GREEK ISLANDS' TOP 10

The Greek Islands' Highlights

Comprising over 6,000 islands and islets, spread across several archipelagos, the Greek Islands offer a fabulous choice of holiday destinations. Some host bustling holiday resorts, while others consist solely of rural communities, and ancient temples sit alongside cosmopolitan towns. Add beaches, pine forests, olive groves and coastlines indented with spectacular coves and bays, and the result is a collection of islands just begging to be explored.

This city was occupied by the Knights Hospitallers (1309–1522) who left such magnificent treasures as the Palace of the Grand Masters and the Street of the Knights (see pp10–11).

Monastery of St John, Pátmos

Kalamata |

Trípoli

Dedicated to St John, who reputedly wrote the Book of Revelation nearby, this 11th-century monastery is a UNESCO site (see pp12–13).

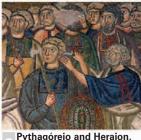

According to Greek mythology, this tiny uninhabited island was the birthplace of Apollo and Artemis, and an important place of worship. It has remains of civilizations dating from the 3rd century BC (see pp14–15).

Néa Moní, Híos

Containing one of Greece's finest collections of mosaics, this 11th-century monastery was built by Emperor Constantine IX Monomachos (see pp16–17).

Pythagóreio and Heraion, Sámos

The remains of Pythagóreio, an ancient Greek and Roman fortified port, and Heraion, a Neolithic temple, have put Sámos on the heritage map (see pp18-19).

Corfu Old Town

With its cobbled plazas and tiny alleyways dating back to ancient times, Corfu Old Town continues to retain its old-world charm. Palaces, museums, fortresses, gourmet restaurants, traditional tavernas, cultural venues and a lively harbour combine to give the town its inimitable character. It has beautiful arcades remniscent of the finest in Paris along with elegant Venetian mansions, which line the town's main thoroughfare, the Kapodistrou. Add Greek, Italian and British influences and you have an eclectic architectural anthology.

Palaió Froúrio

A landmark of the capital, the Old Fortress was built in the 16th century on a tiny islet to protect the city from invaders. Its interiors have been restored and it has become a popular venue for cultural events. At its base stands St George's Church.

Plateía Spianáda

One of the largest squares in Greece, the Plateía Spianáda (right) is always bustling. Its Venetian and French architecture give it an elegant feel. The labyrinth of alleyways off the square, Campiello, is one of the town's oldest parts.

Néo Froúrio

The Venetians built this mighty fort (left) in the 1500s to strengthen the town's defences. Despite its name, the New Fortress was completed only a few years after the Old Fortress. With a maze of tiny medieval walkways to explore, the former naval garrison is now open to the public.

The Listón

The Listón was built by the French in the early 1800s, inspired by the grandiose buildings along the Rue de Rivoli in Paris. Its arcaded terraces were once used solely by the town's aristocrats, but are now full of stylish cafés where locals and visitors chill out.

Built to commemorate the life of Sir Thomas Maitland, the first Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands during the British administration, this 19th-century monument (above) dominates the southern end of Plateia Spianáda.

Church of Ágios Spyridon

Named after Corfu's patron saint, St Spyridon, whose remains lie here in a lavish silver coffin, this 16th-century church is an Old Town landmark. It has a distinct red-topped campanile with bells that ring out at regular intervals.

Palace of St Michael and St George

Dating from the British period, this imposing Georgian-style palace has been the home of the Greek royal family, the British High Commission and the island's treasury. It now houses the Museum of Asiatic Art.

Dimarchío

The Dimarchío, or Town Hall, is a classic Venetianstyle building that was once the San Giacomo theatre, a favourite haunt of the island's nobility.

Antivouniótissa Museum

With its Byzantine and post-Byzantine icons and ceclesiastical artifacts collection, this museum (above) is located in the Church of Panagia (Our Lady) Antivouniótissa, one of the city's oldest religious buildings.

The Old Port

While cruise ships tend to head for the New Port these days, in ancient times the Old Port (below) would have been a hive of nautical activity. It is located between the fortresses and is in one of the most picturesque parts of the Old Town.

The Mános Collection

One of the key exhibits at the Museum of Asiatic Art in Corfu Old Town is the Mános Collection, which comprises about 11.000 items. Corfiot diplomat Grigórios Mános (1850-1929) had a passion for Japanese, Chinese and Korean art, furnishings, ceramics and weapons. He amassed a fabulous private collection and donated it to the government to establish a museum in Corfu. Mános was alive to see the opening of the museum in 1927.

Rhodes Old Town

This medieval citadel at the heart of Rhodes Town, the capital of Rhodes island, is a "living museum" showcasing the ancient and the medieval areas of the city. The Knights Hospitallers occupied the city from 1309 and transformed it into a formidable stronghold, but in 1522 Suleiman the Magnificent, Sultan of the Ottoman Empire, conquered the Knights. The walled city boasts outstanding buildings from both periods, including the Palace of the Grand Masters, Street of the Knights, mosques and hammams.

Palace of the Grand Masters

Located in the citadel in the Collachium area, this is a replica of the original Knights' palace destroyed in 1856. The Italians rebuilt it and it is a museum now (above).

Hóra

The citadel is divided into two main areas, the Collachium and the larger Hóra (Bourg), home to some of the city's busiest streets. Street cafés vie for attention with markets full of stalls.

Street of the Knights

A cobbled street (below) with arched bridges and lined with the Inns of the Tongues, this famous site dates from the 14th century. Although remodelled, it is recognised as one of the world's finest examples of Gothic urbanism.

Medieval City Walls

The Knights built the walls (above) on Byzantine fortifications to completely encircle and thus protect their city. The 4-km- (6-mile-) long walls contain a labyrinth of tiny alleyways.

Archaeological Museum, Rhodes

Known for its amphorae collection and artifacts (left), this museum is housed in the Hospital of the Knights. Its infirmary is the main exhibition hall.

This area dates from the 1st century AD. The Plateia Martýron Evraíon (left) has a very moving monument to the Rhodian Jews who died in WWII concentration camps.

Mosque of Suleiman the Magnificent

Erected as a triumphal mosque by Suleiman in 1522, the present structure (above) was built in 1808 using materials from the original.

Inns of the Tongues

The Knights Hospitallers, Order of St John of Jerusalem, were divided by nationality into groups known as "Tongues". Each had their meeting place (inn), with their Coat of Arms, and these lined the Street of the Knights. The Inn of Provence and Chapelle Francaise are on the street's north side, while on the south is Spain, one of the largest inns.

Church of Panagía tou Kástrou

The Virgin of the Castle was once a Byzantine cathedral and the most important ecclesiastical building in Rhodes. Built in the 11th century, it conforms to a domed, cross-in-square architectural style and has a richly carved interior.

Housed in the former Knights' arsenal, this museum has a super collection of artifacts from the Dodecanese, including traditional costumes and embroideries (right), carved wood and ceramics, some dating from the 17th century.

Marine Gate

Dominating the Plateia Ippokrátous, Pýli Agías Aikaterínis, known as Marine Gate, is a mighty bastion of two towers and is the most magnificent of all the gates leading to the inner Old Town. It is located beside the Commercial Harbour.

Monastery of St John, Pátmos

The island of Pátmos is reputedly where St John wrote the Book of Revelation, or the Book of the Apocalypse, in AD 95. This book is the last of the New Testament. He is said to have lived the life of a hermit in a cave in ancient Hóra, where he received apocalyptic visions from Jesus Christ that compelled him to write the work. The Holy Cave of the Apocalypse lies close to the monastic complex of the Monastery of St John, built in 1088 in the saint's honour. Hóra, the cave and monastery are a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

This ancient settlement has over 40 monasteries and chapels and is one of the few places where early-Christian ceremonies are still practised. The town is famous for its Byzantine architecture, including mantómata - window mouldings with a decorative cross.

Monastery of St John An imposing 11th-century fortification dominating the skyline above Hóra (below). this monastery is one of the most sacred Christian sites in the world. Fabulous icons and treasures are on display.

The Walls

The fortified walls of the monastery were built because of the threat of invasions. In some places they are said to be very deep and contain fragments of the ancient Temple of Artemis that stood on the site and was destroyed in the 11th century.

Chapel of the Holy Cross Many small chapels were built in the monastery because law dictated that prayer could be heard in a chapel only once a day. Among them are the chapels of the Holy Cross (above), Holy Apostles and John the Baptist.

The most sacred treasure is the lcon of St John, housed in the inner narthex of the monastery. Dating from the 12th century, it shows the saint holding his work.

6 Hospitality of Abraham

A fabulous work of art, this 12th-century fresco (above) from the Chapel of Panagía depicts three angels receiving hospitality from the patriarch Abraham. It was painted over once and was only discovered after an earthquake in 1956.

The Chapel of Christodoúlou loánnis Christódoulos, the Blessed, was the monk who had the St John Monastery built. It took three years to complete. This chapel is dedicated to him and houses his remains in a marble sarcophagus.

The Treasury

Thousands of manuscripts, parchment documents, books, ecclesiastical art, gems and a fabulous silverware collection (below) are exhibited for the public.

Chrvsobull

The Chrysobull is the Treasury's star exhibit. A parchment scroll, it is a deed sealed in gold by the Byzantine Emperor Aléxios Komnínos, commissioning loánnis Christódoulos to found the monastery in 1088.

Cave of the Apocalypse

The cave (below) contains a rock where Revelation was written, and a crack in the wall through which St John heard a voice and saw a vision. He lived here in exile during the reign of Roman Emperor Domitian (AD 51–96).

Book of Revelation

One of the most important books of the New Testament, the Book of Revelation says that there were seven early-Christian communities in Asia Minor that received a letter from St John following his vision. It is believed St John was from Ephesus in modern day Turkey. He is known by a number of names, including John of Pátmos, John the Divine, John the Apostle and Saint John the Theologian, although a modern theory says that these were different people.

গ্রী Delos

The island of Delos, home to civilizations as far back as 2500 BC, is one of the world's most important archaeological sites. As the mythological birthplace of the sun god, Apollo, and his twin, Artemis, the goddess of the moon and the hunt, it was the most sacred place of worship in ancient Greece. The old port, with its magnificent sanctuary, amphitheatre and dwellings, can be explored.

Sanctuary of Apollo With its three temples, Pórinos Naós (6th century BC), the Great Temple of Apollo (477 BC) and the later Temple of Athenians, this sanctuary would have been at the heart of Delos culture.

Sacred Lake According to legend, this lake (above) was where Apollo and Artemis were born to Leto. Though dry now, a wall denotes its boundaries.

Theatre Quarter The remains of lavish homes, many with colonnaded courtyards, suggest that the Theatre Quarter was a small but exclusive residential area. Its key feature is a spectacular amphitheatre (main image) which was designed to hold over 5,000 spectators.

Temple of Delians

The classic Doric-style Temple of the Delians (below) is one of the many excavated along with the Roman-era Temple of Isis and the 5th-century Temple of Hera.

Terrace of the Lions

This row of lions (above) is one of the iconic images of Delos. Dating from the 7th century BC and carved of Naxian marble, they overlook the Sacred Lake. Now replaced by replicas, the original statues are housed in the Delos Archaeological Museum.

Maritime Quarter

Revolving around the Sacred Harbour, the Maritime Quarter was the main residential area of Delos. Among the ruins are floor mosaics of the mansions built by wealthy merchants.

House of Dolphins

With its floor mosaic of dolphins at play (above), this house to the amphitheatre's north, is very well preserved. Dating from the 2nd century BC, it gives an insight into the fashion of the day.

Sanctuary of Dionysos

Dedicated to Dionysos, god of wine and ecstasy, and Zeus's son, this sanctuary (right) was used for ritual worship and is known for its 2,300-yearold phallic monuments.

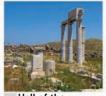

Agorá of the Competaliasts

The remains of shops and potholes for awnings (above) can be seen in the Hellenistic-era market-place near the Sacred Harbour. The stone-paved ground is heavily worn.

Hall of the Poseidoniasts

The cultic hall (above) housed meeting rooms and shops belonging to merchants from Beirut, who worshipped Baal, known as Poseidon, here.

People of Delos

Delos is uninhabited today, but this was not always so. In 426 BC, the Athenians decided to "cleanse" Delos and its thousands of inhabitants were exiled. It was declared that no one would ever be born, die or be buried on the holy island. Graves were opened and the remains removed. As a result, the buildings and the island were abandoned.

Néa Moní, Híos

Considered one of the finest examples of architecture from the Macedonian Renaissance, this UNESCO World Heritage Site is famous for its golden mosaics. Located just west of Híos town, the 11th-century Néa Moní, meaning New Monastery, was built by Byzantine Emperor Constantine IX Monomachos and Empress Zoe (r.1042–1050). According to legend, three monks found a miraculous icon of the Virgin Mary here. It became an influential and wealthy monastery but its decline began when the Ottomans plundered Híos in 1822.

- Néa Moní is undergoing an extensive restoration programme and some areas of the complex may be closed to visitors.

The Narthex

The esonarthex (inner narthex) and the exonarthex (outer narthex) entrances (above) feature some of the monastery's most prized mosaics. There is also a marble inlaid floor, which was a sign of wealth in Byzantine times.

A key part of the monastery's infrastructure, the cistern, or kinsterna, is a well-preserved underground complex of marble columns, arches and vaults, designed to collect and hold rain water. This water was supplied to the monks.

St Luke's Chapel This small chapel,

(below) dedicated to St Luke, the early-Christian author of the Gospel of Luke, is near the monks' cemetery, just outside the monastery's boundary wall. Its architecture is typical of the 11th-century ecclesiastical style.

Mosaics

Worked in marble on a gold background, the mosaics depict biblical scenes and figures. The works include the famous Anástasis (Resurrection), showing Christ's rescue of Adam and Eve from Hell (above).

Trapeza

The dining hall, or refectory, is where the monks would have met for meals. A oncemassive structure, it was damaged in 1822 by the Ottomans and again by the 1881 earthquake. Its remains can be visited.

Churches

The monastery has two small churches. One is dedicated to the Holy Cross (right). The other, Pandeleimon, is named after the saint who, according to legend. became a martyr during the Roman persecution of Christians in AD 303.

The Catholicon

The Catholicon, or Katholikón, is the main part of the church between the esonarthex and exonarthex. Dedicated to the Virgin Mary, it is a rare early example of insular octagonal architecture and is dominated by its dome.

Skull Cabinet

A macabre sight, this cabinet contains skulls and bones of the islanders massacred by the Ottomans in 1822. The dead included 600 monks from Néa Moní.

The Belfry

The original majestic belfry was built in the early 16th century. It collapsed during the 1881 earthquake and was rebuilt in 1900.

Monks' Cells

The Venetian-period cells (above), known as Keliá, are where the monks would have slept. Though most are in a ruined state, one has been renovated and houses a small museum

Macedonian Renaissance Art

The Macedonian Renaissance, a period of Byzantine art, began in the late 9th century and continued till the mid-11th century. During this time, cross-in-square and octagonal churches with fabulous frescoes, icons and mosaics were commissioned. The use of marble and ivory, often on gold and black backgrounds, became fashionable. Finest examples from the period are Ósios Loukás Moní and Dafní Moní on the Greek mainland, which share UNESCO status with Néa Moní.

10 Pythagóreio and Heraion, Sámos

Pythagóreio, named after the ancient philosopher Pythagóras, and the Sanctuary of Heraion are two treasures of Sámos. Pythagóreio, now a bustling holiday resort, was an important port in antiquity, its fortifications acting as a stronghold against invasion. Remains of the town's citadel, along with Roman baths, the harbour and an extravagant aqueduct, Tunnel of Efpálinos, can be seen. Nearby, Heraion is a sanctuary where Hera, the Greek goddess of fertility, was cult worshipped. Its architecture is among the finest from the period.

Tunnel of Efpálinos Built in the 6th century by ruler Polykrates to provide his people with water, this aqueduct (above) is an engineering marvel. It is notable as being one of the first to be excavated from both ends.

Statue of Pythagóras

Standing on the harbourside at Pythagóreio, this 3-m-(9-ft-) tall statue celebrates the life of Pythagóras the Samian. who was born on the island in 570 BC. The town is named after him.

Castle of Lykoúrgos Logothétis

This castle (left) and tower was built by a local hero, Lykoúrgos Logothétis, three years after his heroic part in the War of Independence of 1821. It is believed to stand on the site of the ancient acropolis.

Ancient Port

Sámos was a major naval and mercantile power in the 6th century BC. Its port (above) was once bustling with ships and merchants, through which produce, materials and grain were traded. It brought great wealth to the island.

Treasures from Pythagóreio and Heraion

Many Pythagóreio and Heraion treasures, including Koúros, a 5-m-(16-ft-) tall marble statue dedicated to Apollo and dating to 580 BC, are displayed in the museum in Vathý.

Temple of Hera

A single column (left) is all that remains of the temple, but evidence indicates that it was once among the largest in antiquity. The goddess Hera is said to have been born, raised and worshipped here.

Greek and Roman

A wealth of Roman remains lie around Pythagóreio, including an amphitheatre and an acropolis located in the castle grounds (below).

Ancient Harbour

Pythagóreio's harbour is considered to be the oldest man-made maritime installation in the Mediterranean Sea. Dating from the 6th century BC, it is now silted up and can be crossed by a causeway.

6 Ancient Fortification

The city walls (above) of Pythagóreio, known as Polykrates Wall, date from the 6th century BC and surround the ancient town and its harbour. They run from the Lykoúrgos Logothétis tower to the Tunnel of Efpálinos.

Sanctuary of Heraion

Within the grounds of this sanctuary, dedicated to Hera, are the archaeological remains of an early-Christian basilica and the Temple of Hera. There are statues (main image) on the Sacred Way path leading to the temple.

Pythagóras

Pythagóras was a 5thcentury BC Greek philosopher, mathematician and scientist, known for his theorem of the geometry of triangles. He is also credited with Pythagórean tuning, a system whereby musical instruments are tuned to intervals on a 3:2 radio. According to legend, he was the son of Apollo. He was also the founder of an ancient religious movement, Pythagóreanism.

Phaestos Palace, Crete

Phaestos, one of the great cities of ancient Greece, is believed to have been founded by the mythological King Minos of Crete. Overlooking Crete's Messára Plain, this remarkable archaeological site was discovered in the 1880s. Comprising the remains of a palace built in the late Bronze Age, this well-preserved site provides a fascinating insight into Minoan life. Another palace occupied the site before being destroyed in an earthauake, and fraaments of it remain.

This small 16th-century church, to the west of the palace, has served the local community since Venetian rule. It has an elaborate facade.

Archives Room

Best known for being where the Phaestos Disc (see box) was discovered in 1903, the archives room consisted of chambers constructed of sun-dried bricks made from mud, clay and sand. Valuables would have been kept here.

Central Courtyard

This monumental paved courtyard (left), once flanked on two sides by covered walkways, may have been a parade ground. Recesses in the walls by the main entrance are believed to have been sentry boxes.

The Peristyle Hall
This hall comprised a covered walkway and private courtyard (above), which would have led to the Royal Apartments.
The courtyard probably contained a small garden. Northeast Quarter

This quarter housed the artisans' workshops where crafts included weaving and the making of clay pots. In the court-yard the remains of a furnace used for smelting metal can still be seen.

First Palace

The original palace was built during the Protopalatial period but was damaged by earthquakes and rebuilt many times. The oldest palatial ruin on Crete, it lies to the site's southeast (left).

This 17th-century BC clay disk, 16 cm (6 inches) in diameter, has the finest example of Minoan script ever discovered. It is now in the Irákleio Archaeological Museum (see p97). The inscription uses 45 pictorial words, thought to be religious text. Spiralling from the outer edge to the centre, the signs, stamped on clay, are the earliest known form of typography.

Knossos, inhabited since Neolithic times, became a powerful commercial and political centre when the legendary King Minos built his palace here in around 1900 BC. The first palace was destroyed in around 1700 BC but this seat of royalty and hub of Minoan life was quickly rebuilt. Discovered in 1878, the second palace comprises a maze of apartments, workrooms and courtyards, many with replica frescoes – originals are in Irákleio Archaeological Museum (see p97) – showing Bronze Age life. Knossos is the world's largest Minoan site.

The Royal Apartments

Containing the King's Megaron (chamber), known as the Hall of the Double Axes, and the Queen's Megaron decorated with the famous dolphin fresco replica (above), the apartments had the rarity of a private bathroom.

The Palace

Built around a central courtyard, the palace complex (main image) was arranged with four wings that contained the royal apartments, the throne room, chapels, administration rooms and workshops. Private dwellings dot its periphery. It dates back to 2000–1350 BC.

The Throne Room

This imposing room has a carved stone throne copy (left), believed to be in the image of a priestess. The room was probably used for worship. A griffin fresco guards the throne.

Hall of the Royal Guard

One of several administrative areas, this hall (above), adjacent to the royal quarters, would have been heavily guarded. It is where the King's guardsmen lived and worked. The wall frescoes here depict shields.

Workshops
The remains of workshops used for food preparation and crafts, such as pottery, are mainly in the east wing. Excavations revealed many pithoi (jars), which were used for storage (right).

Priest-King Fresco

This replica (right) of the original brightly coloured fresco of the Priest-King wearing a crown of lilies and feathers, is a detail segment from the Procession fresco. It is also known as the fresco of the Prince of Lilies.

Roval Road

Said to be the oldest paved road in Europe, the Royal Road heads towards the northwest of the site to the town of Knossos. The theatre and the Little Palace, a smaller version of the main building, are located just off the road.

Corridor of the Procession

This corridor is the main entrance to the site. It has a copy of the original Procession fresco, with over 500 figures.

Horn of Consecration

Standing about 3 m (9 ft) tall, this restored stone symbol (above) is said to represent the horns of a bull, considered sacred in Minoan times.

Private Houses

Among the remains of dwellings are the Royal Villa, which is religious in design and probably the home of a priest, and the Villa of Dionysus, where he was cult worshipped.

Sir Arthur Evans

Credited with unearthing the Palace of Knossos, deciphering ancient Cretan script and giving the Minoan civilization its name, Sir Arthur Evans (1851-1941) was a rich British archaeologist with a passion for Crete. In 1878, Cretan Mínos Kalokairinós had found Knossos but the ruling Ottoman Turks thwarted his excavation. Sir Evans purchased the site in 1898 and mounted the excavation.

Snake Goddess

A ceramic female figure just over 34 cm (13 inches) tall and decorated with a fine tin glaze, this faïence statuette is considered one of the finest examples of Minoan art. It was discovered in 1903.

This fresco of a young girl with large eyes, ruby red lips and long dark curls was christened La Parisienne by Sir Arthur Evans because of its beauty. Dating from around 1450 BC, it is one of the oldest examples of Minoan art

A work of vivid colour, this fresco shows a bird on a rock surrounded by flowers. Dating from the late Bronze Age, it is one of the earliest paintings found in the House of Frescoes at Knossos.

Replica of the Bull Leaper fresco

Bull Leaper Fresco

Bull's Head Rhyton

This black steatite jug, used for drinking or pouring, was known as a rhyton. It was fashioned into the head of a bull, the most sacred animal in Minoan culture, and has eyes of rock crystal and eyelashes of jasper.

_ Dolphin Fresco

Depicting several lavishly coloured blue-grey dolphins swimming with various other sea creatures, this celebrated late-Bronze Age fresco would probably have decorated the Queen's Megaron.

Minoan Art

While little Minoan art remains from the Prepalatial period (3500-1900 BC) other than fragments of pottery, there are magnificent examples from the Protopalatial period (1900-1700 BC) and the Neopalatial period (1700-1425 BC), when Cretans are said to have been encouraged to express themselves creatively. Wall frescoes were painted in vivid colours, with figures and animals depicted in great anatomical detail and showing a natural "movement". The La Parisienne and the Bull Leaper frescoes are prime examples. Similar detailing was fashioned into gold and silver jewellery, chryselephantine ivory, goldleaf figures and faïence objects moulded from clay for making seals. Development of a primitive form of potter's wheel meant potters could produce both practical and decorative pottery. The Kamares style of symmetrical, rounded vases and rhyton jugs with thin walls was typical of the period. Minoan art often included representations of sacred animals.

leaf, this figurine is in a leaping position. Dating back to 1550 BC, it is famous for its detail.

Priest-King Fresco

This fresco, dating from about 1550 BC, portrays the Prince of Lilies, believed to have been the Priest-King. The brightly coloured painting shows a figure with a peacock feather headdress.

Isopata Ring

Discovered in a grave, the Isopata gold signet ring, dating from 1600 to 1400 BC, shows four female figures wearing elaborate costumes and dancing among flowers. Wellpreserved, it is famous for its remarkable detailing.

Faïence Plaque Collection

A collection of ceramic plaques, which includes the famous wild goat and kid plaque found in the sacred treasury rooms of the palace, show the use of the faïence technique of tin glazing. These plaques are believed to have been used as inlays.

Named after princess Aphaia, who became a Greek goddess of fertility, this magnificient temple is thought to have been built around 480 BC with loot seized from the Persians after their defeat by the Greeks at the Battle of Salamis. It is located on the site of an earlier temple, the remains of which are said to have been used in the temple's construction. Standing majestically on a pine tree-covered hilltop above the Agía Marína resort, this temple is the most important monument in the Sanctuary of Aphaia.

Doric Columns

The temple was built according to the hexastyle format of the Doric period, with 12 outer columns along its longer sides and six along its shorter ends as seen in this model (above). They incline to strengthen the building. All the columns were fluted except three.

Remains of Aphaia's altar were discovered at one side of the temple, near the sanctuary's centre. A paved path with a ramp, possibly lined with statues, would have given access to the temple. Offerings to Aphaia were burnt at the altar.

Sphinx Statues

Four marble Sphinx statues would have been positioned at each corner of the temple's roof. With the head and breasts of a woman, body of a lion, a serpent's tail and wings of an eagle, the Sphinx was a popular figure of Greek mythology.

Inner Columns

The inner columns (left) enclose the cella (see opposite), and are presented in a tworow, two-storey fashion with the lower columns supporting a platform for the upper columns. The fluted design echoes that of the outer Doric columns.

East Pediment

The 480-BC sculpture of Greek warrior Telamon fighting the Trojan king Laomedon adorned the temple's east pediment. A re-creation sits there now (above).

The re-creation of the west pediment sculpture depicts the mythological hero Ajax (below) fighting in the Trojan War. Dating from the Archaic period (800-480 BC), the figure is intricately carved in white marble mined in Páros in the Cyclades.

Limestone Architraves

Porous local limestone was used to construct the architraves (below). which were plain with a narrow band of plain metopes alternating with carved triglyphs above. They would have been covered with stucco and richly painted.

Prónaos and Opisthódomos

The temple is balanced symmetrically by its portico, prónaos (walkways) at its entrance and a small room to its rear. the opisthódomos. The cella's facade would have been between these two.

Figurines

Excavated female fertility figurines and pottery dating from the Bronze Age suggest that the temple has been a site of cult worship for more than 4,000 years. Artifacts can be seen in the Archaeological Museum of Égina.

Cella

Traditionally a cella, also known as a naos. is an inner chamber housing a cult sculpture of the deity to whom the temple is dedicated (left). This cella would have had a statue of Aphaia and offerings would have been laid out in front of it

Aphaia

According to legend, the princess Aphaia was saved after she attempted suicide by jumping into fishing nets in the waters off Égina, while fleeing from an unwelcome admirer. She was much loved by the goddess Artemis, who, relieved that she had been saved, made her a goddess and a sanctuary was built in her name. To the people of Égina she is their legend, but Cretans also claim that the story happened on Crete, where she is known as Diktynna.

ំ១០ Évvia

This long and narrow island, which is separated from mainland Greece by the Euripus Strait, is the second-largest Greek island. Largely mountainous, Évvia was inhabited in prehistoric times when it was home to two wealthy city-states, Chalcis, on the site of its present capital Halkída, and Erétria. The remains of Erétria can be seen near the modern town of the same name. Évvia has a lona commercial history and was known for the Euboian scale of weights and measures used throughout Greece. The island has been inhabited by Sicilians, Macedonians, Venetians and Turks, all of whom left their legacy on its architecture and culture.

A Frankish castle and Venetian watchtowers adorn Ochthonia's skyline. Its coast has a series of deserted beaches (above) that lead to a dramatic wall of cliffs, known as Cape Ochthonia.

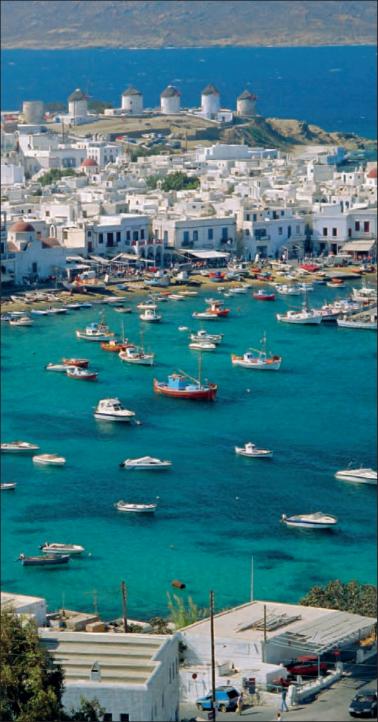

Geórgios Papanikoláou

Physician Geórgios Papanikoláou (1883-1962) was born on Évvia. A pioneer of the study of human cells, cytology, he invented the cervical smear test. or Pap Test, used worldwide in the detection and prevention of cancer of the cervix. His statue stands in the main square in his birthplace, Kými. His image was used on the 10.000 drachma banknote until 2001.

Moments in History

3000–1000 BC: Cycladic Civilization

The early-Bronze Age civilization that existed in the Cyclades before the advent of the Minoans is thought to be the Greek Islands' earliest civilization. This important period of Mediterranean history is best known for its female icons carved from marble. Its people were believed to be great fishermen.

Cycladic marble figurine

197–146 BC: Roman

Subjugation by the Romans started in 197 BC and the Roman period began when Corinth was defeated and Greece became part of the Roman Empire in 146 BC. It was a period of change, and Greece, supported by its isles, became the cultural centre of the Roman Empire. Corinth the Roman Empire. Corinth was rebuilt in 46 BC.

700 BC: Creation of the Dorian Hexapolis

Along with the Ionians and the Aeolians, the Dorians were a tribe of ancient Greece and are mentioned in the Odyssey. They created the Dorian Hexapolis, a coalition of six cities, to serve the people and the gods. These were Camirus, Lindus and Lalysos on Rhodes, Cnidus and Halicarnassus in Caria, a region of western Anatolia, and Kos.

1204–1797: Venetian Occupation

The Republic of Venice took control of the Ionians from 1204. This was a key period in the history of the islands – it was due to strong Venetian fortifications that they were able to escape occupation during the Ottoman invasion of Greece. As a result, the islands remained Christian.

431–404 BC: Peloponnesian War

A period of unrest between the residents of Corfu, allies of the Athens empire, and their colonizers, the Corinthians, triggered the Peloponnesian War. It was fought between the Athenian and Spartan empires. Harmony with the signing of the Peace of Nicias treaty in 421 BC was short-lived. The Spartans eventually triumphed at the mighty battle at Aegospotami.

1309–1522: Knights Hospitallers

Knights Hospitallers, Order of St John of Jerusalem, invaded many islands in the 14th century, particularly those in the Dodecanese. They brought much wealth and built strongholds to protect their cities. Their architectural legacy is most notable in Rhodes. The Knights were overthrown in Rhodes by the Ottomans in 1522.

Ottoman Rule

There have been several periods of Ottoman rule in the islands, the most notable being in the 14th, 16th, 17th and 19th centuries. For example, the Sultan of the Ottoman Empire, Suleiman the Magnificent, captured islands in the Cyclades and Dodecanese in the 1500s, while Crete fell in the 17th century.

1814–1864: British Protectorate

The Greek Islands came under the protectorate of the British in 1814, and, following the Greek War of Independence waged by revolutionaries from 1821 to 1829, overthrew the last period of rule under the Ottoman Empire. The islands acquired Union with Greece in 1864.

German tanks entering Greece

1941: Axis Occupation

During World War II, the Axis alliance, which included Germany and Italy, took control of Greece and, in 1941, many of the islands were ruled by the Italians. In 1943, the Germans evicted the Italians and immediately exerted their power by sending local Jews to their death.

1953: Major Earthquake

The most significant event in modern history was the earth-quake that hit the Ionian islands in 1953. This major earthquake, measuring 7.1 on the Richter scale, caused massive damage, destroying many towns. Today, all buildings are built to earthquake-proof standards.

Top 10 Trees and Fruits

Olives

Greece is home to the largest variety of olives in the world. The green and black olives found in groves throughout the islands are either eaten or made into oil.

Figs

The deep purple fig can be seen amongst the large leaves of fig trees in summer.

Vines

Vines grow wild or in vineyards, with the green and black grapes used to make wine and liquors.

Apples

Local apples are usually small and sweet, and are used for cooking or served at the end of a meal.

Pomegranates

Pomegranates, which can be seen in late summer, were mentioned in the Odyssey and are used to make grenadine.

Bananas

The local variety of this fruit is small and grown on the lower, warmer plains of the islands.

Cretan Plane Tree

Endemic to Crete, the striking plane tree is often found in villages and provides welcome shade.

Carob Tree

With its dark seed pods used as a chocolate alternative, the carob tree is a key part of the landscape.

Cypress Tree

Tall and elegant, the cypress tree is from the conifer family and is seen in gardens and in the wild.

Cedar Tree

Forests of the broadbranched cedar tree can be found at higher altitudes throughout the islands.

Myths and Legends

Homer's Odyssey

Believed to date from around the 8th century BC but based on earlier myths, Homer's epic poem The Odyssey suggests that Itháki was the home of the ancient hero King Odysseus. In the story, he returns home from the battle at Troy as a great warrior to be reunited with his love, Penelope.

Poseidon

As per Greek mythology, Paxí was created by the god of the sea, Poseidon, known as Neptune in Latin. Enraged at having no peace and quiet with his wife Amphitrite, he dealt a blow to Corfu with his three-pronged spear, known as a trident, splitting the island in two. Paxí thus became their place of sanctuary.

Sappho

Sappho was a prolific poet from the island of Lésvos who lived from around 620 to 570 BC. One legend claims she was in love with Phaon, an ugly ferryman, whom the goddess Aphrodite transformed into a man of beauty. Phaon then rejected Sappho who, broken hearted, threw herself to her death from the cliffs near Cape Lefkátas, Lefkáda.

St John
Often referred to as John of Pátmos, the saint is said to have written the New Testament's Book of Revelation after he saw a vision of Christ in the Cave of the Apocalypse in Hóra, Pátmos. The nearby monastery of St John, which was founded in 1088 by the monk Christódoulos Letrínos in his honour, is one of the world's most sacred sites (see pp12–13).

Hippocrates

Considered one of the main figures in ancient Greek medicine, Hippocrates was born in around 460 BC on Kos. A teacher of medicine, the physician is credited with rejecting superstitions and pioneering thinking on diet and environment being the cause of illness. The Hippocratic Oath is still taken by doctors today.

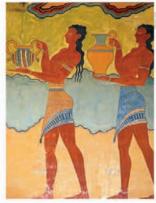

The Giant Polyvotis

Polyvotis was part of an ancient race of fearsome giants, according to Greek mythology. During one of the legendary battles with pho the gods, Polyvotis infuriated Poseidon and the angry sea god cut off a part of Kos and threw it at the giant. The rock, once called Polyvotis, became known as Nissyros.

Minos

The Minoan civilization, which existed from around 2700 to 1450 BC and shaped the history of Crete, was named after Minos,

Minoan mural from Knossos, Crete

the mythical king of the island. He was the son of Zeus, king of the gods, and Europa, and lived at Knossos. Minos features on Greek coins

Helios and Rhode

According to legend, Helios. the sun god, was a handsome Titan, who was cult worshipped on an island called Rhode (modernday Rhodes). The island takes its name from a nymph of the same name with whom Helios had fallen in love

The Lady of Ro

Born in 1890 on the Greek island of Kastellórizo, just off Turkey, Déspina Achladióti was forced to flee to nearby uninhabited Ro during WWII. She became a hero for raising the Greek flag every day even though Ro was not a Greek island. The flag is still raised today in memory of the Lady of Ro.

St Francis of Assisi

A friar of the Roman Catholic Church and founder of the Franciscans, St Francis of Assisi is said to have considered Kefalloniá a spiritual home. In the 13th century he founded the beautiful Moní Theotókou Sisión. near Lourdáta, as a refuge.

Sailing

The Greek Islands boast some of the best sailing waters in the world, as well as marinas and anchorages. Although tidal variation is minimal and the climate is mild. Climbing Mt Ida, winds can vary between the island groups and present a challenge for even the most experienced sailor. For example, in the Ionians, the maïstro wind tends to be gentler than the Aegean Sea's meltemi. which can reach gale force.

Fishing

The islands are known for their fishing harbours. While most of these are industry-driven to provide fish and seafood. such as octopus, lobster and shrimps for restaurants, others offer organised pleasure trips for holiday-makers. Among the harbours where boats leave for trips are Égina in the

Argo-Saronics, Pátmos in the Dodecanese and Fiskárdo in Kefalloniá

Walking

The islands offer fabulous countryside to explore on foot, with some areas, such as Crete's Samariá gorge

Arts and Crafts

Lace and Embroidery Lace and embroidered cushions, tablecloths and bread baskets are still handmade in many villages. Karvá in central Lefkáda is famous for its needlecraft. known as karsanía, and has a small museum dedicated to the craft. Tourist areas may have similar items, but these are often mass-produced.

Leatherware

Craftsmen can be seen in small workshops making leather sandals or the traditional kneehigh boots. Both are made by hand as they have been for centuries. Hand-crafted leather purses, handbags and belts are also popular souvenirs.

Ruas

The art of making a genuine sheep- or goat-wool rug, known as flokáti, has a long tradition in the Greek Islands. It dates from the 5th century, when mountain shepherds wore them for warmth. More recently they covered the stone floors of village homes. Nowadays, most rugs are made by machine.

Jewellerv

Gold and silver are a good purchase in the islands and main towns offer a wide choice of modern and traditional designs. Often the pieces echo ancient Greek styles. In Crete, for example, many items are styled on Minoan jewellery. Rustic handmade pieces may be found in the villages.

Copperware Nowadays, copperware

tends to be used for decorative purposes only, but iewellerv there was a time when local communities relied on the metal to make everyday household pots and pans. The traditional pot with a handle used to make Greek coffee, known as a bríki, is still in daily use.

Carved Wooden Spoons

Almost always made from olive wood, these beautiful spoons are products of a craft that has been handed down through generations. The wood is crafted into the shape of a spoon and its handle can be ornate or simply a figure. They are usually for display purposes and can be found in most gift shops.

Woollen rugs

Painted ceramics

Ceramics

Individual islands have their own style of painting ceramics. Égina is known for its more flowery designs, while Mýkonos artisans often paint traditional Greek figures. Villages are the best place to see authentic items. Rural ceramics tend to be unglazed rather than the colourful glazed items in gift shops.

Icons

Religious icons depicting the Virgin and Child, and saints and angels, have been created for centuries, many originating on Crete. St Luke is credited with being the first iconographer and his icons are considered sacred in the Greek Orthodox Church. Visit churches to see genuine icons, as those on display in gift shops will be mass-produced.

Beads

Known as kombolói (worry beads), these strings of beads can be found in gift shops, markets and jewellers throughout the islands. Greeks thread them through their fingers for relaxation. Some strings are coloured and worn as a fashion accessory.

Wall Hangings

Weaving thick cloth and mounting it on a top frame for hanging on a wall is an old craft still practised today. Locals will have several of these hangings in their home as decoration. Gift shops sell them as souvenirs.

Top 10 Popular Souvenirs

Festivals and Events

Festivals for Patron Saints

Ágios Nikodímos Day on Náxos and the Litany of Ágios Spyridon in Corfu are just two of the many festivals that take place around the Greek Islands through the year, commemorating each island's patron saint. Festivals usually involve parades, music, dance, fireworks and feasts.

Hippocrátia Festival, Kos

The annual Hippocrátia Festival's highlight is a recital of the Hippocratic Oath. Kos, Hippocrates' birthplace, celebrates with educational displays for children, folkloric exhibitions, music programmes and theatrical shows. The festival runs for several weeks from July to September.

Cultural Festivals

The islands are known for their festivals of art, literature, history and theatre. These include the Festival of the Aegean, held in Sýros each July, which involves opera and performances of Shakespeare. In May, Rhodes hosts its Medieval Rose Festival, while in August, Lefkáda hosts its Festival of Art and Literature.

Folklore Festivals

It is the tradition for every village in Greece to host a folklore festival (panegýri) at least once a year, usually during the summer. It is a time when people meet up with friends, feast together and dance.

Musicians play traditional songs, while dance troupes perform folkloric dances.

Religious Festivals

After Easter and Christmas, the most celebrated religious day is the Dormition of the Virgin, or Feast of Assumption, on 15 August. It is believed that on this day the Virgin, Mary the Theotókos, ascended to heaven. Families celebrate with prayer, a feast and traditional dancing and music.

Ochi Day

A public holiday on 28 October commemorates the day in 1940 when the Greek Prime Minister, Ioánnis Metaxás, rejected Mussolini's ultimatum to allow Axis forces to occupy parts of Greece. Metaxás said "ochi", meaning "no." It marked the start of Greece's involvement in WWII.

Easter festivities

International Festivals
Among the many festivals held on the islands are the Winter Festival in Kos which boasts international music and dance performers, the Argostóli
International Choral Festival in Kefalloniá (August), the International Puppet Festival in Ýdra
(July) and the International Music
Festival in Santoríni (September).

Name Davs

Most children born in Greece are given the name of a saint. On that saint's feast day everyone with the same name celebrates. For example, 7 January is the name day for loánnis (John). In Chaniá on Crete, many males with this name will visit the Church of Ágios loánnis and then have a party. Name days are more important than birthdays.

Town Carnivals

February is the carnival month on the Greek Islands, and every town puts on events lasting about a week, usually culminating in a procession of floats. Most people, especially children, wear fancy dress.

Food and Wine Festivals

A successful food harvest or wine year is celebrated in style. On Kos, for example, there is a Fish Festival and a Honey Festival in August, while Crete has a Chestnut Festival in October. All islands host a wine festival with live music, usually in September.

The Ionians

"HE GREENEST AND MOST FERTILE of all the island groups, the Ionian islands sit in turauoise waters off the western coast of Greece. They consist of six main islands: Kefalloniá, the largest, followed by Corfu, Paxí, Zákynthos, Itháki and Lefkáda. There are also many smaller inhabited islands including Andipaxi and Meganissi as well as clusters of tiny islets such as the Strofades. The islands have been populated by ancient Greeks, Romans, Byzantines, Venetians, French and British, all of whom have left their leaacy in traditions and architecture. They offer a fabulous combination of mountain and forest landscapes, beaches, bustling towns, idyllic villages and ancient sites.

Corfu Old Town, Corfu

At the heart of the capital and port of Corfu, the Old Town is a mixture of imposing fort-resses, cobbled streets, elegant squares and bustling harbour. It is the largest medieval city in Greece. It is an easy distance between the main sights, which include the fortresses, the Old Port, the French-inspired Listón and the Palace of St Michael and St George. To its south is the Mon Repos Estate (see p72), site of the ancient city Palaeópolis (see pp8–9).

Paxí

To the south of Corfu is Paxí, a pretty island covered in olive groves. Its busy capital, Gäios, sits in a harbour lined with tavernas from where you can relax and watch yachts sail by. In the bay are two islets, the fortified Ágios Nikólaos and Panagía, which provide a natural breakwater. Paxí has a rugged coastline interspersed with small coves and fishing villages like Longós and Lákka. Magaziá is famous for its sunsets. ® Map B2

Lefkáda

Vasilikí and Nydrí, along with the Pórto Katsíki beach (see p61), are popular tourist spots, while off-shore lie the Meganíssi, Madourí and Spárti islands (see p80). © Mao G1

Nydrí Waterfalls, Lefkáda

Lefkáda has a rare beauty where nature has created some spectacular gorges with sheer rock faces and amazing waterfalls. The Nydrí Waterfalls, which lie to one end of the Dimosári gorge near Perigiáli and Nydrí, are the most impressive. Underground caverns of water help fuel the cascades, which plunge at an alarming rate to crystalclear pools. The waterfalls are a wondrous sight and visitors can take a refreshing dip in the pools. § Map 61

Kefalloniá

The largest Ionian island, Kefalloniá is green and mountainous. It is known for its vineyards, subterranean waterways, caves and indented coastline. Its Mt Énos (Aínos) is over 1,600 m (5,200 ft) high and carpeted with almost black fir trees and old olive trees. Kefalloniá's main towns and villages include Sámi, the capital Argostóli, Fiskárdo, Skála and Lixoúri (see p76). © Map G2

Mýrtos Bay, Kefalloniá

Myrtos Bay, Relaidina Myrtos Bay is considered to be the most photographed bay on the island. Its waters are brilliant turquoise, created by a beach of white pebbles that glisten in the sunlight. The start of a life-long love of animals, Durrell's Corfiot years were later recounted in his Corfu Trilogy – My Family and Other Animals (1956), Birds, Beasts, and Relatives (1969) and The Garden of the Gods (1978).

Caves of Sámi, Kefalloniá

Sámi has an extraordinary network of subterranean waterways and caves. The huge Drogaráti cave, believed to be more than a million years old, has hundreds of stalactites and stalagmites, formed over thousands of years. With superb acoustics, the creatively lit cave is often used for cultural and musical events. Nearby is the equally famous Melissáni cave, said to have been the sanctuary of the god Pan. Its lake is deep blue, highlighted by the sun shining through a hole in the cave's roof. Other minor caves nearby are Angaláki, Zerváti, Ágii Theódori and Agía Eleoúsa.

Itháki

Itháki is famous for being mentioned in the works of Homer, and is thought to be the home of the mythological King Odysseus. It has a contrasting landscape with mountains and cliffs to the west and dense forest and pebble coves to the east. Its Heptanesian capital, Vathý, has buildings of traditional architecture, which look out over one of the world's largest

Zákvnthos

Zákvnthos is a gem of an island with high mountains clothed in cypress trees and some stunning beaches, the most famous of which are Navágio (see p74) and Laganás bay in the south. Its bustling capital, Zákynthos Town, was rebuilt to its original Venetian look and layout after being destroyed in the 1953 earthquake, Places to visit include the beautiful Blue Caves (see p36), where the sea has eroded the rocks into caverns.

Andípaxi

Lying to Paxí's south is the small satellite island of Andípaxi. with a population of less than 60 permanent inhabitants. It is a haven of clear turquoise waters and golden beaches, including Vríka beach, nestled in a sheltered cove, and nearby Voutoúmi beach. It is possible to take a walk along the coastal path that links the two. Andípaxi, which can be reached by boat from Gäios on Paxí, is covered with vineyards, which provide the grapes used to make its local wine. @ Map B2

Island Hopping Around the Ionians

Morning

(3) The Ionian islands are scattered over a large area and not given to island hopping in the same way as the other Greek island groups. However, it is still possible to get from one island to another relatively easily. Kefalloniá. Zákvnthos and Corfu, for example, all have airports offering domestic flights, while yacht charter companies offer boat hire. Ferries also ply between most of the islands.

> One of the most popular ferry routes is a day-trip to Paxí from Corfu. Start your day at the New Port in Corfu Town and look for the signs indicating where you can catch the Flying Dolphin hyrdrofoil. There is one that leaves at 8:30am on most days during summer. Do not worry if you miss it, there is a hydrofoil departure a little later, too. On board you can relax before disembarking at Gäios New Port on Paxí. The journey time is about an hour. In Gäios you can hire a car or taxi to take you around the island. Head to Longós for a delicious lunch at one of the waterfront tavernas.

Afternoon

After lunch take the road signposted to Lákka. Be sure to explore the town before driving south past the communities of Magaziá and Oziás, then back to Gäios. Take time to explore the harbourside. Eniov a meal and then hop on your hydrofoil, which departs around 7pm, for the return journey.

Delos

An open-air museum, the uninhabited island of Delos is a UNESCO site in its entirety. It has fabulous archaeological remains dating mostly from Hellenistic times, among them a sanctuary, the Sacred Harbour and a huge amphitheatre. The birthplace of Apollo and Artemis, ancient Delos was a major place of worship. The Ionians arrived in 1000 BC, bringing with them the idea of cult worship, followed by the Naxians, the Polykrates and the Athenians. Great wealth preceded abandonment in favour of Athens, but it remains one of Greece's foremost historic sites (see pp14-15).

Ándros is the northernmost island in the Cyclades. Life on this largely mountainous island revolves around the capital. Ándros Town, also known as Hóra, which boasts elegant Neo-Classical mansions in its pedestrianized centre, and a fascinating Archaeological Museum. The island's main settlements include Korthí, the inland medieval village of Mesariá, and Gávrio, while ancient Paleópolis lies near the west coast. The harbour wall that once protected it can still be seen just offshore. Map M4 • Archaeological Museum, Plateía Kaiiri, Andros Town: 22820 23664: closed Mondays and public hols; adm

Tínos

This holy island is famous for the church of the Panagía Evangelístria and its miraculous icon of the Virgin Mary, which attracts pilgrims throughout the vear. Tínos is an unspoilt, fertile island and one of the most picturesque in the Cyclades. Its landscape is dotted with appealing villages, windmills, hundreds of chapels, and magnificent dovecotes. Its inhabitants are known for their creative skills - marble sculptures and folk art can be seen everywhere. ® Map N5

Ermoúpoli, Sýros

Known as the "Queen of the Aegean", the city of Ermoúpoli on Sýros is the administrative and commercial capital of the Cyclades. In the 19th century it was Greece's leading port and had a thriving shipbuilding industry, which made the island very wealthy. The capital is built in the style of an amphitheatre around a deep harbour, one of several that line the coastline of Sýros. The island is mountainous, interspersed with fertile plains and villages, and cosmopolitan, offering fine beaches and various amenities.

Remote Islands

Visiting the more isolated islands is one of the best experiences in the Cyclades. Folégandros is a delight, with its lighthouse, Asprópounta, and tiny blue and white villages. It lies off Síkinos, famous for its squid fishing, which is just off los. Sífnos is especially popular with walkers, as is Kéa. Do not miss Anáfi, Kýthnos and Sérifos.

Páros and Andíparos

Páros is a popular European holiday destination and, as such, offers a huge choice when it comes to tavernas, restaurants and nightspots, especially in the main towns of Paroikía, the capital, and Náoussa. Inland are tinv mountain villages, with the former capital of the island. Léfkes - a charming hamlet of medieval houses and alleyways - being the highest. Nearby Andíparos, with its elegant cafés, centres on its Venetian Kástro and is amphora, Mýkonos popular for day trips from Páros. Frequent ferries link the two islands. @ Map E4

Mýkonos

Mýkonos is known for its marvellous beaches. Picturesque Psaroú and Eliá are two of the most popular, while Paradise and Super Paradise are livelier and popular with nudists. A roundthe-clock party island. Mýkonos revolves around its eponymous capital town, an agreeable place of alleyways and stone houses. many now housing restaurants and bars. Do visit Alefkándra, known as Little Venice, and the town's outstanding museums. Inland, the landscape is sprinkled with windmills and villages, full of traditional charm. @ Map P6

Náxos

7th-century

The centre of the Cycladic civilization during the early Bronze Age (3000-2000 BC). Náxos has a phenomenal history. It was one of the first islands to use natural marble, a feature of the ancient artifacts found at its archaeological sites and the material used for its landmark Portára gateway, said to be the entrance to a 5th-century-BC Temple of Apollo. Náxos is the largest of the Cyclades, with its bustling capital the most populated. It is an island of citrus groves, beaches and sea caves.

Santoríni

Crescent-shaped Santoríni owes its formation to a massive volcanic eruption that destroyed part of this once-circular island in 1450 BC. The resulting underwater crater has been associated with the leaend of the lost city of Atlantis. Santoríni remains at the centre of the South Aegean Volcanic Arc. Inhabited since Minoan times and named by the Venetians in the 13th century, this stunning island of dazzling white villages, museums, black-sand beaches, thermal springs and luxuriant vineyards is a quintessential Greek island. @ Map T1

In antiquity los was famous as being the burial place of the ancient Greek poet Homer, and each year a festival, the Omíra, is held in his honour. This mountainous island is speckled with hundreds of chapels and tiny villages, and its capital, Hóra, is an enchanting conglomeration of white houses, blue-domed churches and courtyards. There is also a continually growing number of tavernas and bars here. The island boasts some of the best beaches in the Cyclades, and has long established itself as a young people's party island.

Day Trip from Mýkonos to Delos

Morning

(3) After a hearty breakfast at your accommodation, head down to the quayside at Mýkonos Town and look out for the departure points marked for Delos (see pp14-15). There are ferries and many smaller boats to choose from. Timings vary according to the season and the weather conditions. so be sure to check in advance to ensure you arrive in good time. Take refreshments with you as there is a limited choice on the boats and on Delos. Most of the boats leave at around 10am for the 30-minute crossing. The sea can get a bit rough so be prepared. Once aboard, enjoy the sea breeze and your first alimpse of Delos ahead. On disembarking. head for the Maritime Quarter and see the Sacred Harbour, the Theatre Quarter, with its remains of mosaic-rich houses, the Sacred Lake, with its iconic terrace of lion statues, and the Sanctuaries of Apollo and Dionysos. There is a small restaurant in the Sanctuary of Apollo for a quick bite before you head back to Mýkonos.

Afternoon

Boats tend to leave Delos at 12:30pm, 1:30pm and 3pm, but again be sure to check as timings can vary. If you aim for the 3pm it will give you plenty of time to see the extensive archaeological site on Delos and absorb its atmosphere. Once back on Mýkonos, enjoy a leisurely afternoon siesta before a delicious meal at the taverna on the harbourside.

Crete

RETE HAS ALWAYS BEEN an island that captures the imagination, with some of the world's finest ancient sites, including the palaces of Phaestos and Knossos. The birthplace of Europe's oldest civilization, the enigmatic Minoan culture that flourished over 4,000 years ago, Crete was also ruled by the Romans, Byzantines and Venetians. Cretan resistance against occupation by the Ottoman Turks (1669–1898) and the Germans in WWII is legendary. The largest of the Greek Islands and the fifth-largest in the Mediterranean, mountainous Crete has a distinct culture and its own dialect. Its capital city is the cosmopolitan Irákleio, also known as Heraklion. Chaniá and Réthymno are its other two major towns, while the Samariá gorge is its top natural attraction.

One of the great city-state palaces of the Minoan period. this fabulous structure lav hidden for over 3,000 years before being discovered by Italian archaeologist Frederico Halbherr in the late 19th century. The wellpreserved sights include the grand staircase and the central courtyard (see pp20-21).

Palace of Knossos

 Knossos was the capital of Minoan Crete and its palace was an architectural marvel. The original palace, dating from about 1900 BC, was destroyed by an earthquake but was quickly rebuilt. The remains were discovered and restored by Sir Arthur Evans in 1878 (see pp22-3).

Samariá Gorge

Created over millennia by a river running between two mountains, the dramatic Samariá gorge is one of the longest and deepest canyons in Europe. Visitors can walk from the village of Omalós, along the 16-km- (10-mile-) long gorge to the coastal village of Agía Rouméli. Along the way are towering rock faces, springs and chapels, such as Ágios Nikólaos. Chaniá

A sprawling fortified city in the foothills of the Lefká Óri mountains. Chaniá was the citystate of Kydonia in ancient times. Along with Phaestos and Knossos. it was one of the most powerful cities during the Minoan period. Decline was followed by renewed importance under the Venetians. Chaniá was the capital of Crete until 1971. Today, life in the city revolves around its scenic harbour and the historic Spiántza Quarter, with its Venetian houses lining cobbled streets, modern restaurants and Traditional weaving, art galleries. @ Map D6

A Hike Along the Samariá Gorge

Have a hearty breakfast, pack plenty of snacks, a water bottle (which can be replenished in the gorge), sun cream and plasters before heading off on this approximately 6-hour trip. Wear light clothing but take a jumper as it can be cold at higher altitudes, and always wear a hat. You will need sturdy walking shoes.

Fully prepared, head for the village of Omalós. The best option, if you plan to hike the length of the gorge, is to go by bus because you'll be tired going home, but if you intend hiking just a short distance and returning to Omalós, there is a car park. Opening times can vary according to the weather, so be sure to check. Aim to arrive early.

From Omalós, make your way across the plateau before taking a sharp descent down the snaking path known as Xylóskalo. It is around 2 km (1 mile) long. Follow the signposted route, which will take you past chapels like the tiny Ágios Nikólaos and Óssia Maria, which has some fine 14th-century frescoes. You will pass the deserted village of Samariá and a landmark spot known as Sideróportes, where the path considerably narrows between towering mountainsides. Heading down the gorge, you will pass by the old village of Agía Rouméli, before reaching the new Agía Rouméli on the coast. about 6 hours since you started. Take a ferry to

The Northeast Aegean Islands

ACOLLAGE OF ANCIENT RUINS, fabulous beaches, quaint villages and lush countryside, this archipelago is one of the least touched by modern-day tourism. The group comprises the larger islands of Límnos, with its elegant capital Mýrina, Lésvos, famous for its olives, Híos, which is both beautiful and vibrant, Sámos, known for its potent Muscat wine, and quiet, unspoilt Ikaría. The group also includes Thássos, inhabited since the Stone Age and with a tourism-oriented present, and undeveloped Samothráki, both up near the Macedonian coast. Day Trip to Foúrni

Morning

 Foúrni can be reached easily by ferry from Vathý harbour or Pátmos harbour on Sámos and Ágios Kírykos on Ikaría. Foúrni Ferries and Greek Ferries are two of the companies serving the island. Departure and return times, as well as prices, vary, so do check in advance. After a hearty breakfast, head to the port of your choice. Most ferries leave between 9am and 10am and crossing times are short (under 20 minutes from Ikaría). Ferries pull into Foúrni's harbour, a lively place of working fishermen, who mingle with visitors and local families going about their daily business Promenade cafés offer the chance of a mid-morning coffee and snack. From here, head into Foúrni town which centres around its main square, linked with the harbour by a single tree-lined street. Take time to admire the traditional Eastern Aegean architecture and shop along the agorá, known locally as the 'shopping mile". Be sure to stop for lunch in one of the fish tavernas for which Foúrni is famous.

Afternoon

After lunch, take a short walk to Kambi, famous for its windmills, and Psili Ámmos, where there are some fine beaches and bays to explore. Alternatively, head north by car or boat to the small, sleepy village of Chrisomiliá, where life has changed little in many decades, before heading back to the harbour for your return crossing.

The Sporádes and Évvia

"HE SPORÁDES, GREEK FOR "SCATTERED", dot the Aegean Sea in an irregular fashion. Although some isles were inhabited in antiquity, they only really came to the fore in modern times as a haunt of the rich and famous. There are 24 islands, of which five are inhabited. These are Skiáthos, which became legendary in the 1960s for the stories of celebrities seen partying on expensive yachts, the holiday island of Skópelos and the quieter Skýros, Alónissos and Peristéra. All five islands are famous for their beaches and vineyards. Huge and unspoilt, Évvia has a long maritime history. In fact, its ports were among Greece's wealthiest in the 19th century.

Picturesque Skiáthos Town

Skiáthos Its 44-km (30-mile) coast is lined, almost exclusively, with soft sandy beaches that have made Skiáthos a popular holiday destination. The most famous beach is Koukounariés, where luxury yachts moor. A good range of hotels, restaurants and bars has steadily grown to cater to visitors, especially in the south, but despite this the island has managed to retain its rural charm. Inland, it has forests of pine, olive groves and mountains, with rural villages, churches and deserted monasteries dotting the land-

The skyline of Skiáthos Town is dominated by churches, including the island's cathedral of Trión Lerarchón Be sure to see the old quarter of Limniá, with its period merchants' houses. @ Map M1

Skópelos

Lush pine forests cover the island's two peaks, Délfi and Paloúki, and valleys of citrus groves, orchards and endless vineyards yield the delicious fruits and wines the island is famous for. Skópelos has many bays and fabulous sandy beaches, including the stunning beach of Limnonári. The main comiting are leasted in Slápalous.

of Limnonári. The main communities are located in Skópelos Town, Glóssa and the small port of Agnóndas. There are also hamlets with enchanting farmhouses, known as kalývia.

Map M1

Skópelos Town

The capital of Skópelos and its main port, Skópelos Town lies in a deep bay with traditional mansions and more than a hundred churches built in amphitheatre style. They, and the town's cobbled lanes, ascend to a hilltop kástro (fortress). The view from this Venetian castle is spectacular. The town is also the commercial hub of the island, its fishing harbour a hive of activity. It is known for having some of the best fish restaurants on the island. ® Map M1

Aléxandros Papadiamántis

One of Greece's most famous writers, Aléxandros Papadiamántis (1851-1911) was born on Skiáthos, His works, written in the country's then official language of Katharevousa, feature Skiáthos as their backdrop. They include the acclaimed The Murderess and the serialized Merchants of the Nations. He died a recluse on the island.

Alónissos

Alónissos, the third largest of the Sporádes, is relatively untouched by tourism. Its 3,000 or so residents live in or around Patitíri and Paleá Alónissos, with only a handful living in its more ruaged interior. Life here revolves around farming and working the vineyards. The island is known for its marine park. which offers protection to rare and endangered animal species, including the monk seal (see p45). The isle's craggy limestone coastline and nearby islets are a natural habitat for the seal. @ Map N1

Patitíri

Patitíri is the capital and main port of Alónissos, replacing the nearby old capital, known as Hóra. Its picturesque lanes are lined with traditional white houses that have red roofs and courtvards. Patitíri was built after Hóra was destroyed in the 1965 earthquake. The town radiates

Peristéra

Peristéra is one of several smaller isles and islets that lie off Alónissos but unlike Skantzoúra, Pipéri and Gioúra, which are home to rare wildlife, it is the only one inhabited by humans. A rugged isle separated from Alónissos by just two narrow stretches of water, it is popular with sailing enthusiasts who anchor off its shores. It has sandy beaches, plus the remains of an old castle to explore. ® Map N1

Day Trip to Alónissos

Morning

A great day out from Skiáthos or Skópelos is to take a ferry or hydrofoil to nearby Alónissos. Both the scenery and the pace of life are quite different here. Departure times vary according to the day and season, so check in advance the destination boards on the quayside marked to Patitíri, Alónissos. Most boats depart from 9:30 to 10:30am, so head for the quayside after a good breakfast. Boats leave from Skiáthos Town and take from 50 minutes to more than 2 hours to reach Patitiri, depending on the kind of boat. From Skópelos the journey takes only around 25 minutes.

On board the boat, enjoy the coastal scenery before disembarking at Patitiri. Check the time of your return ferry or hydrofoil as timetables do change. At Patitiri you can enjoy coffee or an early lunch before exploring the island. You can take a bus (timetables at the stop opposite the quay), or hire a taxi, car or bike. There are beach-hopping water taxis available too.

Afternoon

After lunch explore the port town of Patitiri before heading west to the old capital, Paleá Alónissos, perched precariously on a clifftop. Head north to the seaside village of Stení Vála, where you can enjoy a bite to eat at one of its tavernas. From here a road snakes towards the remote village of Yérakas (see p134). Retrace your steps back to Patitiri for your return journey.

The Argo-Saronic Islands

OMPRISING THE MAIN ISLANDS of Égina, Salamína, Póros, Spétses and Ýdra, with the traditionally Ionian Kýthira further south, the Argo-Saronics stretch some 200 km (125 miles) from Piraeus in Athens to the Peloponnese coast. Both Égina and Salamína were famous for their maritime activities, while Póros and Spétses are better known for their bustling modern capitals, ceramics and pine forests. Ýdra is cosmopolitan and remote Kýthira is one of the candidates for the birthplace of Aphrodite, the goddess of love. Smaller islets, such as Angístri, Moní, Trikéri and Spetsopoúla beg to be explored. The archipelago has a refined feel in many of its towns, and yet by contrast, small sailing caïques and mules form the only means of transport on some islands.

Temple of Aphaia, Égina

Famous for being where the world's first ever coins were minted in 700 BC and home to the impressive Temple of Aphaia, Égina (see pp26–7) is a pine-covered island with picturesque bays and beaches. Égina Town, its capital, hugs a natural harbour and multiple ferries from Athens arrive here daily. The island has enjoyed a lively past and much prosperity as a major maritime trading centre. Today, life quietly revolves around the production of pistachio nuts, considered the best in Greece. § Map L1 best in Greece.

Anaístri With a timeless charm and verdant landscape of pine trees, Angístri lies a short distance to the southwest of Égina and is a popular summer haunt of Athenian weekenders. Its main port is Skála, where there are a handful of hotels and restaurants, and the island's best beach, which runs along the coast from its church. In the past, the island has enjoyed reflected glory and wealth from Égina, and excavations at the sites of Megarítissa, Apónissos and ancient Metochí have revealed many valuable treasures. ® Map J2

Judgement. The monastery was used during the War of Independence (1821–9) as a hospital and refuge for women, children and Greek freedom fighters. In 1944, it was converted into a convent. Today, the monastery is a popular attraction for visitors and the nuns host a festival every year on August 23 in honour of the Virgin Mary.

A mythological Greek hero, Ajax was made famous in Homer's Iliad and Odyssey, both poems about the Trojan War, Ajax is said to have been born at Kanákia on the island of Salamína. The King of Salamis, Ajax was, according to legend, a man of great strength and was a fearsome warrior, like his cousin Achilles.

Póros lies a short distance from Galatás in the Peloponnese and is made up of two islands: the richly forested but almost uninhabited Kalávria to the north and Sfairiá to the south. They are connected by a causeway. Its harbourside capital, Póros Town, lies on Sfairiá and despite the rapid growth of its tourism industry has managed to retain its massive charm. Tiny streets, lined with pastelcoloured 19th-century houses clinging to the hillside, give the town its character. @ Map K3

Kýthira

Arriving on Kýthira island feels like stepping back in time. Tiny lanes flanked by dry-stone walls link dozens of hamlets with traditional blue and white homes. many showing elements of Venetian architecture. Kýthira lies south of the Peloponnese and was once governed by the Venetians and British as part of the Ionians, but is now an Argo-Saronic island. Day Trip from Égina to Angistri

Morning

Many ferries run between the northern Argo-Saronic islands daily, with one of the most popular day trips being between Égina and Angístri. Start your day with a good breakfast and head to the harbourside at Égina Town. The harbour is easy to find and big boards detail the ferry departure times. Look out for the one marked Skála, Angístri Island. The first ferry leaves at about 9:30am and then every couple of hours, but times do vary so be sure to check. Caïques also ply the waters at irregular times. The ferry crossing takes about 20 minutes. Look out for Moní island to your left and Metopí islet to your right, and then look ahead to capture your first glimpse of picturesque Skála. Once vou have disembarked. stop for coffee before making your way to the beach. You can also hire a scooter or bike to explore the island. If you are lucky, you may catch one of the infrequent buses that run from Skála to Limenária via the small port of Mýlos, all of which have tavernas for lunch.

Afternoon

On the steep hillside above Skála, Metochí provides a sense of the island's history and breathtaking views. Retrace your steps back to Skála in time to catch a return ferry. They leave around 5:40pm, but check as times can vary. Arriving back in Égina you can enjoy a delicious evening meal at one of the harbourside restaurants.

General Information

When to Go

The Greek Islands are primarily a summer destination, but the mild winter months are also great for an activity holiday. In the cooler months (December-February) snow can fall in the mountains, Average temperatures are around 26°C (79°F) in summer and 10°C (50°F) in winter.

Where to Go

The larger islands. such as Corfu and Kefalloniá in the Ionians. Rhodes and Kos in the Dodecanese, Mýkonos and Santorini in the Cyclades and Crete are ideal for beach holidays. while the smaller, more rural islands, offer a more relaxed pace.

Tourist Offices

There are tourist and tourist police offices in most main towns on the islands, but they would prefer you telephone with your enquiry rather than walking in. The exception is the airport desks, where information on hotels, car hire and attractions is available. The tourist police number for all islands is 171.

Passport and Visas

EU citizens visiting the Greek islands need only a valid passport and can stay for an unlimited period. Most other visitors, including citizens of the USA, Canada, New Zealand and Australia can stay for up to 90 days without a visa. Other non-FU citizens should consult the Greek embassy in their home country before departure, to be sure of having the correct documentation.

Customs

Duty-paid goods such as alcohol and perfumes for personal use are no longer subject to official limits within the EU, and there is no restriction on the amount of money you can bring in for holiday use. However, please declare large sums. The removal of archaeological artifacts is strictly prohibited. Non-EU citizens may be spot checked.

Currency

The currency of the Greek Islands is the euro. It comes in denominations of 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 cents and 1 and 2 euro coins, and banknotes of 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 200 and 500 euros. Visitors may bring in an unlimited amount of foreign currency, but large sums should be declared on arrival.

What to Take

If you take prescribed medicines, carry enough for your stay, along with a doctor's note. In terms of clothes, the islands have a relaxed way of life so take beachwear for resort-style holidays, casual wear for evenings, sports clothing and a jumper for cool evenings. Do pack sunscreen. aftersun and a sun hat.

Electricity

The standard current throughout the islands is 230V AC (50Hz), The plugs are two round pin variety, or three round pin for some appliances. Adaptors for British and transformers for some American appliances may not always be available. so carry what you need.

Children

The islands are familyorientated, with most attractions, hotels and restaurants providing amenities for children. Take care to prevent sunburn and on beaches. where there are often strong sea currents. Products like nappies are available in supermarkets, but if travelling with a baby on formula food, be sure to pack plenty, as the same brand may not be available.

Weddings

There's nothing more romantic than a wedding on a Greek Island beach. The procedure for civil marriages is straightforward, although church wedding formalities vary between the islands. Couples need to present the correct documentation before the big day. Many hotels have dedicated wedding planners.

10 Getting There and Around

Package Holidays Most visitors arrive on a package organized by a holiday company that includes inward and outward flights, accommodation and transfers to and from the airports. Package holidays tend to be beach or resort orientated, but specialist walking, sailing, diving and wedding packages are also available.

By Scheduled Fliaht

The Greek Islands are served directly by many European airlines and by intercontinental companies via domestic connections from the Flefthérios Venizélos international airport in Athens, Most flights arrive at the main airports, such as Corfu. Kefalloniá and Zákynthos in the Ionians, Haniá and Iráklio on Crete, Rhodes, Kos. Sámos and Skiáthos, Domestic flights link the islands.

By Charter Flight

Tour operators specializing in beach and resort holidavs. weddings and activity holidays fly charter flights into the main airports of the Ionians, Cyclades, Aegean, Dodecanese and Crete from key locations around Europe, Some fly throughout the year, while others offer a limited service in winter.

The island groups are well served by ferries. Many routes start in Athens and the city's Piraeus Port has dozens of boats leaving for Crete, the Cyclades, the Dodecanese, the North and South Aegean, and the Saronic Gulf, while other ports such as lgoumenítsa. Pátra and Kyllíni serve the Ionians.

By Yacht

There is a wide choice of marinas and anchorages for yachtsmen to disembark and come ashore. Among them are the Gouviá Marina and Limín Kérkvra Marina on Corfu, the Kos Marina, Ágios Nikólaos at Lassithi on Crete, the Marina Mandráki on Rhodes and the marinas at Skiáthos and Sýros.

By Cruise Ship

The islands appear on many cruise ship itineraries. These floating hotels can often be seen anchored a little way off Corfu Town's coastline or at the harbour of Zákynthos. Other popular ports of call include Rhodes and Pátmos in the Dodecanese. Santoríni and Mýkonos in the Cyclades and Crete.

Car Hire

All airports, resorts and many smaller towns have car hire company offices. You can hire a 4WD if planning to explore off-road or a minibus, if travelling with a group. Family cars are also available. A full driving licence held for at least a year is required. US licence holders must have an International Driving Permit.

Rules of the Road

Driving is on the right, with priority from the right at junctions. Observe speed limits and be especially careful while driving in mountainous areas or villages. Highways tend to be in good order. Children under 12 must not travel in the front.

By Bus

Most bus services are operated by local companies, Town harbours usually house bus stations. A journey can feel a little like stepping back in time, as many vehicles are older models. There are intercity buses linking major island capitals to Athens, which include the cost of the ferry.

By Taxi

It is generally easy to find a taxi on any of the islands. The main towns have taxi ranks and even the smallest villages have a vehicle available to hire. Taxis are metered and inexpensive, but if hiring a taxi for a day's sightseeing, it is a good idea to negotiate a fixed price beforehand.

10 Special Concerns

Sight and Hearing Difficulties

Few archaeological sites or museums around the islands provide their guides in a Braille format or have them adapted to audio for visually impaired visitors, or even versions of their narratives to assist those with hearing difficulties. However, the Greek Tourist Organization is keen to reverse this.

Wheelchair Access

Hotels and restaurants are now introducing ramps and bathroom facilities suitable for accommodating wheelchairs, but public buildings, museums and especially archaeological sites where the ground is uneven still present a problem for users. The Greek Tourist Organization has a leaflet designed to assist wheelchair users.

Travelling With Children

Children will adore the Greek Islands, especially if they are keen on sailing, snorkelling or playing on the beach, but care should be taken to avoid sunburn and accidents in strong sea currents. Supermarkets and pharmacies generally stock medicines and nappies, although in case of any special dietary needs, do carry what you require, as the same brands may not always be available.

Senior Citizens

Greek people are especially respectful of older folk and it is not uncommon to see all generations of a family dining together in a restaurant. Risks are few but can include heat exhaustion and dehydration, so wear a hat and drink lots of water.

Women Travellers

While Greece and its islands are generally safe for women travelling alone or in a group, some incidents have been reported, so normal care should be taken. It is advisable to avoid walking alone at night, accepting lifts from strangers and ensuring someone is always aware of your plans.

Gav and Lesbian Travellers

Many of the laid-back islands, such as Rhodes, Mýkonos and Santoríni, are open-minded when it comes to homosexuality. No longer considered an illegal relationship, homosexual couples are generally accepted, and some beaches, clubs and boat charter companies are now exclusively gay.

Special Diets

The Greek diet largely comprises meat, fish, vegetables and fruit, but dairy products such as voghurt and nuts are often used in dishes too. Visitors with diabetes, lactose or gluten intolerances, nut allergies, or those following a vegetarian or vegan diet need to exercise care. Some restaurants have vegetarian options and, with advance notice, will cater for special diets.

Student Travellers

The Greek Islands are popular with students and many companies specialize in student travel. Concessions are not usual for ferry, train or bus travel, but some museums and sites offer discounts, or even free admission, on production of a student identity card.

Travelling With Pets

There are strict rules on bringing pets into Greece and its islands. A pet must be micro-chipped and have an up-to-date rabies vaccination record. If travelling from another EU country it is possible to apply for a pet passport and some airlines will carry animals, but pets may have to be quarantined on arrival.

Smoking

Greeks are a nation of smokers and measures introduced by the government to ban smoking in public places are often ignored, or observed with reluctance. Restaurants may provide a smoking area, but in public buildings you will see no-smoking signs.

O Specialist Holidays

Archaeology

The fabulous palaces of Knossos and Phaestos on Crete. Paleókastro on Kefaloniá and the ruined temples on Corfu's Mon Repos Estate are some of the places that appear on holiday tour itineraries. In addition, the island of Delos is one of Greece's most important archaeological sites.

Island Hopping

The island groups lend themselves to hopping from one port to another. Numerous ferries ply between the islands. For example, in the Ionians it is easy to reach Paxí from Corfu, or from Nydrí on Lefkáda to Fiskárdo on Kefaloniá, or to Frikes on Itháki, while in the Cyclades you have the choice of visiting all the islands.

Wildlife

The islands and islets provide an ecosystem for many flower varieties as well as wildlife and bird species that can be seen on specialist holidays. The Aegean alone has some 80 indigenous plants, including the pancratium maritimum or sea daffodil, and some 300 resident and migratory birds, including the endangered Bonelli's eagle.

Walking and Hiking

While the hilly landscape can present challenges to the novice hiker, there are designated trails from long, difficult routes to small ones over flat terrain. Many take in sights too. For example. the Paleohóra to Vathý route on Itháki is a 4-km (3-mile) walk with a break at the Melissáni cave.

Cruising and Sailing

With a good choice of ports, marinas and anchorages, a mild climate with moderate winds most of the time, and tide movements that change by just a little each day, the waters around the Greek Islands are ideal for cruising and sailing holidays. Harbourside tavernas add to the charm of the experience.

Cooking

Greeks are famous for their love of food and some of their most delicious recipes are steeped in tradition. Covered by vinevards, the islands are known for their wine. The advent of cuisine-themed holidays is new to the isles but are gaining popularity. Wine tours are also becoming common.

Painting

Specialist companies and individuals do offer painting holidays, but this is one of the easiest types of breaks to do alone. The landscape of flowers and trees, tiny villages of white-washed. red-roofed stone buildings, harbours full of boats and crystal clear turquoise seas make this an enchanting place to capture on canvas.

Horse Riding

It is magical to take a trek through olive groves or farmland in the early morning or mid-evening. Centres under the Hellenic Equestrian Federation dot the isles. They include the Range Rodeo Riding Club, Corfu, Kos Riding Club and Rodo Riding Club Kadmos, Rhodes, & Hellenic Equestrian Federation 22990 49350 • www. equestrian.org.gr

Diving and Snorkelling

Seeing the underwater beauty of the islands has long been a popular holiday choice for many diving and snorkelling enthusiasts. Government regulated schools can be found in all the major coastal towns, each offering dives for novices and experienced divers.

ID Banking and Communications

The islands adopted the euro in 2001. replacing the long standing drachma. The euro comes in eight coins of 1, 2, 5, 10, 20, 50 cents, and 1 and 2 euros, and banknotes in 5, 10, 20, 50, 100, 200 and 500 denominations. Changing money to euros is quite easy, even in smaller towns.

Banks

The opening hours of the islands' banks are 8am through to 2pm on each weekday except until 1.30pm on Fridays. Banks are generally closed in the afternoons and on Saturdays, although in major tourist areas some banks stay open later. especially during the summer months.

ATMs

Smaller towns and even villages are catching up by having their own ATMs, but still these machines are usually only found in the main towns and in tourist areas. Operating round the clock and dispensing local currency, the ATMs generally accept all major cards.

Credit Cards

Visa, Mastercard, Diners Club and American Express credit cards as well as major debit cards, are almost always accepted by hotels, larger restaurants and shops in main towns. but cash is preferred in smaller establishments. Most village stores and tavernas only accept cash.

Language

Like the rest of Greece, islanders use modern Greek, which is derived from the ancient language used in the classical era and the New Testament of the Christian Bible, It uses the Greek alphabet. which has 24 letters from Alpha through to Omega. However, English is widely spoken because most Greeks have studied it to some extent.

Telephones

The Greek telecommunications company, Organismós Tilepikoinoníon Elládos (OTE), provides good service, although prices can vary with local calls being inexpensive and calls to neighbouring islands or international calls being quite expensive. Towns have telephone booths, as do some villages. Phonecards are available at kiosks.

Post Offices

Opening times are from around 7.30am to 2pm on weekdays. although larger post offices often stay open later and on Saturday, especially in holiday resorts. All major towns and most of the villages have post offices, which are easily identified by the blue and yellow signs that read tahydromío (post office). Letter boxes are bright vellow.

Internet

The fast-moving world of technology hasn't bypassed the islands. Many hotels now offer quests Internet facilities and every town and most villages have at least one Internet café.

Newspapers and Magazines

British and European newspapers are usually available in kiosks. supermarkets and hotel fovers the day after publication, although the mark up can be substantial. English and Greek language local publications, which tend to focus on current news and events, are available too, along with international magazines.

Television and Radio

Greece has state-owned television and radio stations that are broadcasted around the islands. There are also several privately-owned stations which provide a glimpse of local culture. Hotels tend to have satellite television installed for a choice of international news and lifestyle channels.

10 Security and Health

Numbers

In the event of an emergency dial 100 for police, 166 for an ambulance and 199 to alert the fire department. Dial 107 to find out the opening times of the nearest pharmacy. The coastquard can be called by VHF radio or by telephone on 108. Response times to emergency calls are generally good.

Police

There are two divisions of police in the Greek Islands: the tourist police, who monitor hotels, restaurants and venues catering to tourists, and the regular police, who handle incidents of crime. The tourist police can be contacted by dialling 171. English is widely spoken.

Ambulance

Medical facilities are generally good in the major towns, although less so in the villages. Ambulance response times are good, but, as few roads have names. be prepared to give details of sights when giving directions. Telephone 166 for an ambulance in the event of a medical emergency.

Fire

Like residents. visitors should look out for and report any fires. They ignite with some regularity in the height of summer and because of the tinder dry landscape flames can spread rapidly. For emergencies, call 199.

Health Insurance

Citizens of the EU are entitled to free emergency medical care as reciprocal arrangements are in place with Greece and its islands. Before travelling, visitors should obtain a European Health Insurance Card (FHIC) available from the Department of Health. The EHIC does not replace health insurance. Non-EU citizens should always have insurance.

Hospitals

Greek National Health Service facilities can be limited on the islands. although the larger towns have modern hospitals with accident and emergency departments. Staff usually speak English, Air ambulances are available, if necessarv, to fly serious cases to the state-of-the-art hospitals in Athens.

Doctors

As with dentists. doctors' private fees are payable immediately on treatment and a receipt is given for insurance purposes. Emergency medical situations should always be referred to a hospital, rather than a practitioner. Hotels can recommend local doctors who can assist with minor medical problems. Most will speak English well.

Dental Care

Dental practices are run on a private basis. with fees for emergency treatment payable immediately. Receipts are given for insurance purposes. Dentists have usually trained in Athens or further afield like the UK and, as such, the standard of knowledge and care throughout the islands is high.

Pharmacies

Pharmacists are highly trained and can advise on ailments as well as prescribe and dispense certain medicines. Identified by a green cross, pharmacies stock a large range of medication, although it is wise to carry prescribed drugs sufficient for your stay. Telephone 107 for information on timings for pharmacies.

Crime

The crime rate is especially low in the islands, although reports of theft and assaults tend to occur more frequently in the tourist areas than in the villages. It is wise to take sensible precautions, such as ensuring you do not keep all your documents or money together, watching your valuables and locking your car.

Budget Tips

Travelling Off-Season

Autumn, winter and spring in the Greek Islands can be glorious. Taking a package holiday during off-season is often much cheaper and offers an opportunity to explore the islands minus the crowds. Enjoy autumn colours or spring flowers and take walks in pleasant temperatures – all with great savings.

Cheap Flights

Explore the possibility of booking a low-cost flight and then accommodation separately. If you can be flexible on dates, you are likely to pay a lot less. Check the Internet or ask your agent for any last-minute deals, which can often be much cheaper than booking from a brochure months in advance.

Discounts

If planning ahead, check if the company offers discounts for early booking. It can amount to substantial savings. If you are a senior citizen or a student, do not forget that you may get a discount on entry charges to museums and archaeological sites with proof of age.

Self-Catering

Catering accommodation can be cost effective and lots of fun. It means you can experience the lively atmosphere of a local market, buy fresh produce and eat at home or head off into the forest for a barbecue like the locals. You also have the flexibility to try out the local tavernas.

Hostels

The islands have a long tradition of being an island-hopping, backpackers' paradise and a selection of hostel-style accommodation has developed. Although not luxurious and rarely offering a range of facilities, hostels are usually comfortable and can be a good place to stay for anyone on a budget.

Picnics

Picnics are a favourite summer Sunday event for Greek families. You will see all generations laughing and eating together in designated picnic spots that often overlook beaches or are located in pine forests. Fun to prepare with fresh, inexpensive produce from local markets, picnics are cheap and may even mean you can mingle with the locals.

Free Entertainment

Impromptu festivals with music and dancing or more organized open-air concerts are commonplace in towns and village squares throughout the islands. Many celebrate religious milestones, such as Easter or Lent, or derive from traditions such as when a successful harvest is gathered in. Visitors are always welcome to join in.

Camping

There are some great, inexpensive camp sites, many with restaurants, showers, supermarkets and, in some cases, leisure facilities such as a swimming pool. The most popular are those next to beaches, in forests or olive groves. In high summer you will need to book in advance.

Working Holidays

Holiday work tends to revolve around tourist areas and working as a holiday rep, in a restaurant or bar, or driving public vehicles provided you have the right qualifications, are all possibilities. EU citizens do not need a work permit, although they should register for residency after 90 days. Nationals of other countries need a work permit.

Hitchhiking

Hitchhiking is a good way to get around for travellers on a budget, and is generally accepted as a way of life here. In fact, it is a great way to meet locals who tend to be generous in giving lifts and information on what to do and where to go. Women travelling alone should exercise the usual caution.

10 Things to Avoid

Military Zones

Army, navy and air force military zones and bases tend to be clearly signposted and it is best to avoid them in case vour actions are misunderstood. Do not photograph any military personnel, or any building, vehicle or place that appears to be military, without permission.

Photography

Along with military premises and personnel, do not take photographs inside churches or monasteries as it is considered disrespectful. If you are planning to take pictures in a museum, a privately owned attraction or an archaeological site, always check if photography is allowed. Sometimes it is but without flash. Video equipment is treated the same.

Offending your Host

Greek people are extremely sociable and will often extend an invitation to you to dine with their family. Consider this an honour and expect a large gathering. Always take flowers. wine, chocolate or pastries for the host. Dress smart-casual unless dining in a top-notch restaurant.

Sunburn

Prolonged exposure to the sun should be avoided. Always apply plenty of high-factor sunprotection cream especially if swimming, and wear sunglasses and a hat. Fair-skinned people and children are particularly vulnerable to sunburn. Heat exhaustion is a serious affliction: take adequate precautions.

Dehvdration

Always drink plenty of water to avoid dehvdration. Carry water when visiting archaeological sites and outdoor attractions in particular, as drinking water is not always available. Bottled water is available from all supermarkets and kiosks. If you do get dehydrated, seek medical help.

Mosquitoes

Mosauitoes do not carry serious diseases in Greece but they can leave a nasty bite. Some people may even get a reaction to a mosquito bite, in which case a pharmacy should be able to advise. Wear repellent. especially after dark or when near stagnant water, and invest in a plug-in deterrent device.

Scams

Scams and hard-sell schemes, such as property or boat timeshare schemes, although rare in the Greek islands, do exist and tourists are often the victims. Take sensible precautions and be on your guard. If you are offered an opportunity that sounds too good to be true, it probably is. Read the small print before signing anything.

Crime

Always take care when carrying valuables, especially in crowded areas, and be sure to securely lock your vehicle or accommodation when leaving personal items behind. Crimes such as pick-pocketing, theft from cars and burglaries are rare but again, sensible precautions should be taken. Violent crime is extremely rare.

Drugs

The authorities have a zero-tolerance policy when it comes to the use or dealing of drugs and as a result the consumption of such substances is relatively low. Carrying drugs into the country can result in serious consequences. Take a note from your doctor if carrying prescribed drugs.

Dubious Clubs

Some of the larger resorts like to cater for all types of visitors and as such a selection of latenight clubs are available. Some are advertised as adults only". The authorities regularly monitor such venues to ensure they conform to strict auidelines but visitors wishing for a milder form of evening entertainment might do best to avoid them.

Dining Tips

The Greek Islands offer a fabulous choice of places to satisfy your tastebuds, from traditional tavernas to French, Italian, Oriental and even Mexican restaurants. However, do look out for restaurants in tourist areas that advertise "international" cuisine and have what appears to be an endless menu – chances are the food will be microwaved.

Restaurants

Tavernas

Look out for familyowned tavernas that have local specialities on the menu. Dishes, such as kléftiko (lamb slowcooked with herbs in a special domed oven), will almost certainly be freshly prepared. A stay in the islands wouldn't be complete without a meal at a traditional taverna.

Cafés and Snack Bars

Every village, however small, will have at least one café. These kafenías are an institution throughout the islands and act as the central point of a community. Generally, they serve just coffee, water and spirits, but some also serve sandwiches or light meals and are more akin to a snack bar.

Fast Food

American-style hamburger restaurants, pizza parlours and icecream shops have made their mark on the Greek islands and can be found in most major towns. The local equivalent is a souvlatzidiko, which sells delicious souvláki (chunks of pork or chicken chargrilled with herbs). Look out for bakeries offering freshly made pastries.

Vegetarians

Dishes such as vegetable moussakás appear on many tavernas' menus, although few restaurants are exclusively vegetarian. Greeks are a nation of meatlovers but because many fast for Lent as part of the Greek Orthodox tradition, recipes for fruit and vegetable dishes have been handed down through the generations.

Local Beers and Spirits

A range of excellent beers are brewed in Greece, such as the famous Mythos brand, while popular spirits include tsibouro, made from grape pulp, and the aniseed-flavoured oúzo, which turns white when water is added. There are local versions of white rum, brandy and other spirits, while Greece's traditional wine is retsína.

Water

It is completely safe to drink tap water in the Greek Islands. However, on some islands the water has a slight brackish taste as a result of the desalination process. Beware of restaurant staff pushing bottled water on you by claiming the mains supply is undrinkable or unsafe. While bottled water is available everywhere, filling up from the tap for excursions saves the use of excess plastic bottles.

Soft Drinks

A wide range of internationally known soft drinks, plus a selection of locally produced alternatives in bottles and cartons, can be found in supermarkets and kiosks. Fruit juices can be purchased in large cartons or smaller versions. Restaurants and bars will always have soft drinks.

Menus

Menus are usually written in Greek and English, although in smaller village tavernas they may be in Greek only. Some may not have a menu at all. Often diners are invited into the kitchen to choose their meal or are advised as to what is being cooked that day. Check the price before ordering.

Service Charges

A service charge is included in the price of meals on the menu. However, if the service you received was good then you might like to consider rounding up the bill or adding up to ten per cent as a tip.

10 Accommodation Tips

High and Low Season

Most hotels in the Greek Islands will have at least two sets of rates, one for the high season (around June to September) and one for the low season (October to May), The exception will be the Christmas, New Year and Easter holiday periods, when prices rise accordingly.

Package Holidays

The Greek Islands are a popular package-holiday destination. Normally including flights, accommodation, transfers to and from the airport and sometimes car hire and child care, a package can be less expensive and is a convenient way to arrange a holiday. especially for families.

Reservations

It is becoming easier to make reservations with hotels and resorts via the Internet, although the traditional way of making a booking by telephone and fax is still the norm. A credit card may be used to make a deposit, and confirmation is likely to be sent by email or post.

Booking Before You Go

While there are many hotels, resort complexes and villas of all star ratings on the islands, they can get booked up many months, even years, in advance by the big tour operators. Therefore, it is wise to book in advance in high season, or if you wish to stay at a particular location or have specific requirements.

Booking When You Get There

Some visitors might prefer the spontaneity of island hopping and selecting accommodation on arrival. Airports and ports generally have tourist information offices where local hotels, resorts, villas and camp sites can assist you in your search for a suitable place to stay. On some islands, proprietors still meet ferries.

Tipping

It is generally unnecessary to tip if a hotel employee has shown you to your room, although if the person has been particularly helpful or you are staying in a five-star hotel with porters, then you might like to tip a few euros. Chamber staff would also appreciate a few euros for their services.

Hotel Grading

Greek Island hotels and tourist accommodation is monitored by the Greek National Tourist Organization, It regularly monitors establishments to ensure its strict quidelines for facilities and services are met, and implements a grading system. Grades range from A for the best to E, plus an L grade for luxury hotels.

Apartments

Apartments designated for tourists come under the same Greek National Tourist Organization's classification system as hotels. irrespective of whether they are private or in a resort-style complex. Grades, and in turn prices. are dependent on the facilities offered, such as a communal swimming pool, a maid service and the number of bedrooms.

Villas

A villa holiday can be a good option for visitors keen on flexibility. Ranging from two-bedroom villas to large, luxurious residences. Always check if they come fully equipped. Most will include the use of a swimming pool with sun loungers. Like apartments, villas are graded and can be located in town centres or the countryside.

Rural Properties

A great way to sample local life is to stay in a private rural villa or in a villager's own home. Villas, which come under the grading system if designed for tourists, are often advertised privately or are available through a specialist company, while rooms can be found simply by asking at the local coffee shop.
