HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

This guide helps you get the most from a visit to Lisbon, providing expert recommendations as well as detailed practical information. The opening chapter Introducing Lisbon maps the city and sets it in its historical and cultural context. Each of the five area chapters, plus The Lisbon Coast, describe important sights, using maps, pictures and illustrations. Hotel and restaurant recommendations plus features on subjects such as entertainment and food and drink can be found in Travellers' Needs. The Survival Guide contains practical information on everything from transport to personal safety.

LISBON

Lisbon has been divided into five main sightseeing areas. Each of these areas has its own chapter, which opens with a list of the major sights described. All sights are numbered and plotted on an Area Map. Information on the sights is easy to locate as the order in which they appear in the chapter follows the numerical order used on the map.

Sights at a Glance lists the chapter's sights by category: Churches, Museums and Galleries, Historic Buildings, Parks and Gardens.

Street-by-Street Map

This gives a bird's-eye view of the heart of each of the sightseeing areas.

1 Area Map

For easy reference, the sights covered in the chapter are numbered and located on a map. The sights are also marked on the Street Finder maps on pages 166–79.

A locator map shows clearly where the area is in relation to other parts of the city.

Each area is indicated by a colour-coded thumb tab (see inside front cover).

Stars indicate the sights that no visitor should miss.

3 Detailed Information

All the sights in Lisbon are described individually. Addresses and practical information are provided. The key to the symbols used in the information block is shown on the back flap.

LISBON THROUGH THE YEAR 24-27

FOUR GREAT DAYS IN LISBON

It is in Lisbon's many hidden nooks and crannies that the city's capacity to surprise and to seduce is felt the strongest. Let yourself be distracted by its inspiring architecture, linger in enchanting squares and explore the city's Moorish legacy in the streets of the

Gold buckle in the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos

Alfama district. Sights listed here are cross referenced to the rest of the guide so you can learn more and tailor the day to your needs. The cost indications include travel, food and admission for two adults or in the case of the Family Day, a family of four.

HISTORIC LISBON

- The splendid Sé cathedral
- Charming Alfama and city views from the Castelo
- Lunch in the city's oldest streets
- Graça, Lisbon's highest hill

TWO ADULTS allow at least €70

Morning

Begin the day at Lisbon's Romanesque cathedral, the Sé (see p36), dating from the 12th century. Its cloister is now the site of an excavation of earlier, Moorish-era buildings. From the quiet of the cathedral set off into the warren of narrow lanes in Alfama (see pp32-3), then climb (or catch the 28 tram) to the Castelo de São Jorge (see pp38-9) and enjoy spectacular views of the city. Restaurants around the castle cater to tourists, but are not necessarily tourist traps. Stop here for lunch or head to cheerful Restô do Chapitô (see p131), a restaurant and performing arts school with breathtaking terrace views.

Afternoon

Graça, central Lisbon's highest hill, is a short tram ride or a steep walk away. It has a different feel to Castelo or Alfama – and fewer tourists. Enjoy views from the Miradouro da Graça (see p37) and stop for a coffee break at the open-air café under the pines by Igreja da Graça. Follow the tram tracks down Rua do Voz do Operário to the grand Renaissance façade of São Vicente de Fora (see p34). The adjoining monastery has classic azulejo tiled panels. Head to the nearby Santa Engrácia (see p35), one of Lisbon's most attractive churches. Then catch the 28 tram across town to Chiado (see pp52-3), where you can take a break from history and spend some time shopping, or take in the sombre but attractive ruins of the Igreja do Carmo (see p52). Round off the day with a visit to the Solar do Vinho do Porto (see p54) at the top of Bairro Alto and relax with a glass of one of their 200 types of port.

ART AND BULLS

- Contemporary art at impressive CulturGest
- Restored Neo-Moorish bullring
- World-class art and lunch at the Gulbenkian

TWO ADULTS allow at least €50

Morning

Check out the current exhibition and architecture at CulturGest (Caixa Geral de Depósitos building, 1 Rua do Arco de Cego), an important institution of contemporary culture. For a contrast, visit the delightful Moorish pastiche that is Campo Pequeno (see p80), Lisbon's bullring since 1892. In the same space on the south side is the impressive 17th-century Palácio Galveias, once the property of the ill-fated Távora family (see p71). This building now houses the Municipal Library. Walk to the exquisite Museu Calouste Gulbenkian (see pp76-9) where you can stop for lunch before visiting the stunning art collection.

Classical marble statue, Museu Calouste Gulbenkian

Afternoon

The Gulbenkian deserves a lot of your time as it is has one of the finest collections of art in the world. Within the complex there is also a museum of contemporary art, Centro de Arte Moderna (see p80) and a pleasant park. Climb the short distance to the top of Parque Eduardo VII (see p75) and stop at the delightful outdoor café Linha d'Água (see pp136–7). Stroll across the street that separates this part from the rest of Parque Eduardo VII and enjoy the view of Lisbon, extending down to the river and beyond.

Torre de Belém, one of the city's most recognized landmarks

A DAY BY THE RIVER

- Treasures old and new in Belém
- Dynamic Alcântara district
- Art and history at the Museu de Arte Antiga

TWO ADULTS allow at least €70

Morning

Take the 15 tram to Belém (see pp60–71), hopping off early if you want to walk the last section along the riverfront promenade. Set at the mouth of the River Tagus, Belém is particularly rich in history and sights. The Torre de Belém (see p70) and the magnificent Mosteiro dos Jerónimos (see pp66–7) are two of its must-see historic gems, while the Centro Cultural de Belém (see p68) is emphatically and strikingly modern. Belém is full of restaurants, particularly along Rua de Belém and parallel Rua Vieira Portuense.

Afternoon

After lunch, walk or take the tram back to Alcântara. This part of Lisbon has a special vibrancy with many nightclubs, restaurants and exciting urban renewal projects. East of this area, on the fringes of the tranquil Lapa district, is the unmissable Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga (see pp56–7).

A FAMILY DAY

- Explore the impressive, modern Parque das Nações
- Study ocean life at the city's enormous aquarium
- Visit animals at Quinta Pedagógica farm

FAMILY OF 4 allow at least €150

Morning

Begin by exploring Parque das Nações (see p81). The cable car ride here offers wonderful views of Europe's longest bridge, the Vasco da Gama. It is also possible to hire bikes, and there is an area for roller-skating and skateboarding. The city's immense aquarium, Oceanário de Lisboa (see p81), is the main attraction, so go early (from 10am) or at lunchtime to avoid long queues. Other highlights include the Pavilhão do Conhecimento – Ciência Viva, a hands-on science museum and the promenade along the river. For lunch, there are plenty of eating options in the park itself, from floating restaurants and riverfront esplanades to the fast-food court in the adjoining Vasco da Gama shopping centre.

Afternoon

A short metro ride and walk from Parque das Nações is the Quinta Pedagógica dos Olivais (Rua Cidade Lobito, Olivais Sul), a small city farm located in the middle of an urban residential area. It aims to educate children about traditional rural activities and crafts in Portugal. The main draw is, of course, the animals, which include the usual hens, geese, goats, donkeys, horses and cows. Organized activities have to be booked beforehand, but the Quinta is open to the public until 5:30pm.

Putting Lisbon on the Map

Lisbon, the capital of Portugal, is situated on the Atlantic coast, in the southwest of the country. It is approximately 300 km (180 miles) from the Algarve in the south and around 400 km (250 miles) from the Minho in the north. The political, economic and cultural centre of Portugal, the city lies on the steep hills on the north bank of the Tagus. The greater Lisbon area occupies around 1,000 sq km (300 sq miles) and has a population of 3.3 million. The city has become increasingly popular as a holiday destination and its proximity to the coast makes it an ideal choice for both sightseeing and sunbathing.

THE HISTORY OF LISBON

Over the centuries, Lisbon has both flourished and suffered. The city is most famous for its history of maritime successes, in particular the voyages of Vasco da Gama who first navigated a sea route to India. In recent years the city has flourished again, and it is now a major European centre of commerce.

According to myth, the Greek hero Odysseus (also known as Ulysses) founded Lisbon on his journey home from Troy. The Phoenicians are known to have established a trading post on the site in around 1200 BC. From 205 BC the town was in Roman hands, reaching the height of its importance when Julius Caesar became the governor in 60 BC.

With the collapse of the Roman Empire, barbarian tribes invaded from northern Europe. The Alans, who conquered the city in around AD 409, were superseded by the Suevi who in turn were driven out by the Visigoths. None of these tribes were primarily town-dwellers and Lisbon began to decline. In 711 North African Muslim invaders, the Moors, overran the peninsula and occupied the city for some 450 years. Lisbon was an important trading centre under the Moors and their legacy is evident today in the Castelo de São Jorge and the streets of the Alfama district.

St Vincent

The first king of Portugal, Afonso Henriques, finally ousted the Moors from Lisbon in 1147. Among those who helped was the English Crusader Gilbert of Hastings, who became Lisbon's first bishop. A new cathedral was built below the castle and, shortly afterwards, the remains of St Vincent, the patron saint of Portugal, were brought there. Lisbon received its charter early in the 13th century, but it was not until 1256, under Afonso III, that it became the capital.

THE REIGN OF KING DINIS

Under King Dinis, the son of Afonso III, the court at Lisbon became a centre of culture and in 1290 the University of Lisbon was founded. Dinis extended the city away from the castle, developing the Baixa, and Lisbon flourished as trade with Europe grew.

In the 14th century, the city continued to expand westwards along the river, despite the ruin caused by the Black Death, which spread throughout Portugal from Lisbon. In 1373, after Lisbon was sacked by Enrique II of Castile, Fernando I built a new line of fortifications to protect his 40,000 citizens and to redefine the boundaries of the growing city. When Fernando died without an heir, the throne was claimed by his illegitimate half brother, João of Avis, who defeated Juan of Castile, in 1385 at the famous Battle of Ajubarrota.

THE DISCOVERIES

Periodic outbreaks of plague continued to destabilize the economy and led to riots in Lisbon over grain shortages. Prosperity returned during the Age of Discovery (see pp20–21) when Vasco da Gama, setting out from Belém in 1497, successfully navigated a sea route to India. The resulting wealth from the spice trade made Lisbon the mercantile centre of Europe. In gratitude for this new-found prosperity, Manuel I ordered the building of the Torre de Belém (see p70) and the magnificent Mosteiro dos Jerónimos in Belém (see pp66–7); their ornate late-Gothic style, known as Manueline after the king, reflects the Discoveries in the exotic and nautical nature of the detailed sculpture on the two monuments.

Statue of Manuel I and St Jerome on the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos

The 16th century saw major developments: a new square, the Terreiro do Paço (now the Praça do Comércio), was built on the waterfront, and a new district, the Bairro Alto, sprang up to house the many merchants drawn to Lisbon. The Inquisition, a Catholic movement which persecuted heretics and non-believers, began a reign of terror.

Mass trials and executions of those that were condemned took place regularly in the Terreiro do Paço.

SPANISH CONTROL

The young King Sebastião I was killed at the battle of Alcácer-Quibir in a doomed attempt to invade Morocco in 1578. The lack of an heir led to conquest by Spain in 1580. Ignoring his advisers, Philip II of Spain refused to make Lisbon the capital of his extended kingdom and left the government of Portugal to a viceroy. The Spanish were ousted in 1640 and the Duke of Bragança crowned João IV.

With the discovery of Brazilian gold in 1697, Lisbon enjoyed a new wave of prosperity. From 1706, João V began an ambitious building programme in the city. The most valuable addition to Lisbon at this time was the Águas Livres aqueduct (see p84),

The battle of Alcácer-Quibir in Morocco, where 8,000 men were killed and 15,000 captured which was carrying water across the Alcântara valley just a few years before the devastating earthquake struck the city in 1755 (see pp22–3).

POMBAL'S VISION

Responsibility for rebuilding the ruined city fell to José I's chief minister, the Marquês de Pombal. Engineers drew up a plan that realigned Lisbon on a north–south axis and created a grid of streets with the Baixa at its heart. Pombal's vision was not continued by his successors; when the royal family fled to Brazil in 1807, ahead of Napoleon's invading army, Rio de Janeiro temporarily became the capital of the Portuguese empire, and Lisbon began to decline.

The Águas Livres aqueduct, completed in the 19th century

A suspension bridge across the Tagus was completed in 1966. Initially called the Ponte Salazar, it was later renamed Ponte 25 de Abril in commemoration of the peaceful Carnation Revolution in 1974 which finally ended the totalitarian regime instituted by Salazar.

MODERN LISBON

The years following the Revolution were a period of both euphoria and political chaos. Then, in 1986, Portugal joined the European Community and foreign companies began to set up in Lisbon. Under the leadership of the Social Democratic prime minister, Aníbal Cavaco Silva, Lisbon's economy recovered. Even the disastrous fire which swept through the Chiado district in 1988 failed to dampen the general optimism. To mastermind the rebuilding of this historic district, the city appointed Portugal's most prestigious architect, Álvaro Siza Vieira. Since then, Lisbon has enjoyed much prestige, and was voted European City of Culture in 1994. In 1998 the city hosted a World Exposition on the theme of the Oceans, in celebration of its maritime history. Today, Lisbon is a cosmopolitan city where the influence of its previous African and South American colonies is still widely evident.

REGENERATION

In the second half of the 19th century a period of economic revival and industrialization commenced. Railways and new roads were built, trams were introduced, modern drains and sewers were constructed and work began on the embankment of the Tagus. In 1908 the king was assassinated, and two years later the monarchy was overturned. Under António Salazar's lengthy dictatorship (1926–68), Lisbon's modernization continued at the expense of the rest of the country.

Soldiers in the Carnation Revolution of 1974 which ended the dictatorship

The Rulers of Portugal

Afonso Henriques declared himself Portugal's first king in 1139, but his descendants' ties of marriage to various Spanish kingdoms led to dynastic disputes. João I's defeat of the Castilians in 1385 established the House of Avis which presided over the golden age of Portuguese imperialism. Then in 1580, in the absence of a direct heir, Portugal was ruled by Spanish kings for 60 years before the Duke of Bragança became João IV. A Republican uprising ended the monarchy in 1910. However, in the first 16 years of the Republic there were 40 different governments, and in 1926 Portugal became a dictatorship under the eventual leadership of Salazar. Democracy was restored by the Carnation Revolution of 1974.

The Age of Discovery

Portugal's astonishing period of conquest and exploration began in 1415 with the capture of the North African city of Ceuta. Maritime expeditions into the Atlantic and along the West African coast followed, motivated by conflict between Christianity and Islam and the desire for commercial gain. Great riches were earned from the gold and slaves taken from the Guinea coast, but the real breakthrough for Portuguese imperialism occurred in 1498 when Vasco da Gama (see p68) reached India. Portugal soon controlled the Indian Ocean and the spice trade, and established an eastern capital at Goa. With Pedro Álvares Cabral's "discovery" of Brazil, Portugal became a mercantile super-power rivalled only by her neighbour Spain.

Magellan (c.1480–1521)

With Spanish funding, Portuguese sailor Fernão de Magalhães, known as Magellan, led the first circumnavigation of the globe (1519–22). He was killed in the Philippines before the voyage's end.

The Adoration of the Magi

Painted for Viseu Cathedral shortly after Cabral returned from Brazil in 1500, this panel is attributed to the artist Grão Vasco (c.1475–1540). King Baltazar is depicted as a Tupi Indian.

Armillary Sphere

This celestial globe with the earth in its centre was used by navigators for measuring the positions of the stars. It became the personal emblem of Manuel I.

African Ivory Salt Cellar

This 16th-century ivory carving shows Portuguese warriors supporting a globe and a ship. A sailor peers out from the crow's nest at the top.

Japanese Screen (c.1600)

This screen shows traders unloading a nau, or great ship. Between 1575 and their expulsion in 1638, the Portuguese monopolized the carrying trade between China and Japan.

HENRY THE NAVIGATOR

Although he did not sail himself, Henry (1394–1460), the third son of João I, laid the foundations for Portugal's maritime expansion that were later built upon by João II and consolidated by Manuel I. As Master of the wealthy Order of Christ and Governor of the Algarve, Henry was able to finance expeditions along the African coast. By the time he died he had a monopoly on all trade south of Cape Bojador. Legend tells that he founded a school of navigation in the Algarve, at either Sagres or Lagos.

KEY

--- Discoverers' route

The Spice Trade

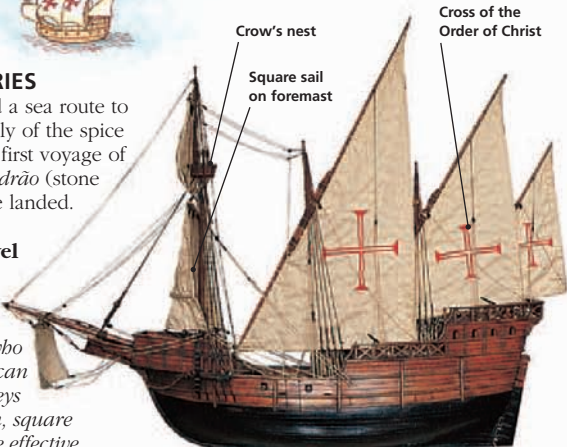

Exotic spices were a great source of wealth for Portugal. The much-disputed Moluccas, or Spice Islands, were purchased from Spain in 1528.

PORTUGUESE DISCOVERIES

The systematic attempt to find a sea route to India, which led to a monopoly of the spice trade, began in 1482 with the first voyage of Diogo Cão, who planted a padrão (stone cross) on the shores where he landed.

Lateen-rigged Caravel

These ships with three triangular sails were favoured by the first Portuguese explorers who sailed close to the African coast. For later journeys across the open ocean, square sails were found more effective.

The 1755 Lisbon Earthquake

Votive tile panel offered by survivors

The first tremor of the devastating earthquake was felt at 9:30am on 1 November. A few minutes later there was a second, far more violent shock, reducing over half the city to rubble. Although the epicentre was close to the Algarve, Lisbon, as the most populated area, bore the worst. Over 20 churches collapsed, crushing the crowds who had assembled for All Saints' Day. A third shock was followed by fires which quickly spread. An hour later, huge waves came rolling in from the Tagus and flooded the lower part of the city. Most of Portugal suffered damage and the shock was felt as far away as Italy. Perhaps 15,000 people lost their lives in Lisbon alone.

Some buildings that might have survived an earthquake alone were destroyed by the fire that followed.

The old royal palace, the 16th-century Paço da Ribeira, was utterly ruined by the earthquake and ensuing flood.

The royal family was staying at the palace in Belém, a place far less affected than Lisbon, and survived the disaster unscathed. Here the king surveys the city's devastation.

This detail is from a votive painting dedicated to Nossa Senhora da Estrela, given by a grateful father in thanks for the sparing of his daughter's life in the earthquake. The girl was found miraculously alive after being buried under rubble for seven hours.

This anonymous painting of the arrival of a papal ambassador at court in 1693 shows how Terreiro do Paço looked before the earthquake.

Ships crammed full of people fleeing the fire were wrecked and anchors thrown up to water level.

THE RECONSTRUCTION OF LISBON

Marquês de Pombal (1699-1782)

No sooner had the tremors abated than Sebastião José de Carvalho e Melo, chief minister to José I and later to become Marquês de Pombal, was outlining ideas for rebuilding the city. While philosophers moralized, Pombal reacted with practicality. "Bury the dead and feed the living" is said to have been his initial response. He then began a progressive town-planning scheme. His efficient handling of the crisis won him almost total political control.

The ancient castle walls succumbed to the reverberating shock waves.

Flames erupted as the candles lit for All Saints' Day ignited the city's churches. The fire raged for seven days.

Some of Lisbon's finest buildings were destroyed, along with gold, jewellery, priceless furniture, archives, books and paintings.

At 11am, tidal waves rolled into Terreiro do Paço. The Alcântara docks, to the west, bore the brunt of the impact.

REACTIONS TO THE DISASTER

French author, Voltaire

The earthquake had a profound effect on European thought. Eyewitness accounts appeared in the papers, many written by foreigners living in Lisbon. A heated debate developed over whether the earthquake was a natural phenomenon or divine wrath. Pre-earthquake Lisbon had been a flourishing city, famed for its wealth – also for its Inquisition and idolatry. Interpreting the quake as punishment, preachers prophesied further catastrophes. Famous literary figures debated the significance of the event, among them the French writer Voltaire, who wrote a poem about the disaster, propounding his views that evil exists and man is weak and powerless, doomed to an unhappy fate on earth.

Churches, homes and public buildings all suffered in the disaster. The Royal Opera House, here shown in ruins, was only completed in March the same year.

A CONTEMPORARY VIEW OF THE EARTHQUAKE

This anonymous German engraving of 1775 gives a vivid picture of the scale of the disaster. Many who fled the flames made for the Tagus, but were washed away in the huge waves which struck the Terreiro do Paço. The human and material losses were incalculable.

The reconstruction of the centre of Lisbon took place rapidly. By the end of November the Marquês de Pombal had devised a strikingly modern scheme for a grid of parallel streets running from the waterfront to Rossio. The new buildings are shown in yellow.

Modern-day Lisbon holds many reminders of the earthquake. Pombal's innovative grid system is clearly visible in this aerial view of the Baixa (see pp40–47). The scheme took many years to complete, and the triumphal arch that spans Rua Augusta was not finished until over a century later, in 1873.

LISBON THROUGH THE YEAR

While the summer months are the most popular for visiting Lisbon and have many events on the calendar – the Festas dos Santos Populares, in June, are one of the highlights of the year – spring and autumn can also be rewarding if you want to tour the Lisbon Coast. In late winter, the colourful Carnaval celebrations attract many visitors to Lisbon. Other events during the year include music festivals, sporting fixtures and the many religious festas, which are great times of celebration for the Portuguese people.

SPRING

With the arrival of spring-time in Lisbon, the café and restaurant terraces begin to fill with people. Many events, such as concerts, start to take place in the open air again as the weather improves. At the weekends the coastal resorts of Cascais and Estoril become livelier when on warm, bright days local people take day trips there to enjoy the seaside.

Formal military parades are held in Lisbon in celebration of Liberty Day

AVERAGE DAILY HOURS OF SUNSHINE

WINTER

Those seeking mild, sunny climes and an escape from the winter cold, will find this a good time of year to visit Lisbon. It is difficult to believe that this humble neighbourhood was once the most desirable quarter of Lisbon. For the Moors, the tightly packed alleyways around the fortified castle comprised the whole city. The seeds of decline were sown in the Middle Ages when wealthy residents moved west for fear of earthquakes, leaving the quarter to fishermen and paupers. The buildings survived the 1755 earthquake (see pp22–3) and, although there are no Moorish houses still standing, the quarter retains its kasbah-like layout. Compact houses line steep streets and stairways, their façades strung with washing.

Portugal's coat of arms in the treasury of the Sé

Long-overdue restoration is under way in the most dilapidated areas, but daily life still revolves around local grocery stores and small, cellar-like tavernas. Above the Alfama, the imposing Castelo de São Jorge crowns Lisbon's eastern hill. This natural vantage point, a defensive stronghold and royal palace until the 16th century, is today a popular promenade, with spectacular views from its reconstructed ramparts.

West of the Alfama stand the proud twin towers of the Sé. To the north-east, the domed church of Santa Engrácia and the white façade of São Vicente de Fora dominate the skyline.

Street-by-Street: Alfama

A fascinating quarter at any time of day, the Alfama comes to life in the late afternoon and early evening when the locals emerge at their doorways and the small tavernas start to fill. A new generation of younger residents has resulted in a small number of trendy shops and bars. Given the steep streets and steps of the quarter, the least strenuous approach is to start at the top and work your way down. A walk around the maze of winding alleyways will reveal picturesque corners and crumbling churches as well as panoramic views from the shady terraces, such as the Miradouro de Santa Luzia.

Also known as the Ricardo do Espírito Santo Silva Foundation, the museum was set up in 1953 to preserve the traditions and increase public awareness of the Portuguese decorative arts. The foundation was named after a banker who bought the 17th-century Palácio Azurara in 1947 to house his fine collection of furniture, textiles, silver and ceramics. Among the 17th- and 18th-century antiques displayed in this handsome four-storey mansion are many fine pieces in exotic woods, including an 18th-century rosewood backgammon and chess table. Also of note are the collections of 18th-century silver and Chinese porcelain, and the Arraiolos carpets. The spacious rooms still retain some original ceilings and azulejo panels.

In the adjoining building are workshops where artisans preserve the techniques of cabinet-making, gilding, book-binding and other traditional crafts. Temporary exhibitions, lectures and concerts are also held in the palace.

St Vincent was proclaimed Lisbon's patron saint in 1173, when his relics were transferred from the Algarve, in southern Portugal, to a church on this site outside (fora) the city walls.

Designed by the Italian architect Filippo Terzi, and completed in 1627, the off-white façade is sober and symmetrical, in Italian Renaissance style, with towers either side and statues of saints Augustine, Sebastian and Vincent over the entrance. The church is currently closed for restoration.

The adjoining former Augustinian monastery, reached via the nave, retains its 16th-century cistern and vestiges of the former cloister, but it is visited mainly for its 18th-century azulejos. Among the panels in the entrance hall off the first cloister there are lively, though historically inaccurate, tile scenes of Afonso Henriques attacking Lisbon and Santarém. Around the cloisters, the tiled rural scenes are surrounded by floral designs and cherubs illustrating the fables of La Fontaine.

A passage-way leads behind the church to the old refectory, transformed into the Bragança Pantheon in 1885. The stone sarcophagi of almost every king and queen are here, from João IV, who died in 1656, to Manuel II, last king of Portugal. Only Maria I and Pedro IV are not buried here. A stone mourner kneels at the tomb of Carlos I and his son Luís Felipe, assassinated in Praça do Comércio in 1908.

One of Lisbon’s most striking landmarks, the soaring dome of Santa Engrácia punctuates the skyline in the east of the city. The original church collapsed in a storm in 1681. The first stone of the new Baroque monument, laid in 1682, marked the beginning of a 284-year saga which led to the invention of a saying that a Santa Engrácia job was never done. The church was not completed until 1966.

The interior is paved with coloured marble and crowned by a giant cupola. As the National Pantheon, it houses cenotaphs of Portuguese heroes, such as Vasco da Gama (see p68) and Afonso de Albuquerque, Viceroy of India (1502–15) on the left, and on the right Henry the Navigator (see p21). More contemporary tombs include that of the fadista, Amália Rodrigues (see p145). A lift up to the dome offers a 360-degree panorama of the city.

Located on the site of a 16th-century cannon foundry and arms depot, the military museum contains an extensive collection. Visits begin in the Vasco da Gama Room with a collection of old cannons and modern murals depicting the discovery of the sea route to India. The Salas da Grande Guerra, on the first floor, display exhibits related to World War I. Other rooms focus on the evolution of weapons in Portugal, from primitive flints through spears to rifles. The large courtyard, flanked by cannons, tells the story of Portugal in tiled panels, from the Christian Reconquest to World War I. The Portuguese artillery section in the oldest part of the museum displays the wagon used to transport the triumphal arch to Rua Augusta (see p46).

Faced with diamond-shaped stones (bicos), this house looks rather conspicuous among the other buildings in this area. It was built in 1523 for Brás de Albuquerque, illegitimate son of Afonso, Viceroy of India and conqueror of Goa and Malacca. The façade is an adaptation of a style that was popular in Europe during the 16th century. The two top storeys, ruined in the earthquake of 1755 (see pp22–3), were restored in the 1980s, recreating the original from old views of Lisbon in tile panels and engravings. In the interim the building was used for salting fish (Rua dos Bacalhoeiros means “street of the cod fishermen”).

In 1150, three years after Afonso Henriques recaptured Lisbon from the Moors, he built a cathedral for the first bishop of Lisbon, the English crusader Gilbert of Hastings, on the site of the old mosque. Sé is short for Sedes Episcopalis, the seat (or see) of a bishop. Devasted by three earth tremors in the 14th century, as well as the earthquake of 1755, and renovated over the centuries, the cathedral you see today blends a variety of architectural styles. The façade, with twin castellated bell-towers and a splendid rose window, retains its solid Romanesque aspect. The gloomy interior, for the most part, is simple and austere, and hardly anything remains of the embellishment lavished upon it by King João V in the first half of the 18th century. Beyond the

the ambulatory has nine Gothic chapels. The Capela de Santo Ildefonso contains the 14th-century sarcophagi of Lopo Fernandes Pacheco, companion in arms to King Afonso IV, and his wife, Maria Vilalobos. The bearded figure of the nobleman, who is holding a sword in his hand,

SANTO ANTONIO (C.1195–1231)

To the chagrin of the Lisboetas, their best-loved saint is known as St Antony of Padua. Although born and brought up in Lisbon, he spent the last months of his life in Padua, Italy.

St Antony joined the Franciscan Order in 1220, impressed by some crusading friars he had met at Coimbra where he was studying. The Franciscan friar was a learned and passionate preacher, renowned for his devotion to the poor and his ability to convert heretics. Many statues and paintings of St Antony depict him carrying the Infant Jesus on a book, while others show him preaching to the fishes, as St Francis preached to the birds.

In 1934 Pope Pius XI declared St Antony a patron saint of Portugal. On 13 June, the anniversary of his death, there are celebrations in the Alfama district and a costumed procession along Avenida da Liberdade.

and his wife, clutching a prayer book, are carved onto the tombs with their dogs sitting faithfully at their feet. In the adjacent chancel are the tombs of Afonso IV and his wife Dona Beatriz.

The Gothic cloister, reached via the third chapel in the ambulatory, has elegant double arches with some finely carved capitals. One of the chapels is still fitted with its 13th-century wrought-iron gate. Archaeological excavations in the cloister have unearthed various Roman and other remains.

To the left of the cathedral entrance the Franciscan chapel contains the font where the saint was baptized in 1195 and is decorated with a charming tiled scene of St Antony preaching to the fishes. The adjacent chapel contains a Baroque nativity scene made of cork, wood and terracotta by Machado de Castro (1766).

The treasury is at the top of the staircase on the right. It houses silver, ecclesiastical robes, statuary, illustrated manuscripts and a few relics associated with St Vincent which were transferred to Lisbon from Cape St Vincent in southern Portugal in 1173. Legend has it that two sacred ravens kept a vigil over the boat that transported the relics. The ravens and the boat became a symbol of the city of Lisbon, still very much in use today. It is also said that the ravens' descendants used to dwell in the cloisters of the cathedral.

The popular little church of Santo António allegedly stands on the site of the house in which St Antony was born. The crypt, reached via the tiled sacristy on the left of the church, is all that remains of the original church destroyed by the earthquake of 1755.

Work began on the new church in 1757 headed by Mateus Vicente, architect of the Basilica da Estrela (see p55) and was partially funded by donations collected by local children with the cry “a small coin for St Antony”. Even today the floor of the tiny chapel in the crypt is strewn with escudos and the walls are scrawled with devotional messages from worshippers.

The church’s façade blends the undulating curves of the Baroque style with Neo-Classical Ionic columns on either side of the main portal. Inside, on the way down to the crypt, a modern azulejo panel commemorates the visit of Pope John Paul II in 1982. In 1995 the church was given a facelift for the saint’s eighth centenary. The working-class quarter of Graça developed at the end of the 19th century. Today, it is visited chiefly for the views from its miradouro (belvedere). The panorama of rooftops and skyscrapers is less spectacular than the view from the castle, but it is a popular spot, particularly in the early evenings when couples sit at café tables under the pines. Behind the miradouro stands an Augustinian monastery, founded in 1271 and rebuilt after the earthquake. Once a flourishing complex, the huge building is nowadays used as barracks but the church, the Igreja da Graça, can still be visited. Inside, in the right transept, is the Senhor dos Passos, a representation of Christ carrying the cross on the way to Calvary. This figure, clad in brilliant purple clothes, is carried on a procession through Graça on the second Sunday in Lent. The azulejos on the altar front, dating from the 17th century, imitate the brocaded textiles usually draped over the altar.

Following the recapture of Lisbon from the Moors in 1147, King Afonso Henriques transformed their hilltop citadel into the residence of the Portuguese kings. In 1511 Manuel I built a more lavish palace in what is now the Praça do Comércio and the castle was used variously as a theatre, prison and arms depot. After the 1755 earthquake the ramparts remained in ruins until 1938 when Salazar (see p17) began a complete renovation, rebuilding the “medieval” walls and adding gardens and wild-fowl. The castle may not be authentic but the gardens and the narrow streets of the Santa Cruz district within the walls make a pleasant stroll and the views are the finest in Lisbon.

BAIXA AND AVENIDA

From the ruins of Lisbon, devastated by the earthquake of 1755 (see pp22–3), the Marquês de Pombal created an entirely new centre. Using a grid layout of streets, he linked Praça do Comércio with the busy central square of Rossio. The streets were flanked by uniform, Neo-Classical buildings and named according to the shopkeepers and craftsmen who traded there. The Arco Triunfal was built 80 years later.

The Baixa (lower town) is still the commercial hub of the capital, housing banks, offices and shops. At its centre, Rossio is a popular meeting point with cafés, theatres and restaurants. The geometric layout of the area has been retained, but most of the buildings constructed since the mid-18th century have not adhered to Pombaline formality. The streets are crowded by day, particularly the lively Rua Augusta, but after dark the quarter is almost deserted.

After the earthquake of 1755 (see pp22–3), the Marquês de Pombal created the Passeio Público (public promenade) in the area now occupied by the lower part of Avenida da Liberdade and Praça dos Restauradores. Despite its name, enjoyment of the park was restricted to Lisbon's high society and walls and gates ensured the exclusion of the lower classes. In 1821, when the Liberals came to power, the barriers were pulled down and the Avenida and square became open to all.

The boulevard you see today was built in 1879–82 in the style of the Champs-Élysées in Paris. The wide tree-lined avenue became a focus for pageants, festivities and demonstrations. A war memorial stands as a tribute to those who died in World War I. The avenue still retains a certain elegance with fountains and café tables shaded by trees; however, it no longer makes for a peaceful stroll. The once majestic thoroughfare, 90 m (295 ft) wide and decorated with abstract pavement patterns, is now divided by seven lanes of traffic linking Praça dos Restauradores and Praça Marquês de Pombal to the north. Some of the original mansions have been preserved, including the Neo-Classical Tivoli cinema at No. 188, with an original 1920s kiosk outside, and Casa Lambertini with its colourful mosaic decoration at No. 166. However, many of the Art Nouveau façades have given way to modern ones occupied by offices, hotels or shopping complexes.

Formally called Praça de Dom Pedro IV, this large square has been Lisbon's nerve centre for six centuries. During its history it has been the stage of bullfights, festivals, military parades and the burning of heretics during the Inquisition (see p16). Today there is little more than an occasional political rally, and the sober Pombaline buildings, disfigured on the upper level by neon signs, are occupied at street level by souvenir shops and cafés. Centre stage is a statue of Dom Pedro IV, the first emperor of independent Brazil. At the foot of the statue, the four female figures are allegories of Justice, Wisdom, Strength and Moderation.

In the mid-19 century the square was paved with wave-patterned mosaics which gave it the nickname of "Rolling Motion Square". The hand-cut grey and white stone cubes were the first such designs to decorate the city's pavements. Today, only a small central section of the design survives.

On the north side of Rossio is the Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II, named after Dom

Pedro's daughter. The Neo-Classical structure was built in the 1840s by the Italian architect Fortunato Lodi. The interior was destroyed by fire in 1964 and reconstructed in the 1970s. On top of the pediment is Gil Vicente (1465–1536), the founder of Portuguese theatre.

Café Nicola on the west side of the square was a favourite meeting place among writers, including the poet Manuel du Bocage (1765–1805), who was notorious for his satires. Café Suiça, on the opposite side, is popular with tourists for its sunlit terrace.

Before the 1755 earthquake (see pp22–3) the square next to Rossio was the site of the Hospital de Todos-os-Santos (All Saints). In Pombal's new design for the Baixa, the square took on the role of the city's central marketplace. In 1885 a covered market was introduced, but this was pulled down in the 1950s. Today, the four-storey buildings are given over to hotels, shops and cafés and the square is no longer a marketplace. Perhaps its most eye-catching feature is the multitude of pigeons that perch on the pedestal supporting Leopoldo de Almeida's bronze equestrian statue of João I, erected in 1971.

Passengers can travel up and down inside the tower in one of two smart wood-paneled cabins with brass fittings; at the top of the elevator is a walkway, linking it to the Largo do Carmo in the Bairro Alto, 32 m (105 ft) above.

The very top of the tower, which is reached via an extremely tight spiral stairway, is given over to café tables. This high vantage point commands splendid views of Rossio, the grid pattern of the Baixa, the castle on the opposite hill, the river and the nearby ruins of the Carmo church. Street performers provide entertainment, while vendors sell lottery tickets, street art, books and souvenirs. The triumphal Arco da Rua Augusta frames the equestrian statue of José I in Praça do Comércio. Designed by the architect Santos de Carvalho to commemorate the city's recovery from the earthquake (see pp22–3), the arch was completed only in 1873.

The other main thoroughfares of the Baixa are Rua da Prata (silversmiths' street) and Rua do Ouro or Rua Aurea (goldsmiths' street). Cutting across these main streets full of shops and banks are smaller streets that give glimpses up to the Bairro Alto to the west and the Castelo de São Jorge (see pp38–9) to the east. Many of the streets retain shops that gave them their name: there are jewellers in Rua da Prata and Rua do Ouro, shoemakers in Rua dos Sapateiros and banks in Rua do Comércio.

The elaborate Manueline doorway of the church is the only feature that survived from the original 16th-century Nossa Senhora da Misericórdia, which stood here until the 1755 earthquake. The portal is decorated with a profusion of Manueline detail including angels, beasts, flowers, armillary spheres and the cross of the Order of Christ. In the tympanum, the Virgin Mary spreads her protective mantle over various contemporary figures. These include Pope Leo X, Manuel I and his sister, Queen Leonor, widow of João II. It was Leonor who founded the original Misericórdia (almshouse) on the site of a former synagogue.

Enjoyment of the portal is hampered by the constant stream of traffic along Rua da Alfândega and the cars parked right in front of the church. The interior has an unusual stucco ceiling; in the second chapel on the right is a statue of Our Lady of Restelo. library and 70,000 books, was destroyed in the earthquake of 1755. In the rebuilding of the city, the square became the pièce de résistance of Pombal's Baixa design. The new palace occupied spacious arcaded buildings that extended around three sides of the square. After the revolution of 1910 (see p17), these were converted into government administrative offices and painted Republican pink. However, they have since been repainted royal yellow.

The south side, graced by two square towers, looks across the wide expanse of the Tagus. This has always been the finest gateway to Lisbon: royalty and ambassadors would alight and take the marble steps up from the river. You can still experience the dramatic approach by taking a ferry across from Cacilhas on the southern bank. Parts of the busy Avenida Infante Dom Henrique, which runs along the waterfront, are lined with restaurants and bars. In the centre of Praça do Comércio is the equestrian statue of King José I erected in 1775 by Machado de Castro, the leading Portuguese sculptor of the 18th century. The bronze horse, depicted trampling on serpents, earned the square its third name of “Black Horse Square”, used by English travellers and merchants. Over the years, however, the horse has acquired a green patina.

Shaded arcades along the north side of Praça do Comércio

The impressive triumphal arch on the north side of the square leads into Rua Augusta and is the gateway to the Baixa. Opened in January 2001, in the northwest of the square, the Lisboa Welcome Centre has a tourist information service, gallery, restaurants and shops. In the opposite corner, stands Lisbon's oldest café, the Martinho da Arcada, formerly a haunt of the city's literati.

On 1 February 1908, King Carlos and his son, Luís Felipe, were assassinated as they were passing through the square. In 1974 the square saw the first uprising of the Armed Forces Movement which overthrew the Caetano regime in a bloodless revolution (see p17). For many years the area was requisitioned as a car park, but today this is a vast open space used for cultural events and festivals.

Laid out in a grid pattern in the late 16th century, the hilltop Bairro Alto is one of the most picturesque districts of the city. First settled by rich citizens who moved out of the disreputable Alfama, by the 19th century it had become a run-down area frequented by prostitutes. Today, its small workshops and family-run tascas (cheap restaurants) exist alongside a thriving nightlife.

Very different in character to the heart of the Bairro Alto is the elegant commercial district known as the Chiado, where affluent Lisboetas do their shopping. To the northwest, the Estrela quarter is centred on the huge domed basilica and popular gardens. The mid-18th century district of Lapa, to the southwest, is home to foreign embassies and large, smart residences.

The Bairro Alto (high quarter) is a fascinating area of cobbled streets adjacent to the Carmo and Chiado areas. In contrast, the Chiado is an area of elegant shops and old-style cafés that extends down from Praça Luís de Camões towards Rua do Carmo and the Baixa. São Roque's plain façade belies a remarkably rich interior. The church was founded at the end of the 16th century by the Jesuit Order, then at the peak of its power. In 1742 the Chapel of St John the Baptist (last on the left) was commissioned by the prodigal João V from the Italian architects Luigi Vanvitelli and Nicola Salvi. Constructed in Rome and embellished with lapis lazuli, agate, alabaster, amethyst, precious marbles, gold, silver and mosaics, the chapel was given the Pope's blessing in the church of Sant'Antonio dei Portoghesi in Rome, dismantled and sent to Lisbon in three ships.

Among the many tiles in the church, the oldest and most interesting are those in the third chapel on the right, dating from the mid-16th century and dedicated to São Roque (St Roch), protector against the plague. Other features of the church are the scenes of the Apocalypse painted on the ceiling and the sacristy, with its coffered ceiling, as well as painted panels of the life of St Francis Xavier, the 16th-century

The Gothic ruins of this Carmelite church, built on a slope overlooking the Baixa, are evocative reminders of the devastation left by the earthquake of 1755. As the congregation were attending mass the shockwaves caused the church to collapse, depositing tons of masonry on to the people below.

Founded in the late 14th century by Nuno Álvares Pereira, the commander who became a member of the Carmelite Order, the church was at one time the biggest in Lisbon.

Nowadays the main body of the church and the chancel, whose roof withstood the earthquake, house an archaeological museum with a small, heterogeneous collection of sarcophagi, statuary, ceramics and mosaics.

Among the more ancient finds from Europe are a remnant from a Visigothic pillar and a Roman tomb carved with reliefs depicting the Muses. There are also impressive finds from Mexico and South America, including ancient mummies.

Outside the ruins, in the Largo do Carmo, stands the Chafariz do Carmo, an 18th-century fountain designed by Ângelo Belasco, elaborately decorated with four dolphins.

Hypotheses abound for the origin of the word Chiado, in use since 1567. One of the most interesting recalls the creak (chiar) of the wheels of the carts as they negotiated the area's steep slopes. A second theory refers to the nickname given to the 16th-century poet António Ribeiro, "O Chiado". An area traditionally known for its intellectual associations, various statues of literary figures can be found here. Fernando Pessoa, Portugal's most famous 20th-century poet, is seated at a table outside the Café Brasileira. Established in the 1920s, this was a favourite rendezvous of intellectuals.

THE CHIADO FIRE

On 25 August 1988 a disastrous fire began in a store in Rua do Carmo, the street that links the Baixa with the Bairro Alto. Fire engines were unable to enter this pedestrianized street and the fire spread into Rua Garrett. Along with shops and offices, many important 18th-century buildings were destroyed, the worst damage being in Rua do Carmo. The renovation project, which is now complete, has preserved many original façades, and was headed by the Portuguese architect Álvaro Siza Vieira.

The name Chiado is often used to mean just Rua Garrett, the main shopping street of the area, named after the author and poet João Almeida Garrett (1799–1854). This elegant street, which descends from Largo do Chiado towards the Baixa, is known for its clothes shops, cafés and bookshops. Devastated by fire in 1988, the former elegance of this quarter has now been restored.

On Largo do Chiado stand two Baroque churches: the Italian church, Igreja do Loreto, on the north side and opposite, Nossa Senhora da Encarnação, whose exterior walls are partly decorated with azulejos.

Replacing a former opera house which was ruined by the earthquake of 1755, the Teatro de São Carlos was built in 1792–5 by José da Costa e Silva. Designed on the lines of La Scala in Milan, the building has a beautifully proportioned façade and an enchanting Rococo interior. Views of the exterior, however, are spoiled by the car park, invariably crammed, which occupies the square in front. The opera season lasts from September to June, but concerts and ballets are also staged here at other times of the year.

The National Museum of Contemporary Art, whose collection of 1850–1950 paintings could no longer be described as contemporary, changed its name in 1994 and moved to a stylishly restored warehouse. The paintings and sculpture are arranged over three floors in 12 rooms. Each room has a different theme illustrating the development from Romanticism to Modernism. The majority are works by Portuguese, often showing the marked influence from other European countries. This is particularly noticeable in the 19th-century landscape painters who had contact with artists from the French Barbizon School. The few international works of art on display include a collection of drawings by Rodin (1840–1917) and some French sculpture from the late 19th century. There are also temporary exhibitions which are held for “very new artists, preferably inspired by the permanent collection”.

This small puppet museum, housed in an elegantly refurbished convent building, includes characters dating from 17th- and 18th-century theatre and opera, among them jesters, knights, devils and satirical figures. Many of the puppets gress grotesque, contorted features that are unlikely to appeal to small children. The museum explains the history of the art form and runs videos of puppet shows. Call ahead to see if a live performance is being held on the small stage. There is also a space for pedagogical activities.

The Portuguese word solar means mansion or manor house and the Solar do Vinho do Porto occupies the ground floor of an 18th-century mansion. The building was once owned by the German architect, Johann Friedrich Ludwig (Ludovice), who built the monastery at Mafra (see p96). The port wine institute of Oporto runs a pleasant if dated bar here for the promotion of port. Nearly 200 types of port are listed in the lengthy drinks menu, with every producer represented and including some rarities. Unfortunately, many of the listed wines are often unavailable. All but the vintage ports are sold by the glass, with prices ranging from one euro for the simplest ruby to €70 for a glass of 40-year-old tawny.

The belvedere (miradouro) commands a sweeping view of eastern Lisbon, seen across the Baixa. A tiled map, conveniently placed against the balustrade, helps you locate the landmarks in the city below. The panorama extends from the battlements of the Castelo de São Jorge (see pp38–9), clearly seen surrounded by trees on the hill to the southeast, to the 18th-century church of Penha da França in the northwest. The large monastery complex of the Igreja da Graça (see p37) is also visible on the hill, and in the distance São Vicente de Fora (see p35) is recognizable by the symmetrical towers that flank its white façade.

Benches and ample shade from the trees make this terrace a pleasant stop after the steep walk up Calçada da Glória from the Baixa. Alternatively, the yellow funicular, Elevador da Glória, will drop you off nearby.

The memorial in the garden, erected in 1904, depicts Eduardo Coelho (1835–89), founder of the newspaper Diário de Notícias, and below him a ragged paper boy running with copies of the famous daily. This area was once the centre of the newspaper industry, however the modern printing presses have now moved to more spacious premises west of the city.

The view is most attractive at sunset and by night when the castle is floodlit and the terrace becomes a popular meeting point for young Lisboaets.

Laid out in 1860 as a prime residential quarter, the square still retains an air of affluence. Smartly painted mansions surround a particularly pleasant park with an open-air café, statuary and some splendid robinia, magnolia and Judas trees. The branches of a huge cedar tree have been trained on a trellis, creating a wide shady spot for the locals who play cards beneath it. On the large square, at No. 26, the eye-catching pink and white Neo-Moorish building with domes and pinnacles is part of Lisbon university.

Laid out in the middle of the 19th century, opposite the Basílica da Estrela, the popular gardens are a focal part of the Estrela quarter. Local families congregate here at weekends to feed the ducks and carp in the lake, sit at the water-side café or wander among the flower beds, plants and trees.

The formal gardens are planted with herbaceous borders and shrubs surrounding plane trees and elms. The central feature of the park is a green wrought-iron bandstand, decorated with elegant filigree, where musicians strike up in the summer months. This was built in 1884 and originally stood on the Passeio Público, before the creation of Avenida da Liberdade (see p44).

The English Cemetery to the north of the gardens is best known as the burial place of Henry Fielding (1707–54), the English novelist and playwright who died in Lisbon at the age of 47. The Journal of a Voyage to Lisbon, published posthumously in 1775, recounts his last voyage to Portugal made in a fruitless attempt to recover his failing health.

The tomb of the pious Maria I in the Basílica da Estrela

In the second half of the 18th century Maria I (see p109), daughter of José I, vowed she would build a church if she bore a son and heir to the throne. Her wish was granted and construction of the basilica began in 1779. Her son José, however, died of smallpox two years before the completion of the church in 1790. The huge domed basilica, set on a hill in the west of the city, is one of Lisbon's great landmarks. A simpler version of the basilica at Mafra (see p96), this church was built by architects from the Mafra School in late Baroque and Neo-Classical style. The façade is flanked by twin belltowers and decorated with an array of statues of saints and allegorical figures.

The spacious, somewhat awe-inspiring interior, where light streams down from the pierced dome, is clad in grey, pink and yellow marble. The elaborate Empire-style tomb of Queen Maria I, who died in Brazil, lies in the right transept. Locked in a room nearby is Machado de Castro's extraordinary Nativity scene, composed of over 500 cork and terracotta figures. (To see it, ask the sacristan.)

15th-century wood carving of St George

Portugal's national art collection is housed in a 17th-century palace that was built for the counts of Alvor. In 1770 it was acquired by the Marquês de Pombal and remained in the possession of his family for over a century. Inaugurated in 1884, the museum is known to locals as the Museu das Janelas Verdes, referring to the former green windows of the palace. In 1940 a modern annexe (including the main façade) was added. This was built on the site of the St Albert Carmelite monastery, which was partially demolished between 1910 and 1920. The only surviving feature was the chapel, now integrated into the museum.

Exploring the Collections of the Museu Nacional de Arte Antiga

The museum has the largest collection of paintings in Portugal and is particularly strong on early religious works by Portuguese artists. The majority of exhibits came from convents and monasteries following the suppression of religious orders in 1834. There are also extensive displays of sculpture, silverware, porcelain and applied arts giving an overview of Portuguese art from the Middle Ages to the 19th century, complemented by many fine European and Oriental pieces. The theme of the discoveries is ever-present, illustrating Portugal's links with Brazil, Africa, India, China and Japan.

EUROPEAN ART

Paintings by European artists, dating from the 14th to the 19th century, are arranged chronologically on the ground floor. Unlike the Portuguese art, which is located on the second floor, most of the works in this section were donated from private collections, contributing to the great diversity of works on display. The first rooms, dedicated to the 14th and 15th centuries, trace the transition from medieval Gothic taste to the aesthetic of the Renaissance.

Among the painters best represented in the European Art section are the 16th-century German and Flemish artists. Notable works are St Jerome by Albrecht Dürer (1471–1528), Salomé by Lucas Cranach the Elder (1472–1553), Virgin and Child by Hans Memling (c.1430–94) and The Temptations of St Antony by the great Dutch master of fantasy, Hieronymus Bosch (1450–1516). Of the small number of Italian works, the finest include St Augustine by the Renaissance painter Piero della Francesca (c.1420–92) and a graceful early altar panel representing The Miracle of St Eusebius of Cremona by Raphael (1483–1520).

PORTUGUESE PAINTING AND SCULPTURE

Many of the earliest works of art are by the Portuguese primitive painters who were influenced by the realistic detail of Flemish artists. There had always been strong trading links between Portugal and Flanders and in the 15th and 16th centuries several painters of Flemish origin, for example Frey Carlos of Évora, set up workshops in Portugal.

Pride of place, however, goes to the São Vicente de Fora polyptych, the most important painting of 15th-century Portuguese art and one that has become a symbol of national pride in the Age of Discovery. Painted around 1470–80, and generally believed to be by Nuno Gonçalves, the altarpiece shows St Vincent, patron saint of Lisbon, surrounded by dignitaries, knights and monks as well as beggars and fishermen. The accurate portrayal of contemporary figures makes the painting an invaluable historical and social document.

Later works include a 16th-century portrait of the young Dom Sebastião (1557–78) by Cristóvão de Morais and paintings by Neo-Classical artist Domingos António de Sequeira.

The museum's sculpture collection has many Gothic polychrome stone and wood statues of Christ, the Virgin and saints. There are also statues from the 17th century and a late 18th-century nativity scene by Barros Laborão in the Chapel of St Albert.

PORTUGUESE AND CHINESE CERAMICS

The extensive collection of ceramics enables visitors to trace the evolution of Chinese porcelain and Portuguese faience and to see the influence of oriental designs on Portuguese pieces, and vice versa. From the 16th century Portuguese ceramics show a marked influence of Ming, and conversely the Chinese pieces bear Portuguese motifs such as coats of arms. By the mid-18th century individual potters had begun to develop an increasingly personalized, European style, with popular, rustic designs. The collection also includes ceramics from Italy, Spain and the Netherlands.

Chinese porcelain vase, 18th century

ORIENTAL AND AFRICAN ART

The collection of ivories and furniture, with their European motifs, further illustrates the reciprocal influences of Portugal and her colonies. The 16th-century predilection for the exotic gave rise to a huge demand for items such as carved ivory hunting horns from Africa. The 16th- and 17th-century Japanese Namban screens show the Portuguese trading in Japan. Namban-jin (barbarians from the south) is the name the Japanese gave to the Portuguese.

SILVER, GOLD AND JEWELLERY

Among the museum's fine collection of ecclesiastical treasures are King Sancho I's gold cross (1214) and the Belém monstrance (1506). Also on display is the 16th-century Madre de Deus reliquary which allegedly holds a thorn from the crown of Christ. Highlight of the foreign collection is a sumptuous set of rare 18th-century silver tableware. Commissioned by José I from the Paris workshop of François-Thomas Germain, the 1,200 pieces include intricately decorated tureens, sauce boats and salt cellars. The rich collection of jewels came from the convents, originally donated by members of the nobility and wealthy bourgeoisie on entering the religious orders.

APPLIED ARTS

Furniture, tapestries and textiles, liturgical vestments and bishops' mitres are among the wide range of objects on display. The furniture collection includes many Medieval and Renaissance pieces, as well as Baroque and Neo-classical items from the reigns of King João V, King José and Queen Maria I. Of the foreign furniture, French pieces from the 18th century are prominent.

The textiles include 17th-century bedspreads, tapestries, many of Flemish origin, such as the Baptism of Christ (16th century), embroidered rugs and Arraiolos carpets.

BELÉM

At the mouth of the River Tagus, where the caravels set sail on their voyages of discovery, Belém is inextricably linked with Portugal's golden age of discovery. When Manuel I came to power in 1495 he reaped the profits of those heady days of expansion, building grandiose monuments and churches that mirrored the spirit of the time. Two of the finest examples of the exuberant and exotic Manueline style of architecture are the Mosteiro dos Jerónimos and the Torre de Belém. Today Belém is a spacious, relatively green suburb with many museums, parks and gardens, as well as an attractive riverside setting with cafés and a promenade. On sunny days there is a distinct seaside feel to the river embankment.

Generosity, statue at entrance to Palácio da Ajuda

Before the Tagus receded, the monks in the monastery used to look out onto the river and watch the boats set forth. In contrast today several lanes of traffic along the busy Avenida da Índia cut central Belém off from the picturesque waterfront, and silver and yellow trains rattle regularly past.

Stone caravel, Jerónimos monastery

Portugal's former maritime glory, expressed in the imposing, exuberant buildings such as the Jerónimos monastery, is evident all around Belém. In Salazar's (see p17) attempted revival of awareness of Portugal's Golden Age, the area along the waterfront, which had silted up since the days of the caravels, was restructured to celebrate the former greatness of the nation. Praça do Império was laid out for the Exhibition of the Portuguese World in 1940 and Praça Afonso de Albuquerque was dedicated to Portugal's first viceroy of India. The royal Palácio de Belém, restored with gardens and a riding school by João V in the 18th century, briefly housed the royal family after the 1755 earthquake.

Built by the Conde de Aveiras in 1559, before the Tagus had receded, this palace once had gardens bordering the river. In the 1700s it was bought by João V, who made it suitably lavish for his amorous liaisons.

When the 1755 earthquake struck (see pp22–3), the king, José I, and his family were staying here and thus survived the devastation of central Lisbon. Fearing another tremor, the royal family temporarily set up camp in tents in the palace grounds; the interior was used as a hospital. Today the elegant pink building is the residence of the President of Portugal.

The museum's collection of coaches is arguably the finest in Europe. Occupying the east wing of the Palácio de Belém, this was formerly the riding school built by the Italian architect Giacomo Azzolini in 1726. Seated in the upper gallery, the royal family used to watch their beautiful Lusitanian horses performing in the arena. In 1905 the riding school was turned into a museum by King Carlos's wife, Dona Amélia, whose riding cloak is on show.

Made in Portugal, Italy, France, Austria and Spain, the coaches span three centuries and range from the plain to the preposterous. The main gallery, in Louis XVI style with splendid painted ceiling, is the setting for two straight, regimented rows of coaches created for Portuguese royalty.

The collection starts with the comparatively plain 17th-century red leather and wood coach of Philip II of Spain. The coaches become more sumptuous, the interiors are lined with red velvet and gold, the exteriors are carved and decorated with allegories and royal coats of arms. The rows end with three huge Baroque coaches made in Rome for the Portuguese ambassador to the Vatican, Dom Rodrigo Almeida e Menezes, the Marquês de Abrantes. The epitome of pomp and extravagance, these 5-tonne carriages are embellished with life-size gilded statues.

The neighbouring gallery has further examples of royal carriages, including two-wheeled cabriolets, landaus and pony-drawn chaises used by young members of the royal family. There is also a 19th-century Lisbon cab, painted black and green, the colours of taxis right up to the 1990s. The 18th-century Eyeglass Chaise, whose black leather hood is pierced by sinister eye-like windows, was made during the era of Pombal (see p17) when lavish decoration was discouraged. The upper gallery has a collection of harnesses, court costumes and portraits of members of the royal family.

Also known as the Jardim do Ultramar, this peaceful park with ponds, waterfowl and peacocks, attracts surprisingly few visitors. Designed at the beginning of the 20th century as the research centre of the Institute for Tropical Sciences, it is more of an arboretum than a flower garden. The emphasis is on rare and endangered tropical and subtropical trees and plants. Among the most striking are dragon trees, native to the Canary Islands and Madeira, monkey puzzle trees from South America and an avenue of Washington palms. The oriental garden with its streams and bridges is heralded by a large Chinese-style gateway that represented Macau in the Exhibition of the Portuguese World in 1940 (see p62).

The research buildings are housed in the Palácio dos Condes da Calheta, whose interior walls are covered with azulejos spanning three centuries. Temporary exhibitions are held in the palace (closed 12:30–2pm).

A monument to the wealth of the Age of Discovery (see pp20–21), this monastery is the culmination of Manueline architecture in this period. Commissioned by Manuel I in around 1501, after Vasco de Gama's return from his historic voyage, it was financed largely by "pepper money," a tax levied on spices, precious stones and gold.

Various masterbuilders worked on the building, the most notable of whom was Diogo Boitac, replaced by João de Castilho in 1517. The monastery was cared for by the Order of St Jerome (Hieronymites) until 1834, when all religious orders were disbanded.

The walls of the refectory are tiled with 18th-century azulejos. The panel at the northern end depicts the Feeding of the Five Thousand.

Nave

The spectacular vaulting in the church of Santa Maria is held aloft by slender octagonal pillars. These rise like palm trees to the roof creating a feeling of space and harmony.

The chapterhouse holds the tomb of Alexandre Herculano (1810–77), historian and first mayor of Belém.

The chancel was commissioned in 1572 by Dona Catarina, wife of João III.

The tombs of Manuel I, his wife Dona Maria, João III and Catarina are supported by elephants.

★ South Portal

The strict geometrical architecture of the portal is almost obscured by the exuberant decoration. João de Castilho unites religious themes, such as this image of St Jerome, with the secular, exalting the kings of Portugal.

The Maritime Museum was inaugurated in 1962 in the west wing of the Jerónimos monastery (see p66–7). It was here, in the chapel built by Henry the Navigator (see p21), that mariners took mass before embarking on their voyages.

A hall devoted to the Discoveries illustrates the progress in ship-building from the mid-15th century, capitalizing on the experience of long-distance explorers. Small replicas show the transition from the bark to the lateen-rigged caravel, through the faster square-rigged caravel, to the Portuguese nau. Also here are navigational instruments, astrolabes and replicas of 16th-century maps showing the world as it was known then. The stone pillars, carved with the Cross of the Knights of Christ, are replicas of the types of padrão set up as monuments to Portuguese sovereignty on the lands discovered.

A series of rooms displaying models of modern Portuguese ships leads on to the Royal Quarters, where you can see the exquisitely furnished wood-paneled cabin of King Carlos and Queen Amélia from the royal yacht Amélia, built in Scotland in 1900.

The modern, incongruous pavilion opposite houses original royal barges, the most extravagant of which is the royal brig built in 1780 for Maria I. The collection ends with a display of seaplanes, including the Santa Clara which made the first crossing of the South Atlantic in 1922.

VASCO DA GAMA (C.1460–1524)

In 1498 Vasco da Gama sailed around the Cape of Good Hope and opened the sea route to India (see pp20–21). Although the Hindu ruler of Calicut, who received him wearing diamond and ruby rings, was not impressed by his humble offerings of cloth and wash basins, da Gama returned to Portugal with a cargo of spices. In 1502 he sailed again to India, establishing Portuguese trade routes in the Indian Ocean. João III nominated him Viceroy of India in 1524, but he died of a fever soon after.

The construction of a stark modern building between the Manueline splendour of the Jerónimos monastery and the Tagus proved controversial. Built as the headquarters of the Portuguese presidency of the European Community, the Centro Cultural de Belém opened as a cultural and conference centre in 1993. It stresses music, performing arts and films. An exhibition centre houses the Museu Coleção Berardo (see opposite).

Both the café and restaurant spill out onto the ramparts of the building whose peaceful gardens of olive trees and geometric lawns look out over the quay and the river.

Standing prominently on the Belém waterfront, this massive angular monument, the Padrão dos Descobrimentos, was built in 1960 to mark the 500th anniversary of the death of Henry the Navigator (see p21). The 52-m (170-ft) high monument, commissioned by the Salazar regime, commemorates the mariners, royal patrons and all those who took part in the development of the Portuguese Age of Discovery. The monument is designed in the shape of a caravel, with Portugal's coat of arms on the sides and the sword of the Royal House of Avis rising above the entrance. Henry the Navigator stands at the prow with a caravel in hand. In two sloping lines either side of the monument are stone statues of Portuguese heroes linked with the Age of Discovery. On the western face these include Dom Manuel I holding an armillary sphere, the poet Camões with a copy of Os Lusíadas and the painter Nuno Gonçalves with a paint pallet.

On the monument's north side, the huge mariner's compass was a present from the Republic of South Africa in 1960. The central map, dotted with galleons and mermaids, shows the routes of the discoverers in the 15th and 16th centuries. Inside the monument a lift whisks you up to the sixth floor where steps then lead to the top for a splendid panorama of the river and Belém. The basement level is used for temporary exhibitions, but not necessarily related to the Discoveries. Also within the monument is the Lisbon Experience, a multimedia show about the history of Lisbon and Portugal (www.lisbonexperience.pt).

The Padrão is not to everyone's taste, but the setting is undeniably splendid and the caravel design is imaginative. The monument looks particularly dramatic when viewed from the west in the light of the late afternoon sun.

The brainchild of business mogul and art collector José Manuel Rodrigues Berardo, this fascinating gallery boasts around 1,000 works by more than 500 artists. The Museu Berardo provides a rich compendium of a century of modern and contemporary art through a variety of media, from canvas to sculpture and from photography to video installations.

Among the highlights are Pablo Picasso's Tête de Femme (1909), a good example of the Spanish artist's Cubist style; several variants of Andy Warhol's famous Brillo Box (1964–8); Jeff Koons's Poodle (1991) and Balthus's Portrait de Femme en Robe Bleue (1935). Other artists on show include Piet Mondrian, Francis Bacon, Willem de Kooning, Richard Long and Henry Moore. There is also much Portuguese art on display, including Alberto Carneiro's sculptures, etchings by Paula Rego and dramatic black-and-white photographs by Fernando Lemos.

Manuel I

Commissioned by Manuel I, the tower was built as a fortress in the middle of the Tagus in 1515–21. The starting point for the navigators who set out to discover the trade routes, this Manueline gem became a symbol of Portugal's great era of expansion. The real beauty of the tower lies in the decoration of the exterior. Adorned with rope carved in stone, it has openwork balconies, Moorish-style watchtowers and distinctive battlements in the shape of shields. The Gothic interior below the terrace, which served as a storeroom for arms and a prison, is very austere but the private quarters in the tower are worth visiting for the loggia and the panorama.

The only decorative elements on the monolithic chapel are the four pinnacles, corner gargoyles and Manueline portal. Built in 1760, the church was founded by King José I in gratitude for his escape from an assassination plot on this site in 1758. The king was returning from a secret liaison with a lady of the noble Távora family when his carriage was attacked and a bullet hit him in the arm. Pombal (see p17) used this as an excuse to get rid of his enemies in the Távora family, accusing them of conspiracy. In 1759 they were savagely tortured and executed. Their deaths are commemorated by a pillar in Beco do Chão Salgado, off Rua de Belém.

The Neo-Classical domed church has a marble-clad interior and a small chapel, on the right, containing the tomb of Pombal. He died at the age of 83, a year after he had been banished from Lisbon.

The royal palace, destroyed by fire in 1795, was replaced in the early 19th century by this Neo-Classical building. It was left incomplete when the royal family was forced into exile in Brazil in 1807.

The palace only became a permanent residence of the royal family when Luís I became king in 1861 and married an Italian Princess, Maria Pia di Savoia. No expense was spared in furnishing the apartments, which feature silk wallpaper, Sèvres porcelain and crystal chandeliers. A prime example of regal excess is the extraordinary Saxe Room, a wedding present to Maria Pia from the King of Saxony, in which every piece of furniture is decorated with Meissen porcelain. On the first floor the huge Banqueting Hall, with crystal chandeliers, silk-covered chairs and an allegory of the birth of João VI on the frescoed ceiling, is truly impressive. At the other end of the palace, Luís I's Neo-Gothic painting studio is a more intimate display of intricately carved furniture.

FURTHER AFIELD

The majority of the outlying sights, which include some of Lisbon's finest museums, are easily accessible by bus or metro from the city centre. A ten-minute walk north from the gardens of the Parque Eduardo VII brings you to Portugal's great cultural complex, the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, set in a pleasant park. Few tourists go further north than the Gulbenkian, but the Museu da Cidade on Campo Grande is worth a detour for its fascinating overview of Lisbon's history.

The charming Palácio Fronteira, decorated with splendid tiles, is one of the many villas built for the aristocracy that now overlook the city suburbs. Those interested in tiles will also enjoy the Museu Nacional do Azulejo in the cloisters of the Madre de Deus convent. Visitors with a spare half day can cross the Tagus to the Cristo Rei monument. North-east of Lisbon is the vast oceanarium, Oceanário de Lisboa, in the Parque das Nações, which includes other family-oriented attractions, hotels and shops.

Modelled on the more famous Cristo Redentor in Rio de Janeiro, this giant-sized statue stands with arms outstretched on the south bank of the Tagus. The 28 m (92 ft) tall figure of Christ, mounted on a huge pedestal, was built by Francisco Franco in 1949–59 at the instigation of Prime Minister Salazar.

You can see the monument from various viewpoints in the city, but it is fun to take a ferry to the Outra Banda (the other bank), then a bus or taxi to the monument. A lift, plus some steps, takes you up 82 m (269 ft) to the top of the pedestal, affording fine views of the city and river.

Inspired by San Francisco's Golden Gate Bridge in the United States, this steel construction stretches for 1 km (half a mile). The lower tier was modified in 1999 to accommodate the Fertagus, a much-needed railway across the Tagus.

The bridge's notorious traffic congestion has been partly resolved by the opening of the 17-km (11-mile) Vasco da Gama bridge. Spanning the River Tagus from Montijo to Sacavém, north of the Parque das Nações, this bridge was completed in 1998.

At the top of the Avenida da Liberdade (see p44), traffic thunders round the “Rotunda” (roundabout), as the praça is also known. At the centre is the lofty monument to Pombal. The despotic statesman, who virtually ruled Portugal from 1750–77, stands on the top of the column, his hand on a lion (symbol of power) and his eyes directed down to the Baixa, whose creation he masterminded (see p17).

Detail representing agricultural toil on the base of the monument in Praça Marquês de Pombal Allegorical images depicting Pombal’s political, educational and agricultural reforms decorate the base of the monument. Standing figures represent Coimbra University where he introduced a Faculty of Science. Although greatly feared, this dynamic politician propelled the country into the Age of Enlightenment. Broken blocks of stone at the foot of the monument and tidal waves flooding the city are an allegory of the destruction caused by the 1755 earthquake.

An underpass, which is not always open, leads to the centre of the square where the sculptures on the pedestal and the inscriptions relating to Pombal’s achievements can be seen. Nearby, the well-tended Parque Eduardo VII extends northwards behind the square. The paving stones around the Rotunda are decorated with a mosaic of Lisbon’s coat of arms. Similar patterns in small black and white cobbles decorate many of the city’s streets and squares.

The largest park in central Lisbon was named in honour of King Edward VII of England who came to Lisbon in 1902 to reaffirm the Anglo-Portuguese alliance. The wide grassy slope, that extends for 25 hectares (62 acres), was laid out as Parque da Liberdade, a continuation of Avenida da Liberdade (see p44), in the late 19th century. Neatly clipped box hedging, flanked by mosaic patterned walkways, stretches uphill from the Praça Marquês de Pombal to a belvedere at the top. Here are a flower-filled garden dedicated to the memory of Amália Rodrigues and a pleasant café. From here there are fine views of the city. On clear days it is possible to see as far as the Serra da Arrábida (see p111).

Located at the northwest corner, the most inspiring feature of this rather monotonous park is the jungle-like Estufa Fria, or greenhouse, where exotic plants, streams and waterfalls provide an oasis from the city streets. There are in fact two greenhouses: in the Estufa Fria (cold greenhouse), palms push through the slatted bamboo roof and paths wind through a forest of ferns, fuchsias, flowering shrubs and banana trees; the warmer Estufa Quente, or hot-house, is a glassed-over garden with lush plants, water-lily ponds and cacti.

Near the estufas a pond with carp and a galleon-shaped play area are popular with children. On the east side the Pavilhão Carlos Lopes, named after the 1984 Olympic marathon winner, is now used for concerts and conferences. The façade is decorated with tiled scenes by azulejo artist, Jorge Colaço, mainly of Portuguese battles.

Museu Calouste Gulbenkian 6

Thanks to a wealthy Armenian oil magnate, Calouste Gulbenkian (see p 79), with wide-ranging tastes and an eye for a masterpiece, the museum has one of the finest collections of art in Europe. Inaugurated in 1969, the purpose-built museum was created as part of the charitable institution bequeathed to Portugal by the multimillionaire. The design of the building, set in a spacious park allowing natural light to fill some of the rooms, was devised to create the best layout for the founder's varied collection.

Exploring the Gulbenkian Collection

Housing Calouste Gulbenkian's unique collection of art, the museum ranks with the Museu de Arte Antiga (see pp56–9) as the finest in Lisbon. The exhibits, which span over 4,000 years from ancient Egyptian statuettes, through translucent Islamic glassware, to Art Nouveau brooches, are displayed in spacious and well-lit galleries, many overlooking the gardens or courtyards. The museum is quite small, however each individual work of art, from the magnificent pieces that make up the rich display of Oriental and Islamic art, to the selection of European paintings and furniture, is worthy of attention.

EGYPTIAN, CLASSICAL AND MESOPOTAMIAN ART

Priceless treasures chart the evolution of Egyptian art from the Old Kingdom (c.2700 BC) to the Roman Period (1st century BC). The exhibits range from an alabaster bowl of the 3rd Dynasty to a surprisingly modern-looking blue terracotta torso of a statuette of Venus Anadyomene from the Roman period.

Outstanding pieces in the Classical art section are a magnificent red-figure Greek vase and 11 Roman medallions, found in Egypt. These are believed to have been struck to commemorate the athletic games held in Macedonia in AD 242 in honour of Alexander the Great. In the Mesopotamian art section the large alabaster bas-relief represents the winged genius of Spring, carrying a container of sacred water (9th century BC).

5th-century BC Greek vase

ORIENTAL ISLAMIC ART

Being Armenian, Calouste Gulbenkian had a keen interest in art from the Near and Middle East. The Oriental Islamic gallery has a fine collection of Persian and Turkish carpets, textiles, costumes and ceramics. In the section overlooking the courtyard, the Syrian mosque lamps and bottles commissioned by princes and sultans, are beautifully decorated with coloured enamel on glass. The Armenian section has some exquisite illustrated manuscripts from the 16th to 18th centuries, produced by Armenian refugees in Istanbul, Persia and the Crimea.

Late 16th-century Persian faience tile from the School of Isfahan

FAR EASTERN ART

Calouste Gulbenkian acquired a large collection of Chinese porcelain between 1910 and 1930. One of the rarest pieces is the small blue-glazed bowl from the Yüan Dynasty (1279–1368), on the right as you go into the gallery. The majority of exhibits, however, are the later, more exuberantly decorated famille verte porcelain and the K'ang Hsi biscuitware of the 17th and 18th centuries. Further exhibits from the Far East are translucent Chinese jades and other semi-precious stones, Japanese prints, brocaded silk hangings and bound books, and lacquerwork.

EUROPEAN ART (14TH–17TH CENTURIES)

Illuminated manuscripts, rare-printed books and medieval ivories introduce the section on Western art. The delicately sculpted 14th-century ivory diptychs and triptychs, made in France, show scenes from the lives of Christ and the Virgin.

The collection of early European paintings starts with panels of St Joseph and St Catherine by Rogier van der Weyden, leading painter of the mid-15th century in Flanders. Italian Renaissance painting is represented by Cima da Conegliano's Sacra Conversazione from the late 15th century and Domenico Ghirlandaio's Portrait of a Young Woman (1485).

The collection progresses to Flemish and Dutch works of the 17th century, including two works by Rembrandt:

Portrait of an Old Man (1645),

French ivory triptych of Scenes from the Life of the Virgin (14th century)

a masterpiece of psychological penetration, and Alexander the Great (1660), said to have been modelled on Rembrandt's son, Titus, and previously thought to have portrayed the Greek goddess Pallas Athena. Rubens is represented by three paintings, the most remarkable of which is the Portrait of Hélène Fourment (1630), the artist's second wife.

The gallery beyond the Dutch and Flemish paintings has tapestries and textiles from Italy and Flanders, Italian ceramics, rare 15th-century medallions and sculpture.

FRENCH 18TH-CENTURY DECORATIVE ARTS

Some remarkably elaborate Louis XV and Louis XVI pieces, many commissioned by royalty, feature in the collection of French 18th-century furniture. The exhibits, many of them embellished with laquer panels, ebony and bronze, are grouped together according to historical style with Beauvais and "chinoiserie" Aubusson tapestries decorating the walls.

The French silverware from the same period, much of which once adorned the dining tables of Russian palaces, includes lavishly decorated soup tureens, salt-cellars and platters.

Louis XV chest of drawers inlaid with ebony and bronze

EUROPEAN ART (18TH–19TH CENTURIES)

The art of the 18th century is dominated by French painters, including Watteau (1684–1721), Fragonard (1732–1806) and Boucher (1703–70). The most celebrated piece of sculpture is a statue of Diana by Jean-Antoine Houdon. Commissioned in 1780 by the Duke of Saxe-Gotha for his gardens, it became one of the principal exhibits in the Hermitage in Russia during the 19th and early 20th centuries.

One whole room is devoted to views of Venice by the 18th-century Venetian painter Francesco Guardi, and a small collection of British art includes works by leading 18th-century portraitists, such as Gainsborough's Portrait of Mrs Loundes-Stone (c.1775) and Romney's Portrait of Mrs Constable (1787). There are also two stormy seascapes by JMW Turner (1775–1851).

French 19th-century landscape painting is well represented here, reflecting Gulbenkian's preference for naturalism, with works by the Barbizon school, the Realists and the Impressionists. The best-known paintings in the section, however, are probably Manet's Boy with Cherries, painted in about 1858 at the beginning of the artist's career, and Boy Blowing Bubbles, painted about 1867. Renoir's Portrait of Madame Claude Monet was painted in about 1872 when the artist was staying with Monet at his country home in Argenteuil, in the outskirts of Paris.

LALIQUE COLLECTION

The tour of the museum ends with an entire room filled with the flamboyant creations of French Art Nouveau jeweller, René Lalique (1860–1945). Gulbenkian was a close friend of Lalique's and he acquired many of the pieces of jewellery, glassware and ivory on display here directly from the artist. Inlaid with semi-precious stones and covered with enamel or gold leaf, the brooches, necklaces, vases and combs are decorated with the dragonfly, peacock or sensual female nude motifs characteristic of Art Nouveau.

CALOUSTE GULBENKIAN

Born in Scutari (Turkey) in 1869, Gulbenkian started his art collection at the age of 14 when he bought some ancient coins in a bazaar. In 1928 he was granted a 5 per cent stake in four major oil companies, including BP and Shell, in thanks for his part in the transfer of the assets of the Turkish Petroleum Company to those four companies. He thereby earned himself the nickname of "Mr Five Percent". With the wealth he accumulated, Gulbenkian was able to indulge his passion for fine works of art. During World War II, he went to live in neutral Portugal and, on his death in 1955, bequeathed his estate to the Portuguese in the form of a charitable trust. The Foundation supports many cultural activities and has its own orchestra, libraries, ballet company and concert halls.

The Modern Art Museum lies across the gardens from the Calouste Gulbenkian museum and is part of the same cultural foundation (see p79).

The permanent collection features paintings and sculpture by Portuguese artists from the turn of the 20th century to the present day.

The most famous painting is the striking portrait of poet Fernando Pessoa in the Café Irmãos Unidos (1964) by José de Almada Negreiros (1893–1970), a main exponent of Portuguese Modernism. Also of interest are paintings by Eduardo Viana (1881–1967), Amadeo de Sousa Cardoso (1887–1910), as well as contemporary artists such as Paula Rego, Rui Sanches, Graça Morais and Teresa Magalhães.

The museum is light and spacious, with pleasant gardens and a busy cafeteria.

Dedicated to the history of Lisbon's water supply, this small but informative museum was imaginatively created around the city's first steam pumping station. It commemorates Manuel da Maia, the 18th-century engineer who masterminded the Águas Livres aqueduct (see p84). The excellent layout of the museum earned it the Council of Europe Museum Prize in 1990.

Pride of place goes to four lovingly preserved steam engines, one of which still functions (by electricity) and can be switched on for visitors. The development of technology relating to the city's water supply is documented with photographs. Particularly interesting are the sections on the Águas Livres aqueduct and the Alfama's 17th-century Chafariz d'El Rei, one of Lisbon's first fountains. Locals used to queue at one of six founts, depending on their social status.

Originally the site of Expo '98, Parque das Nações has become a Lisbon hub. With its contemporary architecture and family-oriented attractions, the park has renewed the eastern waterfront, an industrial wasteland as recently as 1990. The soaring geometry of the platform canopies over Santiago Calatrava's Oriente Station set the tone for the development. The Portugal Pavilion, designed by the Portuguese architect Álvaro Siza Vieira, has a large reinforced-concrete roof suspended like a sailcloth above its forecourt.

The Pavilhão do Conhecimento – Ciência Viva (Knowledge and Science Pavilion) is a modern museum of science and technology that houses several interactive exhibitions. Also in the park is Casino Lisboa, with two floors of gaming tables, an auditorium hosting theatrical and musical performances and a range of restaurants. Spectacular views can be had from the cable car that links the Torre Vasco da Gama with the marina. The promenade along the river also offers delightful views, including of the 17.5-km (11-mile) long Vasco da Gama bridge, the longest in Europe. Also in the area are the Sony Plaza and Pavilhão Atlântico.

Centrepiece of Expo '98 and now the main attraction at Parque das Nações, the somewhat futuristic oceanarium was designed by American architect Peter Chermayeff, and is perched on the end of a pier, surrounded by water. It is the second-largest aquarium in the world, and holds an impressive array of species – birds and some mammals as well as fish and other underwater dwellers.

Four separate sea- and landscapes represent the habitats of the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian and Antarctic oceans, with suitable fauna and flora. The main attraction for most visitors, though, is the vast central tank with a dazzling variety of fish, large and small, swimming round and round. Hammerhead sharks co-exist peacefully with bream, barracudas with rays.

The softly lit waters can be viewed through any number of glass panes, on two levels.

Palácio Pimenta was allegedly commissioned by João V (see p16) for his mistress Madre Paula, a nun from the nearby convent at Odivelas. When the mansion was built, in the middle of the 18th century, it occupied a peaceful site outside the capital. Nowadays it has to contend with the traffic of Campo Grande. The house itself, however, retains its period charm and the city museum is one of the most interesting in Lisbon.

The displays follow the development of the city, from prehistoric times, through the Romans, Visigoths and Moors, traced by means of tiles, drawings, paintings, models and historical documents. Some of the most fascinating exhibits are those depicting the city before the earthquake of 1755, including a highly detailed model made in the 1950s and an impressive 17th-century oil painting by Dirk Stoop (1610–86) of Terreiro do Paço, as Praça do Comércio was known then (see p47). One room is devoted to the Águas Livres aqueduct (see p84) with detailed architectural plans for its construction as well as prints and watercolours of the completed aqueduct.

The earthquake theme is resumed with pictures of the city amid the devastation and various plans for its reconstruction. The museum brings you into the 20th century with a large colour poster celebrating the Revolution of 1910 and the proclamation of the new republic (see p17).

Dona Leonor, widow of King João II, founded the Convento da Madre de Deus in 1509. Originally built in Manueline style, the church was restored under João III using simple Renaissance designs. The striking Baroque decoration was added by João V.

The convent cloisters provide a stunning setting for the National Tile Museum. Decorative panels, individual tiles and photographs trace the evolution of tile-making from its introduction by the Moors, through Spanish influence and the development of Portugal's own style up to the present day.

Considered the most beautiful sight in Lisbon at the turn of the century, the Aqueduto das Águas Livres looms over the Alcântara valley to the northwest of the city. The construction of an aqueduct gave João V (see p16) the opportunity to indulge his passion for grandiose building schemes, as the only area of Lisbon with fresh drinking water was the Alfama. A tax on meat, wine, olive oil and other comestibles funded the project, and although not complete until the 19th century, it was already supplying the city with water by 1748. The main pipeline measures 19 km (12 miles), but the total length, including all the secondary channels, is 58 km (36 miles). The most visible part of this imposing structure, classified as a National Monument in 2002, are the 35 arches that cross the Alcântara valley, the tallest of which rise to a spectacular 65 m (213 ft) above the ground.

The public walkway along the aqueduct has been closed since 1853. This is partly due to Diogo Alves, the infamous robber who threw his victims over the edge. Today, it is possible to take a lively guided tour over the Alcântara arches. There are also tours of the Mãe d'Água reservoir and trips to the Mãe d'Água springs, the source of the water supply. These tours can be irregular, so it is best to contact the Museu da Água (see p80) for details of the trips on offer.

At the end of the aqueduct, the Mãe d'Água das Amoreiras is a castle-like building which once served as a reservoir for the water supplied from the aqueduct. The original design of 1745 was by the Hungarian architect, Carlos Mardel, who worked under Pombal (see pp22–3) in the rebuilding of the Baixa. Completed in 1834, it became a popular meeting place and acquired a reputation as the rendezvous for kings and their mistresses. Today the space is used for art exhibitions, fashion shows and other events. There are great views from the roof.

This delightful country manor house was built as a hunting pavilion for João de Mascarenhas, the first Marquês de Fronteira, in 1640. Although skyscrapers are visible in the distance, it still occupies a quiet spot, by the Parque Florestal de Monsanto. Both house and garden have azulejo decoration whose subjects include battle scenes and trumpet-blowing monkeys.

Although the palace is still occupied by the 12th Marquis, some of the living rooms and the library, as well as the formal gardens, are included in the tour. The Battles Room has lively tiled panels depicting scenes of the War of Restoration (1640–1668), with a detail of João de Fronteira fighting a Spanish general. It was his loyalty to Pedro II during this war that earned him the title of Marquis. Interesting comparisons can be made between these naive 17th-century Portuguese tiles and the Delft ones from the same period in the dining room, depicting naturalistic scenes. The dining room is also decorated with frescoed panels and portraits of Portuguese nobility by artists such as Domingos António de Sequeira (1768–1837).

The late 16th-century chapel is the oldest part of the house. The façade is adorned with stones, shells, broken glass and bits of china. These fragments of crockery are believed to have been used at the feast inaugurating the palace and then smashed to ensure no one else could sup off the same set. Visits to the garden start at the chapel terrace, where tiled niches are decorated with figures personifying the arts and mythological creatures.

one end, tiled scenes of dashing knights on horseback, representing ancestors of the Fronteira family, are reflected in the waters of a large tank. On either side of the water, a grand staircase leads to a terrace above. Here, decorative niches contain the busts of Portuguese kings and colourful majolica reliefs adorn the arcades. More blue and white tiled scenes, realistic and allegorical, decorate the wall at the far end of the garden.

Monteiro-Mor Park was sold to the state in 1975 and the 18th-century palace buildings were converted to museums. The gardens are attractive and rather more romantic than the manicured box-hedge gardens so typical of Lisbon. Much of the land is wooded, though the area around the museums has gardens with flowering shrubs, duck ponds and tropical trees.

The rather old-fashioned Museu Nacional do Traje (costume museum) has a vast collection of textiles, accessories and costumes worn by musicians, politicians, poets, aristocrats and soldiers.

The Museu Nacional do Teatro has two buildings, one devoted to temporary exhibitions, the other containing a small permanent collection. Photographs, posters and cartoons feature famous 20th-century Portuguese actors and one section is devoted to Amália Rodrigues, the famous fado singer (see pp144–5).

TWO GUIDED WALKS

The folds and creases of Lisbon's many hills demand to be explored on foot, yet they can also be quite demanding on the walker. It is possible to plan routes that avoid most steep inclines, but such routes often miss many of the hidden treasures of the city's bairros.

The two walks described here give a true taste of Lisbon's topography and of the rich mix of the city's lifestyles via some of the most charming neighbourhoods. The first walk takes you from lofty Estrela in northwest Lisbon through picturesque bairros, passing the grandiose Palácio de São Bento (Portuguese parliament building), towards the historic centre. The second walk begins in the Baixa and leads walkers through one of the many narrow entrances into the labyrinthine alleyways of Alfama before climbing to Castelo de São Jorge for spectacular views. In addition to these walks, each of the four areas of Lisbon described in the Area-by-Area section of this book has a walk on its Street-by-Street map.

A 45-Minute Walk Around West Central Lisbon

The mainly residential Estrela neighbourhood is typical of well-to-do west Lisbon. The Portuguese parliament lies to the east, then the terrain rises to Praça do Príncipe Real. This sloping neighbourhood with its small, bustling streets and energetic nightlife is typically Lisboetan. On the other side of the ridge, the Jardim Botânico descends steeply towards the city centre.

Turn right past attractive tiled façades and a number of antique shops and head to the Palácio de São Bento ④ (see p55), the seat of the Portuguese parliament. Retrace your steps and turn right down Rua da Piedade to Praça das Flores ⑤, a typical Lisbon square with

A 90-Minute Walk Around Baixa, Alfama, Castelo and Mouraria

From the late 18th-century splendour of the Baixa, this walk takes you into the alleyways of Alfama, a much older and humbler neighbourhood. Castelo de São Jorge crowns the hill, standing on a site that has been fortified for thousands of years. Behind it, Mouraria was the quarter to which Lisbon's remaining Moors were relegated after Afonso Henriques conquered the city in 1147. Their legacy survives most notably in the cadences of fado, which is at its most authentic here.

Equestrian statue of José I in Praça do Comércio ①

Begin the walk at Praça do Comércio ① (see p47), which was once the grand maritime entrance to Lisbon. The statue at the centre of the vast square is of José I, king at the time of the great 1755 earthquake which destroyed the palace and most of lower-lying Lisbon (see pp20–21). The grand arcades of the post-earthquake buildings surrounding the square ② faintly echo the palace, creating a somewhat ghostly atmosphere. Walk along Rua da Alfândega and turn left on Rua da Madalena. The first street on your right is Rua dos Bacalhoiros ③, named after the cod merchants who once dominated it. Continue along Rua da Alfândega to the unmistakable Casa dos Bicos ④ (see p35) and pass through the arch at Arco de Jesus, which leads via steps up to Rua de São João da Praça. Now you have entered Alfama proper, protected by the hulking Sé to the left and with a gradually winding web of small streets, steps and alleys to the right. Head left and enjoy a coffee at Pois, Café ⑤ (see pp136–7). Then head back and follow Rua de São João da Praça until it becomes Rua de São Pedro ⑥. The stalls selling fresh fish along here are an Alfama institution. The narrow street empties into Largo do Chafariz de Dentro, with the Casa do Fado ⑦ (see pp144–5) across the street. To re-enter the small alleyways, cross the square and head up Rua dos Remédios. If lunch is needed, stop at Santo António de Alfama ⑧ (see p130), in nearby Becco de São Miguel. Next, find Escadinhas de Santo Estêvão or Calcadinha de Santo Estêvão and climb up to Santo Estêvão church ⑨. Lisbon is a city of viewing points, and this is one of the best. From the square by the church, take Rua Guilherme Braga and then the steps on the left (Beco de Loureiro). These lead to a small square which opens on Rua da Regueira; turn right here and follow it to Rua do Castelo Picão, which takes you back into the heart of Alfama.

THE LISBON COAST

Within an hour's drive northwest of Lisbon you can reach the rocky Atlantic coast, the wooded slopes of Sintra or countryside dotted with villas and royal palaces. South of Lisbon you can enjoy the sandy beaches and fishing towns along the coast or explore the lagoons of the Tagus and Sado river estuaries.

Traders and invaders, from the Phoenicians to the Spanish, have left their mark in this region, in particular the Moors whose forts and castles, rebuilt many times over the centuries, can be found all along this coast. After Lisbon became the capital in 1256, Portuguese kings and nobles built summer palaces and villas in the countryside west of the city, particularly on the cool, green heights of the Serra de Sintra.

Across the Tagus, the less fashionable southern shore (Outra Banda) could be reached only by ferry, until the suspension bridge was built in 1966. Now, the long sandy beaches of the Costa da Caparica, the coast around the fishing town of Sesimbra and even the remote Tróia peninsula have become popular resorts during the summer months. Fortunately, large stretches of coast and unspoilt countryside are being protected as conservation areas and nature reserves.

Despite the region's rapid urbanization, small fishing and farming communities still survive. Lively fish markets offer a huge variety of fresh fish and seafood; Palmela and the Sado region are noted for their wine; sheep still roam the unspoilt Serra da Arrábida, providing milk for Azeitão cheese; and rice is the main crop in the Sado estuary. Traditional industries also survive, such as salt panning near Alcochete and marble quarries at Pero Pinheiro.

Though the sea is cold and often rough, especially on west-facing coasts, the beaches are among the cleanest in Europe. As well as surfing, fishing and scuba diving, the region provides splendid golf courses, horse riding facilities and a motor-racing track. Arts and entertainment range from music and cinema festivals to bullfights and country fairs where regional crafts, such as hand-painted pottery, lace and baskets, are on display.

Exploring the Lisbon Coast

North of the Tagus, the beautiful hilltown of Sintra is dotted with historic palaces and surrounded by wooded hills, at times enveloped in an eerie sea mist. On the coast, cosmopolitan Cascais and the traditional fishing town of Ericeira are both excellent bases from which to explore the rocky coastline and surrounding countryside. South of the Tagus, the Serra da Arrábida and the rugged coast around Cabo Espichel can be visited from the small port of Sesimbra. Inland, the nature reserves of the Tagus and Sado estuaries offer a quiet retreat.

GETTING AROUND

Motorways give quick access from Lisbon to Sintra, Estoril, Palmela and Setúbal. Main roads are generally well signposted and surfaced, though traffic congestion can be a problem. Watch out for potholes on smaller roads. Fast, frequent trains run west from Lisbon's Cais do Sodré station to Estoril and Cascais, and from Rossio, Roma Areeiro and Entrecampos stations to Queluz and Sintra. For trains south to Setúbal, Alcácer do Sal and beyond, use either the Fertagus service or Barreiro station on the southern bank of the Tagus. There are good bus services to all parts of the region, which leave mainly from Praça de Espanha.

This massive Baroque palace and monastery dwarfs the small town of Mafra. It was built during the reign of João V, and began with a vow by the young king to build a new monastery and basilica, supposedly in return for an heir (but more likely, to atone for his well-known sexual excesses). Work began in 1717 on a modest project to house 13 Franciscan friars but, as the wealth began to pour into the royal coffers from Brazil, the king and his Italian-trained architect, Johann Friedrich Ludwig (1670–1752), made ever more extravagant plans. No expense was spared: 52,000 men were employed and the finished project eventually housed not 13, but 330 friars, a royal palace and one of the finest libraries in Europe, decorated with precious marble, exotic wood and countless works of art. The magnificent basilica was consecrated on the king's 41st birthday, 22 October 1730.

The palace was only popular with those members of the royal family who enjoyed hunting deer and wild boar. Today, a wolf conservation project runs here. Most of the finest furniture and art works were taken to Brazil when the royal family escaped the French invasion in 1807. The monastery was abandoned in 1834 following the dissolution of all religious orders, and the palace itself was finally abandoned in 1910, when the last Portuguese king, Manuel II, escaped from here to the Royal Yacht anchored off Ericeira.

Allow at least an hour for the lengthy tour which starts in the rooms of the monastery, through the pharmacy, with fine old medicine jars and some alarming medical instruments, to the hospital, where 16 patients in private cubicles could see and hear mass in the adjoining chapel without leaving their beds.

Upstairs, the sumptuous palace state rooms extend across the whole of the monumental west façade, with the King's apartments at one end and the Queen's apartments at the other, a staggering 232 m (760 ft) apart. Halfway between the two, the long, imposing façade is relieved by the twin bell towers of the domed basilica. The interior of the church is decorated in contrasting colours of marble and furnished with six early 19th-century organs. Fine Baroque sculptures, executed by members of the Mafra School of Sculpture, adorn the atrium of the basilica. Begun by José I in 1754, many renowned

Statue of St Bruno in the atrium of Mafra's basilica Portuguese and foreign artists trained in the school under the directorship of the Italian sculptor Alessandro Giusti (1715–99). Further on, the Sala da Caça has a grotesque collection of hunting trophies and boars' heads. Mafra's greatest treasure, however, is its magnificent library, which has a patterned marble floor, Rococo-style wooden bookcases, and a collection of over 40,000 books in gold embossed leather bindings, which includes a prized first edition of Os Lusíadas (1572) by the celebrated Portuguese poet, Luís de Camões (1524–80).

Ericeira is an old fishing village which keeps its traditions despite an ever-increasing influx of summer visitors, from Lisbon and abroad, who enjoy the bracing climate, clean, sandy beaches and fresh seafood. In July and August, when the population leaps to 30,000, pavement cafés, restaurants and bars around the tree-lined Praça da República are buzzing late into the night. Red flags warn when swimming is dangerous: alternative attractions include a crazy golf course in Santa Marta park and a local history museum, the Museu da Ericeira, exhibiting model boats and traditional regional fishing equipment.

The unspoilt old town, a maze of whitewashed houses and narrow, cobbled streets, is perched high above the ocean. From Largo das Ribas, at the top of a 30-m (100-ft) stone-faced cliff, there is a bird's-eye view over the busy fishing harbour below, where tractors haul the boats out of reach of the tide. On 16 August, the annual fishermen's festival is celebrated with a candlelit procession to the harbour at the foot of the cliffs for the blessing of the boats.

On 5 October 1910, Manuel II, the last king of Portugal (see p19), finally sailed into exile from Ericeira as the Republic was declared in Lisbon; a tiled panel in the fishermen's chapel of Santo António above the harbour records the event. The banished king settled in Twickenham, southwest London, where he died in 1932.

Colares 3

7,500. Cabo da Roca, (219 280 081).

On the lower slopes of the Serra de Sintra, this lovely village faces towards the sea over a green valley, the Várzea de Colares. A leafy avenue winds its way up to the village, lined with pine and chestnut trees. Small quantities of the famous Colares wine are still made, but current vintages lack the character and ageing potential of classic Colares and growers face a financial struggle to survive. Their hardy old vines grow in sandy soil, with their roots set deep below in clay; these were among the few vines in Europe to survive the disastrous phylloxera epidemic brought from America in the late 19th century with the first viticultural exchanges. The insect, which destroyed vineyards all over Europe by eating the vines' roots, could not penetrate the dense sandy soil of the Atlantic coast. Wine can be sampled at the Adega Regional de Colares on Alameda de Coronel Linhares de Lima.

Environs

There are several popular beach resorts west of Colares. From the village of Banzão you can ride 3 km (2 miles) to Praia das Maçãs on the old tramway, which opened in 1910 and still runs from 1 July to 30 September. Just north of Praia das Maçãs is the picturesque village of Azenhas do Mar, clinging to the cliffs; to the south is the larger resort of Praia Grande. Both have natural pools in the rocks, which are filled by sea-water at high tide and are now closed to swimmers. The unspoilt Praia da Adraga, 1 km (half a mile) further south, has a delightful beach café and restaurant. In the evenings and off-season, fishermen catch bass, bream and flat fish.

This round trip from Sintra follows a dramatic route over the top of the wooded Serra. The first part is a challenging drive with hazardous hairpin bends on steep, narrow roads that are at times poorly surfaced. It passes through dense forest and a surreal landscape of giant moss-covered boulders, with breathtaking views over the Atlantic coast, the Tagus estuary and beyond.

After dropping down to the rugged, windswept coast, the route returns along small country roads passing through hill villages and large estates on the cool, green northern slopes of the Serra de Sintra.

The wild, romantic garden of this once magnificent estate is a jungle of exotic trees and flowering shrubs. Among the sub-tropical foliage and valley of tree ferns, the visitor will come across a waterfall, a small lake and a chapel, built as a ruin, tangled in the roots of a giant Ficus tree. Its history dates back to the Moors, but it takes its name from a small 16th-century chapel dedicated to Our Lady of Montserrat in Catalonia, Spain. The gardens were landscaped in the late 1700s by a wealthy young Englishman, William Beckford. They were later immortalized by Lord Byron in Childe Harold's Pilgrimage (1812).

In 1856, the abandoned estate was bought by another Englishman, Sir Francis Cook, who built a fantastic Moorish-style palace (which now stands eerily empty) and transformed the gardens with a large sweeping lawn, camellias and sub-tropical trees from all over the world. These include the giant Metrosideros (Pacific Islands Christmas tree, covered in a blaze of red flowers in July), the native Arbutus (known as the strawberry tree because of its juicy red berries), from which the medronho firewater drink is distilled, and cork oak, with small ferns growing on its bark.

The Friends of Monserrate is an organization of volunteers who help restore and maintain the house and gardens.

Convento dos Capuchos ③

Two huge boulders guard the entrance to this remote Franciscan monastery, founded in 1560, where the monks lived in tiny rock-hewn cells lined with cork. There are stunning views of the coast from the hill above this austere, rocky hideaway.

Sintra 6

Sintra's stunning setting on the north slopes of the granite Serra, among wooded ravines and fresh water springs, made it a favourite summer retreat for the kings of Portugal. The tall conical chimneys of the Palácio Nacional de Sintra (see pp102-3) and the fabulous Palácio da Pena (see pp104-5), eerily impressive on its peak when the Serra is blanketed in mist, are unmistakable landmarks.

Today, the town (recognized as a UNESCO World Heritage site in 1995) draws thousands of visitors all through the year. Even so, there are many quiet walks in the wooded hills around the town, especially beautiful in the long, cool evenings of the summer months.

Exploring Sintra

Present-day Sintra is in three parts, Sintra Vila, Estefânia and São Pedro, joined by a confusing maze of winding roads scattered over the surrounding hills. In the pretty cobbled streets of the old town, Sintra Vila, which is centred on the Palácio Nacional de Sintra, are the museums and beautifully tiled post office. The curving Volta do Duche leads from the old town, past the lush Parque da Liberdade, north to the Estefânia district and the striking Neo-Gothic Câmara Municipal (Town Hall). To the south and east, the hilly village of São Pedro spreads over the slopes of the Serra. The fortnightly Sunday market here extends across the broad market square.

Exploring Sintra on foot involves a lot of walking and climbing up and down its steep hills. For a more leisurely tour, take one of the horse and carriage rides around the town. The Miradouro da Vigia in São Pedro offers impressive views, as does the cosy Casa de Sapa café, where you can sample queijadas, the local sweet speciality.

The many fountains dotted around the town are used by locals for their fresh spring drinking water. Two of the most striking are the tiled Fonte Mourisca (Arab Fountain), named for its Neo-Moorish decoration, and Fonte da Sabuga, where the water spouts from a pair of breasts.

Palácio Nacional de Sintra

Sala dos Cisnes

At the heart of the old town of Sintra (Sintra Vila), a pair of strange conical chimneys rises high above the Royal Palace. The main part of the palace, including the central block with its plain Gothic façade and the large kitchens beneath the chimneys, was built by João I in the late 14th century, on a site once occupied by the Moorish rulers. The Paço Real, as it is also known, became the favourite summer retreat for the court, and continued as a residence for Portuguese royalty until the 1880s. Additions to the building by the wealthy Manuel I, in the early 16th century, echo the Moorish style. Gradual rebuilding of the palace has resulted in a fascinating amalgamation of various different styles.

The Torre da Meca has dovescotes below the cornice decorated with armillary spheres and nautical rope.

The Sala das Galés (galleons) houses temporary exhibitions.

Sintra: Palácio da Pena

Triton Arch

On the highest peaks of the Serra de Sintra stands the spectacular palace of Pena, an eclectic medley of architectural styles built in the 19th century for the husband of the young Queen Maria II, Ferdinand Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. It stands over the ruins of a Hieronymite monastery founded here in the 15th century on the site of the chapel of Nossa Senhora da Pena. Ferdinand appointed a German architect, Baron Von Eschwege, to build his summer palace filled with oddities from all over the world and surrounded by a park. With the declaration of the Republic in 1910, the palace became a museum, preserved as it was when the royal family lived here. Allow at least an hour and a half to visit this enchanting place.

Entrance Arch

A studded archway with crenellated turrets greets the visitor at the entrance to the palace. The palace buildings are painted the original daffodil yellow and strawberry pink.

Manuel II's Bedroom

The oval-shaped room is decorated with green walls and stuccoed ceiling. A portrait of Manuel II, the last king of Portugal, hangs above the fireplace.

In the kitchen the copper pots and utensils still hang around the iron stove. The dinner service bears the coat of arms of Ferdinand II.

★ Ballroom

The spacious ballroom is sumptuously furnished with German stained-glass windows, precious Oriental porcelain and four lifesize turbaned torch-bearers holding giant candelabra.

Marvellous trompe-l'oeil frescoes cover the walls and ceiling of the Arab Room, one of the loveliest in the palace. The Orient was a great inspiration to Romanticism.

FERDINAND: KING CONSORT

Ferdinand was known in Portugal as Dom Fernando II, the "artist" king. Like his cousin Prince Albert, who married the English Queen Victoria, he loved art, nature and the new inventions of the time. He was himself a watercolour painter. Ferdinand enthusiastically adopted his new country and devoted his life to patronizing the arts. In 1869, 16 years after the death of Maria II, Ferdinand married his mistress, the opera singer Countess Edla. His lifelong dream of building the extravagant palace at Pena was completed in 1885, the year he died.

Having been a holiday resort for well over a century, Cascais possesses a certain illustriousness that younger resorts lack. Its history is most clearly visible in the villas along the coast, built as summer residences by wealthy Lisboetas during the late 19th century, after King Luís I had moved his summer activities to the 17th-century fortress here.

The sandy, sheltered bay around which the modern suburb has sprawled was a fishing harbour in prehistoric times. Fishing still goes on, and was recently given a municipal boost with the decision to build a quay for the landing and initial auctioning of the fishermen's catch. But Cascais today is first of all a favoured suburb of Lisbon. It may sometimes seem more defined by its ceaseless construction boom than by any historic or even touristic qualities, but the beautiful, windswept coastline beyond the town has been left relatively undeveloped.

The Museu Condes de Castro Guimarães is perhaps the best place to get a taste of Cascais as it was just over a century ago. A castle-like villa on a small creek by a headland, its grounds are today part of a park.

Across the road from the museum is the marina, one of the most emblematic developments in Cascais. With its small shopping centre, restaurants and cafés, it is a weekend magnet for today's car-borne Cascais residents and tourists.

The Casa das Histórias, designed by Eduardo Souto de Moura, was established by the artist Paula Rego to exhibit her works, which range from paintings and drawings to illustrations and lithographs.

Sheer cliffs drop straight into the sea at this windswept promontory where the land ends dramatically. The Romans named it Promontorium Barbaricum, alluding to its dangerous location, and a lighthouse warns sailors of the treacherous rocks below. Stunning views of the ocean and the coast can be enjoyed from this bleak outcrop of land but beware of the strong gusts of wind on the cliff edge.

In this desolate setting stands the impressive Santuário de Nossa Senhora do Cabo, a late 17th-century church with its back to the sea. On either side of the church a long line of pilgrims' lodgings facing inwards form an open courtyard. Baroque paintings, ex votos and a frescoed ceiling decorate the interior of the church. There are plans to fully restore the building and open it as a hotel. Nearby, a domed chapel has tiled blue and white azulejo panels depicting fishing scenes. The site became a popular place of pilgrimage in the 13th century when a local man had a vision of the Madonna rising from the sea on a mule. Legend has it that the tracks of the mule can be seen embedded in the rock. The large footprints, on Praia dos Lagosteiros below the church, are actually believed to be fossilized dinosaur tracks.

Palácio de Queluz 9

A sphinx in the gardens

In 1747, Pedro, younger son of João V, commissioned Mateus Vicente to transform his 17th-century hunting lodge into a Rococo summer palace. The central section, including a music room and chapel, was built, but after Pedro's marriage in 1760 to the future Maria I, the palace was again extended. The French architect, Jean-Baptiste Robillion, added the sumptuous Robillion Pavilion and gardens, cleared space for the Throne Room and redesigned the Music Room. During Maria's reign, the royal family kept a menagerie and went boating on the azulejo-lined canal.

Painted azulejo panels (1784) representing the continents and the seasons, as well as hunting scenes, line the walls of the bright Corredor das Mangas (sleeves).

★ Sala dos Embaixadores

Built by Robillion, this stately room was used for diplomatic audiences as well as concerts. The trompe l'oeil ceiling shows the royal family attending a concert.

The Lion Staircase is an impressive and graceful link from the lower gardens to the palace.

Operas and concerts were performed here by Maria I's orchestra, "the best in Europe" according to English traveller, William Beckford. A portrait of the queen hangs above the grand piano.

The Hanging Gardens, designed by Robillion, were built over arches, raising the ground in front of the palace above the surrounding gardens.

MARIA I (1734–1816)

Maria, the eldest daughter of José I, lived at the palace in Queluz after her marriage to her uncle, Pedro, in 1760. Serious and devout, she conscientiously filled her role as queen, but suffered increasingly from bouts of melancholia. When her son José died from smallpox in 1788, she went hopelessly mad. Visitors to Queluz were dismayed by her agonizing shrieks as she suffered visions and hallucinations. After the French invasion of 1807, her younger son João (declared regent in 1792) took his mad mother to Brazil.

★ Palace Gardens

The formal gardens, adorned with statues, fountains and topiary, were often used for entertaining. Concerts performed in the Music Room would spill out into the Malta Gardens.

A steep narrow road leads down to this busy fishing village in a sheltered south-facing bay. Protected from north winds by the slopes of the Serra da Arrábida, the town has become a popular holiday resort with Lisboetas. It was occupied by the Romans and later the Moors until King Sancho II (see p18) conquered its heavily defended forts in 1236. The old town is a maze of steep narrow streets, with the Santiago Fort (now a customs post) in the centre overlooking the sea. From the terrace, which is open to the public during the day, there are views over the town, the Atlantic and the wide sandy beach that stretches out on either side. Sesimbra is fast developing as a resort, with holiday flats mushrooming on the surrounding hillsides and plentiful pavement cafés and bars that are always busy on sunny days, even in winter.

The fishing fleet of brightly painted boats is moored in the Porto do Abrigo to the west of the main town. The harbour is reached by taking Avenida dos Náufragos, a sweeping promenade that follows the beach out of town. On the large trawlers (traineiras), the catch is mainly sardines, sea bream, whiting and swordfish; on the smaller boats, octopus and squid. In the late afternoon, when the fishing boats return from a day at sea, a colourful, noisy fish auction takes place on the quayside. The day's catch can be tasted in the town's excellent fish restaurants along the shore.

High above the town is the Moorish castle, greatly restored in the 18th century when a church and small flower-filled cemetery were added inside the walls. There are wonderful views from the ramparts, especially at sunset.

The formidable castle at Palmela stands over the small hilltown, high on a north-eastern spur of the wooded Serra da Arrábida. Its strategic position dominates the plain for miles around, especially when floodlit at night. Heavily defended by the Moors, it was finally conquered in the 12th century and given by Sancho I (see p18) to the Knights of the Order of Santiago. In 1423, João I transformed the castle into a monastery for the Order, which has been restored and converted into a splendid pousada (see p123), with a restaurant in the monks' refectory and a swimming pool for residents, hidden inside the castle walls. From the castle terraces, and especially from the top of the 14th-century keep, there are fantastic views all around, over the Serra da Arrábida to the south and on a clear day across the Tagus to Lisbon. In the town square below, the church of São Pedro contains 18th-century tiles of scenes from the life of St Peter.

The annual wine festival, the Festa das Vindimas, is held on the first weekend of September in front of the 17th-century Paços do Concelho (town hall). Traditionally dressed villagers press the wine barefoot and on the final day of celebrations there is a spectacular fireworks display from the castle walls.

Setúbal. Parque Natural da Arrábida, Praça da República, Setúbal (265 541 140).

The Parque Natural da Arrábida covers the small range of limestone mountains which stretches east-west along the coast between Sesimbra and Setúbal. It was established to protect the wild, beautiful landscape and rich variety of birds and wildlife, including eagles, wildcats and badgers.

The name Arrábida is from Arabic meaning a place of prayer, and the wooded hillsides are indeed a peaceful, secluded retreat. The sheltered, south-facing slopes are thickly covered with aromatic and evergreen shrubs and trees such as pine and cypress, more typical of the Mediterranean. Vineyards also thrive on the sheltered slopes and the town of Vila Nogueira de Azeitão is known for its wine, especially the Moscatel de Setúbal.

The Estrada de Escarpa (the N379-1) snakes across the top of the ridge and affords astounding views. A narrow road winds down to Portinho da Arrábida, a sheltered cove with a beach of fine white sand and crystal clear sea, popular with underwater fishermen. The sandy beaches of Galapos and Figueirinha are a little further east along the coast road towards Setúbal. Just east of Sesimbra, the Serra da Arrábida drops to the sea in the sheer 380-m (1,250-ft) cliffs of Risco, the highest in mainland Portugal.

Setúbal 16

92,000. Travessa Frei Gaspar 10 (265 539 130).

Although this is an important industrial town, and the third largest port in Portugal (after Lisbon and Oporto), Setúbal can be used to explore the area. To the south of the central gardens and fountains are the fishing harbour, marina and ferry port, and a lively covered market. North of the gardens is the old town, with attractive pedestrian streets and squares full of cafés.

The 16th-century cathedral, dedicated to Santa Maria da Graça, has glorious tiled panels dating from the 18th century, and gilded altar decoration. Street names commemorate two famous Setúbal residents: Manuel Barbosa du Bocage (1765–1805), whose satirical poetry landed him in prison, and Luísa Todi (1753–1833), a celebrated opera singer.

In Roman times, fish-salting was the most important industry here. Rectangular tanks, carved from stone, can be seen under the glass floor of the Regional Tourist Office on Travessa Frei Gaspar.

The star-shaped fort was built in 1595 by Philip II of Spain during Portugal's period under Spanish rule to keep a wary eye on pirates, English invaders and the local population. A massive gateway and stone tunnel lead to the sheltered interior, which now houses a pousada (see p123) and an exquisite small chapel, tiled with scenes from the life of São Filipe by Policarpo de Oliveira Bernardes (1695–1778). A broad terrace offers marvellous views over the city and the Sado estuary.

Environs

Setúbal is an excellent starting point for a tour by car of the unspoilt Reserva Natural do Estuário do Sado, a vast stretch of mud flats, shallow lagoons and salt marshes with patches of pine forest, which has been explored and inhabited since 3500 BC. Otters, water birds (including storks and herons), oysters and a great variety of fish are found in the reserve. The old tidal water mill at Mouriscas, 5 km (3 miles) to the east of Setúbal, uses the different levels of the tide to turn the grinding stones. Rice-growing and fishing are the main occupations today, and pine trees around the lagoon are tapped for resin.

High-rise holiday apartments dominate the tip of the Tróia Peninsula, easily accessible from Setúbal by ferry. The Atlantic coast, stretching south for 18 km (11 miles) of untouched sandy beaches, is now the haunt of sun-seekers in the summer.

Near Tróia, in the sheltered lagoon, the Roman town of Cetóbriga was the site of a thriving fish-salting business; the stone tanks and ruined buildings are open to visit. To the south, smart holiday villas and golf clubs are springing up along the lagoon.

Further on, Carrasqueira is an old fishing community where you can still see traditional reed houses, with walls and roofs made from thatch. The narrow fishing boats moored along the mud flats

Bypassed by the main road, the ancient town of Alcácer do Sal (al-kasr from the Arabic for castle, and do sal from its trade in salt) sits peacefully on the north bank of the River Sado. The imposing castle was a hillfort as early as the 6th century BC.

The Phoenicians made an inland trading port here, and the castle later became a Roman stronghold. Rebuilt by the Moors, it was conquered by Afonso II in 1217. The buildings have now taken on a new life as a pousada (see p122), with views over the rooftops and storks' nests on top of trees and buildings.

There are pleasant cafés along the riverside promenade and several historic churches. The small church of Espírito Santo now houses a Museu Arqueológico exhibiting local finds and the 18th-century Santo António holds a marble Chapel of the 11,000 Virgins. The bullring is a focus for summer events and hosts the agricultural fair in October.

BIRDS OF THE TAGUS AND SADO ESTUARIES

Many waterbirds, including black-winged stilts, avocets, Kentish plovers and pratincoles are found close to areas of open water and mud flats as well as the dried out lagoons of the Tagus and Sado estuaries. Reed-beds also provide shelter for nesting and support good numbers of little bitterns, purple herons and marsh harriers. From September to March, the area around the Tagus estuary is extremely important for wildfowl and wintering waders.

WHERE TO STAY

Lisbon and its environs offer a variety of accommodation, from restored palaces to family-run hostels. The hotels in Lisbon range from modern and luxurious or elegant and old-fashioned to cosy pensões and comfortable chain hotels. There are many hotels in and around the main sight-seeing areas of the city.

The hotels in Estoril and Cascais along the Lisbon coast are perhaps less varied with fewer characterful options. In the countryside around Lisbon, hotels are fairly scarce, although Sintra offers a selection of places to stay and is a good base for exploring the area west of Lisbon. Pousadas, often historic buildings converted into hotels, are an alternative in the Lisbon Coast area. If you prefer self-catering, farmhouses, villas and apartments usually offer flexibility and good value. The hotels listed on pages 118–23 have been selected from every price category as offering the best value for money in each area.

Porter services are available in Lisbon's top hotels

Bedroom at the York House hotel in Lisbon, a converted 16th-century convent (see p120)

CHOOSING A HOTEL

The majority of the modern, luxury hotels in Lisbon are centrally situated around Parque Eduardo VII, at the north end of Avenida de Liberdade. As an alternative, the converted Expo 98 area, Parque das Nações, now has several top-range hotels with easy access to the airport and Oriente railway station.

The Baixa district has a number of more modest pensões with a wide choice of accommodation located around Rossio square.

Characterful smaller hotels are found in the Lapa district to the west. Most of the city's older districts, including Chiado, Barrio Alto, Graça and Alfama, have small hotels that offer atmosphere if not always top comforts and quiet.

TYPES OF HOTEL

Hotels in Lisbon vary greatly in terms of quality, price and facilities. There are two main types of lodging, as classified by the Portuguese tourist authority: hotels and pensões. Hotels are distinguished mainly by the fact that they take up an entire building and are often purpose-built. Pensões, on the other hand, are always housed in shared premises, typically occupying several floors of a residential building. All hotels and pensões are meant to provide meals. If they only offer breakfast, they must also be called residencial.

The estalagem is an inn, usually with a garden, and located outside of city centres. Albergarias are pensões that are the equivalent of 4- or 5-star hotels. Pousadas are either country inns or located in historic buildings such as castles or palaces. They are a state-owned chain run by Pestana.

HOTEL CHAINS

International luxury groups are represented in Lisbon by such hotels as the Lapa Palace and the Ritz Four Seasons (see p120). Smaller luxury groups include Tivoli Hotels, which has three hotels in Lisbon and two in Sintra, and the Pestana Group, which owns the Pestana Palace Hotel (see p118) in Lisbon.

Heritage Hotels runs five smaller luxury hotels in the city, including the Solar do Castelo (see p119).

Lower down the scale, Ibis Hotel, part of the French-owned Accor Group, has six properties in the Lisbon area, while the local chain VIP Hotels has a number of units ranging from two to five stars.

The impressive façade of the luxurious Lapa Palace (see p120)

View from the Palácio de Setais, Sintra, now a luxury hotel (see p123)

The Portuguese tourist authority grades hotels with one to five stars (five being the top rating) and pensões in four categories (albergaria is the top rating, followed by 1st to 3rd category). These ratings are based on a fixed set of criteria which covers most aspects of comfort. They do not take into account more subjective factors such as view or atmosphere.

A one-star hotel will be less comfortable and cheaper than a 1st category pensão. All graded establishments should have a sign showing their rating.

PRICES

In Portugal, establishments are free to set their own prices, but tariffs must be displayed at reception and in the rooms. The cost of the room usually includes all taxes and a continental breakfast. Other meals are charged as extras. It is sometimes possible to bargain for a better rate, especially in low season. As a rule, the cost of a single room is around 60 to 75 per cent of the cost of a double room. Cascais and Estoril can be expensive, but prices drop substantially out of season. Pousadas charge three rates: for low (Nov–Mar), mid (Apr–mid-Jul and mid-Sep–Oct) and high (mid-Jul–mid-Sep, carnival, Easter and New Year) seasons.

BOOKING

You will need to book in advance for Estoril and Cascais in high season, when much accommodation is taken by tour operators. Book ahead for central Lisbon, which can also get full. Most hoteliers speak English so it should not be a problem to book by phone. Deposits are not usually required but a written confirmation by fax or email, including a credit card number may be requested.

Pousadas can be booked through Pestana or at the pousadas website. The Portuguese tourist authority, Turismo de Portugal, publishes two official guides which are revised regularly, and are available in English, French and Spanish, as well as Portuguese: Alojamento Turístico (Tourist Accommodation and Turismo no Espaço Rural (Tourism in the Country). These list all of the establishments rated by the authority, but only the latter contains any description of individual settings.

TRAVELLING WITH CHILDREN

The Portuguese adore children and will welcome them warmly into hotels and restaurants. Travellers who have children with them will find an immediate point of contact with their hosts.

DISABLED TRAVELLERS

The Portuguese National Tourist Office lists hotels with facilities for the disabled, and produces a general information leaflet. Some youth hostels and campsites provide special facilities and these are listed by the relevant organizations, and in a guide that is published by the Instituto Nacional para o Reabilitação.

RESTAURANTS, CAFES AND BARS

Particularly in Lisbon and along the coast, there are many restaurants dedicated to cooking all manner of freshly caught fish and seafood. It may be grilled, pan-fried or turned into soup or a stew. However, meat dishes are also plentiful, some of the most popular being made of pork and lamb. Lisbon has an abundance of cheap restaurants and cafés, as well as more expensive ones. There are not only typically Portuguese restaurants in Lisbon, but also Chinese, Indian, Brazilian and African, all of which reflect Portugal's colonial past. This section gives tips on the different types of restaurants and cafés, as well as advice on menus, drinks and ordering your meal. The listings found on pages 130–35 are a selection of the best restaurants in all price ranges that are to be found throughout the capital and in the Lisbon Coast area.

TYPES OF RESTAURANT

Eating venues in Lisbon come in all shapes and sizes and at all price levels. Among the most reasonable is the local tasca or tavern, often just a room with half-a-dozen tables presided over by a husband-and-wife team. Tascas are often frequented by locals and professionals at lunchtime, which is a good indication of quality food. The casa de pasto offers a budget three-course meal in a large dining room, while a restaurante is more formal and offers a wider choice of dishes. At a typical marisqueira, the emphasis is on seafood and fresh fish. A churrasqueira, originally Brazilian, specializes in spitroasted foods. A cevejaría is the ideal place to go for a beer and snack, maybe of delicious seafood. The restaurants in better hotels are generally of good quality. Pousadas (see p116), found mainly in country areas, offer a network of traditional restaurants, with the focus on local gastronomic specialities.

The pleasant courtyard of Lautasco (p130) along Beco do Azinhal in the Alfama

EATING HOURS

Lunch is usually served between 1 and 3pm, when many restaurants get very crowded. Dinner is served from 7pm until at least 10pm in most places, and can often be later. An alternative for a late dinner would be a fado house (see pp144–5), usually open from about 9:30pm to 3 or 4am. However, a meal here will be somewhat more expensive as the price includes a show.

RESERVATIONS

It is a good idea to book ahead for expensive restaurants, and for those in popular locations in high season. Disabled people should certainly check in advance on facilities and access. Special facilities are generally lacking but most places will try to be helpful.

THE MENU

Some restaurants, in tourist areas particularly, offer an ementa turística, a cheap, daily-changing menu. This is served with coffee and a drink (a glass of wine or beer, a soft drink or water) and provides a full meal at a good price with no hidden costs. Lunch

The impressive interior of Cozinha Velha (see p135) at Queluz

Eating outside in Cascais along the Lisbon coast

(almoço) generally consists of a soup or starter and a fish or meat dish with potatoes or rice. To sample a local speciality, you should ask for the prato do dia – dish of the day. The choice of sweets can be limited, but there is usually a good selection of fresh fruits in season or you can try a pastry such as a pastel de nata.

Dinner (jantar) may be two or more courses, perhaps rounded off with ice cream, fruit, a simple dessert or cheese. Casserole-style dishes, such as cataplana (a kind of tightly sealed wok in which the food is steamed, often used for fish and seafood) or porco à alentejana (pork with clams), are brought to the table in a pot for diners to share. This is similarly done with large fish, such as sea bass, which are sold by weight. One serving is large and can easily be shared by two people, and it is perfectly acceptable to ask for a meia dose or half-portion. If requested, Portuguese restaurants will be more than happy to supply these half-portions for adults as well as for any children present.

Peculiar to Portugal is the plate of assorted appetizers – perhaps olives, cheese and sardine pâté – which are served with bread at the start of a meal. However, these are not usually included in the price of the meal and an extra charge will be made for each item consumed.

VEGETARIANS

Vegetarians will not eat as well as fish lovers, although local cheeses and breads can be excellent. Chefs are usually happy to provide something meatless, although this will probably mean just a salad or omelette. A greater variety of vegetarian dishes can be found in ethnic restaurants.

WHAT TO DRINK

It would be a pity to visit Portugal without sampling port (see pp128–9) and Madeira, the country's two most famous drinks. Some restaurants may suggest a glass of white port as an aperitif while you wait for your meal. As far as house wine is concerned, it is usually of an acceptable quality to wash down your meal whatever the standard of the restaurant. Otherwise, ask for the wine list (carta de vinhos) and choose one of the Portuguese wines (see pp128–9). As a complement to the wine, mineral water is recommended. This is either com gás (sparkling) or sem gás (still). If you prefer to drink beer, Sagres and Super Bock are both good lagers. Cervejarias, such as the lively Cervejaria Trindade in the Bairro Alto (see pp48–59), are ideal places to get a snack late at night and enjoy an excellent range of beers, from lagers to dark beers, many of which are draught.

PAYING

It is common practice to add a five or ten per cent tip to bills. Although service is included, it provides a low wage which the tip is meant to supplement. Note that not all restaurants accept credit cards.

CHILDREN

The Portuguese view children as a blessing rather than a nuisance, so Lisbon is an ideal city for families to eat out together. Half portions (meia dose) at reduced prices are advertised in restaurants or are provided on request.

SMOKING

Smoking is not permitted in restaurants and other public places in Portugal, unless the establishment has an efficient smoke-extractor system.

DRINKING COFFEE IN LISBON

Coffee is widely drunk in Lisbon and served in many forms. The most popular, uma bica, is a small cup of strong black coffee like an espresso. For a weaker version, ask for uma cartioca de café. A strong bica is called uma italiana. Uma meia de leite is half coffee, half milk. Strong coffee with a dash of milk is known as um garoto escuro (um garoto claro is quite milky). If you like coffee with plenty of milk, ask for um galão (a gallon). It is served in a glass, and again you can order um galão claro (very milky) or escuro (strong).

The Flavours of Lisbon

Gastronomically, the Lisbon region is immensely varied, bringing together many different foods from all over Portugal. There is roast suckling pig from the north, an excellent choice of fish and seafood from the Atlantic coastline plus unique cheeses and hearty stews from the mountains. One popular dish, originating in the south of the country and reflecting this diversity, is porco à alentejana, a mixture of pork and clams spiced with paprika. Cuisines old and new, exotic and familiar, blend with one another in cosmopolitan Lisbon's many quality restaurants.

Sardines

spiced, salted or smoked – are an essential part of the national cuisine, from paprika-hued chouriço sausage to dark and intensely flavoured Ibérico ham (made from pigs fed on acorns) and morcela blood sausage seasoned with cloves and cumin. Kid (cabrito) is also popular as a roast or in stews. Beef is served less often but is of high quality (look for the names Barrosã, Mirandesa or Maronesa), while sheep tend to be kept more for cheese production than meat. Ewe's and goat's milk cheeses are of exceptional quality, and are as delicious when they are fresh and soft as when they are long matured, firm and piquant. Portugal's most famous cheese, the distinctive and buttery Serra, is made from ewe's milk, and the rounds are wrapped in muslin to maintain their shape.

MEAT AND DAIRY

Pork is the most commonly eaten meat in Portugal. Spit-roasted suckling pig (leitão) is a traditional favourite, but pork meat is also popular roasted (porco preto) and in rich, hearty stews. Pigs' trotters with coriander (pézinbos de coentrada) are considered a delicacy. Cured pork products (embutidos) –

LOCAL DISHES AND SPECIALITIES

Paprika

Much traditional Portuguese cuisine is that of a hardworking, frugal people who preserved and used everything they could produce. Hence the predominance of cured meats and dried bean stews (often incorporating ham or sausage for flavour). Favas à Portuguesa is a Lisbon favourite. The capital is not just the place where all the flavours of Portugal come together, but also where the influences of Portugal's 16th-century overseas expansion get their strongest expression. This applies equally to older influences, long since assimilated into local cuisine, as well as to newer ones, from Cape Verdean restaurants to sushi bars. Frango à piri-piri, barbecued chicken with chilli, is a favourite dish, originating from Portugal's former colonies in Africa.

Feijoada is a paprika-spiced stew of beans, vegetables and cured meat (usually pork), with many local variations.

Lisbon's famed lettuces take pride of place on a vegetable stall

FISH AND SEAFOOD

With its long Atlantic coastline, it is no surprise that Portugal's fish dishes are unmissable. The range on sale at any fish market is vast. Squid (lula), cuttlefish (choco), sea bass (robalo), gilthead bream (dourada), sardines (sardinhas) and shellfish such as oysters (ostras) and cockles (ameijoas) are found in abundance and often come together in the rich, steamed fish stew cataplana de peixe e mariscos. Traditional salt cod (bacalhau) is still much in evidence but today, river fish are less commonly served – trout (trutas) is often farmed and the once-common lamprey (lampreia) may be imported. Snails (caracois) sometimes appear in dishes, including feijoada.

VEGETABLES AND FRUIT

A visit to Lisbon's superb food market, Mercado de Ribera (Avenida 24 de Julho, Cais do Sodré) will reveal just how fertile the inland regions are, with heaps of every kind of vegetable (peppers and tomatoes are especially flavourful) and ripe, perfumed fruits including figs, melons, grapes, greengages, apricots and citrus fruits. Portuguese olives and their oil are omnipresent – the essential trio of ingredients, key to many a dish, is olive oil, garlic and coriander. Both wheat and maize are grown for bread, which is often hard and long-lasting and used to give extra volume to soups. The nickname alfacinhas for natives of Lisbon may have a connection with alface (lettuce) – the city has long been famous for an especially delicious variety.

Waiter with a tray of traditional pastéis de nata pastries

Bacalhau à gomes de sá Salt cod layered with potato and onion, and garnished with egg and olives.

The Wines of Portugal

Although still overshadowed by the excellence and fame of port, Portuguese table wine deserves to be taken seriously. After years of investment in the industry, many of the reds, such as the full-bodied wines from the Douro (made with some of the same grapes as port), have established an attractive style all their own. Great whites are fewer, but most regions have some. And of course there is vinho verde, the usually white, light, slightly carbonated wine from the north.

WINE REGIONS

Many of Portugal's wine regions maintain their individual style by specializing in particular Portuguese grape varieties. The introduction of modern wine-making techniques has improved overall quality, and as yet the increasing use of imported grape varieties seems no threat to Portuguese individuality.

HOW TO READ A WINE LABEL

Tinto is red, branco is white, seco is dry and doce is sweet. Beyond that, the essential information concerns the producer, the region and the year. Wines made to at least 80 per cent from a single grape variety may give the name of that grape on the front label. Denominação de Origem Controlada (DOC) indicates that the wine has been made according to the strictest regulations of a given region, but, as elsewhere, this need not mean higher quality than the nominally simpler Vinho Regional appellation. The back label often describes grape varieties and wine-making techniques.

The Sociedade Agrícola e Comercial dos Vinhos Vale da Corça, Lda., produced and bottled this wine.

This wine is from the Douro and is made according to DOC regulations for the region.

The name of this wine means "banks of the River Tua", further specifying its geographical origin.

Reserva means that the wine has been aged, probably in oak casks. It also implies that the wine is of higher quality than non-reserva wine from the same producer.

Vinho verde, "green wine" from the Minho region, can be either red or white, but the fizzy, dry reds are generally consumed locally. Typical white vinho verde is bone dry, slightly fizzy, low in alcohol and high in acidity. A weightier style of white vinho verde is made from the Alvarinho grape, near the Spanish border. Among the best brands are Soalheiro and Palácio da Breoeira.

Bairrada is a region where the small and thick-skinned Baga grape dominates. It makes big, tannic wines, sometimes with smoky or pine-needle overtones and like the older Dão wines, they need time to soften. Modern winemaking and occasional disregard for regional regulations have meant more approachable reds (often classified as Vinho Regional das Beiras) and crisper whites. Quality producers include Luís Pato and Caves Aliança.

Ribatejo is the fertile valley of the Tagus to the north and east of Lisbon. After Estremadura, it is Portugal's biggest wine region measured by volume, but its potential for quality wines has only just begun to be realized. As in Estremadura, Vinho Regional bottlings are frequently better than DOC ones. Producers to look for include Quinta da Alorna, Casa Branco and Fiuzza & Bright.

The Douro region is best known as the source of port wine, but in most years about half of the wine produced is fermented dry to make table wine, and these wines are now at the forefront of Portuguese wine-making. The pioneer, Barca Velha, was launched half a century ago and is both highly regarded and among the most expensive. Other quality producers include Calbeiros Cruz, Domingos Alves de Sousa, Quinta do Crasto, Niepoort and Ramos-Pinto.

Picking grapes for vinho verde

Setúbal, to the south of Lisbon, is best known for its sweet, fortified Muscat wine, Moscatel de Setúbal. In addition, the region also produces excellent, mostly red, table wine. Two big quality producers dominate the region: José Maria da Fonseca (see p111) and J.P. Vinhos. The co-operative at Santo Isidro de Pegões makes good-value wines, while interesting smaller producers include Venâncio Costa Lima, Hero do Castanheiro and Ermelinda Freitas.

The Dão region now offers some of Portugal's best wines. Small producers, such as Quinta dos Roques, Quinta da Pellada and Quinta de Cabriz, and the large Sogrape company make fruity reds for younger drinking, fresh, dry whites and deeper, richer reds which retain their fruit with age – a far cry from the beaky, hard-edged, and often oxidized wines of the past.

Estremadura is Portugal's westernmost wine area and has now emerged as a region in its own right. Several producers make modern Vinho Regional wines with character; look for wines by DFJ, Casa Santos Lima, Quinta de Pancas and Quinta do Monte d'Oiro. The most interesting DOC is Alenquer, a full-bodied wine. Bucelas, to the south of the region, produces characterful white wines.

Alentejo wine has possibly made the biggest leap in quality in recent years. Long dismissed by experts as a region of easy-drinking house reds for restaurants, this area now produces some of Portugal's most serious red wines and a surprising number of excellent whites. Among the best producers are Herdade do Esporão, Herdade dos Coelheiros, Cortes de Cima and João Portugal Ramos.

Flavours from the subcontinent abound at this excellent restaurant located in a quiet neighbourhood away from the beach. The menu is what you would expect from any quality curry house but the presentation is first class. Besides the tandoori specialities, the kitchen also serves a variety of spicy Goan dishes.

CASCAIS Eduardo's*Largo das Grutas 3, 2750-367 Tel 214 831 901*

With its wooden panels and squat appearance, this Belgian-run restaurant could be mistaken for a forester's lodge. Inside, an aquarium forms part of a dividing wall. The food slants towards French European, with options such as ragoût de borrego à flamenga (Flemish-style lamb ragoût). Try the delicious crêpes for dessert. Closed Sun.

CASCAIS Casa Velha*Avenida Valbom 1, 2750-508 Tel 214 832 586*

Located in the heart of Cascais, this property resembles a traditional farmhouse but with a maritime-themed interior, complete with mock red oil lanterns hanging over the tables. The menu is predominantly seafood, with caldeirada de peixe (fish stew) and cherna grelhado (grilled halibut) among the favourites. Closed Wed.

CASCAIS O Pescador*Rua das Flores 10b, 2750-348 Tel 214 832 054*

An ocean of choice leaps from the menu, such as lobster soup, rose shrimp cocktail and swordfish steak. Closed Mon lunch & Sun in winter; Mon lunch in summer.

ERICEIRA Sall*Rua Capitão João Lopes 14, 2655-295 Tel 261 862 759*

ESTORIL Estoril Mandarin*Casino Estoril, 2765-237 Tel 214 667 270*

The restaurant offers a good seafood menu, with the lobster in a tomato, cream and port sauce typical of the dishes on offer. The kitchen has its own shellfish beds.

GUINCHO Porto de Santa Maria*Estrada do Guincho, 2750-642 Tel 214 879 450*

One of the house specialities is fish baked in crusty bread smothered with olive oil and garlic. Closed Mon.

MONTE ESTORIL O Sineiro

Avenida de Sabóia 595, 2765-278 Tel 214 685 439

Unassuming but welcoming with a friendly, efficient service, O Sineiro is both a bar and a restaurant. At first glance the menu appears to list fairly standard Portuguese fare, though the cooking is excellent. Look more closely though and you will spy incongruities such as espitada mista de caça (barbecued wild boar and deer kabab). Closed Wed.

MONTE ESTORIL Com Sentido's

Avenida de Sabóia 515d, 2765-502 Tel 214 682 838

Large, abstract canvasses adorn the walls of this fashionable and contemporary-looking restaurant. The menu is equally well presented. Customers can opt for dishes such as the duck magret in orange sauce or milk-fed veal cutlet confit with sautéed Swiss chard. The dessert list is equally appealing. Closed Sun.

PAÇO D'ARCOS Aquarela do Brasil

Praça 5 de Outubro 12a, 2770-029 Tel 214 415 412

This charming establishment resembles an art gallery more than a restaurant at times. Aquarela means "watercolour" but the owners encourage artists to submit work for the walls in all mediums. The Brazilian food is wonderful, with generous portions offered in a polite, easy-going manner. It can get very busy. Closed Mon.

PALMELA Pousada do Castelo de Palmela

Pousada do Castelo de Palmela, 2950-317 Tel 212 351 226

The converted refectory of this 15th-century monastery provides an elegant and suitably romantic setting for a restaurant that offers discreet service. The dining hall is partly illuminated by a chandelier that throws light across such delicacies as oyster soup or Dover sole in a beer marinade.

PORTINHO DA ARRÁBIDA Beira-Mar

Portinho da Arrábida, 2925-378 Tel 966 337 352

On warm days, the most sought-after tables at this appealing restaurant are on the balcony overlooking the harbour. Closed Wed (except Jun–Aug).

QUELUZ Cozinha Velha

Largo Palácio Nacional de Queluz, 2745-191 Tel 214 356 158

Set in the old kitchens of the Palácio de Queluz (see pp108–9), this venerable restaurant draws its inspiration from traditional Portuguese recipes. The building retains much of its impressive 18th-century architecture, with the original stone chimney acting as a design centrepiece.

SESIMBRA Ribamar

Avenida dos Náufragos 29, 2970-637 Tel 212 234 853

Comfortable, cheerful and flooded with light, Ribamar sits right on the waterfront and is considered one of the best restaurants in the region. Along with the sea views, it serves up some wonderfully original concoctions, and there is always something new on the menu. Be daring and opt for the fish with seaweed, or cream of sea-urchin soap.

SETÚBAL Poço das Fontainhas

Rua das Fontainhas 96, 2910-082 Tel 265 534 807

Tucked away in the backstreets near the Tróia ferry terminal, this popular restaurant is a bit tricky to find but well worth the effort. Fresh Atlantic fish and seafood dominate the menu, with caldeirada à Setubalense (Setúbal-style fish and potato casserole) a favourite with the locals. Other highlights include espitada de lulas (squid kebab). Closed Mon.

SETÚBAL Pousada de São Filipe

Pousada de São Filipe, Castelo de São Filipe, 2900-300 Tel 265 550 070

There is a jaw-dropping view of Setúbal and the Sado estuary and if it is warm, tables are set outside on the esplanade. The ambience is late 16th-century Portugal and the food reflects the country's centuries-old culinary tradition. Regional dishes include pumpkin cream soup, fried red mullet and grilled lamb with orange sauce.

SINTRA Tulhas

Rua Gil Vicente 4-6, 2710-568 Tel 219 232 378

The mysterious hole near the entrance to this restaurant is the last vestige of a series of medieval granaries that once stood on the site (the Portuguese word for granary is tulhas). Small and unpretentious, the homemade food is wholesome and great value for money. The veal steak in Madeira wine is particularly flavoursome. Closed Wed.

SINTRA Lawrence's

Rua Consiglieri Pedroso 38-40, 2710-550 Tel 219 105 500

The owners describe Lawrence's as a restaurant with rooms rather than a hotel, such is the esteem in which they hold this gourmet venue. Indeed, Lord Byron and William Beckford are just two of the historical figures said to have eaten here. The à la carte cuisine is served with finesse and there are over 200 wines to choose from.

SINTRA Restaurante Palácio de Seteais

Rua Barbosa du Bocage 8, Seteais, 2710-517 Tel 219 233 200

The palace, which is now a hotel, is a breathtaking example of 18th-century splendour, and is home to a splendid gourmet restaurant. The building features a grand dining room decorated with mythological motifs and frescos, and has outstanding views of the landscaped gardens and the coast. The menu is essentially Portuguese haute cuisine.

Cafés and Bars

Coffee is a vital element of the Portuguese way of life and a vibrant culture has developed around the simple pleasure of relaxing over a cup of coffee and a pastry in one of Lisbon's many cafés. The Portuguese have a complex classification system for coffee options (see p125), which modern coffee fashions will not change. Although shortcomings of service and gastronomy may be allowed to pass in a restaurant, a bad coffee at the end of the meal is a cardinal sin.

Bar culture is a younger phenomenon. While traditional drinking places such as ginjinha bars live on, the bars that make Lisbon's nightlife one of Europe's liveliest and most varied are rarely more than a decade or two old. Bairro Alto is the city's best-known bar territory and has the widest choice, but Santos, Bica/Santa Catarina and Cais do Sodré are good areas for bar-hopping too.

CLASSIC CAFÉS

Foremost among the grand cafés from the turn of the last century is A Brasileira, perfectly sited at the top of one of Lisbon's best shopping streets. The intellectuals who made it famous are long gone (there is a café-table bronze of poet Fernando Pessoa on the popular esplanade), but the atmosphere is cosmopolitan.

Nicola, down in Rossio, has an elegant Art Deco interior and a busy outdoor seating area with plenty to watch. Across the square is Casa Suíça, another boulevard-style café where the long promenade is its main attraction. Martinho da Arcada, under the arcades in Praça do Comércio, has an illustrious history and a beautifully tiled interior. Traffic makes the tables outside less of a treat, unless you opt for the restaurant, which has tables further in.

PARK/GARDEN CAFÉS

Those who appreciate a bit of greenery and no traffic with their coffee should seek out Linha d'Água at the top of Parque Eduardo VII. As with many Lisbon cafés it also serves meals at lunchtime. The pond-side café in Jardim da Estrela is another attractive option. Pão de Canela is a small café with a terrace on Praça das Flores, a quiet square with a garden in one of Lisbon's cosiest neighbourhoods. Cafeteria Quadrante in the modern complex of the Centro Cultural de Belém is set in an attractive, minimalist garden overlooking the river. Inside it can feel a bit like a canteen, but there is also a quieter upstairs bar, Terraço. Vegetarians will appreciate Psi, with its small garden and spiritual vibe.

CONTEMPORARY CAFÉS

A contemporary approach means more froth in your milky coffee (do not call it latte though), a wider range of sandwiches and a lighter touch with meals. It may also mean a lounge-like atmosphere, plenty of magazines and a serious take on music. Exponents of this approach include Café no Chiado with a very relaxed atmosphere, Vertigo, also in Chiado, and the inimitable Pois, Café with its cosy vaulted living room near the Sé. There is no Starbucks in Lisbon, but homegrown chains LA Caffé and Magnolia Caffé offer style and quality.

PASTRY SHOPS

Pastelarias are a crucial institution in Lisbon. Less raucous and smoky than normal cafés and snack bars, they are the preferred haunt of ladies of a certain age. However, as with any other customer, they would not bother coming in if the glass counter was not laden with freshly made pastéis de nata or amêndoas (custard or almond tarts), bolos de arroz (rice-flour cakes) or queijadas (cottage cheese tarts). Bénard is next to A Brasileira and gets some of the surplus custom from there, but its pastries are fresher. Confeitaria Nacional has been around for nearly two centuries and still does a booming over-the-counter business. The café section gets crowded quickly. Uptown is Pastelaria Versailles which is airier and has an atmosphere of faded grandeur. By far the most famous pastry shop is Antiga Confeitaria de Belém, where the pastel de nata (known as pastel de Belém in Lisbon) is said to have been invented.

DJ BARS

Bairro Alto has more bars than most people can ever manage to remember, but among those where music is taken particularly seriously are Clube da Esquina and Mexe Caffé. In nearby Bica/Santa Catarina, Bicaense has a coolly informal groove. Closer to the river, Lounge is less low key than it was, but remains dedicated to non-mainstream sounds. Mini-Mercado (formerly Fluid), in Santos, has some of the city's hottest DJs.

OUTDOOR BARS

Good bars for sunset viewing, warm nights and occasional sunrises include Meninos do Rio, whose irresistible chaises longues on the quayside need to be grabbed early. Op Art is a beacon of good taste and music in the otherwise slightly tacky Docas area under the bridge. Noobai combines great music with great views from the Santa Catarina viewpoint, and is one of Lisbon's most popular spots on warm summer evenings. Below the Castle, Bar das Imagens is a long-standing, or leaning, terrace over the city.

CLASSICS AND GINJINHAS

Pavilhão Chinês is on every tourist's itinerary, but it is worth a visit for its curios-shop interior. It is also one of the few places that gives cocktails proper respect. The British Bar is a remnant from a bygone era and its wall clock goes backwards, but it attracts a very present-day crowd. Portas Largas could be said to be the engine that runs Bairro Alto – its street party is electric (and gay, but far from exclusively so). Ginjinha bars are a uniquely Portuguese institution: small, hole-in-the-wall bars that serve morello-cherry liqueur, ginjinha and almost nothing else. Pop into A Ginjinha or Ginjinha Sem Rival for a taste.

WINE BARS

There are surprisingly few bars that offer a good range of wines by the glass in Lisbon. Among the few that exist, Enoteca is perhaps the best, where tasty small dishes are served alongside an excellent selection of Portuguese and some foreign wines. In a similar vein, the Néctar Wine Bar in the heart of the Baixa serves a selection of wines by the glass. And Lux, Lisbon's premier nightclub, now has a bar dedicated to Bacchus. Port by the glass can also be had at the Solar do Vinho do Porto, run by the Port Wine Institute of Oporto.

SHOPPING IN LISBON

Lisbon offers a wide variety of shops to the visitor, with its combination of elegant high street shops, flea markets and modern shopping centres. The cobbled streets of the Baixa, and the chic Chiado district have traditionally been Lisbon's main shopping areas, but the numerous indoor shopping centres are becoming increasingly popular.

Portuguese ceramic cockerel

Markets in Lisbon, Sintra and Cascais provide more adventurous shopping. If you are after something typically Portuguese, the hand-woven tapestries and lacework are worth buying. Most of all, choose from a range of ceramics, such as azulejos or Vista Alegre porcelain. For lovers of wine, Lisbon's wine merchants offer the best from all over the country.

A delicatessen in the Bairro Alto

OPENING HOURS

Traditional shopping hours are Monday to Friday 9am to 1pm and 3pm to 7pm, and Saturday 9am to 1pm.

However, in order to satisfy consumer demand, many shops, especially those in the Baixa, are now staying open during the lunch hour and on Saturday afternoons. Specialist shops such as hardware stores generally close for lunch at 12:30pm and reopen at 2:30pm. Shopping centres are open daily from 10am to midnight with most shops closing at 11pm. Generally, convenience stores are open daily from 7am to 2am.

HOW TO PAY

Most shops in Lisbon accept Visa and, to a lesser extent, American Express and MasterCard. Many smaller shops outside the main shopping areas will not.

An alternative is to obtain a cash advance with a credit card from one of the many Multi-banco teller machines (ATMs). Note that these charge interest on the withdrawal from day one, in addition to a currency conversion fee.

VAT AND TAXES

Non-European Union residents are exempt from IVA (Value Added Tax) in Portugal provided they remain in the country for no longer than 180 days. However, obtaining a rebate may be complicated in small shops or in areas less frequented by tourists. It is much simpler to buy in shops with a Tax Free sign outside.

To get your rebate, ask the shop assistant for an Isenção na Exportação form. This must then be presented to a customs officer on your departure from Portugal. The original of the document will be returned to the vendor who is responsible for the reimbursement.

SHOPPING CENTRES

Large shopping centres are now very much part of the shopping landscape in Lisbon. They combine vast supermarkets, international chain stores and small specialist shops. All have restaurants and underground car parks; most also have cinemas. The oldest is Amoreiras, which has 300 shops, 10 cinemas and 50 restaurants. Dolce Vita Monumental is one of three smaller centres clustered near Praça Duque de Saldanha. Armazéns do Chiado in the Chiado area has an historic façade but a modern interior. The huge Colombo Shopping Centre (see p74) in Benfica boasts a large children's leisure centre. The Vasco da Gama centre connects Oriente Station with Parque das Nações. The Spanish department store El Corte Inglés is at the top of Parque Eduardo VII. Cascais-hopping, located between Estoril and Sintra, is one of many suburban centres.

MARKETS

There are markets of every variety in Lisbon, from municipal markets selling fresh produce to the famous Feira da Ladra (Thieves' Market), a flea market on the slopes of the Alfama district. Although some stalls just sell junk, some bargains can be found among the array of bric-a-brac, second-hand clothes and general arts and crafts.

For more specialized markets, head to Oriente station, where you will find the Feira de Antiguidades E Velharias, an antiques market, or to the Chiado district for the Feira dos Alfarrabistas, for old books. The Feira de Coleccionismo (collectors' market) takes place in Cais do Sodré every Sunday (9am–1pm).

Set in picturesque surroundings outside Lisbon, the Feira de São Pedro, in Sintra, is a wonderful market selling everything from new clothes and old bric-a-brac, to maturing cheeses and cackling fowl.

Along the Lisbon Coast, the Feira de Cascais has some good clothes bargains, as does the Feira de Carcavelos. Arrive early to beat the crowds.

FOOD SHOPS

It is almost impossible to window shop in Lisbon's delicatessens (charcutarias) without buying. Lined with a vast array of mouth watering foods, from superb cheeses to tasty smoked meats and exquisite sweets, establishments such as Charcutaria Brasil are a must for all seasoned gourmets. Here you can buy almost all regional specialties, from cheeses such as serra and ilbas to wild game such as partridge. Smoked hams and spicy sausages are also popular. If you have a sweet tooth, try some delicious ovos moles (egg sweets) or an assortment of dried or crystallized fruits, including delicious Elvas plums.

Other good food shops include Charcutaria Carvalho & Morais and Manuel Tavares, which has a large selection of port and madeira. Celeiro Dieta is a good health food shop, and is well-known for stocking organic foods.

WINES AND SPIRITS

Portugal has a large variety of wines, fortified wines and spirits, ranging from light vinhos verdes to powerful tintos (reds), from fruity young ruby ports to ancient tawny ports or madeira, from sweet amêndoa amarga (bitter almond liqueur) to fiery baga-ceira (grapeskin distillate).

Napoleão, the best-known wine merchants in Lisbon, has outlets in many parts of the city, with its oldest shop in the Baixa. For port specifically, visit the Solar do Vinho do Porto (see p54), in Bairro Alto: this slightly fusty institution is actually a bar where you can sample a vast range of ports before deciding what to buy. Garrafeira de Campo de Ourique is one of Lisbon's best smaller wine merchants, and Coisas do Arco do Vinho has a good selection. Alternatively, large supermarkets are good for bargains, with frequent special offers on wines and spirits. You could visit the cellars of J.M. da Fonseca in Azeitão, where you can taste and buy many of the wines.

MUSIC AND MULTIMEDIA

The music scene in Portugal is a lively mix of traditions and the very latest trends. Fado music remains hugely popular, while techno and trance dance music have a dedicated following. Lisbon is also an important centre for contemporary music from former African colonies such as Cape Verde.

FNAC operates two mega-stores in Lisbon, and these are widely regarded as the city's best music shops in terms of variety. FNAC also sells most kinds of electronic hardware and software, as well as books. Discoteca Amália in the Baixa specializes in fado.

Frontage of Livraria Bertrand, one of Lisbon's oldest bookshops

BOOKSHOPS

Portugal enjoys a great literary tradition with a range of authors, past and present, including Luís de Camões, Eça de Queirós, Fernando Pessoa and José Saramago. Translations of their works, and those of other well-known Portuguese writers, are available in most large bookshops.

Livraria Bertrand and Livraria Portugal, both in the Chiado, are among Lisbon's oldest bookshops. Livraria Buchholz near the top of Avenida da Liberdade, was founded by a German and has a particularly large section of books in languages other than Portuguese, including travel guides, paperback fiction and history.

For an interesting selection of second-hand books, try visiting the Feira dos Alfarrabistas market, held in the Chiado district on the first Sunday of every month.

CLOTHES

Many of the large chain stores, have outlets in Lisbon, particularly in the shopping centres (see p138). Perhaps most noticeable is the Spanish Zara chain, whose shops sell affordable clothes for everyone.

More exclusive shops, including designer outlets, can be found on and around Avenida da Liberdade. Rosa & Teixeira, sells classic menswear, Loja das Meias is a mid-range chain with several shops. Ana Salazar is one of an increasing number of known Portuguese designers.

CERAMICS

Portugal's ceramics are famous for their quality and variety. In Lisbon you can find everything, from delicate porcelain to rustic terracotta, and from tiles to tableware.

The very fine Vista Alegre porcelain tableware is internationally known. Also famous are the hand-painted ceramics, including tiles from Viúva Lamego, Santana and Cerâmica Artística de Carcavelos. Known as azulejos, glazed tiles have long been used in Portugal to brighten up buildings. They may be plain, patterned or make up large figurative paintings. In Cascais, Ceramicarte is one of the largest ceramic centres. Perhaps the most ubiquitous pottery originates from Barcelos, famous for its decoratively painted cockerel which has become the unofficial national symbol.

REGIONAL CRAFTS

Portugal has a long and rich history of fine regional craftwork (artesanato), in particular embroidery and fine lace, hand-knitted woolens, and delicate jewellery made from silver and gold thread. There are plenty of handicraft and gift shops in the Restauradores and Rossio areas of Lisbon, though these can be a little touristy. Arte Rustica, in the Baixa, is excellent for genuine crafts and a fascinating place to spend time browsing.

Regionália, in Estoril, and Sintra Bazar in central Sintra, are also both good for arts.

Between July and August a wide variety of crafts can be seen at the Estoril Craft Fair, at which artisans from all over Portugal gather to exhibit their work. Cork carvings and pottery can be found at Santos Oficíos.

Lisbon offers regional crafts from all over Portugal

ANTIQUES

Antiques often tend to be overpriced in Portugal, especially in Lisbon where the shops are mostly geared to a fairly up-market clientele. You will generally find better value in towns outside the city. It is a good idea to look for shops that are members of APA (Associação Portuguesa de Antiquários). These are usually identified by a sign in the shop window.

The majority of Lisbon's antique shops are located either in Rua Dom Pedro V, at the top of the Bairro Alto, or in Rua de São Bento, by the Parliament building, and around the cathedral, in the Alfama. There are numerous religious artefacts to be found in the area and Solar specializes in 16th–20th-century tiles (azulejos). Beautiful prints (known as gravuras), sold at various second-hand bookshops in the Bairro Alto, are usually good value for money.

Livraria Olisipo stocks books and also old prints of landscapes, fauna and maps. For a good range of quality antiques, it is worth visiting the auctions held at Cabral Moncada Leilões (which are held every Monday evening) and also the Antiques Fair, which is held in Lisbon annually during April.

SIZE CHART

Lisbon uses both British and American systems.

ENTERTAINMENT IN LISBON

For a smallish European capital, Lisbon has a good and varied cultural calendar. Musical events range from classical and opera performances to intimate fado evenings, and large rock concerts. Dance, both classical and modern, is well represented in Lisbon. The Gulbenkian Foundation, long the only major arts patron, has been joined by other private funds as well as state institutions.

Football is a consuming passion of the Portuguese, and Lisbon's Sporting and Benfica teams play regularly at home. Lisbon outparties many larger capitals, with a nightlife known for its liveliness.

BOOKING TICKETS

Tickets can be reserved by phoning the Agência de Bilhetes para Espectáculos Públicos (ABEP). Pay in cash when you collect them from the kiosk. Some cinemas and theatres accept phone or credit card bookings – it is best to check first.

ABEP kiosk selling tickets on Praça dos Restauradores

LISTINGS MAGAZINES

Previews of forthcoming events and listings of bars and clubs appear weekly in major newspapers. English-language events publications include the monthly Follow Me Lisboa, which is free and widely available throughout the city, including most hotel rooms. The monthly Agenda Cultural is in Portuguese.

CINEMA AND THEATRE

Movie-goers are very well served in Lisbon. Films are shown in their original language with Portuguese subtitles, and tickets are inexpensive. On Mondays most cinemas offer reductions. The city's traditional cinemas have now largely given way to modern multiplexes, usually in shopping centres such as Amoreiras or El Corte Inglés (see p141). While these screen mainstream Hollywood fare, cinemas such as King Triplex show more European films. Classics and retrospectives can be seen at the Cinemateca Portuguesa, whose monthly programme is available at tourist offices.

Theatre performances are most often in Portuguese, but large institutions such as the Teatro Nacional Dona Maria II and the Teatro da Trindade occasionally stage guest performances by visiting companies. Less formally, Chapitô sometimes has open-air shows.

CLASSICAL MUSIC, OPERA AND DANCE

The Centro Cultural de Belém (see p68) and the Fundação Calouste Gulbenkian (see pp76-9) host national and international events including concerts and ballet. The Teatro Nacional de São Carlos is Portugal's national opera, with a season that mixes its own productions with guest performances. The Teatro Camões hosts the Lisbon symphony orchestra and the Portuguese national ballet. The Coliseu dos Recrejos offers a variety of events.

Performance at the Chapitô circus school, Alfama

WORLD MUSIC, JAZZ, POP AND ROCK

Lisbon's musical soul may be fado (see pp144-5), but the city is no stranger to other forms of musical expression. African music, particularly that of former Portuguese colony Cape Verde, plays an big part in Lisbon's music scene. Venues include Enclave, which has frequent live performances.

The Hot Clube has been Lisbon's foremost jazz venue for as long as anyone can remember, and has the right intimate atmosphere. Speakeasy is younger, slightly bigger, and varies live jazz with up-tempo blues, particularly at weekends.

Large rock and pop concerts are held at outdoor venues, such as football stadiums, or indoors at Pavilhão Atlântico or Coliseu dos Recreios.

NIGHTCLUBS

Bairro Alto remains a lively area for Lisbon nightlife, although its mostly small bars don't usually have dance floors or keep very late hours. However, there are a few exceptions, including the doyen of Bairro Alto clubs, Frágil, still at the cutting edge after 20 years.

Among the larger and more mainstream dance venues are Kremlin and Kapital; the former is a nearly historic house club, while the latter is a very middle-of-the-road disco.

Inland, in the Alcântara area, are W and Alcântara-Mar, while eastwards along the river near Santa Apolónia station, is Lux, the cream of Lisbon's current club scene.

Details of recommended bars in Lisbon, Estoril, Cascais and Sintra can be found on pages 134–5.

SPECTATOR SPORTS

Lisbon's main football stadiums, built for the 2004 European Football Championship, are Estádio José Alvalade and Estádio da Luz.

The Portuguese football cup finals, as well as other events such as the Estoril Open tennis tournament, are held at the Estádio Nacional-Jamor. The Pavilhão Atlântico is also used for indoor sporting events such as tennis, volleyball and basketball. Estoril's Autódromo Fernanda Pires da Silva is a motor racing venue.

Fado: the Music of Lisbon

A guitarra accompanist

Like the blues, fado is an expression of longing and sorrow. Literally meaning “fate”, the term may be applied to an individual song as well as the genre itself. The music owes much to the concept known as saudade, meaning a longing both for what has been lost, and for what has never been attained, which perhaps accounts for its emotional power. The people of Lisbon have nurtured this poignant music in back-street cafés and restaurants for over 150 years, and it has altered little in that time. It is sung as often by women as men, always accompanied by the guitarra and viola (acoustic Spanish guitar). Fado from Coimbra has developed its own lighter-hearted style.

A graphic depiction of the music's low-life associations from the 1920s

Maria Severa (1810–36) was the first great fadista and the subject of the first Portuguese sound film in 1931. Her scandalous life and early death are pivotal to fado history, and her spiritual influence has been enormous, inspiring fados, poems, novels and plays.

All female fadistas wear a black shawl in memory of Maria Severa.

The guitarista plays the melody and will occasionally perform a solo instrumental piece.

Most instruments have 12 paired strings, like this one. The double strings produce a resonant, silvery-sweet tone.

Delicate mother-of-pearl inlaid flower motifs

Mother-of-pearl finger plate

THE GUITARRA

Peculiar to Portuguese culture, the guitarra is a flat-backed instrument shaped like a mandolin, with eight, ten or twelve strings, arranged in pairs. It has evolved from a simple 19th-century design into a finely decorated piece, sometimes inlaid with mother-of-pearl. The sound of the guitarra is an essential ingredient of a good fado, echoing and enhancing the singer's melody line.

All kinds of themes may occur in fado. This song of 1910, for example, celebrates the dawning of the liberal republic. Such songsheets remained a favoured means of dissemination, even after the first records were made in 1904.

Alfredo Duarte (1891–1982) was a renowned writer of fado lyrics dealing with love, death, longing, tragedy and triumph. Affectionately known as O Marceneiro (the master carpenter) because of his skill as a joiner, he is still revered and his work widely performed.

A cultural icon for the Portuguese, Amália Rodrigues (1921–99) was the leading exponent of fado for over 50 years. She crystallized the music's style in the postwar years, and made it known around the world.

The viola provides rhythm accompaniment, but the player will never take a solo.

The music has long inspired great writers and painters. O Fado (1910) by José Malbôa (1855–1933) shows it in an intimate setting with the fadista captivating his listener. The air of abandonment underlines the earthiness of many of the songs.

THE FADO HOUSE

Lisbon's best fado houses are those run by fadistas themselves. Based on a love of the music and on relationships with other performers, such houses usually offer a truer fado experience than the larger, tourist-oriented houses. A good example is the Parreirinha de Alfama, owned by Argentina Santos (shown above). Less slick, but more emotionally charged, are performances of fado vadio, "itinerant" fado, in humbler restaurants and bars such as Tasca do Chico in Bairro Alto.

WHERE TO ENJOY FADO IN LISBON

Any of these places offer good food, wine and music. Or visit the Museu do Fado for a fascinating exhibition on the history of fado.

PRACTICAL INFORMATION 148–155

TRAVEL INFORMATION 156–157

GETTING AROUND LISBON 158–179

PRACTICAL INFORMATION

Lisbon has become increasingly modern and cosmopolitan, with the advantages and disadvantages that this brings. The city is well equipped to receive visitors, and has professional tourist services, particularly at the Lisboa Welcome Center in the Baixa area and the Ask Me Lisboa

Tourist information sign tourist office in Restauradores. However, it has also become rather expensive and traffic-ridden. Visitors seeking the old Lisbon can still find it in the Alfama, or any of the city's smaller areas. One of the best ways to appreciate Lisbon is on foot, using trams for the steeper hills and pausing to enjoy the varied views.

Museu Nacional de Arqueologia, which is free to visit on Sunday mornings

VISAS AND PASSPORTS

Nationals of the EU need only a valid passport to enter Portugal, which is a signatory to the Schengen Convention; for stays longer than six months, a residence permit is required. Americans, Canadians, Australians and New Zealanders may stay for up to 90 days without a visa. All travellers from outside the EU should check with their nearest Portuguese embassy or consulate, as regulations may change.

UK passport holders should note that lost or stolen passports can no longer be replaced by the British Embassy in Lisbon; instead, you will need to apply to the British Embassy in Madrid for a replacement.

TOURIST INFORMATION

The opening hours of tourist offices in Lisbon are generally the same as those of local shops (see p138). Those that are more centrally located, such as Ask Me Lisboa and the Lisboa Welcome Center remain open throughout weekends. Offices in the centre of Lisbon are indicated on the Street Finder maps (see pp172–9). Other offices may be found at Portela airport (see p156) and at Santa Apolónia station (Map 8 F3). Addresses of offices in the Lisbon Coast area are given in the information at the top of each sight entry. Portuguese tourist offices outside Portugal, such as those listed on page 149, can provide you with useful information before you travel.

LANGUAGE

Written Portuguese is fairly similar to Spanish, so if you know Spanish you should have little difficulty reading Portuguese text. Spoken Portuguese, however, sounds very different from Spanish. Although English is more widely spoken in Portugal than in neighbouring Spain, the Portuguese are proud of their language and appreciate visitors' efforts to communicate in Portuguese. A phrasebook with some useful words and phrases is on pages 191–2.

ADMISSION PRICES

Most museums and monuments charge an entrance fee, which often increases in the summer. Entry is usually free on Sunday mornings and public holidays. Pensioners and children under 14 are entitled to a 40 per cent discount. Visitors under 26 with a Cartão Jovem (youth card; www.geracao-c.com) or an ISIC card (International Student Identity Card; www.isic.org) are entitled to half-price entrance.

Visitors can also buy a Lisboa Card (see p158), which includes free or discounted entry to many of Lisbon's state museums, historic monuments and places of special interest and discounted travel on the city's public transport.

OPENING HOURS

Most museums are open from 10am to 5pm Tue–Sun, with many closing for lunch from noon to 2pm or from 12:30 to 2:30pm. Smaller or privately owned museums may have different opening times. Note that state-run museums and some sights close on Mondays and public holidays. Major churches are open all day, although some may close from noon to 4pm. Smaller churches may only open for services.

TRAVELLERS WITH SPECIAL NEEDS

Facilities in Lisbon have improved greatly. Some buses (marked with a blue-and-white wheelchair logo at the front) can carry wheelchair-bound passengers, and ramps and lifts are common in many public places, including shopping centres, theatres, museums and across the rail and Metro network, though access to platforms is not always easy. Adapted toilets are available at airports and main train stations, and reserved car parking is clearly marked. The use of Braille to indicate directions and telephone numbers is on the increase. A number of tour companies, such as Accessible Portugal, Access at Last and Choose Portugal, offer specialist holiday packages to Lisbon, or give advice on accessible accommodation for travellers with limited mobility.

TIME

Portugal follows Britain in adopting Greenwich Mean Time (GMT) in winter and moving the clocks forward 1 hour in summer. The 24-hour clock is commonly used.

ELECTRICITY

Voltage in Portugal is 220 volts. Plugs have two round pins, and most hotel bathrooms offer built-in adaptors for shavers only.

RESPONSIBLE TOURISM

Lisbon is taking environmental issues seriously, as demonstrated by special "eco-points" for the correct disposal of rubbish. Colour-coded bins (blue for card/paper, yellow for plastic and tin, and green for glass) in strategic locations around the city encourage the public to recycle their litter. The Inspira Santa Marta (see p118) is Lisbon's first eco-hotel. Awarded a Green Globe Certificate, it is constructed from ecologically sustainable building materials such as wood and stone, is designed to make maximum use of natural light and serves organic food in its restaurant.

Some shops have garnered green credentials too – for instance, the bread sold at Quinoa, a city-centre bakery, is 100% organic. The Saturday market at Praça do Príncipe Real sells organic produce.

Slowly, Lisbon is reducing its carbon footprint, exemplified by its use of nearly 3 million energy-efficient light bulbs to illuminate its municipal Christmas decorations.

Personal Security and Health

Pharmacy sign

Lisbon does not have a serious crime problem, but simple precautions can and should be taken. Watch out for pickpockets in busy areas and on public transport, avoid carrying large amounts of cash, and don't leave valuables in parked cars. The police are generally helpful, but bureaucratic; reporting a crime can take time. In case of a medical emergency, dial 112 and ask for an ambulance. For minor medical complaints, consult a pharmacist first.

POLICE

In Lisbon and other main towns in Portugal, the police force is the Polícia de Segurança Pública (PSP). A division of the PSP, a special Metro unit, patrols Lisbon's rail and Metro network, most notably at night. In rural areas, law and order is kept by the Guarda Nacional Republicana (GNR). The Brigada de Trânsito (traffic police) is a division of the GNR, and its members are recognizable by their red armbands. They are responsible for patrolling roads.

If you have any property stolen, you should contact the nearest police station at the earliest opportunity. Theft of a passport should also be reported to your embassy. Many insurance companies insist that policy holders report any theft to their police within 24 hours.

The police will file a report; note that you will need this in order to claim from your insurance company on your return home.

There is a Tourist Police Station at Palácio Foz, in Praça dos Restauradores (see p151), manned by English-speaking officers, that deals exclusively with complaints from tourists. Rail and Metro carriages display dedicated telephone numbers for use in the event of emergencies.

In all situations, try to keep calm and be polite to the authorities to avoid delays. The same applies should you be involved in a car accident. In rural areas you may be asked to accompany the other driver to the nearest police station to complete the necessary paperwork. Ask for an interpreter if no one there speaks English.

WHAT TO BE AWARE OF

Violent crime is fairly rare in Lisbon and in Portugal generally, and the majority of visitors will experience no problems whatsoever. Nonetheless, a few sensible precautions are worth taking: avoid quiet areas such as the Baixa after dark, and don't stroll alone through Bairro Alto, Alfama or around Cais do Sodré after bars have closed. In the daytime, be alert to the possibility of pickpockets or, more rarely, bag-snatchers. Be vigilant when withdrawing cash from an ATM (Multibanco or MB). Whenever possible, carry out the transaction in daylight and be aware of anyone standing too close behind you who could see your PIN number. Ideally, use an ATM together with someone you know and trust, or one that is housed within the bank's premises. Some poorer neighbourhoods and outlying slums see more serious daytime crime, but they are not on the typical visitor's itinerary.

Other general precautions include not carrying or showing large amounts of cash (carry only the amount needed for daily purchases), not leaving possessions visible in parked cars, not leaving bags unattended (especially at outdoor cafés and restaurants), and holding on to valuable equipment such as mobile phones and cameras. Beware of pickpockets on crowded Metro trains. If you are robbed, you are advised not to put up any resistance.

No vaccinations are needed for visitors to Portugal, although doctors recommend being up-to-date with tetanus, diphtheria and measles jabs. Tap water is safe to drink throughout the country. If you are visiting during the summer, it is advisable to bring insect repellent, as mosquitoes, while they do not present any serious health problems, can be a nuisance. The use of a good sun block is also recommended, and try to drink plenty of water.

IN AN EMERGENCY

The number to contact in the event of an emergency is 112. Dial the number and then indicate which service you require – the police (polícia), an ambulance (ambulância) or the fire brigade (bombeiros). If you need medical treatment, the casualty department (serviço de urgência) of the closest main hospital will treat you. On motorways and main roads, use the orange SOS telephone to call for help should you have a car accident. The service is in Portuguese; press the button and wait for an answer. The operator will put you through.

HOSPITALS AND PHARMACIES

Social security coverage is available for all EU nationals in Portugal. To claim, you must obtain the European Health Insurance Card (EHIC) from the UK Department of Health or from a post office before you travel. The card comes with a booklet, Health Advice for Travellers, which explains exactly what health care you are entitled to and where and how to claim. You may find you have to pay and reclaim the money later. Not all treatments are covered by the card, and some are costly, so all travellers are advised to arrange for comprehensive medical insurance before travelling.

The British Hospital in Lisbon has English-speaking doctors, as do international health centres on the Lisbon Coast. Pharmacies (farmácias) can diagnose simple health problems and suggest appropriate treatment. Pharmacists can dispense a range of drugs that would normally be available only on prescription in many other countries. The sign for a farmácia is a green cross. They are open 9am–1pm and 3–7pm Mon–Fri (9am–1pm Sat). Each pharmacy displays a card in the window showing the address of the nearest all-night pharmacy and a list of those that are open until late (10pm). Two centrally located pharmacies are Farmácia Barral and Farmácia Estácio.

LEGAL ASSISTANCE

An insurance policy that covers the costs of legal advice, issued by companies such as Europ Assistance or Mondial Assistance, will help with the legal aspects of your insurance claim should you have an accident. If you have not arranged this cover, call your nearest consulate or the Ordem dos Advogados (Lawyers' Association), who can give you names of English-speaking lawyers and help you with obtaining representation. Lists of interpreters are given in the local Yellow Pages (Páginas Amarelas) under Tradutores e Intérpretes, or contact AP Portugal, based in Lisbon.

PUBLIC CONVENIENCES

The Portuguese for toilets is casa de banho. If the usual figures of a man or woman are not shown, look for the words homens (men) and senhoras (ladies). Toilet facilities are provided at motorway service areas every 40 km (25 miles) and at some drive-in rest areas. They can also be found in most modern shopping malls and at major transport hubs, such as coach and railway stations. In addition, a number of specially designed coin-operated toilets can be found in the streets. As a last resort, all cafés and restaurants provide toilet facilities; these, however, are often open only to customers – some are accessed by a key kept behind the counter.

Banking and Local Currency

BPI bank logo

Portugal is one of the founding members of the European Monetary Union and one of the countries that launched the euro in 2002.

Credit and debit cards are widely accepted, and funds can be readily obtained from ATMs; those offering the best exchange rates are found mainly in the Baixa district. It is always a good idea to arrive with enough euros in cash to cover one or two days' expenditure. Bank exchange rates can vary, while bureaux de change may provide a faster service than banks.

Bank façade on Rua do Ouro

BANKS AND BUREAUX DE CHANGE

Banks are open between 8:30am and 3pm, Monday to Friday. Some branches stay open for longer, usually until 6pm – check at individual branches. Some banks are open on Saturday mornings, but most banks are closed throughout weekends, and all are closed on public holidays. ATM services, however, are available 24 hours daily. Money can be changed at banks, bureaux de change (agências de câmbios) and at many hotels. Be aware that in Portugal, larger denomination banknotes such as the €200 and €500 note have a limited circulation, and some establishments may not accept them.

There are several major banks, which have branches everywhere, but their rates of exchange and commission vary. Waiting times and bureaucratic practices at banks may also make them a slow option. There are many bureaux de change, such as Nova Câmbios, throughout the city. They often charge higher commissions than banks, but this is not always the case; it's worth shopping around, especially in and around Rossio, for the best rates. Bureaux de change also offer a speedier service, as well as longer opening hours (including weekends). As a rule, hotels have the worst rates of exchange.

Traveller's cheques are a safe but not very convenient way of carrying money; it is rare for shops or hotels to accept them as payment, and cashing them may be quite expensive. In general, bureaux de change are better for this than banks, whose commissions may be high.

Funds may also be obtained using money-transfer companies like Western Union, which has several offices based in Lisbon. Recipients can pick up money at a participating Western Union agent in the city selected by the sender.

At banks, bureaux de change and money-transfer companies you may be asked to show your passport or some other form of photographic identification for exchange transactions.

CREDIT AND DEBIT CARDS

The most practical and convenient way to obtain cash is from an ATM (Multibanco or MB) using your credit or debit card. Note that many banks impose a small charge for international ATM transactions. Check the charges with your bank in advance. Multibanco machines for withdrawing cash are widely available, typically outside banks or in shopping centres.

Smaller, wireless chip-and-PIN Multibanco machines are found at shop counters and can be used to pay for a range of purchases including rail tickets, clothes and meals and drinks in restaurants. Some are even used in taxis. Most Multibanco machines accept Visa, MasterCard, American Express, Maestro and Cirrus cards and operate in several different languages.

Be sure to notify your bank and credit card providers before leaving for Portugal. Some banks forbid foreign transactions for security reasons unless they have been notified ahead of time.

THE EURO

The euro (€) is the common currency of the European Union. It went into general circulation on 1 January 2002, initially for 12 participating countries, including Portugal. EU members using the euro as their sole official currency are known as the Eurozone. Several EU members have opted out of joining this common currency.

Euro notes are identical throughout the Eurozone countries, each one including designs of fictional architectural structures and monuments. The coins, however, have one side identical (the value side), and one side with an image unique to each country. Both notes and coins are exchangeable in each country in the Eurozone.

Banknotes

Euro banknotes, each a different colour and size, have seven denominations. The €5 note (grey in colour) is the smallest, followed by the €10 note (pink), €20 note (blue), €50 note (orange), €100 note (green), €200 note (yellow) and €500 note (purple).

Communications and Media

Information and telecommunications technology in Portugal has advanced at a swift pace. Public telephones are widely available, and the country's mobile phone operators have roaming agreements with most international phone companies; there is good coverage across the city. Lisbon has numerous Internet cafés, and Wi-Fi access is available at the airport, most of the bigger hotels and in many public spaces. Foreign-language newspapers and magazines are on sale the same day of home publication. Portuguese terrestrial television is complemented by an array of foreign cable and satellite channels. Domestic radio broadcasts exclusively in Portuguese.

MOBILE PHONES

If you want to guarantee that your mobile phone will work in Portugal, make sure you have a quad-band phone. Tri-band phones are also usually compatible, but they may have limited global coverage. Contact your service provider to check your phone's compatibility.

To use your mobile phone abroad, you may need to request permission from your network provider before travelling so that they can set your phone to allow "roaming". Check roaming charges with your provider as making and receiving calls can be very expensive.

A popular and cheaper option is to purchase a local SIM card (the electronic chip that links your phone to a particular network); this will use the local mobile phone networks and can be topped up with credit. There are three main mobile phone operators in Portugal: TMN, Vodafone and Optimus. However, you can use a local SIM card only if your handset is "unlocked" – some operators lock their phones to specific networks. Visitors who intend to remain in the city for an extended period would benefit from hiring or even purchasing a mobile phone from one of the main phone operators' shops, such as TMN or Vodafone, listed opposite. The cost of both local and international calls will be significantly cheaper.

It is worth keeping your network operator's helpline number to hand in case of difficulties.

PUBLIC TELEPHONES

Public telephones are plentiful in Lisbon, with options to pay by coin, phonecard or credit card. They are found in booths in the streets as well as in bars, cafés and shopping centres. Card-operated phones are more common and more convenient, accepting a variety of phonecards that can be purchased from post offices, newsagents, tobacconists (tabacaria) and Portugal Telecom company outlets. They also tend to be cheaper, charging about 3 cents for a local call. Some phones also accept credit cards, although that incurs a small extra charge.

International calls and calls to mobile phones are more expensive. An alternative is to phone from a post office, without having either change or a card. You simply step into a free booth, make your call, and pay the cashier afterwards. The cost per unit is relatively low. Some cafés, restaurants and bars have a units meter connected to their phone that calculates the cost of your call, for which you pay afterwards. They charge more than the post office but less than hotels.

A public phone booth outside a café in Lisbon

For international calls and calls to mobile phones in particular, bear in mind that rates are lower between 9pm and 9am, at weekends and on public holidays. All Lisbon landlines start with 21 and mobile numbers start with a 9.

Accessing the Internet at an Internet café

INTERNET ACCESS

Internet access is widely available in Lisbon, where an abundance of Internet cafés can be found in every major district, especially in tourist enclaves such as Bairro Alto and Chiado. Charges vary, but expect to pay between €1 and €3 per hour. Public Internet facilities can also be found at the city's coach and rail terminals, most of the large hotels, some guesthouses and the city's main youth hostel, Lisboa Central Hostel on Rua Rodrigues Sampaio (just off Marquês de Pombal square, Map 5 C5), as well as some other newer youth hostels.

Wi-Fi hotspots, such as those found at Lisbon airport and some modern shopping malls, enable users to log in on the go, but this facility is not always free.

People using mobile phones, laptop computers or palmtops and wishing to access the Web while abroad need to check that their Internet service provider offers a global roaming option.

POSTAL SERVICES

The postal service in Portugal is known as the Correios (the sign depicts a horse and rider in red). A letter sent to a country within the EU should take five to seven days to arrive, and a letter sent to the USA or further afield should take about seven to ten days.

First-class mail, known as correio azul, is posted in blue postboxes; second-class mail, or normal, in red ones. Post offices may have separate slots for national and international mail. There is also an express mail service (EMS) and a recorded delivery service (correio registado) for valuable letters.

Prepaid Easy Mail envelopes for domestic and international destinations are available. They do not need to be stamped or weighed, thus allowing for immediate dispatch. Stamps (selos) can be bought from post offices, from any shop displaying the Correios sign and from vending machines found at the airport, in railway stations and the larger shopping malls.

Post offices are usually open 9am–6pm Monday to Friday; larger post offices open 8:30am–10pm Monday to Friday and 9am–6pm on Saturday and Sunday.

If mailing larger items, use an international courier company. FedEx and DHL both have offices in Lisbon but are not centrally located.

LISBON'S ADDRESSES

Lisbon's addresses often include both the storey of a building and the location within that floor. The ground floor is the rês-do-chão (r/c), the first floor primeiro andar (1º), the second floor is expressed as 2º, and so on. Each floor is divided into left, esquerdo (E or Esqdo), and right, direito (D or Dto).

NEWSPAPERS AND MAGAZINES

English-language newspapers printed in Europe, including the International Herald Tribune, are available at larger newsagents on the day of publication except following a bank holiday. The same is true of various other European newspapers and periodicals. Foreign newspapers and magazines are more expensive, and some sections, notably weekend supplements, are not included.

Portuguese daily newspapers include Diário de Notícias and Público. The weekly Portugal News, published on Friday, is the country's main English-language publication. Catering to the expats living along the Estoril coast, it provides news and information on local events. Listings magazines available include the weekly Time Out Lisbon, published in Portuguese. A special edition, Lisbon for Visitors, is printed monthly in English.

Lisbon's Postboxes

First-class letters should be posted in blue (Correio Azul) boxes, and second-class letters in red boxes.

Portuguese newspapers

RADIO AND TELEVISION

Portugal has two state-owned TV channels, RTP1 and RTP2, and two privately owned ones, SIC and TVI. Most foreign programmes are broadcast in their original language, with Portuguese subtitles. Other English-language channels such as the BBC and CNN are available via satellite and cable. RDP radio (10 723 MHz) broadcasts in English in the summer only.

TRAVEL INFORMATION

Lisbon has an international airport, good rail links and a port that is popular with cruise liners. Its road network has improved greatly, with ring roads, motorways and a second bridge across the Tagus; however, traffic can be slow at rush hour. Trams provide fascinating trips through some of the city's oldest neighbourhoods; no other form of public transport can negotiate their steep hills and narrow streets. For the rest of the city, the Metro is the best way to get around. The bus network is huge, but buses do get held up in traffic. The Lisbon Coast and Sintra are easily accessible by train, and ferries are a pleasant way of crossing the Tagus to reach Caparica's beaches.

ARRIVING BY AIR

Lisbon has regularly scheduled flights from European capitals and major cities, including London, Paris, Madrid, Rome, Frankfurt, Munich, Zurich and Milan. Airlines with regular flights include British Airways, Air France, Iberia and Lufthansa. Most of these are daily, and in many cases there are several connections. TAP - Air Portugal, Portugal's national carrier, currently operates five daily flights from London (three from Heathrow and two from Gatwick) to Lisbon.

Travellers from North America will usually have to change at a European hub. Delta flies to Lisbon via Paris (using a partner airline) once or twice daily. United Airlines flies to Lisbon direct from Newark, New Jersey, daily. Aer Lingus operates a daily summer schedule to Lisbon from Boston and New York via Dublin. TAP's only direct flights from the US are also out of Newark.

South America is better served thanks to Portugal's ties with Brazil: TAP has direct flights to and from several Brazilian destinations. There are no direct flights to Lisbon from Canada, Australia or New Zealand; London is a popular hub for flights from these countries.

TAP (code-sharing with PGA Portugal Airlines) also flies to domestic destinations, including Oporto, Faro and Funchal. SATA, in partnership with TAP, serves the Azores. A number of budget airlines, including easyJet and Monarch, serve Lisbon. Charter airlines' tickets have fixed outward and return dates, but as they are often cheaper than a regular one-way ticket, many one-way passengers buy a return ticket but only use the outward flight. Some charter companies re-sell empty return seats at lower prices. Students can get reduced rates through specialist travel agencies such as STA, and it is also worth checking Internet travel companies such as Expedia.com for deals. Tickets tend to be pricier during high season in summer.

LISBON AIRPORT

Portela Airport is located 7 km (4 miles) north of Lisbon's city centre. It has two terminals linked by a bus service: Terminal 1 handles all international flights, while Terminal 2 is used for scheduled domestic flights. Airport facilities include a bank and a post office, as well as bureaux de changes in the departures area.

CONNECTIONS WITH THE AIRPORT

The airport's proximity to the city centre means that it is reasonably fast and cheap to get to the heart of Lisbon. Taxis are available from the taxi rank just outside the arrivals hall. Fares to the city centre are metered and cost between €10 and €15, with a small extra charge for luggage.

The Carristur-operated AeroBus and AeroShuttle bus services depart every 20–30 minutes between 7:45am and 11pm from the airport bus stop immediately beyond the taxi rank. They stop at major points in the city centre near to many hotels, such as Oriente, Entrecampos, Sete Rios, Saldanha, Marquês de Pombal, Restauradores, Rossio, Praça do Comércio and Cais do Sodré station. Tickets cost €3.50 and are then valid for the rest of the day for travel on buses, trams and funiculars.

Cheaper regular city buses can be caught at stops a little further to the right as you exit the arrivals hall. Tickets can be bought on boarding. Numbers 5, 22, 44, 83 and 745 stop at numerous central Lisbon locations.

ARRIVING BY RAIL

To the east of the Alfama district, on Avenida Infante Dom Henrique, is Santa Apolónia, the main station for long-distance trains from Coimbra, Oporto and the north, as well as from Madrid and Paris. It is 15 minutes' walk east of Praça do Comércio and is served by a Metro station. There is a tourist information office inside the station and a taxi rank outside the main entrance.

The impressive, modern Gare do Oriente is another international terminus for trains from Madrid and Paris. Although located much further north of the centre, at Parque das Nações, it has excellent links into the city by both bus and Metro.

Trains from the south and east of the city cross the Tagus via the Ponte 25 de Abril and connect with Entrecampos and Gare do Oriente stations. Cais do Sodré station serves the resort towns of Cascais and Estoril. Use Rossio, Roma Areeiro and Entrecampos stations for trains to Queluz and Sintra. The Fertagus rail link is a commuter service to the south bank of the Tagus and Costa da Caparica. For further information see p163 and visit the Caminhos de Ferro (state railway) website.

ARRIVING BY ROAD

There are seven major entry routes into Lisbon: two from the south and east, two from the north, and three from the west. Those arriving from the Algarve and the south on the A2 (E1) motorway or the IC1, as well as from Madrid and the east (A6), can cross to central Lisbon via the busy Ponte 25 de Abril, or to the northeastern part of the city via the newer Ponte Vasco da Gama. Both are toll bridges; Vasco da Gama costs considerably more.

From Oporto and the north, the A1 (E1) motorway brings you to Lisbon's northeastern outskirts. To reach central Lisbon, follow signs indicating Campo Grande and then Centro. If you wish to head to the coastal resorts of Estoril and Cascais without entering Lisbon, turn off the A1 (E1) on to the A9 at Alverca, 20 km (12 miles) north of the city, immediately after the toll. The A9, also known as CREL (exterior ring road), is sign-posted to Cascais and is also tolled.

Those arriving from Cascais and the Lisbon Coast enter via the tolled A5 motorway or the coastal N6 road, known as Avenida Marginal. From Sintra, you enter via the IC19, which links up with Avenida General Norton de Matos in the north of Lisbon. The A8 from northern Estremadura enters the city from the north. For information on driving in Lisbon, see p162.

LISBON'S BRIDGES

One of Lisbon's most famous landmarks, the Ponte 25 de Abril provides the main link between Lisbon and Almada, on the southern bank of the Tagus. Built in the 1960s, when cars were still a rarity in Portugal, it became a bottleneck in the late 1980s. In the 1990s more lanes were added and a rail line slung underneath in the hope of easing the congestion. The toll, which is charged only on the way into Lisbon to lessen queuing, was raised to help pay for a second bridge.

This second bridge, the Ponte Vasco da Gama (see p81), links Lisbon's northeastern outskirts – Parque das Nações is right next to it – with Montijo, on the other side of the wide Tagus estuary. The toll is also charged only on the way into the city.

Getting Around Lisbon

Metro logo

An attractive city, Lisbon is a pleasure to explore, and walking can be one of the best ways to see it. However, the city is also hilly, and even the fittest of sightseers will soon tire. The trams and funiculars (elevadores) offer a welcome rest for the foot-weary as well as some great views. They are an essential Lisbon experience but may not always be the most efficient means of transport. For that, buses and the Metro are better choices. Driving around Lisbon is not generally recommended: the city suffers from near-chronic congestion and its street plan is full of unexpected surprises. As a result, patience is in short supply among Lisbon drivers. Taxis offer a good alternative and are relatively cheap.

GREEN TRAVEL

Lisbon has, on the whole, embraced the notion of becoming an environmentally friendly city. Green initiatives are in place to help alleviate the city's chronic traffic problems. One such scheme, Menos Um Carro (One Less Car), launched by Carris on its website, encourages commuters to use public transport rather than drive into the city, or to consider sharing a car. Carris's online sustainable travel campaign (Índice de Mobilidade Sustentável) invites users to email their own ideas about how to improve Lisbon's congested transport infrastructure.

Gas-powered private vehicles that run on environmentally friendly liquefied petrol gas (LPG) are rare on Lisbon's roads due to their relatively high fuel consumption and a lack of service stations offering an LPG option. Rarer still are expensive gas-electric hybrid cars. However, Carris is slowly introducing a fleet of LPG-fuelled buses. Alternative fuel solutions remain high on the political agenda and Lisbon Town Hall is wooing potential converts by offering free parking for 30 minutes for vehicles using these cleaner, alternative vehicles.

Increasingly, police officers are patrolling Lisbon's streets on Segways (two-wheeled electric vehicles). This eco-friendly mode of transport has also been adopted by sightseeing tour company Red Tours (Tel 213 243 680; www.redtourgps.com), which offers self-guided tours on self-drive electric buggies and Segway scooters.

Red Tours electric buggy

The rail network in Lisbon and throughout Portugal is electrified and leaves a relatively small carbon footprint. It is also reasonably cheap to use and, for the most part, very efficient.

A number of electric trams trundle past some of Lisbon's most important cultural sights, and this "green" mode of transport offers excellent value for money.

Cycling is not popular in central Lisbon; its hilly geography simply does not make it a viable proposition. Cycle paths do exist along the Tagus river in areas such as Alcântara and Belém, and further afield at Parque das Nações and in Cascais. Some independent tourism companies, such as Lisbon Bike tour (www.lisbonbike.tour.com) and Bike Iberia (www.bikeiberia.com), offer Lisbon cycle tours, but these, too, tend to avoid the capital's steeper areas.

Discovering Lisbon on foot requires a stout pair of legs and comfortable footwear, but this is one of the best ways to explore the city at leisure.

THE LISBOA CARD

This comprehensive tourist pass allows free access to most forms of public transport (not ferries) and reduced rates on some tourist tours (including the Carris open-top bus tour, the Colinas tour in the red trams, and Transtejo river tours). Additionally, admission charges are waived at 27 national museums and other sights, and are reduced at a number of others (20 per cent off at the Gulbenkian Museum, for instance). It is an impressive offer, and competitively priced, but with only 24, 48 or 72 hours in which to make use of it, you might be rushed off your feet. The Lisboa Card is on sale at the airport arrivals hall, tourist offices, selected hotels, travel agents and sights, as well as in Carris kiosks (see p159).

Lisboa Card tourist pass

PUBLIC TRANSPORT

Lisbon's public transport system provides access to all parts of the city by a variety of means: trams, lifts and funiculars, buses and the underground Metroropolitano. The technological spectrum is vast, from early 20th-century trams and funiculars to modern Metro trains, sleek new trams and articulated buses. Buses have the most extensive network, while trams cover a smaller area but offer good sightseeing opportunities. Both are prone to delays due to traffic jams and are run, as are lifts and funiculars, by the state-owned Carris company. The Metro, run separately but also state-owned, is the most efficient form of public transport.

TICKETS

Single-trip paper tickets for buses, trams and funiculars can be bought on boarding. Multi-trip paper tickets have been replaced with electronic passes such as the 7 Colinas, Viva Viagem and Lisboa Viva smart cards. The Viva Viagem card is the most practical purchase for short-term visits. It can be topped up with credit whenever necessary and provides access to the Carris network and other public transport operators. It must be validated by holding it over a validator machine. Passes can be purchased at points of travel and from Carris kiosks in many parts of the city, including at the bottom of the Elevador de Santa Justa, at railway stations, by the Basilica da Estrela, in Praça da Figueira and by Marquês de Pombal square, as well as at some post offices and newsagents.

Another option is the Lisboa Card (see panel opposite), which includes unlimited free travel on the bus, tram, funicular/lift and Metro networks, and on the Sintra and Cascais railway lines. It can be purchased as a one-, two-, or three-day card and is also validated on each trip by passing it over an electronic scanner.

Metro tickets are bought from machines (with multi-lingual instructions) or from ticket offices at the Metro station as reusable charge cards (there are no paper Metro tickets). The card costs €0.50 and lasts one year. A single trip costs €0.80 for one zone and €1.10 for two zones. When purchasing your card you should keep the receipt and present it when necessary to change the card, or if it is damaged. Cards must be validated on entering the platform area by passing them over an electronic scanner to open the gate, indicated by a green light. Exiting the Metro station requires the same procedure.

Children between the ages of 4 and 12, adults over 65 and students all pay half-price on public transport. Children under the age of four travel free of charge. Fines for travelling without a valid ticket are severe.

TRAVELLING BY METRO

The fastest and cheapest way to get around town is by the Metropolitano. Metro stations are signposted with a red M, and the service operates from 6:30am to 1am every day.

There are currently 49 Metro stations operating on four lines: the Linha Azul (Blue Line), the Linha Amarela (Yellow Line), the Linha Verde (Green Line) and the Linha Vermelha (Red Line). These lines link the Metro to major bus, train and ferry services, and provide transport from Lisbon's suburbs to the commercial heart of the city, along the north bank of the river. Plans are under way to further extend the city's Metro system, and a number of stations are currently under construction. Although the Metro does become quite packed during the morning and evening rush hours, there are frequent trains. The system is safe to travel on, even at night, since the stations and trains are regularly patrolled by the police. All stations have automatic gates at the entrance to the platform areas; a valid ticket must be passed over an electronic scanner both on entering and leaving. Metro ticket inspectors can fine you up to 100 times the value of a single-trip ticket if you are caught without a valid ticket.

A Colinas sightseeing tram

TRAVELLING BY TRAM

Trams (elétricos) are one of the most pleasant ways of sightseeing in Lisbon. However, they only operate in a very limited area of the city, along the river to Belém and around the hilly parts of Lisbon. There are currently two types of tram operating in Lisbon: the charming, old, pre-World War I models, and the much longer new trams with sleek interiors.

Single tickets for all rides are very cheap except for those on the red Colinas or Tejo trams, which provide special sightseeing rides for tourists and are much more expensive than the ordinary routes. These sightseeing services operate along a single giant loop throughout the year from Praça do Comércio to the year from Praça do Comércio and take in all of the major historical sights through the hilly parts of Lisbon and along the Tagus. However, it is better value to catch either the No.25 or the No.28 tram. The former runs from the Cemitério des Prazeres in Campo de Ourique, past the Basílica da Estrela to the attractive residential district of Lapa, on a steep hill facing the river. It descends to the river and then runs past Praça do Comércio to where the Alfama begins, ending its route in Rua da Alfândega. No.28 shares some of its route with No.25, running via Estrela down past the Palácio de São Bento and up again to Bairro Alto and Chiado. It descends to the Baixa, passes Lisbon's cathedral, then climbs to Castelo São Jorge. It offers an excellent sightseeing tour of old Lisbon – often most of its passengers are tourists.

FUNICULARS AND LIFTS

Due to Lisbon's hilly terrain, funiculars and lifts are a convenient and popular means of getting from river level to the upper parts of the city, particularly Bairro Alto. Although expensive in relation to the distance covered, this form of transport certainly helps take the effort out of negotiating Lisbon's hills, and offers some superb views over the city.

Elevador da Bica climbs from the São Paulo area up to the lower end of Bairro Alto. Elevador da Glória goes from Praça dos Restauradores to the upper end of Bairro Alto. The walkway at Elevador de Santa Justa links the Baixa with the Bairro Alto (see p46). Elevador da Lavra climbs from Praça dos Restauradores up to the Hospital São José.

TRAVELLING BY BUS

Lisbon buses (autocarros) are usually yellow, but there are a few orange ones. Most inner-city services run from 5:30am to 1am. A smaller number of night buses operate between 1am and 5:30am. The bus network is Lisbon's most extensive public transport system, and buses go just about everywhere. Their timetable suffers from Lisbon's traffic problems, which means you sometimes have to wait a long time to get on a very crowded bus. Most public vehicles are smooth-riding, air-conditioned buses that bend at the middle.

Useful Tram and Bus Routes

This map shows the best tram and bus routes for sightseeing in Lisbon. The locations of major sights are marked, as well as the nearest useful stop. Sights should then only be a short walk away.

KEY

Stops are indicated by a sign marked Paragem, where details of the specific route are shown. The final destination is shown on the front of the bus, along with its number. Paper tickets can be bought on boarding. If you are using a pre-paid smart card, remember to validate it by passing it over the electronic scanner machine by the driver. Buses, trams and funiculars use the same paper tickets.

A convenient way of getting between museums and other popular sights is to hop on and off a tour bus. Carristur (see Directory, p165) runs two excellent routes – the Tagus Tour, which takes in Belém, and the Olisip Tour, which passes by Lisbon's principal museums and visits Parque das Nações. Your ticket is valid for the whole day.

WALKING AROUND LISBON

Lisbon is a delightful city to wander around taking in the sights, especially in the old neighbourhoods such as the Alfama and Bairro Alto. Narrow cobbled streets, picturesque buildings and alleyways provide a charming setting to experience traditional Lisbon life.

For a more contemporary backdrop, take a stroll through Parque das Nações, a riverside district east of the city centre. The area, which is totally flat and easily reached by Metro, features some of the country's most striking examples of modern architecture, and it offers a wide array of attractions, including many restaurants and cafés with views over the Tagus. Belém is another flat riverfront area and one of Lisbon's most historic neighbourhoods. It was from here that the great voyages of discovery departed, and monuments in tribute to intrepid navigators abound.

Walking tours, such as the day trips organized by Inside Tours (www.insidelisbon.com) and Lisbon Walker (www.lisbonwalker.com), are a great way to get to know the city more intimately. Many tours are themed to suit individual interests, and they are always conducted in English. Private walks in Portuguese, Spanish, French, German and Italian can usually be arranged under special circumstances.

Lisbon is built on a number of hills, and unless you are fairly fit, it is wise to take advantage of public transport for the uphill climbs.

The No.28 tram (eléctrico) goes almost all the way up to the Castelo de São Jorge; you can then walk down through the Alfama. The Elevador da Glória will take you from Praça dos Restauradores up to Bairro Alto.

Lisbon's most central shopping area is made up of the Baixa and Chiado, where pedestrianized streets are filled with shoppers, street performers and vendors, as well as a wide variety of shops, shopping centres, outdoor cafés and restaurants.

TAXIS

Compared to the rest of Europe, taxis in Portugal are relatively inexpensive, and if costs are shared between two or more people, they can work out cheaper than travelling by bus or tram. Most taxis are beige, but a few of the older black and green cabs still exist. All are metered, although costs depend on the time of day.

Vacant taxis have their rooftop "taxi" signs switched on, but it is sometimes difficult to see if they are lit. Green lights indicate that the taxi is available: two green lights mean that the higher rate is being charged (10pm–6am, weekends and public holidays), one green light that the normal rate applies.

The starting rate for a taxi hailed in the street or taken at a taxi rank is €2.50. A flat rate of €1.60 is charged for any luggage placed in the trunk. The meter should always be used, although the driver might suggest agreeing on a price for long trips.

Taxis can also be ordered by phone from companies such as Autocoope, Retalis Rádio Táxis and Teletáxis.

A pre-paid taxi voucher, available from tourist offices, guarantees fixed taxi prices.

Driving Around Lisbon

Pay-and-display sign

Using a car to get around the busy city centre of Lisbon can be daunting. Finding your way around the complex street plan isn't easy, and traffic jams don't make it any easier. Parking can be very difficult to find. Lisbon's larger roundabouts have traffic lights; on those that don't, cars travelling around the roundabout have priority over cars waiting to enter it. At all other intersections, unless there are signs or lights to the contrary, traffic from the right has priority. If it is absolutely necessary for you to drive in Lisbon, try to avoid the rush hours (roughly 8–10am and 5:30–8pm). Also, be aware that driving at weekends is much easier than during the week. Always look out for pedestrians; crossings are badly marked.

Complexo das Amoreiras, which has an underground car park

PARKING

On-street parking spaces are relatively few in central Lisbon and must mostly be paid for at parking meters. Pay-and-display parking spaces are marked by a P sign with a hand and a coin. Tickets are bought from machines along the pavement; the charge is quite low and only applies between 8am and 8pm on weekdays (and on Saturday mornings in some areas). However, there is a limit to the number of hours you can buy, and the machines don't give change, so come equipped with small coins. Illegally parked cars may be clamped or towed away, and will be released only upon payment of a fine.

Safer and longer-term parking is available in Lisbon's many underground car parks. These are marked by signs with a white P on a blue background and usually display whether there are spaces or not by means of a red full (completo) or green free (livre) light. Tickets are taken from a machine on entering and paid for before leaving. Car parks are more expensive than parking in the street. Some of the larger ones in Lisbon are beneath Praça Marquês de Pombal, Praça da Figueira, Praça dos Restauradores, Praça Luís de Camões and the Complexo das Amoreiras.

CAR HIRE

Most of the major car hire companies have offices at the airport inside the arrivals hall (see Directory). To rent a car in Portugal you must have a driving licence (carta de condução). If you do not hold a driving licence from an EU member state you will need an international driving licence. Drivers must be over the age of 21 and have held their licence for at least one year.

It is usually more expensive to hire a car in summer. Most companies offer special off-peak and weekend deals. The price depends on whether unlimited mileage is included and if you want comprehensive insurance (todos-os-riscos). Normally, the car is provided with a full tank of petrol; it is best to return it with the tank full, since the agency will charge to fill it themselves.

PETROL (GASOLINE)

Petrol, called gasolina, is relatively expensive in Portugal. Diesel (gasóleo) costs considerably less and is the cheapest vehicle fuel. Unleaded fuel (gasolina sem chumbo) comes in two types: 95-octane normal and 98-octane super. The latter is more expensive.

There are a number of petrol stations in central Lisbon, some of which are open 24 hours a day. They accept most major credit cards.

Travelling around the Lisbon Coast

Logo of Caminhos de Ferro Portugueses

Lisbon and its surroundings offer numerous sightseeing opportunities, and the good road network means that most sights are only 30 minutes or so from the city centre. Buses, coaches and local trains are available for visiting Cascais and Estoril. Although no public buses go to Sintra, there are organized coach tours to the palaces and the glorious countryside around the town. There is also a frequent rail service operating from Rossio station to Sintra. To visit Sesimbra and other areas to the south of the Tagus, ferries depart from Terreiro do Paço (Estação Fluvial) and Cais do Sodré in Lisbon, and offer a more leisurely way to cross the river than the busy Ponte 25 de Abril. Alternatively, the Fertagus train also crosses the bridge on the lower level. Trains and buses can then be picked up on the south bank of the river.

TRAVELLING BY TRAIN

The state-owned railway company, Caminhos de Ferro Portugueses (CP), is responsible for operating all trains in Portugal.

There are four main rail lines out of Lisbon. The most popular ones with tourists are the line that runs from Cais do Sodré to Cascais on the coast, and the line linking Rossio station to the town of Sintra. Trains to Sintra also leave from Entrecampos and Sete Rios stations, and the journey takes about 45 minutes. Santa Apolónia is the main station for trains travelling north, as well as for most international arrivals.

For those travelling east or south of Lisbon, trains depart from Gare do Oriente, Entrecampos and Sete Rios stations and cross the Ponte 25 de Abril road and rail bridge. The gleaming Gare do Oriente, near Parque das Nações, opened in 1998. It also serves as an alternative international terminus, in addition to operating as an interchange for local destinations.

To reach Estoril and Cascais, take the train from Cais do Sodré station. The journey follows the coastline and takes about 45 minutes. Check destinations on the screens at the station before you travel because some trains terminate at Oeiras, Parede or São João do Estoril during peak hours. You can also catch the train from Cais do Sodré to Alcântara-Mar, only 5 minutes away, or to Belém, 10 minutes away.

High-speed train at Gare do Oriente in Lisbon

TICKETING SYSTEM

Discounts of 50 per cent are available on all CP tickets for children aged from 5 to 12, students (with valid student ID) and adults over 65. Children under the age of four travel free. However, there are no special discounts for groups travelling together.

Paper tickets have been discontinued and replaced with pre-paid smart cards that can be bought at vending machines in the station. They are validated electronically by passing them over a scanner at a gate to gain access to the platforms and on leaving the station. Single, return or multiple trips can be purchased on the Cais do Sodré-Cascais and Entrecampos/Sete Rios-Sintra lines. Bicycles are carried free of charge at any time of day on the Cascais and Sintra lines but only on specially marked carriages. Passengers without a validated card will be fined.

TRAVELLING BY COACH

Lisbon's main coach station is Sete Rios. There are several private enterprises operating coach services. Each of the companies operates its own ticketing system. As a rule, you buy your ticket from the driver when you board the coach, although it is possible to get cheaper tickets, known as modulos, beforehand from the relevant coach company's kiosk. As on the trains, there are no group discounts, though children between the ages of 4 and 12 pay half price.

At present, the only direct coach services between Lisbon and Cascais are run by the Scottish company Scotturb and Rodoviária de Lisboa. The hourly service goes from Lisbon airport via Campo Grande to Cascais, returning on an hourly basis as well. The two companies run one bus each, on alternate hours.

TST (Transportes Sul do Tejo) serves destinations south of the Tagus. Buses leave from Praça de Espanha (Metro Praça de Espanha) for destinations such as Costa da Caparica (1hr) and Sesimbra (1hr 45 mins).

For destinations northwest of Lisbon, contact Rodoviária de Lisboa, which operates from Campo Grande among other places. Rede Expressos and EVA offer direct services to destinations all over the country. EVA covers the Algarve particularly well. Both are based at the Sete Rios bus terminal in Praça Marechal Humberto Delgado.

To date there is no coach link between Lisbon and Sintra. However, Scotturb operates three routes to Sintra from Cascais and Estoril. The

Ferries crossing the Tagus river

No.403 departs from near Cascais railway station every 90 minutes, via Cabo da Roca. The No.417 runs from Cascais via Alcabideche and the No.418 departs hourly from outside Estoril train station. All three buses stop at Sintra station and in the town centre. In Sintra, Scotturb also runs a service from the train station to Palácio da Pena and Castelo dos Mouros (Tue–Sun).

COACH TOURS

There are many coach tours in the Lisbon area, offering a wide choice of destinations, from a local trip around the city's sights to longer trips to other cities in Portugal such as Oporto. For those who wish to tour Lisbon, short half-day tours are available. Sintra, Cabo da Roca, Estoril and Cascais are all easily reached in a day trip. Alternatively, head southwards to Sesimbra and Arrábida, or north to Mafra. Prices depend on whether meals or special events, such as fado or bullfighting, are included. Most tours offer reductions to children under the age of ten. Tours can be booked directly with the tour operator, through a travel agent or at some hotels. If you are staying at one of Lisbon's major hotels, some tours will provide a pick-up service. For coach tour companies see page 165.

FERRIES ACROSS THE TAGUS

Most ferry services are operated by Transtestejo. There are several different points at which you can cross the Tagus by ferry. The trips are worth making purely for the fabulous views of Lisbon. From Terreiro do Paço (Estação Fluvial) there are crossings to Barreiro (5:45am–2:30am daily), taking 15 minutes. Ferries also cross from Cais do Sodré to Seixal and Montijo, taking 20 and 30 minutes respectively.

Ferries owned by Soflusa operate a 15-minute service from Terreiro do Paço to Barreiro (5:45am–2:45am daily). From Belém, ferries go to Porto Brandão and Trafaria (6:30am–11:30pm daily), where you can get a bus to the beaches at Caparica.

TRAVELLING BY CAR

When driving, always carry your passport, licence, car insurance and rental contract. Failure to produce these documentos if the police stop you will incur a fine.

Drivers and passengers must don fluorescent green safety vests following a breakdown or an accident. In addition, a vehicle must carry a collapsible warning triangle in the trunk to be used in the event of such an emergency. These items are usually supplied by the car hire company.

A long-distance coach from one of the many coach companies

The speed limit for driving on a motorway is 120 km/h (75 miles/h); on an open road it is 90–100 km/h (56–62 miles/h) and within a town, 50 km/h (30 miles/h).

The road network in and around Lisbon has seen much improvement in the last decade, with the construction of new ring roads and motorways. If you are heading west out of Lisbon towards the coast and Estoril and Cascais, take the A5 motorway and try to avoid rush-hour traffic (8–10am and 5:30–8pm). To get on to the A5, follow the road out from Praça de Espanha or from Marquês de Pombal past Amoreiras. If you prefer to take the scenic coastal route (N6), follow the A5 out of Lisbon for 8 km (5 miles) and turn off at the sign to Avenida Marginal.

To get to Sintra, the best routes are either the A5 motorway or the IC19 past Queluz. The A5 motorway passes through small areas of countryside.

To reach Caparica, Tróia and Setúbal, south of the Tagus, you can either cross the Ponte 25 de Abril at Alcântara or take the car ferry that departs regularly from Cais do Sodré to Cacilhas. Once across the river, follow the A2 south.

ROADS AND TOLLS

Motorways around Lisbon have toll charges and most are privately owned by a company called Brisa. In general, they are the quickest way to travel around Portugal, as they have better surfaces than minor roads. There are also motorway rest areas where you can have something to eat and fill the car up with petrol.

There are two systems for paying tolls on motorways. Most drivers take a ticket (título) at the entrance and pay at the exit where the fee is displayed at the toll booth.

The other system, known as Via Verde, is primarily for residents in the area and is not intended for general use. Drivers subscribing to this system drive through the Via Verde channel without stopping. Their passage is registered automatically and billed later. It is strictly forbidden for anyone who does not subscribe to drive through the Via Verde, so make sure that you are in the correct lane as you approach the toll booths.

BREAKDOWN SERVICES

The local motoring association, the ACP (Automóvel Club de Portugal), has a reciprocal breakdown service with most other international motoring organizations. To qualify, drivers should take out European cover with their own organization.

Should you be involved in a road accident, the emergency services number is 112. If you have simply broken down, call the ACP. There are SOS phones at regular intervals along motorways. Unless you state that you are a member of an ACP-affiliated organization, a private tow truck will be sent to help you.

Breakdown assistance will try to repair your car on the spot, but if it is a more serious problem, they will tow your car to a garage. Depending on your insurance, the ACP can make arrangements for you to have a hire car until yours is repaired.

In Portugal, international rules apply to breakdowns, including placing a red warning triangle behind the car to alert other drivers. Be sure to check that you have one before you travel.
