Mandarin has many different names in Chinese. Here are some, with their literal translations:

Guóyǔ

national language

Pǔtōnghuà

universal words

Hànyǔ

Zhōngwén

Chinese language

Chinese people learn Mandarin too

At the fall of the Qing Dynasty in 1911, the incoming Nationalist government decided that Mandarin should become the standard language of China, replacing the many languages and dialects that made communication between people difficult.

It was originally thought that Mandarin would be spoken by everyone by 2030. However, because of the size of China and the number of languages spoken, teachers in many schools still give classes in the local language. Mandarin is studied like a foreign language class, to use for speaking with non-locals.

Using this book

You can take what you like from this book—an overview of the culture, with some insight into the language on the way, or use it as a study guide to become a competent beginner. Whatever your approach, this book is a good place to start.

The secret to learning Chinese is:

慢慢来! Màn màn lái! Take it easy!

Pinyin

Pinyin is the name of the system we use to spell out the sounds of Chinese words in Roman letters. It is a written aid to pronunciation.

No alphabet

Chinese writing doesn't use an alphabet. Instead, it is made up of a series of characters, each of which are made up of mini pictures. We need help to know how to pronounce them, and that's where pinyin comes in.

For example,
how do you say this character?

Using pinyin, you pronounce it "māo" (and it means "cat").

Without knowing pinyin, it is very difficult for people to learn Chinese as a foreign language.

It is important to remember that pinyin is only a guide. The best way to learn the sounds of any language is to copy what you hear.

So put on the CD!

In this book, when you see this symbol, you can hear what is on the page by listening to the accompanying CD.

About pinyin

Pinyin was adopted by mainland China in 1958 and is the Romanization system used there today, and in this book. Other systems, such as “Wade Giles,” do exist, although they are used less and less.

These are the characters for “pinyin”

拼音

This means “to spell” This means “sound”

How to use it

Chinese words are made up of one-syllable sounds, such as “ma.”

❖ These sounds all start with an “initial.”

In the word “ma,” the initial is the “m” sound.

❖ And they all end with a vowel sound called a “final.”

In the word “ma,” the final is the “a” sound.

On the next few pages there are tables, first for the initials, then the finals. It is really worth going through each sound with the accompanying CD.

track 1

Table 1: Initials

Initial	Sound	Rough English sound
b	baw	bore
p	paw	pore
m	maw	more
f	faw	fall
d	duh	done
t	tuh	tore n	nuh	nail
l	luh	late
g	guh	guard
k	kuh	come
h	huh	loch
j	gee	jeep
q	chee	cheese
x	she	ship
z	dzuh	"ds" in suds
c	tsuh	"ts" in cats
s	suh	see
zh	jir	germ
ch	chir	chin
sh	shir	shirt
r	rj	rank
w	ooh	swoon
y	ee	ye

This sound is between "ship" and "sip."

Spread your lips in a smile and curl your tongue up so the tip touches the roof of your mouth.

track 2

Table 2: Finals

Final	Sound	Rough English sound
a	ah	are ai	i	eye
ao	ow	owl
an	ahn	ant
ang	ahng	bang
o	aw	straw
ong	oong	too + ng
ou	oh	go
e	uh	duh
ei	ay	say en	un	taken eng	ung	lung er	ar	are
i	ee / uh	tea / huh
ia	ya	yak
iao	yaow	meow
ian	yan	yen
iang	yahng	y + angst
ie	yeh	yes
in	een	din ing	eeng	mowing
iong	yoong	you + ng
iu	you	Cleo

"i" is generally pronounced "ee" except after these initials: c, ch, r, s, sh, z, zh, when it is "uh."

Final	Sound	Rough English sound
u	oo	moo
ua	wa	suave
uo	waw	war
ui	way	way
uai	why	why
uan	won	oo-won un	un	won
uang	wahng	wan + ng
ü	yoo	you 😊
ue	oo-weh	you + eh
üan	ywan	you + wan
ün	yewn	you + n

To make the ü sound, try saying "ee," but through pursed lips.

Using the tables

When you see a word in pinyin:

- 1 Look up the first letter or two letters, which are usually consonants, on the Initials table.
- 2 Then look up the last letter or letters, which begin with a vowel, on the Finals table.
- 3 Put the two sounds together, and hey presto!

Practice time

track 3

Listen to the pronunciation of these words on the CD, then copy what you hear.

- Pinyin also includes “tone marks.” Turn the page to find out what these are for...

track 4

The tones

Mandarin Chinese has four tones, and one “toneless” tone. The tone you use when pronouncing each one-syllable word determines the meaning. The tone marks - ˊ ˋ ˋ ˋ show which tone to use.

1 1st tone— high level

 Pitch your voice high and hold the sound there slightly longer than seems natural.

mā

mother

As a doctor tells you when looking down your throat. Say:

2 2nd tone— rising

 From the middle level of your voice range to the top. Raise your eyebrows as you say it!

má

hemp

The tone at the end of a question.

Tone deaf?

The tones may seem complicated, but you will soon get the hang of them. Consider these facts:

- There are more tonal languages in the world than nontonal.
- Cantonese has at least eight tones. Imagine that!

The “neutral” tone

This isn't exactly a “tone.” It is just a light way of saying a word. Pronounce it as you would say a word in English with no emphasis. It has no tone mark.

ma

3 3rd tone— falling and then rising

From the middle level, down deep, then up a bit.

mǎ

horse

Like when you're surprised.

4 4th tone— falling

A short, sharp fall from your high voice pitch. Stamp your foot as you say it!

mà

scold

The tone of a statement.

- China has over 80 dialects, and for many Chinese people, Mandarin is not their first language—Chinese people can make mistakes with their tones, too.
- People who can't sing a note (or are “tone deaf”) may feel they can't learn Chinese, but this is not the case. It makes no difference, since tonal languages are relatively pitched, not absolutely pitched.

Learning the tones

track 5

If you don't learn the tones, quite simply, people will find it hard to understand what you say. Practice your tones by saying these words and listening to them on the CD.

Characters

The Chinese writing system is one of the most beautiful and ancient writing systems in the world. Before you start trying to get your head around it, it's worth taking a few minutes to find out a bit about it.

Two styles

There are two forms of writing in existence today. The “traditional” characters are still used in most Chinese-speaking countries outside mainland China. Mainland China predominantly uses “simplified” characters, and the simplified characters will be used in this book.

cloud—simplified cloud—traditional

How many characters are there?

Altogether? More than 40,000—although many are very rare. 2,000 characters are needed for basic literacy (or to read a Chinese newspaper).

A well-educated person in China would know 4,000–5,000.

Top to bottom...

... right to left. Traditionally, Chinese characters have been laid out in the opposite way from English (although most modern publications follow the Western way).

Start reading here.

Four types

There are four different types of Chinese characters that you will learn to write. These intermingle with each other in any block of Chinese text.

tree

Pictographs

The character is a picture of something. For example, the character for “tree” looks like a tree.

one

Ideographs

The character is a picture of an idea. For example, the character for “one” is just one line.

“One” on a die is also an ideograph.

好

Putting them together

The Chinese expanded their written language by putting pictographs or ideographs together to make new characters.

good

Ancient Chinese people thought “woman” and “child” together was “good.”

This is a pictograph for “woman.”

This is a pictograph for “child.”

女 + 子 = 好

woman child

good

远 yuǎn far

Phonographs

To expand the language further, the meaning of one character was combined with the sound of another to make phonographs. For example, the characters for “far” and “garden” share the same part that gives them their pronunciation: 元 (yuán). Their meanings are given by the other parts of the characters.

园

元 yuǎn

yuán

元

口

yuán

Note: the sounds of the characters are almost the same—but they have different tones.

Different strokes

The writing of Chinese characters follows strict rules. The first thing to understand is that characters are made up of set strokes. These strokes are always written in the same way. Here are some basic strokes you need to write beautiful characters.

Follow the arrows that show the direction of the strokes, and practice copying them.

丨					㇇
ノ					㇇
㇇					㇇
㇇					㇇
㇇					㇇

Stroke order

The order in which you write the strokes is also important. For one thing, getting the stroke order right makes the characters easier to learn. The two general rules to follow are:

1 Write top to bottom

2 Write left to right

Practice writing this character:

huà

Start with the part of the character that is on the top left.

These rules are not fail-safe, however, since some characters are written with differing stroke orders.

It all depended on what looked best or which order minimized clumping when scholars were using brushes and ink to write.

How characters are made zhōng

中 means “middle”

guó

国 means “kingdom”

The Middle Kingdom
is what we now call

China

Be square

When you write each character, imagine you are writing it inside a square. You can buy or make squared paper for this purpose. Your characters will look more beautiful if they are evenly spaced, fit into equal-sized squares, and look symmetrical.

中 zhōng

国 guó

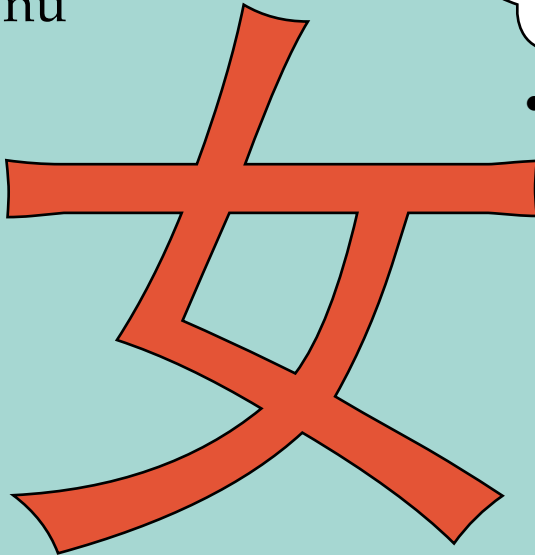

Memory tips

There is no really easy way to learn characters. Each one has to be memorized. However, here are some pointers to help you.

- If you try to imagine a character as a picture, or if you know the origins of a character (see opposite for some examples), it makes it easier to remember.

woman
nǚ

It is best to learn characters gradually, and to keep testing yourself and revising.

- There are about 200 small components of characters, called “radicals.” Each character includes a radical. The radical can give a clue to meaning. For example, 鸟 niǎo, meaning “bird,” is a radical and any character that contains 鸟 has something to do with birds (e.g., 鸡 jī means “chicken”).

Picture it!

Characters that are pictographs often look like the original pictures that were drawn centuries ago.

rì sun

yuè moon

shān mountain

shuǐ water

niǎo bird

mǎ horse

It's radical

Practice writing these characters. They are useful ones to know, since they can also be found in other characters as “radicals.”

rén person tǔ

earth

tián field

lì strength

Put the characters together...

... to make new characters. Notice how the meanings of the new characters are directly related to the meanings of the original characters. It made sense in Ancient China.

坐 zuò

to sit

人 + 人 + 土 = 坐

Literally: people [on top of] earth

男 nán man

田 + 力 = 男

Literally: strength [in a] field

Easy Grammar

“Easy” and “grammar” don’t usually go together, but here’s an area of Chinese where there is less to learn. Hooray!

The verb doesn’t change

There is no need to learn different grammatical forms of verbs (like in many European languages).

是 to be shì

我是 wǒ shì I am

你是 nǐ shì you are 他是 tā shì he is

There is no change to the Chinese verb... but the English changes three times.

No past, no future

In Chinese, there are no verb tenses. Here are two ways to change the tense:

1 Add context to a sentence with time words, for example, “next year,” “yesterday,” or “tomorrow.”

2 You can show an action has been completed by adding the little word “le” after the verb or at the end of the sentence.

昨天 yesterday zuótiān

明天 tomorrow míngtiān

了 le

我昨天去了。 Wǒ zuótiān qù le. I went yesterday.

我明天去。 Wǒ míngtiān qù. I am going tomorrow.

我去了。 Wǒ qù le. I went.

See! The verb in Chinese, “qù” (to go), doesn’t change.

Note: the time comes BEFORE the verb in Chinese.

Singular and plural nouns

There is no difference between singular and plural nouns. In other words, there is no equivalent to the English ‘-s’ or “-es” added to nouns.

马喜欢吃苹果 Mǎ xǐhuan chī píngguǒ. Horses like eating apples.

The Chinese for this sentence literally means “horse like eat apple.” Since there is no particular horse being referred to, this is translated as a general statement. CONTEXT is important in Chinese.

In general

Chinese often uses fewer words and seems simpler. In fact, some of the expressions used in English that have come directly from Chinese highlight the simple grammar constructions:

long time no see	hǎo jiǔ bù jiàn	好久不见
look-see	kàn kan	看看
no can do	bù néng zuò	不能做
no-go	bù qù	不去

A Chinese name for you

Not all English names can be easily pronounced in China, so it is a good idea for you to have a Chinese name.

Generally a Chinese teacher or Chinese friend can help you choose one, and this is the best way to get one. There are also websites that can give you a name. This is a good one:

Addressing Chinese people

Adults should always be addressed by their full name (last name, first name), or with a title, which comes AFTER the last name, for example:

先生 xiānsheng Mr.

e.g. Wáng xiānsheng

老师 lǎoshī teacher

e.g. Liú lǎoshī

Jackie Chan's mother called him "Pao Pao," meaning "cannonball," when he was a baby.

Children or friends can be addressed by their first names, or if the person is a very good friend or family, by their nickname. Chinese people often have a nickname.

The family name

The majority of the population of China has one of just 20 last names. Here's a list of the top five.

Where are you from?

Find out HOW to say where you come from. This is one of the first questions you are asked in China.

你是哪国人?

Nǐ shì nǎ guó rén?

Which country are you from?

我是美国人。

Wǒ shì Měiguó rén.

I'm American.

哪 nǎ which

Here is the “question word” 哪. “Nǐ shì nǎ guó rén?” literally means “You are which country person?”

人 rén person

By adding “rén” to any of the country’s names, you are saying “people or person [of the country].”

Countries

The characters for the country names are a mixture of how the word sounds (phonetic) and meaning.

	美国	Měiguó	US (beautiful country)
	泰国	Tàiguó	Thailand (tranquil country)
	英国	Yīngguó	Britain (brave country)
	法国	Fǎguó	France (legal country)
	德国	Déguó	Germany (virtuous country)
	中国	Zhōngguó	China (middle country)
	日本	Rìběn	Japan (rising Sun)

Respect!

Confucianism is the name of the philosophy that has shaped Chinese culture since around 300 BCE. And when it comes to families, Confucianism is all about respect.

filial piety

Family lore

“Filial piety” is considered one of the greatest virtues of Confucianism. It means, in general terms, love and respect for parents and ancestors.

Confucius says...

Here are some of Confucius’s rules for filial piety:

- 1 Take care of your parents
- 2 Don’t be rebellious
- 3 Show love, respect, and support
- 4 Display courtesy
- 5 Uphold fraternity among brothers
- 6 Wisely advise your parents
- 7 Carry out sacrifices after their death

孔夫子

Kǒng fūzǐ Confucius

Confucius was born in c. 551 BCE and was a social philosopher whose teachings have influenced East Asian life for 2,000 years.

Hierarchy

The Confucian hierarchy within families means that family members lower down in the hierarchy show filial piety to those above them. Grandad is top dog, and littlest sister is on the bottom rung.

Test yourself on the Chinese names for family members (from page 48).

In the same way that children call their parents “Mom” and “Dad,” in China this extends to the whole family. If you are “little sister,” that is what your family often calls you.

祖父	zǔfù
祖母	zǔmǔ
爸爸	bàba
妈妈	māma
哥哥	gēge
弟弟	dìdi
姐姐	jiějie
妹妹	mèimei

Ancestor worship

Although these rules were set more than 2,000 years ago, Confucian beliefs are ingrained into Chinese culture and affect family relationships to the present day. One of the most noticeable aspects is ancestor worship.

Ancestor worship includes burning incense and making offerings to the deceased of food and other things, even a toothbrush and slippers, to use in the afterlife.

- say the date
- learn the vocabulary for the months of the year...
- ... and the days of the week
- tell the time
- find out the cost of things

It's simple math

To count from 10–99, you build on the numbers 1–10. There are two simple rules to follow:

- If a number comes before 10 (+), you times it by 10.

How it works...

Number rules

There are a couple of things about numbers it is worth pointing out now.

Measure words

In Chinese, you need a measure word between a number and a noun. You can't just say "one person," you have to say "one something of person." Most Chinese measure words have no direct translation into English, although the concept is similar to "two plots of land," "two pinches of salt," "four head of cattle."

The toneless "ge" is by far the most common measure word. You can use this for most things. If in doubt, use "ge."

Number	Measure	Noun	Meaning
五 wǔ	个 ge	人 rén	five people
三 sān	个 ge	光盘 guāngpán	three CDs

"Běn" is the measure word used for books. Try to remember this one too.

五 wǔ	本 běn	书 shū	five books
---------	----------	----------	------------

Tricky number two

The number two is, err, “èr”—we know that. However, if we are saying “two of something,” we say “liǎng” instead of “èr.”

两 liǎng two 两个纪念品

liǎng ge jìniànpǐn

两个自行车

liǎng ge zìxíngchē

Q. Say how many there are of each thing

Use a measure word and “liǎng” where necessary.

1 shū books

2 péngyou friends

A. 1. liǎng běn shū; 2. sān ge péngyou

Birthday party

Traditionally, Chinese people have not made a big deal about birthdays. Today, however, especially in the cities, they celebrate them with a cake and a party.

生日快乐!

Shēngri kuàilè!

Happy birthday!

Two ages

Chinese people may have two ages—one from the traditional age system and one from the Western age system.

Two years old

The traditional way of counting a person's age is that newborns start at one year old, and one year is added at each Chinese new year (which follows the lunar calendar). This explains why Chinese babies can be said to be "two years old" when they are still tiny.

How old are you?

There are two ways of asking this question in Chinese:

1 你几岁了?

Nǐ jǐ suì le?

How old are you?

Use this when you are addressing a child under 10.

2 你多大了?

Nǐ duō dà le?

How old are you?

Use this for adults and children.

To answer the question, you say:

我XX岁。 Wǒ xx suì. I'm xx years old.

Birthday food

Many people like to eat “longevity noodles,” symbols of long life inspired by the noodle’s shape. Many people choose to eat Western-style birthday cakes too.

rat shǔ

Rats are charming, quick-witted, and make loyal friends—once you let people get to know you. You are organized and honest, and you prefer to live by your own rules.

OX

niú

You are a born leader and inspire confidence in all who know you. Being conservative and methodical, you find it hard to let your hair down, but you are good at most things you turn your hand to.

tiger

hǔ

Tigers are born leaders. You are often respected for your courage and you are good at standing up for what you believe in. However, you need to be careful not to be too bossy!

rabbit

tù

You are a warm, cozy type of person, affectionate and obliging. However, you get too sentimental and can seem superficial. Being cautious and conservative, you make a good negotiator and you are the first to sort out arguments.

dragon

lóng

You are full of life—enthusiastic and popular. You are intelligent, gifted, and a perfectionist, but these qualities can make you intolerant of others. Watch out for being too harsh with people.

snake

shé

Wise, charming, and romantic, you are a deep thinker and full of intuition. Try not to be stingy with money, and always strive to keep your sense of humor about life.

horse

mǎ

You are very hard-working and independent. You are not easily led and are intelligent and friendly. You can be prone to showing off, but you are generally well-liked by everyone.

sheep

yáng

Except for having a knack for putting your foot in your mouth, the sheep is excellent company. You are elegant and artistic, but can be viewed as a bit of a whiner, so try not to complain too much!

monkey

hóu

Witty and intelligent, you have a magnetic personality and are always well-liked. The monkey, however, must guard against being an opportunist and finds it hard to trust other people.

rooster

jī

The rooster is hard-working, shrewd, and good at making decisions. You speak your mind. You like looking good, and can be extravagant sometimes. Watch out for seeming boastful.

dog

gǒu

Dogs make very loyal, faithful, and honest friends—a dog will never let you down. You are a worrier though, and overcritical, but your bark is worse than your bite.

pig

zhū

You are always good company, an intellectual with a strong sense of purpose. You are sincere and honest, but because you expect the same from others, you can be naive.

Seasons

China is the fourth biggest country in the world, only slightly smaller than the US; the climate in the south and north differs hugely.

The climate

In the south, it is subtropical and the land is fertile and green. In the northern winter, the temperature rarely rises above freezing, and basketball courts are turned into ice-skating rinks. Between the various extremes, the weather is continental and shows marked seasonal differences.

The four seasons

Nature puts on some dazzling seasonal displays in China, especially where the seasons are more extreme.

Questions

Here are two ways to ask a question in Chinese.

1. “ma”

The little word “ma” 吗 is all you need to make questions. Simply add it to a statement, and it makes the statement into a question.

他去北京。

Tā qù Běijīng.

He is going to Beijing.

他去北京吗?

Tā qù Běijīng ma?

Is he going to Beijing?

汽车站在左边。

Qìchēzhàn zài zuǒbian.

The bus stop is on the left.

汽车站在左边吗?

Qìchēzhàn zài zuǒbian ma?

Is the bus stop on the left?

Q. Turn this statement into a question.

公共汽车去北京。

Gōnggòngqìchē qù Běijīng.

The bus is going to Beijing.

Gōnggòngqìchē qù Běijīng ma? Is the bus going to Beijing?

A. 公共汽车去北京吗?

2. Boo!

That's not a Chinese word, but it sounds like one: "bù" 不, meaning "not" or "no." If you put "bù" between two repeated words, (e.g., "qù" 去 meaning "to go") it makes a question.

你去不去? Nǐ qù bù qù? Are you going?

Chinese doesn't have words for "yes" and "no." This is a way of saying "yes" or "no" too.

And you answer the question by repeating the verb.

去。 Qù. I'm going. /Yes.

不去。 Bù qù. I'm not going. /No.

Q. Answer this question (using "mǎi" 买 meaning "to buy").

你买不买? Are you going to buy it?
Nǐ mǎi bù mǎi?

The exception

You don't use "bù" between the verb for "to have," which is "yǒu" (pronounced "yǒ"). Instead you use "méi" 没 to make the negative.

有没有? Yǒu méi yǒu? Have you got one?

有。 Yǒu. I have one. /Yes

没有。 Méi yǒu. I haven't got one. /No

A. 买 • mǎi. Yes. 不买 • bù mǎi. No.

Getting around

China has the third largest rail network in the world, the most bicyclists, more airplanes taking off by the day, and a fast evolving network of roads.

Bicycles

There are 300 million bicycles being ridden around in China—33 bikes to every one car. Bike sales are decreasing, however, as more and more people can afford cars.

The pedicab

The famous rickshaw has been phased out in China and replaced by the pedicab.

Traffic

The traffic in Beijing and many other Chinese cities is congested and slow-moving. Trucks, buses, cars, taxis, bicycles, pedicabs, and minibuses clog the roads.

The beds are comfortable, with four per compartment. It is also the most expensive choice.

Hard or easy?

nán hard

Yòng kuàizi hěn nán.

Using chopsticks is hard.

Chinese style

You use chopsticks to take bite-size morsels of food from a selection of different dishes. The bowl often holds plain rice, which you also eat with chopsticks. You use the spoon to eat soup.

Don't flip the fish!

Chinese people are masters at making you feel welcome. And a meal is a favorite way to show hospitality. Follow this guide to etiquette so you know the do's and don'ts of a meal in China.

Etiquette

Burp!

Never start before your host says so. And don't be surprised if your host continuously urges you to try each dish—(s)he is making sure you are taken care of, not pressuring you.

Compliment the host on how good the food is. Just like at home, this will please your host. Also, be bold and say with conviction "I am happy to make good friends" or "I feel very welcome."

Don't flip over a fish to eat the meat on the other side. This is because Chinese people believe turning a fish resembles a boat capsizing.

Avoid stuffing yourself then suddenly stopping. It's best to stop eating gradually. Leave a little food and drink—this means that you are satisfied and that the host has provided ample food.

Slurp!

Do pour drinks for people sitting next to you.

Ignore slurps, burps, and other mealtime noises—these are considered sounds of appreciation.

Table plan

Tables are often round. The seating is arranged in order of status. The host sits facing the door, with guest 1 on his right, and guest 2 on his left. The co-host usually sits nearest to the door, with guests 3 and 4 around him or her. Status is often decided by age.

Chopstick no-nos

- Don't dig into the food on a plate; just pick up the piece that you want.
- Don't let your chopsticks be covered with food juice or residue.
- Don't spear things with your chopsticks.
- Don't put chopsticks vertically in rice in a bowl, since it resembles the incense sticks for the dead.

Table tennis and Mahjong

Traditional pastimes are alive and kicking all over China.

Martial arts

Many different forms of martial art have developed over the past 2,000 years and the styles are quite distinctive. Each style offers self-defense, improved health, and self-cultivation.

At 6 a.m. in Shanghai many people start the day with tai chi.

乒乓球 pīngpāngqiú

Mahjong

Mahjong is as popular as ever in China. The game has complex rules and can turn into marathon sessions! It is always accompanied by a loud “click-clacking” noise as the tiles knock against each other.

麻将 májiàng

Chinese chess

Xiàngqí (Chinese chess) is one of the most popular board games in China. This highly strategic game was played as early as the 4th century BCE and is similar to chess played in the West; a real mental battle.

Bargaining tips

Bargaining is an art, and if you are good at it you can get good deals. It requires play-acting on both sides.

tài guì le!

Sellers often have a large calculator that you can pass between you with your bids.

1) Look around the market and choose what you want to buy.

2) Ask the price.

duōshǎo qián?

3) If you think it is cheap, don't show it. Pretend you are surprised by how expensive it is.

The initial price offered by the seller is usually AT LEAST 40% over the general price.

4) Throw out a low price, 1/5th of the one given by the seller. Have a big smile on your face when you say it. (Smiling always helps when bargaining.)

5) The seller may pretend to be annoyed and pretend not to want to sell it. If this happens, walk away, you will usually be called back.

6) From then on, only lift your price by 5% at a time. You should be able to buy at half the price of the first price given.

When is Chinese New Year?

Like other Chinese festivals, the new year is determined by the lunar calendar so the date of the holiday varies from late January to mid February.

It is on the day of the second new Moon
after the winter solstice.

Timetable of events

A few days before: Houses are thoroughly cleaned (to sweep away bad luck), debts repaid, hair cut, and new clothes bought. Chinese people believe the new year must start cleanly, or it may continue in the way it begins... Doors are decorated with vertical scrolls of characters on red paper (like the ones on this page). Red is a lucky color.

On New Year's Eve a reunion dinner is held where members of the family, near and far, get together to celebrate. The dinner is a sumptuous meal and dumplings (thought to resemble gold nuggets) are eaten. Most people stay up until midnight, when firecrackers and fireworks are lit, to scare away evil spirits.

New Year's Day is spent visiting neighbors, family, and friends. Red packages containing "lucky money" are given by married relatives to unmarried junior members of the household. A dragon or lion dance troupe may perform to drive out bad spirits.

烟火 yānhuǒ

The 15th Day is a public holiday. The New Year's holiday lasts seven days in Mainland China, but the festival traditionally lasts till the 15th day of the lunar month and ends with the "Lantern Festival." Here, houses are decorated with colorful lanterns and people eat special food.

新年快乐!

Happy New Year!

Festival!

There are other major festivals in China.

Qing Ming

This is a day that Chinese people spend remembering and honoring their ancestors, and is sometimes called Tomb-Sweeping Day.

清明

Qīng Míng

Paper gifts are burned as offerings for the departed.

Mid-Fall Festival

This festival happens during the full Moon closest to the fall equinox. At this time the Moon is at its fullest and brightest—the best time to celebrate the abundance of the summer's harvest. Everyone eats mooncakes and family and friends get together to admire the harvest Moon, lighting up the barbecue. Children often carry around brightly colored lanterns.

中秋节

Zhōng qiū jié

Mooncakes are often eaten in small slices with a cup of tea.

Dragon Boat Festival

This festival is celebrated yearly to commemorate the death of a famous Chinese poet, Qu Yuan, who drowned on the fifth day of the fifth lunar month more than 2,000 years ago. The Dragon Boat Festival is celebrated by boat races in which the boats are decorated like dragons. Competing teams row their boats forward to a drumbeat, racing to reach the finish line.

端午节

Dūan wǔ jié

The standard crew has 10 pairs of rowers, one drummer, and one steerer.
