Newborn

I am a foal, a newborn pony.
My legs are very wobbly.

My mother feeds me her warm milk
as soon as I struggle to my feet.

I feel stronger after my milk. I can stand up tall.

In the meadow

I am one week
old. I grow bigger every day.

I spend my days in the meadow with my mother.

I cuddle close to her
when the wind blows.

I love feeling the soft grass beneath
my hooves.

Looking for Mommy

I am two weeks old. I have two new teeth. I want to show my mother.

Where is she? I neigh loudly to her.

I hope she hears me.

Soon my mother comes. She is never very far away.

Come and play

Today will be a fun day!
A friend has come to play.

A photograph of two young horses in a stable. The horse on the left is reddish-brown with a white blaze on its face, holding a large bunch of green hay in its mouth. The horse on the right is a darker brown with a white blaze. They are standing on a white floor next to a wooden stable door with a metal wire mesh. A pile of hay is scattered on the floor in front of the door. The background is a plain white wall.

I am five weeks old.

We play games and run around the field.

When we are tired,
we graze together.
The fresh grass
tastes sweet.

Crunchy apples

I am eight weeks old. I gallop around the field every day.

Running and jumping makes me hungry.

Look at these crunchy red apples. They smell yummy. I wonder if I can eat one?

Long legs

I am four months old. My coat is chestnut brown now.

My long legs are sturdy.

I am growing taller every day.

I am almost as tall
as my mother!

In the paddock

I am five months old and nearly full-grown.

Soon I will be big enough to join the other ponies in the paddock.
