification, but a telephone check on your account may be made. Payment by cash is the preferred method for traders and can be used to negotiate a lower price for your goods in some instances.

RIGHTS AND REFUNDS

THE LAWS on consumer rights in Australia vary slightly from state to state. If you have a complaint or query, look under "Consumer" in the government section at the front of the White Pages telephone directory. If the goods purchased are defective in any way, customers are entitled to a full refund. If you decide you don't like an item, try to get a refund, but you will probably have to settle for a credit note or exchange. As a general rule, the larger the store, the more protected you are – you can always ask to speak to a manager or customer relations officer if you are unhappy with the service you receive.

ESSENTIALLY AUSTRALIAN

ABORIGINAL ART is available for purchase from community-owned or managed galleries in the Northern Territory and good specialist galleries in the cities. Take the time to discuss the work with the painter or gallery staff: spiritual and cultural meanings are inextricably linked with aesthetic properties, and the painting or artifact that you choose will be all the more valuable with a little knowledge. These artworks are by their nature expensive, so do not be beguiled by cheaper imitations.

Australia produces 95 per cent of the world's opals. Their quality varies greatly, so when considering a purchase a little research will go a long way. Opals are widely available at duty-free stores. Many other places will deduct the luxury excise tax from the price if you produce your passport.

Outback clothing is a specialist industry in Australia. Most items available are very durable and some have considerable fashion value. Look for Akubra hats, boots by RM Williams and Driza-bone overcoats in camping and army stores; they will be cheaper here than in the stores which specifically aim for the tourist market.

MARKETS

MOST AUSTRALIAN cities have a large central produce market and a range of small community markets that operate at the weekend. The bustling city food markets are as sensational for their vibrant multicultural atmosphere as they are for the extraordinary range of fresh, cheap produce available. Look out for local specialities such as cheeses, olives and unusual fruits. Melbourne's Queen Victoria Market (see p378) and the Adelaide Central Market (see p338) are particularly good and well worth visiting. Community markets, such as those in Paddington, Sydney (see p121), and Salamanca Place, Hobart (see p448), offer an interesting and eclectic range of locally designed clothing and crafts. In a class of their own, the Mindil Beach Sunset Markets in Darwin combine eating, shopping and entertainment in a spectacular tropical setting (see p264).

DEPARTMENT STORES

DEPARTMENT stores occupy the up-market end of the chain-store scale and sell quality merchandise. They include names such as Myer, David Jones and Grace Brothers (see p398) and some of the top stores are sumptuously decorated. Local and overseas designer fashions, top-brand cosmetics and all manner of household goods and furnishings can be purchased. These stores are competitive and will often match prices on identical items found at more down-market stores. Their shopper facilities and standards for customer service are excellent.

SHOPPING PRECINCTS

BECAUSE THE city centres have been colonized by the retail giants in Australia, many small and interesting shops have moved out to the lively precincts that lie somewhere between the city centre and suburbia. These precincts represent some of the best and most interesting shopping in the country. Young designer outlets, specialist book stores, craft studios and galleries sit next to food stores, cafés, restaurants and bars. Some of these precincts are decidedly up-market, while others relish their bohemian roots. There is nearly always a strong mix of cultural influences – Jewish, Italian, Lebanese, Vietnamese, for example – depending on the area and the city. Ask at tourist information centres for the best precincts in each city.

OUT OF TOWN

SHOPPING IN Australian country areas can be a mixed experience. In some areas the range of standard items is limited and prices can be much higher than you would expect to pay in the city. However, there are always unexpected surprises such as dusty second-hand shops with rare knick-knacks at absurdly low prices and small craft outlets and galleries with unusual items that make great gifts.

SPECIALIST HOLIDAYS AND OUTDOOR ACTIVITIES

TO MAKE THE MOST of a trip to a country as vast and geographically diverse as Australia, a specialist holiday is an excellent idea. Whether you're pursuing an interest, acquiring a new skill or learning about the environment, such holidays can be very rewarding experiences. There is a wide range of specialist operators to choose from. If travelling to Australia from abroad, the best starting points are the local Australian Tourism Commission offices or your local travel agent. Once in the country, the state tourism associations (see pp535) can offer expert advice, make bookings with reputable companies and contact local activity associations for information.

Sign for glass-bottom boat tour in Western Australia

Bushwalking in Namadgi National Park in the ACT (see p199)

BUSHWALKING

NATIONAL PARKS are without doubt the best places for bushwalking in Australia. Not only do they preserve the best of the country's natural heritage, but they also offer expert advice and well-marked trails for bushwalkers. These parks are state-managed and each state has a central information service. Look under "National Parks" in the government listings at the front of the telephone directory.

Equipment, including backpacks, boots and tents, is available for hire from camping stores in city and country areas. Joining up with a tour is a good alternative for those planning long bushwalking trips, as tour members will benefit from a guide's expertise on local flora and fauna, and access to remote wilderness areas. Exceptional bushwalking regions in Australia include Cradle Mountain in Tasmania

(see p455), the MacDonnell Ranges in the Northern Territory (see p276) and the Blue Mountains in New South Wales (see pp162-5).

CYCLING

WITH ITS VAST stretches of near-empty roads, many of them without a hill in sight, it is no wonder that Australia is becoming increasingly popular as a long-distance cycling destination. Visitors can bring their own bicycles, but are advised to check first whether this is acceptable with the airlines. Trains and buses will usually carry bikes provided they are dismantled. To hire a bike in Australia, look under "Bicycles" in the Yellow Pages. Bike helmets are a legal requirement throughout Australia and can be bought cheaply or hired.

Many cyclists spend several days on the road camping along the way, while others will arrange an itinerary that allows them to stop for the comfort of a bed and meal in a town. The wine-growing areas of South Australia (see pp330-31), the Great Ocean Road in Victoria (see pp418-19) and almost anywhere in Tasmania (see pp444-59) are terrific cycling destinations.

Bicycling associations in Australia also arrange regular cycling tours that anyone can join. These include accommodation, food and vehicle back-up; most of the organizations are non-profit-making, so the costs are generally low. Contact Bicycle New South Wales for a catalogue specializing in Australian cycling publications. They will also provide information on their sister associations in other states.

Cycling around Canberra's lake (see pp186-7)

ADVENTURE SPORTS

APPROPRIATE TRAINING is a component of adventure sports in Australia, so novices are always welcome alongside more expert adventurers. Contact specialist tour operators or national associations (see p529) for information about anything from a one-day class to a two-week tour.

Abseiling, canyoning, rock climbing and caving are all popular in Australia, which has some fantastic natural landscapes ideally suited to these pursuits. The Blue Mountains are something of a mecca for enthusiasts of all the above. Naracoorte in South Australia (see p347) is a great location for caving, while the Grampians National Park in Victoria (see p417) attracts a large share of abseilers and climbers.

Climbing on Wilsons Promontory in Victoria (see p434)

GOLF

THERE ARE 1,450 golf courses in Australia and 1,580 golf clubs. Many clubs have affiliations with clubs overseas and offer reciprocal membership rights, so members should check with their own club. There are also public municipal golf courses in many towns.

Australian courses are of a high standard, and Melbourne is home to two of the top 30 courses in the world, the Royal Melbourne and Kingston Heath. A round of golf will cost anything from A$20–$250. The Australian Golf Union has a handbook that lists all of the golf courses in Australia.

Camel trekking along Cable Beach, Broome (see p322)

ABORIGINAL HERITAGE TOURS

ABORIGINAL HERITAGE TOURS can range from a visit to an Aboriginal art gallery to days spent with an Aboriginal guide touring Arnhem Land or Kakadu National Park in the Northern Territory (see pp268–9). With the highest percentage of Aboriginal land and people in the country, the Northern Territory has the greatest number of activities, but there are sights and operators all over Australia. The focus of activities varies and may encompass a number of themes, including traditional bush food, hunting, rock art and Aboriginal culture.

Perhaps the best aspect of many of these tours is the chance to see the remarkable Australian landscape from a different perspective; Aboriginal spirituality is closely linked with the land. In addition, some tours will journey to Australia's most remote areas and travel through Aboriginal lands that are usually closed to all but members of the local Aboriginal communities.

CAMEL TREKKING

CAMELS HAVE been an invaluable form of transport in Australia's Outback since Afghan-run camel trains were used to carry goods across the Australian desert from the 1840s until the coming of the railway. Joining a camel trek today is still an adventure, and activities range from a one-hour jaunt to a two-week trek. Food and accommodation (usually camping) are provided by tour operators. Alice Springs (see pp274–5) is the most popular starting point, but tours are available country-wide.

AERIAL TOURS

AERIAL TOURS can provide an exhilarating overview of an area and are a good option for time-restricted travellers who want to see some of the more far-flung attractions. Aerial safaris, stopping at major sights, are popular in the Outback. For charter flights to Australia's furthest flung territory, Antarctica, contact Croydon Travel.

FISHING

AUSTRALIA has around four million fishing enthusiasts and, given the country's natural advantages, it's not difficult to see why. Vast oceans, a 12,000-km (7,500-mile) shoreline and a large inland river system, all combined with a terrific climate, make Australia a haven for local and visiting anglers alike.

Fishing for barramundi in the remote inland waters of the Northern Territory and game fishing off Australia's tropical coastline for species such as black marlin and yellowfin tuna are among the world's best fishing experiences. You will need to join a charter as these activities require a great deal of local expertise. Most operators will provide equipment.

The inland waters of Tasmania are famed for their excellent trout fishing prospects. The estuaries and beaches in the southern states, such as the Fleurieu Peninsula in South Australia (see pp342-3), are full of species such as bream, salmon and flathead.

Small boats are readily available for hire and fishing tackle can be purchased and occasionally hired at most of the popular fishing destinations around the country. Each state has a government department with a special fisheries section. Staff provide excellent information on locations, restrictions and safety issues. Check the weather forecast and heed warnings about dangerous spots, particularly rock platforms.

ECOTOURISM

THIS RELATIVELY new tourism concept has its roots in activities as old as bird watching and wildflower identification. It incorporates many of the activities mentioned in this section, but is generally distinguished by its emphasis on issues concerning the appreciation and conservation of the natural heritage. Given Australia's enormous natural bounty, it is hardly surprising that the market is now flooded with operators offering an astonishing range of nature-based activities. These encompass wildlife watching (including whales, birds and dolphins), nature walks, and trekking and rafting expeditions to remote wilderness areas. Visitors can also stay at resorts which are operated along strictly "green" guidelines. These are eco-friendly and are usually located within some of the most environmentally valuable regions in the country. The Ecotourism Association of Australia can provide information on tour operators and publications.

Canoeing on the Roper River in the Northern Territory (see pp260-61)

Mural advertising the services of a boat charter company

WATER SPORTS

AUSTRALIA IS ONE of the world's great diving destinations, and the Great Barrier Reef is the centre of most of the diving activity (see pp204-209). Visitors can combine a holiday on the reef with a few days of diving instruction from one of the many excellent schools in the area. There are opportunities for diving all around Australia, however, and other popular locations include Rott-nest Island (see pp300-301) and Esperance (see p311) in Western Australia and the beautiful World Heritage Area of Lord Howe Island off the coast of New South Wales.

Canoeing in Australia can mean a quiet paddle in a hire-boat on a city lake, or an exciting adventure in a kayak on the high seas. It is a reasonably priced sport and is widely available throughout the country. Popular spots include the Murray River (see p347), Sydney Harbour (see pp136-7) and the rivers of national parks nationwide.

Whitewater rafting is another favourite sport in this land of outdoor enthusiasts and there are many opportunities for people of all abilities to have a go. The inexperienced can try a day with an instructor on an easy run; the confident can tackle a two-week tour on the rafter's mecca, the Franklin-Gordon River system in Tasmania (see p456).

Sailing in Gippsland Lakes Coastal Park, Eastern Victoria (see p434)

Long stretches of unspoilt coastline, remote bays and harbours, tropical reefs and uninhabited islands make Australia an excellent destination for sailing enthusiasts. Skippered cruises are the most usual kind of holiday, but some visitors will want to hire a vessel and set off for themselves – a practice known as bareboating. To do this you will need to prove to the operator that you are an experienced sailor. It is difficult to beat the tropical splendours of the Whitsunday Islands in Queensland (see pp208) as a location. Other popular sailing areas include Pittwater in New South Wales and Queensland's Gold Coast (see pp230–31).

Australia is also world-renowned for its abundance of outstanding surfing beaches. For more information about the country's best places to surf, see pages 34–5.

SKIING

THE SKI SEASON in Australia extends from June to September. Downhill skiing is restricted to the Victoria Alps (see pp436), the New South Wales mountains and two small resorts in Tasmania (see pp457). The ski villages have excellent facilities, but the fields can get crowded during school holidays and long weekends, and prices for ski-lifts and equipment hire can be high.

Upland areas around these resorts are superb for cross-country skiing. Traversing gentle slopes and rounded peaks, skiers will be treated to glimpses of Australia's rare alpine flora and fauna, and spectacular sweeping scenery.

Skiing Eagle Ridge on Mount Hotham in the Victoria Alps

SPECTATOR SPORTS

MOST SPORTS ENTHUSIASTS will enjoy taking in a fixture during their trip, while a few visitors come to Australia especially for a sporting event, such as yacht races, cricket or tennis events. Early booking is advisable as competition for tickets can be fierce. Regular highlights include the Australian Tennis Open, Melbourne Cup and the Grand Prix, all Melbourne events, and international Test cricket and the Australian Open golf that moves from state to state each year (see pp36–9). Rugby League and Australian Rules football are the most popular spectator sports. The finals are the main event, but excitement is high at almost any match.

SURVIVAL GUIDE

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 532-541
TRAVEL INFORMATION 542-551

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

AUSTRALIA HAS surged ahead as a major tourist destination in recent years, and the facilities for travellers have kept pace with this rapid development. Visitors should encounter few problems in this safe and friendly destination. Accommodation and restaurants (see pp462–523) are of international standard, public transport is readily available (see pp544–51) and tourist information centres are everywhere. The following pages contain useful information for all visitors. Personal Security and Health (see pp536–7) details a number of recommended precautions, while Banking and Currency (see pp538–9) answers all the essential financial queries. There is also a section detailing the Australian telephone and postal systems (see pp540–41).

WHEN TO GO

THE NORTHERN HALF of the country lies in a tropical zone and is subject to “wet” and “dry” seasons (see pp40–41). The dry season falls between May and October, and is regarded as the best time to visit this area. During the wet season, conditions are hot and humid, and many areas are inaccessible because of flooding. For those with an interest in wildlife, however, there are areas such as Kakadu National Park (see pp268–9) which are particularly spectacular at this time of year.

The southern half of the continent is temperate and the seasons are the exact opposite to those in Europe and North America. Victoria and Tasmania can be a little cloudy and wet in winter, but they are very colourful and quite balmy in autumn. The vast southern coastline is a popular touring destination during the summer months – the climate is warm, with a gentle breeze. Avoid the Outback areas during the summer, however, as the temperatures can be extreme. The popular ski season in the Victoria Alps takes place between June and September (see p436). In the states of South Australia and Western Australia, there are spectacular wildflower displays between September and December.

International tourist information sign general stores, galleries or petrol stations – look for the blue and white information symbol. In remoter areas, national park visitors' centres will provide useful information on bushwalks and the local terrain.

ENTRY REQUIREMENTS

VISITORS TO Australia must have a passport valid for longer than the intended period of stay. All visitors other than New Zealand passport holders must also have a visa issued in their own country. Apply either through some travel agents or airlines, at the Australian Embassy or by post – allow at least four weeks for postal applications. Visitors will be asked for proof of a return ticket and of sufficient funds for the duration of their stay. Once in Australia, you can extend your visa by applying to the Department of Immigration, but tourist visas are rarely extended beyond a year.

TOURIST INFORMATION

THE Australian Tourist Commission is the central tourism body, but each state and territory has its own tourism authority. Travel centres in the capital cities provide abundant information and these are often the best places to seek advice on specialist tours and to make bookings. Information booths can also be found at airports, tourist sites and in shopping centres. Smaller towns often have tourist offices located in

Corkscrew roller coaster at Seaworld Theme Park on Queensland's Gold Coast (see p231)

OPENING HOURS AND ADMISSION PRICES

MOST MAJOR TOURIST SITES are open seven days a week, but it is always advisable to check first. In smaller centres, galleries and other sites are often closed during the early part of the week. Compared to Europe, admission prices are generally moderate and, in some cases, admission is free. Exceptions are major touring exhibitions at art galleries, zoos, theme parks and specialist attractions such as Sovereign Hill in Ballarat (see p423). Make the most of weekdays – locals will be competing for viewing space at weekends.

ETIQUETTE

WHILE AUSTRALIAN SOCIETY is generally laid-back, there are a few unwritten rules which visitors should follow. Eating and drinking is frowned upon while travelling on public transport, in taxis and also in many shops and galleries. Dress codes are casual, particularly in summer when the weather is hot, but some bars and restaurants may require men to wear shirts and have a ban on jeans and sports shoes. Topless bathing is accepted on many beaches, but it is advisable to see what the locals are doing.

Tipping is optional in Australia; however, 10 per cent of the final bill for good service in a restaurant is customary, as is a couple of dollars for taxi drivers, hotel porters and bar tenders.

Smoking is prohibited in all public buildings, on public transport, in taxis, in cafés and restaurants, and in most stores. Ask about smoking policies when booking hotels.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

DISABLED TRAVELLERS can generally expect the best in Australia in terms of facilities. Many hotels, restaurants, tourist sites, cinemas, theatres, airports and shopping centres have wheelchair facilities, and guide dogs for the blind are always welcomed.

Traditionally, public transport is a problem for wheelchair users, although most states are now making their systems more accessible to disabled travellers. Contact the transport authority state by state for more detailed information. Tourist information centres and council offices can provide maps that show sites with wheelchair access.

One of the most useful organizations for disabled travellers is the National Information Awareness Network (NICAN) in Canberra. This nationwide database provides information on disabled facilities in different parts of the country and, if they don't have the appropriate information at hand, they will do their best to seek it out. They also have details of many publications specifically written for disabled travellers in Australia.

AUSTRALIAN TIME ZONES

Australia is divided into three separate time zones: Western Standard Time, Central Standard Time and Eastern Standard Time. Eastern Australia is two hours ahead of Western Australia; Central Australia is one-and-a-half hours ahead. Daylight saving is observed in New South Wales, the ACT, Victoria and South Australia, from October to March, which adds an hour to the time differences.

TRAVELLING WITH CHILDREN

AUSTRALIA, with its beautiful sandy beaches, abundant wildlife and open spaces and opportunity for adventure, is an ideal destination for children. Most hotels welcome children as guests and can usually provide all the necessary facilities, such as cots, highchairs and, in some cases, babysitting services. However, some of the smaller bed-and-breakfasts advertise themselves as child-free zones.

Restaurants are also generally welcoming to children and offer children's portions, although it is advisable to check first with the more up-market establishments. City department stores and most major tourist sites have feeding and nappy-changing rooms as standard features.

Parents travelling with young children are also encouraged through the range of discounts on air, coach, train and boat travel to which children are entitled (see pp542-51).

Children less than four years of age travelling in cars must be restrained in infant seats according to Australian guidelines. As many cars do not have these restraints as standard fixtures, it is essential that prior arrangements are made.

Gillespies Hire and Sales Service leases restraints, pushchairs, baby carriers and travel cots; deliveries can be made to Sydney hotels. Car hire firms in the larger cities will generally supply car restraints on behalf of clients for a small extra charge.

International student ISIC card

STUDENT TRAVELLERS

THE INTERNATIONAL Student Identity Card (ISIC) is available to all students worldwide in full-time study. The ISIC card should be purchased in the student's own country at a Student Travel Association (STA) office. The card can be purchased in Australia only by students enrolled at an Australian educational institution.

Card-holders are entitled to substantial discounts on overseas air travel and a 25 per cent reduction on domestic flights within Australia (see pp542-5). There is also a 15 per cent reduction on private coach travel (see p547) and discounts on admission prices to cinemas, galleries, museums and the majority of other tourist sites.

GUIDED TOURS AND EXCURSIONS

TOURS AND EXCURSIONS offer the visitor different ways of exploring cities and their surroundings – from bus tours, jaunts on a Harley Davidson, guided nature walks, harbour cruises and river runs, to aerial adventures by hot-air balloon, seaplane or helicopter. As well as an easy way to take in sights, it helps you get a feel for new surroundings.

NEWSPAPERS, TELEVISION AND RADIO

AUSTRALIA HAS two national newspapers, The Australian, a well-respected broadsheet with excellent national and overseas news coverage, and the Australian Financial Review, which largely reports on international monetary matters. Time magazine is Australia's leading weekly international news magazine, though many stories are taken from the American version of the magazine. All major foreign newspapers and magazines are readily available in the state capitals and in some of the larger towns. Each state capital also has its own broadsheet and usually a tabloid newspaper as well.

The Australian Broadcasting Corporation (ABC) is a nationwide television station which provides excellent news and current affairs coverage, children's programmes and high-quality local and international drama. In addition, the corporation has its own AM and FM radio stations which offer a wide range of services, including news, rural information for farmers, arts commentary, modern and classical music, magazine-style women's programmes and an acclaimed nationwide channel for the under thirties called Triple J. SBS (Special Broadcasting Service) is Australia's other state-run television network and caters to Australia's many cultures with foreign language programmes for both television and radio. There are also three commercial television stations in Australia, Channels 7, 9 and 10, all of which offer a range of soap operas, news, sports, game shows and other light entertainment.

In all state capitals there is an enormous variety of local FM and AM radio stations. Details of current programming are available in local newspapers. Of interest also are the community radio stations which cater to local cultural and social interests.

The standard of all Australian broadcasting is generally considered to be high.

ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES

AUSTRALIA'S electrical current is 240–250 volts AC. Electrical plugs have either two or three pins. Most good hotels will provide 110-volt shaver sockets and hair dryers, but a flat, two- or three-pin adaptor will be necessary for other appliances. Buy these from electrical stores.

Personal Security and Health

National park sign

AUSTRALIA HAS a low crime rate and is generally regarded as a safe tourist destination. There is a strong police presence in all the state capitals, and even small towns will have at least one officer. In terms of climate and environment, however, Australia is a tough country, and visitors must observe safety procedures whether travelling to remote areas or merely planning a day at the beach. If you get into trouble, contact one of the national emergency numbers in the telephone directory.

LOOKING AFTER YOUR PROPERTY

LEAVE VALUABLES and important documents in your hotel safe, and don't carry large sums of cash with you. Traveller's cheques are generally regarded as the safest way to carry large sums of money. It is also worth photocopying vital documents in case of loss or theft.

Be on guard against pickpockets in places where big crowds gather. Prime areas for petty theft are popular tourist attractions, beaches, markets, sporting venues and on peak-hour public transport.

Never carry your wallet in an outside pocket where it is an easy target for a thief. Wear shoulder bags and cameras with the strap across your body and with any clasps fastened. If you have a car, always try to park in well-lit, reasonably busy streets. Lock the vehicle securely and don't leave any valuables or property visible that might attract a thief.

PERSONAL SAFETY

THERE ARE FEW, if any, off-limit areas in Australian cities. Red-light districts may be a little seedy, but the fact that they are often busy and well policed probably makes them safer than the average suburban street at night. Avoid poorly lit areas and parks at night. Buses (and trams in Melbourne) are regarded as a safe means of travel at night. However, when travelling by train it is worth remembering that many

Ambulance paramedic

Police vehicle

Fire engine

Intensive care ambulance

stations are not staffed after hours, particularly in suburban areas. Travel in the train carriage nearest the driver or those marked as being safe for night travel. Taxis are a safe and efficient way of getting around late at night. Hitch-hiking is not an advisable option for any visitor to Australia, and for women it can be particularly dangerous.

Country towns can shut down fairly early in Australia, which is often a surprise to many visitors. It is advisable to reach a destination before nightfall and avoid wandering around looking for accommodation or a meal after dark. The majority of places are extremely friendly to travellers. However, in remote areas, visitors do stand out and as such are potential targets if a threat exists.

MEDICAL MATTERS

AUSTRALIA'S MEDICAL services are among the best in the world. Under reciprocal arrangements visitors from the UK, New Zealand, Malta, Italy, Finland, Sweden and Holland are entitled to free hospital and medical treatment provided by Australia's national insurance scheme, Medicare. Medicare does not, however, cover dental work, so dental insurance is worth considering. Visitors from countries other than those mentioned will face prohibitive medical bills if uninsured.

Park ranger

Policeman

Fire officer

Arrangements for adequate medical cover should be made before leaving home.

Dial 000 in any part of the country for ambulance assistance. Most public hospitals have a casualty department. For less urgent treatment, however, queues can be very long. There are 24-hour medical centres in the major cities and doctors in or nearby most country towns. Look in the local Yellow Pages under "Medical Practitioners".

There are dental hospitals in the state capitals that provide emergency treatment. Call the Australian Dental Association for emergency advice on treatment and a list of appropriate dentists practising in your area.

Chemist shop in Sydney

PHARMACIES

PHARMACIES (or chemist shops as they are known in Australia) are liberally scattered throughout cities and suburbs, but can be thin on the ground in remote areas, so it is advisable to stock up before heading off. Unrestricted drugs such as painkillers and other goods such as cosmetics, toiletries, suncreams and baby products are standard stock items available in all chemist

Surf lifesaving sign indicating a dangerous undertow or "rip" shops. Most pharmacies will provide free advice on minor ailments, but foreign prescriptions can only be met if they are endorsed by a local medical practitioner.

Hotel staff and hospitals will direct you to after-hours pharmacies in major cities.

ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS

TAKE CARE when going out in the sun – the ultraviolet rays are very intense in Australia, even on cloudy days. Wear an SPF 15+ sunblock at all times if your skin is exposed to direct and sustained sunlight. Sunglasses and hats are recommended, and stay out of the sun between 10am and 2pm.

Lifesavers patrol many beaches in populated areas, and red and yellow flags indicate safe swimming areas. However, it is vital to remember that there are vast stretches of unpatrolled beaches in Australia and many of these are subject to dangerous rips. Certain rips can be so strong that even wading can pose a threat, especially for elderly people and children. Follow local advice and, if in any doubt, do not swim.

Never underestimate the Australian bush. Even in well-trodden areas, hikers can lose their way. Always ask advice and inform someone of your route. Staff at national parks can offer expert advice along with maps, and will keep a note of your intended trip.

Take a basic first aid kit, food and water, and extra clothing. In many regions, temperatures plummet when the sun sets.

Australia shelters some of the most venomous creatures on earth. While it is highly unlikely that you will be bitten, basic precautions such as good boots and a wary eye are necessary. Snake-bite victims should be kept calm while emergency help is sought. Try to identify the creature by size and colour so that the appropriate antivenom can be administered.

Crocodiles are fascinating but dangerous creatures. In the northern regions of the continent, heed the warning signs and make enquiries if you intend to swim in remote, unpatrolled areas. Box jellyfish patrol tropical waters between October and May. They are hard to see and their sting is extremely dangerous. Again, observe the signs.

Bush fires are a fact of life in Australia. When planning a camping trip, ring the Rural Fire Service to check on restrictions. Total fire bans are not uncommon during warm, dry seasons. Avoid high-risk areas and dial 000 if in immediate danger from fire.

Banking and Local Currency

BRANCHES OF NATIONAL, state and some foreign banks can be found in the central business districts of Australia's state capitals. Suburban shopping centres and country towns will often have at least one branch of a major Australian bank. If travelling to remote areas, find out what banking facilities are available in advance. Banks generally offer the best exchange rates; money can also be changed at bureaux de change, large department stores and hotels. There is no limit to the amount of personal funds that can be taken in or out of Australia, although cash amounts of A$10,000 or more must be declared to customs on arrival or prior to departure.

High street bank logos

Westpac Bank will cash traveller's cheques in Australian dollars without charge. ANZ, the National and Commonwealth banks charge a small fee for this service. A passport or another form of photo ID is usually needed to cash traveller's cheques at a bank.

CREDIT CARDS

ALL WELL-KNOWN international credit cards are widely accepted in Australia. Major credit cards such as VISA, MasterCard, Diners Club and American Express can be used to book and pay for hotel rooms, airline tickets, car hire, tours and concert and theatre tickets. Credit cards are accepted in most restaurants and shops, where the logos of all recognized cards are usually shown on doors and counter tops. You can also use credit cards in automatic teller machines at most banks to withdraw cash.

Credit cards are also a very convenient way to make telephone bookings and avoid the need to carry large sums of cash. They can be particularly useful in emergencies or if you need to return home at short notice.

You should always carry an emergency cash amount, however, if travelling to remote areas, particularly the Outback. Credit cards may not be accepted at small stores and cafés, and alternatives may not always be available.

AUTOMATIC TELLER MACHINES AND ELECTRONIC TRANSFER

AUTOMATIC TELLER machines can be found in most banks, as well as in shopping and tourist areas. In most cases it is possible to access foreign accounts from ATMs by using a linked credit card. Ask your bank about making your card valid for this kind of use.

Linking credit and other bank accounts in this way will also give you access to EFTPOS (Electronic Funds Transfer at Point Of Sale). Pay for goods using a card, and funds are automatically debited from your chosen bank account. In many stores customers will also be allowed to withdraw cash, providing a purchase has been made. This is a useful facility if the town you are in doesn't have an appropriate ATM. It is also a good alternative to using credit in every instance.

BUREAUX DE CHANGE

AUSTRALIAN CITIES and larger towns, particularly those popular with tourists, have many bureaux de change. These are usually open Monday to Saturday from 9am to 5:30pm. Some branches also operate on Sundays.

While the opening hours of bureaux de change make them a convenient alternative to a bank, their commissions and fees are generally higher.

BANKING

BANK TRADING HOURS are generally from 9:30am to 4pm Monday to Thursday and 9:30am to 5pm on Fridays.

Outside banking hours, many transactions can be handled through automatic teller machines. All the current exchange rates are displayed either in the windows or foyers of most of the major banks.

Automatic cash dispenser

TRAVELLER'S CHEQUES

AUSTRALIAN DOLLAR traveller's cheques issued by major names such as Thomas Cook and American Express are usually accepted (with a passport) in large shops. You may have problems, however, cashing these in smaller outlets. Foreign currency cheques can be cashed at all major banks, bureaux de change and established hotels in the main cities.

Banks are generally the best places to go to cash traveller's cheques as their fees are lower.

LOCAL CURRENCY

THE AUSTRALIAN currency is the Australian dollar (A$), which breaks down into 100 cents (c). The decimal currency system now in place has been in operation since 1966.

Single cents may still be used for some prices, but as the Australian 1c and 2c coins are no longer in circulation, the total amount to be paid will be rounded up or down to the nearest five cents.

It can be difficult to change A$50 and A$100 notes, so avoid using them in smaller shops and cafés and, more particularly, when paying for taxi fares. If you do not have change, it is always wise to tell the taxi driver before you start your journey to avoid any misunderstandings. Otherwise, when you arrive at your destination, you may have to find change at the nearest shop or ATM.

To improve security, as well as increase their lifespan, all Australian bank notes have now been plasticized.

Bank Notes

Australian bank notes are produced in denominations of A$5, A$10, A$20, A$50 and A$100. Plastic bank notes and the old paper notes are both in circulation: paper notes are still legal tender but are being phased out.

Coins

Coins currently in use in Australia are 5c, 10c, 20c, 50c, A$1 and A$2. There are several different 50c coins in circulation; all are the same size and shape, but have different commemorative images on the face. The 10c and 20c coins are useful for local telephone calls (see pp540–41).

Using Australia's Telephones

AUSTRALIA'S PUBLIC PAYPHONES are generally maintained in good working order. They are widely available on streets throughout cities and in country towns, as well as in cafés, shops, post offices, public buildings, railway and service stations. It is wise to invest in a phonecard to avoid the annoyance of looking for change. Also avoid making calls from hotel rooms as hotels set their own rates. Use the hotel foyer payphone instead.

PUBLIC TELEPHONES

MOST PAYPHONES accept both coins and phonecards, although some operate solely on phonecards and major credit cards. Phonecards can be bought from selected newsagents and news kiosks, as well as from the many other outlets displaying the blue and orange Telstra sign.

Although slightly varied in shape and colour, all public telephones have a hand-held receiver and a 12-button key pad, as well as clear instructions (in English only), a list of useful phone numbers and telephone directories.

Telstra payphones

PAYPHONE CHARGES

LOCAL CALLS are untimed and cost 40 cents. Depending on where you are, "local" means the city and its suburbs, or outside the city, a defined country region. Telstra can provide information on exact costs. Dial the freephone number 1800 113 011 for an estimate of the cost of long-distance and international calls. Phonecard and credit card phones all have a A$1.20 minimum fee. Long-distance calls are less expensive if you dial without the help of an operator. You can also save money on all calls by phoning during off-peak periods. Peak and discount calling times fall into three periods. Peak times are between 7am-7pm Monday

Using a mobile phone at Bondi to Friday. There are capped call rates between 7pm and midnight Sunday to Friday and between 4pm and midnight on Saturday. All other times are economy rate.

MOBILE TELEPHONES

MOBILE TELEPHONES are used widely in Australia. Short-term rentals are available to visitors, but mobile calls are costly – even local calls are billed at an STD rate.

Making calls while driving is illegal and carries a stiff fine. Many places in remote Australia are not on the mobile net.

FAX SERVICES

MANY AUSTRALIAN post offices offer a fax service. There are also many copy shops that will send or receive faxes on your behalf. Look under the heading "Facsimile and Telex Communication Services" in the Yellow Pages.

Post offices charge per-page fees to send a fax within Australia. The cost per page is reduced if you are sending more than one page. If you are not sure of a correct fax number, you can fax a document to the nearest post office, who will then deliver it to the right address by mail. There is an additional small delivery fee for this service.

TELEPHONE DIRECTORIES

EACH CITY and region in Australia has two telephone directories: the White Pages and the Yellow Pages. The White Pages list private and business numbers in

Postal Services

Australian Post logo

POST OFFICES are open 9am–5pm weekdays, and some branches are open on Saturday mornings. Telephone Australia Post Customer Service for details of opening times. Many post offices offer a wide range of services, including poste restante and electronic post. In country towns, the local general store is often also a post office. Look for the red and white postal sign.

DOMESTIC AND INTERNATIONAL MAIL

ALL DOMESTIC MAIL is first class and usually arrives within one to five days, depending on distance. Be sure to include postcodes on mailing addresses to avoid delays in delivery.

Express Post, for which you need to buy the special yellow and white envelopes sold in post offices, guarantees next-day delivery in certain areas of Australia. Air mail will take from five to ten days to reach most countries. There are two types of international express mail. EMS International Courier will reach nearly all overseas destinations within two to three days, whereas Express Post International takes four to five days.

Standard and express postboxes

POSTBOXES

AUSTRALIA HAS both red and yellow postboxes. The red boxes are for normal postal service; yellow boxes are used exclusively for Express Post. Both types of postbox can be found on most street corners as well as outside post offices. If a yellow postbox is not to be seen, go to a post office and deliver your express mail over the counter.

POSTE RESTANTE

POSTE RESTANTE can be sent to any post office in Australia. Mail should be addressed clearly and marked "poste restante". Visitors picking up mail will need to produce a passport or other proof of identity.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

WHILE SOME VISITORS to Australia may choose to arrive by sea ship, the vast majority arrive by air. Once here, flying between locations is also the most popular form of long-distance travel, but there are some other choices, all of which offer the chance to see something of the country along the way. The national rail network links all major cities, while coach routes provide regular services to most provincial and country areas. If you have the time, driving in Australia is an excellent option. Boat travel is best for those wanting to visit Australia's islands, principally Tasmania, but regular services run to other island destinations such as Rottnest Island off the coast of Western Australia (see pp300–301).

International Qantas flight arriving in Sydney

ARRIVING BY AIR

AUSTRALIA is served by around 50 international airlines. The Australian airline Qantas has a worldwide network and offers the most flights in and out of Australia every week. Qantas is also the main domestic carrier in Australia (see p544). Air New Zealand, Qantas and United Airlines have regular flights from the USA, with a range of stopovers available. The large Asian and European carriers, British Airways, Singapore Airlines, Cathay Pacific and Japan Airlines, offer many routes and stopovers on the Europe-Asia-Australia run. Canadian travellers can fly Air Canada, which connects with Qantas flights in Hawai'i.

INTERNATIONAL FLIGHTS

FLIGHTS BETWEEN Australia and Europe take upwards of 22 hours, and with delays you may be in transit for more than 30 hours. A stopover in Asia is worth considering for the sake of comfort, especially if travelling with children, as is one in Hawai'i or the Pacific islands for visitors from the USA. Also, consider arranging flights so that they account for international time differences. Arriving in the afternoon, spending the rest of the day awake, then going to sleep in accordance with local time will help to counteract jet lag.

Australia has several international air terminals, so visitors can choose different arrival and departure points. Sydney and Melbourne have major airports servicing flights from all over the world. Sydney, the busiest, can be congested. Melbourne is consistently voted one of the world's best airports by travellers. Hobart has flights from New Zealand in the summer months, while Adelaide has direct flights to Singapore and flights to Europe via Sydney or Melbourne. Visitors to the west coast can arrive in Perth, which serves flights from Africa and Asia and direct flights from the UK. Darwin, Brisbane and Cairns mostly service Asia, but there are a few possibilities for connections from Europe.

AIR FARES

FLIGHTS TO AUSTRALIA can be expensive, especially during December, the peak season. January to April is slightly cheaper. During the off-peak season, airlines offer Apex fares that are often 30–40 per cent below economy fares (see p544). Many stipulate arrival and departure times and carry cancellation penalties. Round-the-world fares are good value and increasingly popular.

Check with discount travel agents if you can fly at short notice, as they regularly receive unsold tickets from the airlines. In these cases, flexibility isn't usually a feature.

ON ARRIVAL

JUST BEFORE setting down in Australia you will be given custom documents to fill in. On arrival you will be asked to present your documents, including passport, at the Entry Control Point (see p532). You will also be asked to throw away any food items. You can then collect your baggage and, if you have nothing to declare, proceed straight into the main area of the airport.

Larger airports have better services, but most have good shopping, postal and medical facilities. You can hire cars and change money at all airports. Taxis and buses are available for transport into city centres.

Arrangements for domestic flight connections are usually made when purchasing your

Domestic Air Travel

AIR TRAVEL accounts for a large proportion of long-distance journeys in Australia and is by far the most practical way of taking in a country of this size, particularly for those with time constraints. The main domestic air carriers in Australia, Qantas, Virgin Blue and Jetstar, concentrate on the high-volume interstate routes, while a host of small operators handle air travel within states and to remote locations. Fares can be expensive, but with the range of discounts available in this deregulated and aggressively competitive industry, it is unlikely that you will ever have to pay the full fare, providing you plan your air trips in advance. Spectacular speciality aerial tours of distant or hard-to-reach landmarks are also available (see p527).

AIR ROUTES AND AIRLINES

AUSTRALIA'S air network is vast, but reasonably streamlined, so arranging flights to even the most remote spots should never be a problem. It is possible to fly direct between most major destinations such as Sydney–Darwin or Melbourne–Perth. However, for smaller centres, you will invariably have to fly first to the capital city in the state, and then on to your destination. The small airlines that cover out-of-the-way routes are, in most cases, affiliated with Qantas, which means bookings can be made through Qantas' centralized booking services.

DISCOUNTS FOR OVERSEAS VISITORS

DISCOUNTED domestic air travel is often offered as part of an international package, so check with your travel agent about booking domestic trips before leaving home.

Once in Australia, Qantas offers immediate discounts to overseas travellers, which range from 25–40 per cent; proof of overseas residence is required when booking these tickets. Various air passes are available from Qantas which allow you to make a number of single flights for a set price. You can then move from leg to leg around the country rather than having to make return flights, which are normally expensive. When booking these passes abroad,

Cut-price domestic flight operated by Virgin Blue you are sometimes required to pay half the cost before leaving home and half when booking the flights. In these cases, avoid buying too many flights in case your plans change. The passes are flexible, but restrictions do apply.

APEX FARES

ADVANCE Purchase Excursion fares (Apex) are widely available for round-trip travel in Australia, and offer as much as 55 per cent off the full economy fare. There is usually no refund on these tickets, but flight times can often be altered. The general rule is that the further in advance you book your ticket, the better the discount. A 14-day advance booking will give you the best discount, then seven days, five days and so on. In most cases, you will be required to stay a Saturday night. Keep an eye out for very cheap, one-off fares advertised during quiet periods of the year, usually on popular routes such as Melbourne to Sydney. There is very little flight flexibility on these tickets and passengers are strictly required to fly within a set period of time.

Plane on the harbourside runway, Hamilton Island (see p208)

Cheap, no-frills flights are operated by Jetstar and Virgin Blue. These are best booked well in advance on the internet – the cheapest seats sell first.

FLY-DRIVE DEALS

A GREAT WAY to see Australia is to fly to a destination and then continue on by car. Arrangements can be made for different pick-up and drop-off points for hire vehicles. For example, you could pick up a car in Sydney, drive to Brisbane, fly to Alice Springs and then pick up a car there. Virgin Blue and Qantas have deals with car hire companies, and they offer discounts to passengers who are travelling on those airlines (see p548).

BAGGAGE RESTRICTIONS

PASSENGERS travelling economy on domestic flights may check in one piece of baggage weighing no more than 32 kg (70 lbs). For children under three who are travelling free, Virgin Blue and Jetstar allow one piece of baggage. Qantas has a policy of charging A$10 per item; however, in many instances if there is no excess baggage on the flight, the charge is not applied. The cabin baggage allowance is strictly enforced. Personal items such as walking sticks, cameras, handbags, briefcases and overcoats are all classified and weighed as part of the hand baggage allowance.

CHECKING IN

AIRLINES request that you check in at least 30 minutes before your flight time. While it is not necessary to confirm flights, it is a good idea to call the airline to ensure that the flight is on time. Make sure you alight at the right terminal as many domestic and international terminals are at separate locations.

PRINCIPAL DOMESTIC AIR ROUTES

Domestic flights cover vast distances. Sydney to Perth, for example, is 3,400 km (2,225 miles) and a flight of 5 hours; the 2,600-km (1,615-mile) flight from Adelaide to Darwin is 3.5 hours.

Travelling by Train and Coach

THE AUSTRALIAN continent does not have a comprehensive rail network. With its small population, the country has never been able to support an extensive system of railways and, in fact, services have declined in number over recent decades. However, there are several opportunities for rail enthusiasts: Australia still offers some of the world's great train trips, as well as regular services linking the cities of the east coast. Train journeys should also be considered for quick trips away from the city centres. Coach trips fill any gaps in overland travel in Australia, servicing major centres and remote outposts alike.

Mass Transit Railway Station in Perth

THE AUSTRALIAN RAIL NETWORK

RAILWAYS IN Australia are state-operated. Countrylink, the federal body, oversees the various services. A staff change at state borders is the only indication most passengers get of a state-by-state system at work.

Train travel is cheaper than flying, but journey times are long. The Sydney–Brisbane trip takes 13.5 hours and Sydney–Melbourne takes 10.5 hours.

The prospects for rail travel within state boundaries vary. An increasingly common way of coping with the expense of maintaining rail systems is to substitute state-run coach services on under-used lines.

State governments accept responsibility for providing access to most areas, so where there is no rail network, such as in Tasmania, there will be an efficient, cheap coach network instead. Queensland, however, has increased its rail services, most of which are aimed at the tourist market.

SPECIALITY TRIPS

THE CHANCE to take in some of the country's extraordinary landscapes are what makes rail journeys in Australia so special. Standards are high, often with a level of luxury reminiscent of the grand old days of rail travel.

The Indian Pacific route takes three days to cover the 4,352 km (2,700 miles) from Sydney to Perth. The 478-km (300-mile) crossing of the Nullarbor Plain (see p311) is on the world's longest length of straight railway track.

Indian Pacific Railway, running from Sydney to Perth

The fabled Ghan railway runs between Adelaide and Alice Springs where there is a museum recounting its history (see p275). The 1,559-km (970-mile) trip offers amazing desert scenery and takes two days.

Three different lines run the 1,681 km (1,045 miles) between Brisbane and Cairns: the Queensland, the Sunlander and the Spirit of the Tropics. Another Queensland journey is aboard the Gulflander, a 152-km (95-mile) trip through some of Australia's most remote country.

The Overland (Melbourne–Adelaide) and the fast XPT trains (Brisbane–Sydney–Melbourne) have a more utilitarian approach to train travel.

TRAVEL CLASSES

THERE ARE three types of travel available on most interstate trains. Overnight services, such as Melbourne–Adelaide, offer first-class sleeper, first-class sit-up and economy sit-up. In addition, the Indian Pacific, the Ghan and various Queensland trains offer economy sleepers. All long-distance trains have dining facilities. First-class travel includes meals in the price of your ticket.

Motorail means you can travel with your car. The service is expensive, however, and you are better off hiring a car at your destination.

TICKETS AND BOOKINGS

BOOKINGS for rail travel can be made with travel agents, at railway stations or by telephoning Rail Australia's central free-phone number.

Greyhound coach station in Sydney

There are a number of passes available to overseas visitors. The Austrail Pass allows travel anywhere in Australia, including metropolitan services, over consecutive days – there are 14-, 21- and 30-day passes available. The Austrail Flexi-pass offers between 8 and 29 days of travel which can be taken any time over a six-month period.

Standard rail fares are high in Australia. However, there is a good range of rail fare discounts with up to 40 per cent off advance bookings.

COACH TRAVEL

Coach travel in Australia is cheap, efficient and generally safe. The two main operators are McCafferty's Greyhound and Premier Motor Service.

There are a range of passes that reduce the cost of any extended travel. The Greyhound Aussie Explorer Pass is available on 12 pre-set routes, while the Aussie Kilometre pass offers greater flexibility; McCafferty's Coast and Centre pass will take you from Cairns, down the east coast and then up to Uluru and Alice Springs. However, it is worth remembering that this kind of travel can mean day after day on the road and nights spent sleeping upright. There are a range of other companies operating at a local level. These are good for trips to particular sights or national parks. Tourist information bodies in each state will give you advice on which company services which route (see p535).

AUSTRALIA'S PRINCIPAL RAIL AND COACH ROUTES

In Australia, travel by both rail and coach routes can be easily combined to reach any desired destination.

Travelling by Car and Four-Wheel Drive

Great Ocean Road sign

IT IS WELL WORTH CONSIDERING hiring a car when visiting Australia. Other modes of transport will get you around the cities and from one country town to another, but, once you arrive in a rural area or a small town, you may find it impossible to explore the area other than on foot or with a tour.

Australia offers the motorist the chance to meander through areas such as the vineyard regions of South Australia (see pp330–31), the Southern Highlands of New South Wales (see pp178–9) and the Great Ocean Road of Victoria (see pp434–5), as well as the experience of Outback travel on near-empty roads.

Driving through the Pinnacles in Nambung National Park (see p316)

DRIVING LICENCES

PROVIDING your driving licence is in English and you have proof that you are a tourist, there is no need for an additional permit when driving in Australia. If the licence is not in English, you must carry a translation. It is a legal requirement that you have your licence with you at all times when driving.

CAR HIRE

RENTAL CARS are available just about anywhere in Australia. They can be picked up at the airport on arrival, or arrangements can be made for delivery to your hotel. The big car rental firms Avis, Budget, Hertz and Thrifty have nationwide networks – an advantage if you are considering making several different trips across the continent. Check with your travel agent before leaving home about discounts or special fly-drive offers.

Rates vary from around A$55 a day for a small car to A$100 a day for larger vehicles. It is invariably more expensive to hire a 4WD vehicle; rates average out at around A$120 and are more costly in remote areas where the demand is high. You can reduce daily rates by hiring over longer periods (usually three days and over), or if you accept a limited kilometre/mileage deal. These deals usually give you the first 100 km (60 miles) a day as part of the daily charge, and a per kilometre rate after that. This is well worth considering for inner-city driving, but not good value beyond the city limits where distances can add up very quickly. The smaller local operators offer very competitive rates, sometimes as low as A$25 a day, but read the small print carefully. Often the quote does not include the extras that the larger companies consider standard. If travelling with children, make sure the car is equipped with restraints according to Australian guidelines (see p534).

Credit cards are the preferred method of payment when hiring a car. If paying with cash you will usually be required to pay the full cost of the rental, plus a deposit, when you pick up the car.

INSURANCE

FOR PEACE OF MIND it is a good idea to have comprehensive insurance when hiring a car. "Third party fire and theft" insurance is standard and included in the cost of the hire, as is insurance against accidental damage to the hire car. However, you will have to pay extra to reduce the excess payment. From upwards of A$7 a day, you can bring the excess down from around A$2,000 to a more comfortable A$100. This option is usually only offered by the larger car hire companies. Personal accident plans are also available, but they may not be necessary, depending on the cover

Car and van rental company in Sydney offered with your own travel insurance. Four-wheel drive vehicles attract an excess rate of around A$4,000. For A$20 a day this can be reduced to a A$1,000, but never lower than this figure. Car hire companies will not offer insurance on any off-road driving, regardless of the vehicle type. Higher rates of insurance apply to drivers under the age of 25. Car hire in Australia is often not available to drivers under the age of 21.

Petrol station in Sydney

PETROL

PETROL IS CHEAP in urban areas of Australia, about half the price of petrol in Europe, but in remote regions of the country prices rise considerably. It is dispensed by the litre and can be purchased in leaded, regular unleaded, premium unleaded and diesel grades. Many petrol stations are self-service and most accept major credit cards and have an EFTPOS facility (see pp538–9).

RULES OF THE ROAD

AUSTRALIANS drive on the left-hand side of the road and give way to the right in all circumstances unless otherwise indicated. Drivers must also give way to emergency vehicles – if possible, pull over to the side of the road when you hear a siren. The speed limit is 60 km/h (37 mph) in cities, towns and suburban areas and 100–110 km/h (62–68 mph) on major highways. The wearing of seat belts is compulsory for drivers and passengers.

Drink-driving laws are strictly enforced in Australia. The legal blood alcohol level is 0.05 per cent maximum. Should you be involved in an accident while over the alcohol limit, your vehicle insurance may be invalidated. Police in country areas are just as vigilant as their counterparts in the city, and it is not unusual to see a random breath-test taking place on an otherwise deserted road.

Any accident involving injury in Australia must be reported to the police within 24 hours. In Western Australia all accidents must be reported and in other states it is advisable to do so if there is considerable property damage. Always get insurance details from the other motorist. Do not admit fault – it is better to tell the police your version of events and let them decide.

The city of Melbourne has two road laws worth noting. First, motorists must stop behind a stationary tram to allow passengers to alight. Second, at certain city intersections, motorists who intend to turn right must pull over to the left of the intersection (see pp402–403). Called hook turns, they are clearly indicated and are designed to prevent traffic queuing across tram tracks.

ROAD CONDITIONS

AUSTRALIA'S road network is quite remarkable considering the distances it has to cover. Stretches of multi-lane highways are to be found on most of the major routes. The majority of other routes are covered by two-lane highways, which are generally well sealed and signposted. Unsealed dirt roads can always be found in country regions, but are rarely the only means of getting to a destination unless you are travelling through particularly remote country. Tollways are restricted to areas in the immediate vicinity of the large cities, such as the Western Motorway that covers part of the Sydney–Blue Mountains route. Melbourne has an intricate tollway system which is currently under construction. Service stations are plentiful along all the well-travelled routes, but they can be few and far between in the Outback. A particularly Australian and very dangerous road hazard is the prevalence of wild-life crossing country highways. This danger increases greatly at dusk and after dark when the nocturnal mammals, such as kangaroos and wallabies, surface to feed, but are often hard to see by the motorist.

ROADSIDE ASSISTANCE

CAR HIRE COMPANIES will look after breakdowns of their rental cars and, if necessary, arrange for vehicle replacements. State-based motoring organizations provide roadside assistance for members around the country. The organizations also sell maps and guides in their central branches, and are a great source of information on road routes, road conditions and Outback driving. Members of motoring organizations in Great Britain, Canada and the United States usually have reciprocal membership rights with Australian organizations.

INNER CITY DRIVING

IF YOU ARE planning to drive within any city, a good street directory will be essential. If possible, avoid peak-hour traffic (7:30–9:30am and 4:30–7:30pm). Traffic reports are broadcast on radio stations.

The larger the city, the more difficult it will be to park in the city centre. Parking restrictions are clearly signposted and usually specify an hour or two of metered parking during business hours. Make sure you carry coins for the meters. Many cities have clearway zones that apply at certain times of the day and vehicles will be towed away if they are found parked here during these times. If this happens, telephone the local traffic authority or the police to find out where your vehicle has been impounded. Car parks are also to be found in and around city centres. Make sure you are clear about the cost before you park.

Driving a 4WD along the Gibb River Road in the Kimberley

OUTBACK DRIVING

FOR ANY Outback travel, it is important to first check your route to see if a 4WD is required. Although some Outback areas now have roads of a high enough standard to carry conventional cars, a 4WD will be essential to travel to some wild and remote areas. Motoring organizations and tourist information centres can provide information that will enable you to assess your journey properly.

There are a number of basic points of safety that should be observed on any trip of this kind. Plan your route and carry up-to-date maps. If you are travelling between remote destinations, inform the local police of your departure and expected arrival times. Check road conditions before you start and carry plenty of food and water. Make sure you know where you can get petrol and carry extra supplies if necessary. If you run out of petrol or break down, remain with your vehicle. It offers some protection from the elements and, if you fail to arrive at the expected time, a search party will be sent out to look for you.

The Australian Council of the Royal Flying Doctor Service (RFDS) can offer safety advice to Outback tourists. You can also hire radio sets that have an emergency call button to the RFDS from McKays Communication. You should also observe important guidelines to protect the land. Native flora and fauna should not be removed or damaged. Stick to vehicle tracks, carry a stove and fuel to avoid lighting fires, and take all rubbish with you. Be aware of Aboriginal land boundaries and national parks and leave gates as you find them: either open or shut.

Travelling by Ferry and Cruise Boat

FOR AN ISLAND CONTINENT, Australia has surprisingly few tourist cruises on offer. The most important route is that between Melbourne and Tasmania. Elsewhere ferries run between the mainland and island destinations such as Rottneest Island, Western Australia (see pp300–301), and Fraser Island, off the Queensland coast (see p234). There are, however, plenty of cruises of local waterways. Large cruise ships concentrate on the local Pacific area and in most cases sail in and out of Sydney.

The QEII passenger ship berthed at Circular Quay, Sydney

ARRIVING BY BOAT

THERE IS PROBABLY no better way of arriving in Australia than to sail into Sydney Harbour aboard a cruise ship. Cruising is expensive, however, and the services to Australia are very limited. In terms of getting to Australia from the USA or Europe, you may have to wait for the next world cruise on P&O or Cunard Line vessels. Another option is to fly to an Asian city such as Hong Kong and join up with Princess Cruises. Sydney is the main port of call for most cruise ships, and its two passenger terminals have excellent facilities.

FERRIES TO TASMANIA

THE Spirit of Tasmania takes just over 14 hours to cross the Bass Strait from Melbourne to the island state of Tasmania. It runs at 6pm, Monday to Saturday, departing alternately from Port Melbourne and Devonport. The ship has every level of accommodation ranging from reclining cruise seats and back-packer berths to fully equipped suites. There are several restaurants, shops, and entertainment for children. The fares are reasonable considering the experience – a double cabin will cost around A$450 return for a couple in off-peak season, less if you book during a special offer period.

ISLAND CRUISES AND FERRIES

A SEALINK ferry departs from Cape Jervis, south of Adelaide, to Kangaroo Island (see p346). In Western Australia, regular ferries run to Rottneest Island from Perth. There are many services between the mainland and the Barrier Reef islands (see p208). A boat also runs between Seisia, Cape York, and Thursday Island, (see p244). Contact the Queensland Government Travel Centre for more information.

RIVERS AND HARBOURS

HIRING A HOUSEBOAT is an excellent way of seeing some of Australia's spectacular river scenery. Popular spots include the Hawkesbury River, New South Wales, and the Murray River which runs through New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia. There are tours of Darwin and Sydney harbours, cruises of the Swan River in Perth and the Yarra River in Melbourne. State tourist authorities can provide details (see p535).
